PATTI, ADELINA MARIA CLORINDA, vocalist, the daughter of Italian singers, who went, while she was an infant, to America, where she early exhibited very remarkable musical talent. At the age of 16 she appeared in opera at New York, achieving a great success. Two years afterwards she appeared at the Royal Italian Opera, at London, in "La Sonnambula," and at once was recognized as one of the greatest dramatic vocalists who have ever appeared, a position she has since maintained. In 1861 she married the Marquis de Caux, a French nobleman, but was divorced from him in 1877.

Born at Madrid, 1843.

PATURAGES, pa-too'-rai-ges, a town of Belgium, province of Hainault, 5 miles S.W. of Mons. In the neighbourhood are coal-mines. Pop. 9,200.

PAU, po, a town of France, department of Basses-Pyrénées, on the right bank of the Gave de Pau, 56 miles from Bayonne. It is situated on a rocky elevation commanding magnificent views of the Pyrénées, and is divided into two parts by a deep ravine, spanned by a lofty bridge. The town is a favourite resort of English visitors; especially in winter. The old castle, on a ridge overlooking the river, has five towers. It was built about the middle of the 14th century by Gaston de Foix, and was the birthplace of Henry IV. of France, of whom there is a bronze statue in the principal square of the town. There are a museum, library, university, school, and theatre. Manf. Linen and cloth. Good wine is made, and large numbers of pigs are bred in the vicinity. Pop. 30,000.

PAUCTON, ALEXIS, poke'-tawng, a French mathematician. He received his education in the mathematical and naval academy at Nantes, after which he went to Paris, where his integrity and talents procured him patronage and a place. His works are, "Metrology; or, a Treatise on the Weights, Measures, and Moneys of all Countries, Ancient and Modern,"—a much-esteemed volume; "Theory of the Laws of Nature, with a Dissertation on the Pyramids of Egypt."

Born in France, 1736; died 1798.

PAUILLAC, po-e'-yak', a port of France, department Gironde, on the left bank of the Gironde, 27 miles N.W. of Bordeaux. There is good anchorage, and a large trade is carried on in timber, grain, cattle, building stone, and Medoc wines.

PAUL, ST., the great apostle of the Gentiles; originally named Saul, was born of Jewish parents, and educated in the school of the Pharisees, under Gamaliel. The history of his persecution of the Christians, of his miraculous conversion, and his labours among the churches, is given in the "Acts of the Apostles," in the New Testament. His epistles are models of pathetic remonstrance and close reasoning, and there is nothing in the literature of oratory finer than many of his impassioned bursts of eloquence. A tradition of the Church declares that he was beheaded at Rome.

Died, probably, 67.

PAUL I., pope, was the successor of Stephen, in 757. He engaged in disputes with Desiderius, king of the Longobards, but was taken under the protection of Pepin, king of the Franks.

Died 767.

PAUL II. (PIETRO BARBO), succeeded Pius II., 1464. He sought to organize a league of the Christian princes against the Turks, who, at the time, threatened to invade Italy, and also endeavoured to establish peace among the different Italian states. He had a great dislike to profane learning, and shut up an academy which had been formed at Rome for the cultivation of Greek and Roman learning, many members of which were imprisoned and tortured.

Born 1418; died 1471.

PAUL III. (ALESSANDRO FARNESE). He was elected to the papal chair, in succession to Clement VII., 1534. In his reign the council of Trent was called. He established the Inquisition, confirmed the society of Jesuits, condemned the Interim of Charles V., and issued a bull of excommunication and deposition against Henry VIII. of England. His conduct in bestowing wealth and dignities on his illegitimate son has been much condemned. (See FARNESE.)

Born at Carino, 1468; died 1549.

PAUL IV. (GIOVANNI PIETRO CARAFFE) was elected in 1555, at the age of 78. He had previously been bishop of Chieti, and first superior of the congregation of secular clergy, known as Theatines, which he had assisted to establish. His pontificate was remarkable for his endeavours to reform abuses, and compelled the clergy to lead a religious and moral life. He completed the organization of the Roman inquisition, and established a censorship. He quarrelled with the emperor Ferdinand and Philip II. of Spain, and with the grand duke of Tuscany. When Queen Elizabeth announced to him, by the English ambassador, her accession to the throne, he haughtily declared that the kingdom was a fief of the Holy See, and that she had no right to assume the crown without his leave, particularly as she was illegitimate. In 1559 he issued a bull against heretics.

Born at Naples, 1476; died 1559.

PAUL V. (CAMILLO BORGHESE), was elected in 1605, after the death of Leo XI. He had a dispute with the senate of Venice, over which he pretended to have a right; but it was so firmly resisted, that the pope excommunicated the doge and senate. He also raised forces against the republic; but, by the interference of the emperor and other states, peace was restored in 1607. He embellished Rome with many excellent works of sculpture and painting, and an aqueduct. He was the founder of the Borghese family, one of the wealthiest in Italy.

Born at Rome, 1552; died 1621.

PAUL I., emperor of Russia, was the son of Peter III. and Catherine II. He married Wilhelmina, daughter of the landgrave of Hesse Darmstadt, who died two years after their union, in 1776. Paul took for his second wife the princess Dorothea of Wurtemberg, niece of the king of Prussia. Upon the death of Catherine II., in 1796, he succeeded to the throne, and for some time gave promise of a good reign. He disgraced the murderers of his father; he released Kosciuszko, the Polish patriot, Niemcewicz, and others who had been confined during the previous reign; but his real character soon afterwards displayed itself, and he made himself obnoxious by acts of petty tyranny, and frivolous meddling in matters of dress and ceremonial. In 1799 he entered into an alliance with Austria against France, and sent Suwarrow with a large army into Italy; but suddenly changing his views, he recalled his forces, formed an alliance with Napoleon Bonaparte (the first consul), and because England would not cede to him Malta, and recognise him as grand master of the order, he seized the persons and property of the English in his dominions. His conduct to his subjects also became capricious and violent, and just as the northern coalition had been dissolved by lord Nelson's destruction of the Danish fleet at Copenhagen, a plot was formed among the officers of his court. The conspirators entered the emperor's apartments at night, and presented to him an act of abdication for his signature. On his refusal, a scuffle ensued, and Paul was strangled. When the people of St. Petersburg heard of his death, there were general rejoicings.

Born 1754; died 1801.

PAUL, deacon of Aquileia, who wrote "The History of the Lombards," "Lives of the Saints, and of the Bishops of Metz;" also a work called "Historia Miscella," a History of Rome in 24 books. He was secretary to Desiderius, king of the Lombards, and was afterwards in the service of Charlemagne. The prince of Benevento invited him to his court, and on the death of that prince, Paul embraced the monastic life.

Born at Friuli, about 740; died at Monte-Casino, about 799.

PAUL, surnamed the Abbé a learned French writer, who was at first professor of belles-lettres in various colleges belonging to the Jesuits, of which order he was a member; but subsequently quitted it to devote himself to the translation of Latin classical works.

Born 1740; died 1809.

PAUL, VINCENT DE ST., a saint of the Roman Catholic church. He was educated at Toulouse, and ordained priest in 1600. He was soon afterwards captured by corsairs, and sold into slavery at Tunis, but escaped with one of his masters whom he had converted. He was then sent by the pope on an important mission to France, and resided for some time in Paris, as the almoner of Marguerite de Valois. In 1819 he was appointed almoner-general of the galleys at Marseilles, and there voluntarily became a substitute for one of the convicts whose wife and family had been left destitute. He afterwards was associated with the Lazarists, or priests of the Mission, a society he had himself established, and which had settled in the priory of St. Lazar, in Paris, and devoted himself to works of piety and benevolence. He established the foundling hospital, and was entrusted by St. Francis of Sales with the direction of the new order of Sisters of the Visitation. The queen-regent, Anne of Austria, made him president of the council charged with the direction of the crown in ecclesiastical affairs, an office which he discharged with great conscientiousness. He was canonized in 1737.

Born 1576; died 1660.

PAUL DE LOANDO, ST., a seaport of western Africa, and capital of the Portuguese settlements. The better part of the town is built on an eminence. There are several churches and public buildings, some in a ruinous condition. There is a large and well-fortified harbour. Ivory and bees'-wax are exported. Pop. 12,000.

PAUL DE SANTA MARIA, a learned Spanish Jew, who is said to have been converted to Christianity by reading the works of Aquinas. After the death of his wife, he entered into orders, and became preceptor to John II., king of Castile, who made him bishop of Carthagena, and afterwards of Burgos. His three sons were baptized with him; the eldest became bishop of Burgos, and wrote a History of Spain; the second was bishop of Placentia; and the third, Alvarez, wrote "The History of John II., king of Castile.

Born at Burgos, about 1375; died 1445.

PAUL, FATHER. (See SARPI, Peter.)

PAUL OF SAMOSATA, an heresiarch of of the 3rd century, who received his surname from the place of his birth, a city on the Euphrates, and became patriarch of Antioch in 260. Being entertained at the court of Zenobia, queen of Syria, he endeavoured to gain her to the Christian faith, by explaining away its mysteries. For this purpose, he held that Christ was a mere man, and that the Trinity consisted not of persons but attributes. His errors were condemned by the council of Antioch, A.D. 270, and Paul was excommunicated. His disciples were called Paulinists.

Lived in the 3rd century.

PAUL, ST. (See SAN PAULO.)

PAUL, ST. (EN-JARRET), a town of France, department Loire, on the left bank of the Couzon, 10 miles N.E. of St. Etienne. Manf. Silk, iron, and nails. Pop. 3,300.

PAUL, ST., a town of France, department Drôme, 15 miles S. of Montelimart. There is a noble church, built, it is said, by Charlemagne. Numerous Roman remains, apparently of an amphitheatre and a gate, are in the town. Manf. Woollen and silk fabrics. Pop. 2,600.

PAUL, ST., capital of Ramsey county, Minnesota, United States, on the left bank of the Mississippi, in an elevated situation, 12 miles below the falls of St. Anthony. There are several handsome churches, a fine state house, other good public buildings, and large hotels. Pop. 41,473.

PAUL, ST., an island in the Indian Ocean, about 9 miles long and 5 broad, with good anchorage on the eastern side. Lat. 38° 43′ S. Lon. 77° 38′ E.

PAUL THE SILENTIARY, so called from an office which he held in the palace of the emperor Justinian, at Constantinople. He is supposed to have been a Christian. A history, in Greek verse, of the church of St. Sophia, and epigrams, were written by him.

Lived in the 6th century.

PAUL VERONESE. (See VERONESE, Paul.)

PAULA, ST., pa'-oo-la, a Roman lady, who was descended from the Scipios and the Gracchi. On becoming a widow, she retired to Bethlehem, where she founded a monastery and houses of hospitality, of which St. Jerome had the management. She practised the severest austerities and self-denial, which Jerome in vain endeavoured to moderate. She was acquainted with the Scriptures in the original Hebrew, in which she had Jerome for her master.

Born 347; died 407.

PAULDING, JAMES KIRKE, pawl'-ding, an American writer, who, in 1807, began a career of authorship in collaboration with his brother-in-law, Washington Irving, with whom he wrote a series of satirical papers, entitled "Salmagundi." In 1813 he produced a burlesque poem, called "The Lay of a Scotch Fiddle" (a parody on "The Lay of the Last Minstrel"), and soon afterwards published a brilliant reply to some aspersions cast upon the American people in the "Quarterly Review." His next effort was an imitation of Swift, in a work entitled "The Diverting History of John Bull and Brother Jonathan," published in 1816. During the subsequent twenty years he continued to labour industriously with his pen, and in 1837 was appointed secretary of the navy, under the presidency of Van Buren; upon whose retirement, in 1841, Paulding resigned the post, and again took up his pen. His best works are "Letters from the South," "The Dutchman's Fireside," "Konigsmarke," a defence of slavery in the South States, "John Bull in America," "The New Pilgrim's Progress: a Satire," and "Tales of a Good Woman, by a Doubtful Gentleman." One of his finest novels, descriptive of life in the back-woods, entitled "Westward Ho," was published in 1832. Among his later works were the novels "The Old Continental" and "The Puritan and his Daughter."

Born at Pawlings, New York, 1779; died 1860.

PAULDING, a county of Georgia, United States. Area, 300 square miles. Pop. 10,887. The capital is Dallas.

PAULDING, a county of Ohio, United States. Area, 432 square miles. Pop. 13,485. The capital is Paulding.

PAULI, GEORG REINHALD, pow'-le, German historian, studied at Berlin and Bonn, and was appointed professor of history at Bonn in 1855, at Rostock in 1857, and at Tübingen in 1859, but for political reasons was deprived of that office by the Würtemberg authorities in 1866. The following year the Prussian Government appointed him to the chair of history at Marburg, and in 1870 at Göttingen. He has devoted great attention to

Born at Berlin, 1823.

PAULINA, paw-lē'-na, the wife of the philosopher Seneca, who attempted to kill herself when Nero condemned her husband to death. The emperor, however, prevented her, and she survived for several years after, in the greatest melancholy.

PAULINE, BONAPARTE. (See BONAPARTE, Pauline.)

PAULINUS, pou-lī'-nus, a German missionary, whose real name was John Philip Werdin. He studied at Prague, and acquired a knowledge of some of the Oriental languages at Rome. In 1774 he went as a missionary to the court of Malabar, where he remained during fourteen years. After his return to Rome, in 1790, he was employed in superintending the printing of religious works for the use of missionaries to Hindostan. He wrote a Sanskrit grammar, and various works upon the religion and literature of India.
Born in Austria, 1748; died at Rome, 1806.

PAULINUS, ST., bishop of Nola. He discharged the office of consul in 373, and about the same time married a Spanish lady, by whose means he embraced christianity. He then retired to Spain with his wife, where Paulinus bestowed his goods in charity, and lived a life of mortification. In 393 he entered into orders, and, going to Italy, was chosen bishop of Nola. He was the author of some discourses on practical charity, some poems and letters.
Born at Bordeaux, 353; died 431.

PAULINUS, ST., patriarch of Aquileia, distinguished himself at the council of Frankfort in 794. He wrote a treatise on the trinity.
Died 804.

PAULMIER DE GRENTEMESNIL, JULIAN DE, pole'-me-ai grant'-mai-ne, a French physician, was the disciple of Fernel; and when all the other physicians had reduced Charles IX. to a very low condition, he succeeded in restoring him. He was afterwards attached to the duke of Anjou, whom he accompanied to the Low Countries, where he distinguished himself in his own profession and as a soldier. He composed several treatises upon medical subjects.
Born about 1530; died at Caen, 1588.

PAULMIER DE GRENTEMESNIL, JACQUES, son of the preceding, was educated in the principles of the reformed religion. His works are, "Description of Ancient Greece;" "Poems; Greek, Latin, French, Italian, and Spanish."
Born 1587; died 1670.

PAULMY, MARC ANTOINE RENÉ DE VOYER, Marquis of, pole'-me, minister of state, and a member of the French Academy, was the son of the marquis d'Argenson. He collected one of the most magnificent libraries in Europe, which was sold to the count d'Artois, brother to Louis XVI. M. de Paulmy published "Mélanges d'une grande Bibliothèque," in 69 volumes. To him also is attributed a work entitled "Essays in the Style of those of Montaigne."
Born at Valenciennes, 1722; died 1787.

PAULUS, ÆGINETA. (See ÆGINETA, Paulus.)

PAULUS, ÆMILIUS. (See ÆMILIUS, Paulus.)

PAULUS DIACONUS, di-ak'-o-nus, Italian historian, belonged to a noble Lombard family, and was brought up at the court of the Lombard king Ratchis. In 1781 he became a monk of Monte Casino, and afterwards went to France, where he was well received by Charlemagne, where he assisted in promoting learning. He wrote a history of Rome, a history of the bishops of Metz, and subsequently a far more valuable work, the "History of the Longobards." He wrote also several theological works, and prepared a collection of homilies.
Born at Friuli, about 730; died 797.

PAULUS, HEINRICH EBERHARD GOTTLOB, German theologian, studied the oriental languages at Göttingen, and afterwards at London and Paris. In 1789 he was appointed professor of those languages at Jena, and in 1793 professor of geology. After holding several other appointments, he accepted the chair of exegesis and ecclesiastical history at Heidelberg, in 1811. He wrote a large number of works, and was one of the most prominent leaders of the German rationalists, rejecting the supernatural element in the Scriptures.
Born near Stuttgart, 1761; died 1851.

PAUSA, pou'-sa, a town of Saxony, 24 miles S.W. of Zwickau. Manf. Linen, hosiery, and leather. There is a bathing establishment. Pop. 3,800.

PAUSANIAS, paw-sai'-ni-as, the son of Cleombrotus, king of Sparta, governed the kingdom for his cousin Pleistarchus during his minority. He also displayed great skill and valour in the war against Persia, but being discontented with his country, he entered into a secret treaty with Xerxes, king of Persia, which being discovered by the Ephori, he was recalled, but pardoned on account of his former services. He then went to Byzantium, but having criminally assaulted a lady, was expelled, and went to the Troad. He afterwards made two attempts to betray his country, and the last time, his plans being revealed, he took refuge in the temple of Athene, which being held sacred, the Lacedæmonians blocked it up with stones, the first of which was placed by the mother of Pausanias. He was there starved to death.
Died 472 B.C.

PAUSANIAS, a Greek historian and geographer, who settled at Rome in the reign of Antoninus the Philosopher. Pausanias wrote, "Travels in Greece," wherein he most minutely describes the buildings, monuments, statues, and paintings, as they existed 500 years after the most flourishing period of Greek art.
Died 176.

PAUSIAS, paw'-si-as, a painter of Sicyon, who studied under Pamphilus, and was the fellow-pupil of Apelles and Melanthius. He worked in colours upon wood and ivory, according to the method now called encaustic painting. He drew a beautiful picture of his mistress Glycere, which was bought by Lucullus for two talents (about £432). After his death, the Sicyonians sold his picture to Scaurus, the grandson of Scylla, who built a gallery for them at Rome.
Lived in the 4th century B.C.

PAUW, CORNELIS DE, pou, a learned Dutch writer, who is known by his discourses on the Greeks, the Americans, the Egyptians, and the Chinese. These works are curious, and show considerable ability, but they are too conjectural.
Born at Amsterdam, 1739; died at Xante, 1799.

PAVIA, pai'-vi-a, a city of northern Italy, capital of the province of the same name, on the left bank of the Ticino, 3 miles above its discharge into the Po, and 20 miles S. of Milan. There is a suburb, Borgo Ticino, on the opposite side of the river, connected with the town by a covered bridge of eight arches, and from the bridge the principal street of the town, the Strada Nuova, or Corso, is continued northward. There are some ancient towers, about 170 feet high, the remains of the Gothic ages, yet to be seen in different parts of the town, which is still surrounded with fortifications; but they are falling to decay. The cathedral, commenced in 1484, has never been completed. Attached to it is a chapel containing the tomb of St. Augustine, ornamented with numerous statues and bassi-relievi. The church of San Michele, known to have been in existence in the 6th century, is believed to be the oldest church in Italy. The church of San Petro contains the grave of Boethius, author of the "Consolations of Philosophy." The church of Santa Maria del Carmine is a large Gothic church, built in the 14th century. About four miles from the city is the Certosa monastery, probably the most splendid in the world, founded in 1396. The church of the monastery is cruciform, 249 feet long, and 173 feet wide. The convent has an octagonal cupola, painted a deep blue, and enamelled in gold. The university of Pavia, supposed to have been founded by Charlemagne, maintained its reputation during the middle ages as one of the most important seats of learning in Europe. It consists of numerous colleges, and has a large library, museums, school of the fine arts, and a botanic garden. There are several fine palaces in the town. Manf. Silk. A large trade is carried on in wine, silk, rice, and cheese. Pop. 30,000.—Pavia is very ancient, having been founded by the Gauls. The old name was Ticinum, afterwards Papia. For a long period it was a portion of the Roman empire, and under the Lombards was the capital of Italy. It has often suffered from war; and near it, in 1525, Francis I., king of France, was conquered and made prisoner by the imperialists. In 1745 it was taken by the Spaniards, and, in 1796, by the French. It came into possession of Austria in 1814, and in 1859 was added to the kingdom of Italy.

PAVIA, a province of Italy, watered by the Po, Ticino, and Olona. The surface is generally level, and the soil fertile, but the climate is rather unhealthy. Area, 1,292 square miles. Pop. 485,683.

PAVLOGRAD, pav-lo-grad', a town of southern Russia, government of Ekaterinoslav, on the Voltcha, an affluent of the Dnieper, 38 miles N.E. of Ekaterinoslav. Pop. 8,700.

PAVLOVSK, pav'-lovsk, a town of European Russia, government of Voronej, on the left bank of the Don. It is well fortified, and has four churches. Pop. 6,100.

PAWEEA, pa-we'-a, a town of Guinea, West Africa, on the route from the coast to Dahomey. There are large markets, well supplied with provisions, native cloth, and handkerchiefs of English manufacture. Pop. 16,000.

PAWNEE, a county of Kansas, United States, making promising progress. Area, 900 square miles. Pop. 5,396. Larned is the chief place.

PAWNEE, a county of Nebraska, United States. Area, 432 square miles. Pop. 6,920. The capital is Pawnee City.

PAWTUCKET, paw-tuk'-et, a town of Rhode Island, United States, on both sides of the Pawtucket, near the falls, 4 miles N. of Providence. Valuable water power is obtained from the falls. Manf. Cotton, yarn, machinery, belting, and jewellery. It is well situated for steamboat and railroad traffic. Pop. 18,500.

PAX, pax, the allegorical divinity of peace among the ancient Greeks and Romans. The Athenians raised her a statue, representing her as holding Plutus, the god of wealth, in her lap, to intimate that peace gives rise to opulence. She was represented among the Romans with the horn of plenty, and also carrying an olive branch in her hand. The emperor Vespasian built in her honour a celebrated temple at Rome, which was consumed by fire, in the reign of Commodus.

PAXO, paz'-o, one of the Ionian islands, near the entrance of the Adriatic, 9 miles S.E. of Corfu, about 5 miles long, and 2 miles broad. The chief place is Port Gaio, on the east coast. The island is famous for oil, and olives, almonds, and vines are grown. Pop. 3,600.

PAXTON, SIR JOSEPH, pax'-ton, modern horticulturist and architect, the designer of the building for the Great Exhibition of 1851, and of the gardens, terraces, and fountains of the Crystal Palace of Sydenham. Born of parents in moderate circumstances, he devoted himself to the pursuit of gardening, and was fortunate enough to attract the attention of the duke of Devonshire, who employed him first at Chiswick, and afterwards at Chatsworth. He subsequently became, besides chief gardener at Chatsworth, manager of the duke of Devonshire's large estates in Derbyshire. At Chatsworth he constructed a grand conservatory of iron and glass, which covers an acre of ground; and when the building committee of the Great Industrial Exhibition of 1851 seemed almost to despair of getting an appropriate design, Mr. Paxton submitted one prepared on similar principles; this design was accepted, and, with some slight modifications, carried out. The new style of architecture, which he had thus created, was, from the outset, immensely popular. He afterwards prepared an improved design for the reconstruction, with considerable additions, of the same glass palace at Sydenham, the famous Crystal Palace, where he laid out gardens, terraces, and fountains, which are unequalled, as a whole, throughout the world. For his services he received the order of knighthood, and, in 1854, was returned to parliament as member for Coventry, in the Liberal interest, without opposition, and retained the seat for about 10 years. He was a member of several learned societies, and wrote many works on horticultural subjects, the chief of which are "Paxton's Flower-Garden" and "The Pocket Botanical Dictionary."

Born near Woburn, Bedfordshire, 1803; died 1865.

PAYEN, ANSELME, pai'-en, a modern French chemist. The son of a gentleman largely engaged in industrial enterprises, he was sent to study chemistry under Vauquelin and Chevreul. About 1815 he assumed the directorship of a large manufactory of sugar from beetroot, and subsequently applied himself to the discovery and application of new manufacturing processes, by which he greatly contributed to reduce the price of many articles of food ordinarily used. Between the years 1827-44 he acted as member and reporter of juries on French industry. In 1836 he was appointed member of the council and professor of the school of arts and manufactures, and afterwards received a similar appointment at the Conservatoire des Arts et Métiers. In 1847 he was created officer of the legion of honour. Among his most important works are "Course of Applied Chemistry," "Memoirs on Vegetable Development," and "Manual of Organic Chemistry, as applied to Agriculture and Industry."

Born at Paris, 1795.

PAYNE, JOHN HOWARD, pane, dramatist and actor, who appeared at first in America, and afterwards in London, in 1813. In 1832 he retired to the United States, and in 1841 was appointed American consul at Tunis. He is best known by the play of Brutus, in which Edmund Kean acted so powerfully; "Charles the Second," identified with Charles Kemble, and the song of "Home, Sweet Home."

Born at New York, 1792; died at Tunis, 1852.

PAYTA, pai'-ta, a seaport of Peru in the province of Truxillo. It is the best port on the coast, and there are exports of cotton, bark, hides, and drugs. Pop. 5,000. Lat. 5° 5′ S. Lon. 81° 8′. W.

PAZ, LA. (See LA PAZ.)

PAZZI, THE, pat'-se, a celebrated Ghibelline family of Florence, which was possessed of immense wealth, and was the determined enemy of the Medici. When the latter family threatened, by the excess of their power, to destroy the republic, the Pazzi affected great zeal for their country, and Francis (nephew of Giacomo Pazzi, the head of the house), who was established as a banker at Rome, formed a conspiracy with Geronomi Riario, nephew of pope Sixtus IV., and, under the auspices of the courts of Rome and Naples, prepared to assassinate the heads of the Medici, and to destroy the power of that family in the republic for ever. The conspiracy, known in Florentine history as that of the Pazzi, was only partly successful. Giuliano de' Medici was killed, but Lorenzo escaped. James and Francis Pazzi were hanged, the name and arms of the family were suppressed, and its members banished. Pope Sixtus IV. and the king of Naples next proposed to invade Florence; but, through the boldness and judgment of Lorenzo, the war was brought to a termination at the end of 1479. This stirring episode in Florentine history forms the subject of one of Alfieri's finest tragedies. The "History of the Conspiracy of the Pazzi" was written by Poliziano.

PEABODY, GEORGE, pe'-bod-e, American merchant and philanthropist, who, rising from poverty, made an immense fortune by commerce, chiefly in London, and gave in his life-time £350,000, and left by his will £150,000 more, for the purpose of building dwellings for the working classes in London. He also contributed large sums to the promotion of educational, scientific, and philanthropic objects in his native country. There is a statue to his memory near the Royal Exchange, London.

Born at Danvers, Massachusetts, 1795; died in London, 1869.

PEABODY, a town of Massachusetts, United States, 12 miles N.E. of Boston. The town was formerly a part of Danvers, but was separated in 1855, and received its present name in 1868 in honour of George Peabody, who founded here the Peabody Institute, with a free library. Manf. Leather and glue. Pop. 9,028.

PEACE RIVER, peece, a large river of British North America, rising in the Rocky Mountains, in lat. 51° 20′ N. and lon. 127° W., and, after a total course of 800 miles, falling into Great Slave Lake. In the lower part of its course it is known as the Slave river.

PEACOCK, THOMAS LOVE, pe'-kok, English novelist and poet. He was for 38 years in the East India House. His best known works are "Headlong Hall" and "Crotchet Castle," but he wrote many other novels, besides poems. He was the literary executor of Shelley.

Born at Weymouth, 1785; died in London, 1866.

PEARCE, ZACHARY, peerce, a learned English bishop, who received his education at Westminster school, whence he was elected to Trinity College, Cambridge, where he wrote some papers for the Guardian and Spectator. He published an excellent edition of Longinus in 1724, and, in the same year, obtained his doctor's degree. When Woolston attacked the miracles of our Saviour, he was replied to by Dr. Pearce in an anonymous pamphlet, entitled "A Vindication of the Miracles of Jesus," which went through several editions. He was preferred to the deanery of Winchester in 1739, advanced to the see of Bangor in 1748, and, in 1756, translated to Rochester, with the deanery of Westminster annexed. He afterwards resigned the deanery. Besides the above, he published "A Review of the Text of Milton," "On the Origin of Temples," "An Account of Trinity College, Cambridge," and other works. After his death were published his "Commentary on the Gospels and Acts," and sermons.

Born in London, 1690; died at Little Ealing, 1774.

PEARL, perl, a river of Mississippi, United States, rising in lat. 87° 30′ N., and lon. 32° 20′ W., and entering, by several mouths, the Rigolets, east of Lake Pontchartrain, and ultimately falling into the Gulf of Mexico. The length of the course is about 300 miles.

PEARL, a county of Mississippi, United States. Area, 520 square miles. Pop. 800. The chief town is Riceville.

PEARSON, JOHN, an English bishop, son of the rector of Snoring, Norfolk. He received his education at Eton and King's College, Cambridge. He took orders, and after holding several preferments became archdeacon of Surrey, and master of Jesus College, Cambridge, afterwards of Trinity College, and was promoted to the bishopric of Chester in 1673. Bishop Pearson is principally known by his valuable "Exposition of the Creed," of which there have been several editions. He also wrote a "Defence of the Epistles of St. Ignatius," and other learned works.

Born in Norfolk, 1612; died 1686.

PECHANTRE, NICHOLAS DE, pe'-kantr, a French poet, who three times gained the poetical prize from the Académie des Jeux Floraux. His tragedy of "Geta" was performed at Paris in 1687, with great applause. This was followed by "Jugurtha," "The Death of Nero," and some others.

Born at Toulouse, 1638; died 1708.

PECK, FRANCIS, pek, an eminent English antiquary, who received his education at Cambridge, where he took his degrees in arts. He obtained the living of Godeby, in Leicestershire, where he remained until his death. He wrote, among many other learned works, "The Annals of Stamford," "The Life of Milton," "Memoirs of Cromwell," and published a collection of historical tracts, entitled "Desiderata Curiosa."

Born at Stamford, Lincolnshire, 1692; died at Godeby, Leicestershire, 1743.

PECKHAM. (See LONDON.)

PECORONE, GIOVANNI FIORENTINO, pek-o-ro'-nai, a Florentine novelist of the 14th century, who, according to some, was a notary, and to others, a Franciscan monk. He belonged to the party of the Guelphs, and was an ardent follower of the pope. His "Novelli," which have been often reprinted, are little inferior to those of Boccaccio, and are valuable for the insight they afford as to the opinions and manners of his time.

Died about 1380.

PECOS, pé-kos, a newly formed county of Texas, United States. Area, 11,500 square miles. The capital is Fort Stockton.

PECSKA, MAGYAR, and OLAK, pek'-ska, two contiguous towns of Hungary, on the Maros, 11 miles W. of Arad. Pop. 14,000.

PEDEE, GREAT, pé'-de, a river of South Carolina, United States, falling, after a course of 350 miles, into Winyaw Bay, on the Atlantic, immediately below Georgetown.

PEDRO I. (D'ALACANTARA), pé'-dro, (paï'-dro), emperor of Brazil, was the son of the regent of Portugal, afterwards John VI. In the interval between 1807-16 his father found a refuge in Brazil, having been driven from Portugal by Napoleon I.; but, in 1822, a year after John had left the country for Portugal, Brazil declared itself independent, and elected dom Pedro as its emperor. The death of John VI., in 1826, left him the crown of Portugal, and he soon afterwards established a liberal government in that country, and granted it a charter. After abdicating the crown of Portugal in favour of his daughter, donna Maria, he nominated his brother, dom Miguel, regent; but scarcely had he quitted Portugal, than dom Miguel took possession of the throne. In 1831 he was compelled to abdicate the throne of Brazil in favour of his son; dom Pedro II. Returning to Europe, he raised troops in France and England, with which he, in 1833, drove dom Miguel from the throne of Portugal, and placed the crown upon the head of his daughter. He was twice married; his first wife being Maria Leopoldine, archduchess of Austria, and the second, Amelia, of Leuchtenberg, daughter of prince Eugene de Beauharnais.

Born at Lisbon, 1798; died 1834.

PEDRO II., emperor of Brazil, son of the preceding. In 1843 he married the princess Theresa, daughter of Francis I., of the Two Sicilies. He possesses enlightened literary tastes, is of very active habits, and has travelled much in the United States and Europe. Under his rule, the Brazilian empire has made rapid advance in the arts of peace and commerce.

Born 1825.

PEDRO I. (the Severe), king of Portugal, married INEZ DE CASTRO, and succeeded Alfonso IV. in 1357.

Born 1320; died 1367.

PEDRO II., king of Portugal, regent in 1668, and succeeded his brother Alfonso VI. in 1683.

Born 1648; died 1683.

PEDRO III., succeeded to the crown jointly with Maria I., 1777.

PEDRO IV. (See PEDRO I., emperor of Brazil.)

PEDRO V., succeeded his mother, Maria II. (da Gloria), under the regency of his father, 1853.

Born 1837; died 1861.

PEDRO, ST., a large river of Mexico, which enters the Rio del Norte.—Also rivers of Veragua, of New Granada, of Brazil, and of the Caracas.

PEEBLES, pé'-bels, an ancient royal burgh, and market town, the county town of Peebles-shire, Scotland, on a point of land, at the junction of the Eddleston Water with the Tweed, over which there is a bridge of five arches, 21 miles S. of Edinburgh. The principal buildings are, the high church, said to have been built in the 12th century, now in ruins, several other places of worship; the Chambers' institution, a spacious suite of buildings, formerly the residence of the dukes of Queensberry, comprising a library, museum, reading-room, gallery of art, and lecture-room, presented to the town by Mr. W. Chambers, the eminent publisher; and a corn exchange. Pop. 3,170.—A station on the North British and Caledonian railways.

PEEBLES-SHIRE, or TWEEDDALE, a southern county of Scotland, bounded on the E. and S.E. by Berwick and Selkirk shires, S. by Dumfries-shire, W. by Lanarkshire, and N. by the county of Edinburgh. It consists of various chains of mountains, running in all directions, with well-watered valleys intervening. The Dale or Valley of Tweed forms the great body of this shire; and thence many narrow vales branch off in different directions. In general, the hills and dales in the north and north-west districts are the most fertile and agreeable. The highest hill is Broad Law, 2,761 feet. Sheep and cattle are reared, the industry being almost entirely directed to pastoral purposes.

Rivers.—The Tweed, with its small affluents, the Eddleston, Leithen, Lyne, Manor, and Quair.

Minerals.—Coal, lime, white and red freestone, marl, fuller's earth, and slate, with veins of iron ore, are found in several districts.

Area.—356 square miles.

Parliamentary Representation.—The county is united with the county of Selkirk in returning one member to parliament.

PEEL, peel, formerly Holm, a seaport on the west coast of the Isle of Man. The bay is spacious, and the herring fishery is successfully carried on. Vessels of small tonnage are built, and fishing nets are made. At the southern extremity of the bay is Peel Island, on which are the ruins of Peel castle, formerly the residence of the earls of Derby, and made famous by sir Walter Scott, in "Peveril of the Peak," and of the cathedral, beneath which is a strong subterranean dungeon in which several noted persons have been imprisoned, among them Elinor Cobham, duchess of Gloucester, who died there in the 15th century. Pop. 3,520.

PEEL, a county of the province of Ontario, dominion of Canada, on the northern shore of Lake Ontario. Area, 468 square miles. Pop. 16,000. The capital is Brampton.

PEEL, SIR ROBERT, first baronet, and father of the British statesman. He was brought up to the cotton trade, and in 1773, he being then in his 23rd year, entered into partnership with Mr. William Yates, at Bury, in Lancashire. Ten years afterwards, he married the daughter of his partner, and from that time his career was one of uninterrupted prosperity, and he accumulated an immense fortune. In 1790 he entered the House of Commons as member for Tamworth. In 1800 he was created a baronet, and shortly before had made a speech in parliament, advocating the union with Ireland, which was published, and circulated in large numbers throughout that country. He retired from parliament in 1820.

Born near Lancaster, 1750; died at Drayton Park, Staffordshire, 1830.

PEEL, SIR ROBERT, second baronet, British statesman, was eldest son of the preceding. He was educated at Harrow and Christ Church, Oxford, where he took the honours of a double first class,—first in classics, first in mathematics. In the year 1809 he attained his majority, and entered the House of Commons as member for Cashel, in Tipperary. He began his parliamentary career as a strong Tory, and soon afterwards entered office as under-secretary of the Home department. He continued in the Home department until the death of the premier, Mr. Perceval, in 1812, when certain changes in the ministry took place, and Mr. Peel was appointed chief secretary to the lord-lieutenant of Ireland. In the same year he was elected for Chippenham, in Wiltshire. He held the secretaryship of Ireland for six years, during which he introduced several measures tending to preserve peace in that country, and also established the constabulary force, but excited the bitter animosity of the Catholic party, who nicknamed him Orange Peel, and O'Connell attacked him so ferociously that Peel challenged him, but the duel was prevented. In 1817 he was chosen as one of the parliamentary representatives of the university of Oxford. Two years later, he sat as chairman on the celebrated committee which resulted in the return to cash payments. On the retirement of Lord Sidmouth, in 1822, Peel became home secretary. When Canning became premier, in 1827, Peel retired, in consequence of still retaining his opinion that the demands made by the Roman Catholics should be resisted. In the following year, however, he again entered the ministry, this time under the duke of Wellington. Both the duke and himself were subsequently brought to see that the claims of the Catholics could no longer be withstood, and he accordingly moved the Relief Bill, which was carried, after a long and arduous struggle, in 1829. In the following year he succeeded to the baronetcy, and was elected for Tamworth. In the great Parliamentary Reform Bill, which was carried about this period, he took no share further than to oppose it with all his power. Under the reformed parliament the Tory party was in a decided minority; but Sir Robert was, nevertheless, summoned to form a Conservative ministry. Much against his own inclination, he did so; but, as he had predicted, the Conservatives held power for a few months only. This happened in the early part of the year 1835. The Whig party having gained office, Sir Robert went into opposition, and devoted himself to the careful organization of his forces, so as to take advantage of the first great check the Whigs might receive. In 1839 the Whig ministry resigned; Sir Robert Peel was "sent for," and submitted to her Majesty a list of his coadjutors, at the same time requesting that certain ladies of the bedchamber, who were near relatives of the Whigs, should be removed. This request was not acceded to; whereupon Sir Robert abandoned his idea of forming a cabinet. The Whigs, accordingly, retained power until 1841, when, having been repeatedly defeated in the House of Commons, they resigned, and made way for their great opponent, who became first lord of the treasury, the duke of Wellington accepting a seat in his cabinet without office, but taking the leadership of the House of Lords. During his tenure of office, between the years 1841-46, he effected the repeal of the corn laws, the relaxation of the whole commercial code; passed the Bank Charter Act, and established the general financial policy of the country on a firmer basis than was ever before the case. For these great services, which were only effected by a fundamental change of the policy to which he had hitherto pledged himself, Sir Robert Peel incurred the odium of his party, most of the members of which abandoned him. In 1846 he was compelled to resign office; but from that period until his death he continued to assist the Whig administration. Henceforth he never sought to weaken any of the existing parties in the house, but continued to give his adherence to whatever measure he thought best calculated to advance the general good. On the night before the occurrence of the fatal accident which terminated the life of Sir Robert Peel, the House of Commons, which for more than forty years had witnessed his triumphs and reverses, was filled with an extraordinary assemblage, anxious for the result of a great political crisis, depending on the success of the motion impeaching the policy of Lord Palmerston in respect to Greece. That result would, most probably, have been the return of the great statesman to power; but, on the very next day, while riding through St. James's Park, his horse suddenly shied, and threw Sir Robert over its head. He was taken up, and conveyed to his residence in Whitehall Gardens, where, three days afterwards, he breathed his last.

Born at Bury, Lancashire, 1788; died in London, 1850.

PEEL, SIR WILLIAM, naval commander, was the third son of the statesman, and entered the navy in 1838, as midshipman on board the Princess Charlotte, in which vessel he took part in the bombardment of Acre. After serving on board other vessels in the China seas and elsewhere, he, in 1844, passed his examination for lieutenant in so brilliant a manner as to call forth the warmest eulogiums of Sir Charles Napier and Sir Thomas Hastings. In the same year he became lieutenant of the Winchester, on the Cape of Good Hope station. In 1846 he was promoted to the rank of commander, and remained upon the North American and West-India stations until the commencement of the war with Russia. During that war he greatly distinguished himself in the naval brigade before Sebastopol. In 1856 he went out to the China station as captain of the Shannon frigate; but had scarcely arrived there when he was ordered to Calcutta with troops, to afford assistance in suppressing the mutiny in India. Upon his arrival he organised a naval brigade, and went ashore with 24- and 68-pounder guns, with which he and his sailors performed great deeds of skill and bravery at Cawnpore and Lucknow. At the storming of Lucknow he was severely wounded; but was recovering from this hurt when he was attacked with small-pox, which, to the profound grief of the English nation, carried him off. For his distinguished services during the Crimean war he was created C.B., and afterwards K.C.B. for his Indian exploits. He was also an officer of the French Legion of Honour, and had received the war medal of Sardinia.

Born 1824; died at Cawnpore, 1858.

PEELE, GEORGE, peel, an English dramatic writer, who was student of Christchurch, College, Oxford, where he took his degree of M.A. in 1579. After leaving the university, he went to London, where he gained a poor and precarious subsistence as an actor and writer for the stage. His plays were acted with great applause in the university and he was a good pastoral poet.

Born in Devonshire, about 1550; died 1598.

PEGALAXAR, pai-ga-lax'-ar, a town of Spain, 9 miles from Jaen. Pop. 3,000.

PEGASUS, peg'-a-sus, in Greek mythology, a winged horse, sprung from the blood of Medusa, when Perseus had cut off her head. He was given to Bellerophon, to conquer the Chimæra. This monster being destroyed, Pegasus threw off his rider, because he attempted to fly to heaven. Peg-sus, however, continued his upward flight alone, and was placed among the constellations by Zeus.

PEGAU, pe-gou', a walled town of Saxony, on the left bank of the Elster, 14 miles S.W. of Leipsic. Manf. Shoes, and woollen and linen cloth. Pop. 4,800.

PEGU, pe-gu', a division of Lower Burmah, occupying the delta of the Irrawadi. Rice and teak timber are the principal exports. The province is divided into five districts — Bassein, Myanoung, Prome, Rangoon, and Thayet. The chief port is RANGOON. Area, 28,404 square miles. Pop. 1,162,393. of whom about 900,000 are Burmese; and among the remainder are Karens and other half savage inhabitants of the hilly districts.

PEGU, an ancient city, formerly the capital of a kingdom, and now capital of the province, on the left bank of the Pegu river, 70 miles N. of Rangoon. This was once a place of great size and importance, and the magnificent temple of Shoemadoo still exists as a monument of the greatness of its ancient monarchs. The town was stormed and taken by the British in 1852. Pop. 15,000.

PEIGNOT, STEPHEN GABRIEL, pain'-yo, a learned French bibliographer, who was educated for the legal profession, but who became, in 1813, librarian to the college at Dijon, and devoted his life to the production of valuable and important works connected with the history and classification of books. His "Manual of Bibliography," "Philological Amusements," and "Dictionary of Suppressed Works," are of considerable importance.
Born 1765; died at Dijon, 1845.

PEI-HO, pai-ho', "white river," China, in the province of Chih-le. It rises near the great wall, passes east of Peking, and enters the Gulf of Chih-le in lat. 38° 33′ N. . is navigable for boats to within 20 miles of Peking.

PEILAU, pi-lou', a town of Prussia, province of Silesia, 33 miles S.W. of Breslau. Manf. Linen and cotton goods. Pop. 4,200.

PEINE, pine, a walled town of Prussia, province of Hanover, on the right bank of the Fuse, 21 miles S.E. of Hanover. There are an old castle (now a prison), Roman Catholic church, Capuchon monastery, and hospital. Manf. Linen, flax, and tobacco. Pop. 4,600.

PEIRESC, NICHOLAS CLAUDE FABRI, seigneur de, pai'-resk, French antiquary and learned writer, who studied at first under the Jesuits; and took the degree of doctor of laws at Aix, in 1604. In 1606 he went to England in the suite of the French ambassador, and was received with marks of distinction by James I. He next went to Holland and became acquainted with Julius Scaliger and Grotius. On his return to France, he was admitted a counsellor of the parliament of Aix. The learning of Peiresc was various and profound; and he particularly excelled in the knowledge of medals. He wrote extensively on mathematics, medallic science, languages, and antiquities, and was a great collector of literary treasures, which he generously distributed among the learned of his acquaintance.
Born in Provence, 1580; died at Aix, 1636.

PEISISTRATOS. (See PISISTRATUS.)

PEITZ, or PEIZ, pitze, a town of Prussia, 35 miles from Frankfort. Pop. 3,000.

PEKAH, pē'-ka, king of Israel, was captain in Pekahiah's army; but, having slain that monarch, he ascended the throne in 759 B.C. He entered into an alliance with Rezin, king of Syria, and made war upon Ahaz, king of Judah, whom he defeated and killed. In the 20th year of his reign Hoshea formed a conspiracy against him, and slew him.
Died 739 B.C.

PEKAHIAH, pek-a-hī'-a, king of Israel, succeeded his father Menahem 761 B.C. After a reign of only two years, he was slain by Pekah, a captain of his army.
Died 759 B.C.

PEKALONGAN, pek-a-lon-gan', a district of Java, on the north side of the island. The capital is of the same name. Pop. 224,000.

PEKIN, or PEKING, pe-kin', the capital of the empire of China, situate in a sandy plain, to the north-west of Pei-ho, 100 miles from the sea. It is divided by a wall with three gates into two parts, the Northern or Tartar city (Neit-ching), and the Southern or Chinese city (Wai-tching). The latter contains most of the mercantile population. The former is subdivided into three districts—Kin-tching, containing the emperor's palace, pleasure grounds, and several temples, enclosed by a brick wall; Hwang-tching, surrounding the former enclosure, and containing palaces of the princes, government offices, some temples and extensive pleasure grounds; and the third division, where are many public offices and tribunals, and where the bulk of the population resides. The streets of this, the "general city," are mostly very wide and unpaved, lined with shops, and always crowded with a motley throng. Peking is surrounded with walls about thirty feet high, and twenty-five feet thick at their base, and perforated by 16 gateways, each guarded by a watch-tower with loopholes for cannon. The space enclosed has a circumference of about 24 miles, but there are many large open spaces within the walls. Outside the city are open suburbs, and European and Chinese cemeteries.

Pop.—About 1,300,000.
History.—In very remote times, Pekin was the capital of the kingdom of Yen. In 1215 Genghis Khan captured it, and in 1264 Kublai Khan made it his residence. When the Mongol dynasty was overthrown, the court was removed to Nanking; but in 1421, Yung Lo, the third emperor of the Ming dynasty, made it again the imperial residence.

PEKIN, the capital of Tazewell county, Illinois, United States, on the left bank of the Illinois river, 55 miles N. of Springfield. There are six churches, a fine court-house, extensive school buildings, and elegant residences; and the city is an important railroad centre. Manf. Wagons and agricultural implements. Large quantities of corn, ice, and packed pork are shipped. Pop. 5,993.

PELAGIUS I., pe-lai'-ji-us (pope), was a native of Rome, and ascended the papal chair, in succession to Virgilius, in 555. He endeavoured to reform the clergy; and when Rome was besieged by the Goths, he obtained from Totila, their general, many concessions in favour of the citizens.
Born 495; died 560.

PELAGIUS II., a Goth by descent, ascended the papal chair, in succession to Benedict I., in 578. He opposed John, patriarch of Constantinople, who had assumed the title of œcumenic or universal bishop. He died of the plague.
Born 520; died 590.

PELAGIUS, the author, or first systematic exponent of the doctrine of Pelagianism. He is supposed to have been a native of Britain, and his real name to have been Morgan, which he changed to the Greek appellation of Pelagius. He went to reside at Rome about 400, where he obtained a great reputation for scriptural learning and sanctity of life, and, with his friend Celestius, supposed to have been of Irish origin, propagated the peculiar doctrines, respecting original sin and the exercise of free will, with which his name is associated: When Rome was sacked by the Goths, in 410, he retired to the Holy Land, where for a time he enjoyed the friendship of Jerome, who, however, withdrew from him when his opinions were known. He was charged with heresy at Jerusalem, and his opinions were condemned by the council of Carthage. In 418 he was banished from Rome by the Emperor Honorius, and nothing is known certainly of his after life.

Died early in the 5th century.

PELAGO, pai-la'-go, a central town of Italy, in Tuscany, 12 miles from Florence. Manf. Woollen goods. Pop. of district, 9,938. In the neighbourhood is the sanctuary of Valambrosa, the richest convent in Tuscany.

PELAYO, pai'-la-e-o, first king of the Asturias, was the chief of the Gothic Christians, who, after the sanguinary battle of Guadalete, in 711, fled from the resentment of the Moors to the mountains of the Asturias. In 718 the Moslems attacked him and his followers, but were signally defeated at Covadonga. He then took the title of monarch; and, in 722, drove the Moors out of the city of Leon, where his successors reigned. He firmly established the small kingdom of Asturias by many victories over the Moors.

Died 737.

PELEUS, pe'-le-us, in Greek legend, a king of Thessaly, who married Thetis, one of the Nereids, and was the only one among mortals who married an immortal. From this marriage was born Achilles. The death of Achilles was the source of so much grief to Peleus, that Thetis, to comfort her husband, promised him immortality, and commanded him to retire to the grottoes of the island of Leuce, where he would see and converse with the manes of his son.

PELEW ISLANDS, or NEW PHILIPPINES. (See CAROLINE ISLANDS.)

PELHAM. (See NEWCASTLE.)

PELIAS, pe'-li-as, in Greek legend, the twin brother of Neleus, was son of Neptune, by Tyro, the daughter of Salmoneus. (See JASON and MEDEA.)

PELISSIER, AIMABLE JEAN JACQUES, pe-lis'-se-ai, French marshal, and duke of Malakoff. He was the son of a respectable farmer, and, after receiving a liberal education, was sent, in 1814, to the military school of St. Cyr, which he left to join the army. He served in Algeria in 1830, and again in 1840. His bravery and capacity during the different campaigns which took place, gained for him the rank of colonel in 1845. In that year he was sent in pursuit of one of the most fierce of the Kabyle tribes. Being closely pressed, the Arabs took refuge in their caves: Pelissier summoned them to surrender, offering to spare their lives if they would come forth from their retreat. The Arabs refused; whereupon he ordered fascines to be lighted and placed close to the mouths of the caves, in order to compel them to come out: still they remained stubborn. He next sent into them some Arabs, and afterwards a flag of truce, which was fired upon. Thereupon the lighted fascines were pushed still closer to the cavern mouths, and kept burning for some time. In the end, nearly 600 dead bodies were found in the caves, and about 200 more Arabs died after being drawn out. This operation excited general horror throughout Europe, and was strongly denounced by Marshal Soult, at Paris; but Marshal Bugeaud defended his subordinate, and termed the dismal act "a necessity of war." Notwithstanding this affair, Pelissier was created lieutenant-colonel in 1848, and remained in Algeria until 1855, when he was ordered to take the command of a division of the French army in the Crimea, where he succeeded Canrobert in the chief command. For his services the emperor Napoleon created him marshal of France, grand cross of the Legion of Honour, and duke of Malakoff; queen Victoria also conferred upon him the grand cross of the Bath. In 1858, he was for a short time ambassador of France at the court of St. James's. He was then appointed governor-general of Algeria.

Born near Rouen, 1794; died in Algeria, 1864.

PELL, JOHN, pel, an eminent English mathematician and divine, who was educated first at Cambridge, and afterwards at Oxford. In 1643 he went to Amsterdam, to assume the professorship of mathematics there; but he afterwards removed to Breda, upon the invitation of the prince of Orange In 1652 he returned to England, and was sent by Cromwell as resident to the Protestant cantons of Switzerland. In 1661 he was ordained by the bishop of Lincoln, and, the same year, was presented to the rectory of Fobbing, in Essex. He wrote "An Idea of the Mathematics," "A Table of 10,000 Square Numbers," "Demonstration of the Second and Tenth Books of Euclid," and other works.

Born at Southwich, Sussex, 1610; died in London, 1685.

PELLEGRINI, CAMILLUS, pel-lai-gre'-ne, a celebrated Italian antiquary, who was the first to collect into a regular series the scattered, partial, and isolated histories and chronicles of the middle ages, which design was afterwards more completely carried out by Muratori and others. His sketch of the "Antiquities of Capua," and his "History of the Lombard Kingdom," are among the most valuable works treating of the middle ages of Italy.

Born at Capua, 1598; died 1663.

PELLERIN, JOSEPH, pel'-le-ran, an eminent French numismatist, who was commissary-general, first clerk of the French marine, and afterwards commissioner of the navy. He devoted his leisure to the collection, arrangement, and classification of medals. His cabinet of medals was very large and valuable. He published nine quarto volumes illustrative of medals, with plates.

Born near Versailles, 1684; died at Paris, 1782.

PELLESTRINA, pel-les-tre'-na, a town of Italy, on an island of the same name, 12 miles S. of Venice. Pop. 7,200.

PELLEW, SIR EDWARD. (See EXMOUTH.)

PELLICO, SILVIO, pel'-le-ko, an eminent Italian writer, who was the son of an official in the department of war at Milan, and afterwards at Turin. After spending some time in France, he joined his father at Milan, and was appointed professor of the French language in the seminary for military orphans in that city. Ardently devoted to literature and to liberty, he formed the acquaintance of Ugo Foscolo, the poet, and others, and likewise allied himself with a number of distinguished men, who hoped to free Lombardy from Austrian domination. In 1810 he wrote a tragedy, entitled "Francesca da Rimini," which was enthusiastically received in the chief cities of Italy. He wrote another tragedy, "Laodamia," and translated Byron's "Manfred." After writing other works, he, in 1819, established, with the assistance of Manzoni, Sismondi, and others, a journal intended to be conducted upon liberal principles, entitled "Il Conciliatore." This print was, however, soon afterwards suppressed by the Austrian government. Towards the close of the year 1820, he was suddenly arrested on the charge of plotting against established order. He was at first confined in the prison of Santa Margherita, at Milan; but was afterwards sent to a dungeon on the island of San Michele, near Venice. While there, in 1822, he was tried and condemned to death, which sentence was, however, commuted to fifteen years of "carcere duro" (severe imprisonment) in the fortress of Speilberg. For the first eighteen months of his imprisonment he was fortunate enough to be placed under an indulgent gaoler, by whom he was permitted the use of pen, ink, and paper, and to read the Bible, Homer, Dante, Petrarch, Shakspere, Göthe, Scott, Byron, Schiller, and other authors; but this personage having been sent to another prison, his situation became very severe during the four subsequent years, and almost led to the complete destruction of his health. Between the years 1827-30 he was treated with more clemency; and in the latter year he received the intimation that he was to regain his liberty, which, in reality, followed soon afterwards. In 1831 he produced a work entitled "Le Mie Prigioni" (My Prisons), which was written in a style of touching simplicity, was translated into every language of Europe, and was everywhere admired. After his release he repaired to Turin, where his parents were residing, and devoted himself to literary composition, producing, among other works, three tragedies, and a prose treatise on the Duties of Man.

Born at Saluzzo, Piedmont, 1789; died at Turin, 1854.

PELLISSON-FONTANIER, PAUL, pel'-lees-sawng-fon-ta'-ne-ai, a French historian, who was educated for the legal profession, but quitted it for a life of retirement in the country, where he occupied himself with literary studies. Having written the history of the origin of the French Academy, he was chosen a member. Subsequently, the minister Fouquet became his patron; but when he was disgraced, Pellisson was sent to the Bastile, where he was confined during four years. On his release he received a pension, and became a favourite of Louis XIV., whom he attended in his campaigns. He wrote "The History of Louis XIV.," "The Life of Anne of Austria," "History of the Conquest of Franche Comté," "Historical Letters," Poems, "Reflections on Differences in Religion," and "Treatise on the Eucharist."

Born at Béziers, France, 1624; died at Versailles, 1693.

PELOPIDAS, pe-lop'-i-das, a Theban general, who inherited from his father Hippoclas a large fortune, which he disposed of liberally among his fellow-citizens. Between himself and Epaminondas, who was very poor, there existed the closest friendship, from which the Thebans derived the most important benefits. When the Lacedæmonians gained the sovereignty of Thebes, Pelopidas went to Athens, where he assembled a number of his exiled countrymen, with whom, in 379 B.C., he returned, seized upon Thebes by night, and threw off the Spartan yoke, by which it had been oppressed. He afterwards defeated the Lacedæmonians at Tegyræ; and, with Epaminondas, shared the great victory at Leuctra, 371 B.C. He was next sent by his countrymen on an embassy to Artaxerxes, king of Persia, who received him with honour, and, through his means, entered into a treaty with the Thebans, very advantageous to them. On his return, he persuaded his countrymen to make war against Alexander, tyrant of Pheræ, but fell shortly after in battle. The Thessalians gave him a splendid public funeral.

PELOPONNESUS. (See MORÉA.)

PELOPS, pé'-lops, in Greek mythology, the son of Tantalus and grandson of Zeus. Another legend represents him as a Phrygian who married the daughter of the king of the peninsula afterwards named from him.

PEMBA, pem'-ba (the "green island"), an island of East Africa, 18 miles from the mainland and 25 miles N.E. of Zanzibar. It is 50 miles long, well wooded and fertile. Cattle and goats are reared for export. Pop. Unascertained, but large. The island belongs to the sultan of Zanzibar.

PEMBERTON, HENRY, pem'-ber-ton, a learned English physician, who was fellow of the Royal Society, and distinguished himself by an excellent work, entitled, "A View of Sir Isaac Newton's Philosophy." He was also the author of a treatise on Chemistry, Lectures on Physiology, &c.

Born in London, 1694; died 1771.

PEMBINA, pem-bi'-na, a county of Dakota Territory, United States. Area, 2,500 square miles. Pop. 4,862. The chief place is Pembina.

PEMBINA, a county of Mississippi, United States. Area, 7,000 square miles. Pop. about 200.

PEMBROKE, pem'-broke, a municipal and parliamentary borough, seaport, and market-town of South Wales, on a neck of land dividing the small estuary of Down Pool, which flows from Milford Haven, 7 miles S.E. of Milford. The vast ruins of its magnificent castle still give it an appearance of grandeur. The keep is 75 feet high, and 163 feet in circumference. Beneath the castle is a remarkable natural cavern. The houses are ranged principally in one long street, at the end of which is the castle. The public buildings are a town-hall, custom-house, a free grammar-school, and three ancient churches. Pop. 14,197. A station on the Pembroke and Tenby Railway. Pembroke Dock, or Pater, is about two miles from the town, and has a government naval establishment, occupying 80 acres, building-slips, and a dry dock.

PEMBROKESHIRE, one of the southern counties of Wales, bounded on the E. by Caermarthenshire, N.E. by Cardiganshire, N. and W. by St. George's Channel, and S. by the Bristol Channel. Its form is extremely irregular, and greatly diversified with hill and dale, the Precelly Hills, in the northern part, rising to 1,750 feet. On the northern side are Newport and Fishguard Bay; and on the western coast, St. Bride's Bay, 10 miles wide; Milford Haven, to the south of St. Bride's Bay, is the most important estuary. The soil is various, but generally fertile. The county abounds with objects of antiquarian curiosity and interest, of almost every kind and era; such as Druidical circles and cromlechs. Single stone monuments are also numerous; but the most important antiquities are its castles, of which there are 19, formerly belonging to princes and great barons. Wheat, barley, oats, rye, turnips, and peas are cultivated. A considerable quantity of butter is made for home consumption, and for exportation.

Rivers.—The two branches of the Cleddau and the Teify.

Minerals.—Lead, iron, limestone, coal, and slate.

Area.—615 square miles.

Pop.—91,940; more than half of whom are English speaking, being descended from Flemings, who settled in a part of the county familiarly known as Little England beyond Wales.

Chief Towns.—Haverfordwest, Pembroke, St. David's, and Tenby.

Parliamentary Representation.—One member is returned for the county; 1 for Haverfordwest, and 1 for the Pembroke boroughs (including Tenby, Milford, and Wiston).

PEMISCOT, a county of Missouri, United States. Area, 300 square miles. Pop. 2,300. The capital is Gayoso.

PENAFIEL, pen'-a-feel, a town of Spain, province of Valladolid, on the Duraton, near its junction with the Douro, 30 miles S.E. of Valladolid. It occupies an elevated situation, has an ancient and strongly fortified castle, three churches, and two nunneries. Manf. Woollen cloth and earthenware. Pop. 3,500.

PENAFIEL, or ARIFANA DE SOUSA, a town of Portugal, province of Douro, on the right bank of the Tamega, 19 miles N.E. of Oporto. There are a very fine church, town-house, and school of rhetoric and philosophy. Pop. 4,500.

PENANG. (See PRINCE OF WALES ISLAND.)

PENAS (DE SAN PEDRO), pen'-nas, a town of Spain, province of Albacete, six miles S.W. of Albacete. There is a very strong fort on a hill above the town. Manf. Chocolate, soap and linen. Pop. 3,401.

PENATES, pe-nai'-tees, in Roman mythology certain inferior deities who presided over houses and the domestic affairs of families.

PENDLETON, pen'-del-ton, a county of Kentucky, United States. Area, 300 square miles. Pop. 16,702. The capital is Falmouth.

PENDLETON, a county of West Virginia, United States. Area, 800 square miles. Pop. 8,022. The capital is Franklin.

PENDLETON, EDMUND, an American statesman, who having attained distinction as a lawyer was, in 1774, sent to the first Congress, and in the following year was appointed president of the committee of safety. He held other important offices, and presided over the State Convention of 1788, in which the proposed constitution of the United States was adopted.

Born in Virginia, 1721; died at Richmond, 1803.

PENDLETON. (See SALFORD.)

PENEDO, pen-ai'-do, a town of Brazil, province of Alagoas, near the mouth of the San Francisco, 50 miles S.W. of Macayo. Pop. 9,000.

PENELOPE, pe-nel'-o-pe, a celebrated princess of Greece, daughter of Icarius of Sparta, and wife of Ulysses, king of Ithaca. She became mother of Telemachus, and was obliged to part, with great reluctance, from her husband, when the Greeks obliged him to go to the Trojan war. When Ulysses did not return, like the other princes, she was beset by a number of suitors, who wished her to believe that her husband was shipwrecked. She received their addresses with disdain, but flattered them with hopes, and declared that she would make choice of one of them as soon as she had finished a piece of tapestry then in hand; but she baffled their eager expectations, by undoing by night what she had done in the day. This artifice of Penelope has given rise to the proverb of Penelope's web, which is applied to whatever labour can never be ended. The return of Ulysses, after an absence of twenty years, however, delivered her from her dangerous suitors.

PENN, SIR WILLIAM, pen, an English admiral, who commanded the fleet at the taking of Jamaica from the Spaniards, in 1655. The same year he was elected member of parliament for Weymouth. He was sent to the Tower by Cromwell, for quitting his command without leave, but was soon released. After the restoration he became a knight, commissioner of the navy, and a vice-admiral. Under the duke of York, he fought in the naval action in which the Dutch were defeated, in 1665. In the following year he retired from the service.

Born at Bristol, 1621; died at Wanstead, Essex, 1670.

PENN, WILLIAM, an eminent Quaker, and founder of the state of Pennsylvania, was the son of the preceding. He received a good education, and was sent to Christ Church, Oxford; but adopted Quakerism, refused to wear a surplice in church, and with others, attacked other students, and tore the obnoxious garments from their backs. For this he was expelled the university, and thrashed and discarded by his father, who, however, afterwards relented, and sent his son abroad. Young Penn visited France and Italy, and returned to his native country in 1664. He spent two years in the study of the law at Lincoln's Inn, and was then sent to Ireland to manage his father's estates; but again ardently advocated the Quaker doctrines, and travelled to propagate this new faith. He was taken up for preaching, and sent to prison; but was released by the influence of the president of the council of Munster. After his return to England he was again turned out of doors by his father, because he would not take off his hat to the king, and was sent to the Tower, on account of a book which he had written; and, while there, he composed his principal work, entitled, "No Cross, no Crown," intended to show the benefit of suffering. On his release (through the influence of the duke of York), he resumed his former labours, and was apprehended with some others, and tried for preaching at a conventicle in Gracechurch Street. The jury persisted in finding them not guilty, and were fined for acting contrary to the dictates of the judge. Admiral Penn was reconciled to his son before his death, in 1670, and left him all his property. He continued firm in his attachment to the Society of Friends, and, in 1677, went on a mission to Holland and Germany, with Fox and Barclay. Shortly after his return he married a daughter of Sir William Spurgett. In 1681 he obtained from the Crown, in lieu of the arrears due to his father, the grant of the province in North America now called Pennsylvania, which he at first named Sylvania, but the king added Penn's name as a prefix. Penn sailed with a colony of Quakers, and founded Philadelphia; but before he entered upon possession, he made a treaty with the Indians. The code of laws which he formed for the government of his province was simple, but would have done honour to the profoundest legislators. After spending about two years in the administration of the new colony, he returned to England in 1684. Upon the death of Charles II. Penn attracted to himself the favour of James II., who had been an old friend of his father's, and obtained the release of 1,200 Quakers, and of many others who had been imprisoned on account of their religious opinions; and this intimacy led to his being several times arrested after the king had been dethroned. His accusers charged him with being a Papist and a Jesuit; but although he, during several years, remained in seclusion, and did not refute the calumnies of his enemies, he, at length, defended himself before William III. and his council, and was honourably acquitted. In 1696 he married his second wife, Miss Callowhill, of Bristol; and, three years afterwards, again set sail for Pennsylvania. In 1701 he returned to England, and, being encumbered with claims made upon him by the widow and son of a fraudulent agent named Ford, whom he had left to manage the colony, that, to avoid extortion, he suffered imprisonment in the Fleet, and endeavoured to negotiate the sale of Pennsylvania to the crown for £12,000. This negotiation was interrupted in 1712, through his being attacked by an apoplectic fit, which, happening twice afterwards, greatly impaired his mental faculties. He survived for six years longer, but with a constitution much shattered, and quite unfitted for any serious employment. Lord Macaulay, in his History, charges Penn with being a species of court agent for the sale of pardons; with endeavouring to persuade the fellows of Magdalen College, Oxford, to accede to James II.'s illegal acts, with seeking to bring about the king's return by means of a foreign army; and with other "scandalous acts." These charges, however, have been met by Mr. Hepworth Dixon; although Macaulay, in the later editions of his great work, maintains the justice of his charges. After Penn's death, his sons held the proprietary governments of the state of Pennsylvania. After the American revolution, the claims of his descendants upon the state of Pennsylvania were bought up for £130,000. Montesquieu calls Penn "the modern Lycurgus." Penn wrote a number of works, which were collected and published in two vols.

Born in London, 1644; died at Ruscombe, Berkshire, 1718.

PENNANT, THOMAS, pen'-nant, British naturalist, and antiquary, who after receiving his grammatical education at Wrexham school, was sent to Oxford, where he principally applied himself to the study of natural philosophy. After travelling over England, he went abroad, and was introduced to Voltaire, Buffon, Linnæus, and other eminent men. In 1750 he published "The British Zoology," a work of considerable merit. In 1771 appeared his "Tour in Scotland," which passed through several editions. This was followed at different periods, by a number of similar works; as "A Tour in Wales," "A Journey from Chesert to London," "An Account of London," &c. He also published "History of Quadrupeds," (highly praised by Cuvier), "Genera of Birds," "Arctic Zoology," Literary Memoirs;" and, at the time of his death, was engaged on a description of India, of which one volume was printed. In 1771 the University of Oxford conferred on him the degree of LL.D.

Born at Downing, Flintshire, 1726; died at the same place, 1798.

PENNAR, pen'-nar, a river of India, rising in the Nundydroog Hills, and after a course of 300 miles, falling into the Bay of Bengal, in lat. 14° 35′ N. lon. 80° 12′ E.

PENNI, GIOVANNI, FRANCISCO, pen'-ne an eminent Italian painter, who was the disciple of Raffaelle, to whom he became steward: on which account he obtained the title of Il Fattore. Dr. Waagen considers that many parts of the Raffaelle cartoons at Hampton Court were executed by him.

Born at Florence, 1488; died at Naples, 1528.

PENNINGTON, ISAAC, lord mayor of London in 1642, who headed most of the riots against Charles I., and was one of that king's judges. At the restoration he was tried and condemned, but respited, and died in the Tower.

Died about 1660.

PENNSYLVANIA, pen-sil-vai'-ne-a, one of the United States ("The Keystone State"), bounded N. by Lake Erie and New York; E. by the river Delaware, which separates it from New Jersey; S. by Maryland and Virginia; and W. by Virginia and Ohio. It is intersected by different ridges of the Alleghany Mountains, which traverse it from north-east to south-west. Some of the peaks are 3,000 feet high, and the Blue Ridge, in the south-eastern part rises to the height of 1,500 feet. Some of those mountains admit of cultivation almost to their summits; and between their numerous ridges there are delightful valleys, with a very rich soil. The other parts are generally level, or agreeably diversified with hill and dale. Pro. Wheat, Indian corn, buckwheat, rye, barley, oats, flax, hemp, tobacco, beans, pease, and potatoes are cultivated: cherries, peaches, apples, and cider are abundant. There are large dairies in many parts, and there is an excellent breed of horses. Sheep are numerous; and the Merino breeds have been introduced and thrive well. Wood is plentiful: in the western parts are found the oak, chestnut, beech, sugar-maple, ash, black walnut, bass-wood, elm, hicory, white ash, butternut, hemlock, and locust. Of birds, the most useful are the wild turkey, which inhabits the hilly and mountainous parts: there are, besides, pheasants, partridges, pigeons, ducks, &c. The eastern creeks abound with a white fish called salmon, and trout, shad, herring, carp, eels, rock-fish; the western waters with catfish, yellow perch, trout, rock-fish, and pike; and the ponds and smaller streams with excellent trout.

Rivers.—The Delaware, Susquehanna, Schuylkill, Lehigh, Juniatta; the Alleghany, Monongahela, and other affluents of the Ohio, and some streams.

Minerals.—Iron ore is distributed in large quantities over many parts of the state, and copper, lead, nickel, zinc, and alum are found. Here are also numerous limestone quarries and various kinds of marble; and on the east of the Alleghanies are extensive deposits of anthracite coal, and on the western side of bituminous coal. Petroleum is a most valuable product, the deposits lying chiefly in the north-western part of the state.

Area.—46,000 square miles.

Pop.—4,283,000, about 66,000 being coloured. In respect of population this ranks as the second state in the Union.

Divisions and Chief Towns.—There are 66 counties. The chief towns are PHILADELPHIA, PITTSBURGH, HARRISBURGH (the capital), Allegherry Allentown, Erie, Lancaster, Reading, Scranton, Williamsport, and York.

History.—A settlement of Swedes and Finns was made on the river Delaware in 1627. In 1681 the territory was granted to William Penn (see PENN); and it formed one of the original 13 states of the Union.

PENOBSCOT, pe-nob'-skot, a river of the United States, rising in a chain of lakes near the centre of the State of Maine, and after a course of 275 miles falling into Penobscot Bay, on the southern coast of the state.

PENOBSCOT, a county of Maine, United States. Area, 2,760 square miles. Pop. 70,476. The capital is Bangor.

PENRITH, pen'-rith, an irregularly-built market-town of Cumberland, in a beautiful valley, 17 miles S.E. of Carlisle. It has a church, containing some ancient monuments, a handsome church, built in 1850, a free grammar school, and other educational institutions. Manf. Cotton, linen, and woollen goods. Pop. 9,268.—A station on the London and North-Western and North-Eastern railways.

PENRY, JOHN, pen'-re, Puritan controversialist, author of the "Martin Marprelate" tracts, attacking episcopacy. He was executed for sedition.

Born 1559; died 1593.

PENRYN, pen-rin', a municipal and (with Falmouth) parliamentary borough and market-town of Cornwall, on a low hill projecting into Falmouth harbour, 2 miles N.W. of Falmouth. It consists chiefly of one principal street, from which some others diverge at right angles. The market-house and town-hall stand in the principal street; and here are also assembly-rooms and a good custom-house and quay. Manf. Paper, woollens, chemicals, and gunpowder. A considerable trade is carried on in the curing of pilchards, and large quantities of fine granite are quarried in the neighbourhood. Pop. 3,680.

PENSACOLA, pen'-sa-ko'-la, a city and port of entry of West Florida, United States, on the Gulf of Mexico, at the head of a delightful bay, formed by the Escambia and some other rivers in Pensacola Bay, which is defended by strong forts. A few miles below the town is a United States naval yard. Pop. 3,500, of whom nearly half are coloured. Lat. 30° 24′ N. Lon. 87° 10′ W.

PENTENISIA, pen'-te-nis'-i-a, a group of islands in the Gulf of Ægina, Greece, 10 miles from Ægina.

PENTLAND FIRTH, pent'-land, the strait which separates the mainland of Scotland from the Orkney Isles, and connects the Atlantic with the German Ocean. It is 17 miles long, and only 8 over; but the sea runs with impetuous force by the meeting of so many tides; and there are, besides, several whirlpools and islands, which increase the danger.

PENZA, pen'-za, a government of Russia in Europe, bounded N. by the government of Nijni-Novgorod, and W. by that of Tambov. The surface consists chiefly of elevated plains, with ridges of hills of moderate elevation. The soil is very fertile, and considerable quantities of grain are exported. There are extensive forests of oak. The rivers are tributaries of the Don and Volga. Area, 14,996 square miles. Pop. 1,382,732. The chief towns are PENZA, Mokshansk, and Saransk.

PENZA, capital of the above government, on the Soura. It occupies an elevated site, is well built, and has a large park, and beautiful gardens. There are 19 churches and two convents. Manf. Cloth, soap, candles, leather, and iron. A large trade is carried on in corn and timber. Pop. 42,153.

PENZANCE, pen-zance', a market-town and seaport, on the north-west side of Mounts Bay, 9 miles N.E. of the Land's End. It is the most westerly town in England, is beautifully situated, and on account of the mild climate is much resorted to. A very fine esplanade commands charming views. The chief buildings are the town-hall and corn market, and the churches of St. Paul and St. Mary. There are a fine geological museum, a natural history and antiquarian society, and other educational institutions. Its trade is considerable, and consists chiefly in pilchards and other fish, and in shipping lead, tin, and copper, which abound in the vicinity. Manf. Woollens, yarns, and cloth. The harbour will admit large vessels, and there is a pier 800 feet long. Pop. 11,684.—A station on the Great Western Railway.

PENZING, pen'-zing, a town of the Austrian empire, on the Weinfluss, in the western environs of Vienna. There are many elegant residences, and a bathing establishment. Pop. 8,000.

PEORIA, pe'-o-re-a, a city and port of entry of Illinois, United States, on the west bank of the Illinois river, at the outlet of Peoria Lake, 160 miles S.W. of Chicago. The river is crossed by two bridges, each nearly half a mile long, and the city is a great railroad centre. Bituminous coal is abundant in the vicinity. There are 28 churches. Manf. Machinery, steam boilers, agricultural implements, and carriages. There is a large trade in flour, starch, and lumber. Pop. 29,259, about one-third being foreigners.

PEORIA, a county of Illinois, United States. Area, 650 square miles. Pop. 55,355. The capital is PEORIA.

PEPE, GABRIELE, pai'-pai, Neapolitan general, was a student at law, but took service in the Franco-Neapolitan army, and afterwards in the Italian legion in Spain, under Joseph Napoleon. In 1815, Ferdinand I. of Naples made him military commander of Syracuse. In 1820 he attached himself to the revolutionary party, and was returned member of the National Parliament. The Austrians took him prisoner, and he suffered nearly two years' captivity at Olmutz. He then retired to Tuscany, and afterwards fought a duel with and wounded Lamartine, who, in his "Last Canto of Childe Harold," had cast some reflections on the Italian patriots. The remainder of his life was devoted to literature and science.

Born at Bojano, 1781; died 1849.

PEPE, GUGLIELMO, a modern Italian general, cousin to the preceding, who, in 1799, entered the ranks of the republican army, formed in Naples by the French, when they proclaimed the Parthenopean republic; but was taken prisoner, and banished at the restoration of Ferdinand, which shortly afterwards followed. He next served in the Italian legion of the French army, but was permitted to return to Naples in 1801. Under Murat he was appointed officer of the ordnance, and, in 1810, served in the campaign of Catalonia, under Marshal Suchet, who created him general of brigade. He was made a baron by Murat, in 1814. After the death of Murat, he remained at Naples; but became one of the chiefs of the great secret society called the Carbonari, which, in 1821, compelled Ferdinand IV. to grant a constitution similar to that of Spain, and to convoke a parliament at Naples. The Austrian government took umbrage at these measures, and sent two armies towards Naples. Pepe, at the head of some ill-disciplined volunteers, met them, but suffered a defeat, and, being abandoned by his followers, was compelled to fly. He went first to Spain, and afterwards to England, in both of which countries he endeavoured to raise corps of volunteers in the cause of Italian liberty. During his absence he was condemned to death; but he remained safe in London, where he married a rich heiress. In 1848 the amnesty permitted him to return to Naples, and the king, submitting to the popular feeling, appointed him to the command of an army sent to co-operate with Charles Albert of Piedmont against Austria; but, shortly afterwards, recalled his troops. Pepe, however, instead of obeying, led the Neapolitans to assist in the defence of Venice. After covering himself with glory by his heroic defence of the fort of Malghera, he, upon the capitulation of Venice, made his escape to Corfu on board a French vessel, and subsequently repaired to Paris; but, having little sympathy with the character of the French people, he shortly afterwards left their capital to take up his residence at Nice, where he resided until his death. He was the author of several works, chiefly descriptive of the events in which he had participated. There is a statue to his memory at Turin.

Born at Squillace, 1782; died at Nice, 1855.

PEPIN, DE LANDEN, pé-pin, a Brabant and one of the great lords of Austrasia, who offered the crown to Clotaire II, king of Neustria, and, in return for his services, was appointed mayor of the palace (virtually ruler of the kingdom), an office he retained during the two following reigns. He was an able and prudent administrator.

Died 639.

PEPIN, LE GROS, or D'HERISTAL, grandson of the preceding. He brought about the death of Dagobert II., and the end of the Merovingian dynasty, in Austrasia, and having placed Theirry II., a weak king, on the throne, exercised absolute authority as mayor of the palace. His illegitimate son and successor was Charles Martel.

Died 714.

PEPIN, THE SHORT, son of Charles Martel, and father of Charlemagne, was the first of the Carlovingian kings of France. He was at first mayor of the palace under Childeric III.; but in 752 he dethroned that monarch, and confined him in a monastery. Having requested and obtained the sanction of the pope, Pepin was constituted king. He assisted Pope Stephen III. against the Longobards, founded the temporal power of the papacy, defeated the Saxons, Bavarians, and other German nations, and united Aquitaine to his crown.

Born 714; died 768.

PEPIN, king of Italy, son of Charlemagne. He annexed Bavaria, Istria, and part of Dalmatia.

Born 776; died 810.

PEPIN I., Carlovingian king of Aquitaine, son of Louis le Debonnaire, king of France. He was chosen king in 817, and in 830 joined his brother in war against his father, to whom he was afterwards reconciled.

Died 838.

PEPIN II., son of the above, succeeded to the crown 838. Deposed, 850; and died in captivity.

PEPIN, a county of Wisconsin, United States. Area, 250 square miles. Pop. 6,226. The capital is Durand.

PEPUSCH, JOHANN CHRISTOPH, pé-poosh, an eminent Prussian musician, who, at the age of 15, had the honour of teaching the prince royal. About 1700 he settled in England, and was engaged as composer at Drury-lane theatre. The university of Oxford conferred on him the degree of doctor of music. He acquired a considerable fortune by teaching, and by his marriage with an Italian singer. He adapted the music, and composed an overture for the "Beggars' Opera," and wrote a treatise on Harmony.

Born at Berlin, 1667; died in London, 1752.

PEPYS, SAMUEL, peps, an English writer, who was secretary to the Admiralty in the reigns of Charles II. and James II., having been nominated to a clerkship in that establishment through the interest of his relative the earl of Sandwich. He was charged with complicity in the famous Popish plot, and with sending intelligence to France, and suffered imprisonment, but was released, the charge being proved to be unfounded. His knowledge of naval administration was very large, and it was to his energy that the affairs of the Admiralty were reduced to order and method. His "Memoirs relating to the Navy" is a well-written work, and his collection of MSS., with his library, now at Magdalen College, Cambridge, is an invaluable treasury of naval knowledge. In 1684 he became president of the Royal Society. But his celebrated "Diary" forms his best claim to remembrance. This work, after lying undeciphered in shorthand characters during 150 years, was published (with some suppressions) by Lord Braybrooke, in 1825. A more complete edition has since been published. It is a perfect treasury of facts and incidents relative to the times of Charles II.

Born in London, 1632; died in the same city, 1703.

PERA. (See CONSTANTINOPLE.)

PERAK, pe-rak', a state of the Malay peninsula, extending along its western coast. It is partly mountainous, but there are extensive and very fertile plains. There are rich veins of tin, and gold is found. The chief river is of the same name. Pop. 35,000, exclusive of unknown tribes in Central region. Lat. between 3° 40′ and 5° N.

PERCEVAL, SPENCER, Rt. Hon., an English statesman, who was the second son of the earl of Egmont, lord of the Admiralty. He was educated at Harrow and Trinity College, Cambridge, and afterwards studied for the legal profession, and was returned a member for Northampton in 1797. His advance was rapid. He became solicitor and attorney-general, and chancellor of the Exchequer, in quick succession, having obtained the favour of George III. by his violent opposition to the Catholic claims. Finally, he, in 1809, attained the summit of power as first lord of the Treasury. He retained this office until he was assassinated in the House of Commons by Bellingham.

Born in London, 1762; died 1812.

PERCY, the Family of, per'-se, one of the most distinguished in England. Its founder was William de Percy, who accompanied the Conqueror to England, and received several lordships in Lincoln and York. A descendant of his was one of the barons who obtained the Great Charter from King John. In the reign of Edward I., Henry de Percy obtained Alnwick and other possessions in Northumberland, with which county the name of Percy henceforth became intimately connected. In the reign of Edward III., a Henry de Percy married Mary of Lancaster, daughter of a grandson of Henry III. Another Henry de Percy was created earl of Northumberland by Richard II. in 1377. He distinguished himself against the Scots, and took Berwick. Some years later, the Scots, by corrupting the governor, again made themselves masters of it; on which the duke of Lancaster brought an accusation against the earl in parliament, and he was sentenced to lose his life and estates. But the king having revoked this sentence, the earl laid siege to Berwick and took it. When the duke of Lancaster assumed the crown, with the title of Henry IV., he created the earl constable of England. In the fourth year of that reign, the earl and his son, commonly called Hotspur, defeated the Scots at Halidon Hill, and took the earl of Douglas prisoner. Having demanded the pay due to him as keeper of the Marches, and not receiving a satisfactory answer, the earl took up arms against the king, and placed Hotspur at the head of his troops; but he was slain at the battle of Shrewsbury in 1403; upon which Percy made his submission and received the royal pardon. Notwithstanding this he collected another army, but was defeated and slain in Yorkshire in 1408. Henry V. restored the title to a son of Hotspur. This second earl was slain at the battle of St. Albans, in 1455; and the third at Towton, in 1461. The fourth earl was killed 1489; the fifth died in 1527. The sixth earl died in 1537 without issue, and the title of Northumberland remained out of the family until it was restored to the Percies by Queen Mary. This earl was put to death by Queen Elizabeth, in 1572, and his brother, who succeeded him, was shot in the Tower. The eleventh earl, in whom the chief male line of Percy became extinct, died at Turin in 1670, in his 26th year. At that period several persons claimed to be of the blood of the Percies; and one of them, a trunkmaker at Dublin, endeavoured to obtain the family titles, but without success. Lady Elizabeth Percy, daughter of the eleventh earl, who married Charles Seymour, duke of Somerset, had a son Algernon, who was created earl of Northumberland in 1749. His daughter, Lady Elizabeth Seymour, married Sir Hugh Smithson, who took the name of Percy on becoming earl of Northumberland, at the death of his wife's father. He was created duke of Northumberland in 1766, and from him is descended the existing peer.

PERCY, DR. THOMAS, a prelate of the Irish church, and distinguished antiquary, who received his education at the university of Oxford; and, upon entering orders, obtained a living. His first work was a translation of a Portuguese translation of a Chinese novel, which was followed by "Miscellaneous Pieces relating to the Chinese." Between the years 1761-63, he produced some translations of Icelandic poetry, and in 1764 a new version of the "Song of Solomon," with a learned commentary. His "Key to the New Testament" followed; in 1765 he produced the celebrated collection of old English ballad literature, known as the "Reliques of Ancient Poetry." In the following year he became chaplain to the duke and duchess of Northumberland, the name of whose family he bore; and, after receiving other preferments, was created bishop of Dromore in 1782. The "Northumberland Household Book," and "The Hermit of Warkworth," both connected with the history of the Percy family, were also published by him; his last work being a translation of M. Mallet's "Northern Antiquities." After he was ordained a bishop of the Irish church he relinquished his pen, and devoted himself exclusively to the affairs of his diocese.

Born in Shropshire, 1728; died in Ireland, 1811.

PERCY ISLES, a group in the South Pacific Ocean, near the north-eastern coast of Australia. The largest is about 14 miles in circumference. Lat. 21° 31′ S. Lon. 150° 18′ E.

PERDICCAS, one of the generals of Alexander the Great, after whose death he aspired to the crown of Macedon; to accomplish which design he endeavoured to form a matrimonial alliance with Cleopatra, sister of Alexander. His project being discovered by Antigonus, he entered into a league with Antipater, Craterus, and Ptolemy, the governor of Egypt, against Perdiccas, who marched to Memphis, but was slain in his tent by some of his soldiers.

Died 321 B.C.

PEREFIXE, HARDOUIN DE BEAUMONT DE, per'-e-fecks, an eminent French prelate, who secured the patronage of Cardinal Richelieu, was admitted a doctor of the Sorbonne, and became a distinguished preacher. He was appointed preceptor to Louis XIV., and in 1664 obtained the archbishopric of Paris. He wrote a History of Henry IV., and other works.

Born in Poitou, 1605; died 1670.

PEREIRA, NUNEZ ALVAREZ, pai-rai-eer'-a, "the Portuguese Cid," was created a counsellor of state by John I. of Portugal in 1383, and subsequently reduced several cities of Alentejo, for which services he was nominated constable of the kingdom. In 1385 he commanded a wing of the army at the battle of Aljubarrota, and at a later period rendered the most important services to his sovereign. After an energetic career, both military and diplomatic, he retired to a monastery in the year 1421, where he remained secluded from the world until his death.

Born about 1360; died 1431.

PEREIRA-GOMEZ, GEORGE, a Spanish physician, who wrote a work to prove that brute animals are mere machines, and several other books upon medical subjects.

Born at Medina del Campo, about 1500; died about 1570.

PEREKOP, ISTHMUS OF, pe-re-kop', a neck of land about 18 miles long, and with a breadth varying from 5 to 16 miles, connecting the mainland of southern Russia with the Crimea. It is generally a sandy waste, with salt lakes.

PEREKOP, a town on the northern part of the isthmus, government of Taurida. There are a Greek church, a mosque, and a fort. The chief trade is in salt. Several large fairs are held. Pop. 5,000.

PERESLAV, per'-e-slav', a town of European Russia, government of Vladimir, 70 miles N.W. of the city of that name. There are 30 churches. Manf., very extensive, of cotton. Pop. 7,500.

PERESLAVL, pe-re-slav'-el, a town of European Russia, government of Poltava, at the junction of the Alla and Trubesch, 150 miles N.W. of Poltava. It is surrounded by an earthen wall, and has a cathedral and nine other churches, and a monastery. A trade in corn and cattle is carried on. Pop. 9,600.

PERESLAVL-ZALESKI, a town of European Russia, government of Vladimir, on the east shore of lake Plestchéivo. There are a cathedral, numerous churches, three monasteries, and a nunnery. A fine promenade has been formed on the site of the old ramparts. Manf. Linen. An active trade is carried on with St. Petersburg. Pop. 6,700.

PEREZ, ANTONIO, pai'-raith, a Spanish writer and statesman, was the natural son of Gonsalvo Perez, secretary of state to Charles V., and himself became secretary to Philip II. He was employed in state affairs, and made himself infamous by according to the wishes of the king, and assassinating Escovedo, the agent of Don John of Austria. He was arrested, and although the king tried to shield him, was put to the torture till he confessed the crime. He escaped to Aragon, which refused to deliver him up to the king who had instigated the murder, but now insisted that Perez should be executed. He retired to England, and afterwards to France, where he lived in great poverty. His "Letters" and "Narrative," in which he gives an account of his transactions with Philip, and his subsequent trial and tortures, are curious and important. His works were printed at Paris in 1598.

Born 1539; died 1616.

PERGAMUS, per'-ga-mus, anciently a splendid city of Asia Minor. (See ASIA MINOR.)

PERGOLESE, GIOVANNI BATTISTA, pair-go-lai'-se, an Italian composer, who studied under Gaetano Greco, one of the ablest musicians in Italy; after which the prince of Stigliano took him under his protection. His countrymen style him the Domenichino of music. His "Salve Regina," "Stabat Mater," and "Gloria in Excelcis," are his most admired compositions. He died of consumption at the age of 26.

Born near Ancona, 1710; died 1736.

PERIANDER, per-i-an'-der, the tyrant of Corinth, who was called, by his flatterers, one of the seven sages of Greece. He began with overturning the constitution and liberty of his country, and usurping the sovereignty, B.C. 627. The commencement of his reign was mild, but he soon showed himself a thorough despot. He committed fearful cruelties on the Corinthians, put to death his wife Melissa, and banished his son Lycophron for lamenting her fate. According to Aristotle, he is the first ruler who reduced despotic government to a system.

Died 585 B.C.

PERICLES, per'-i-klees, a celebrated Athenian, who distinguished himself as a general, statesman, and orator. He was the son of Xanthippus, a famous general, and studied under the philosopher Anaxagoras. Having acquired great popularity among his countrymen, he prevailed upon them to alter their government; and caused Cimon and his other rivals to be banished; thus constituting himself sole master of Athens. He commanded the army in the Peloponnesus, and gained a great victory, near Nemæa, over the Sicyonians. He next took Byzantium and Samos, at the siege of which place were invented several warlike machines. Pericles advised the Athenians to continue the war against Sparta, for which he was censured and disgraced; but he recovered his popularity and the government, and died of the plague which desolated Athens. Pericles was the great patron of arts, letters, and, indeed, luxury. In his age, all three flourished to their highest extent.

Born at Athens, 495 B.C.; died 429 B.C.

PERIER, CASIMIR, per'-e-ai, a famous French banker, and, subsequently, a statesman, at first entered the army, and served with reputation in the campaigns of Italy (1799 and 1800), but on the death of his father, a merchant, abandoned the profession of arms for commercial pursuits. In 1802 he established a banking house in company with his brother, Scipio Perier, in the management of which he acquired an intimate acquaintance with the most difficult and important questions of public credit and finance. In 1827 he was elected a representative. At the revolution of 1830 he took a decided part in favour of the national liberties, was subsequently chosen president of the chambers, and finally formed one of the first cabinet of the new king, without holding the portfolio of any department. In March 1831 he became president of the council.

Born 1777; died 1832.

PERIGUEUX, pe'-ri-gu, a town of France, capital of the department Dordogne, on the right bank of the Ille, 40 miles from Angoulême. It has a splendid cathedral in the Byzantine style, in the form of a Greek cross, with a lofty tower and four cupolas; a public library, and a town-hall, besides some extensive and very fine Roman antiquities. Manf. Cutlery, nails, woollens, paper, and hosiery. Pop. 26,000.—This place was several times taken and retaken by the English and French in the 13th, 14th, and 15th centuries. The town occupies the site of the Roman Vesunna.

PERIM, pe'-rim, an island off the Arabian coast, in the strait of the Bab-el-Mandeb, at the entrance of the Red Sea. It has a length of 5 miles, and belongs to the British. There is an excellent harbour, and strong fortifications have been erected. Lat. 12° 38′ N. Lon. 43° 12′ E.

PERINGSKIOLD, JOHN, pe-ring-ske'-old, a learned Swede, who became secretary of antiquities, counsellor to the king of Sweden, and professor at Upsal. His works are, a "History of the Kings of the North," "History of the Kings of Norway," and "Historical and Chronological Tables from Adam to Jesus Christ." He was also the editor of the works of Messenius.

Born in Sudermania, 1654; died 1720.

PERIZONIUS, JAMES, per'-i-zo'-ni-us, a learned Dutch writer, who studied first at Deventer, and afterwards at Utrecht, under Grævius, by whose means he obtained the rectorship of the Latin school at Delft, and the professorship of history and eloquence at Francker. In 1693 he removed to Leyden, where he filled the chair of Greek and history with reputation. Among other works, he wrote "Animadversiones Historicæ," and "Dissertations on several points of Ancient History."

Born at Dam, Holland, 1651; died at Leyden, 1715.

PERKIN WARBECK. (See WARBECK, Perkin).

PERKINS, WILLIAM, per'-kins, an English divine, who received his education at Christ's College, Cambridge, of which he became fellow. He was a rigid Calvinist, and published several works on that form of faith; some of which, being translated into Dutch, were replied to by Arminius, and occasioned the famous disputes for settling of which the synod of Dort was called.

Born at Marston, Warwickshire, 1558; died 1602.

PERLEBURG, perl'-boorg, a walled town of Prussia, government of Potsdam, on the Stepenitz, 73 miles N.W. of Berlin. There are a Protestant church and chapel. Manf. Woollens and chicory. Pop. 7,600.

PERM, perm, the most eastern government of European Russia, adjacent to the government of Viatka on the W., and Tobolsk on the E. Three parts of it are covered by the Ural range, with woods, and the rest of the soil so sterile as almost to be incapable of culture. In winter the cold is intense. Rivers. The Tobol in Asia, and the Kama in Europe. Minerals. Gold, copper, platinum, iron, salt, coal, alabaster, and marble. Area, 128,210 square miles. Pop. 2,539,874.

PERM, a town of European Russia, capital of the government on the Kama, 240 miles from Viatka. It is the seat of a very large traffic trade between the Ural Mountains and St. Petersburg in tallow, corn, metals, and leather, and in goods from Siberia and China. A large cannon-foundry is near the town. Pop. 32,016.

PERNAMBUCO, per'-nam-boo'-ko, a province of Brazil, bounded N. and E. by the Atlantic Ocean. The coast is flat, and coral reefs make approach dangerous. It abounds in sugar-cane, cotton, Brazil-wood, maize, fruits, and medicinal herbs. There are extensive tracts of pasture on which large herds of cattle are reared. The chief river is the San Francisco. Area, 46,255 sq. miles. Pop. 1,014,700.

PERNAMBUCO, or ST. ANTONIO DO RECIFE, a town and seaport of Brazil, capital of the province of the same name, consisting of three divisions, Recife, St. Antonio, and Boa Vista. The first of these, the chief seat of commerce, is on a peninsula, connected by a bridge with St. Antonio, which is on an island, is connected with Boa Vista, on the continent, also by a wooden bridge. St. Antonio, or the middle town, is composed chiefly of large houses and broad streets. Here are the governor's palace, treasury, town-hall, and prison, the barracks, Franciscan, Carmelite, and Penha convents; and several churches, the interiors of which are very handsomely ornamented. Boa Vista is the most modern part of the town, and has the most showy buildings. The harbour belonging to Recife, called the Mosqueiro, situate on the outward bank, is defended by forts, and is formed by a reef of rocks, which runs parallel with the town, at a very small distance. The chief exports are cotton, sugar, rum, dyewoods, and hides. Pop. 130,000.

PERNOW, per'-nou, a fortified seaport of Russia, government of Livonia, on the Gulf of Riga, 102 miles N. of Riga. It is defended by a citadel, and comprises an old and a new town, with two suburbs. It has a trade in flax, lint, timber, and grain. The mouth of the river Pernow, at which the town is situated, is shallow, and large vessels anchor in the roads. Pop. 10,000.

PERNES, pairn, a parish and town of France, in the department Vaucluse, 4 miles from Carpentras. Pop. 5,500.

PERONNE, pe-ron', a fortified town of France, department Somme, on the right bank of the Somme, 32 miles N.E. of Amiens. It is strongly fortified. There are an ancient bell-tower, a church in which several of the early kings of France are buried; and the remains of an old castle, in which Louis XI. was detained by Charles duke of Burgundy. Manf. Linen, cambric, woollens, leather, and sugar. Pop. 4,200.

PEROUSE. (See LA PEROUSE.)

PERPIGNAN, pair'-peen-yawng, a town and fortress of France, capital of the department Pyrenées-Orientales, on the Tet, five miles from the Mediterranean. It is a place of strength, and accounted one of the keys of the kingdom on the side of Spain. The citadel is very strong. The cathedral is a massive building begun in the 14th century. The fortified castle, now used as a military prison, and the belfry of St. Jacques, are noticeable buildings. The streets are narrow, the houses generally in the Moorish style, and the town is surrounded by orchards. There are large barracks, a palace of justice, a college, museum, and several educational institutions. Manf. Woollens, silk, soap, paper, and playing-cards. Good wine is made in the vicinity. Pop. 32,000.—This town was formerly the capital of the province of Roussillon, and belonged to the kings of Aragon; but was taken by France in 1642.

PERQUIMANS, per'-kwe-mans, a county of North Carolina, United States. Area, 200 square miles. Pop. 9,466, about half being coloured. The capital is Hertford.

PERRAULT, CLAUDE, per'-rolte, a French architect, who studied medicine, and wrote some works on that subject, but did not practise. His taste for the fine arts, particularly architecture, drew him from his first profession. He designed the east front and colonnades of the Louvre, the Observatory at Paris, the grotto at Versailles, and other great works. He also translated Vitruvius into French, which he illustrated with fine designs of his own. Perrault was admitted a member of the Academy of Sciences, though Boileau had satirized him as a physician turned mason. His other works are "An Abridgment of Vitruvius," "Description of Machines of My Invention," "On the Ancient Columns of Architecture and their Ornaments," "Memoirs for a Natural History of Animals."

Born at Paris, 1613; died in the same city, 1688.

PERRAULT, CHARLES, brother of the preceding. He had, from his youth, a fine taste for literature, particularly poetry. He practised at the Paris bar, but Colbert appointed him comptroller-general of the public buildings; and Perrault made use of the influence he had with that minister in promoting the arts and assisting worthy men. In 1651 he became a member of the French Academy, and was one of the institutors of that of Belles-lettres and inscriptions. He also contributed to the Memoirs of the Academy of Painting, Sculpture, and Architecture. After the death of Colbert he was discharged from his post; on which he devoted himself wholly to letters. His poem on the age of Louis the Great, in which he exalted the modern authors, over all the ancients, was highly censured and ridiculed. He then ventured to publish his "Parallel of the Ancients and Moderns," which gave still more offence, and occasioned a violent controversy between him and Boileau. He was the author of "Tales of the Fairies," which gained great popularity, and by which he is, perhaps, best remembered.

Born at Paris, 1628; died 1703.

PERRON, JACQUES DAVY DU, per'-rawn(g), cardinal, was born of Calvinist parents, and was educated under his father, acquiring a great knowledge of the Latin, Greek, and Hebrew languages, as well as of the mathematics, philosophy, and history. His proficiency was such that Philip Desportes, abbot of Tryon, reported him to Henry III. of France as a prodigy of memory. Having renounced the Protestant religion, he entered into orders, and became famous as a preacher, but more as a controversialist. In 1593 he became bishop of Evreux, and, in 1600, he had a conference on matters of religion with D'Aubigné and Mornay, in the presence of the king, in which Perron was equally matched. This conference procured him the dignity of cardinal. He was employed on several important negotiations, and was made grand almoner of France, and archbishop of Sens. Du Perron was a man of great policy and ambition, and his learning was various and profound. He wrote a treatise on the Eucharist, another against king James I. of England; letters, &c.

Born 1556; died at Paris, 1618.

PERRONET DE GRANVELLE, per'-ro-nai, ANTOINE, French cardinal and statesman. He was consecrated bishop of Arras, in 1538, and two years afterwards succeeded his father as chief minister of the emperor Charles V. In 1554 he negotiated the marriage of Philip II. with Queen Mary of England. He was made archbishop of Mechlin in 1560, and created cardinal in 1561. Having been sent to the Netherlands, his conduct was so tyrannical that he was driven out by the Gueux in 1566. In 1584 he was elected archbishop of Besançon.

Born 1517; died 1586.

PERRONET, JEAN RODOLPH, per'-ro-nai, French engineer, who, about 1745, became inspector of the Paris school of engineers, of which he was afterwards director. France is indebted to him for several of its finest bridges and best roads, the canal of Burgundy and other great works. For his public services he was honoured with the order of St. Michael, was admitted a member of the Academy of Sciences at Paris, of the Royal Society of London, and of the Academy of Stockholm. He wrote a description of the bridges which he had constructed.

Born at Surênes, 1708; died 1794.

PERROT, NICHOLAS. (See ABLANCOURT.)

PERROT, SIR JOHN, per'-rot, English statesman, was one of the knights of the Bath at the coronation of Edward VI., who had a great partiality for him. At the beginning of the reign of Mary he was sent to prison for harbouring Protestants; but, by the good offices of friends he was discharged. Elizabeth sent him, in 1572, to Ireland, as lord-president of Munster, which was in a state of rebellion, but, by his promptitude, was quickly reduced to obedience. He was afterwards appointed admiral of a fleet on the coast of Ireland, which was threatened with invasion by the Spaniards; and he continued cruising there till the reason for such an enterprise was over. In 1583 he was made lord-deputy of Ireland, where he carried things with so a high hand as to give great offence, and he was recalled in 1588, and sent to the Tower. In 1592 he was tried by a special commission, found guilty of high treason, and sentenced to death. The queen, however, was persuaded of his innocence, and respited him; but he fell ill, and died in confinement the same year.

Born in Pembrokeshire, 1527.

PERRY, JAMES, per'-re, journalist, political writer, who received his education at the grammar-school and Marischal College, Aberdeen. After being employed in an advocate's office at Aberdeen, he went to Edinburgh, and next to Manchester; finally, he repaired to London in 1771, where he obtained employment upon the newspapers. Subsequently he became part proprietor and editor of the Morning Chronicle, which, under his management, assumed very great importance among the London newspapers. In 1810 he was brought to trial before Lord Ellenborough for alleged libel; but, after eloquently defending himself, was found not guilty. Besides his numerous excellent contributions to the Morning Chronicle, he wrote some spirited pamphlets and pleasing pieces of poetry. He was the friend of most of the literary celebrities of his time.

Born in Aberdeenshire, 1756; died at Brighton, 1821.

PERRY, JOHN, an English engineer, who was invited to Russia by Peter the Great, and was there employed in forming a communication between the Volga and the Don; also in making the river Voronetz navigable, and improving the Russian navy; for which service he was badly requited. In 1712 he returned to England, and was engaged in stopping the Dagenham breach, in Essex, of which he published an account. He was the author of a work on the condition of Russia.

Born 1670; died 1733.

PERRY, the name of 10 counties in the United States:—

ALABAMA.—Area, 590 square miles. Pop. 30,742, more than two-thirds being coloured. The capital is Augusta.

ARKANSAS.—Area, 600 square miles. Pop. 3,872. The capital is Perryville.

KENTUCKY.—Area, 700 square miles. Pop. 5,607. The capital is Hazard.

TENNESSEE.—Area, 400 square miles. Pop. 7,000 The capital is Linden.

PERSEPOLIS, per-sep'-o-lis, the ancient capital of Persia, 35 miles N.E. of Shiraz. The principal buildings were destroyed by Alexander the Great, and the ruins may be numbered among the most remarkable monuments of early magnificence. They consist of remains of temples and palaces, and noble terraces of masonry, ascended by broad flights of steps. There are colossal figures of animals, resembling those found at Nineveh.

PERSERIN. (See PRISREND.)

PERSEUS, per'-se-us, in Greek mythology, son of Zeus and Danaë, famous for destroying and cutting off the head of the Gorgon Medusa, and liberation of Andromeda from the sea monster. (See ANDROMEDA and MEDUSA.)

PERSEUS, also PERSES, last king of Macedon, succeeded his father, Philip V., 179 B.C. He endeavoured to form an alliance of the Greek states against the Romans, who thereupon marched an army into Macedonia. In 168 B.C. the Romans, under Paulus Æmilius, met Perseus, who was totally defeated at Pydna. The king fled to Thrace, but afterwards surrendered to the Romans, and was conveyed to Rome, where he appeared as a captive in the triumph of his conqueror. He is said to have subsequently died in confinement.

Died about 160 B.C.

PERSHORE, per'-shor, a market-town of Worcestershire, on the Avon, 9 miles S.E. of Worcester. It was once famed for its abbey, and considerable part of the church, known by the name of the Holy Cross, still remains. St. Andrew's is another ancient church. Manf. Agricultural implements and woolstapling are carried on. Pop. 2,826.

PERSIA, per'-she-a (Persian, IRAN, e-ran'), a country of Asia, the most important of any to the west of India. It is bounded on the W. by Asiatic Turkey, N. by Transcaucasia, the Caspian Sea, and Turkestan, E. by Afghanistan and Beloochistan, and S.W. by the Persian Gulf. It consists chiefly of a plateau, from 2,000 to 5,000 feet above the sea level, with mountain chains in the north, west, and south. The immense chain of Caucasus fills the interval between the Black Sea and the Caspian. Southwards are the mountains of Armenia and Kurdistan, which connect themselves with Mount Taurus. These are very lofty, and form the frontier and debateable ground between the Persian and Turkish empires. Towards the south-west is the great salt desert, which has a few oases. Along the shore of the Persian Gulf is a narrow strip of low and level country. There are, in the mountainous districts, immense valleys of rare fertility; and the plain of Shiraz is considered the finest of Persia, and almost of the East. The plain of Ispahan is only second to it. The provinces on the Caspian, watered from the great chains of Caucasus and Elburz, are of very remarkable fertility. The centre and south being almost entirely destitute of trees, yet abound in fruits; and the vine flourishes in several provinces. The mulberry in the northern provinces is so extremely abundant, as to render silk the staple produce of the empire. The finest wheat in the world is grown in the southern provinces; the rich and well-watered plains of Ghilan and Mazanderan yield the sugar-cane, and maize and rice are successfully cultivated; but a deficiency of water is, in general, the great want of the country. A vast extent of it is left in pasture, and tenanted by wandering shepherds, like those of Tartary and Arabia, who frequently resort to robbery for a subsistence, rendering both life and property insecure. Poppies are largely grown for the sake of opium, and roses for the highly-valued extract which they produce.

The climate is extremely varied. In the provinces near the Caspian the summers are intensely hot, and the rainfall excessive; but in other parts the atmosphere is remarkable for dryness and salubrity. In the centre and east of the great plateau, the summers are intensely hot, and the winters excessively cold. There are few animals peculiar to the country. The domesticated include most of those common to Europe, with an excellent breed of mules, the camel, the ass, and the goat, from which a valuable wool, similar to that of Tibet, is obtained. Its wild animals are lions, bears, tigers, leopards, buffaloes, wild boars, jackals, wolves, and hyænas.

Rivers and Lakes.—There are few navigable rivers, although some of the streams are of great length; the most important is the Karun, which rises in the mountains to the south of Ispahan, and flows into the Persian Gulf. There are numerous salt lakes, many having no visible outlets. The largest is Lake Urumiah; and Lake Bakhtegan, to the east of Fars, is 60 miles long and 9 broad.

Minerals.—Salt, which abounds in every part of the country; iron, copper, lead, antimony, sulphur, and naphtha, and the discovery of coal has been recently announced.

Area.—648,000 square miles.

Pop.—7,654 000, of whom about 1,700,000 belong to wandering tribes. The inhabitants of towns, numbering nearly 1,000,000, constitute the pure Persian race, and more than half of the remaining population belongs to the Turkish, Lek, Koordish, and Arab tribes, which are spread over the whole of the Shah's territory. The population is steadily declining in numbers.

Administrative Divisions and Chief Towns.—The country is divided into 20 provinces, each under the rule of a beglerbeg, or civil and military governor, usually a member of the royal family. The provinces again are subdivided into districts, superintended by a hakim, or governor-lieutenant, whose chief duty is the collection of the revenue. The largest cities are TEHERAN (the capital), TABREEZ, MESHED, ISPAHAN, SHIRAZ, HAMADAN, KERMANSHAH, and YEZD.

Government.—The shah of Persia—by his official title, "Shah-in-shah," or king of kings—is absolute ruler within his dominions, and master of the lives and goods of all his subjects. He has, moreover, the right of designating his successor to the throne. He is regarded as the representative of Mahomet, and professes to rule in accordance with the precepts of the Koran. The executive government is carried on by a ministry, divided into seven departments; but the grand vizier (vizier-i-azem), and the lord treasurer (ameen-ed-doulah), are the most important members of the executive.

Religion and Education.—The vast majority of the inhabitants are Mahometans, but there about 74,000 Armenians, Nestorians, Jews, and Guebres, or Parsees. The Armenian population is estimated at 26,000; the Nestorians—including both Protestants and persons who have joined the Roman Catholic church—about 25,000; the Jews at 16,000; and the Guebres at 7,000. The Mahometans of Persia are of the sect called Shiites or Sheahs, differing to some extent in religious doctrine, and more in historical belief, from the inhabitants of the Turkish empire, who are called Sunnites. The Persian priesthood consists of many orders, the chief of them being that of mooshtehed, of whom there are but five in number in the whole country. Next in rank to the mooshtehed is the sheik-ul-islam, or ruler of the faith, of whom there is one in every large town, nominated by, and receiving his salary from, the government. Under these dignitaries there are three classes of ministers of religion. The Armenians are under two bishops, one of them Roman Catholic, and both residing at Ispahan. There is wide tolerance exercised towards Armenians and Nestorians, but the Jews and Guebres suffer under great oppression. Education is in a comparatively advanced state. There are a great number of colleges, supported by public funds, in which students are instructed in religion and Persian and Arabian literature, as well as in a certain amount of scientific knowledge, while private tutors are very common, being employed by all families who have the means. A larger portion of the population of Persia are possessed of the rudiments of education than of any other country in Asia, except China.

Commerce.—Only approximative estimates can be formed; but the annual value of the exports is about £1,500,000; the principal articles being raw silk and cotton, tobacco, opium, and coarse calico. The most important commercial town is Tabreez.

Telegraphs.—There are now in operation about 2,500 miles of telegraph lines. As yet there are no railways.

History.—The Persians, as a nation, first rose into notice on the ruins of the great empires founded on the Euphrates. Babylon was taken by Cyrus, and his empire extended wider than any before established in the world. It comprised, on one side, the west of India; on the other, Asia Minor, Syria, and Egypt; and was only bounded by the prodigies of valour with which the Greeks defended their small territory. After a feeble struggle, it succumbed to the brave and disciplined armies of Alexander. It was then split into fragments by the decease of its founder; but Greeks and Greek sovereigns continued, during several centuries, to reign over Asia. About two centuries before Christ, Arsaces founded the monarchy of the Parthians; and in the third century arose the dynasty of the Sassanidæ, who restored the name, with the religion and laws, of ancient Persia. They were overthrown by the Mahometan invaders, who suffered in their turn from the successive invasions by the descendants of Genghis, Timur, and by the Turks, who entirely changed the aspect of Western Asia. At length, in 1501, a native dynasty again arose, under Ismail, who placed himself on the throne. His posterity having sunk into voluptuousness, Persia, in the beginning of the last century, was overrun by the Afghans, who carried fire and sword through its remotest extremities, and reduced its proudest capitals to ashes. The atrocities of the Afghans were avenged, and the independence of Persia vindicated, by Nadir Shah; but though the victories of this daring chief threw a lustre on his country, after his death, it was almost torn to pieces by civil war, till the fortune of arms gave a decided superiority to Kerim, or Kurreem Khan. His death gave rise to another disputed succession, with civil wars as furious as before. At length, Aga Mahommed, a eunuch, in 1794 raised himself, by crimes and daring, to the sovereignty, founding the dynasty of the Kadjars, of which the present shah is the fourth sovereign.

PERSIAN GULF, an extensive inlet of the Indian Ocean, which, stretching in a north-westerly direction, divides the Persian from the Arabian shore, the two uniting at its head. It is 650 miles in length, and 250 at its greatest breadth; but the entrance at Cape Mussendon is not more than 50 miles broad. It contains numerous islands, the principal being ORMUZ, KISHM, and the Bahrien Islands; but its shores are arid and sterile.

PERSIGNY, JEAN GILBERT VICTOR FIALIN, Duc de, per-seen'-ye, a modern French politician and diplomatist. After studying at the college of Limoges, and in the cavalry school at Saumur, he received the appointment of quartermaster of the 4th hussars in 1828. At first a royalist, his political opinions underwent so decided a change, that in 1830 he was an active supporter of the revolution. These predilictions, however, cost him his post in the army, and, in 1831, he found himself in the French capital, without either interest or fortune, but obtained employment as contributor to the Temps journal. About the year 1833 he dropped the patronymic Fialin, to assume the name and title of Viscount de Persigny, which had belonged to his family for 200 years. In the following year he adopted the cause of Bonapartism, and attached himself to Louis Napoleon with the most complete devotion, and was the principal instigator of the attempt at Strasburg. He escaped capture, however, and for some time wandered about Germany, where he composed his "Narrative of the Enterprise of Prince Napoleon," in which he attributed the failure of the Strasburg plot to fatality. Four years later he was again the associate of the prince at the landing at Boulogne. For this attempt he was condemned to 20 years' imprisonment; but on his health becoming frail, he obtained almost complete liberty. Immediately after the fall of Louis Philippe, in 1848, he hastened to Paris, and devoted himself to the advancement of the Napoleonic interests; and it was to his unremitting zeal that the election of Louis Napoleon as president of the republic was in great part due. He was rewarded by the appointment of aide-de-camp to the president, and a high post in the staff of the National guard. At the coup d'état, of which he was undoubtedly one of the chief instigators, he, at the head of an infantry regiment, took possession of the National Assembly. In 1852 he succeeded M. de Morny as minister of the interior; in which capacity he countersigned the decrees which confiscated the property of the Orleans family. In 1854 he resigned, in consequence of ill health. In 1855 he went as ambassador to the court of St. James's, where he remained until the commencement of 1858, when he was replaced by marshal Pelissier. In the meanwhile, he had married the daughter of the late prince of Moscow; upon which occasion he received a large marriage portion, and from the emperor the title of count. He subsequently returned to the British court, as ambassador of France, but returned to Paris to assume the office of minister of the interior; in which capacity he inaugurated several measures for relieving the restrictions under which the French press had hitherto lain. He resigned in 1863, and in the same year was created a duke.

Born at St. Germain-Lespinasse, 1808; died 1872.

PERSIUS, AULUS FLACCUS, per'-si-us, a Latin satirical poet, who studied, with Lucian, under Cornutus the Stoic, for whom he had a great regard. Persius wrote in the reign of Nero, whom he satirized with great severity, and strongly censured the corruption of morals then prevalent at Rome. His works are enigmatic, and have been compared, in this respect, to the Greek Lycophron. They have been translated and annotated by Gifford, Dryden, Sir William Drummond, and others.

Born at Volaterræ, Etruria, about 34; died about 64.

PERSON, per'-son, a county of North Carolina, United States. Area, 400 square miles. Pop. 13,719, nearly half being coloured. The capital is Roxborough.

PERTH, perth, a city, royal, municipal, and parliamentary burgh, the capital of Perthshire, and formerly the metropolis of Scotland, stands on the right bank of the Tay, 45 miles N.W. of Edinburgh. A handsome bridge of nine arches, 880 feet in length, connects the town with the suburb of Bridgend, on the opposite side of the Tay. A railway bridge, with a pathway for foot passengers, crosses the river lower down. The town is regular and well built, having, on the north and south, two beautiful meadows (now laid out as public parks), called Inches, each of which is about 1¼ mile in circuit. Adjoining the North Inch are a crescent, a place, and a terrace. The public buildings are the church of St. John the Baptist, a structure of very great antiquity, in the pointed style, with a massive square tower; St. Peter's, a cruciform building, erected in 1858; the county buildings, in the Grecian style; the town-house, a portion of which was built in the early part of the 13th century, and king James VI.'s hospital; a group of buildings, including a church, school, and clergy-house; the depôt, built by government for the reception of prisoners of war, now used as a prison; the Marshall monument, appropriated, with a large library and museum, to the public; various schools, academies, and public charities. There is a monument to the Prince Consort, inaugurated by the Queen in 1864. Manf. Linens and wincyes. The salmon fishery is valuable. Six fairs are held annually, and horse-races take place every year. Pop. 18,325.—A station on the North British, Caledonian, Highland, Great Northern, London and North Western, and Midland railway system. —Perth is a town of great antiquity. In the year 1210, King William renewed its charter at Stirling; and therein it is expressly stated that he confirms the privileges which the burgh enjoyed in the time of his grandfather, King David, who died in 1153, and adds to it new privileges. Prior to the reign of the Stuart family, it was the usual residence of the Scottish monarchs, and has been the scene of many important transactions recorded in Scottish history.

PERTH, an episcopal city, capital of the colony of West Australia, on the Swan River, 12 miles above FREMANTLE. The principal building is the City Hall, where the legislative council of the colony meets. There are a Protestant and a Roman Catholic cathedral, and several chapels of handsome design. The governor's residence, the Perth Club, St. George's Music Hall, banking and educational buildings, hotels and stores also make a good show of energy and taste. The Eastern Railway passes through the heart of the city, the station being a conspicuous ornament and situated very conveniently. The streets are attractively laid out, the main one being nearly two miles long and planted with Cape lilac and mulberry trees, amidst which the gas-lights at night create a charming effect.

Pop. 5,044.

PERTH, a county of the province of Ontario, dominion of Canada. Area, 842 square miles. Pop. 54,985. The capital is Stratford.

PERTHES, FRIEDRICH CHRISTOPHE, pairt'-es, an eminent German bookseller, who, after experiencing many difficulties in early life, established himself in business at Hamburg, in 1799, and in 1810 began the publication of the "National Museum," to which Richter, Fouqué, Arndt, Schlegal, and many of the most eminent writers of the day contributed. In 1822 he left his shop at Hamburg and went to Gotha, where he commenced the publication of the "Almanach de Gotha," and was employed to disseminate the works of Neander, Bunsen and other celebrated writers. After organising a most extensive business concern, he retired from the management about 1838.

Born at Rudolfstadt, 1772; died near Gotha, 1843.

PERTHSHIRE, an important county of Scotland, bounded on the E. by the counties of Forfar, Fife, and Kinross; S.E. by the Firth of Tay and the counties of Kinross and Fife; S. by the Forth and the counties of Clackmannan and Stirling; W. by the counties of Argyle and Dumbarton; N. by the counties of Inverness and Aberdeen. The county is popularly divided into the highland and lowland districts. The former is considerably the larger, the Grampians extending in a north-easterly direction through it. The southern front of these mountains has, in many places, a gradual and pleasing slope into a champaign country of great extent and fertility; and they are interscoted in a thousand directions by winding valleys, which are watered by numerous rivers and brooks, clad with the richest pastures, and sheltered by thriving woods, that fringe the lakes and run along the streams. The highest summits are Ben Lawers, on the north side of Loch Tay, 3,945 feet high; Ben More, 3,843 feet high; Schichallion, 3,564 feet; Benledi, 2,863 feet; and Cairngower, in the Ben-y-Gloe range, 3,690 feet. To the south, and parallel to the Grampians, there run the Sidlaw and Ochil hills. Along the south side of the Grampians, and between the Ochil and the Sidlaw hills, a large valley or strath runs in the direction and along the whole length of the Grampian Mountains. This valley is of unequal breadth, from 10 to 15 miles, and upwards of 100 miles in length. It is intersected by various beautiful rivers, and is eminently fertile in every species of grain. Along the banks of all the rivers of this country, after they descend from the northern hills into the open country, there are extensive tracts of rich land, under high cultivation, adorned with elegant mansions and extensive plantations. The Carse of Gowrie, between the Sidlaw Hills and the Tay, is a level tract of rich clay or alluvial soil, deposited in the course of ages, highly cultivated and abundantly fruitful. The tract of country watered by the Forth resembles the Carse of Gowrie.

Rivers and Lakes.—The Tay and Forth, and their tributaries, the Lyon, Garry, Braan, Isla, Almond, Erne, Teith, Allan, and Devon. The principal lochs are Tay, Rannoch, Ericht, Erne, and Katrine.

Minerals.—Coal, limestone, granite, freestone, and slate abound. In Menteith there is a ridge of steatites, or rock soap, and a very valuable clay in great beds near Culross.

Area.—2,834 square miles.

Pop.—128,985.

Chief Towns.—PERTH, the capital; AUCHTERARDER, BLAIRGOWRIE, COUPAR-ANGUS, CRIEFF, CULROSS, and DUNBLANE.

Parliamentary Representation.—One member is returned for the county, and one for Perth.

PERTINAX, PUBLIUS HELVIUS, per'-ti-nax, Roman emperor, was the son of a dealer in charcoal. He, however, obtained a good education, and was some time an instructor of youth in Liguria; after which he entered the army, and by his bravery obtained rapid preferment. The emperor Aurelius made him consul in 179, and on the death of Commodus, in 193, he was elected to the imperial dignity by the soldiers. He distributed his lands among the people, and sold the property accumulated by his predecessor to pay off the public debt. He also abolished the heavy imposts which had been laid on by Commodus, but although these virtuous acts pleased the senate and the people, the Prætorians rose against and killed him before he had reigned three months.

Born 126; died 193.

PERTUIS, pairt'-we, a town of France, department of Vaucluse, on the Lese. It is surrounded by ramparts, and there are a handsome church and college. Pop. 4,900.

PERU, pe-roo', a republic of South America, having on its N. Ecuador, E. Brazil, S. Bolivia, and W. the Pacific Ocean. The country is traversed from north to south by the Andes. Between these mountains and the Pacific the country forms an inclined plane from 30 to 60 miles in breadth, consisting for the most part, of sandy deserts, without vegetation or inhabitants, but there are valleys, through which the rivers run, of great fertility. In this low tract the climate is sultry. The coast line is about 1,700 miles long, the shores are rocky and steep, and in the southern part are lofty cliffs. Farther north the coast is low and sandy. There are not many inlets or bays, and the harbours are few, the best being Callao and Payta. The surf renders landing difficult. The country between the two Cordilleras (maritime and eastern) is called the Sierra. It consists of barren mountains and rocks, interspersed with fertile and cultivated valleys. On these uplands vegetation flourishes, and, to the height of 11,000 feet, the climate is mild and temperate, being a mixture of perpetual spring and autumn. Beyond this, and at the height of 14,000 feet, commences the limit of perpetual snow. Here are also many volcanoes, which are flaming within, while their summits, chasms, and apertures are involved in ice. The table-lands of the Sierra are almost the highest in the world, and some of the peaks attain an elevation of 22,000 feet. (See ANDES.) This vast district is geographically divided into districts having distinct characteristics. The valley of the Maranon, in the north, more than 300 miles long, and narrow, has vegetation of a tropical character; the knots of Cuzco and Pasco, nuclei of great converging mountain ranges, have valleys, with an intensely hot climate and luxuriant vegetation, immense forests, abundant grain crops on the mountain slopes, and on more elevated situations pastures for vicunas and alpacas; the valley of the Apurimac, 300 miles long and about 30 in average breadth, the most thickly populated part of the country, and the great plain of Titicaca, extending into Bolivia, between the two main ridges of the Andes, and containing the great Lake Titicaca, 115 miles long with a breadth of from 30 to 60 miles, and 12,846 feet above the sea level. The district east of the Andes, about two-thirds of the whole country, is known as the Montara and reaches to Brazil, the boundary, respecting which there have been some disputes, being generally considered to be the Rio Javery. This district belongs entirely to the valley of the Amazon, has immense plains and impenetrable forests, and is peopled only by ferocious savages, who have murdered or driven away whites who have attempted to settle in the country, except in a few places on the western border, near the civilized districts. Off the Pacific coast there are several small islands valuable on account of the immense deposits of guano. The most important are the CHINCHA and LOBOS groups, Macabi and Guanope. The vegetable products of the country include those of tropical and temperate climates. Wheat, maize, and other cereals, tobacco, coffee, cocoa, sugar, rice, and cotton are successfully cultivated, and delicious fruits are most abundant. In the extensive forests are trees remarkable for size and beauty of wood, and for valuable gums and resins. The most valuable animals are the llama and the vicuna, and the alpaca find their native climate in the cold districts; the jaguar, the cougar, or puma, and several other wild animals, inhabit the thick forests; while the elk, the ant-bear, deer, monkeys, the great black bear of the Andes, and armadilloes, are very numerous. The wood abound in beautiful birds, and numerous tribes of reptiles infest the warm districts of the coast, where venomous insects are also common. Fish and alligators are plentiful, not only in the rivers, but likewise at their mouths.

Rivers.—About 60 rivers, mostly shallow and unnavigable, except by canoes, and many dry in the summer, flow into the Pacific, and some insignificant streams into Lake Titicaca. All the great rivers are in the eastern part of the country, and are affluents of the Amazon. The principal are the Maranon, rising between the eastern and western Cordilleras, and flowing generally in a north-westerly direction, is one of the principal head waters; the Huallaga, 700 miles long, and flowing northward; the Ucayali, another very large river, with its tributaries, including the Pampas and Apurimac, draining the Sierra; the Purus, flowing through the most fertile districts of the country, and entering the Amazon by four mouths; and the Rio Negro.

Minerals.—Gold, silver, copper, lead, bismuth, nitrate of soda (in immense quantities, and of great value as a powerful fertiliser), and borax.

Area.—483,847 square miles.

Pop.—2,657,863. About 57 per cent. of the population of Peru are aborigines, or Indians, and 23 per cent. belong to mixed races, Cholos and Zombos. The remaining 20 per cent. are divided amongst descendants of Spaniards, Negroes, Chinese, and Europeans, the latter forming barely 2 per cent. of the total population, and comprising chiefly Italians and Germans.

Administrative Divisions and Chief Towns.—There are 18 provinces, or departments—Amazonas, Ancacho, Arequipa, Ayacucho, Callao, Caxamarca, Cuzco, Huancavelica, Huanuco, Ica, Junin, Libertad, Lima, Loreto, Moquegua, Piura, Puno, Tarapaca. The chief towns are Lima, the capital; Arequipa, Cuzco, Huamanga, and Puno; the principal seaport is Callao.

Constitution and Government.—The present constitution was proclaimed August 31, 1867. The legislative power is vested in a senate and a house of representatives, the former composed of deputies of the provinces, and the latter of representatives at the rate of one member for every 20,000 inhabitants. The executive power is entrusted to a president, assisted by a vice-president, both elected by the people for the term of four years. The president exercises his executive functions through a cabinet of five ministers, holding office at his pleasure. By the terms of the constitution of 1867, there exists absolute political, but not religious freedom, the charter prohibiting the public exercise of any other religion than the Roman Catholic, which is declared the religion of the state.

Commerce.—The total exports average in annual value rather more than £6,000,000. The foreign trade is chiefly with the United States and Great Britain, and its centre is the port of Callao. The principal articles of export are guano (of which several millions of tons are annually disposed of), and nitrate of soda (or cubic nitre), of which nearly 3,000,000 tons are annually sent to Great Britain alone; sheep and alpaca wool, and sugar.

Railways.—There are now in operation about 1,100 miles of railway, of which rather more than one-half are state property.

History.—Peru was invaded by Pizarro in 1513, and finally conquered in 1532. The Peruvians at the time they were discovered by Pizarro, knew the arts of architecture, sculpture, mining, working the precious metals and jewels; cultivated their land, were clothed, and had a regular system of government, and a code of civil and religious laws. Their land was cultivated for the common benefit. In the arts of architecture, they had advanced far beyond the other nations of America. The immense obelisk of Tiahuanacu, and the town of Chulumacus, with the mausolea of Chachapoyas, which are conical stone buildings, supporting large rude statues, are among the most singular of the Peruvian remains, and are equally curious as the great military roads, with their accompanying palaces or posts. In 1821 the Peruvians revolted from Spain, and achieved their independence. War in 1881-3, see Chili.

PERU, a city of La Salle county, Illinois, United States, at the head of the navigation on the Illinois river, 105 miles N.E. of Springfield. It is attractively situated, and the river is crossed by a fine bridge. Large quantities of ice are packed for the southern market, and regular lines of steamers run to St. Louis and other places. Manf. Agricultural implements and machinery. Coal abounds in the vicinity. Pop. 4,632.

PERU, the capital of Miami county, Indiana, United States, on the Wabash, 67 miles N. of Indianopolis, in the midst of a fertile district. Manf. Sewing-machines, agricultural implements, woollens, furniture, flax, baskets, and wooden ware. Pop. 5,280.

PERUGIA, pai-roo'-ja, a walled city of Italy, capital of the province of the same name, on a lofty elevation on the right bank of the Tiber, 10 miles E. of the lake of the same name, and 84 miles N. of Rome. It has a cathedral, dedicated to San Lorenzo, erected late in the 15th century, in the Gothic style, with some valuable paintings. There are 45 churches, some fine specimens of Gothic architecture, and famous for pictures by Raffaelle and other great masters. There are many monasteries, palaces, an academy of fine arts, several art collections, an exchange, theatre, and a beautiful fountain. Some of the finest edifices are in the Corso, a broad street uniting two large squares. The university, founded in 1320, has a museum, large library, and botanic garden. The town was the ancient Perusia, one of the Etrurian republics, and became tributary of Rome 294 B.C. There is a Roman gate at the Piazza Grimana, and considerable remains of a temple of Mars are near the gate of San Angelo. Many tombs, containing urns, vases, lamps, bronze armour, and ornaments, have been found in the vicinity. Manf. Velvet, silks, woollens, soap, and liqueurs. Pop. 50,168.

PERUGIA, a province of central Italy. It is traversed by offsets of the Apennines; the soil is fertile, and watered by the Tiber and its affluents, the Chiasco and Nestore. Area, 3,719 square miles. Pop. 590,358.

PERUGINO, Pietro, pai-roo-je'-no (real name Vannucci), an Italian painter, pupil of Andrea Verocchio, but is chiefly celebrated for being the master of Raphael. He was employed by Sixtus IV. to paint several pieces for the Sistine chapel, and also decorated a portion of the Vatican. Perugino was very avaricious, and amassed considerable wealth, of which being robbed, the loss occasioned his death.

Born at Citta della Pieve, 1446; died 1524.

PERUWELZ, per'-oo-velz, a town of Belgium, province Hainault, 16 miles N.W. of Mons. Manf. Linen goods, hosiery, and leather. Pop. 7,800.

PERUZZI, Baldassare, pai-root'-ze, celebrated Italian painter and architect, who was employed at Rome by popes Julius II. and Leo X.; by the former in ornamenting his palace, and by the latter as one of the architects of the church of St. Peter. He was taken prisoner when Rome was sacked by Charles V., but obtained his liberty on painting a picture of the constable Bourbon.

Born at Ancajaro, 1481; died at Rome, 1536.

PESARO, pai-sa'-ro, a fortified town and port of Italy, capital of the province of Pesaro Urbino, near the mouth of the Foglia, in the Adriatic. Its streets are clean and airy, and the market-place is ornamented with a fountain and a marble statue of pope Urban VIII. There are a cathedral and several churches, some remarkable for their paintings, others for their architecture. The port is only capable of receiving small vessels. Manf. Pottery, glass, and leather. There is a good trade in silk, hemp, and woollen goods. Pop. 20,000.

PESARO-URBINO, a province of the kingdom of Italy, bordering on the Adriatic. The surface is mountainous, but the soil is fertile. Cattle, sheep, swine, bees, and silkworms are extensively reared. The chief rivers are the Cesano, Metauro, Foglia, and Marecchia. Area, 1,145 square miles. Pop. 228,461.

PESCADORES, pes-ka-dor'-es, a group of islands in the Fokien Channel, between the mainland of China and the island of Formosa, extending about 50 miles from north to south. The largest are Panghu and Fisher Island. Pop. 8,000. Lat. 23° 32′ N. Lon. 119° 28′ E.

PESCHIERA, pais-ke-ai'-ra, a town and strong fortress of Italy, province of Verona, one of the famous quadrilateral of forts, commanding the right bank of the Mincio, near where it issues from the Lake of Garda, 20 miles N. of Mantua. There are large barracks. Pop. 2,500.

PESCIA, pais'-cha, a town of Italy, on the Pescia, 30 miles N.W. of Florence. It is surrounded by walls, and has a cathedral, two other churches, several convents, a citadel, and hospital. Manf. Silk, paper, and leather. Pop. 12,964.

PESHAWUR, a division or commissionership of the Punjab, British India. It is very fertile. Area, 7,767 square miles. Pop. 1,181,289.

PESHAWUR, pesh-awr', an ancient city of the Punjab, British India, and capital of a division of the same name, 12 miles E. of the Khyber Pass. It is surrounded by a wall and commanded by a fort, occupied by a British garrison. Pop. 79,982. Lat. 33° 32′ N. Lon. 70° 37′ E.

PESTALOZZI, JOHANN HEINRICH, pes-ta-lot'-se, a Swiss school-teacher, and the founder, upon the continent, of the mutual-instruction or monitorial system, which was, about the same time, inaugurated in England by Lancaster. (See LANCASTER, Joseph.) After completing his education, he devoted himself to the instruction of poor children, and established schools at several places in Switzerland, the last of which was founded at Yverdun, in the canton of Vaud, and became celebrated throughout Europe; but ultimately, through the dissensions of its teachers, it declined in prosperity, and the founder was involved in bankruptcy. He was the author of a large number of works, more or less closely bearing upon education.

Born at Zurich, 1746; died at Brugg, Switzerland, 1827.

PESTH, pest, a city of Hungary, on a low site on the left bank of the Danube, opposite to Buda (with which it is connected by a fine suspension bridge, with a span of 1,500 feet, erected in 1849), 134 miles S.E. of Vienna. Pesth unites with Buda to form the capital of Hungary, the official name in German being Pesth-Ofen, and in Hungarian, Buda-Pesth. (See BUDA.) The city consists of five divisions—the Inner, the oldest part, on the bank of the river, surrounded by Leopold, Theresa, Joseph, and Francis towns, in the form of a semi-circle. The university, removed from Buda in 1784, is attended by a large number of students, and has a fine library, museum, chemical laboratory, and military academy. Among the public buildings are the barracks and artillery depôt; a beautiful new synagogue, a national museum, city hall, post and telegraph offices, casino, several theatres, academy of arts, and other educational institutions. The largest church is the Roman Catholic, in Leopold Town, and there are about 30 other places of worship. The Diet meets in a fine building. New boulevards and squares have been recently formed. A large reservoir and docks are also new. Manf. Silk, cotton, leather, jewellery, musical instruments, oil, tobacco, and meerschaum pipe-bowls. Four great fairs are held annually, and are attended by an immense number of traders in wines, hides, wax, and honey. Pesth is, with the exception of Vienna, the most important city on the Danube, and is a busy steamboat station. Pop. 360,551.—Pesth is supposed to stand on the site of the ancient Aquincum, or Sicambrium. In the field of Rakos, in the vicinity, the Hungarian diets were held for many centuries.

PESTO, or PESTUM, pais'-to, the ancient Pæstium, a ruined town of Italy, on a plain on the Gulf of Salerno. A considerable portion of the old massive wall remains, and there is a temple of Neptune, other fine temples, and remains of a theatre and amphitheatre.

PETALUMA, pet-a-lou'-ma, capital of Sonoma county, California, United States, on a creek of the same name, 45 miles N. of San Francisco, with which there is daily steamboat communication. A large trade in agricultural and dairy produce is carried on. Pop. 4,600.

PETAU, DENIS, pet'-o, an eminent French scholar, who entered the society of Jesuits at the age of 22, and became a great ornament and defender of that order. His knowledge was general; but he particularly excelled in chronology, in which science he stood unrivalled. Philip IV. of Spain and pope Urban VIII. solicited him to settle in their respective states, with the most flattering promises, which he declined, preferring a tranquil life in a monastery. His principal works are "De Doctrina Temporum," in which he applies chronology to history, ancient and modern; "Rationarium Temporum," an abridgment of the former; and the psalms, translated into Greek verse. He had several controversies with Scaliger, Salmasius, and Casaubon; and published editions of some of the works of the ancient fathers.

Born at Orleans, France, 1583; died at Paris, 1652.

PETCHORA, pet-cho'-ra, a river of European Russia, rising on the western slope of the Ural Mountains, and, after a course of 900 miles in a generally northward direction, falling into the Arctic Ocean.

PETER, ST., pe'-ter, originally named Simon, one of the apostles, and the most energetic of all the followers of our Saviour. He is supposed to have been martyred, by being crucified with his head downwards. The Roman Catholic church claims him as the first bishop of Rome.

Died about 66.

PETER I., or PEDRO, king of Aragon, proclaimed after the death of his father, in 1094, gained the battle of Alcarez, and subsequently subdued Barbastro and other places.

Died 1104.

PETER II., king of Aragon, was the son and successor of Alphonso II., in 1196. He drove away the Vaudois, who had taken refuge in his kingdom, entered into an alliance with Alphonso IX. against Sancho VII. king of Navarre, and in 1212 defeated the Almohades at Tolosa. He was himself subsequently defeated, and slain by Simon de Montfort, at Muret.

Born 1174; died 1213.

PETER III., king of Aragon, succeeded to the throne upon the death of his brother, James I., in 1276. He laid claim to the kingdom of Navarre, but was unsuccessful. Having married the daughter of Manfred, king of Sicily, he resolved to make himself master of that island, and, to effect his purpose, contrived the terrible massacre known as the "Sicilian Vespers," or the murder of all the French in the island at the hour of vespers, on Easter-day, 1282. For this crime, pope Martin IV. excommunicated him, and the Sicilians laid Aragon under an interdict, and gave Sicily to Charles of Valois; but Peter defended himself successfully against Charles, as well as his own son James, king of Majorca, until his death.

Born 1239; died 1285.

PETER IV., king of Aragon, was son and successor of Alphonso IV. He dethroned James II. of Majorca, fought against the Moors of Portugal and Castile, between the years 1340-42, and in 1353 defeated the Genoese at sea, near Alghero. In 1369 he entered into an alliance with Peter the Cruel, king of Castile, against his brother, Henry of Trastamare. He founded the university of Huesca, but his reign was troubled by several revolts.

Born 1317; died 1387.

PETER (or PEDRO) THE CRUEL, king of Castile and Leon, succeeded his father, Alonzo XI., in 1350, and at first left the government to his mother and Albuergue, the minister, but soon took affairs into his own hands, and the minister fled to Portugal. At first he ruled with equity; but afterwards exhibited great severity. He caused Leonora de Guzman, his father's mistress, to be put to death, and having married the daughter of Philip, duke of Bourbon, he repudiated her shortly afterwards, and sent her to prison, in order that he might renew his connection with Maria de Padilla, his former mistress, who in turn was abandoned, upon his seeking a marriage with donna Juana de Castro, a noble lady, who was also cast off shortly after this union; whereupon her brother, a powerful Galician noble, headed a revolt against Peter. His cruelties provoked his subjects to take up arms against him in 1366, and after three years of sanguinary warfare, Henry of Trastamare, who was as cruel and cold-blooded as his brother, besieged him in the town of Monticl. Peter requested of Dugueselin, who had joined Henry's standard, to aid his escape; and upon the Frenchman's enticing the king to his tent, he was set upon and murdered.

Born at Burgos, 1334; died 1369.

PETER ALEXIEVITCH I., czar of Russia, called the Great, was the son of the czar, Alexei Mikailovitch, and was placed on the throne after the death of his half-brother Theodore, or Feodor, to the prejudice of his other brother Ivan, who was as weak in his intellect as in his constitution. The Strelitzes, a militia which greatly resembled the janissaries of Turkey, being excited by the princess Sophia, the sister of Peter, revolted in favour of Ivan; and, to avert a civil war, it was resolved that the two princes should reign in conjunction, with the ambitious princess Sophia as regent. Russia was at that time in a condition little better than barbarism. In his 17th year Peter married; and when it became apparent that his wife was pregnant, prince Galitzin rose in insurrection, but was defeated and banished, the princess Sophia being also sent to a convent, where she remained for the rest of her life. He then commenced to reign alone, and his first acts were to reform the army and government, in which, notwithstanding the difficulty of the task, he had great success. In 1696 he took Azof, which he placed in a state of defence against the Tartars. He next turned his attention to the finances, and corrected many gross abuses. The year following he undertook a journey into the various parts of Europe, for the purpose of acquiring a knowledge of arts, sciences, and mechanics. After passing through Germany, he visited Amsterdam, where he entered himself in the company of shipwrights in the dockyard, and worked with great diligence, under the name of Peter Zimmerman. In 1698 he went to England, and paid attention to manufactures, and to every public institution, passing his time chiefly at Deptford, studying shipbuilding. While in this country, the university of Oxford conferred on him the degree of D.C.L. Having conceived the idea of forming a junction between the Don and the Volga, he engaged some English engineers to enter his service for the accomplishment of that great undertaking. From England the czar went to Vienna, intending to go to Italy; but the news of an insurrection in Russia obliged him to hasten home. Several of the insurgents were executed, and the greatest part of the Strelitzes decapitated or sent to Siberia. (See ORLOFF.) In 1699 Peter instituted the order of St. Andrew, by way of exciting a spirit of emulation among his subjects, and, in 1703, founded the city of St. Petersburg. The next year he declared war against Charles XII. of Sweden, but without success. This, however, did not discourage Peter, who said, "I know that the Swedes would beat us at first; but they will, in time, teach us to beat them." This was verified in 1709, by the important victory of Pultowa, by which the greatest part of the Swedish troops were made prisoners, and their king obliged to seek an asylum in Turkey. Peter availed himself of this advantage to seize Livonia, Ingria, Finland, and part of Swedish Pomerania. Among the prisoners was a young girl, whose husband, a sergeant in the Swedish army, whom she had only married the day before, was killed. This young girl subsequently became first Peter's mistress, and afterwards his wife, she being declared czarina in 1711, under the name of Catherine Alexina. In the meantime, the Turks, at the instigation of Charles XII., broke their truce with the czar, whom they completely hemmed in, with his army, on the banks of the Pruth, in 1711. In this perilous situation, he was saved by the presence of mind of the czarina Catherine. She secretly opened negotiations with the grand vizier, who consented to the terms, and a peace was settled. In memory of this event was instituted the female order of St. Catherine, of which the czarina became the head. At the close of 1713 he had taken all Pomerania, with the exception of Stralsund, from the Swedes. The restoration of tranquillity enabled the czar to make another tour in Denmark, Germany, Holland, and France. Meanwhile, prince Alexei, his son, having joined a party of malcontents, who were displeased at the changes which had taken place both in ecclesiastical and civil matters, the czar caused him to be tried, and the judges sentenced him to death. This decree was not executed; but the prince soon after died, as was said, of an apoplexy. Some degree of suspicion, however, fell upon the father, which was not removed by the rigorous execution of several of the friends of Alexei. The Tartars having massacred a Russian garrison on the borders of Persia, Peter, in 1722, embarked on the Caspian Sea, and took the city of Derbend, with three provinces, which were afterwards recaptured by Nadir Shah. After this expedition, the czar devoted himself to the internal regulation of his empire; and of the many important establishments and improvements of which he was the author, the following were the principal: a reform among the clergy, and the abolition of the patriarchal dignity; the organisation of a numerous army; the formation of a formidable navy; fortifications in all the principal towns, and an excellent civil government in the cities; an academy for naval education; colleges at Moscow, Petersburg, and Kiev; a college of physicians, and a dispensary at Moscow; public lectures in anatomy, a branch of science in which the czar himself had made great progress under Ruysch, at Amsterdam; an observatory, which was also a repository of natural curiosities; a botanical garden, stocked with plants from all parts of the world; printing-offices, and a royal library. But one of the most extraordinary acts of this great man was the founding, upon piles, in a morass, of the city of St. Petersburg. After his death Catherine was proclaimed empress, and ruled during two years.

Born at Moscow, 1672; died 1725.

PETER II., emperor of Russia, was the son of Alexei and grandson of Peter the Great. He succeeded, in 1727, the empress Catherine, who had declared him grand-duke of Russia the year preceding. The most remarkable event of his reign was the disgrace of the prime minister Menschikoff, who was banished to Siberia. He died from an attack of smallpox.

Born 1714; died 1730.

PETER III., the son of Karl Friedrich, duke of Holstein-Gottorp, and of Anna Petrowna, daughter of Peter the Great, was declared grand-duke of Russia in 1742, by his aunt, the empress Elizabeth, whom he succeeded in 1762. He was a warm admirer of the character of Frederick the Great, king of Prussia, and would have imitated him, had his abilities been equal to his wishes. Peter was weak, passionate, and irresolute, and, a few months after his accession, was dethroned by his wife Catherine, who was proclaimed empress, and who caused him to be strangled by her favourite, count Orloff. (See ORLOFF.)
Born 1726; died 1762.

PETER NOLASQUE, founder of the Order of Mercy for the Redemption of Captives. He was in the service of James, king of Aragon, and by his interest with that prince he instituted a religious and military order in 1223, whose province it was to rescue Christian slaves from the infidels. He was very successful in this good work.
Born in Languedoc, 1189; died 1256.

PETER OF ABANO, a celebrated Italian physician and astrologer, who was professor at Padua, but who, being accused of sorcery, was condemned to be burnt.
Died 1316.

PETER OF CLUNY, or Peter the Venerable, was of a noble family, but became a monk of the order of Cluny, and in 1121 was chosen general of that society. He entertained Innocent II. at Cluny in 1130, and afforded an asylum to Abelard. Among other works, he wrote a treatise on the divinity of Christ, another against the Jews, and one on infant baptism.
Born in Auvergne, about 1100; died 1156.

PETER OF SICILY, an historian, who wrote a history of the Manicheans, which contains many curious and important facts.
Lived in the 9th century.

PETER, ST., bishop of Alexandria. He was regarded as one of the most illustrious prelates of his time, and suffered martyrdom. He formed the penitential canons. Some of his letters have been preserved by Theodoret.
Died 311.

PETER, ST, or PETER LE PORT, a town of the Channel Islands, capital of the island of Guernsey, on a bay on the eastern side. The streets are narrow and steep, but there are many handsome residences in the fine environs. There are two churches, St. Peter's and St. James's, several chapels, a college, hospital, public library, and very fine fish-market. The harbour is small, but convenient, and there is good anchorage in the roadstead. About half a mile south of the town is the strong fortification of St. George. Pop. 16,500.

PETER THE HERMIT, a French gentleman of Amiens, in Picardy, who renounced a military life to become a monk and afterwards a hermit. At the end of the 11th century, a general alarm was spread that the last day was approaching; on which numbers of persons flocked to the Holy Land from all countries, with a view of ending their days near the holy sepulchre. Peter was of the number, and on his return to Europe made so pathetic a representation of the state of the Christians in Palestine, to pope Urban II., that he gave Peter leave to preach up the necessity of a crusade throughout Christendom. The appearance, zeal, and eloquence of the hermit, produced a prodigious effect, and all ranks and ages, of both sexes, pressed eagerly into the service. With a motley army, estimated at 100,000 men, Peter passed through Hungary. In his absence, his followers attacked Solyman's army at Nicea, and all, except a few thousands perished, "and," says Gibbon, "a pyramid of bones informed their companions of the place of their defeat." Peter remained in Palestine, and was at the siege of Antioch in 1097; but on his attempting to make his escape shortly afterwards, was brought back, and compelled to take a new oath of fidelity and obedience to the holy cause. Two years later he was present at the siege of Jerusalem, where he displayed great bravery, and when the place was taken, was made vicar-general. Peter, on his return to France, founded the abbey of Neufmoustier, at Huy, in Liège, where he died.

PETERBOROUGH, pe'-ter-bur-o, an episcopal city and parliamentary borough of Northamptonshire on the left bank of the Nen, 36 miles N.E. of Northampton. It contains many buildings of great neatness, and the streets are mostly regular. There is a handsome corn-exchange in the Italian style, and the market-place is large. Of the public buildings the cathedral is by far the most remarkable. It extends 476 feet in length, and about 200 in breadth. It is partly built in the Norman style, but the splendid west front (156 feet wide is Early English, and the eastern aisle (built in the 15th and 16th centuries) is in the Perpendicular style. The height of the central tower is 150 feet. The cathedral contains a monument to the memory of Catherine of Aragon, wife of Henry VIII., and another to the memory of Mary, queen of Scots, both of whom were buried here, but the latter was afterwards removed to Westminster Abbey. A new church, St. Mary's, was built in 1861. A very large corn trade is carried on. Pop. 21,219.—A station on the Great Northern, Great Eastern, and London and North-Western railways. The city owes its origin to a monastery founded here by Peada, son of the fourth king of Mercia, in 665. It was several times destroyed and rebuilt, and so rich were the presents made to it, that the town was named Gildenburgh, the "golden" city.

PETERBOROUGH, CHARLES MORDAUNT, Earl of, an eminent English general, who entered the navy, and distinguished himself at Tangiers when it was besieged by the Moors. In the reign of James II. he went to Holland, attached himself to the prince of Orange, and accompanied him on his expedition to England in 1688. The year following he was created earl of Monmouth, and appointed first commissioner of the Treasury; from which post he was removed in 1690. In 1697, on the death of his uncle, the earl of Peterborough, he succeeded to that title. In the reign of queen Anne he displayed the greatest bravery and skill as commander of the English forces in Spain, where he took Barcelona, and brought several provinces to acknowledge Charles III. as their king. He was afterwards employed on various embassies, and in 1714 appointed commander-in-chief of the navy, and afterwards governor of Minorca. He was an intimate friend and correspondent of Pope, Swift, Prior, and other eminent authors. He had an insatiable desire for excitement. When not engaged in active service, he travelled incessantly, and it was said of him that he had "seen more kings and more postilions than any man in Europe."
Born 1658; died 1735.

PETERBOROUGH, a county of Ontario province, dominion of Canada, on the Otonabee.

Area, 2,485 square miles. Pop. 37,266. The capital is Peterborough.

PETERHEAD, pe-ter-hed', a seaport and municipal and parliamentary burgh (one of the Elgin burghs) of Scotland, in Aberdeenshire, 26 miles N.E. of Aberdeen. It is pleasantly situate on a peninsula in the German Ocean, and forming the eastmost point of land in Scotland. The public buildings are an elegant town-house, the established church, with a tall spire, and public rooms for the accommodation of those frequenting Peterhead during the summer season, for the benefit of the air and mineral waters. It has a set of excellent cold and warm baths, and its mineral wells are celebrated for their medicinal virtues. There are two harbours, formed by two spacious bays, connected by a passage cut across the isthmus. Shipbuilding is carried on here to a considerable extent, and the herring and other fisheries are valuable. The exports consist chiefly of herrings, grain, codfish, cheese, eggs, salted pork, butter, and granite. Pop. 14,257. Lat. 57° 30' 1" N. Lon. 1° 46' W.

PETERMANN, AUGUST HEINRICH, pe'ter-man, a modern German geographer, and superintendent of the celebrated map-establishment of Justus Perthes at Gotha. Destined for the church, he was educated at the college of Nordhausen; but a strong predilection for geographical science caused him to become, in 1839, a special pupil in the academy which the learned Berghaus had established at Potsdam. There he made the acquaintance, among other distinguished men, of Humboldt, for whom he executed the "Map of Central Asia." When it was resolved to issue an English edition of the celebrated "Physical Atlas" of Berghaus, Petermann was invited to Edinburgh, where he spent two years in preparing and revising the work. In 1847 he repaired to London, where he became a member of the Royal Geographical Society. He subsequently produced an "Atlas of Physical Geography," an "Account of the Expedition to Central Africa," giving reports of the most recent explorations. In 1854 he accepted the invitation of the duke of Saxe-Coburg to occupy the chair of geography in the university of that place, and soon afterwards established the "Geographical Journal."

Born at Bleicherode, Prussia, 1822.

PETERS, HUGH, pe'-ters, an English divine, who was educated at St. John's College, Cambridge; whence he was expelled for irregular behaviour. He afterwards went on the stage, where he acquired that theatrical action which subsequently distinguished him in the pulpit. He was ordained by Bishop Mountaine, and was for some time lecturer of St. Sepulchre's, London; but, having an intrigue with another man's wife, he fled to Rotterdam, where he joined the Independents. He went thence to New England; and, at the beginning of the Revolution, returned to London, where he became a zealous preacher in the cause of the parliament. For his activity in the Revolution, especially at the execution of Charles I., he was hanged and quartered.

Born in Cornwall, 1599; died 1660.

PETERSBURG, pe'-ters-berg, a city and port of entry of Virginia, United States, on the south bank of the Appomatox, 12 miles above its junction with James river, and 23 miles S. of Richmond. It is one of the handsomest towns in the state, is the emporium of both the exports and the imports of a large district, and a great railway centre. It contains a court-house, gaol, an academy, and churches for different denominations of Christians. Manf. Woollen and cotton fabrics, ropes, and earthenware. The falls of the river afford valuable water power for machinery. Pop. 20,000, about half being coloured.

PETERSBURG, ST., pe'-ters-berg, a government of the Baltic provinces of European Russia, at the eastern extremity of the Gulf of Finland. It is mostly level, with a thin soil and a cold and damp climate. Rivers, the Luga, Narova, Volkhov, Siasi, Svir, and Neva. Area, 20,759 square miles. Pop. 1,622,768.

PETERSBURG, ST., capital of the Russian empire, near the mouth of the Neva, at the head of the Gulf of Finland, situated partly on the mainland and partly on two large and several smaller islands. The Neva, as it approaches the gulf, flows in a general northerly direction, but about six miles from its point of discharge, makes an abrupt turn to the west, and about two miles farther divides into three principal channels, the most northern of which is the Great Nevka; the central is known as the Little Neva; the southern, properly the continuation of the main stream, is the Great Neva, which forms, with the Little Neva, the island of Vasikiefskoi, or Baschus. North of the Little Neva, the Great Nevka, and a channel known as the Little Nevka, form Aptekarskoi, or Apothecaries Island. Other branches of the Great Nevka form a number of small islands, the more important of which are Petrofskoi, Krestogskoi, Kammenoi, and Elaghinskoi. There are altogether 14 arms of the Neva, besides smaller channels, and seven canals traversing the site of the city, and draining what was previously an extensive marsh. St. Petersburg stands at a general elevation of more than 50 feet above the sea level, but is entirely built on piles from the impossibility of otherwise obtaining a firm foundation, and some parts are still as low as to be subject to frequent inundations, sometimes of a disastrous character. The Neva is a broad but shallow river, and there is not more than nine feet of water on the bar, so that vessels of great size cannot approach the town; but the real defence of the city is Cronstadt, the great naval station, in the Gulf of Finland, about 16 miles from St. Petersburg. The largest and finest port of the city is on the promenade formed by the windings of the Great Neva. It is known as the Bolshaia Storona, or great side, and it communicates by one stone bridge and two bridges of boats with the part of the city on the islands and north side of the river, known as the Petersburg side. On a small island at the junction of the Great and Little Nevas, is the citadel, with outworks, on the island of Aptekarskoi, from which it is separated by a very narrow channel. The central portion of the "great side" is the Admiralty quarter, which stretches along the left bank of the Great Neva, with noble granite quays and splendid edifices. From Admiralty Square, radiate the principal streets, one of which, running eastward for nearly three miles, the Nevskoi Prospekt, or Neva Perspective, is one of the finest streets in Europe. It is about 130 feet wide, is in some parts planted with trees, and contains palaces, highly decorated churches, and splendid shops and warehouses. It is the fashionable resort, the "Regent Street" of St. Petersburg. Other fine streets are the Gorokhovaia, Oulitza, and the Vosnosenskoi Prospekt. There are no narrow streets or alleys, none being less than 40 feet wide. Altogether, there are about 500 streets, and 64 squares or open places. In some parts the houses are chiefly built of wood; but in the more important and fashionable districts of brick, faced with stucco, and many have ornamental porches, colonnades, and gilded balconies. One of the most pleasant promenades in the city is the Cavalry Boulevards, a mile long, leading to the cathedral of St. Isaac. There are three theatres of large dimensions, and on the islands and the northern part of the city, especially Kammenoi, are smaller theatres and a large number of gardens and other places of amusement. The dockyards are west of the Admiralty, connected by lines of railway with Moscow and other cities, and in the same part of the city are many good residences. Four canals, stretching circuitously from east to west, divide this portion of the city into three quarters, known as the first, second, and third Admiralty sections. Three canals, the Moika, St. Catharina, Fontanka, and New Canals, are crossed by fine bridges, and beyond the Fontanka Canal, on the south and east, and bounded by a deep ditch, the "city fosse," and the main stream of the Neva, are the Narva, Karetznoi, Kojestvenskoi, and Foundry quarters. On the south side of the island of Vasilieostrov is a fine quay, lined with splendid buildings; but the northern and north-western sides of the island are covered with deer, or cultivated as gardens. On Aptekarskoi Island, north of the citadel, is the Petersburg quarter, thickly populated, and beyond that parks and gardens. The smaller islands have many charming residences, with gardens. On the north-east, beyond the junction of the Great Nevka and on the right bank of the Neva, is the Viborg quarter, rapidly rising into importance. The climate, excessively cold in winter, is mild and pleasant in the summer months.

Palaces.—The Winter Palace, built after the destruction of the old palace (completed in 1762 for the Empress Elizabeth) by fire in 1837, is the largest and probably the most magnificent palace in the world. It is situated to the east of the Admiralty, is quadrangular in form, with a front to the Neva of more than 700 feet. The saloons and other state apartments are of the most superb character. The throne saloon, or St. George's Hall, is 140 feet long and 60 feet wide; the empress's reception room, or golden saloon, has the walls covered with gold; and the white saloon is decorated entirely with pure white and gold. There are many other noble apartments, richly furnished, and containing pictures and collections of articles of vertu of great value. When the emperor resides here, more than 6,000 persons are accommodated in the palace. Farther east, on the bank of the Neva, and connected with the Winter Palace by covered galleries, is the Hermitage, built by the Empress Catherine, a luxurious retreat, containing a splendid gallery of pictures occupying 40 rooms, and including many fine specimens of the Spanish, Flemish, and later Italian schools; statuary, and a library of 220,000 volumes, including the collections of Diderot, Voltaire, and other eminent authors. Here, too, is the museum of Peter the Great, containing the tools he used, and various articles made by him. Near the Hermitage is the new Michaeloff palace, the residence of the emperor's brother, and one of the most elegant buildings in St. Petersburg. About a mile farther east, on the bank of the Neva, is the Taurida palace, a long low building of little architectural pretensions, but remarkable for containing the largest ball-room, probably, in the world. It is 320 feet long and 70 feet wide, and is lighted on grand occasions by 20,000 wax candles. On one side of it, separated by a row of magnificent marble pillars, is a winter garden or conservatory. The emperor generally resides in the Annitchkoff palace, near the termination of the Nevskoi Prospekt.

Churches.—The metropolitan church, or Kazan cathedral, is in the Nevskoi Prospekt. It is in the form of a Greek cross, is approached by two circular colonnades, and the entrance is adorned with colossal statues. In the interior are 56 marble columns, each hewed out of a single block of marble. The floors and walls are of polished marble. The balustrade before the sanctuary, and the picture frames, are of solid silver, and the figure of the Virgin is covered with jewels of immense value. The cathedral of St. Peter and St. Paul (founded in 1727), in which are deposited the remains of Peter the Great and of several successive sovereigns, is within the citadel. It is surmounted by a dome and gilded spire, the whole being 345 feet high. In the interior are many military trophies. The cathedral of St. Isaac was begun by Catherine, but the decorations were not completed till recently. It is said to have cost about £16,000,000, £200,000 having been spent on the foundations alone. It stands in a large open space near the Admiralty, on the south-west, is in the form of a Greek cross, with four grand entrances, each approached by broad flights of steps, formed of solid blocks of granite. The building is 330 feet long, 290 feet broad, and 310 feet high. The chief cupola is of copper gilt, supported by 30 granite columns, and there are four smaller domes. At each of the four porticoes are pillars 53 feet high and seven feet in diameter, each formed of a solid block of red Finland granite. Another large edifice is the Preobrajensky church, belonging to one of the regiments of the guards, and containing an immense number of military trophies, and with a railing composed of 300 French and Turkish cannon, mounted on granite pedestals. The church of the English factory, west of the Admiralty, is a large and very fine building; the Dutch church is a wealthy institution, Peter the Great having made it large grants of land; and the Roman Catholics have several handsome chapels, especially the principal one, in the Nevskoi Prospekt, with a Corinthian colonnade and dome. The monastery of St. Alexander Nevskoi, one of the largest and most famous in Russia, is near the termination of the Nevskoi Prospekt, on the eastern side of the peninsula formed by the Neva. It was founded by Peter the Great, and contains several churches, towers, and gardens. The principal church, built by the Empress Catherine, is of large size and richly decorated, with several domes, and around it are the cloisters occupied by the monks, who superintend a large classical school. The great attraction of the monastery is the monument containing the remains of the saint, who was a Russian grand duke. It is in the form of a pyramid 15 feet high, of solid silver, and with the ornaments, also of silver, weighs more than two tons. There are altogether 177 churches and 140 private chapels in St. Petersburg.

Public Buildings and Monuments.—The Admiralty, on the north side of the square of the same name, near the Neva, is an immense brick building, with the chief façade, nearly half a mile long, towards the square. It has a slender tower with several galleries, and a gilt cupola. Near it are the senate house, the war office, with many gigantic columns, and other public buildings. On the opposite bank of the Great Neva, on the Vosclieskoi island, are the exchange and custom house. The citadel (already mentioned) is defended by a large garrison, and the mint is within the enclosure. Near it is the wooden cottage (carefully preserved) where Peter the Great resided while the city was being built. Between the cathedral of St. Isaac and the river is the famous colossal equestrian statue of Peter the Great, erected in 1782 by Catherine II., and on the opposite side of the church an equestrian statue of the Emperor Nicholas, erected by the present emperor. In the Admiralty square is Alexander's column, a monolith of red granite, 80 feet high, surmounted by an angel and cross, and standing on a pedestal 70 feet high. A colossal bronze statue of Marshal Suwaroff, is on the Field of Mars, a vast space used for reviews.

Bridges.—There are about 150 bridges of various sizes, spanning the Neva, uniting the islands, and crossing the canals. The Alexander II. iron bridge, 1404 feet long, 77 feet wide, with five arches, was completed and opened in 1878. The Nikolagevski bridge is 1,200 feet long, with seven arches, and a drawbridge affording passage for ships; and was completed in 1850. Another very handsome bridge is the Annitchkoff, over the Fonfanka canal. It is 110 feet long, has five arches, and is decorated with groups in sculpture.

Scientific, Literary, and Educational Institutions.—The Academy of Sciences, founded by Peter the Great in 1725, has a library of 150,000 books and manuscripts. The University was founded in 1829, and has about 1,400 students. The Imperial Library, on the Nevskoi, is a large building, and contains many valuable works. The Academy of Fine arts is a noble edifice, with a façade to the Neva 400 feet long. The new National Museum of Antiquities, the School of Mines, the Institute of Technology, and the Botanical Garden, with its magnificent palm houses, on Aptekarskoi island, are important institutions.

Charitable Institutions.—The Foundling Hospital, founded by Catherine II., near the Fontanka canal, occupies, with building and grounds, 28 acres. There are a general, a sailors', and several special hospitals.

Markets.—The largest, the Costinnoi Dvor, has one of its sides on the Nevskoi Prospekt. It is about 1,100 feet long, and 350 feet wide, with a colonnade round the building. It is intersected by lanes and alleys, and divided into compartments, in each of which a separate trade is carried on, accommodating about 10,000 dealers. There are two other large markets or bazaars, the Apraxin Rinok and the Tschakin Dvor.

Manf.—Large imperial establishments produce tapestry and carpets, mirrors, articles in glass and porcelain, iron, and cannon. There are several private factories for spinning and weaving cotton. Carriages, musical and mathematical instruments, cabinet work, jewellery, watches and clocks, paper, and leather, are also manufactured. Ship-building is carried on to a great extent.

Trade.—The exports consist chiefly of hemp, flax, leather, hides, coarse linen, beeswax, linseed, oil, tar, potash, metals, bristles, and grain.

History.—Previous to 1703, the site of St. Petersburg contained nothing but a couple of huts; and the spot on which Peter I. proposed to build a fortified seaport was a low marshy island, covered in summer with mud, and in winter presented nothing more than a frozen pool. After the battle of Pultowa, in 1709, and the permanent acquisition of Livonia, he enlarged his plan, prosecuted it with new ardour, and before his death, in 1725, it had assumed the proportions of a city. Since that time it has been progressively extended and embellished, particularly by the empress Catherine II., who first made it the permanent abode of the court.

PETERSEN, NIELS MATTHIAS, pe′-ter-sen, a modern Danish antiquary, educated at the university of Copenhagen. In 1829 he obtained the appointment of assistant librarian to the university of Copenhagen. Among numerous valuable works written by him, may be quoted "History of Denmark in Heathen Times," "Handbook of Ancient Northern Geography," and "Voyages and Travels of the Icelanders at home and abroad."

Born at Funen, 1791.

PETERSFIELD, pe′-ters-feeld, a market town and parliamentary borough of Hampshire, 16 miles N. of Portsmouth. There are a church in the Norman style, built in the 12th century, and an educational college called Churcher's College. There is an equestrian statue of William III. Pop. 7,484.—A station on the London and South-Western railway.

PETERWARDEIN, pe′-ter-var′-dine, a strong fortress of the Austrian empire, capital of the Slavonic-Servien military frontier, on the right bank of the Danube, 50 miles N.W. of Belgrade. It is the residence of the general commandant of the military frontier. It is strongly fortified, the most ancient part being on a lofty rock. The town derives its present name from Peter the Hermit, who here mustered his followers in the first crusade. Pop. (exclusive of large garrison), 4,100, mostly Germans.—In 1716 the Turks were here defeated by the Austrians, and lost their last hold on central Europe.

PETION, ALEXANDER SABÈS, pe′-ti-on, a negro, who became president of the republic of Hayti. He at first served in the French army during the revolt at St. Domingo, and rose to the grade of adjutant-general. He held the fort of Jacmel against Toussaint l'Ouverture, and, after the defeat of his party, repaired to France. He returned with the expedition under general Leclerc; but afterwards quitted the French ranks to join general Dessalines, and became commandant of Port-au-Prince, under king Christophe, in 1806. In the following year he revolted against Christophe, and proclaimed himself president of Hayti, retaining the post until his death.

PETION (DE VILLENEUVE), JEROME, one of the most active and popular of the French revolutionists, for a time the idol of the people of Paris, being elected mayor in the place of Bailly, but was rather alarmed at the excesses committed, and endeavoured to moderate the storm he had aided to raise. For this he was proscribed with the Girondins, in 1793. He escaped from Paris, and fled to the Landes of Bordeaux, where his body was afterwards found, half devoured by wolves. He was a weak and vain man, but irreproachable in his private and domestic relations.

Born at Chartres, 1753; died 1793.

PETIS DE LA CROIX, FRANÇOIS, pet-e′, krwaw, an eminent French orientalist, who was the son of a professor of the oriental languages. Having been so fortunate as to attract the favourable notice of Colbert, he was sent in his 16th year to reside and study in the East. He lived at Aleppo, Constantinople, and Ispahan, and acquired during his stay, the Arabic, Persian, and Turkish languages. Returning to Paris in 1680, he was engaged in various diplomatic transactions. In 1692 he received the appointment of Arabic professor at the Royal College of France, and, three years later, was nominated royal interpreter. He wrote extensively; but his works remain, for the greater part in manuscript. The most important of these were a "History of the Conquest of Syria," translated from the Arabic; "History of the Ottoman Empire," a dictionary of the Armenian language, "The Antiquities and Monuments of Egypt," and a small work entitled "Ancient and Modern Jerusalem."

Born at Paris, 1653; died at the same city, 1713.

PETITOT, JOHN, pet′-e-to, a painter in enamel who was brought up to the trade of a jeweller; but having made several successful attempts at producing enamels for that branch of industry, he resolved to entirely devote himself to the pursuit. After studying in Italy, he visited England, where he was greatly patronised by Charles I., after whose death he went to France, and was employed by Louis XIV. He produced many beautiful portraits of royal and distinguished personages, which are highly valued. He was a zealous Protestant, and resisted the greatest efforts made by the eloquent Bossuet to cause him to embrace Romanism.

Born at Geneva, 1607; died at Vevay, 1691.

PETÖFI, SANDOR, pet′-o-fe, Hungarian poet. He was at first a strolling player, but had long been in the habit of composing songs for his own amusement. His poems soon attracted notice, and speedily became the favourites of the entire nation. Soon afterwards he became aide-de-camp to general Bem, with whom he served in the campaign against the Russians in Transylvania, and was killed in action. A collection of his fine songs, under the title of "Sounds from the Past," was published at Leipsic, in 1851.

Born in Hungary, 1823; died 1849.

PETRA, pe′-tra, "a rock," the ancient capital of the Nabathæans, in the desert of Edom, northern Arabia, in a valley at the base of Mount Hor. The ruins of the old city are very extensive and interesting.

PETRARCH, or PETRARCA, FRANCISCO, pe′-trark, Italian poet. On account of the dissensions which raged in his native country, his father, a notary, who belonged to the same faction as Dante, removed with him to Avignon, and afterwards to Carpentras, where Petrarch began his education, which was completed at Montpelier and Bologna. He was intended for the law, and studied at Montpelier and Bologna, but after the death of his father, devoted himself to the study of classical literature, and returned to Avignon, where, in 1327, he saw a young lady in church, and became passionately in love with her. The name of the lady was Laura de Noves: she was 19 years of age at the time, and the wife of Hugues de Sade, a gentleman at Avignon. Despite the poet's handsome person, impassioned pleading, and flattering verses, he could make no impression upon her heart. She was a lady of unimpeachable virtue, and firmly repelled his advances. After struggling in vain to overcome his passion, he retired to Vaucluse, a romantic spot, where he poured out his amorous complaints in several pieces. He afterwards travelled in different countries; but with his return to Vaucluse his passion for Laura returned. Again he celebrated her charms, and the delights of his retreat. His name became famous; and he received invitations from the senate of Rome, from the king of Naples, and the university of Paris. He accepted the former, and on Easter-day, 1341, he was crowned with laurel in the Capitol, with great pomp: he was also declared a Roman citizen. In 1348 he received the news of the death of Laura. He was then at Parma; but immediately set out for Vaucluse, where he passed some time in grief. In 1352 he returned to Italy, and, at Padua, obtained a canonry; but many years of his life were spent in accepting invitations to the courts of the pope and other great Italian potentates. The sonnets of Petrarch are tender and melodious to the greatest degree, and with Dante he greatly assisted to refine the Italian language; but besides being a great poet, he was a profound scholar and patron of learning. He wrote poems and treatises in exquisitely pure Latin, and was the author of works upon theological and philosophical subjects.

Born at Arezzo, 1304; died at Arqua, 1374.

PETRE, SIR WILLIAM, pe'-ter, an eminent English statesman, whose abilities recommended him to Thomas Cromwell; by whom he was employed in state affairs, and appointed a member of the commission for visiting the monasteries. He obtained a large share of the church lands, which he contrived to retain even during the reign of Mary, to whom he was counsellor, as he had been to her father and brother. This complying courtier found means to ingratiate himself with Queen Elizabeth, who appointed him one of her secretaries of state, and member of the privy council. His manors in Essex were very considerable.

Born at Exeter, about 1503; died 1572.

PETRIE, GEORGE, pe'-tre, Irish archæologist. He early devoted himself to art, and in his 14th year gained the silver medal of the Dublin Academy. He afterwards was extensively engaged in illustrating works on Irish topography; in 1828 was elected a member of the Royal Irish Academy, and was associated in the ordnance survey of Ireland. He produced elaborate works on the ecclesiastical architecture of the round towers of his country, and for his labours received the degree of LL.D.

Born in Dublin, 1789; died 1866.

PETRONIUS, CAIUS, pe-tro'-ni-us, "Arbiter Elegantiæ," a Roman, one of the favourites of Nero, and proconsul of Bithynia, where he exhibited good administrative ability, but returned to Rome, where he took charge of the Royal entertainments, and became the oracle of the voluptuous Romans in all matters of fashion and elegant style. He was as profligate as any of the other attendants of the court, but in a superb and outwardly refined manner. Of course he had jealous enemies; being accused by Tigellinus, another of Nero's friends, of being engaged in a conspiracy against that tyrant, he sought a voluntary death by opening his veins as he sat in the bath conversing with his friends. One of his pieces, a supposed satire against Nero, is extremely well written, though very licentious. He is the reputed author of a satirical description of the profligate habits of the Romans, of which some fragments remain.

Died 66.

PETROPAULOVSK, pet-ro-paw-lovsk', a town of Russia in Asia, province of Akmolinsk, on the river Ishim, 175 miles N.W. of Omsk. It is a great military station; there is a cannon foundry, and a large trade is carried on. Pop. 8,500.

PETROPOLIS, pe-trop'-o-lis, a town of Brazil, province of Rio de Janeiro, 30 miles N. of the town of that name, on a site 2,000 feet above the sea level. It is much resorted to by the wealthy inhabitants of the capital in the hot season, and there are many hotels and elegant mansions. Pop. 7,000.

PETROZAVODSK, pet-ro-za-vodsk', a mining town of European Russia, capital of the government of Olonetz, on the western shore of lake Onega, 300 miles N.E. of St. Petersburg, with which there is communication by water. Peter the Great established a cannon foundry here in 1701, and a very large arms factory, the Alexandrovsky, was founded in 1773. The town is a great centre of mining industry. Pop. 11,000.

PETROVSK, pet-rovsk', a town of Russia, province of Saratov, 55 miles N.W. of Saratov. Pop. 13,000.

PETSH, or IPEK, petsh, a town of European Turkey, in Albania, on the White Drin, 73 miles N.E. of Scutari. It is a pleasantly situated town, the houses standing in gardens, where mulberries and other fruits are cultivated. Manf. Silk (extensive), tobacco, and arms. Pop. 12,000.

PETTIS, pet'-tis, a county of Missouri, United States. Area, 600 square miles. Pop. 27,271. The capital in Sedalia.

PETTY, SIR WILLIAM, pet'-te, an English writer on political economy, who was the son of a clothier, of Rumsey, Hampshire. He received the first part of his education at the school of his native town; after which he went to the university of Caen, in Normandy. On his return to England he began the study of physic and anatomy, to perfect himself in which he went to Leyden, Amsterdam, and Paris. In 1647 he returned to England, and soon afterwards went to Oxford, where he became assistant to the professor of anatomy, and fellow of Brasenose College. He was also chosen one of the council of the Royal Society, upon its establishment. In 1652 he was appointed physician to the army in Ireland, where he became secretary to Henry Cromwell, lord-lieutenant of that kingdom. He was one of the commissioners for dividing the forfeited lands; but, in 1658, he was dismissed from his employments on a charge brought against him in the House of Commons. At the Restoration he was knighted, and made surveyor-general of Ireland. He wrote a great number of books on subjects of practical or political utility, the most important of which were, "Political Arithmetic," "The Political Anatomy of Ireland," and a treatise on money.

Born 1623; died 1687.

PEUCER, KASPAR, poi'-ser, a German physician and mathematician, who became medical professor at Wittemberg, where he married Melancthon's daughter. He was imprisoned for ten years on account of his opinions; and, while in confinement, wrote his thoughts on the margins of old books, with ink made of burnt crusts soaked in wine. His principal works are, a treatise on divination, and a history of his imprisonment.

Born at Bautzen, 1525; died 1602.

PEUTEMAN, PETER, poi'-te-man, a Dutch painter, who, being employed to paint a picture of Mortality, went into an anatomical room, where several skeletons were suspended from the ceiling, and bones and skulls lay on the floor. While there he fell asleep; and, being suddenly roused by the shock of an earthquake, he saw the skeletons moving in all directions, and the loose skulls rolling about the room, which struck him with so much horror that he ran home half dead; and, though the transaction was explained to him, he died shortly after.

Born at Rotterdam, 1650; died 1692.

PEYRERE, ISAAC, pai-rair', the author of a book endeavouring to prove that Adam was not the first man, for which he was sent to prison at Brussels. By the interest of the prince of Condé, to whom he was librarian, he obtained his liberty and went to Rome, where he abjured his errors. He also wrote a book on the Restoration of the Jews, an account of Greenland, and other works.

Born 1594; died 1676.

PEYSSONNEL, CHARLES DE, pai'-son-nel, a learned French writer, who accompanied the French ambassador to Constantinople, in 1735, as secretary, and afterwards travelled through Asia Minor, collecting medals and identifying the geographical positions of ancient places. He wrote several dissertations, inserted in the Memoirs of the Academy of Inscriptions, of which he was a member. He was also the author of a eulogy on Marshal Villars, a discourse on coral, and other pieces.

Born at Marseilles, 1700; died 1757.

PEYSSONNEL, CHARLES DE, son of the preceding, became consul at Smyrna, and wrote, among other works, "Historical Observations on the Barbarous People who inhabit the Borders of the Danube and the Euxine," and "Treatise on the Commerce of the Black Sea."

Born 1727; died at Smyrna, 1790.

PEZENAS, pai'-zai'-na, a town of France, department Herault, on the left bank of the river Herault, 25 miles S.W. of Montpelier. It is very beautifully situated, and good wine is produced in the vicinity. A large trade in liquor, especially brandy, is carried on. Manf. Woollen and linen goods. Pop. 6,800.

PFALZBURG, or PHALSBOURG, falz'-boorg, a town of Germany, in Alsace-Lorraine, before 1871, included in the French department Meurthe, 25 miles N.W. of Strasburg. Pop. 4,300.

PFEFFEL, CHRISTIAN FREDERICK, fef'-fel, a German writer, who was engaged in various diplomatic employments by the courts of France and Saxony. He wrote, besides several other important works, an abridgment of the public law of Germany, "Historical Researches as to the Legal Rights of the Popes over Avignon," and "An Essay on the Public Law and New Constitutions of Poland."

Born at Colmar, 1726; died 1807.

PFEFFERS, fef'-fers. (See RAGATZ.)

PFEIFFER, IDA, fi'-fer, a German traveller, who states that from her earliest years she was possessed with a longing for travel. Her maiden name was Reyer, and in 1820 she married an advocate, named Pfeiffer, from whom she afterwards separated. By the time she had attained her 45th year her husband was dead, and her two sons were established in life, one as an artist, and the other as a government official, and she was enabled to gratify her taste for travel. Accordingly, in 1842 she set forth towards Palestine, and travelled alone and without a guide in that country, European and Asiatic Turkey and Egypt. In the following year a narrative of her journey was published. She next went to Sweden, Norway, and Iceland, in 1845, and again published a narrative of her wanderings. In the summer of the following year she left Hamburg for her first journey round the world. Her route, courageously pursued through every form of danger incidental to such an undertaking, was from Brazil, Chili, Tahiti, China, Hindostan, Persia, and Asia Minor, and home by way of Southern Russia and Greece. She had been absent from Vienna two years and three months, during which time she had travelled about 40,000 miles by water, and 2,760 by land. In 1850 she published her account of this great journey, in a work entitled "A Woman's Journey round the World," which was speedily translated into French and English. In 1851 she went to London, when, after witnessing the opening of the Great Exhibition of Industry, she left the Thames, on board a sailing-vessel, for the Cape of Good Hope. From the Cape she proceeded to Singapore, Borneo, the island of Sumatra, Java, the island of Celebes, Batavia, which last place she left for California; after which she proceeded to Panama and Lima, crossed the Andes, visited the sources of the river Amazon, ascended the peaks of Chimborazo and Cotopaxi, and returned to Panama. New Orleans, the Mississippi, lakes Superior, Huron, Erie, and Michigan, and the falls of Niagara, were her subsequent wanderings; Canada and New York succeeded; till, at length, she crossed the Atlantic, and arrived in London at the commencement of 1855. "A Lady's Second Voyage round the World" contained the records of this journey, and, like its predecessors, found great favour with the reading public of France and England. Towards the close of the year 1856, having resolved to visit the island of Madagascar, she set forth upon one of the most perilous of her journeys, and endured terrible hardships, returning to Vienna with broken health.

Born at Vienna, 1797; died 1858.

PFORZHEIM, forz'-hime, a town of the grand duchy of Baden, on the northern border of the Black Forest, at the junction of the Wurm and the Nagold. The old part of the town is surrounded by a wall and a ditch, and there are large suburbs. The more prominent buildings are the Schlosskircho, containing tombs and statues of princes of Baden, and the remains of an ancient castle. Manf. Gold and silver wares and trinkets, machinery, leather, cloth, and chemicals. There is a large trade in timber, which is floated down the Neckar and Rhine. Pop. 24,037.

PHÆDON, fe-don, a disciple of Socrates, who purchased him of some pirates. After the death of his master, Phædon returned to Elis, his native country, where he founded a sect of philosophers called Elean. Plato affixed his name to a dialogue on the death of Socrates.

Lived in the 5th century B.C.

PHÆDRUS, fe'-drus, a Latin poet, probably a native of Thrace, and appears to have been the freedman of Augustus. Under Tiberius he was persecuted by Sejanus, to which circumstance he has alluded in his Fables, which possess considerable merit, and are written with great purity of style, though they are evidently borrowed from the popular fables of the Greeks.

Lived early in the 1st century.

PHAËTON, or PHAËTHON, fai'-e-ton, according to Ovid, a son of the sun, or Phœbus. Venus became enamoured of him, and intrusted him with the care of one of her temples. This favour of the goddess rendered him vain, and led to his asking his father's permission to drive his chariot for one day. Phœbus represented the dangers to which this would expose him, but in vain: he undertook the aërial journey, and the explicit directions of his father were forgotten. No sooner had Phaeton received the reins, than he betrayed his ignorance of guiding the chariot. The flying horses became sensible of the confusion of their driver, and immediately departed from the usual track. Phaeton repented too late of his rashness, and already heaven and earth were threatened with a universal conflagration, when Jupiter, who had perceived the disorder of the horses, struck the rider with a thunderbolt, and hurled him headlong from heaven into the river Po. His sisters, the Heliades, who had harnessed the horses, were changed into poplars, and their tears into amber.

PHALARIS, fal'-a-ris, the tyrant of Agrigentum, in Sicily, which city he took B.C. 570. From his youth he displayed a cruel and ambitious temper, and delighted in the invention of new instruments of torture. At his command, Perillus, an artist, made a brazen bull, which was hollow, and so contrived that when a fire was kindled under the body, the cries of the unhappy victim within resembled the roarings of the animal it represented. Phalaris, after commending the work, ordered Perillus to be the first to make trial of it. The tyrant was himself put to death by his subjects in the same way. It is only fair to say that Lucian and other critics deny that Phalaris was so cruel as was popularly represented, and affirm that he was not only humane, but a patron of literature and philosophy. The letters of Phalaris have caused several literary disputes, particularly that between Boyle and Bentley, which produced Swift's satire, "The Battle of the Books." They were probably the work of a Sophist in the time of the Cæsars.

PHALSBOURG. (See PFALZBURG.)

PHAON, fai'-on, a boatman of Mitylene, in Lesbos, who, according to Greek tradition, received a small box of ointment from Venus, with which he rubbed himself, and became one of the most beautiful men of his age. Many were captivated with him, and, among others, Sappho, the celebrated poetess. Phaon at first appeared to return Sappho's passion, but soon, however, conceived a disdain for her; whereupon, the mortified poetess threw herself into the sea. (See SAPPHO.)

PHARAMOND, far'-a-mond, a semi-mythical personage, who, according to many of the older historians, was the first king of France, and reigned at Treves. He is, however, supposed by others to have been only the general of an army, or the chief of a military society of Franks. To him is attributed also the celebrated salique law, by which females were excluded from the succession to the throne.
Lived in the 5th century.

PHARAOH, fai'-ro, a general name for the kings of Egypt, three of whom are expressly mentioned in the Pentateuch: the monarch to whom Joseph explained his dream, and who loaded him with honours; he who commenced the persecution of the Hebrews, and who put to death all the male children; and he who was summoned by Moses to permit of the departure of the Hebrew people, and who was afterwards drowned, with all his host, in the waters of the Red Sea.

PHARNACES I., far'-na-sees, king of Pontus, was the son of Mithridates V., and grandfather of Mithridates the Great. He made war against the king of Pergamus.
Died 156 B.C.

PHARNACES, king of the Cimmorian Bosphorus, was son of Mithridates VI., king of Pontus, and revolted with the army against his father, who slew himself in despair, B.C. 63. Pharnaces cultivated the friendship of the Romans, and, in the war between Cæsar and Pompey, he remained neutral; but Cæsar declared war against and defeated him, B.C. 47, after a struggle of three days only. It was on that occasion that Cæsar wrote to the Roman senate, in allusion to his easy triumph: "I came, saw, and conquered" (Veni, vidi, vici).
Died 47 B.C.

PHARSALIA, far-sai'-li-a, the ancient Pharsalus, and modern Phersale, a town of Thessaly, 18 miles S. of Larissa, in the neighbourhood of which the troops of Pompey were defeated by those of Julius Cæsar, 48 B.C.

PHEIDIAS, or PHIDIAS, fid'-i-as, the most famous sculptor of ancient Greece. He was employed by the Athenians to assist in the work of restoring Athens, after its partial destruction by the Persians, and produced the famous statue of Athene, which was placed upon the citadel. (See ATHENS.) Pericles made him general superintendent of all the works of art in the renovated city, and the Propylæa, Parthenon, and other superb buildings, were erected under his direction. His own work was the great statue of Athene, of ivory and gold, the robe being entirely of gold. He also executed the sculptured friezes of the Parthenon, many of which, known as the Elgin marbles, are now in the British Museum. He afterwards executed the colossal statue of Zeus, also of ivory and gold, at Olympia. On his return to Athens, the party in opposition to Pericles, who was his patron, charged him with stealing some of the gold intended for the robe of the statue of Athene. He was successful in refuting this accusation, but was then charged with impiety for introducing his own likeness and that of Pericles on the shield of the goddess. He was thrown into prison, where he died.
Died about 432 B.C.

PHELPS, felps, a county of Missouri, United States. Area, 600 square miles. Pop. 12,500. The capital is Rolla.

PHELPS, a new county of Nebraska, United States. Area, 550 square miles. Pop. 2,447.

PHERECRATES, fe-rek'-ra-tees, a Greek comic poet, was contemporary with Plato and Aristophanes. None of his comedies have come down to us in a complete form, and of the seventeen plays which he wrote, only some fragments have been preserved by Hertelius and Grotius. There is in Plutarch a piece of his on the music of the Greeks.

PHERECYDES, fer-e-si'-dees, a philosopher of the isle of Scyros. He was the disciple of Pittacus, and the first who wrote upon natural science and the essence of the gods. He taught the doctrine of the existence of the soul after death. He was the master of Pythagoras, who regarded him as a father. There are different accounts of his death: some assert that he died in the island of Delos, and others that he threw himself from the top of Mount Corycius, near Delphi. It is most probable that he died of extreme age. Diogenes Laertius ascribes to him the invention of prosody.

Lived in the 6th century B.C.

PHILADELPHIA, fil'-a-del'-fe-a, the capital and principal seaport of Pennsylvania, United States, the second city in the Union, forming a county of the state of Pennsylvania, and, in respect of population, the fourth largest in the world, being surpassed only by London, Paris, and New York. It is on the right bank of the Delaware, near the confluence of the Schuylkill (85 miles S.W. of New York), 96 miles from the Atlantic, and occupies a neck of land of moderate elevation between those rivers. The point of this peninsula, south of the city, is known as the Neck. Philadelphia consists of the city proper and of various suburbs, laid out with great regularity. The city is a parallelogram, divided into square blocks by streets intersecting at right angles, and perfectly straight except near the river, where they deviate a little in accordance with the lines of the banks. The two principal streets are Broad-street (running north and south), and Market-street (east and west), meeting a little to the west of the centre of the city, the former being 130 feet, and the latter, which connects the two rivers, 180 feet wide. Arch-street and the two Front-streets are also wide thoroughfares, and most of the other leading streets are at least 50 feet wide. Many of the streets are planted with trees. The houses are somewhat monotonous in character, but are well built of red brick, and many on white marble basements. There are several large quadrangular open spaces, laid out as pleasure-grounds, especially Independence-square, Washington-square, Franklin-square (in the centre of which is a fine fountain), and Penn-square. As the ground slopes towards the rivers, great facilities for good drainage are afforded; and an abundant supply of water is raised from the Schuylkill. The Delaware, here a mile wide, admits vessels of the largest size direct from the Atlantic, although it is 120 miles distant. There are three bridges across the Schuylkill, one a suspension bridge; another wooden, and the third, a magnificent structure, serving for the Wilmington and Baltimore railway as well as for an ordinary thoroughfare. There are six steam ferries across the Delaware to New Jersey. The port on the Schuylkill is chiefly for domestic trade; that on the Delaware for foreign commerce. The principal suburbs are Kensington and Richmond on the Delaware, to the north-east of the city; Camden, on the opposite side of the river; Kenderton and Frankford to the north, and West Philadelphia, on the east, beyond the Schuylkill. To the north-east of the city is the United States Navy Yard, fronting the Delaware, and enclosing an area of about 12 acres. Some of the largest ships have been built and fitted here. Besides the squares mentioned, there are several fine promenades and places of public resort, among them Laurel Hill and other ornamental cemeteries. Fairmount Hill, with the reservoirs of water from the Schuylkill, is to the west of the city; and Fairmount Park, where the great International Centennial Exhibition of 1876 was held, is a very beautifully laid out and very extensive park, extending along both banks of the Schuylkill for 7 miles. Mr. Hepworth Dixon says: "All the seven London parks thrown into one—Victoria, Greenwich, Hyde, Finsbury, Battersea, St. James's, and Regent's—would only make one Fairmount Park."

Public Buildings.—The most famous historically is Independence Hall, the old state-house, which has been carefully preserved in the condition it was when the Declaration of Independence was signed here in 1776 by the Continental Congress. It contains a wooden statue of Washington. The more modern buildings are mostly built entirely of, or faced with, the beautiful white marble abundant in the district. The Custom-House, originally occupied as the United States Bank, is a fine structure, on the model of the Parthenon at Athens, with a Doric portico of eight marble columns. The Mint has two Ionic fronts, each 123 feet long. The Merchants' Exchange has, on the east front, a semi-circular portico, with a fine Corinthian colonnade, rising from an elevated basement. The new City Hall, and the Eastern Penitentiary (occupying 10 acres), are conspicuous buildings. Some of the banks are particularly handsome, especially the Gerard Bank, with a Corinthian portico; the Pennsylvania Bank, of white marble, with two porticoes of Ionic columns, and the Bank of North America. There are 424 churches, including about 90 Presbyterian, nearly the same number Episcopal, 72 Methodist, 44 Baptist, and 38 Roman Catholic. There are about 40 belonging to the German Lutheran and Reformed churches, the same number to miscellaneous sects, and three synagogues. Pennsylvania has been styled "The Quaker City," and there are 14 meeting-houses of Friends. The most noticeable churches are St. Stephen's (episcopal), in the Gothic style, with two octagonal towers; Christ Church, the oldest in the city, having been founded in 1691; the Roman Catholic church of St. John, in the Gothic style; the First Presbyterian, modelled on a Grecian temple, with a portico of six Ionic columns; and a very beautiful church, the Fifth Presbyterian. There are many theatres and music halls.

Literary and Educational Institutions.—The University occupies two handsome edifices, enclosed by open grounds, and comprising three departments, academical, collegiate, and medical, the last attended by about 500 students. Philadelphia is famous for its medical colleges, of which there are six. The Girard College for orphans, founded by Stephen Girard, a rich merchant of the city, occupies extensive buildings on the north-west of the city, and educates 550 boys. There are a high school, in connexion with the system of public education, and a large number of subordinate schools. The Philadelphia Library, founded by Franklin, has 100,000 volumes, and the Mercantile Library about 120,000. The Academy of Fine Arts, with a gallery of pictures; the American Philosophical Society, with a valuable and extensive library; the Academy of Natural Sciences; the Historical Society of Pennsylvania; the Athenæum, occupying a fine building in the Italian style; and the Franklin Institute, for the promotion of the mechanical arts, are prominent features of the city.

Hospitals and Charitable Institutions.—The Pennsylvania Hospital occupies a large building consisting of a centre and two wings, inclosing a large area, in which is a colossal bronze statue of William Penn. The United States Marine Hospital, for invalid sailors, is an extensive and elegant edifice of white marble, with a Doric portico. The Almshouse, for the poor of the city and district, is a large and showy building, in an enclosure of 10 acres. There are hospitals for the insane, blind and deaf mutes, and a large number of other charitable and benevolent institutions.

Manf. and Trade.—The manufactures are of the most varied character, comprising almost every article of production. There are nearly 1,000 factories and foundries, 80 mills, and 1,500 workshops. The foreign trade is very extensive, and, next to New York, the city is the greatest printing and publishing centre of the United States; and it is in railway communication with nearly every important place in the Union.

Pop.—847,000. About 25,000 are coloured.

Lat. 39° 57′ N. Lon. 75° 9′ W.

History.—Philadelphia was founded by William Penn in 1682, and the early settlers were mostly members of the Society of Friends (Quakers), and there were subsequently large additions to the population by immigration from Germany and the north of Ireland. The first American newspaper was printed here in 1719. In 1774 the first colonial congress met here, and it was the capital of the United States until 1800, when Washington was selected.

PHILADELPHIA, an ancient town of Lydia, Asia Minor. (See ALA-SHEHR.)

PHILÆ, fi'-le, an island of Upper Egypt, in the Nile, above the first cataract, 6 miles from Assouan. It consists of a granite rock, about 1,000 feet long and 200 feet wide, on which are remains of a great temple of Isis, erected by Ptolemy II., and other edifices. In these temples are illustrations of the story of Osiris, and the island was regarded as a sacred place. It is now deserted except by travellers.

PHILEMON, fi-le'-mon, a Greek comic poet, who was contemporary with, and the rival of, Menander, and is asserted to have been the author of 97 comedies. Plautus imitated some of his works. His death is said to have been occasioned, at the age of 97, by laughing at seeing an ass eat figs.

Died B.C. 274.

PHILEMON, in Greek mythology, the husband of Baucis. (See BAUCIS.)

PHILETAS, fi-le'-tas, a Greek grammarian and poet of Cos, and preceptor to Ptolemy Philadelphus. He wrote elegies and epigrams, which are lost.

Died about B.C. 290.

PHILIDOR, FRANÇOIS ANDIE, French musical composer and chess-player, grandson of a French musician, Michel Danigan, who assumed the surname of Philidor. He was the author of several comic operas long since forgotten, and of a setting of the "Carmen Sæculare" of Horace, which is regarded as a masterpiece. On the outbreak of the Revolution he fled to England, where he remained for the rest of his life. His fame as a chess-player far exceeded that gained by his musical abilities. He beat the best players of Germany and Holland, was one of the first to play blindfold games, was one of the founders of the London Chess Club, and in 1777 published "Analysis of the Game of Chess."

Born at Dreux, 1726; died in London, 1795.

PHILIP, fil'-ip, was the name borne by several kings of Macedon, the most celebrated of whom were:—

PHILIP II., the son of Amyntas II. In his youth he displayed great military talents, which were improved by studying under Epaminondas at Thebes. In 360 B.C. he became ruler of Macedonia, as guardian of his infant nephew Amyntas, whose rights were speedily set aside, Philip becoming king. At the beginning of his reign he had to oppose the Illyrians, Pæonians, and Thracians, against whom he was successful. After this he took Crenides, a city belonging to the Thracians, to which he gave the name Philippi; and, having made himself master of the gold-mines near that place, he employed a number of men in working them, and was the first who had gold coin stamped with his name. His ambition now became boundless: he formed the design of subduing all Greece, and began by taking Olynthus, a city belonging to Athens, and, having corrupted the principal inhabitants, he obtained possession of the place. The Athenians were roused against Philip by the eloquence of Demosthenes; but all the efforts of the orator proved ineffectual when opposed to the arms and gold of the king of Macedon. After vanquishing Greece, Philip resolved to attempt the conquest of Persia, and was for that purpose elected commander-in-chief of the expedition in a general assembly of the Grecian states; but, while preparing for the enterprise, he was assassinated by Pausanias, one of his guards, leaving his vast designs to be accomplished by his son Alexander.

Died 336 B.C.

PHILIP V., king of Macedon, obtained the crown at the age of 17, upon the death of his cousin Antigonus, 220 B.C. The beginning of his reign was brilliant, owing to the conquests of his general Aratus, whom Philip, out of jealousy, caused to be poisoned. After the battle of Cannæ, 216 B.C., he joined Hannibal against the Romans; but the consul Lævinus marched into Macedon, and compelled Philip to sue for peace. The Roman senate being apprised of a secret treaty between Philip and Hannibal, sent Flaminius against the former, who was defeated, and obliged to yield to dishonourable terms. At the instigation of his son Perseus, he put to death his eldest son Demetrius, who was accused of designs upon the throne.

Born 235; died 179 B.C.

PHILIP I., king of Spain, surnamed the Handsome, was the son of Maximilian I., emperor of Germany; and, by his marriage with the heiress of Ferdinand V., king of Aragon, and Isabella queen of Castile, he obtained the Spanish crown.

Born 1478; died at Bruges, 1506.

PHILIP II. was the only legitimate son of the emperor Charles V. At a very early age he was entrusted with the government of Spain, under the direction of a council, and at the age of 16 he married Mary, of Portugal, who died three years afterwards. In 1554 he became king of Naples and Sicily, by the abdication of his father, and in the same year married Mary, queen of England. He was so unpopular in this country that in the following year he quitted it for Brussels. In 1556 his father resigned to him the crown of Spain, having in the previous year given him the government of the Netherlands. He declared war against France, and was present at the battle of St. Quentin, where it is said he made two vows, the one never again to hazard his person in an engagement, and the other to build a palace to the honour of St. Lawrence. This last he executed at the village of Escurial, near Madrid, and gave to the building the form of a gridiron, in commemoration of the instrument of the saint's martyrdom. In 1559 he made peace with France, and, on his return from the Netherlands to Spain, he caused an auto da fé to be celebrated, by which several unfortunate victims of the Inquisition were burnt alive. Mary of England being dead, and his proposal to marry her sister Elizabeth being rejected, he espoused Isabella of France. Resolved to extirpate heresy in his dominions, he employed fire and sword with unsparing bitterness in his Italian possessions; but the Netherlands resisted the attempt to establish the Inquisition, and, led by William the Silent, seven provinces succeeded, after a long and terrible struggle, in throwing off the Spanish yoke. (See ORANGE, Prince of.) In 1588 Philip fitted out his famous expedition called the Invincible Armada, for the invasion of England. This fleet, consisting of 130 ships in all, manned by troops, sailors, and galley-slaves, to the amount of nearly 30,000 men, together with 2,000 Spanish nobles and their retainers, was almost totally destroyed by the storm or the English ships. When Philip heard of the disaster, he said, "I sent my fleet to combat the English, not the elements; God's will be done." At the same time that he attacked England he gave his assistance to the Roman Catholic league in France, against Henry IV., hoping thereby to eventually subjugate that country. Philip is accused of sacrificing his son Don Carlos to what he called his "regard for the welfare of the state." The precise reasons for his conduct towards him are not established; but it is certain that the unfortunate young man perished miserably in a dungeon in his 23rd year. By his fourth wife, Anne of Austria, he had a son, Philip III. The greatest praise that can be accorded to this cold-hearted bigot is, that he gave a certain amount of encouragement to arts and sciences; but his oppressive exactions and persecutions destroyed the commerce of the country.

Born 1527; died 1598.

PHILIP III., the son of Philip II. and of Anne of Austria, succeeded his father at the age of 20. His reign was unfortunate and imprudent; the king himself being too indolent to rule his dominions, resigned the entire guidance of affairs to his favourite, the duke of Lerma. Spinola took Ostend, after a siege of three years, but with the loss of 80,000 Spaniards. The United Provinces, taking advantage of the exhausted condition of Spain, established their independence under the house of Nassau, and extorted from Philip an acknowledgment of their freedom. In 1609 he issued a decree that all the Moors should quit his kingdom in three days; by which Spain lost above a million of its most useful inhabitants. The lavish expenditure and confused management of the finances during this reign were among the chief causes of the decline of the Spanish power.

Born 1578; died 1621.

PHILIP IV. succeeded his father, Philip III., at the age of 16. He was infirm in body and mind, cowardly, morose, and superstitious. His reign was naturally disastrous.

Born 1607; died 1665.

PHILIP V., duke of Anjou, the second son of Louis, dauphin of France, and of Mary-Anne of Bavaria, assumed the crown of Spain in 1700, by virtue of the will of Charles II., and was the founder of the Bourbon dynasty. His claim, however, was contested by the house of Austria, in favour of the archduke Charles. This produced the grand alliance, in which Austria was supported, against France and Spain, by England, Holland, Savoy, Portugal, and Prussia. In this war, memorable in history as the War of the Spanish Succession, the victories of the Duc de Vendome and Marshal Villars, in Flanders, confirmed Philip on the throne, and restored peace to Europe by the treaty of Utrecht, in 1713. In the following year (having been previously married to the Princess Maria Louisa, daughter of Victor-Amadæus of Savoy), he espoused Elizabeth Farnese of Parma, and through her influence Cardinal Alberoni became paramount in the state. The war was renewed in 1717, and the Spanish fleet was defeated in the Mediterranean by Sir George Byng. Peace was restored in 1720, after which Philip became a victim to confirmed melancholy, and in 1724 abdicated the throne to his son Louis, and retired to a monastery. Louis died a few months after, of the small-pox, and Philip was compelled to resume the government. His subsequent conduct was characterised by greater spirit and judgment. In 1733 he entered into an alliance with France against the emperor, and his son Don Carlos conquered Sicily and Naples, of which he became king.

Born at Versailles, 1683; died at Madrid, 1745.

PHILIP, MARCUS JULIUS, called the Arab, from his being a native of Bostra, in Arabia, was born of an obscure family, and became a common soldier in the Roman army; but by his merit he rose to the command of the imperial guard. In 244 he assassinated the emperor, Gordianus the younger, and seized upon the throne. He gained great popularity at Rome by his generosity, and by making a canal for supplying the city with water. He celebrated the secular games with great pomp, and permitted great toleration to the Christians; indeed, by some writers he is stated to have been himself a Christian. He was defeated by Decius, near Verona, and was assassinated by his soldiery immediately afterwards.

PHILIP, duke of Suabia, son of Frederick Barbarossa, was elected emperor on the death of his brother, Henry VI., in 1198. But another party of the electors chose Otho, duke of Saxony, which occasioned a civil war. The pope excommunicated Philip, but afterwards absolved him, and endeavoured in vain to reconcile the contending princes. He was assassinated at Bamberg.

Born 1178; died 1208.

PHILIP OF DREUX, the son of Robert, count de Dreux, embraced the ecclesiastical state, and became bishop of Beauvais; but the character of his mind more inclined him to warlike affairs than religious exercises. He joined the crusaders, and distinguished himself before Acre, in 1191. Philip II. having declared war against the English, the bishop took up arms in his favour; but was taken prisoner, and kept in close confinement. He made an appeal to the pope, who demanded him, as his son, from Richard I. That monarch however, sent to the pope the bloody armour in which the bishop was taken, accompanied with these words, "See, holy father, if this be thy son's coat." The pope would not recognize the habiliments as canonical, and the bishop remained a prisoner till 1202. He afterwards fought against the Albigenses.

Died at Beauvais, 1217.

PHILIP, ST., one of the twelve apostles of Jesus Christ, was a fisherman of Bethsaida, a city of Galilee, on the Lake of Gennesareth, when he was called by our Saviour. Ecclesiastical historians relate that he was married and had several children, and that he preached the Gospel in Phrygia. He is supposed to have suffered martyrdom at Hierapolis.

Died about 80.

PHILIPPE I., king of France, succeeded his father, Henry I., in 1060, under the regency of Baldwin V., count of Flanders. Philip at the age of 15 lost his faithful guardian. The young king showed at first a warlike spirit, but afterwards gave himself up to licentious pleasures. The most important incident of his reign was his divorce of his wife Bertha, and marriage with Bertrade, the wife of the count of Anjou, for which he was excommunicated by the council of Autun, in 1094; but ten years afterwards he was absolved by the pope, who also approved of his marriage with Bertrade.

Born 1053; died 1108.

PHILIPPE II., surnamed the August, succeeded his father Louis VII., in 1180, at the age of 15. Henry II., of England, taking advantage of his youth, invaded France; but Philippe put himself at the head of his forces, and compelled Henry to renew the ancient treaties between the two kingdoms. After this, he turned his attention to the regulation of abuses in the government, and to the improvement of the city of Paris. He expelled the Jews from his dominions, under circumstances of great injustice and cruelty. In 1190 Philippe accompanied Richard I. of England to the Holy Land, where they took Acre; but dissensions arising between the two monarchs, Philippe returned to France. Though he had sworn on the Gospels not to undertake anything against the interests of Richard in his absence, he invaded Normandy, and took some places; but being repulsed at Rouen, he made a truce for five years, and in the interval married Ingeburge, princess of Denmark, whom he afterwards divorced, and espoused the daughter of the duke of Moravia, for which he was excommunicated by the pope, and not absolved till he took back his former wife. Philippe gave his assistance to Prince Arthur against his uncle John, king of England; but John having declared himself a vassal of the Holy See, the pope gave countenance to his acts. This giving offence to the English nobility, they made an offer of the throne to Philippe, who declined it, but sent to England his son Louis, who was crowned at London in 1216. On the death of John, however, the English barons acknowledged his son, Henry III., and Louis returned to France.

Born 1165; died at Mantes, 1223.

PHILIPPE III., surnamed the Hardy, was proclaimed king of France in Africa, on the death of St. Louis, his father, in 1270. After concluding a peace with the king of Tunis, whose city the French were besieging, he returned to France, and was crowned at Rheims. Peter of Aragon having occasioned the horrible massacre of the French in Sicily called the Sicilian Vespers, Philip marched against him in 1283, and took several towns, but died of a fever on his return.

Born 1245; died at Perpignan, 1285.

PHILIPPE IV., called Le Bel, or the Fair, succeeded his father, the preceding monarch, in 1285. He became king of Navarre, in consequence of his marriage with Jane, daughter and heiress of Henry I. In 1285, Philippe engaged in a war against Edward I., king of England, who formed several powerful alliances with continental princes against the French monarch. In 1302, Philippe, while attempting to suppress a revolt of the Flemings, lost the battle of Courtray, where perished the count of Artois, with 20,000 men. But, in 1304, he gained that of Mons-en-Puelle; in commemoration of which a fine equestrian statue of this monarch was set up in the church of Notre Dame, at Paris. This victory was followed by a peace; but Philippe was shortly afterwards embroiled in a contest with Pope Boniface VIII., who pretended to the right of disposing of benefices, which was resisted by the king. On this the pope issued his bull of excommunication, which Philippe caused to be burnt. The violent acts of Boniface were condemned by the Popes Benedict and Clement V., the latter of whom assisted Philippe in persecuting and abolishing the order of Knights Templars in 1311.

Born 1268; died 1314.

PHILIPPE V., surnamed the Long, was the younger son of the preceding, and succeeded his brother Louis Hutin in 1316. He made war against Flanders, formed an alliance with Scotland, and expelled the Jews from his kingdom.

Born 1294; died 1322.

PHILIPPE VI., or PHILIPPE OF VALOIS, the first king of France of the collateral branch of Valois, was the son of Charles, count of Valois, brother of Philip the Fair. He ascended the throne in 1328, on the death of his cousin, Charles the Fair. In 1329, Edward III., king of England, did homage for the duchy of Guienne; but in 1337 he assumed the title of king of France, on the pretence of being a grandson of Philippe the Fair by his mother. This produced a disastrous war, which lasted, with a few intervals, during many years. In 1346, Edward III. gained the battle of Cressy, in which the French lost near 30,000 men; among whom were John, king of Bohemia, and the flower of the nobility. This was followed by the loss of Calais and other important places, in the following year. Edward sent a challenge to Philippe to decide their pretensions by single combat, which the latter refused. The course of the disasters of his reign was completed in the year 1348, by the outbreak of a terrible pestilence, which carried off a third portion of his subjects. He was a man of narrow mind, ignorant, and bigoted.

Born 1293; died near Chartres, 1350.

PHILIPPE THE BOLD, duke of Burgundy, third son of John, king of France, gained his sobriquet from his violent conduct at the battle of Poitiers. He shared the captivity of his father in England, and on his return to France, in 1360, received the duchy of Touraine, and afterwards that of Burgundy, ranking as the first peer of France. He afterwards resigned Touraine on his marriage with the princess Margaret of Flanders. He defeated the English, and suppressed seditions in the Flemish towns, especially in Ghent, the citizens of which were terribly defeated at Rosbech in 1382. He was an able ruler, and his dominions enjoyed great prosperity, and he ably governed France, as regent, during the minority and imbecility of Charles VI.

Born 1342; died 1404.

PHILIPPE THE GOOD, duke of Burgundy. Out of revenge for the death of his father, Jean "Sans-peur," who was slain in 1419, he formed an alliance with Henry V. of England, against Charles II. of France and his successor. He defeated the dauphin at the battle of Mons, in 1421, about which time he made war, with success, against the countess of Hainault, and compelled her to acknowledge him her heir. In 1435 he was reconciled to Charles VIII., in conjunction with whom he expelled the English from their French possessions. A rebellion having broken out at Ghent, in consequence of the heavy imposition of taxes, in 1454, Philippe defeated the citizens, of whom 20,000 were killed. Under his rule Burgundy attained its highest prosperity.

Born at Dijon, 1396; died at Barges, 1467.

PHILIPPEVILLE, fil'-ip-veel, a fortified town and seaport of Algeria, province of Constantine, on the Gulf of Stora, 40 miles N.E. of Constantine. It was laid out by the French in 1838, on the ruins of the ancient Russicada. It is a pretty town, in the centre of a fertile and picturesque district. There are Roman Catholic and Protestant churches, and public offices, library, and museum. The harbour accommodates small vessels. Fish is cured, and there is a trade in grain and native fabrics. There is direct steamboat communication with Marseilles and Algiers, and by railway with the principal places in the province. Pop. 13,500.

PHILIPPI, or FELIBA, fi-lip'-pi, a ruined town of European Turkey, in the province of Roumelia (formerly included in Macedonia), where Brutus and Cassius were defeated by Octavius and Antony, which ended the republican government of Rome, B.C. 42.

PHILIPPINE ISLANDS, fil'-ip-pine, a group in the Asiatic archipelago. They are about 1,200 in number, 40 being of considerable size. The two most important are LUZON in the north, and MAGINDANOO in the south. The islands between these two are known as the Bissayas, the largest being LEYTE, MASBATE, MINDORO, NEGROS, PALWAN, PANAY, and ZEBU. The surface of the islands generally is rugged and mountainous, and the soil is of astonishing fertility. The rainfall is heavy, and there are large lakes in some of the low-lying districts. Earthquakes and tropical storms are frequent and destructive. The mountain forests abound in gigantic and valuable timber; and tropical vegetables and fruits thrive with great luxuriance. The sands of the rivers yield gold; iron, copper, sulphur, coal, limestone, marble, magnesia, and alum are abundant.

Manf. and Trade.—The textile productions are of great beauty and value, including delicate muslins made from the pineapple fibre. Leather, cigars, and cordage are manufactured, and ship-building is carried on. The exports consist chiefly of sugar, tobacco, coffee, Manilla hemp, dyewoods, ratan, gold dust, and mother-of-pearl.

Pop.—5,567,685 (estimates being superseded by precise figures), the inhabitants of Luzon being known as Tagals, and of the other islands as Bissayans. These are of Malay origin. In the mountain regions are wild tribes of the Papuan race, some of them diminutive, and of the negro type; others ferocious and warlike. About 2,500,000 of the inhabitants of the islands are nominally Roman Catholics; and many, especially the Bissayans, are Mahometans.

Lat. 5° 32′—19° 38′ N. Lon. 117° 21′—126° 8′ E.

Government.—About three-fourths of the population are subjects of Spain; the remainder are under native chiefs. The Spanish dependencies are divided into 33 provinces, the governor-general residing at Manilla.

History.—These islands were first discovered by Magellan, in 1520; but it was not till 1565 that they were taken possession of. Manilla was constituted the capital of the Spanish possessions in the Philippines. The islands were named after Philip II. of Spain.

PHILIPPOPOLIS, fil'-ip-po'-po-lis, the capital of Eastern Roumelia (see ROUMELIA), on an island formed by the Maritza, 86 miles N.W. of Adrianople. Before the earthquake which took place here in 1818, by which the town was in a great measure destroyed, Philippopolis was a thriving place. It still has twenty mosques and several Armenian and Greek churches. Manf. Woollen, silk, and cotton fabrics, leather, soap, and tobacco. Pop. 30,000.

PHILIPS, AMBROSE, fil'-ips, an English dramatic writer and poet, was educated at St. John's College, Cambridge, where he wrote his pastorals, which were at one time greatly admired, and praised by some good writers, among them Addison. Pope, however, ridiculed them with great severity, at the same time that he exempted Philips's Winter Pieces from censure. One of his nicknames is "Namby Pamby." He was also the author of a tragedy of merit, entitled "The Distressed Mother," produced in 1712, and of several other tragedies which were less successful, and an abridged "Life of Archbishop Williams." He is perhaps best known by his poem "The Splendid Shilling." After the accession of the house of Hanover, he was appointed commissioner of collieries, and afterwards became secretary to the lord chancellor of Ireland, member for Armagh, and registrar of the Irish Prerogation Court.

Born in Shropshire, 1675; died 1749.

PHILISTUS, fi-lis'-tus, a Greek writer, and the favourite of the tyrant Dionysius of Syracuse, who afterwards banished him. In his exile he wrote the History of Sicily, and that of Dionysius, which Cicero has commended. He was recalled by Dionysius the Younger, but was defeated by Dion in a naval engagement, and put to death.

Died 367 B.C.

PHILIP, PORT. (See MELBOURNE.)

PHILLIPS, JOHN, fil'-ips, an eminent modern geologist, professor of geology at the university of Oxford, and assistant general secretary of the British Association for the Advancement of Science. He assisted in the "Geological Survey of the United Kingdom," edited or arranged twenty-seven volumes of the Reports of the British Association; and wrote many treatises. Among the most important of his works were treatises on geology in the "Cabinet Cyclopædia," "Illustrations of the Geology of Yorkshire," "Rivers, Mountains, and Seacoast of Yorkshire," and "Geological Map of the British Isles." To the "Encyclopædia Britannica," "Encyclopædia Metropolitana," "Penny Encyclopædia," &c., he contributed many valuable articles on subjects of geological science. In 1858-59 he was elected president of the Geological Society. His death was caused by accidentally falling down stairs.

Born 1800; died 1874.

PHILLIP, JOHN, painter, was apprenticed to a house painter, but his admiration for works of art attracted the attention of lord Panmure, who enabled him to pursue his studies at the Royal Academy in London. In 1857 he became an associate, and in 1859 royal academician. He achieved his greatest reputation by Spanish subjects, and as a colourist he occupied the first rank.

Born at Aberdeen, 1817; died 1867.

PHILO JUDÆUS, fi'-lo, a learned Jewish writer, who was born of a distinguished family of Alexandria, and formed a member of the deputation sent by the Jews to lay their complaints against the Greeks of Alexandria before the emperor Caligula, A.D. 40. He wrote several works in Greek, the principal of which is entitled "Of the Contemplative Life." He was profoundly accomplished in all the sciences of the day, and exhibited in his writing remarkable powers of thought and imagination, and a brilliant style, and, on that account, has been styled the Jewish Plato. His writings have exercised a remarkable influence on Jewish and Christian thought.

Born at Alexandria, and flourished in the 1st century A.D.

PHILOCTETES, fil-ok-te'-tees, in Greek legend, son of Pæan and Demonassa, was one of the Argonauts, and the arm-bearer and friend of Hercules. He erected the pile on which the hero was consumed, and received from him his arrows, dipped in the gall of the hydra. These arrows he afterwards used with remarkable effect in the Trojan war. When Troy had been destroyed, he set sail for Asia; but, as he was unwilling to visit his native country, he went to Italy, where he built a town in Calabria, which he called Petilia. The sufferings and adventures of Philoctetes form the subject of one of the best tragedies of Sophocles.

PHILOLAUS, fil-o-lai'-us, a Pythagorean philosopher, of Crotona, who maintained that all things were made by harmony and necessity. He also asserted that the earth was round, and had a circular motion. The Golden Verses of Pythagoras have been attributed to him.

Lived about 374 B.C.

PHILOMELA, fil'-o-me'-la, in Greek legend, a girl who was changed into a nightingale.

PHILOPŒMEN, fil-o-pe'-men, general of the Achæans, who displayed great bravery in defending his native city against Cleomenes III., king of Sparta; was appointed commander of the Achæan league and, in 208, gained the famous battle of Messene over the Ætolians; he shortly afterwards slew Machanidas, tyrant of Lacedæmon, near Mantinea, with his own hand. Nabis, the successor of Machanidas, defeated Philopœmen at sea; but he recovered this loss on land, took Sparta, razed its walls, and abolished the laws of Lycurgus. The Messenians having revolted, Philopœmen marched against them, but was taken prisoner by falling from his horse. Dinocrates, the Messenian general, threw him into prison, and caused him to be poisoned.

Born in Arcadia, about 253 B.C.; died 182 B.C.

PHILOSTORGIUS, fil-os-tor'--ji-us, historian, who wrote an ecclesiastical history of his own time.

Born in Cappadocia, about 364; died about 425.

PHILOSTRATUS, FLAVIUS, fi-los-trai'-tus, "the elder," of Lemnos, a famous Greek sophist, who resided at Rome, where he was patronized by Julia, wife of Septimus Severus. He wrote the "Life of Apollonius of Tyana," an eminent philosopher. It is an extravagant romance, full of fables. He also wrote the Lives of the Sophists, and a commentary upon the heroes of Homer.

Lived towards the close of the 2nd century.

PHILOXENUS, fi-lox'-e-nus, a dithyrambic poet of Cythera, lived at the court of Dionysius of Syracuse, who banished him to the stone-quarries for censuring his verses.

Died at Ephesus, about 380 B.C.

PHLEGON, fle'-gon, surnamed the Trallian, from Tralles, in Caria, his birthplace. He was the freedman of Adrian, and wrote a History of Marvellous Things; also a History of the Olympiads, part of which is extant. He is said to have mentioned the darkness at our Saviour's crucifixion. This passage caused a controversy between Whiston, Chapman, and others, in the 18th century.

Lived in the 2nd century.

PHOCAS, fo'-kas, emperor of the East. He was a groom to the general Priscus, and by his great strength and courage became very popular with the soldiery. He usurped the throne and murdered the emperor Maurice and his children, in 602. This led to the interference of the Shah of Persia, who defeated the Byzantine troops and almost drove them out of Asia. Phocas put to death a great number of persons, and by means of fair promises, inveigled Narses, the famous Persian general, to Constantinople, and caused him to be burnt alive. Heraclius, governor of Africa, conspired against and slew Phocas.

Died 610.

PHOCION, fo'-shi-on, Athenian general and statesman, who was the disciple of Plato and Xenocrates. He displayed great eloquence, and opposed Demosthenes, when that great orator endeavoured to raise the Athenians to declare war against Philip. Phocion saw in that measure the ruin of Athens; but, when the war commenced, he manifested the patriotism and talents of a brave general. Philip and Alexander made several attempts to corrupt him, but in vain. Phocion held the generalship at Athens forty-four times: but notwithstanding his splendid virtues and abilities, he could not escape persecution. He was accused of treachery, and deposed, on which he fled; but was taken and condemned to death. His son Phocus was a man of licentious character; but he avenged the fate of his father upon his accusers, and erected a statue to his memory.

Born 402 B.C.; died 317 B.C.

PHOCIS, fo'-sis, a monarchy or province of modern Greece, on the north side of the Gulf of Corinth. Area, 2,044 square miles (including Phthiotis with which it is united). Pop. 128,440.

PHOCYLIDES, fo-sil'-i-dees, a Greek poet and philosopher, was a native of Miletus. There is a poem, extant, which is, by some critics, attributed to him.

Lived in the 6th century B.C.

PHŒBUS, fe'-bus, meaning "the radiant," one of the names of the Greek divinity Apollo.

PHŒNICIA, fe-ne'-she-a, the name given by the Greeks and Romans to a portion of the coast of Syria, bounded W. by the Mediterranean, N. and E. by ancient Syria, and S. by Judea, about 200 miles long, and about 20 wide. The chief towns were Sidon and Tyre.

PHŒNIXVILLE, fe'-nix-vil, a town of Pennsylvania, United States, at the junction of French Creek with the Schuylkill, 24 miles N.W. of Philadelphia. Manf. Cotton and nails. There are large anthracite furnaces and rolling mills. Pop. 5,500.

PHORMIO, for'-mi-o, an Athenian general, who succeeded Callias, B.C. 432, and gave great proofs of his courage in the Peloponnesian war, and in defeating the fleets of the Lacedæmonians. He sold his estates to pay his army, and refused the rank of commander-in-chief.

PHOTIUS, fo'-shi-us, patriarch of Constantinople. He was a member of a patrician family, and his learning advanced him to several high offices in the state; after which he entered into orders; and on the deposition of Ignatius, aspired to the patriarchate, which he obtained in an irregular manner in 853, but was nevertheless confirmed in the appointment in 858. This occasioned a schism, and Photius exercised great severities on those who adhered to Ignatius. Basil, the Macedonian, expelled him in 869. Photius, however, contrived to gain the favour of Basil, who restored him to the patriarchial see upon the death of Ignatius, in 877. But, in 886, Leo caused him to be again deprived, and confined in a monastery, where he died. His works are, "Myriobiblon," or "Bibliotheca," a commentary on several authors of antiquity; "Nomocanon," or a collection of the canons of the church; and a collection of theological and controversial works.

PHRYGIA, fri'-je-a, an ancient division of Asia Minor. (See ASIA MINOR.)

PHRYNE, fri'-ne, a famous courtesan of Greece, and mistress of Praxiteles, who employed her as a model for his statues of Venus. She acquired immense wealth, and offered to rebuild Thebes, provided this inscription should be placed upon the walls: "Alexander destroyed this city, and the courtesan Phryne restored it;" but her offer was rejected. She was charged with profaning the Eleusinian mysteries, but her advocate dexterously unveiled her, and the judges were so dazzled by her beauty that they immediately acquitted her, and she was carried in triumph to the temple of Venus. She sat as a model of Venus to Apelles, the painter, and Praxiteles, the sculptor.

PHRYXUS, frix'-us, in Greek legend, a son of Athamas, king of Thebes, by Nephele, who was persecuted by his stepmother Ino, because he was to obtain the throne in preference to her own children. Being apprised of Ino's intentions upon his life, he secured part of his father's treasure, and privately left Bœotia with his sister Helle, to go to their friend Æetes, king of Colchis. They embarked on board a ship, or, according to the mythologists, they mounted on the back of a ram whose fleece was of gold, and proceeded through the air. The height to which they were carried made Helle giddy, and she fell into the sea, which has been called Hellespont from her name.

PHULOWDEE, foo-lo-dé', a town of India, in Rajpootana, 7 miles N.W. of Joodpoor. There are three Jain temples and several Hindoo pagodas. Pop. 15,000.

PIACENZA, pe-a-chen'-za, a city of northern Italy, capital of the province of the same name, near the junction of the Po with the Trebbia, 36 miles N. W. of Parma. It is defended by a castle, and is enclosed by ramparts entered by five gates. Of its streets a few are broad and straight, but most of them are narrow and gloomy. Of the public squares, the Piazza Cavali contains two fine equestrian statues in bronze, representing the dukes Alessandrio and Ronnuccio Farnese. Among the more prominent buildings are the Palazzo Farnese (now used as a barrack), the Palazzo del Commune (or town house, built in the 13th century), the Collegio dei Mercante, all fine edifices. The cathedral, founded in the 11th century, is in the Lombard style, with grotesque decorations, and a fine collection of paintings. The old church of Sant' Antonio, founded in the 4th century and several times rebuilt, was originally the cathedral. There are a university, a public library, and several extensive private collections. Manf. Silk stuffs, woollens, fustians, stockings, and hats. There is a great fair in April. The Romans named this town Placentia; in later times it was one of the independent Lombard cities.

Pop. of the province, 231,720; of the city, 33,000.

PIANA, or PIANA DE' GRECI, pe-a'-na, a town of Sicily, province of Palermo, 10 miles S. of the town of that name. Pop. 7,300, descended from a colony of Albanese, who took refuge here in the 15th century, and still retaining their religious faith and customs.

PIANOSA, pe-a-no'-sa, a small island in the Mediterranean, 10 miles W. of Cape Elba, about 3½ miles long, by 2½ broad. After the first abdication of Napoleon I., this island was left in his power as an annexation to Elba.

PIATRA, pe-ai'-tra, a town of Roumania, in Moldavia, on the left bank of the Bistritza, 62 miles S.W. of Jassy. Manf. Paper. There is a considerable export of timber. Pop. 20,000.

PIATT, pi-at', a county of Illinois, United States. Area, 275 square miles. Pop. 15,583. The capital is Monticello.

PIAUHY, pe-o-hi', a province of Brazil, bounded N. by the Atlantic, S. by Pernambuco and Goyaz, E. by Ceara and Pernambuco, and W. by Maranhao. The coast line is 70 miles long, but there is only one harbour, and that a poor one, formed by the eastern mouth of the Parahiba. The surface is generally flat, except near the southern and eastern frontiers. The soil is very fertile, and sugar-cane, tobacco, and rice are extensively cultivated. The rearing of cattle and horses is the most profitable industry. The climate is excessively hot.

Rivers.—The most important is the Parnahiba, which forms the boundary between Piauhy and Maranhao. The others are streams or tributaries, the principal being the Canindé, Dorguea, Longa, Piauhy, Poti, and Uruçuhi.

Area.—81,776 square miles.

Pop.—239,691.

PIAVE, pe-a'-vai, a river of Italy, rising in the Nori Alps, near Lienz, and after a course of nearly 150 miles, falling into the Atlantic 20 miles N.E. of Venice.

PIAZZA, pe-at'-sa, a town of Sicily, in the Val di Noto, province of Caltanisetta. It is noted for the number of its churches and convents. Manf Woollen cloth and caps. Pop. 19,110.

PIAZZI, GIUSEPPE, Italian astronomer, who at the age of 18, entered the order of the Theatines at Milan, where he studied, and afterwards at Rome and Turin. He was appointed professor of philosophy at Genoa, but offended the Dominican priests by his bold opinions, and the grand master of his order removed him to Malta, where in 1770 he became professor of mathematics in the new university. He afterwards returned to Italy, and was appointed professor of dogmatic theology, in the institution of San Andrea della Valle at Rome, and a few years afterwards occupied the chair of Mathematics at Palermo, where he established an observatory. He soon obtained a great reputation as an astronomer, corrected various errors of calculation, discovered the planet Ceres, and published in 1803, a splendid map of the fixed stars, which received the special approbation of the Institute of France. In 1814 he published a more complete catalogue, and made researches into the nature of comets. The later years of his life were devoted to improvements in the state of public education in Sicily.

Born at Ponte, 1746; died at Naples, 1826.

PICARD, JEAN, pik'-ar, a French astronomer, who became a member of the Academy of Sciences in 1666, and five years afterwards was sent by the king to Uranienburg, which was built by Tycho Brahe, to make celestial observations. Picard brought with him from Denmark many manuscripts of Tycho's. He was engaged in measuring a degree of the Meridian, and in determining the meridian of France.

Born in France, 1620; died 1682.

PICARDY, pik'-ar-de, an old province in the North of France, nearly identical in limits with the modern department Somme.

PICCINI, NICOLO, pe-ché'-ne, a celebrated Italian musical composer, whose first masters were Leo and Durante. From Italy he went to Paris in 1776, where the connoisseurs were divided in opinion between him and Glück. At the Revolution, Piccini returned to Naples, where he was proscribed as being a Jacobin; on which he went again to France, where he remained until his death. His principal operas are, "Roland," "Atys," "Iphigenia in Tauris," and "Dido."

Born at Bari, 1728; died at Passy, 1800.

PICCOLOMINI, pik-ko-lo'-me-ne, the name of a noble family of Italy, originally of Rome, but afterwards of Sienna, and which, of a later period, obtained possession of the duchy of Amalfi.

PICCOLOMINI, ALESSANDRO, archbishop of Patras and coadjutor of Sienna, where he wrote several dramatic pieces of reputation. His other works are, a treatise on the Sphere, "Theory of the Planets," "Moral Institutes," &c. He was the first who wrote on philosophical subjects in Italian, Latin having been heretofore used by the learned.

Born at Sienna, 1508; died 1578.

PICCOLOMINI, OTTAVIO, first duke of Amalfi, entered the Spanish service at an early age, and greatly distinguished himself as a cavalry leader. In 1634 he served under Wallenstein, but becoming acquainted with the designs of that general against the emperor, he communicated them, and was rewarded with part of Wallenstein's estates. He afterwards served with great distinction against the Swedes, and the French and the Dutch in the Netherlands, but the peace of Westphalia, in 1648, closed his military career. He was raised by the emperor to the dignity of field-marshal, took part as a plenipotentiary at the Congress of Nuremberg in 1649, and was made a prince of the empire. The king of Spain gave him the order of the golden fleece, and the duchy of Amalfi, which had previously belonged to his family.

Born 1599; died at Vienna, 1656.

PICCOLOMINI, GIACOMO, a cardinal, whose real name was Ammanati, but which he changed out of respect to pope Pius II., his patron, who was of that noble family. He became successively bishop of Massa and Frascati, and, in 1461, cardinal. Sixtus IV. seized his property after his death, and applied it to the building of an hospital. He wrote a History of his Own Times, and Letters, which have been printed.

Born at Lucca, 1422; died 1479.

PICHEGRU, CHARLES, peezh'-groo, a general of the French republic, who came of humble parentage, but received a good education under the monks in his native town, and afterwards at Brienne. He entered the army, and the Revolution elevated him to the rank of general and of commander-in-chief of the army; and in 1794, he succeeded General Hoche in the command of the army of the north. Shortly after, he relieved Landau, and compelled the English to evacuate the Netherlands. He next marched into Holland, of which he made a complete conquest. It is generally supposed that he was bribed to support the Bourbons, a suspicion strengthened by the manner in which he allowed himself to be defeated by the Austrians, at Heidelberg; and he was superseded, retiring to his native town. In 1797 he was elected a member of the legislative body; but his opposition to the Directory, and his speeches in favour of the royalist emigrants, occasioned an accusation against him as designing to restore royalty. He was ordered, without trial, to be transported to Cayenne, whence he escaped to England, where he remained till the spring of 1804, being deeply involved in Bourbon conspiracies for the assassination of Napoleon, when he went to Paris, where he was betrayed by an associate, for 100,000 crowns, and he was apprehended and sent to the Temple. Three weeks afterwards he was found strangled in his bed, by means of a black silk handkerchief twisted round his neck, and tightened with a short stick. The body was examined and exposed, and a laboured account published, to make it appear that he had laid violent hands on himself; but a very strong suspicion exists that he was assassinated.

Born at Arbois, France, 1761; died 1804.

PICHINCHA, pe-chin'-cha, a very lofty mountain and volcano of Quito. (See QUITO.)

PICHLER, KAROLINE VON, peezh'-ler, a German novelist, daughter of an official at Vienna. She commenced a literary career at an early age, by contributing short poetical pieces to the almanacs. She subsequently produced a number of historical novels, some of which appeared before Sir Walter Scott commenced his career. She produced altogether about 60 volumes, and displayed considerable constructive skill, and often wrote with great pictorial effect; but her style was generally marred by too great diffuseness.

Born at Vienna, 1769; died at the same city, 1843.

PICKENS, pik'-ens, the name of three counties of the United States:—

ALABAMA.—Area, 1,050 square miles. Pop. 21,479, about half being coloured. The capital is Carrollton.

GEORGIA.—Area, 350 square miles. Pop. 6,790. The capital is Jasper.

NORTH CAROLINA.—Area, 500 square miles. Pop. 10,300, nearly one-third being coloured. The capital is Pickens Court-house.

PICKERSGILL, HENRY WILLIAM, pik'-ers-gil, a modern English painter and Royal Academician, who, after completing his career as a student, embraced the historical style of art. He subsequently devoted himself to portraits, and became one of the most fashionably patronized artists in that walk in England. Elected R.A. in 1825, he, ten years later, succeeded to the office of librarian to the Royal Academy.

Born about 1782; died 1875.

PICO, pe'-ko, a mountainous island near the coast of Africa, one of the Azores. It is traversed by a volcanic ridge, rising in Pico (the peak) to 7,613 feet. Area, 225 square miles. Pop. 30,000, mostly the descendants of Portuguese. Lat. 38° 28′ N. Lon. 28° 25′ W.

PICO. (See MIRANDOLA.)

PICTOU, pik'-too, a seaport on the north coast of Nova Scotia, with a good harbour, 80 miles N.E. of Halifax. There are coal mines and quarries of building stone in the vicinity. Shipbuilding is carried on. Pop. 3,500, mostly of Scotch descent. Lat. 43° 41′ N. Lon. 62° 40′ W.

PICTOU, a county of Nova Scotia. Area, 1,126 square miles. Pop. 35,535.

PIERCE, FRANKLIN, peerse, 14th president of the United States of America. He was the son of general Pierce, governor of New Hampshire, and was educated at Bowdoin College, Maine. He was admitted to the bar in 1827, was speaker of the State house of representatives in 1829, and was elected to Congress as a democrat. In 1837 he became a member of the United States Senate. He served in the Mexican war, and in 1852 was nominated democratic candidate for the presidency, in opposition to general Scott, and was returned by a considerable majority. After the expiration of his term of office he took no part in politics.

Born at Hillsborough, 1804; died at Concord, 1869.

PIERCE, the name of four counties of the United States:—

GEORGIA.—Area, 500 square miles. Pop. 4,538. The capital is Blackshear.

NEBRASKA.—Area, 540 square miles. Pop. 1,202.

WISCONSIN.—Area, 600 square miles. Pop. 17,744. The capital is Ellsworth.

PIERRE, JACQUES HENRI, BERNARDIN DE ST., pé'-air, an eminent French writer, who was educated for the profession of a civil engineer, and obtained employment under the French government. Quitting his native country, he went to Russia, where he was engaged to execute several important surveys; but having presented to Count Orloff a plan for establishing a colony of foreigners upon the eastern shores of the Caspian Sea, under a republican government, he met with such a reception as decided him to leave that country. He repaired to Poland, with the intention of taking arms against Russia, but fell deeply in love at Warsaw, and forgot military glory in the beauty of a Polish maiden. After spending some time in Germany, he returned to France, and soon afterwards joined an expedition, the ostensible object of which was to form a republican colony in the island of Madagascar; but, discovering that his fellow-voyagers were, in reality, going thither to obtain a supply of slaves, he abandoned them, and landed in the Isle of France (Mauritius), where he spent three years. Returning to Paris, he devoted himself to literature, and produced his beautiful little story of "Paul and Virginia," which has become a classic in every European language. His other works were, "Studies of Nature," "Harmonies of Nature," "The Indian Cottage," "Narrative of a Journey to Russia;" and several plays. When the Revolution burst forth, he was reduced to great distress, which was afterwards alleviated by the generous patronage of Joseph Bonaparte. The emperor subsequently bestowed a pension upon him, and added to it the cross of the legion of honour.

PIERRE, ST., pé'-air, a town of France, department Pas de Calais, adjoining Calais. Manf. Tulle, buttons, leather, and beetroot sugar. Pop. 33,290.

PIERRE, ST. (D'OLERON), a town of France, on the island of Oleron, department Charente-Inférieure, 17 miles W. of Rochefort. Pop. 5,000.

PIKE'S PEAK. (See ROCKY MOUNTAINS.)

PILATE, PONTIUS, pi'-late, a Roman, who became governor of Judæa, A.D. 26. Pilate delivered Jesus, whom he had pronounced innocent, to be crucified. He is said to have subsequently treated the Samaritans with great cruelty, for which he was recalled by Tiberius, and banished to Gaul, where he slew himself.

Died 38.

PILCOMAYO, pil-ko-mi'-o, a river of South America, rising in the Bolivian Andes, near Chucquisaca, in two rivers; the Suipacha and the Pilaya, and joining the Paraguay, nearly opposite Ascension. Its course is estimated at 1,200 miles.

PILES, ROGER DE, peel, was a celebrated French painter and writer on painting, who, in 1662, became tutor to the son of the president Amelot, with whom he travelled. In 1692 he was sent by Louis XIV. to the Hague, ostensibly as a picture-dealer, but in fact to negotiate with those who were friends to France. The object of his mission being discovered, he was sent to prison, where he wrote his "Lives of the Painters." On his return to France, he obtained a pension. He was a member of the Academy of Painting, and a great admirer of Rubens, whom he imitated with success. Besides the above work, he wrote an "Abridgment of Anatomy, adapted to Painting and Sculpture," and a "Course of Painting."

Born at Clamecy, France, 1635; died at Paris, 1709.

PILLAU, pil'-lou, a seaport of Prussia, province of Königsberg, at the extremity of a narrow peninsula between the Baltic and the long maritime inlet called the Frische Haff, with a commodious harbour, 25 miles S.W. of Königsberg. It is defended by a strong fort, and a considerable trade and an active fishery are carried on. Pop. 3,500.

PILLIBEET, or PILIBHIT, pil-le-bet', a town of British India, on the Gumah, 160 miles E. of Delhi. There is a fine mosque. A large fair is held annually. Celebrated for the quality of its rice. Pop. 29,721; of the district, 451,601.

PILPAY, pil'-pai, an Indian brahmin, gymnosophist, and philosopher, was, it is believed, a governor of part of Hindostan, and counsellor to an Indian king; whom he instructed by fables, which have been translated into many languages.

PILSEN, pil'-sen, capital of a circle of the same name, in Bohemia, on the rivers Beraun and also the Mies, 52 miles S.W. of Prague. It is an important commercial town, and has a Gothic church, built in the 13th century, a monastery, convent, town hall, gymnasium, and theatre. Manf. Woollens, cottons, and leather. There are alum works and iron and coal mines in the vicinity. Pop. 38,883.

PIMA, pi'-ma, a county of Arizona Territory, United States. Area, 20,000 square miles. Pop. 17,006. The capital is Tucson.

PINDAR, pin'-dar, Greek lyric poet. In his youth he was remarkable for musical and poetical talent, and, bore away the poetical prize from Myrtis, but was less successful in his contest with Corinne, who defeated him five times. It is said, however, by some authors, that she owed her victory less to her poetry than to her charms. At the Olympic games, where women were excluded, Pindar conquered all his rivals, and received the greatest honours. Part of the presents allotted to Apollo were ordered to be given to him, and a statue was erected to his honour at Thebes. When the Spartans took Thebes, they spared the house of Pindar, as did Alexander the Great.

PINDAR, PETER, satirical poet. Died 1819.

PIND DADUN KHAN, pind-da-doon'-kan, a town of British India, in the Punjab, on the right bank of the Jhelum, 110 miles N.W. of Lahore. A large quantity of salt is obtained in the vicinity. Pop. 16,000.

PINE, pine, a county of Minnesota, United States. Area, 1,450 square miles. Pop. 800. The capital is Chengwatana.

PINEDA, JOHN, pe-nai'-da, a learned Spanish Jesuit, who taught philosophy and theology in several colleges, and wrote commentaries on Job and Ecclesiastes, also a universal history of the world, and a history of Ferdinand III.

Born at Seville, 1557; died 1637.

PINEL, PHILIPPE, pe-nel', a French physician, famous for his advocacy of the humane treatment of insane patients. He was educated at the college of Lavaur, and afterwards studied medicine at Toulouse and Montpellier. In 1778 he removed to Paris, and in 1793 became chief physician of the Bicêtre, where there were many male insane patients, and two years afterwards of the Salpêtrière, a similar asylum for females. He was subsequently appointed professor of medical physics and hygeine and afterwards of pathology at the school of medicine at Paris, and admitted a member of the Institute in 1803. His works on the treatment of insanity marked an epoch in medical science, and his views are now generally adopted.

Born at Saint André, 1745; died at Paris, 1826.

PINELLI, GIOVANNI VINCENZIO, pe-nail'-le, a learned Italian, who fixed his residence at Padua, where he formed a magnificent library, stored with rare books and valuable manuscripts. The most learned men in Europe were among his correspondents, and his literary treasures were always open for their use.

Born at Naples, 1535; died 1601.

PINEROLO, or PIGNEROL, pe-nai-ro'-lo, a town of Italy, province of Turin, on the Clusone, 22 miles S.W. of Turin. It contains a new cathedral and a bishop's palace, and is inclosed by walls. Manf. Woollens, silk, paper, leather, and iron. Pop. 17,000.

PINES, ISLE OF, in the South Pacific, off the south-western coast of New Caledonia, named from the fine pine trees, which are abundant. The island is about 42 miles in circumference. Pop. 2,500. Lat. 22° 38′ S. Lon. 167° 25′ E.

PINGEH, ping-ai', a town of Cochin China, on a branch of the Mekong, 3 miles below Saigon. It is strongly fortified, and has docks and arsenals. Pop. large, but unascertained.

PINGRE, ALEXANDER WILLIAM, pangr, French astronomer, who became librarian of Ste. Genévière, at Paris. In 1760 he was sent to the South Sea, to observe the famous transit of Venus over the sun's disc. He was afterwards employed to prove the timepieces of Le Roy, and was admitted a member of the French Academy and of the Institute. His works are, "State of the Heavens from 1754 to 1757," "Memoirs of Discoveries made in the South Seas," "An Historical and Theoretical Treatise on Comets, "Translation of Manilius's Astronomics," and a portion of a projected "History of Astronomy in the 17th Century."

Born at Paris, 1711; died 1796.

PINKERTON, JOHN, pin'-ker-ton, a Scottish writer, who was bred to the law, but devoted himself to literary pursuits. For half a century he continued to produce works in various departments of knowledge, many of which were of a valuable and important character. Among the rest, he gave to the world "A General Collection of Voyages and Travels," "The History of Scotland," "Portraits of Illustrious Persons of Scotland," several collections of ancient Scottish poems, and "Walpoliana."

Born at Edinburgh, 1758; died at Paris, 1826.

PINSK, pinsk, a town of Russia, government of Minsk, on the Pina, surrounded by marshes. There is a large and increasing transit trade, the port having communication by means of the Oghinsky canal with the Dnieper and the Black Sea and the Niemen and the Baltic. Pop. 25,499, including numerous Jews.

PINSON, RICHARD, pin'-son, a native of Normandy, who became servant to William Caxton, and afterwards printer to Henry VII. and Henry VIII. He printed Magna Charta, and several books, which are now scarce and valuable.

Died about 1530.

PINTELLI, BACCIO, pin-tail'-le, a celebrated Italian architect, who designed the famous Sistine chapel at Rome. He also built the Ponte Sisto over the Tiber, several churches, and the old library of the Vatican. After the death of his patron, Sixtus IV., he was invited to Urbino by Frederick, the second duke; and for him he designed the ducal palace and some churches. His designs were made upon such excellent principles that several of his buildings remain to this time in a state of perfect preservation. His bridge over the Tiber, although about 400 years old, is still as substantial as a new fabric.

Born at Florence, early in the 15th century; died at Urbino, about 1494.

PINTO, FERNAM MENDEZ. (See MENDEZ.)

PINTURICCHIO, BERNARDINO, pin-too-rik'-ki-o, Italian painter, who belonged to the school of Perugino, and excelled in historical subjects and portraits.

Born at Perugia, 1454; died at Sienna, 1513.

PINZON, MARTIN ALONSO, pin'-zon, Spanish navigator, who assisted Columbus in fitting out his expedition, and commanded the Ponta. He deserted Columbus, and, believing that he had perished, returned to Spain, intending to claim the merit of the discovery of the New World; but Columbus arrived on the same day, and Pinzon was forbidden to appear at court.

PINZON, VICENTE YANEZ, brother of the above, who commanded the Nina in the first expedition of Columbus, and afterwards discovered Brazil.

Died about 1500.

PIOMBINO, pe-om-be'-no, a town and seaport of Italy (formerly the capital of a principality), on a rocky promontory opposite the island of Elba, 40 miles S. of Leghorn. It is strongly fortified, has a fine church and a harbour, and near it are some salt works. Pop. 3,700.

PIOMBO, SEBASTIANO DEL, pe-om'-bo, a celebrated Italian painter. He was a disciple of Giorgone, and painted historical and portrait pieces. Later in life, he quitted his profession to assume the functions of keeper of the signet to pope Clement VII.; whence arose his name del Piombo, "of the lead," in allusion to the lead of the seal. Many of the designs of his pictures were furnished by Michael Angelo; Sebastiano supplying the fine colouring which characterised his style.

Born at Venice, 1485; died at Rome, 1547.

PIOTRKOW, pi-ot-re-kof, a town of European Russia, capital of the government of the same name, and a place of considerable importance in the 15th and 16th centuries, diets being held and the king of Poland elected there. Pop. 24,840.

PIOTRKOW, a government of Russia, bordering on Prussian Silesia. The surface is level, and the soil mostly sandy. Area, 4,730 square miles. Pop. 865,777.

PIOVE, pe-o'-vai, a town of Italy, province of Padova, 12 miles S.E. of Padua. There are a castle, five churches, and two chapels. Manf. Woollens and silks. Pop. 6,800.

PIOZZI, MRS. HESTER LYNCH, pe-ot'-se, an English authoress. She was the daughter of John Salusbury, a gentleman of Carnarvonshire, and having appeared in the London world of fashion with much success, became, at the age of 24, the wife of Mr. Thrale, a rich brewer of Southwark. It was as Mrs. Thrale that she made the acquaintance of Dr. Johnson, and was for several years one of his most intimate friends; but, after she became a widow, in the eighteenth year of her marriage, she retired to Bath with her four daughters. There she met Gabriel Piozzi, an Italian music-master, whom she married in 1784. This union, which took place shortly before Dr. Johnson's death, led to the breaking up of their long friendship. After the doctor's death, she produced her "Anecdotes of Dr. Samuel Johnson, during the last Twenty Years of his Life," which work Boswell declared to have been written in a spiteful and revengeful spirit. Peter Pindar (Dr. Wolcot) took the opposite view, and wrote his satirical poem called "Bozzy and Piozzi" thereupon. Besides the work just named, Mrs. Piozzi wrote "The Three Warnings," a poem; "Observations and Reflections made in the course of a Journey through France, Italy, and Germany;" "British Synonomy," &c. She survived her second husband, and, when quite an old woman, formed a romantic sentimental attachment to Conway, a good-looking actor. Her letters to him were published.

Born 1739; died at Clifton, near Bristol, 1821.

PIPER, CHARLES, Count, pi'-per, an eminent Swedish statesman, who, from an obscure rank, rose to be the prime minister of Charles XII., whom he accompanied in his campaign. Taken prisoner after the battle of Pultowa, he was shut up in the fortress of Schlusselberg.

Born about 1660; died 1716.

PIPESTONE, a new county of Minnesota, United States. Area, 632 square miles. Pop. 2,092.

PIPPI, GIULIO. (See ROMANO, Julio.)

PIQUA, pi'-ka, a city of Ohio, United States, on the west bank of the Great Meanee river. Manf. Agricultural implements, woollens, and iron. There is a considerable trade in agricultural produce. Pop. 6,031.

PIQUETBERG, pik'-et-berg, a division of the western province of Cape Colony. There is an isolated range of mountains; but the district near Berg river is very fertile. There are some good bays on the coast. Area, 1,770 square miles. Pop. 6,000.

PIRÆUS, pi-re'-us, a town of Greece, port of Athens, and 5 miles from that city. The present town is new, and there is a good exchange. There are several spinning factories. The harbour (known also as Porto Leono or Drakoni) is safe, and deep enough for ships of considerable size. Pop. 21,055.

PIRANESI, GIOVANNI BAPTISTE, pe-ra-nai'-se, an Italian architectural engraver, who was remarkable for a bold and free style of drawing, which he generally executed upon the plate at once by etching in aquafortis. He kept an establishment at Rome for the production of architectural engravings, which became famous throughout Europe. His works, consisting of triumphal arches, bridges, buildings, and other remains of antiquity, occupy 20 folio volumes.

Born at Venice, 1720; died at Rome, 1778.

PIRANESI, FRANCIS, son of the preceding, and, like him, a celebrated engraver and draughtsman. He took part in the revolution at Rome, and, upon the arrival of the French in that city, repaired to Paris, where he produced a splendid collection of Roman antiquities. His works consist of 29 folio volumes.

Born 1748; died 1810.

PIRANO, pe-ra'-no, a seaport of the Austrian empire, in Istria, on a peninsula in the bay of Largone, 15 miles S.W. of Trieste. There are a fine Gothic church, a convent, town-house, old castle, and several dockyards. Manf. Wine and oil. There are very extensive salt works in the neighbourhood. Pop. 9,000.

PIRITHOUS, pi-rith'-o-us, in Greek legend, the friend of Theseus, with whom he visited the infernal regions, and attempted to carry away Proserpine. Pluto detained them, and Pirithous was only released by the intervention of Hercules. Was king of the Lapithæ.

PIRMASENS, peer'-ma-sents, a town of Bavaria, in the Palatinate, 22 miles W. of Landau. Manf. Tobacco, straw hats, glass, shoes, and musical instruments. Pop. 8,700.

PIRNA, peer'-na, a town of Saxony, on the left bank of the Elbe, 9 miles S.E. of Dresden. There are a beautiful parish church, and an old castle, now used as a lunatic asylum. Manf. Stoneware. Pop. 8,200.

PIRON, ALEXIS, pe'-rawng, a French dramatic poet, who was the son of an apothecary and was educated for the law, but was prevented from establishing himself in practice in consequence of the reverse of fortune experienced by his parents. After living in obscurity until his 30th year, he repaired to Paris, where he became employed as a writer for the stage, producing, among other plays, an excellent comedy, the "Métromanie." He subsequently wrote satirical poems and epigrams, and sought to become a member of the Academy; but, being unsuccessful, he retaliated by keenly satirising the members of that body. He wrote his own epitaph, which was as follows:—"Here lies Piron, who was nothing, not even an Academician."

Born at Dijon, 1719; died at Paris, 1773.

PISA, pe'-sa, a city of Italy, province of Pisa, on both banks of the Arno, 12 miles N. of Leghorn. The quays, which run along each of the banks, are spacious, and are bordered by rows of good houses, and the streets are straight and wide. There are several bridges, the finest, the Ponte del Mezzo, being of white marble. The cathedral, built in the 11th and 12th centuries, has a dome supported by 74 pillars, is richly decorated, and contains some fine paintings. Opposite the cathedral is the beautiful baptistery, or church of St. John, built in 1162. There are altogether 80 churches in Pisa, La Madonna della Spina, and San Stefano, being the most noticeable; but the most curious of all the ecclesiastical buildings is the belfry, or campanile, a cylindrical tower of 180 feet in height, graceful in its proportions, and constructed of successive rows of pillars, chiefly marble, but above all remarkable for its inclination, about 14 feet out of the perpendicular; whence it is commonly called the leaning tower. It was built in the 12th century by the German architect, Wilhelm of Innsbruck. Among the other most noticeable public buildings are the grand ducal and Lanfranchi palaces, and the Torre della Fame ("tower of hunger," so named because it is supposed to be the place where Ugolano and his children were starved to death). The Campo Santo, the ancient national cemetery, is surrounded by cloisters, with frescoes, now much decayed, by eminent artists. This cemetery was formed in 1283, earth being brought from Jerusalem for the graves of eminent citizens of Pisa. The university of Pisa is one of the oldest in Italy, having been founded in 1330; it has four colleges, with 40 professors: also a library, a botanical garden, a cabinet of natural history, and an observatory. There are mineral baths, famous two thousand years ago, and still much resorted to. Pop. 52,262. —Pisa is a place of great antiquity, having been one of the twelve towns of Etruria, and afterwards augmented by a colony from Rome.

PISA, a province of Italy, formerly a portion of the grand duchy of Tuscany. The surface is very varied, and the soil fertile. Area, 1,180 square miles. Pop. 266,000.

PISCATAQUA, pis-kat'-a-qua, a river of the United States, forming the boundary between New Hampshire and Maine. After a course of 40 miles it joins the Atlantic, forming the harbour Portsmouth.

PISCATAQUIS, pis-kat'-a-quis, a county of Maine, United States. Area, 3,780 square miles. Pop. 14,500.—The capital is Dover.

PISEK, pe'-sek, capital of a circle of the same name, in Bohemia, on the river Wottawa, an affluent of the Moldau, 55 miles S.W. of Prague. There are the remains of a royal castle. Manf. Woollen and cotton fabrics, iron wire, and musical instruments. Pop. 9,000.

PISISTRATUS, pi-sis'-tra-tus, "tyrant" or ruler of Athens, was a descendant of Codrus, and a relative of Solon, and distinguished himself early in life by his courage, particularly at the taking of Salamis: but, after serving his country with glory, he endeavoured to enslave it. To effect his object he had recourse to an extraordinary device. Having inflicted several wounds on himself, he appeared before the people, and pretended that an attempt had been made to assassinate him. The Athenians, in spite of the warnings of Solon, believed the tale, and assigned him a guard, which he increased, and by that means made himself master of the citadel. The citizens out of fear acknowledged him their ruler; but Megacles and Lycurgus united their forces and expelled Pisistratus from Athens. Shortly after, Megacles offered to assist Pisistratus, on condition of his marrying his daughter; to which the tyrant consented, but afterwards used her so ill, that her father gathered a force and compelled him to quit the city. After an exile of thirteen years, he made himself master of Marathon, and, having taken Athens by surprise, put to death all the friends of Megacles. He built an academy, which he furnished with a valuable library; made the first collection of the poems of Homer, and died in possession of the sovereign power.

Died 527 B.C.

PISO, LUCIUS CALPURNIUS, pi'-so, surnamed Frugalis, on account of his frugality, was consul 149 B.C., and terminated the war in Sicily. He composed annals and orations, which are lost.

PISO, CNEIUS, was consul under Augustus, and governor of Syria under Tiberius, in which situation he behaved with great cruelty. He was charged with poisoning Germanicus; on which account he destroyed himself.

Died 20.

PISO, LUCIUS, a senator, who attended the emperor Valerian into Persia in 258. On the death of that emperor he assumed the imperial title; but was defeated by Valens, who put him to death.

Died 261.

PISTICCIO, pis-tich'-o, a town of Italy, province of Potenza, 20 miles S. of Matera. Manf. Woollen cloth. Pop. 6,000.

PISTOJA, pis-to'-ya, a walled town of Italy, province of Fuenze, near the Ombrone, 21 miles N.W. of Florence. The streets are spacious and the houses well built. The cathedral contains many good pictures, and there are other churches interesting for the architecture and sculptures. There are several old palaces. Manf. Hardware and paper. Pop. 50,666.

PISTORIUS, JOHN, pis-to'-ri-us, a Roman Catholic divine, who at first applied to the study of medicine, afterwards to the law, and lastly to divinity. From being a zealous Protestant he turned Catholic, and became counsellor to the emperor, and provost of the cathedral of Breslau. He was the author of several valuable theological works, and also wrote energetically in defence of the faith he had embraced.

Born in Germany, 1546; died 1608.

PISUERGA, pis'-oo-air-ga, a river of the north of Spain, rising in the province of Palencia, and, after a course of 125 miles, falling into the Douro, 8 miles S. of Valladolid.

PITCAIRN ISLAND, pit'-kairn, an island in the South Pacific Ocean, noted as the place of asylum in 1770 for the mutineers of the Bounty, after they left Otaheite. (See ADAMS, John). It is little more than two miles long and about one mile wide, and is surrounded by rocky shores. It produces the cocoa-nut, plantain, banana-tree, the banyan, the orange, and others; also the sweet potato, pumpkin, water-melon, sugar-cane, ginger, and maize. Lat. 25° 3′ S. Lon. 130° 6′ W.—This island was discovered in 1767 by Carteret, who named it after one of his officers. In 1856, the inhabitants having increased in numbers beyond the capacity of the island to support them properly, they were removed to Norfolk Island; but a few have since returned.

PITCAIRNE, ARCHIBALD, a Scotch physician, who studied divinity and afterwards law at the university of Edinburgh; but quitted both those professions for mathematics and medicine. After publishing a thesis, in which he endeavoured to prove that the doctrine of the circulation of the blood was known to Hippocrates, he, in 1692, accepted an invitation from the curators of the university of Leyden to assume the professorship of medicine, but returned to Edinburgh about a year afterwards. He published "Dissertationes Medicæ;" also wrote some Latin poems of the satirical kind, chiefly against the principal authors of the Revolution. The celebrated Boerhaave was one of his pupils at Leyden.

Born at Edinburgh, 1652; died at the same city, 1713.

PITHIVIERS, peet-he'-ve-air, a town of France, department Loiret, near the Oeuf, 25 miles N.E. of Orleans. A great quantity of saffron is grown in the district. Pop. 4,900.

PITHOU, PETER, pe'-too, a learned French lawyer, who was educated a Huguenot, and narrowly escaped in the massacre of St. Bartholomew. Afterwards embracing the Roman Catholic faith, he became attorney-general in the chamber of justice of Guienne. He defended the rights of the kings and church of France against the court of Rome with great ability. His most important works are, "Treatise on the Liberties of the Gallican Church," "Commentaries on the Customs of Troyes," "Notes on various Authors." To Pithou we are indebted for the first publication of Phædrus, the "Novellæ" of Justinian, and other ancient remains.

Born at Troyes, 1539; died 1596.

PITHOU, FRANCIS, brother of the preceding, became attorney-general in the chamber of justice established under Henry IV. He discovered the manuscript of the fables of Phædrus, which he published in conjunction with his brother. His own works were, "Body of the Canon Law," and "The Laws of the Romans compared with those of Moses."

Born at Troyes, 1544; died 1621.

PITIC, pe'-tik, a town of Mexico, on the Sonora, 128 miles S.W. of Arispe. An important transit trade is carried on. Pop. 5,000.

PITOT, HENRI, pe'-to, a French mathematician, who acquired the mathematics without a master, and in 1724 was admitted a member of the Academy of Sciences. His work on the theory of manœuvring ships was translated into English, for which he was elected a member of the Royal Society. He was appointed chief engineer of Languedoc and inspector-general of the canal. The city of Montpellier being in want of water, Pitot constructed an aqueduct, which supplied that place from a distance of three leagues.

Born at Aramont, Languedoc, 1695; died 1771.

PITS, or PITSEUS, JOHN, pits, an English biographer, who was educated at William of Wykeham's school, Winchester; after which he went to Rheims, and taught rhetoric and Greek. The civil war breaking out in France, he retired to Lorraine, and obtained a canonry in the church of Verdun. The duchess of Cleves appointed him her confessor, and, on her death, he became dean of Liverdun. His work, "Lives of the Kings, Bishops, Apostolic Men, and Writers of England," is his principal production.

Born at Alton, Hampshire, 1560; died at Liverdun, 1616.

PITT, WILLIAM, pit, earl of Chatham, English statesman, was the son of Robert Pitt, esq., of Boconnoc, in Cornwall, and was educated at Eton, whence he removed to Trinity College, Oxford. He was for some time a cornet of dragoons; but, in 1736, he quitted the army, on being chosen member of parliament for the borough of Old Sarum. He exerted himself strenuously in opposition to the measures of sir Robert Walpole, and produced such an effect, by his eloquence and power, in lowering the tone of that minister, that the duchess of Marlborough, who hated Walpole, bequeathed him a legacy of £10,000. On the change of administration, he was made joint vice-treasurer of Ireland and paymaster-general of the army, which places he resigned in 1755. The year following he was appointed secretary of state, but in a few months afterwards was again out of office. An efficient administration being desired in 1757, he again became secretary of state. The great statesmanlike qualities of his mind now began to reveal themselves. He soon acquired an immense ascendancy over both the parliament and the ministry; and the war in which the country was then engaged with France began to assume a new aspect. A new impetus was given to every department of the government, and the enemy was beaten both on land and at sea. In all directions the most brilliant actions were performed on the continent; whilst, in other parts of the globe, the flag of Great Britain was completely triumphant. Several valuable places, both in America and the East Indies, were added to her possessions. Such was the state of affairs on the death of George II.; soon after which, a change taking place by the coming of Lord Bute into power, Mr. Pitt resigned. The peace of 1763 followed; but it was not popular, and, in 1766, a new administration was formed, of which Mr. Pitt had a share as lord privy seal; and, at this time, he was created earl of Chatham. This ministry, however, being ill-arranged, was dissolved in 1768. The differences which had already arisen between Great Britain and her American colonies roused his eloquence against those coercive measures, which ultimately led to the war of Independence and the separation of the United States from the mother country. For some time previous, the popularity of Pitt had been on the wane; but it was now revived with all its former splendour. The end of his days, however, was at hand. As he was speaking with his accustomed energy on the subject of the American independence, in the House of Lords, April 8, 1778, he was overpowered, and fell down in a fit of convulsions, from which he never sufficiently rallied as to give hopes of a permanent recovery. Accordingly, on the 11th of the following month he passed into the "undiscovered country," and was solemnly interred in Westminster Abbey, where a monument was erected to his memory at the national expense. There is also a monument in Guildhall, London.

He was a powerful speaker, addicted to rhetorical flights, and a perfect master of dramatic expression.

Born at Boconnoc, Cornwall, 1708; died 1778.

PITT, WILLIAM, English statesman, was the second son of the preceding, by lady Hester Granville, daughter of earl Temple. His elementary education was principally conducted by the earl himself, whose favourite son he was, and who saw in him the seeds of that greatness which would confer additional glory on the name of Pitt. In 1773 he was sent to Pembroke Hall, Cambridge, where, "although he was little more than 14 years of age," says one of his tutors, "and had laboured under the disadvantage of frequent ill-health, his proficiency in the learned languages was probably greater than ever was acquired by any other person in such early youth." At Cambridge he proceeded to the degree of M.A.; and on leaving the university he was entered at Lincoln's Inn, and in three years was called to the bar. He went the western circuit once or twice, but had little practice. In 1780 he stood for the university of Cambridge, but was unsuccessful. By means, however, of sir James Lowther (afterwards earl of Lonsdale), he was returned to parliament for the borough of Appleby. As a senator he soon displayed his great oratorical talents in opposition to lord North and the American war. In 1782 he brought forward a motion for an inquiry into the state of the representation in parliament, which was rejected by a small majority. On the death of the marquis of Rockingham, lord Shelburne obtained the office of first lord of the Treasury, and Pitt was appointed chancellor of the exchequer, he being at that time in his 24th year. Peace with the Americans and with Spain and France was concluded by this administration, which soon gave way to what was called the Coalition ministry, formed by lord North and Mr. Fox, and their respective friends. But Mr. Fox's India Bill, which was carried in the Commons, occasioned another change; and, the ministers being deprived of their places in 1783, the important offices of first lord of the Treasury and chancellor of the Exchequer were conferred on Mr. Pitt, then only 24 years old, being the youngest statesman who has ever held such high offices in the country. In the following month he brought forward a new bill for the better government of India, which was rejected. On this the parliament was dissolved, and the premier, who was returned for the university of Cambridge, again brought forward his bill for the regulation of India, and carried it triumphantly in both houses. Soon after this a commercial treaty with France was entered into, the terms of which were highly advantageous to England. About this time also he adopted other beneficial measures relative to the finances, for extinguishing the national debt by a sinking fund; established a new constitution for the East-India Company, and passed acts for the relief of the Roman Catholics. During the king's illness, Pitt gained great popularity by taking constitutional ground, in strenuously maintaining, against Fox, the right of parliament, and not of the prince of Wales, to settle the regency. In 1800 Pitt effected the union of Ireland to Britain, and soon afterwards retired from office, but returned in 1804. He was surrounded with difficulties, as many of his former colleagues had joined the standard of opposition, and he might almost be said to have been left to wield the energies of the state alone. He effected another coalition, with Russia and Austria, against France, which failed. In the meantime, a gouty habit and unremitted mental exertions, together with a too free indulgence in wine, had completely undermined the constitution of this wonderful man, who succumbed to the vexation and pressure of troubles induced by the non-success of the European coalition against France, and the amazing successes of Napoleon. His character, if it lacked the fire and vigour of his father, was nevertheless noble and imposing. All that his greatest enemies, even in his own time, could pretend to charge him with, was ambition; while they were compelled to allow him the merit of vigorous application to business, uncommon eloquence, profound financial wisdom, and, above all, perfect disinterestedness. Though he had remained in power during so many years, he died in debt, which the parliament voted £40,000 to discharge. His remains were also interred at the public expense, in the same vault with his father. Besides his official situations, he was warden of the Cinque Ports, governor of the Charter-house, master of the Trinity-house, and high steward of the university of Cambridge. He was buried in Westminster Abbey.

Born at Hayes, Kent, 1759; died at Putney, 1806.

PITT, a county of North Carolina, United States. Area, 700 square miles. Pop. 21,794, nearly half being coloured. The capital is Greenville.

PITT'S ARCHIPELAGO, a number of islands, in the North Pacific Ocean, belonging to British Armenia. The largest, Pitt's Island, about 80 miles long and 30 broad, is separated from the mainland by a very narrow channel. Lat. 53° 28′ N. Lon. 129° 48′ W.

PITTACUS, pit'-tă-kus, one of the so-named seven sages of Greece, who was elected sovereign of Mitylene for having defeated the Athenians. Pittacus governed as a philosopher, and formed a code of laws in verse, that they might be the more easily remembered. After this he resigned his dignity, and when a grant of land was offered him, he refused it, saying, "It is more pleasing to convince my country of my disinterestedness than to possess great riches."

Born at Mitylene, island of Lesbos, about 652 B.C.; died 569 B.C.

PITTSBURG, pits'-berg, a city of the United States, and capital of Alleghany county, Pennsylvania, at the confluence of the Alleghany and Monongahela rivers, which here form the Ohio. It contains 141 churches, a very large Roman Catholic cathedral, a court-house, a United States arsenal, colleges and schools, and a state penitentiary. The surrounding country is one bed of bituminous coal, and also abounds in iron-ore and various mineral and vegetable productions. Nine important lines of railway meet here. Manf. Iron (very extensive), steam-engines, machinery, cutlery, glass, cotton, leather, paints, and drugs. Ship-building is carried on on a large scale. Pop. 156,500, about 30,000 being foreigners.—The city was chartered in 1816.

PITTSFIELD, pits'-feeld, a town of Massachusetts, United States, at the confluence of the Pontoosac and Housatonic, 120 miles W. of Boston. It is beautifully situated, and there are many fine buildings. Manf. Cotton and woollens, metallic castings, machinery, carriages, harness, furniture, fire-arms, and musical instruments. The town, from its beautiful situation, is a favourite summer resort. Pop. 13,364.

PITTSYLVANIA, a county of Virginia, United States. Area, 900 square miles. Pop. 52,589, half being coloured. The capital is Pittsylvania Court House.

PIURA, pe'-oo-ra, a province of Peru, to the south-east of the Bay of Guayaquil. It is very fertile, and maize, cotton, sugar, and many European fruits are cultivated. Area, 13,931. Pop. 135,502.

PIURA, capital of the above province, on a river of the same name, 240 miles N.W. of Truxillo. A considerable trade in the produce of the province is carried on.

PIUS I., pi'-us, pope, succeeded Hyginus in 142, and condemned the heresy of Valentinian.
Born in Anquileia, 90; died 157.

PIUS II. (ÆNEAS SYLVIUS PICCOLOMINI), In 1431 he became secretary to Cardinal Capranica, at the council of Basil, and acted in the same capacity to Cardinal Albergotti, who sent him to Scotland to negotiate a peace between England and that country. He afterwards displayed great talents at the council of Basil, which he defended against the pope. The emperor Frederick III., who awarded him the poetic crown, employed him in several embassies. In 1456 he obtained a cardinalship, and, two years later, was elected pope. He began his pontificate by annulling all that he had maintained at the council of Basil; issuing a bull, in which he declared void all appeals from the papal decree to a general council. Pius was about to dispatch a fleet against the Turks when his death took place. He was one of the most eminent scholars of his age, and his principal works are,—"Memoir of the Council of Basil;" "History of the Bohemians;" "On Cosmography;" "Treatise on Education;" "Poem on the Crucifixion;" "Letters;" a romance, entitled "Euryalus and Lucretia;" Memoir of his own life.
Born at Corsignano, Sienna, 1405; died at Ancona, 1464.

PIUS III. (FRANCESCO PICCOLOMINI) was nephew to the preceding pontiff. He was elected pope in 1503, but died in less than a month afterwards.
Died 1503.

PIUS IV. (GIANANGELO DE MEDICI). He rose by merit to several high employments, and, in 1549, obtained the cardinalship, and, on the death of Paul IV., in 1560, was elected pope. He confirmed the decrees of the council of Trent, after the closing of that assembly in 1563. In the following year a conspiracy was formed against his life by Benedict Accolti and others, who were executed. The pope was not of the celebrated Medici family of Florence. He issued the well-known Tridentine Creed, an embodiment of the doctrines defined in the Council of Trent.
Born at Milan, 1499; died 1565.

PIUS V. ST. (MICHELE GHISLERI), succeeded the preceding in 1566. He was the son of poor parents, and at an early age became a Dominican. Paul IV. created him bishop of Sutri, and cardinal and inquisitor-general in the Milanese, where he displayed great bigotry and cruelty. After his election to the papal chair he issued a bull, in which the jurisdiction of the Roman church was sought to be carried to an extravagant pitch. He enacted severe laws for the regulation of public morals, but under his government the Inquisition exercised a terrible severity. Pius made war against the Turks, which produced the famous battle of Lepanto, wherein the latter were defeated. He was canonized in 1712.
Born near Alessandria, 1504; died 1572.

PIUS VI. (GIOVANNI ANGELO BRASCHI), was secretary to Benedict XIV., who created him treasurer of the apostolic chamber, and Clement XIV. conferred on him the cardinalship. He succeeded that pontiff in 1775. Shortly after his election he wrought some important reforms in the public treasury, and completed the magnificent museum in the Vatican, which he filled with monuments, vases, medals, and other ancient remains found in the Ecclesiastical States. But the greatest act of his pontificate was the draining of the Pontine Marshes, a project which had baffled several of the Roman emperors and many of the popes. Besides this great enterprise, this pontiff built several handsome edifices at Rome, and founded some hospitals. The emperor Joseph II. having suppressed several monasteries, and decreed all the religious orders in his dominions free from papal jurisdiction, Pius, apprehensive of the consequences of this revolution to the Holy See, went in person to Vienna in 1782; but, though he was honourably received, his efforts could not divert the emperor from his designs. On his return to Rome, the pope became embroiled with the courts of Naples, Modena, and Venice, chiefly with regard to the right of presenting to ecclesiastical benefices. The French revolution was, however, fraught with more serious consequence to the papal see. Upon a mere pretext, the French Convention ordered General Bonaparte to enter the Ecclesiastical territory, when, having taken several places, he compelled the pope to purchase peace by a contribution of thirty millions of livres (£1,200,000), and the delivering up of the finest works of painting and sculpture. In 1797 a band of French revolutionists excited a tumult at Rome, and, being driven to the house of the French ambassador, were there headed by General Duphot, who, together with several of the French, was slain. Upon this, General Berthier entered Italy, and made the pope prisoner in his capital, which was plundered. The venerable pontiff was carried away by the victors, and hurried over the Alps to Valence, where he died. His body was interred in a private manner; but, in 1802, it was taken up and conveyed to Rome, where it was interred with great pomp.
Born at Cesena, in the Papal States, 1747; died 1799.

PIUS VII. (GREGORIO BARNABA LUIGI CHIARAMONTI) was at first a Benedictine monk, but became, at the age of 40 years, bishop of Tivoli. In 1785 he was created a cardinal, and, after the death of Pius VI., was elected to the papal chair, in 1800. In the following year he entered Rome, which city was shortly afterwards evacuated by the French. The relations between Pius VII. and Bonaparte, then first consul, were at the outset of a sufficiently cordial nature. A concordat was signed between the republic and Rome, and, in 1804, Pius repaired to Paris, where, in the cathedral of Notre Dame, he took part in the ceremony of the coronation of Napoleon, who, however, placed the crown on his own head, and afterwards on that of Josephine. The misfortunes of the pope commenced, however, in the following year. The emperor suddenly sent his troops to Ancona in 1805, and, shortly afterwards, Civita Vecchia was seized. Napoleon also wished Pius to annul the marriage between his brother Jerome and Miss Paterson, an American Protestant lady, which the pope refused. (See BONAPARTE, Jerome.) Other grounds of quarrel were found by the emperor, and in the following year a French force took possession of Rome, and, shortly afterwards, the finest provinces of the papal territory were united to the kingdom of Italy. After remaining some time as a prisoner in his palace on the Quirinal, Pius was suddenly taken off, under French escort, to Grenoble; whence he was conveyed to Sarona, in the Riviera of Genoa. In 1812 he was taken to Fontainebleau, but still remained obdurate, and refused to sanction Napoleon's separation from Josephine. The defeat of the French in Germany, as well as the previous disaster in Russia, caused Napoleon to give way before his passive but inflexible opponent. In 1814 he sent him back to Italy; but Pius, instead of proceeding to Rome, stopped at Cesena, his native town. Upon the abdication of Napoleon, Pius proceeded to Rome, where he spent the remainder of his life, engaged in reforming the civil institutions of his dominions. He created a new police, abolished torture and the punishment of death for offences against religion, extirpated the banditti of the Campagna, and put an end to several vexatious feudal imposts. His death was caused by an accidental fall, which broke his thigh.

Born at Cesena, 1742; died at Rome, 1823.

PIUS VIII. (FRANCESCO XAVIER CASTIGLIONI) became pope in succession to Leo XII., in 1829. His pontificate lasted only one year.

Born 1761; died 1830.

PIUS IX. (GIOVANNI MARIA MASTAI-FERRETTI) became pope in succession to Gregory XVI., in 1846. Born of a noble Italian family, his youth was characterized by mildness and a charitable disposition. In his 18th year he went to Rome, with the intention of entering the body-guard of the pope; but having been seized by an epileptic attack, he, upon recovering, resolved to devote himself to the service of the Church. After completing his studies at the college of Volterra, he was ordained a priest, and dispatched upon a mission to Chili, in 1823. Upon his return, two years later, he became president of the hospital of St. Michael. In 1829 his zeal was rewarded by an appointment to the archbishopric of Spoleto, from which he was, in 1832, translated to Imola: finally he became cardinal, under Gregory XVI., in 1840. Upon the death of Gregory, in 1846, the conciliatory and pious character of Cardinal Ferretti gained him the tiara. The first measures of the new pontiff were of a popular and liberal character: he granted to political offenders a general and unconditional amnesty; reformed civil abuses, and lightened the burthens of his people to a very considerable extent. But the spirit of republicanism, which awoke at Paris in 1848, spread throughout Europe; and at Rome, as elsewhere, the people rose against their ruler. A republic was proclaimed; and Pius IX., after remaining some time a prisoner in his palace, fled in disguise to Gaeta. He called upon the great Catholic powers of France, Austria, Spain, and Naples, to re-establish his authority. But, meanwhile, Mazzini had arrived at Rome, where he was proclaimed triumvir. In 1849 a French army marched upon Rome, and, after an attack upon the city, which was gallantly defended by Garibaldi, succeeded in taking it. The restoration of Pius IX. was thus effected; not, however, without the permanent support of a French garrison. Several events in the life of Pope Pius will be remarked in history:—the promulgation of an edict by which a Roman Catholic hierarchy was re-established in England, and in consequence of which a bill was passed in the English houses of parliament forbidding papal bishops to hold ecclesiastical titles in England; the foundation of a college at Rome for the reception of clergymen of the church of England seeking to take orders in the Roman Catholic church; doctrinal decision as to immaculate conception; the convocation of the Vatican council in 1869; and the promulgation of the decree of papal infallibility. Since the official occupation of Rome as the capital of the new kingdom of Italy, Pius has lived entirely in the Vatican. He has held the pontificate for a longer period than any other pope.

PIUTE, pi-oo-te, a county of Utah Territory, United States. Area, 6,000 square miles. Pop. 1,651.

PIZARRO, FRANCISCO, pe-zar'-ro, a famous Spanish adventurer, who discovered and conquered Peru. He was the natural son of an officer, and was in his youth employed by his parent to tend pigs. He grew to manhood without being able either to read or write; but he had a bold and enterprising spirit, and the discovery of the New World opened to him sources of wealth and renown. After fourteen years of distinguished services, he joined Diego de Almagro in an expedition, the object of which was to explore the gold regions to the south of Panama. In 1524 he sailed from Panama with one ship, eighty men, and four horses, but with little result. Soon afterwards, however, he undertook a second expedition, during which he and his followers experienced every form of hardship, the country in which gold and silver abounded was found, and they returned to Panama laden with treasures. He then went to Spain, and obtained from Charles V. the title of governor and captain-general of the newly discovered country. With the assistance of Cortes, he equipped an expedition, with which he proceeded to Peru, where he surprised and captured several towns, and gained great booty. After founding a Spanish colony at the mouth of the river Piura, he proceeded inland to Caxamarca. A civil war was at that time raging in Peru, and the inca Atahualpa requested his aid against his brother Huascar. At Caxamarca the precious metals were used not only for ornaments, but for ordinary utensils; and the sight of so much wealth inflamed his cupidity to such a degree that he resolved to make himself master of Atahualpa's person. When the inca came to Pizarro's quarters, he was treacherously seized, and confined in a room 22 feet long by 16 feet broad. Shortly afterwards, Atahualpa offered to fill this apartment with gold as high as the Spanish adventurer could reach, if he would set him free. The offer was instantly accepted, and, although the impatience of the Spaniards was too great to allow of all the promised treasure being collected, the hoard was so great that after a fifth part had been reserved for the crown, and another portion for Almagro's party, Pizarro and his companions had 1,528,500 ounces to divide among them. After wringing all that he could from the unfortunate Atahualpa, Pizarro inhumanly put him to death in 1533, and then proceeded to capture the city of Cuzco, where great treasure was taken. In 1534, Ferdinand, one of Pizarro's brothers, laid the royal share at the feet of Charles V.; whereupon the Spanish leader was confirmed in his power, while to Almagro, his rival, was granted all the country that might be conquered southward of Pizarro's vice-royalty. Whilst Pizarro was engaged in settling the government of Peru, Almagro proceeded to conquer Chili. In 1536, the Peruvians having risen against the Spaniards, Almagro marched to their relief; but after defeating the insurgent natives, he took prisoners Pizarro's brothers. Almagro himself subsequently fell into the hands of his more enterprising rival, by whom he was brought to trial and executed, in 1538. Thus left alone in power, Pizarro began to rule in a despotic and partial manner; whereat many of the Spanish adventurers became alienated, and attached themselves to Almagro's son. In 1541 a conspiracy was formed against him, he was surprised during the hour of mid-day, set upon, and, after a most determined resistance, himself and a few devoted followers were slain.

Born at Truxillo, 1471; died 1541.

PIZARRO, GONSALVO, one of the brothers of the preceding, penetrated from Quito, across the Andes, enduring fearful privations. (See ORELLANO.) He was acting as governor of Quito at the date of Pizarro's murder, and subsequently succeeded in gaining supreme power throughout Peru. After retaining this position during three years, he was, in 1548, defeated and taken prisoner by Guasca, whom Charles V. had created viceroy. He was brought to trial, condemned as a rebel, and executed almost immediately afterwards.

Died 1548.

PIZARRO, HERNANDO, elder brother of the two preceding; took an important share in the conquest of Peru, and in 1534 took to Spain the royal share of the booty, for which he was made a knight of Santiago. He made a second expedition, but on his return was imprisoned for 20 years, and not liberated till 1560, when he was 95 years old.

Born 1465; died 1565.

PIZZI, JOACHIM, pit'-se, an Italian poet, who, early in life, while a student of the Jesuits' college at Rome, evinced the possession of a poetical genius by the production of several fine poems. His principal works were, "Discourse on Tragic and Comic Poetry," "Dissertation on an Antique Cameo," "The Vision of Eden," a poem, and the "Triumph of Poetry."

Born at Rome, 1716; died at the same city, 1790.

PIZZO, pit'-so, a town and seaport of Italy, province of Calanzaro, on the Gulf of Santa Eufemia, 6 miles N.E. of Monteleone. There is a harbour, and many of the inhabitants are engaged in tunny fishing. Pop. 6,500.—Here Murat, the ex-king of Naples, was shot in 1815.

PLACENCIA. (See PLASENCIA.)

PLACENTIA. (See PIACENZA.)

PLACENTIA BAY, plai-sen'-shi-a, a spacious bay on the south coast of Newfoundland. It is 62 miles long and 42 miles broad at its entrance. There are many islands and several good harbours.

PLACENTIUS, JOHN LEO, plai-sen'-shi-us, a learned Dominican monk, who wrote a history of the bishops of Tongres and Liége, and a poem, entitled "Pugna Porcorum," in which every word begins with P.

Born near Liége, about 1480; died about 1548.

PLACER, plai-ser, a county of California, United States. Area, 1,386 square miles. Pop. 14,232, including some Chinese. The capital is Auburn.

PLANCHE, JAMES ROBINSON, plan'-shai, a modern English writer and dramatist, descended from a French family which came to England on the revocation of the edict of Nantes, in 1685. Early in life he wrote a burlesque, entitled "Amoroso, King of Little Britain," for a private performance, which was afterwards accepted by the committee of management of Drury-lane theatre, where it was produced with complete success in 1818. This unexpected piece of good fortune determined the young author to apply himself to dramatic writing; and, during the subsequent forty years, he wrote about two hundred plays, including many of the most attractive musical burlesques ever produced, and the libretti of operas. He has also adapted several of the plays of the old dramatists, and the accuracy of costumes adopted on the modern stage is greatly due to his exertions. For the series called the "Library of Entertaining Knowledge," he wrote a "History of British Costume;" the articles on costume in Knight's "Pictorial Shakespeare," as well as the "Costume and Furniture" in the "Pictorial History of England" were also from his pen. He became a member of the Society of Antiquaries in 1830, but retired from it in 1852. A course of travel in the north of Europe led to his producing "Lays and Legends of the Rhine," and "Descent of the Danube." Not the least valuable of his many excellent efforts was his translation of the Fairy Tales of the Countess D'Aulnoy, Perrault, and others. In 1854 he received the appointment of Rouge Croix, Pursuivant of Arms, for the duties of which office he had previously shown himself fitted, by his works entitled "Regal Records," and "The Pursuivant of Arms; or, Heraldry founded upon Truth."

Born in London, 1796.

PLANTADE, CHRISTOPHE HENRI, plan'-tad, a French musical composer, who wrote, among other operas, "Zoe" and "Palma."

Born at Pontoise, 1768; died 1839.

PLANTAGENET, plan-taj'-e-net, the surname of a long line of English kings, who were of French origin on the paternal side, Henry II. of England, the first of the line, having been the son of Geoffrey V., duke of Anjou, and of Matilda, daughter of Henry I. The duke of Anjou was so named because he usually wore a sprig of broom, —in Latin planta genista, in French plante genêt, —in his cap. (See HENRY II., III., IV., V., and VI.; RICHARD I., II., and III.; EDWARD I., II., III., IV. and V.; and JOHN.)

PLANTIN, CHRISTOPH, plan'-tin, a French printer, who settled in Antwerp, in 1555, and became distinguished for the beauty and correctness of his productions. His editions are extremely valuable. His chief work was a polyglot Bible, executed by order of Philip II. of Spain.

Born near Tours, 1514; died at Antwerp, 1589.

PLANUDES, MAXIMUS, pla-nu'-dees, a monk of Constantinople, who was sent by the emperor Andronicus as ambassador to Venice, where he became so partial to the Latin church, that on his return he was imprisoned. To recover his liberty, he wrote against that church. He was the author of a life of Æsop, full of romantic tales and gross anachronisms. He also published a collection of Greek epigrams, under the title of "Anthologia."

PLASENCIA, plai-sen'-shi-a, an ancient town of Spain, 43 miles N.E. of Caceres, on the Jerta. There are the remains of an old castle, surrounded by extensive walls in a state of decay. The cathedral, in the Gothic style, and highly decorated, begun in 1498, contains many interesting tombs. There are seven other churches, an episcopal and other palaces. Manf. Cotton, wool, and hemp, hats, and leather. Pop. 6,000.

PLASSEY, or PLASSY, plas'-se, a small town of British India, province of Bengal, on the Baggarutty river, 84 miles N. of Calcutta. It is memorable for the victory obtained here in 1757 by Clive, which established British supremacy in India.

PLATA, RIO DE LA, re'-o dai la pla'-ta, a river of South America, one of the largest in the world. It is, properly speaking, a continuation of the Paraquay, which has its sources about the 13th degree of S. lat., and, flowing through a flat country, is joined by the Parana, and by a variety of smaller streams, the Parana being joined by the Uruguay. They together expand into the Plata; and it is to this vast estuary that the appelation of the Rio de la Plata properly applies. It flows into the ocean, and is without parallel in the rest of the world for width and magnificence, being 140 miles broad at its mouth, from Moldonado on one side to Cape St. Anthony on the other. At Buenos Ayres, 200 miles from the mouth, it is about 30 miles broad. The whole length is about 200 miles.

PLATA, LA. (See ARGENTINE REPUBLIC.)

PLATINA, pla-te'-na (Bartholomew Sacchi), a learned Italian historian, who, on going to Rome, was patronised by Cardinal Bessarion, by whose means he was appointed apostolical abbreviator; of which post he was deprived by Paul II. Platina wrote a letter to that pontiff, who sent him to prison and caused him to be tortured. Subsequently, Sixtus IV. made him librarian of the Vatican. He was the author of a "History of the Popes;" a "History of Mantua;" the "Life of Nerio Capponi;" and other works.

Born at Piadena, near Mantua, 1421; died at Rome, 1481.

PLATO, plai'-to, Greek philosopher. His father was Ariston, the son of Aristocles; through whom he was connected with the descendants of Codrus, one of the ancient kings of Athens; on his mother's side he was descended from Solon. His first master was Dionysius the grammarian; and afterwards he received instructions in gymnastic exercises from Ariston, an Argive wrestler, who, according to some accounts, gave him the name of Plato, because of the broadness of his shoulders and the robustness of his person. His former name was Aristocles, which was that of his grandfather. He next applied to the study of music and poetry, and composed some pieces intended for the Olympic exercises; but on hearing Socrates deliver a long discourse, he burnt them, and became his disciple. Some of his epigrams, however, are still preserved. He was a disciple of Socrates for about ten years; and, upon his death, in 399, Plato left Athens, and travelled into different countries in search of knowledge. At Cyrene he studied geometry and other branches of mathematics; thence he went into Egypt, where, during thirteen years, he sought to learn all that the priests could teach him. He next visited Italy, and settled at Tarentum, where he formed an intimacy with Eurytus and Archytas. He afterwards made a voyage to Sicily, to observe the wonders of that island, particularly Mount Ætna. In Sicily he became acquainted with Dionysius, tyrant of Syracuse, whom he was unfortunate enough to offend, and who induced the Spartan ambassador, in whose vessel Plato was returning home, to sell him for a slave at Ægina; but his purchaser having given him his freedom, he repaired to Athens, where he commenced teaching in the garden of the Academeia; whence his philosophy was called the Academic. At the request of Dion, uncle of Dionysius the Younger, he made a second voyage to Sicily, where he was received with great honour; but finding that his advice was not heeded by the youthful tyrant, who chose rather to imitate his father, he returned to Athens, where he gained a number of followers. After making a third journey to Syracuse, he settled in his native city, and there spent the remaining years of his life in literary and philosophical pursuits. The philosophy of Plato is so sublime, his morality so pure, and his views of the Divine Being and a future state so clear, that he has been thought to have had a knowledge of the Mosaic writings; a supposition which, considering his long residence in Egypt, is not improbable. His greatest works are the "Phædo," in the dialogue form, in which is a singularly powerful and pathetic description of the last hours of Socrates; the "Republic," in which the highest principles of social morality are maintained; and "Timæus," a summary of scientific philosophy as known in his time.

Born at Athens, 429 B.C.; died 347 B.C.

PLATOFF, MATVEI IVANOVITCH, COUNT, pla'-tof, hetman of the Cossacks, served in the Russian campaign of 1806-7 against the French, and subsequently defeated the Turks in several engagements in Moldavia. He was opposed to Napoleon, during the advance of the grand army into Russia, in 1812. He experienced several defeats, particularly at Grodno; but in the subsequent retreat of the French, his Cossacks proved as destructive as a plague to the fugitives. In the campaigns of 1814-15 he signalized himself chiefly by allowing his Cossacks to plunder without restraint. He, nevertheless, received an enthusiastic reception when he visited Paris and London in company with Marshal Blucher, and he was presented in this country with a sword of honour. The emperor of Russia gave him the title of Count.

Born 1757; died 1818.

PLATTE, plat, a county of Missouri, United States. Area, 416 square miles. Pop. 18,000. The capital is Platte City.

PLATTE, a county of Nebraska, United States. Area, 700 square miles. Pop. 9,511. The capital is Columbus.

PLATTE LA, a large river of the United States, rising in the Rocky Mountains in two branches, one on the frontiers of Oregon, the other on the frontiers of Utah, 250 miles apart; and, after a course of 1,600 miles, joining the Missouri. The principal affluents are the Elk-horn and Loup Fork.

PLATTEN SEE. (See BALATON.)

PLATTSBURG, plats'-boorg, capital of Clinton county, New York, United States, on the west shore of Lake Champlain, at the mouth of the Saranac, which furnishes valuable water power. It is handsomely laid out, and contains a court-house, custom-house, academy, lyceum, and six churches. Pop. 5,245

PLAUEN, plou'-en, a town of Saxony, on the White Elster, 60 miles S. of Leipsic. Manf. Cotton goods, muslin, cambric, jaconet, and embroidered fabrics, paper, leather. Pop. 35,082.

PLAUTUS, TITUS MACCIUS, plaw'-tus, a Latin comic dramatist. He was a man of low birth, but received a good education, and was well acquainted with Latin and Greek literature. He settled at Rome, where his plays were performed with great applause. There is more intrigue and plot in his pieces than in those of Terence; the humour, also, is extremely natural and entertaining. Only 20 are extant, but it is known that he wrote about 130.

Born at Sarsina, in Umbria, about 254 B.C.; died 184 B.C.

PLAYFAIR, JOHN, plaï'-fair, an eminent Scotch mathematician, who, in his eighteenth year, became a candidate for the professorship of mathematics at the Marischal College, Aberdeen, and was only excelled by two older men; and while yet a student discharged the duties of professor of natural philosophy during the illness of the professor. At the age of 25 he entered the ministry, and succeeded his father in the parish of Liff and Benvie. In 1785 he was appointed joint professor of mathematics in the university of Edinburgh, and, in 1805, succeeded to the chair of natural philosophy at the same seat of learning. He was a supporter of Dr. Hutton's geological theories, and, in 1802, published "Illustrations of the Huttonian Theory of the Earth," an improved edition of which he contemplated, and, with that view, made a geological tour in Italy, France, and Switzerland. He published "Outlines of Natural Philosophy" and "Elements of Geometry." To the "Edinburgh Review" he contributed many articles on astronomical and mathematical subjects, as well as several to the "Encyclopædia Britannica."

Born at Benvie, Forfarshire, 1748; died at Edinburgh, 1819.

PLAYFAIR, LYON, modern chemist, who was sent from Bengal, in the East Indies, to receive his education at the university of St. Andrew's, and having shown a taste for chemical science, was, in 1834, placed under Professor Graham at Glasgow. In the following year he went to India, but shortly afterwards returned to Europe, and having resumed his chemical studies, under his former teacher, at University College, London, passed to the celebrated laboratory at Giessen, in 1838. Under Liebig he made great progress in organic chemistry, and, after taking the degree of doctor of philosophy at the university of Giessen, he retired to London, where he produced some translations of the great German chemist's Reports on the Progress of Organic Chemistry. In 1843 he became professor of chemistry in the Royal Institution of Manchester, and in that position became very popular. Nominated a member of the Health of Towns Commission, he drew up several of the reports of that body. His next appointment was as chemist to the Museum of Economic Geology. He was one of the most active commissioners of the Great Exhibition of 1851, for his services was created a companion of the Bath, and was further rewarded by Prince Albert with the appointment of gentleman usher in his household. He subsequently became secretary of the department of science and art. In 1873 he was appointed postmaster-general, but only held the office for a short time in consequence of the resignation of the Gladstone administration.

Born in Bengal, 1819.

PLEASANTS, ples'-ants, a county of West Virginia, United States. Area, 280 square miles. Pop., 6,256. The capital is St. Mary's.

PLEIADES, plï'-a-dees, a name given in Greek mythology to seven of the daughters of Atlas and Pleione, one of the Oceanides. They were placed in the heavens after death, where they formed a constellation called Pleiades. Their names were Alcyone, Merope, Maia, Electra, Tayeta, Sterope, and Celeno. They are sometimes called Atlantides, from their father, or Hesperides, from the gardens of that name, which belonged to Atlas.

PLESCHEN, plesch'-en, a town of Prussia, province of Posen, 52 miles S.E. of the town of that name. Manf. Woollens, potash, and tobacco. There is a trade in horses and cattle. Pop. 6,200.

PLEYEL, IGNAS, plï'-el, a German musical composer, who studied under Vanhall and Haydn, and, during an extensive tour, in Italy. In 1783 he received the appointment of chapel-master at Strasburg cathedral, and while holding that office composed a number of masses and other pieces of sacred music. He was, in 1791, invited to London, where he was so liberally rewarded for his efforts that he was enabled to purchase an estate near Strasburg. During the French revolution he narrowly escaped the guillotine by composing a musical drama which pleased the people. He afterwards adopted the trade of music publisher and pianoforte manufacturer. After acquiring a fortune in that career, he retired to an estate near Paris.

Born at Rupperstahl, near Vienna, 1757; died near Paris, 1831.

PLINY, CAIUS PLINIUS SECUNDUS, plin'-e, called the Elder, was of an illustrious family, and in his youth bore arms with reputation; after which he was admitted to the college of augurs. He began a history of the German wars, and studied jurisprudence. Vespasian appointed him procurator of Spain, in which office he conducted himself with strict integrity, devoting the day to public affairs, and the night to study. Being at Misenium, in the Gulf of Naples, with a fleet which he commanded, he was surprised at an extraordinary cloud issuing from Vesuvius. He immediately put to sea, and landed at the foot of the mountain to ascertain the cause of the phenomenon; but the sulphureous exhalation from the burning lava overcame him, and he was suffocated. Of all the works of Pliny none remains but his Natural History, which, says Cuvier, "is one of the most precious monuments left us by antiquity." It is a perfect encyclopædia of ancient history, and is divided into 37 books, treating of astronomy, meteorology, the theory of the earth, geography, botany, zoology, agriculture, medicine, mineralogy, sculpture, painting, &c.

Born 23; died 79.

PLINY THE YOUNGER, CAIUS PLINIUS CÆCILIUS SECUNDUS, was the nephew of the preceding, who adopted him as his son and heir. He wrote a Greek tragedy at the age of 13, had Quintilian for his master, and advanced so rapidly, that at the age of 19 he pleaded in the forum with an eloquence equal to that of the greatest orators of his time. When Trajan was elevated to the throne, he conferred the consular dignity on Pliny, who, at the desire of the senate, pronounced that fine oration which is extant, entitled the "Panegyric on Trajan." He was some time after appointed governor of Pontus and Bithynia, where he abolished the arbitrary imposts and stopped the persecution of the Christians, of whom he gave a liberal account to the emperor. After his return to Rome, he settled at Comum, his native place, where he established an academy and library for young men who had not the means of education. Pliny was a liberal patron of men of virtue and learning. Of the many works of this writer, only his Epistles and "Panegyric on Trajan" remain. He also wrote the History of his own Times, of which Tacitus speaks in high terms.

Born at Comum, about 62; died 116.

PLOCK. (See PLONSK.)

PLOERMEL, plo'-er-mel, a town of France, department Morbihan, 25 miles N.E. of Vannes. There are a church, built in the 12th century, a college, and hospital. Recently a supposed appearance of the Virgin has attracted vast concourses of Roman Catholic pilgrims to the town. It is also much resorted to by invalids, on account of the salubrity of the climate. Pop. 6,000.

PLOMBIÈRES, plom-be-air', a town of France, department Vosges, in a mountainous district, 15 miles S. of Epinal. It has thermal medicinal springs which are much resorted to. Pop. 1,600 residents.

PLON, plawng, the prefix of numerous places in Brittany, France, none of them with a population above 7,000.

PLONSK, or PLOCK, plonsk, a town of Poland, capital of the government of the same name. Pop. of the gov., 538,141; of the town, 22,092.

PLOT, ROBERT, plot, an English antiquary and naturalist, who became a secretary to the Royal Society in 1682. He was appointed first keeper of the Ashmolean Museum, and professor of chemistry at Oxford. He was also nominated historiographer to the king, and Mowbray herald extraordinary. His works are, the Natural Histories of Oxfordshire and Staffordshire, papers in the "Philosophical Transactions," and an essay on the Origin of Springs, in Latin.

Born in Kent, 1641; died 1696.

PLOTINUS, plo-ti'-nus, the most celebrated of the neo-Platonic philosophers. After studying for eleven years under Ammonius, he travelled into Persia and India, where he acquired a great store of knowledge. He served in the army under Gordian; but, when that emperor was slain, Plotinus effected his escape, and went to Rome, where he opened a school of philosophy, and had many disciples. His philosophy was so ideal in character that he despised his body, almost starving himself, refusing to divulge his parentage, or to take notice, in the manner of his time, of his birthday. So great was his reputation for virtue that parents entrusted their children to him, and he was popularly supposed to have the power of working miracles. At the age of 60 he endeavoured to carry out the project of Plato and establish a commonwealth, but court influence was too strong.

Born at Lycopolis, Egypt, 205; died at Puteoli, 270.

PLOWDEN, EDMUND plou'-den, an English lawyer, who was educated at Cambridge, whence he removed to Oxford, where he took his degrees in physic, which profession he quitted for the law. His "Commentaries and Reports" are greatly esteemed. They consist of a collection of cases from Edward VI. to the middle of the reign of Elizabeth.

Born at Shropshire, 1518; died 1584.

PLUMAS, plu-mas, a county of California, United States. Area, 2,736 square miles. Pop. 6,180. The capital is Quincy.

PLUNKET, WILLIAM CONYNGHAM, first lord, plun'-ket, an Irish lawyer and statesman, who, having distinguished himself by his oratorical talents while a student at Trinity College, Dublin, was returned to the Irish parliament through the interest of the earl of Charlemont. In 1787 he was called to the bar, and obtained such a large practice that, by the year 1807, he had acquired a fortune. In the same year he was returned to the British House of Commons, when he attached himself to the Whigs, and became a powerful orator of that party. In 1827 he was created lord chief justice of the Common Pleas in Ireland, and a peer of the United Kingdom. During the passage of the Roman Catholic Emancipation Bill he was the constant adviser of the duke of Wellington in the English House of Lords. In 1830 he became lord chancellor of Ireland, which post he retained until the year 1841. Lord Plunket's later years were spent apart from political life, in retirement at his estate in Ireland; he was a great and impassioned orator.

Born at Newtown, Cork, 1764; died near Bray, Ireland, 1854.

PLUNKET, OLIVER, archbishop of Armagh and Roman Catholic primate of Ireland, who was accused of having attempted to excite an insurrection of the Roman Catholics of Ireland against Charles II. On that charge he was condemned to death, and after execution his body was quartered.

Born 1616; died 1681.

PLUQUET, FRANÇOIS ANDRE ADRIEN, plu'-kai, a French writer, who entered into orders and obtained a canonry, which he quitted to assume the professorship of history at the College of France, in 1776. He belonged to the party of Fontanelle, Montesquieu, and Helvetius; and among other important works, wrote "An Examination of Fatalism," "Dictionary of Heresies," "On Sociability" (in this work he combated the opinion of Hobbes, and proved that man is beneficent and religious); "The Classical Books of the Empire of China," and "On Luxury."

Born at Bayeux, 1716; died at Paris, 1790.

PLUTARCH, plu'-tark, Greek biographer and moralist, who studied philosophy in the school of Ammonius, at Delphi. He resided at Rome, where he delivered lectures in Greek upon philosophy, and enjoyed the friendship of Lucan, the younger Pliny, Martial, and others. At an advanced age he retired to his native town. The time of his death is uncertain. The most celebrated of his works is his "Lives of Illustrious Men." His "Morals" contain many valuable observations and curious narratives.

Born at Chærones, Bœotia, 50; died 120.

PLUTO, ploo'-to, in Greek mythology son of Saturn and Ops, inherited his father's kingdom with his brothers, and received as his share the infernal regions. All the goddesses refused to marry him; but, upon seeing Proserpine, the daughter of Ceres, gathering flowers in the plains of Enna, in Sicily, he became enamoured of her, and immediately carried her away.

PLUTUS, ploo'-tus, was the god of riches in the Greek mythology. He was represented as blind, because he distributed riches indiscriminately; he was lame, because he came slowly and gradually; and he had wings, to intimate that he flew away with more velocity than he approached mankind.

PLUVINEL, ANTONY, ploo'-ve-nel, a French diplomatist. Henry IV. appointed him his grand equerry and chamberlain, and sent him ambassador to Holland. He wrote a treatise on the Art of Riding, and was the first who established riding-schools in France.

Born in Dauphiny, about 1550; died at Paris, 1620.

PLYMOUTH, plim'-outh, a seaport, market-town, parliamentary and municipal borough, and naval station of England, in Devonshire, 37 miles S.W. of Exeter. It is, on account of its harbour and docks, one of the most important maritime places in the kingdom, and is situate at the head of Plymouth Sound, between the rivers Plym and Tamar, at their confluence with the sea. The town stands on the eastern side of a peninsula inclosed between these two rivers, at the mouth of the Plym: and to the west are STONEHOUSE and DEVONPORT. The three places may be considered as one town, a continuous line of buildings leading from the one to the other. Of the public buildings, the most ancient is the parish church, St. Andrew's, which consists of a nave, side aisles, and chancels, with a tower, dating from 1470, at the west end ornamented with pinnacles. Charles Church commemorates Charles I., and was, on its completion in 1658, dedicated to St. Charles the Martyr, a saintly title not now used. There are also various places of public worship for different denominations, and many charitable institutions; consisting of almshouses, hospitals, schools, &c. An Albert memorial clock tower, 56 feet high, surmounted by a light iron spire, was erected in 1865. The other public buildings and establishments are, the guildhall, and law-courts (a new building opened in 1874), the Royal hotel, comprising a large inn, assembly rooms and theatre, rebuilt, after a fire, in 1863, the public library, post-office (on the model of an Italian temple), custom-house, exchange, and a market-place. The Western College, for the education of Congregational ministers, is a large handsome building, erected in 1861. The port and harbour of Plymouth is distinguished for its great extent and capacity, and the security which it affords in its different parts. It is capable of containing about 2,000 sail of shipping, and is, altogether, one of the finest harbours in the world, consisting of several divisions or harbours. Sutton Pool and Mill Bay immediately adjoin the town, being almost encircled by the buildings, and there lie the merchant vessels; Catwater Harbour is an extensive sheet of water, formed by the estuary of the Plym. The harbour or bay of Hamoaze is a magnificent basin at the mouth of the Tamar. At the mouth of these various harbours, the great bay of Plymouth Sound forms an excellent roadstead, which is rendered secure by the construction of a breakwater across its entrance. The harbour is defended by several works, raised on different points. Between Mill Bay and Sutton Pool is an eminence, the Hoe, running along the shore and commanding magnificent views. There is a noble esplanade, and at the eastern end is the citadel mounting 150 guns. In Mill Bay are the Great Western Docks, occupying 14 acres. They are 22 feet deep, and were constructed between 1855 and 1858. A tram line connects them with the termini of the South Devon, Tavistock, and Cornwall railway. The dockyard is at Devonport, and is one of the finest in the world. The victualling establishments of the dockyard are on a large scale, and the naval hospital is at Stonehouse. (See DEVONPORT and STONEHOUSE.) Manf. Sailcloth, ropes, glass, soap, starch, and sugar. A very large foreign and coasting trade is carried on. Pop. 75,096.—A station on the Great Western and London and South-Western railways. Lat. 50° 22′ N. Lon. 4° 10′ 2″ W.

PLYMOUTH, a county of Iowa, United States. Area, 850 square miles. Pop. 8,566. The chief place is Plymouth Centre.

PLYMOUTH, a county of Massachusetts, United States. Area, 700 square miles. Pop. 74,018. The capital is PLYMOUTH.

PLYMOUTH, a seaport, capital of Plymouth county, Massachusetts, 36 miles S.E. of Boston. This is the oldest town in New England, and was the landing place of the Pilgrim Fathers. A large granite rock at the water's edge is the place where they landed, and is covered with an ornamental canopy. A national monument commemorative of the event was completed in 1875. Pilgrim Hall contains many interesting monuments. Manf. Cordage, tools, nails, cotton duck, and ironware. There is a good harbour and a flourishing trade is carried on. The cod fishery is very productive. Pop. 7,300.

PLYMOUTH, NEW, or TARANAKI, a town of New Zealand, in the province of Taranaki, on the west coast of North Island, 120 miles S. of Auckland. The town is picturesquely situated on the sea shore, and the public buildings are good. There are a large church, and chapels for Dissenters and Roman Catholics. The roadstead is much exposed, and large vessels cannot come within a mile of the shore. Along the beach, extending for many miles, is ironsand, from which good cutlery has been manufactured. The surrounding district is of great fertility. The town was founded in 1840 by emigrants from the English counties of Devon and Cornwall. Pop. 4,000.

PLYMOUTH SOUND, an inlet of the English Channel, between the counties of Devon and Cornwall. It forms an admirable naval harbour by the construction of the Plymouth breakwater, a granite and marble structure very nearly a mile in length, completed in 1861, at a cost of £1,500,000. On the west side of the Sound is Cawsand Bay, and near it Mount Edgecombe Park, a beautiful estate. At the mouth of the Tamar is the small island of St. Nicholas, or Drake's Island, a pyramidal rock, strongly fortified. The Sound is considered to be the most beautiful estuary on the English coast.

PO, po, the largest river of Italy, rising in the Cottian Alps, in two springs on the north and south of Monte Viso, near the French frontier, flowing north-east to Turin, and holding an easterly course until it discharges itself by a number of mouths into the Adriatic, about 30 miles from Venice. Its estimated length is about 450 miles, nearly 400 of which are navigable, and drains an area of 40,000 square miles. The chief affluents on the left bank are the Dora Ripaira, Dora Baltea, Sesia, Ticino, Adda, Oglio, and Mincio; on the right bank the Tamaro, Bormida, Trebba, Taro, Parma, Enza, Secchia, and Panaro. The chief branches of the delta of the river are the Po della Maestra on the north and the Po di Primaro on the south. To the north of the latter is the extensive marsh known as the Valli de Comacchio.

POCAHONTAS, po-ka-hon'-tas, an Indian girl of Virginia, America, who has been until recently considered as a remarkable heroine. An Englishman, captain John Smith, who figures in the early history of Virginia, related a romantic story of his life being saved by the intercession of the "princess" Pocahontas, with her father, a powerful Indian chief; but she appears to have been a child belonging to some vagrant Indians, who hung about the English settlement. When she grew up she lived for a time with a captain Cookham, and afterwards married an Englishman named John Rolfe, who was already a married man. The governor of the colony, sir Thomas Dale, sent her to England as an Indian princess, with a view of exciting interest respecting the colony. She appeared at the court of James I., and was for a time an object of considerable curiosity. Having given birth to a son, she died young.

Born in Virginia, 1595; died at Gravesend, 1616.

POCAHONTAS, a county of Iowa, United States. Area, 625 square miles. Pop. 3,713. The capital is Rolfe.

POCAHONTAS, a county of West Virginia, United States. Area, 710 square miles. Pop. 5,591. The capital is Huntersville.

POCOCK, EDWARD, po'-kok, a learned English divine and orientalist, who was educated at Oxford, and, having entered into orders, was appointed chaplain to the English factory at Aleppo. While there he improved himself in the Hebrew, Syriac, Arabic, and Ethiopic languages, which he had before studied at the university. He was also employed by archbishop Laud in purchasing ancient manuscripts and coins; and that prelate having founded an Arabic lecture at Oxford, appointed Mr. Pocock the first professor. He returned home in 1636; but afterwards made another voyage to the East, and remained there four years. In 1648 he was nominated to the Hebrew professorship, with the prebend of Christchurch annexed; he published in the same year his "Specimen Historiæ Arabum." In 1652 he was one of those concerned in preparing the intended edition of the polyglot Bible. His principal works were,—"Porta Moses; or, the six Prefatory Discourses of Moses Maimonides;" "The Annals of Eutychius;" "Abul Ferajii Historia Dynastarum;" "Commentaries on Micah, Malachi, Hosea, and Joel;" a Syriac version of the second epistle of St. Peter, the second and third of John, and that of Jude.

Born at Oxford, 1604; died 1691.

POCOCKE, RICHARD, an eminent English prelate, who, after taking his doctor's degree in laws, at Oxford, in 1733, went to the East, where he travelled during five years. On his return to England, he became chaplain to lord Chesterfield, and was afterwards promoted to the bishopric of Ossory, whence he was translated to Meath in 1765. His "Eastern Travels" are valuable.

Born at Southampton, 1704; died 1765.

PODGORITZA, pod-go-rits'-a, a fortified town of European Turkey, in Albania, 35 miles N. of Scutari. Pop. 6,000, chiefly Mahommedans.

PODIEBRAD, a town of the Austrian empire, in Bohemia, on the right bank of the Elbe, 31 miles E. of Prague. There is an old castle, and the river is crossed by a chain bridge. Pop. 3,400.

PODIEBRAD, GEORGE BOCZKO, OF, pod'-e-brad, a powerful Bohemian noble, who attached himself to the Hussite party, who, on the death of king Sigismund, offered the crown of Bohemia to Casimir, king of Poland, and so became involved in war with Albrecht V. of Austria, whom he defeated. He was afterwards regent, and in 1457 was crowned king. He was an able ruler, and endeavoured to restore peace to the country harassed by religious dissensions, but pope Pius II. declared him a heretic, excommunicated him, and induced Mathias of Hungary to invade his country. Podiebrad maintained his position, and Mathias was compelled to conclude a peace.

Born 1420; died 1471.

PODOLIA, or KAMINIETZ, po-dō'-li-a, a government of the south-west of European Russia, near the Austrian frontier. The surface is undulating and the soil extremely fertile, producing abundantly corn, hops, hemp, flax, tobacco, and different kinds of fruit. The vine and the mulberry are cultivated, and cattle-rearing is extensively carried on. The chief rivers are the Driesle and the Bug. Area, 16,223 square miles. Pop. 2,276,518. The chief town is KAMINIETZ.

POE, EDGAR ALLAN, po, an eminent American writer, who was the son of an actor whose father was a distinguished officer in the revolutionary army. He was in childhood left an orphan, but was adopted by Mr. Allan, a wealthy merchant. He accompanied that gentleman to England in 1816, and was placed at a school at Stoke Newington. Returning to his native country in 1821, he was sent to an academy at Richmond, and at a later period to Charlottsville University, Virginia. His career at school and college was brilliant, so far as the acquirement of learning was concerned, but was marked by so much extravagance and irregularity, that it terminated in his expulsion from the last-named establishment. He soon after quarrelled with his generous protector, in consequence of the latter's refusal to pay some of his gambling debts. Intending to proceed to Greece, at that period struggling to throw off the tyranny of the Turks, he went to Europe; but, although he never reached his destination, he wandered about the continent until he was seized by the police of St. Petersburg, for being engaged in a drunken riot. The American ambassador procured his release, and sent him home, where he was kindly received by Mr. Allan. In a short time, however, he had a serious quarrel with Mr. Allan, who declared he would never see or assist him again. A small volume of poems which he had published, had been so successful as to lead Poe to believe that he might rely upon literature as a means of subsistence; but deeming himself slighted, he soon afterwards enlisted as a private soldier. Some military friends rescued him from this position; upon which he again adopted a literary career. He readily obtained employment upon the magazines and periodicals; but his unfortunate predilection for strong drinks always lost him what his great talent had secured. About 1835 he married a beautiful but poor cousin, who died in 1848. Towards the close of that year he joined a temperance society, but unhappily was weak enough to accept the invitation of some friends to drink, while staying at Baltimore, and became so utterly inebriated that he fell down in the streets. On being picked up, he was conveyed to an hospital, where he expired on the following day. He possessed a wonderful power of impressing the imagination by stories of a weird and sensational character. For power of arranging and unravelling mysterious incidents he has never been surpassed: and he had an almost Defoe-like power of making the improbable appear real. His poem "The Raven," is one of the most remarkable productions of American poetry.

Born at Boston, 1809; died 1849.

POELEMBERG, CORNELIUS. (See POLEMBERG.)

POERIO, CARLO, po-eer'-e-o, a modern Italian patriot and statesman, who was the son of Guiseppe Poerio, baron Belcastro, councillor of state and attorney-general of the high court of justice at Naples. Carlo was educated at Florence, under the most able professors, but returned to Naples in 1828, where he commenced practice as an advocate, and distinguished himself by eloquently defending the principles of representative government, for which he was prosecuted by the ruling powers, and suffered imprisonment; he was again imprisoned in 1847. When a constitutional government was proclaimed at Naples, in 1848, Poerio was appointed director of police, and afterwards became minister of public instruction. When Bomba suddenly and infamously destroyed the constitution, Poerio was, with other enlightened members of the state, imprisoned on a false charge, sustained by most audacious forgeries and perjuries by hired witnesses. During ten years he suffered all the horrors of a Neapolitan dungeon, but general indignation at his treatment having been excited throughout Europe, chiefly by the energetic action of Mr. Gladstone, the king of Naples, in 1859, determined to ship his illustrious prisoner to America. With Settembrini and many other patriots, he was placed on board a ship, which was ordered to proceed to the United States; but the patriots, who greatly outnumbered the crew of the vessel, sent a deputation to the captain, informing him that, without wishing to employ force, they had resolved to steer the ship into the nearest British port. The exiles were in consequence landed at Cork, and soon afterwards Poerio and his companions proceeded to London. He afterwards went to Turin, and in the following year took his seat in the Italian parliament. When Garibaldi had driven the king out of Naples, Poerio returned thither, and afterwards became vice-president of the Italian privy council and vice-president of parliament.

Born at Naples, 1803; died 1867.

POGGENDORFF, JOHANN CHRISTIAN, pog'-gen-dorf, German physician, who, in 1834, was appointed professor of physics at the university of Berlin, and in 1838 became member of the Academy of Sciences. In his work entitled "The Magnetism of the Voltaic Pile," he was the first to demonstrate and apply the principles of the multiplier. In 1824 he assumed the direction of the "Annals of Physics and Chemistry," which, under his editorship, became one of the first of the scientific journals of Germany. His scientific researches have been principally directed towards electricity and magnetism. He invented a galvanometer, another instrument for producing a constant current of electricity, and made some important discoveries relative to galvanic polarisation, &c.

Born at Hamburg, 1796; died 1877.

POGGIO BRACCIOLINI, GIOVANNI FRANCESCO, pod'-jo brach'-che-o-lē'-ne, an Italian historian, whose merit procured him the office of secretary to pope Boniface IX. and several of his successors. While he was at the council of Constance, he was employed in searching for ancient manuscripts in that city, of which he discovered several. From Constance he went to England, where he continued some time, and then returned to Rome; but, in 1435, he settled at Florence, married, and became secretary to that republic. His principal works are,—"Funeral Orations," "History of Florence," "De Varietate Fortunæ," "Epistles," a collection of witticisms, a Latin translation of Diodorus Siculus, and editions of several ancient writers discovered by him, particularly Quintilian and Ammianus Marcellinus.

Born at Terranova, Florence, 1380; died at Florence, 1459.

POGGY, or NASSAU ISLES, pog'-gy, two islands (North and South) on the west coast of Sumatra, from which they are distant about 60 miles. North Poggy is about 21 miles long and 11 wide; South Poggy, 36 miles long and 11 broad. Lat. 2° 32'—3° 21' S. Lon. 99° 37'—100° 41' E.

POGITEL, pōj'-e-tel, a town of the Herzegovina, on the left bank of the Narenta, 34 miles N.W. of Ragusa. It is picturesquely situated in a semicircular cavity, on the side of a hill. It was formerly strongly fortified, and is now considered a position of importance. It was taken by the Turks in the 15th century.

POINSETT, poin'-set, a county of Arkansas, United States. Area, 750 square miles. Pop. 2,000. The capital is Harrisburgh.

POINT-À-PITRE, pwant-a-pe'tr, a town of the French West Indies, in Guadaloupe, at the mouth of the Rivière Salée, 35 miles N.E. of Basseterre. There are many handsome edifices, and an excellent harbour, and the town is the busiest commercial place in the island. It has suffered greatly from hurricanes and earthquakes. Pop. 15,000.

POINTE COUPÉE, koo'-pai, a county of Louisiana, United States. Area, 576 square miles. Pop. 17,785, about three-fourths being coloured. The capital is Pointe Coupée.

POINT DE GALLE, point' de gal, a fortified town and seaport on the south-west point of Ceylon, and the seat of government for the south-western provinces of the island. The harbour is good. The fort stands very high, and is a mile in circumference. There are an old Dutch Church, a Roman Catholic chapel, and an orphan asylum. The port is an important station for the vessels of the Peninsular and Oriental Company. Pop. 48,000. Lat. 6° 1' N. Lon. 80° 12' E.

POINT LEVI, a town of Quebec province, dominion of Canada, on the St. Lawrence, opposite Quebec. A very large trade is carried on. Pop. 4,000.

POINT PEDRO, a town of Ceylon, near a rocky cape of the same name, at the northern extremity of the island. The surrounding district is highly cultivated. The harbour, sheltered by a coral reef, affords safe anchorage.

POIRET, PETER, a French Protestant divine, who, by reading the works of Madame Bourignon and other mystics, became one of their disciples, and devoted his life to mystical theology. (See BOURIGNON.) His principal works are "The Divine Economy," which has been translated into English; "Solid Principles of the Christian Religion," "Theology of the Heart," and a life of Madame Bourignon, prefixed to her works.

Born at Metz, 1646; died in Holland, 1719.

POIRIER, GERMAIN, pwoi'-ri-ai, a French chronologist and antiquary, who was of the order of Benedictines of St. Maur, which he quitted in 1769. He was one of the writers of "The Art of Verifying Dates," and undertook, in conjunction with Precieux, the 18th volume of the "Collection of the Histories of Gaul and France, begun by Bouquet.

Born at Paris, 1724; died 1803.

POIRINO, pō'-e-rē'-no, a town of Italy, on the left bank of the Bonna, 14 miles S.E. of Turin. There are two old castles, four churches, a Capuchin convent, good squares, and a fine public promenade. Pop. 3,900.

POISSON, SIMEON DENIS, a French mathematician, who was educated at the Polytechnic school, where his remarkable talents attracted great attention. In 1811 he was appointed professor of mechanics in the Normal School at Paris, and subsequently became examiner at the Polytechnic School, member of the Academy of Sciences, and of the Council of Public Instruction, baron and officer of the legion of honour. He was one of the most profound mathematicians of his time, and largely contributed to the scientific journals. His dissertations chiefly relate to the mathematics of magnetism, heat, the gases, capillary attraction, gravitation, &c. He excelled in applying the methods of mathematical analysis to the questions of physics. A monument to his memory was erected in his native town.

Born at Pithiviers, 1781; died at Paris, 1840.

POISSY, pwois'-se, a town of France, department Seine-et-Oise, on the Seine, 11 miles S.W. of Versailles. It is the principal cattle-market for the supply of Paris. Pop. 4,900.—In 1561 important conferences between the Roman Catholics and Protestants were held here.

POITIERS, poi'-teers (Fr. pwoi-te'-ai), an old town of France, capital of the department Vienne, near the river Clain, 58 miles from Tours. It is divided into four quarters, all built in a mean and antiquated style. The streets are generally steep, winding, and ill-paved. It has several squares, the finest of which is the Place Royale. The cathedral of St. Pierre, partly built in the 12th century, is memorable as the burial-place of the English king Richard Cœur-de-Lion, and for numerous ceremonials which have been held in it. One of the oldest churches in France, St. Jean, is now used as a museum. There are a university, a famous lyceum, a large public library, and several learned societies, especially one established for the purpose of investigating the antiquities of Western France. There are many Celtic and Roman remains in the vicinity. Pop. 36,200.—Poictiers, as the name was formerly spelled, was the Roman Pictavium. The vicinity is famous for being the scene of the celebrated victory of the son of Edward III., surnamed the Black Prince, in 1356, when John, king of France, was taken prisoner and brought to England. It was for three centuries attached to the crown of England.

POITOU, poi'-too, an old province of France, now included in the departments Vienne, Deux-Sèvres, and Vendée.

POIVRE PETER, poivr, a French naturalist, who entered the Congregation of Missionaries, and was sent to China, where he was imprisoned during two years. In his passage to Europe the vessel was attacked by the English, and Poivre had his arm carried off. He subsequently quitted the ecclesiastical state, and was sent by the French India Company, in 1749, to open a commercial establishment in Cochin-China, and was also appointed intendant of the isles of France and Bourbon, where he introduced the bread-fruit tree and other valuable plants. He wrote "The Voyage of a Philosopher," a treatise on the dyeing of silks, and the "History and Manners of China," &c.

Born at Lyons, 1719; died at the same city, 1786.

POKHURN, pok-hurn', a town of India, 80 miles N.W. of Joodpoor. It is defended by a fort and a wall 35 feet high. A very large transit trade is carried on. Pop. 15,000.

POKUR, pok-ur', a town of British India, province of Ajmere, on the borders of a sacred lake, 5 miles N.W. of Ajmere. There is a splendid temple, built and dedicated to "the one God" not many years since, by a wealthy Mahratta, a minister of Scindia. Great numbers of pilgrims visit the town, and a large fair is held.

POL-DE-LEON, ST., pole-dai-lai-awng, a town of France, department Finisterre, 10 miles N.W. of Morlaix. It has a cathedral, with two towers, terminating in open spires; and the church of Kreizker, with a beautiful tower and spire, 393 feet high. Manf. Linen. There is a profitable fishery. Pop. 6,700.

POL, ST., pole, a town of France, department Pas-de-Calais, 20 miles N.W. of Arras. Pop. 3,500.

POLA, po'-la, a town and naval station of the Austrian empire, in Istria, on an eminence overlooking the Adriatic, 75 miles S.E. of Trieste. The town is strongly fortified, and the haven is very commodious and well sheltered. Pop. 16,500.—This is a very ancient town, and was a station of the Roman fleet.

POLAND, po'-land, formerly a kingdom of Europe, extending from the Baltic Sea, between Dantzic and Riga, to the frontiers of Bessarabia and the Carpathian Mountains, and from Prussian Silesia and Brandenburg, on the west, to the Russian provinces of Smolensk, Tchernijov, Poltava, and Kherson, on the east. A range of hills traverse the country in a north-east direction, forming the water-shed between the Baltic and the Black Sea: The greatest length from north to south was 715 miles, and breadth from east to west 693 miles, giving an area of about 282,000 square miles. Poland is now divided between Russia, Prussia, and Austria, forming the Russian governments or provinces of the kingdom of Poland, Courland, Grodno, Kiev, Kovno, Minsk, Mohilev, Podolia, Vilna, Volhynia, and Witebsk; the Prussian province of Posen, the greater part of West Prussia, and parts of East Prussia, and the Austrian provinces of Galicia, and Bukovina. (See SEPARATE HEADINGS.)

History.—The Poles (first mentioned in history as the Polani, a tribe of the Slavonic race, occupying a territory between the Oder and the Vistula) were for a long time governed by elective chiefs, bearing the title of duke; no dynasty having been established before the reign of Piast, or Piastus (in 840), whose family swayed the sceptre for more than five centuries. Afterwards, however, the crown became strictly elective, many of the monarchs being able rulers, under whom the kingdom increased in prosperity and influence, but in course of time party divisions prepared the decline of the state. The confusion occasioned by these contests, furnished a pretence for the neighbouring powers to interfere, and the country was finally partitioned between the great powers of Russia, Prussia, and Austria. In 1772, Russia seized a large part of the eastern provinces, while Austria appropriated a fertile tract in the south-west, and Prussia a commercial district in the north-west, including the lower part of the Vistula. In 1791, Poland was anew invaded by the partitioning powers, particularly by Russia, and there was a second division in 1793. In 1794 a final division was made of the remaining provinces among the three powers, Russia obtaining on each occasion by far the largest share. By the victories of Bonaparte, the share of Poland possessed by Prussia was wrested from her, and various other changes were made. But, after the destruction of the French power, a partial restitution was made to Prussia and Austria, of their late possessions, and the remainder given to Russia. In 1830 a revolution took place, but ended in the surrender of Warsaw and the dispersion of the Poles. In 1832, what remained of Poland was declared a part of the Russian empire. In 1846 an attempt was made at Cracow to recover independence, but it ended in the subjugation of the republic of Cracow, the last remnant of the country, which was annexed to Austria. There was a vigorous attempt at insurrection in 1863 and 1864, which was put down with unscrupulous energy by the Russian government.

POLAND, or KINGDOM OF, a government of European Russia, bounded N. and W. by Prussia, S. by Austria, and E. by the Russian governments of Vilna and Grodno. The surface is generally level, but in the southern part is a range of hills which attain an elevation of 2,000 feet. The soil is very fertile, producing abundant crops of grain, fruit, hemp, tobacco, and flax. Nearly one-fourth of the entire area is covered with forests. The climate varies greatly from intense heat in summer to excessive cold in winter. Horses, cattle, and pigs are extensively reared; and honey is an important article of export trade.

Rivers.—The Vistula, with its tributaries, the Bug, Pilica, and Wiepriz; the Niemen, and the Warta.

Area.—49,200 square miles.

Pop.—7,083,475, of whom about two-thirds are Roman Catholics, 785,000 Jews, 331,000 Protestants, and 260,000 members of the Greek Church. The population is more than three times as dense as that of the remainder of European Russia.

Administrative Divisions and Chief Towns. — There are 10 governments—Kalisez, Kielce, Lomza, Lublin, Plotrkov, Plock, Radom, Siedice, Suwalki, and Warsaw.

WARSAW is the capital, the other chief towns give names to the respective governments.

History.—After settlement of the division of Poland by the Congress of Vienna, in 1815, this portion of the country was attached to Russia, but retained the title of the Kingdom of Poland, and had a separate government; but after the revolt of 1864 was deprived of even that approximation to independence, and in 1868 was incorporated absolutely as a portion of the Russian empire.

POLAR REGIONS, NORTH. This name is given to the regions around the North Pole, beyond the Arctic Circle, which is fixed by geographers at lat. 66° 30′ N. The highest latitude reached by explorers is 83° 20′ 26″ N., about 400 miles from the North Pole, to which parties from the expedition commanded by Sir George Nares penetrated in 1876. Previous to that time it was supposed by some explorers, that immediately surrounding the North Pole is a large open sea, which it might be possible to reach if the intermediate regions of ice could be traversed. As far as can be ascertained there is occasionally open water, and there is certainly a perceptible current from the Pole to the south; but the general characteristic is a vast frozen ocean, the ice not an unbroken mass, but in floes, with sometimes open water between. Scientific geographers have now given the name of the Palæocrystic Sea (or sea of ancient ice) to the frozen ocean surrounding the Pole and extending to about the 80th parallel of north latitude, north of most of the Arctic islands off the coast of North America, the northern coast of Greenland (probably an island), Spitzbergen, Nova Zembla, and the northern coast of Siberia. Within the limits of this sea is FRANZ JOSEPH LAND, the most northern point reached by the Austrian exploring expedition of 1872. The most important entrances to this desolate region from the south are by BEHRING STRAIT, between the American and Asiatic continents; BAFFIN BAY, to the east of Greenland, at the northern extremity of which are two channels, Jones Sound and Smith Sound, the latter of which was believed to afford the most practicable route, but which Sir George Nares found to be blocked by a precipitous wall of ice; the channel between Greenland and Spitzbergen; and that between Spitzbergen and Nova Zembla, where the modifying influence of the Gulf Stream is experienced, and by means of which the Austrian expedition was enabled to reach Franz Joseph Land. Passing through Smith Sound, and its continuation, to which the names of Kennedy Channel, Hall Basin, and Robeson Channel were given, parties from the expedition commanded by Sir George Nares, traced the coast line westward for a distance of 200 miles; and, easterly, the northern coast of Greenland, for about 100 miles. The land on the western side of Smith Sound is known as Grinnell Land, and farther north as Grant Land. Of the interior of these vast tracts nothing is known, but near the northern shore of Grant Land ranges and isolated hills, from 1,000 to 5,000 feet high, were seen. The coast has several shallow bays, and one deeper inlet (about lon. 66° E.), named after captain Clement Markham. Near lon. 71° E., and lat. 83° 10′ N., is the most northern point of the coast, Cape Columbia. The most northern part of Greenland, as far as traced, is named Hall Land, and has a rugged and broken outline, the chief inlets being, from west to east, Newman Bay, St. George's Fiord, and Victoria Inlets. The most northern point reached was Cape Britannia, about lon. 48° E. and 82° 45′ N. Sir George Nares came to the conclusion that a very broad sea extends north of Cape Columbia, at least as far as the Pole, that the land trends south-west towards Prince Patrick Island, and that the coast of Greenland does not extend much further north than Cape Britannia. The probable trend of the coasts is indicated by similarity of tides between two known points, prevailing winds, and the nature of the movements of the ice. It is certain that there is a large sea, and that the sea is covered with ice during the winter. In the summer, from various causes, this ice becomes subject to motion by the winds and currents, and gradually breaks up into fields and floes, which are ever decreasing in size as the season advances. Soon after the first week in July the whole pack of ice begins to drive backwards and forwards, according to the wind or current, its main course being towards the channel of outlet, where it escapes in small quantities out of the Polar Basin. Gaining more room as the season advances, the pack itself gradually breaks up, when any space left vacant is immediately occupied by the frozen masses, each field and floe struggling and forcing its way to get a clearer space. Towards the end of September the increasing frost begins to cement together the contending masses, and by November the whole sea is quiet again, the ice only cracking occasionally with the tidal currents. The new formation of ice during seven months in the year more than equals the decay during the other five. Thus the pack covering the Palæocrystic Sea is a collection of separate pieces of ice, moving among each other during the summer, each piece grinding against its neighbour as the whole jostles its way along, slowly pressing forward towards the outlet between Spitzbergen and Greenland. Whatever quantity of land may hereafter be discovered, Sir George Nares considers that the area of the Palæocrystic Sea will be found to cover at least one-and-a-half million square miles. From the end of September to the beginning of May no sun is visible, the only light being that given by the moon and stars, and the aurora, or "northern lights." At some remote period there must have been abundant vegetation in this now desolate region. Previous explorers had discovered an immense number of fossil trees of great size on Banks Island and Prince Patrick Island, and the Nares expedition ascertained that the forests extended as far north as 82°, and coal of good quality was discovered near the coast of Grant Land as far north as about 81° 40′. A few miles further were found the most northern traces of the Esquimaux, and still further north, about 82° 20′, the skull of a bear, the only vestige of animal existence discovered. Off the coast marine life almost entirely closed. There are no seals, and no traces of birds. Between the limits of this Palæocrystic Sea and the Arctic Circle are regions which earlier explorers have made more familiar. In the Arctic Ocean are fields and huge masses of floating ice, frequently many hundred feet high, and having not uncommonly a rotary motion, dashing against each other with tremendous force. The ice is remarkable for the beauty and variety of tints, and in the open parts the water is extremely clear, the colour presenting rapid transitions of tint, chiefly from ultra-marine to olive-green; the latter produced by the presence of myriads of marine animals. The Arctic Circle includes the northern coast of America, with the islands PRINCE ALBERT LAND, VICTORIA LAND, BANKS LAND, BOOTHIA, MELVILLE ISLAND, PRINCE PATRICK ISLAND; the greater part of Greenland, the northern portion of Norway and Lapland, Northern SIBERIA, SPITZBERGEN, NOVA ZEMBLA, and several small islands farther east, and a portion of coast, of which very little is known, Wrangel Land, lying near the entrance of Behring Strait.

Zoology.—White bears, musk-ox, hares, foxes, some rein-deer, ptarmigan, and a few aquatic fowl, are found in the lower latitudes of the Arctic regions, and the seas are frequented by seals, walruses, and whales.

Inhabitants.—The only inhabitants are a few wandering tribes of Esquimaux, on the shores of Greenland and the American coast. They are generally inoffensive and gentle, and travel in sledges drawn by the well-known Esquimaux dogs. They are expert hunters and fishers, and live on the seal, fish, aquatic birds, and, when practicable, on reindeer, eating their food raw. The dress of both sexes is nearly the same, consisting of skins of animals and birds. The number of the Esquimaux is unascertained.

POLAR REGIONS, SOUTH. The farthest point reached has been lat. 78° 10′ S., by captain sir James Ross, when his farther progress was stopped by a perpendicular barrier of ice, 150 feet high. The Antarctic Ocean, as the seas in this region are named, is comparatively shallow, and the ice is met with 10 degrees nearer the equator than in the northern Arctic regions. (See VICTORIA LAND.)

POLE, REGINALD, pole, cardinal and archbishop of Canterbury, was the son of Richard Pole, lord Montague, and of Margaret, countess of Salisbury, daughter of George, duke of Clarence, younger brother of Edward IV. At the age of 12 he was elected of Magdalen College, Oxford, where he made considerable progress in learning. In 1517 he obtained a prebend in the cathedral of Salisbury, and two years after the deaneries of Exeter and Wimborne. About this time he went to the universities of Paris and Padua for improvement, upon a liberal establishment from his relation Henry VIII. He returned to England in 1525, and was held in great favour by the king, on account of his engaging manners and accomplishments; but, when that monarch avowed his design of divorcing his queen, Pole opposed it, and went to Italy. Henry having assumed the supremacy over the Church, and caused Dr. Sampson to write a defence of that title, sent the book to Pole, who returned an answer to it under the title "De Unitate Ecclesiasticâ." This gave such offence that his preferments and pensions were taken from him; but he was abundantly compensated by the pope and emperor. The former made him cardinal in 1537, and appointed him nuncio to France and the Netherlands. At home, however, he was declared a traitor, and a price was set upon his head. He was one of the legate-presidents at the council of Trent, where he attended as long as his health permitted. On the death of Paul III., in 1549, he narrowly missed election to the popedom. Queen Mary was no sooner settled on the English throne, than Pole was appointed legate to reconcile England to the papal see; but, before he set out, the act of attainder which had been passed against him was repealed. He arrived in 1554, and was magnificently received and lodged in the palace at Lambeth. Shortly after he met the parliament, and pronounced the papal absolution of the kingdom. The day after the death of Cranmer, he took upon himself the title of archbishop of Canterbury, having been promoted to that dignity some time before. He was also elected chancellor of both universities, which he visited by commission. He behaved with moderation to the Protestants, and was displeased with the conduct of Gardiner and the other persecuting prelates. He survived queen Mary only sixteen hours. Besides his book against Henry VIII. and his defence of it, he wrote several pieces in favour of the papal authority and the doctrines of the Church of Rome. He was a man of mild and honourable disposition.

Born at Stourton, Staffordshire, 1500; died at Lambeth, 1558.

POLEMBERG, CORNELIUS, pō'-lem-bairg, an eminent Dutch painter, who, at the invitation of Charles I., visited England, where he painted several cabinet pictures of great beauty. His landscapes are particularly fine.

Born at Utrecht, 1586; died 1660.

POLEVOY, NICOLAS ALEXIEWITSCH, pol'-e-voi, an eminent Russian writer, who was the son of a Russian merchant settled in Siberia. He never went to school, but exhibited at a very early age remarkable powers of acquiring knowledge and a prodigious memory. In 1812 his father had settled at Moscow, when the city was destroyed by fire at the advance of Napoleon I.; after which event he returned to Irkutsk, where young Polevoy spent several years as clerk to his father, who wished him to become a man of business, while the inclinations of the son were wholly towards literature. In secret he learnt the French and German languages, and in 1817 sent an account of the emperor Alexander's visit to Kursk to the Russian Courier, which was his first essay in print. He continued his contributions, and repaired to St. Petersburg, where he made the acquaintance of the most distinguished literary men; and proceeding to Moscow, established there the Moscow Telegraph, in 1825. The succeeding twenty-one years were occupied in incessant literary labour. He was a journalist, an historian, a romance-writer; he produced essays, tales, translations of Shakspere, and numerous dramas, tragedies, and comedies. His most important works are, a "History of the Russian Nation," which was left incomplete at his death; "Sketches of Russian Literature;" dramatic works and translations; and lives of Napoleon, Peter the Great, and Suwarow. His translation of "Hamlet" was played with great success at Moscow in 1837.

Born at Irkutsk, 1796; died at St. Petersburg, 1846.

POLICASTRO, pol-e-kas'-tro, a maritime town of Italy, province of Salerno, at the extremity of a gulf of the same name. It is a bishop's see, and has a Gothic cathedral. There is a good harbour. Pop. 7,000.

POLIER, ANTONY DE, pō'-le-ai, a Swiss colonel, who served in the army of the East-India Company, acquired a large fortune, and retiring to Europe, settled at Avignon, where he was murdered by brigands. He made a profound study of the religion of the Hindoos, and is stated to have executed a complete copy of the Vedas. He wrote a work on the mythology of the Hindoos.

Born at Lausanne, 1741; died 1795.

POLIGNAC, MELCHIOR DE, pō'-leen-yak, a French cardinal, son of marquis de Polignac, and descended from one of the oldest families in France. He received his education at Paris, and in the disputes between pope Alexander VIII. and the court of France, in 1689, rendered great service by bringing about a reconciliation. Louis XIV. sent him as ambassador to Poland, in 1695, to procure the election of the prince of Conti, after the death of John Sobieski; but in a very short time Conti and Polignac were compelled to leave Poland, and the latter, on his return to France, was for some time in disgrace. He retired to his abbey at Bonport, occupying himself in the composition of a Latin poem, intended to refute the philosophy of Lucretius; but he afterwards recovered the royal favour, was sent on a mission to Rome, and in 1713 he assisted in negotiating the treaty of Utrecht. He had shortly before received from pope Clement XI. the dignity of cardinal. After the death of Louis XIV. he was exiled to his abbey of Anchin, and was not recalled till 1720, when he was again sent to Rome, and remained there ten years. In 1726 he was made archbishop of Auch, and in 1732 commander of the order of the Holy Ghost.

Born at Puy-en-Velay, 1661; died at Paris, 1741.

POLIGNAC, JULES AUGUSTE AMAND, Prince de, minister of Charles X. He was the son of the duke and duchess de Polignac, the favourite and confidante of Marie Antoinette. At an early age he joined the count of Artois, then in exile, and was appointed his aide-de-camp. In 1804 he went to France, where he and his elder brother engaged in a plot against the first consul; on the discovery of which he was condemned to imprisonment, but contrived to effect his escape in 1813. After fulfilling various missions in the interests of the Bourbons, he was, upon their restoration to the throne of France, sent as ambassador to the court of England. From that post he was recalled in 1829, by Charles X., who created him minister of foreign affairs and president of the council. His reactionary policy led to the fall of Charles X. During the revolution of 1830 he obstinately refused all compromise, and was brought to trial before the Court of Peers, which condemned him to imprisonment for life, with the loss of all his titles and orders. After being detained for several years in the fortress of Ham, he was pardoned, in 1836; upon which he repaired to England; but subsequently returned to France, where he spent the remainder of his days in strict privacy.

Born at Paris, 1780; died 1847.

POLIGNANO, pol'-een-ya'-no, a town of Italy, province of Bari, near the Adriatic, 20 miles S.E. of Bari. There are a royal abbey, three churches, and two convents. Pop. 4,500.

POLIGNY, po-leen'-ye, a town of France, department Jura, 26 miles from Besançon. Manf. Hosiery, glue, earthenware, saltpetre, and leather. There are quarries of marble and alabaster in the vicinity. Pop. 5,600.

POLISTINA, po-lis-te'-na, a town of Italy, province of Reggio, 33 miles N.E. of Reggio. Pop. 7,500.

POLIZIANO, or POLITIANUS, ANGELO, po-lish'-i-ai'-nus (family name, Ambroginie), a learned Italian writer, who studied at Florence, whose poetical talent recommended him to the patronage of Lorenzo and Julian de' Medici, the former of whom made him tutor to his children. He discharged this trust so well as to be appointed professor of Greek and Latin at Florence, attracting pupils from all parts of Europe. His principal works were, "History of the Confederacy of Pazzi," a Latin translation of Herodian, "Greek Epigrams," "Latin Epistles," "Bucolic Poems," a "Treatise on Anger," and "Orfeo," the earliest form of the libretto of an opera extant.

Born at Montepulciano, 1454; died 1494.

POLIZZY, po-lit'-se, a town of Sicily, 45 miles S.E. of Palermo. Pop. 5,000.

POLK, JAMES KNOX, polk, 11th president of the United States of America. He was of Irish descent, the original form of the family name being Pollock, and his father was a farmer of North Carolina. Having studied at the university of that state, he was admitted to the bar in 1820, and a few years afterwards became a member of Congress. In 1836 he was chosen speaker of the house of Representatives; in 1839 governor of Tennessee, and in 1844 nominated by the democratic party and elected president of the United States. During his occupation of office the Oregon boundary question was settled, Texas was annexed, and, as a result of a war with Mexico, California and New Mexico were acquired by the States.

Born in North Carolina, 1795; died at Nashville, 1849.

POLK, LEONIDAS, an American bishop, who distinguished himself as a general in the Confederate Army. He was educated for the army at the military academy, West Point, but took orders in the episcopal church at the age of 21, and became bishop of Louisiana in 1841. On the outbreak of the civil war, he joined the Confederate army, without resigning his bishopric, and greatly distinguished himself, rising to the command of an army corps. He was killed by a cannon shot, while reconnoitring a battery.

Born at North Carolina, 1806; died 1864.

POLK, the names of 12 counties of the United States:—

ARKANSAS.—Area, 1,000 square miles. Pop. 5,859. The capital is Dallas.

FLORIDA.—Area, 1,944 square miles. Pop. 3,200. The capital is Pease Creek.

GEORGIA.—Area, 500 square miles. Pop. 11,952, of whom about one-third are coloured. The capital is Cedartown.

IOWA.—Area, 720 square miles. Pop. 42,395. The capital is DES MOINES.

MINNESOTA.—Area, 4,500 square miles. Uninhabited until 1870; subsequently, Pop. 11,433.

NEBRASKA.—Area, 400 square miles. Pop. 6,846. The chief place is Osceola

NORTH CAROLINA.—Area, 250 square miles. Pop. 5,062. The capital is Columbus.

OREGON.—Area, 900 square miles. Pop. 6,601. The capital is Dallas.

TENNESSEE.—Area, 300 square miles. Pop. 7,500. The capital is Benton.

TEXAS.—Area, 1,188 square miles. Pop. 7,500, about half being coloured. The capital is Livingston.

WISCONSIN.—Area, 900 square miles. Pop. 10,018. The capital is Osceola Mills.

POLLENZA, pol-lain'-tha, a town in the northern part of the island of Majorca, near the Bay of Pollenza, 28 miles N.W. of Palma. There is a Jesuits' College. Manf. Black woollen cloth. Pop. 6,500.

POLLIO, CAIUS ASINIUS, pol'-li-o, a Roman consul and orator, who gained great reputation by his military exploits and his writings. He accompanied Cæsar in his expedition against Pompey, and was afterwards governor of Western Spain, and held important offices under Augustus. Virgil and Horace were his intimate friends, and have immortalised his name in their works. He wrote tragedies, orations, and a history, which are lost. He is said to have formed the first public library at Rome.

Born 76 B.C.; died 4 A.D.

POLLNITZ, KARL LUDWIG VON, pol'-nits, son of the minister of state of the elector of Brandenburg. He was of extravagant and irregular habits, sometimes a soldier and sometimes a theologian, changing from Roman Catholicism to Calvinism and again to Catholicism. Frederick the Great of Prussia made him director of the theatre of Berlin. He wrote various memoirs of his time exhibiting considerable powers of observation and a winning style.

Born near Cologne, 1692; died 1775.

POLLOCKSHAWS, pol'-lok-shaws, a municipal borough of Scotland, in Renfrewshire, on the White Cart, 2½ miles S.W. of Glasgow. It has extensive bleach fields and print fields, and cotton-mills. There are iron foundries and dye-works. Pop. 9,000.—A station on the Caledonian railway.

POLLOK, ROBERT, pol'-lok, a Scotch poet, who was educated at the University of Glasgow for the church. He produced, before he had attained his 26th year, a very remarkable poem, entitled "The Course of Time," which attracted great admiration in the religious world. He also published anonymously "Tales of the Covenanters." The young poet's constitution was frail, and was undermined by his intense application. He was preparing to start for Italy, but died at Southampton.

Born in Renfrewshire, 1799; died 1827.

POLLUX, pol'-lux. (See CASTOR.)

POLLUX, or POLYDEUCIS, JULIUS, a grammarian and teacher of rhetoric, who was the favourite and teacher of Commodus. He wrote several works, only one of which is extant. This is entitled "Onomasticon," and is a dictionary of Greek, arranged not alphabetically, but according to subjects.

Lived at the close of the 2nd century.

POLNA, pol'-na, a town of the Austrian empire, in Bohemia, 31 miles S.E. of Czaslau. Pop. 5,200.

POLO, MARCO, po'-lo, a Venetian traveller, whose father and uncle left Venice in 1250 for Constantinople, travelled up the Euxine, and afterwards proceeded to Bokhara. At Bokhara they acquired the Mongol language; they next joined the suite of the Persian ambassador, with which the brothers proceeded to the court of Kublai Khan, in Chinese Tartary. The Venetians were well received by Kublai, who commissioned them to carry a letter to the pope, in which he asked that a hundred learned men might be sent into his dominions. They arrived safely at Venice in 1269, after an absence of nineteen years. In 1272, the two brothers, and Marco Polo, the son of Nicolo, together with two Dominican friars, again set forth into the interior, from the coast of Syria; but the friars becoming too frightened to proceed, left the three Venetians to prosecute by themselves their journey into Central Asia. In 1275 they arrived at the camp of Kublai Khan, who soon afterwards dispatched Marco Polo on several missions to China and India. The Venetian was the first European who visited China. In 1291 the three Venetians were permitted to accompany an embassy to Persia, and, after travelling through China, they embarked at Fo-Kien, and sailed thence for Persia. From Persia they set sail for Venice, which they reached in 1295. Venice was at that period at war with Genoa, and Marco Polo was placed in command of one of the war galleys of the state; but, being taken prisoner, was conveyed to Genoa. While in captivity he dictated to a fellow-prisoner the narrative of his adventures. This MS. he afterwards corrected, on regaining his liberty, and caused a French translation to be made of it. The work was published at Venice in 1559. It is one of the most interesting and valuable of the ancient works on geography, and stimulated the Portuguese to attempt to reach India by way of the Cape of Good Hope, and Columbus to discover a western passage to the Indies. After his liberation, Polo returned to Venice, where he became a member of the grand council.

Born at Venice, about 1250; died 1323.

POLOTZK, po-lotzk', a town of European Russia, government of Vitebsk, on the banks of the Duna, at its junction with the Polota. It has a citadel, numerous churches, monasteries, a Jesuits' college, and a school for nobles. There is a harbour. Pop. 11,500.

POLTAVA, or PULTOWA, pol-ta'-va, pool-to'-a, a government of European Russia, bounded W. by the government of Kiev, and E. by that of Kharkov. The surface is flat, with a gentle slope to the Dnieper, on the south-west. The soil is fertile, and there are extensive pastures on which great numbers of cattle are bred. The chief rivers are the Sula, Psiol, and Worskla. Area, 19,265 square miles. Pop. 2,473,958.

POLTAVA, capital of the above government, on the right bank of the Worskla. In the centre of the town is a very good square, with a fine monument of granite, in honour of Peter the Great. Four very important fairs are held. Pop. 41,259.—The Swedes were completely defeated here in 1709, by Peter the Great.

PÖLTEN, ST., pol'-ten, a town of the Austrian empire, government of Lower Austria, on the left bank of the Trasen, 35 miles S.W. of Vienna. It has a cathedral, an episcopal palace, two other palaces, theatre, and hospitals. Manf. Cotton goods, paper, glass, and earthenware. Pop. 7,300.

POLYBIUS, po-lib'-i-us, a Greek historian. His father, Lycortas, was a distinguished general of Achæa, and taught his son the principles of philosophy and policy. Philopœmen was his instructor in the art of war. Polybius displayed great skill and courage in several expeditions during the war between the Romans and Perseus, king of Macedon. When that monarch was defeated, Polybius was taken prisoner and sent to Rome, where he gained the friendship of Scipio, whom he accompanied to the siege of Carthagena and to that of Numantium. Polybius, on the death of Scipio, was greatly afflicted, and retired into private life. Part only of his universal history of his own time, in Greek, remains.

Born at Megalopolis, in Arcadia, about 204 B.C.; died about 122 B.C.

POLYCANDRO, pol-e-kan'-dro, an island of the Grecian archipelago, 16 miles from Milo. Area, 20 square miles. Desc. Rugged, but yielding corn Pop. 2,000.

POLYCARP, pol'-i-karp, bishop of Smyrna, and a martyr of the Christian church, was, it is asserted, the disciple of St. John the Evangelist, who is also said to have been ordained bishop of Smyrna. He made a journey to Rome in 160, to settle the controversy respecting the proper time for the celebration of Easter. On his return to Smyrna, in 166, he was condemned to the flames by the proconsul. His martyrdom is affectingly related in a letter from the church of Smyrna to the churches of Pontus, and there is also extant an epistle of his to the Philippians, published by Usher, with those of Ignatius, in 1647.

Born 71; died 166.

POLYCLETUS, pol-i-kle'-tus, a sculptor of Sicyon, in the Peloponnesus, who was the rival of Phidias.

Lived in the 5th century.

POLYCRATES, po-lik'-ra-tees, king of Samos, who at first ruled conjointly with his brothers, one of whom he killed, and the other banished. He conquered several towns of the Greek islands, and became so powerful that Amasis, king of Egypt, made a treaty of alliance with him. the Egyptian monarch, however, becoming alarmed at the uninterrupted good fortune of Polycrates, advised him to chequer his enjoyments by relinquishing some of his most favourite objects. Polycrates complied, and threw into the sea a seal, the most valuable of his jewels; but a few days after, he received as a present a large fish, in whose belly the jewel was found, on which Amasis, fearing that the gods would punish so lucky a mortal, withdrew from association. So runs the legend, but modern historians suggest that Polycrates abandoned the Egyptian for a Persian alliance, and assisted Cambyses to invade Egypt, 525 B.C. A Persian satrap, Orœtes, inveigled him to visit him at Sardes, and there crucified him. Polycrates, besides being the most famous of the Greek sea-kings, was a patron of art and literature, and a great friend of Anacreon.

Died 522 B.C.

POLYDORE VERGIL. (See VERGIL).

POLYGNOTUS, pol-ig-no'-tus, a painter of ancient Greece, a native of the isle of Thasos, and one of a family of painters who went to Athens to practise their profession. He was the first painter of his time, famous for the beauty and vivacity of his figures. He was employed to decorate the temple of Theseus, and other public buildings. Aristotle highly praised him.

Died about 426 B.C.

POLYHYMNIA, pol-e-him'-ne-a, in Greek mythology, the muse who presided over eloquence and lyric poetry.

POLYNESIA, pol-i-nee'-she-a, "many islands," a term applied to the numerous islands in the Pacific Ocean, east of Australasia and the Philippine islands, extending nearly 30° on each side of the equator. Lon. from 35° E. to 135° W.

POLYPHEMUS, pol-i-fe'-mus, in Homeric legend, king of all the Cyclops in Sicily, and son of Neptune and Thoosa. He is represented as a monster of immense strength, with one eye in the middle of the forehead, and feeding upon human flesh. (See ACIS and GALATŒA.)

POLYXENA, pol-ix'-e-na, in Greek legend, a daughter of Priam of Troy, beloved by Achilles.

POLZIN, pol'-zhin, a town of Prussia, province of Pomerania, on the river Wipper, 30 miles S.W. of Köslin. Manf. Woollen cloth, leather, and tobacco. There is a trade in cattle. Pop. 4,300.

POMBAL, DOM SEBASTIO JOSÉ DE CARVALHO, Marquis de, a Portuguese statesman, who first studied law, and then served during some time in the army; but abandoning a military life, retired to his estate until 1739, when having married a rich widow, he returned to court, and was sent as envoy-extraordinary to London. In 1745 he was sent ambassador to Vienna, where his first wife having died, he married the countess Daun, niece of the famous marshal of that name. In 1750 he was appointed secretary for foreign affairs, and had the principal share in the administration. He displayed great talent, encouraged agriculture and commerce, placed the marine on a respectable footing, and instituted several excellent regulations; but he disgraced his public life by his avarice. He, however distinguished himself by his honourable conduct after the earthquake which destroyed Lisbon in 1755. By his means the city was speedily restored, and the public calamity relieved. But his influence at court created him many enemies; and at length a conspiracy was formed against him and the king, which was discovered, and the authors and agents severely punished. Being suspicious that the Jesuits were concerned in this plot, he caused some to be executed and others to be expelled the kingdom. In 1770 he was created a marquis, but by the death of Joseph in 1777, his power was destroyed, and he was exiled from court.

Born at Soura, Coimbra, 1699; died at Pombal, 1782.

POMERANA, po-mai-ra'-na, a town of Tuscany, near the famous borax lagoons, 7 miles from Volterra. Pop. 2,500.

POMERANIA, pom'-e-rai'-ne-a (Germ. POMMERN, pom'-mern), a maritime province of Prussia, lying along the south coast of the Baltic, and bounded E. by West Prussia, S. by Brandenburg, and W. by the Mecklenburg duchies. The surface is almost entirely flat, and in many parts extremely marshy, not more than one-half being cultivated. The soil is not very fertile, and the principal crops are wheat, barley, rye, oats, potatoes, flax, hemp, and tobacco. Enormous quantities of peat are obtained. The inhabitants have numerous herds of cattle. Fishing is carried on along the seacoast and in the rivers, sturgeon, salmon, eels, and lamprey being very abundant. The forests are extensive, and abound in game. Minerals are comparatively rare, and almost confined to marsh-iron, alum, and salt. Amber is occasionally found on the coast. Manf. Woollen stuffs, linen, iron-wares, glass, and leather. A very active transit trade between the Prussian states and the Baltic ports is carried on.

Rivers and Lakes.—The Oder, which forms numerous lakes (the largest being the Dammer), flowing into the Stettiner Hoff, and thence by three outlets to the Baltic; the Ihna, Rega, Persante, Wipper, and Stolpe.

Area.—12,130 square miles.

Pop.—1,540,934.

Chief Town.—STETTIN.

History.—From the 11th century till the death of Bogislaus XIV., in 1637, Pomerania had its own independent dukes; after the latter date it was divided between the house of Brandenburg and Sweden; but in 1720 Sweden ceded all but a narrow strip between Mecklenburg and the Baltic, which was also incorporated with Prussia in 1815.

POMEROY, pom'-e-roy, capital of Meigs county, Ohio, United States, 80 miles S.E. of Columbus. It is the centre of the salt basin of the Ohio, and there are extensive mines of bituminous coal in the vicinity. Manf. Bromine, iron, nails, carriages, and furniture. There is a very large trade in coal and salt. Pop. 5,560.

POMFRET. (See PONTEFRACT.)

POMFRET, JOHN, an English poet and divine, who entered into orders, and obtained the living of Malden, in Bedfordshire. On account of a passage in his poem entitled "The Choice," bishop Compton was for some time very much prejudiced against him. His poems possess little merit, but were once very popular.

Born at Luton, Bedfordshire, 1667; died 1703.

POMONA or MAINISLE, po-mo'-na, the largest of the Orkney islands, and nearly in their centre. It is much intersected by arms of the sea, and in general bleak and barren, covered with heath, destitute of trees, and with hills, marshy swamps, and fresh-water lakes; but there are some fertile tracts. The western coast is bold and lofty, but generally the island slopes to the east. Many swine and sheep are reared. Pop. 17,165.

POMPADOUR, JEANNE ANTOINETTE, Marquise de, pom'-pa-door, mistress of Louis XV., was supposed to be the daughter of a butcher, named Poisson, but was brought up and highly educated by M. de Tournheim, a rich farmer-general, who had some reason to suppose that he was really her father; at an early age she became the wife of his nephew, M. L'Etioles. While hunting in the forest of Senar, on the borders of which Tournheim held an estate, the king had an opportunity purposely afforded him, by her mother, of seeing her, and he was immediately enamoured. She was created marchioness of Pompadour in 1745, and retained a complete ascendancy over Louis till her death. She had a considerable concern in the political affairs of her time, and received enormous sums of money and large estates; she was imperious and relentless in persecuting opponents, many of whom on the slightest grounds, were imprisoned in the Bastille.

Born in Paris, 1722; died at Versailles, 1764.

POMPEII, or POMPEIA, pom'-pe-i (Ital. pom-pai-ye), an ancient city of Italy, at the foot of Mount Vesuvius, buried by an eruption of that mountain in the year 79. Its ruins were first excavated in 1755, and a large portion of the old Roman town, abounding in objects of interest is now open to inspection. The population was probably over 20,000 at the time when the town was destroyed by the eruption.

POMPEY or POMPEIUS CNEIUS, pom'-pe, pom-pe'-yus, commonly called the Great, was the son of an able general, under whom he acquired the art of war, and with such success, that at the age of 23 he was fitted to command three legions, which he raised at his own expense, and with which he joined Sylla. Three years afterwards he recovered Sicily and Africa, and became so great a favourite with the army that Sylla recalled him. He obeyed the mandate, though his soldiers wished him to resist the orders of the dictator. Sylla received him with expressions of friendship, and saluted him with the appellation of Imperator: he also obtained the honours of a triumph. After the death of Sylla, Pompey compelled Lepidus to quit Rome; and he brought the war against Sertorius in Spain to a victorious conclusion, for which he obtained a second triumph, B.C. 73, and, at the same time, was elected consul. In his consulate he restored the tribunes, exterminating the pirates, gained great advantages over Tigranes and Mithridates, and made numerous conquests in the east. After these exploits he entered Rome, and was honoured with a third triumph. But his glory and vain character procured him many enemies; to counteract whom he joined with Crassus and Cæsar in forming the first triumvirate, B.C. 60. To strengthen this alliance, he married Julia, daughter of Cæsar; but these two great men became rivals, in consequence of Pompey's being created sole consul, B.C. 52. On the death of Julia, he married Cornelia, daughter of Metellus Scipio, whom he associated with him in the consulate. Cæsar held the government of Gaul, when the senate, at the solicitation of Pompey, passed a decree commanding him to quit the army, on pain of being declared an enemy to his country. War now broke out between the two generals, who encountered each other on the plains of Phaesalia, where Pompey was defeated, and fled, but was assassinated on landing in Egypt. His head was presented to Cæsar, who, instead of rewarding the murderer, ordered him to be put to death.

Born 106 B.C; died 48 B.C.

POMPEY, CNEIUS MAGNUS, elder son of the preceding, endeavoured to avenge his father's murder upon Cæsar; but was defeated at Munda, in Spain, and was shortly afterwards slain.

Died B.C. 45.

POMPEY, SEXTUS MAGNUS, younger son of Pompey, waged a successful war against Octavius; but being defeated by the latter in a great sea-fight, B.C. 36, he fled to Asia, and was put to death at the order of Titius, at Miletus.

Born 75 B.C.; died 35 B.C.

POMPAIGNAN, JEAN JACQUES LE FRANC, Marquis de, pom'-peen-yawng, a French writer, who was admitted a member of the French Academy in 1760; on which occasion he had the courage to deliver an inaugural discourse in defence of Christianity, which drew upon him a number of satires and lampoons from Voltaire and others. His works consist of dramatic pieces, sacred odes, moral discourses, a translation of the Georgics, &c.

Born at Montauban, 1709; died 1784.

POMPONATIUS, PIETRO, pom'-po-nai'-shi-us, a learned Italian, who taught philosophy at Padua and other cities in Italy, with extraordinary reputation. In his book "De Immortalitate Animæ," printed at Bologna, in 1516, he maintained that a future state was no part of the Aristotelian philosophy, but a matter of religious faith. This position occasioned a violent controversy and Pomponatius, though supported by cardinal Bembo, was regarded as an atheist.

Born at Mantua, 1462; died 1525.

POMPONIUS, LÆTUS JULIUS, pom-po'-ni-us, a name given to Peter of Calabria, who went to Rome, where he was distinguished for his talents, till he was falsely accused of conspiring against pope Paul II. He then retired to Venice; but, after the death of that pontiff, he returned to Rome, where he became suspected of atheism, on account of his enthusiasm for the ancient philosophy. His principal works are, "The Lives of the Cæsars;" editions of Sallust, Pliny the Younger, and some of the works of Cicero: commentaries on Quintilian, Columella, Virgil, &c.

Born in Calabria, 1425; died 1495.

PONANI or PANIANI, po-na'-ne, a seaport of British India, on the south of an estuary of a river of the same name, on the Malabar coast, 600 miles S.E. of Bombay. It was formerly a much more important place. A direct line of railway across the peninsula connects the town with Madras.

PONCE DE LEON, LUIS, ponse-dai'-lai'-on, Spanish poet. At the age of 17 he entered the order of St. Augustine, and studied theology at Salamanca, where he was made professor in 1561. He gained a great reputation as a commentator on the Bible, but a translation by him of the "Song of Solomon," which he treated as a pastoral eclogue, led to his being summoned to appear before the Inquisition at Valladolid, on a charge of heresy, and of translating the sacred writings contrary to the decrees of the Council of Trent. He was imprisoned for five years, when the influence of friends obtained his release, and he was reinstated in his professorial chair. He afterwards published a Latin commentary on the "Song of Solomon," which was considered satisfactorily orthodox. He was also the author of admirable translations from Virgil and Horace, some very elegant lyrics and odes, and some prose works exhibiting great imaginative power.

Born 1527; died 1591.

PONCE DE LEON, JUAN, a Spanish discoverer. In early life he distinguished himself in military service against the Moors, and in 1493 he accompanied Columbus on his second expedition. He conquered the island of Porto Rico, incurring blame by his severity, and he then set out to discover a fountain capable of restoring youth and beauty, of which he had heard. In 1512 he discovered Florida, of which he took possession, but did not discover the wonderful fountain. In 1513 he went to Spain, and was appointed governor of Florida, to which he returned, but was severely wounded by the natives, and withdrew to Cuba.

Born in Spain, 1460; died at Cuba, 1521.

PONDICHERY, pon'-de-sher'-re, a city on the Coromandel coast of India, and the capital of the French settlements, 83 miles from Madras. It stands on a sandy plain, and is divided by a canal into a European and a native town. There are a Roman Catholic cathedral, a European college, and the residence of the French governor-general. The roadstead is defended by a citadel. Manf. Cotton. There is an export trade in indigo, cotton, skins, and nests. Pop. 50,000.—In 1761 it was taken by the army under Colonel Coote, but was restored to France at the peace of 1763. In 1771 it surrendered to the British force under Sir H. Monro, and was again restored at the peace of 1783. It was again taken in the revolutionary war, and restored at the general peace.

PONDICHERY, the territory of which the preceding is the chief town. It is divided into three districts, Pondichery, Vellenone, and Bahour, and comprises 92 villages. Area, 107 square miles. Pop. 90,000.

PONFERRADA, pon-fer-ra'-da, a town of Spain, province of Leon, 57 miles from the town of that name. It is between the rivers Sil and Boeza, with suburbs on the opposite sides, connected by bridges. Manf. Leather and pottery. Pop. 4,300.

PONIATOWSKI, JOSEF ANTONI, Prince, pon'-e-a-tow'-ske, descendant of a princely family of Poland, a branch of the Italian family of Torelli, and a distinguished general, who at first served in the Austrian army, and when his countrymen rose against Russia, in 1789, he was appointed commander-in-chief of the army of the south. In 1792 he gained several brilliant victories over the Russians; but resigned his command when king Stanislas concluded the peace of Targowitz, in the following year. In 1794 he aided Kosciusko in his opposition to the third partition of Poland, and in 1800, at the head of a Polish army, served with the French against the Russians. He was appointed commander-in-chief of the duchy of Warsaw, and in 1809 obtained considerable successes over the Austrians. In 1812 Napoleon, preparing to invade Russia, gave him the command of the 5th corps of the "grand army," which was composed of Poles. In the subsequent battles he distinguished himself by his skill and bravery, and covered himself with glory in the retreat from Moscow. Shortly before the battle of Leipsic he was created a marshal of France. After the defeat he protected the French retreat, but was wounded, and in attempting to swim his horse across the Elster was drowned.

Born at Warsaw, 1762; died 1813.

PONIATOWSKI, JOSEPH, Prince, diplomatist and musical composer, and cousin of the preceding. He served for a time with the French army in Algeria, and then settled in Florence, the grand duke of Tuscany conferring on him the title of prince of Monte Rotundo. He was a member of the Tuscan chambers, and minister of Tuscany at Brussels and London. In 1854 he settled in France, where he was naturalised and made a senator. On the fall of the empire, in 1870, he came to London, and supported himself by his musical talents. He was the composer of "Ruy Blas," "Esmeralda," and other popular operas, and several masses. He had a fine tenor voice, and in early life appeared several times on the stage.

Born at Rome, 1816; died in London, 1873.

PONIATOWSKI, STANISLAS, Prince, a Polish nobleman, who distinguished himself as general of the Swedish army of Charles XII. It was through his bravery that Charles was enabled to effect his escape after the battle of Pultava, and afterwards succeeded in winning over the Porte to support the unfortunate monarch against the Russians. He subsequently returned to Poland, and Frederick Augustus I. created him general of the royal guard and treasurer of Lithuania. He also enjoyed the favour of his son, Frederick Augustus II., who succeeded to the crown of Poland. By that monarch he was appointed castellan of Cracow, one of the highest posts in the country. One of his sons became king of Poland, under the name of Stanislas Augustus.

Born 1678; died 1762.

POONA, or PUNA, poo'-na, a city of British India, capital of a district of the same name, in the presidency of Bombay, on the River Moota, 1,800 feet above the sea level, 76 miles S.E. of Bombay. It is a modern town, and not fortified; but covers about two miles square of ground. The city is divided into seven quarters, named after the days of the week. The palace (formerly the residence of the Peishwah) is surrounded by high and thick brick walls, with round towers at the angles, and has only one entrance, which is through a pointed arch. There are a college for the study of Sanscrit literature, a government college, erected mainly at the expense of Sir Jamsetjee Jeejeebhoy, and about two miles from the city are very large cavalry cantonments, and the head-quarters of the Bombay army. The climate is pleasant and salubrious. Pop. 129,751; of district, 900,621.

POPAYAN, po-pa-yan', a city of the republic of Columbia, South America, situate on an extensive plain, 6,000 feet above the level of the sea, on the Cauca river. Pop. 129,751; of district, 900,621.

POPE, ALEXANDER, pope, an English poet, whose father was a linendraper in London. His parents being of the Roman Catholic persuasion, he was placed, at eight years of age, under a priest named Taverner, who taught him the rudiments of the Latin and Greek languages. Meeting with Ogilby's Homer about this time, he was so much pleased with the work that it became his favourite book; and when he was at school, at the age of 10, he turned some of the events of Homer into a play, which was performed by the upper boys, the master's gardener representing Ajax. At the age of 12 he went with his parents to Binfield, in Windsor Forest, where his father had purchased an estate. Here he formed his intention of becoming a poet, and wrote his "Ode on Solitude," which appears as the first fruits of his poetic genius. It was here that he first met with the works of Waller, Spencer, and Dryden; but, on perusing Dryden, he abandoned the rest, and studied him as a model. In his 16th year he wrote his Pastorals; the "Essay on Criticism," "Rape of the Lock," and "Windsor Forest," quickly following. The "Essay on Criticism," notwithstanding the youth of the author, is one of the finest poems in the language, and contains the soundest rules; but his genius shone to a greater advantage in his "Rape of the Lock," founded on the circumstance of Lord Petre's cutting off a lock of Mrs. Fermor's hair. About 1713, the poet being then in his 25th year, he published proposals for a translation of the "Iliad," in which he met with such great encouragement, that he was enabled to purchase a house at Twickenham, whither he removed in 1717. After completing the "Iliad," he undertook the "Odyssey," for which also he received a liberal subscription. He was, however, materially assisted in this work by the learning and abilities of Broome and Fenton. In 1721, Pope published an edition of Shakspeare. The reputation which he had acquired by the success as well as the merit of his works procured him numerous enemies among writers of the minor classes, from whom he experienced frequent splenetic attacks. His temper was too irritable and too little under control to permit his taking no notice of them; and in 1728 he vented his resentment in a mock heroic, entitled "The Dunciad." In 1733, by the advice of Lord Bolingbroke, he employed his pen upon a moral and philosophical subject, the result of which was his "Essay on Man," an ethical poem addressed to that statesman. He next wrote satires, in which he attacked several persons of rank. Pope was engaged in preparing a complete edition of his works when he was carried off by asthma. In person Pope was small and crooked; yet there was much animation and elegance in his countenance, except when he was labouring under his hereditary complaint, the headache. His friendships appear to have been capricious, and he had no small portion of vanity in his disposition, to which, and self-interest, almost all considerations were readily sacrificed. He was tenderly attached to two sisters named Blount, and his romantic friendship and subsequent quarrel with Lady Mary Wortley Montague formed a well-known episode in his life. For grace, wit, pungent but elegant satire, not unmixed with a greater power of sentiment and pathos than he is generally credited with, Pope is unrivalled; and his mastery of versification and exquisite appropriateness of language place him in the very first rank of English authors.

Born in London, 1688; died at Twickenham 1744.

POPE, SIR THOMAS, received his education at Eton school, and afterwards studied the law. At the age of 28 he became treasurer of the Court of Augmentations, and was shortly afterwards appointed visitor of religious houses, in which situation he conducted himself with moderation. In 1540 he was knighted and made master of the jewel house in the Tower. He was the intimate friend of Sir Thomas More, to whom, by order of the king, he communicated the sad tidings of his intended execution. In 1554 he founded Trinity College, Oxford.

Born at Deddington, Oxfordshire, 1508; died in London, 1558.

POPERINGEN, po-per-ing'en (Fr. POPERINGUE, po-pe-rang'), a town of Belgium, province of West Flanders, on the Vleterbeque, 6 miles from Ypres. It contains several well-built churches. Manf. Woollens, serges, thread, leather, soap, and earthenware. Pop. 8,993.

PORDENONE, por-dai-no'-nai, a town of Italy, province of Venetia, on the Nocella, 40 miles N.E. of Venice. It is surrounded by an old wall, and has eight churches. Manf. Linen, copper utensils, paper, and glass. There is a large trade in corn and wine. Pop. 7,400.

PORDENONE, GIOVANNO ANTONIO LICINIO REGILLO, an eminent Italian painter, so called from the place of his birth. He was the disciple of Giorgione, and the rival of Titian. The emperor Charles V. conferred on him the honour of knighthood.

Born at Pordenone, Friuli, 1483; died 1539.

PORPHYRY, or PORPHYRIUS, por'-fi-re, a Platonic philosopher, who studied eloquence at Athens, under Longinus, and philosophy at Rome, under Plotinus, whose life he wrote. His proper name was Malchus, the Greek form of the Syro-Phœnician Melich, meaning "king," to which the Greek Porphyrius is analogous. His learning was great, and he composed many works, one of which, against the Scriptures, was burnt by order of Theodosius the Great.

Born at Tyre, 233; died at Rome, 305.

PORPORA, NICOLO, por-po'-ra, Italian musical composer, author of many compositions for the church and theatre, but chiefly famous for his success as a teacher of singing. He resided in England from 1729 to 1738, and was for a time considered as a rival of Handel.

Born at Naples, 1687; died 1766.

PORSENNA, or PORSENA, LARS, por-sn'-na or por'-se-na, a lord of Etruria, who, according to the legend preserved by Livy, declared war against the Romans because they refused to restore Tarquin to his throne. At first successful, he would have entered the gates of Rome, had not Horatius Cocles stood at the head of a bridge, and resisted the fury of the whole Etrurian army, while his companions behind were cutting off the communication with the opposite shore. (See COCLES, Horatius.) This act of bravery astonished Porsenna; but when he had seen Mutius Scævola, who had entered his camp with the intention of murdering him, burn his hand without emotion, to convince him of his fortitude, he no longer dared to make head against so brave a people. He made a peace with the Romans, and never after supported the claims of Tarquin.

Lived in the 6th century B.C.

PORSON, RICHARD, por'-son, a Greek scholar, the son of a parish clerk in Norfolk. Through the liberality of Mr. Norris, a gentleman of that county, he was enabled to pursue his studies at Eton. A similar act of liberality on the part of Sir George Baker was the means of his proceeding to Cambridge, where he pursued his career in a most distinguished manner till, in 1790, he was unanimously elected regius professor of Greek. In 1792 he resigned a fellowship of Trinity College, as he could not conscientiously take orders in the church. Under the establishment of the London Institution, Porson struggled with poverty, having only the £40 a year afforded by his professorship to subsist upon; but on being appointed chief librarian to the last-named institution, with a salary of £200 per annum, his circumstances became comparatively easy. His love of drink amounted to a disease, and his irregular habits deprived him of many of his best friends. Although one of the greatest scholars England has produced, Porson published very little, his Tracts and Miscellaneous Criticisms upon the Greek Writers, and his edition of the "Lexicon of Photius," being his most important efforts. He died of apoplexy, and was buried in the chapel of Trinity College, Cambridge.

Born at East Ruston, Norfolk, 1759; died 1808.

PORT ADELAIDE, a seaport of the county of Adelaide, South Australia, and the port of the capital, 7 miles distant. It is situated on an estuary of Gulf St. Vincent, and the harbour, although the entrance is partially obstructed by limestone bars, is available for large vessels. Pop. 3,013.

PORT AU PRINCE, or PORT REPUBLICAN, a seaport town and capital of the island of Hayti, situate on the western coast, at the head of a bay of the same name. There are a palace, senate-house, several churches, a college, custom-house, mint, and hospital. There is a trade in mahogany, logwood, coffee, and cocoa. Pop. 35,000. Lat. 18° 35′ N. Lon. 72° 18′ W.—In 1770 great part of it was destroyed by an earthquake; in 1791 it was set on fire; and in 1794 it was taken by the English.

PORT CAROLINA. (See KINGSTON.)

PORT CHALMERS, a township at the entrance of the harbour of OTAGO, New Zealand. There is a railway pier 1,000 feet long, and the Otago graving dock, opened in 1872, the largest in the southern hemisphere. Pop. 2,181.

PORT DARWIN, a bay on the west coast of Arnhem Land, in northern Australia. It is divided into two parts by a promontory. It is the landing place of the telegraph line which crosses Australia from north to south. A large portion of territory has been surveyed for a settlement.

PORT ELIZABETH. (See ELIZABETH, PORT.)

PORT ESSINGTON, es'-sing-ton, a bay on the north side of Coburg peninsula, Arnhem's Land, northern Australia. There are three fine harbours. A settlement was, in 1838, founded here; but, on account of the insalubrity of the climate, was abandoned in 1849. Lat. 11° 6′ S. Lon. 132° 12′ E.

PORT GLASGOW, a parliamentary borough and seaport of Renfrewshire, Scotland, on the Clyde, 20 miles N.W. of Glasgow. It was founded in 1688, as a harbour for ships that were too large to ascend the river; but that having been deepened, vessels can now go direct to Glasgow, and the trade of the place has been diminished. There are a custom-house, a large wet dock, extensive quays and building yards. Manf. Chain cables, ropes, and sugar. Pop. 10,913.—Port Glasgow was incorporated as a municipality in 1775, and by the Reform Bill of 1832 made one of the Kilmarnock district burghs.—A station on the Caledonian railway.

PORT OF SPAIN, the principal town of the island of Trinidad, West Indies, on the west coast of the Gulf of Paria, near the mouth of the Carony river. There is a spacious harbour, and a large trade is carried on. Pop. 7,000. Lat. 38° 6′ N. Lon. 61° 32′ W.

PORT PHILLIP. (See MELBOURNE.)

PORT ROYAL, roï-al, a seaport on the south-east coast of Jamaica, on a narrow neck of land forming the southern side of Kingston harbour. It is a station for British ships of war, and there are a naval arsenal and hospital. The fortifications are kept in excellent order, and are remarkably strong. Pop. 1205, the greater number coloured. Lat. 17° 56′ N. Lon. 76° 51′ W.

PORT SAID, saï-id, a town of Egypt, at the junction of the Suez Canal with the Mediterranean. It was an insignificant village before the construction of the canal. There are an outer and inner harbour and large dockyards. About 1,000 vessels, principally steamers, enter the port annually. Pop. 16,560.

PORTA, GIAMBATTISTA, por'-ta, a Neapolitan writer on science, who invented the camera obscura, and acquired a great reputation by his works on science, particularly mathematics, medicine, and natural history. He held assemblies of learned men in his house, which were condemned by the court of Rome, on the absurd charge that the object of their meetings was the discussion of magic. Some writers have claimed for Porta the discovery of the telescope; but the most competent critics admit that Galileo is the only person to whom that honour is due. His principal works are,—treatise on natural magic, in Latin; another on physiognomy, mixed with astrology, and other delusions of his age.

Born at Naples, about 1550; died 1615.

PORTA, GIACOMO DELLA, an Italian architect, who built the Gregorian chapel, several fine churches, and other structures, and finished the cupola of St. Peter's, at Rome, in 1590. The Villa Aldobrandini, now called Belvedere, is one of his best works.

PORTER, ANNA MARIA, por'-ter, an English novelist, who, while a child, residing with her mother at Edinburgh, made the acquaintance of sir Walter Scott, then in his youth. Her first attempts in fiction are said to have sprung from the suggestions of the future novelist, who used to relate stories to her. Her chief works are, "The Hungarian Brothers," "The Recluse of Norway," "The Village of Mariendorpt," and "The Knight of St. John." She was also the authoress of a collection of ballad-romances, and other poems.

Born at Durham, about 1781; died near Bristol, 1832.

PORTER, JANE, an English novelist, the sister of the preceding, and authoress of "The Scottish Chiefs," "Thaddeus of Warsaw," "The Pastor's Fireside," "The Field of Forty Footsteps," &c.

Born 1776; died at Bristol, 1850.

PORTER, SIR ROBERT KER, an English painter, and brother of the two preceding novelists. He produced some battle-pieces of an extraordinary size. In 1804 he was appointed historical painter to the emperor of Russia, and painted upon the walls of the Admiralty, at St. Petersburg, "Peter the Great planning the Port of Cronstadt and St. Petersburg." He went to Spain in 1808, and accompanied the army of Sir John Moore until the battle of Corunna; he was also a spectator of the great Russian campaign of Napoleon while in Russia, an account of which he published on his return to England. In 1813 he was created a knight by the prince-regent. During the interval 1817-20 he travelled with his wife, the princess Mary de Sherbatoff, in Georgia, Persia, and Armenia, and published a work on that tour in 1822. Several years later he obtained the appointment of British consul at Venezuela, which post he filled until the year 1841. During the concluding years of his life he painted few pictures, and these chiefly upon sacred subjects.

Born at Durham, 1775; died at St. Petersburg, 1842.

PORTER, a county of Indiana, United States. Area, 420 square miles. Pop. 17,227. The capital is Valparaiso.

PORTICI, por-te'-che, a town of Italy, province of Caserta, at the foot of Mount Vesuvius, 4 miles S.E. of Naples. It has a royal palace, built by Charles III., and adorned with pictures and frescoes from the walls of Pompeii; a museum of antique statues, bronze arms, and furniture, also taken from the buried cities. There are a fortress and a small harbour, called the Granatello. Pop. 11,300.

PORTLAND, port'-land, a seaport town of Victoria, Australia, on the west coast of Portland Bay, 225 miles S.W. of Melbourne. It was established as a whaling station in 1834, and is consequently the oldest settlement in the colony. There is good jetty accommodation for loading and unloading vessels, and a breakwater in course of construction. The town is surrounded by a very productive district. Pop. 2,500.

PORTLAND, a city and seaport of Maine, United States, 105 miles N.E. of Boston. It is finely situate on a peninsula in Casco Bay, has broad streets and handsome public edifices; among them a handsome court-house, custom-house, post-office in the Italian style, and a city hall. There is a good harbour, the winter station of the Canadian steamers. Manf. Locomotive and marine engines, and sugar. A large coasting trade is carried on. Pop. 34,000.—This town was settled as an English colony in 1632, and named Falmouth. It suffered greatly in the wars with the French and Indians.

PORTLAND, the chief city of Oregon, United States, and the capital of Multnomah county, situated on the west bank of the Willamette river, and at the head of ship navigation, 50 miles N. of Salem The town is very handsomely laid out, and traversed for almost the entire length by a fine promenade, 300 feet wide. It is a great railroad centre, and a large trade is carried on in the export of wheat, flour, and lumber. Manf. Iron, machinery, boots, and shoes, nails and soap. Pop. 17,577.

PORTLAND ISLE, or the BILL OF PORTLAND, a small peninsula (nearly an island), of Dorsetshire, in the English Channel, opposite Weymouth. It is connected with the mainland by a very singular ridge of pebbles, called the Chesil Bank, which extends 10 miles westwards from the island, along the coast, and at no great distance from it, being separated by a long narrow channel called the Fleet. The island slopes to the south from an elevation of nearly 500 feet, is about 9 miles in circumference, and consists nearly of one continued mass of freestone, and this forms the famous Portland stone, of which such quantities are exported to the metropolis and other places. On the northern side is Portland castle, erected in 1520 as a protection for this part of the coast. The convict prison, near the east coast, has room for more than 1,500 convicts. A famous breed of sheep feeds on the island. Pop. 9,900.

PORTLAW, port-law', a town of Ireland, county of Waterford, 10 miles N.W. of Waterford. Manf. Cotton, extensive. Pop. 3,800.

PORTO. (See OPORTO.)

PORTO ALEGRE, por'-to-a-lai'-grai, a town of Brazil, at the north-west extremity of the Lake of Patos. Pop. 35,000.

PORTOBELLO, por'-to-bel'-lo, a seaport parliamentary borough, and summer resort of Scotland, on the south bank of the Frith of Forth, 3 miles E. of Edinburgh. There are a pier 1,250 feet long, and a marine promenade a mile in length. Manf. Earthenware, bottles, and paper. Pop. 5,380.—A station on North British Railway.

PORTO BELLO. (See PUERTO BELLO.)

PORTO CABELLO. (See PUERTO CABELLO.)

PORTO FERRAJO, fer-ra'-yo, the capital of the island of Elba, Italy, on a lofty point of land projecting into a bay on the north coast. There is a good harbour, and iron is exported. Pop. 3,900. —It was the residence of Bonaparte, after his first abdication of the throne of France, in 1814.

PORTO MAURIZIO, mo-re'-ze-o, a compartment of the Italian province of Liguria, on the Gulf of Genoa. The district is noted for olives and olive oil, both being produced and consumed profusely by the inhabitants. Pop. 133,607.

PORTO NOVO, no'-vo, a town of India, province of Madras, on the Coromandel coast, 32 miles S. of Pondichery. Manf. Railway iron. Pop. 12,000. Lat. 11° 31' N. Lon. 79° 51' E.—In 1781 the British, under Sir Eyre Coote, gained a great victory here over Hyder Ali.

PORTO RICO, an island of the West Indies, a possession of Spain. Area, 3,550 square miles. Pop. 731,648.

PORTO SANTO, san'-to, a small island in the Atlantic, a dependency of Madeira, from which it is distant 40 miles. It is mountainous and volcanic. Maize, barley, fruits, and wine are produced. Christopher Columbus resided here for some time in his early life. Pop. 1,700.

PORTOGRUARO, por'-to-groo-ar'-o, a town of Italy, province of Venetia, 35 miles N.E. of Venice, in the centre of a marshy and unhealthy district. There are a cathedral and four churches. Manf. Leather, hats, and silk. Pop. 7,900.

PORTSEA. (See PORTSMOUTH.)

PORTSEA ISLAND, port'-see, a small island on the south coast of Hampshire, about four miles long, and three miles broad, separated from the mainland on the north by a narrow channel crossed by several bridges. Portsmouth harbour is on the W., Langstone harbour on the S.E., and Chichester harbour on the E.

PORTSMOUTH, ports'-mouth, a seaport, market-town, and municipal and parliamentary borough of Hampshire, the chief naval arsenal of Great Britain, 74 miles S.W. of London, on the south-western extremity of Portsea Island, at the entrance of Portsmouth harbour, opposite to Gosport, with which it communicates by a steam bridge. Portsea, to the north, separated only by a small arch, crossed by several bridges, is practically a part of the town, and to the south is Southsea, a pleasant suburb, and fashionable watering-place, now united to the town, with Southsea common, an open tract affording an attractive seaside promenade about a mile long. Landport and Kingston are suburbs adjoining Portsea. The old fortifications of Portsea have been demolished, and the ramparts planted with trees; and new fortifications, the strongest in the kingdom, have been erected for the defence of Portsmouth, the harbour, dockyard, and roadstead of Spithead. The works comprise an outer-line of land defences, along Portsdown, north of the harbour, consisting of six large forts, with ramparts, outworks, and bomb-proof barracks, an under line on the eastern and western sides of the harbour; Monkton Fort, at the western side of the entrance, and a very strong fortification, Southsea castle, on the eastern side, and several forts, forming an outer line of sea and Spithead defences. The dockyard, the largest in the country, covers a space of about 290 acres, of which 94 acres have been reclaimed from the harbour. There are 12 docks (several of which will admit the largest ironclads), roofed over and closed by lock gates. The buildings for repairs, smithies, mast and rope houses, and other dockyard establishments, are on the most extensive scale, and there are about 11,000 feet of wharfage, along which the largest ships can lie. There is a school of naval architecture. The dockyard is entered by two large gates, known as the Lion and the Unicorn. The streets of Portsmouth are narrow, the buildings crowded, and apart from the dockyard there are few objects of interest; but in the more open parts of Portsea are some good residences, and at Southsea many handsome houses. Parts of the church of St. Thomas date from the 12th century, and in the church is a memorial of the duke of Buckingham, who was murdered by Felton. St. Nicholas, or the garrison church, was restored in 1867. The Circus, a Roman Catholic church, built in 1864, is a handsome structure in the Italian style. The new guildhall (in the area beneath which the market is held), the Athenæum and Philosophical Society are fine buildings, and there are a custom house, several barracks, sailor's home, hospitals, convict prisons and other public establishments. Among the public monuments are the Chesapeake memorial, a handsome granite column, and statues of Wellington and Nelson, on the esplanade at Southsea. A considerable foreign and coasting trade is carried on. Pop. 127,953.—A station on the London and South-Western, and London

Brighton, and South Coast railways.—Portsmouth received its first charter from Richard Cœur de Lion, and is a place of considerable antiquity. The earliest mention of it occurs in the Saxon Chronicle, A.D. 501. Edward IV. surrounded it with fortifications, which were greatly extended afterwards by succeeding monarchs.

PORTSMOUTH, a city and seaport of the United States, New Hampshire, on the south bank of the Piscataqua river, 3 miles from the Atlantic, and 54 miles N.E. of Boston. It contains a court-house, state arsenal, an Athenæum, 10 churches; and the harbour is one of the best in the United States. The entrance is defended by two forts, and there is a lighthouse. Manf. Cotton and hosiery, machinery, and carriages. Pop. 9,200.

PORTSMOUTH, a city and port of the United States, in Norfolk county, Virginia, on the west bank of Elizabeth river, opposite Norfolk, and 38 miles from Hampton Roads. It has a court-house, military academy, and six churches. There is a suburb, Gosport, at which is a United States navy yard. The harbour is accessible to the largest vessels. Pop. 11,000.

PORTSMOUTH, a city of Ohio, United States, on the north bank of the Ohio river, at the mouth of the Scioto, 85 miles S.E. of Cincinnati. Manf. Iron and machinery. Pop. 11,000.

PORTUGAL, por'-tu-gal, the most westerly kingdom of Europe, forming the western part of the Spanish peninsula, bounded S. and W. by the Atlantic, N. and E. by Spain, from which it is separated by political rather than natural boundaries. The mountains and rivers are generally only prolongations of Spanish rivers and streams, the average breadth of the kingdom being not more than 100 miles. The coast line, 500 miles long, consists mostly of low, sandy or marshy tracts; but rises in some parts, especially near Cabo da Rocca, the most westerly point, to cliffs of a considerable elevation. There are few bays or harbours, except at the mouths of the principal rivers. The interior of the country is generally mountainous, various ranges stretching in a southern or south-western direction. The loftiest chain is the Serra de Estrella, a continuation of the great mountain range which traverses the centre of Spain. The greatest elevation is 7,524 feet, near the town of Covilha, and the range terminates in the Cabo da Rocca and the steep acclivity of Cintra. Nearly parallel to the chain are the Serra do Alcoba, on the north, and the Serra Moradal, on the south. In the northern part of the kingdom is the Penagache range, attaining a considerable height in Mount Gavieira. In the extreme south, the Serra de Calderao and the Serra de Monchique (western continuations of the Spanish Sierra Morena) cross the kingdom and terminate in the most southern promontory, Cape St. Vincent. Between these ranges are many beautiful and fertile valleys. The plains are not extensive. The heat in summer is excessive, but the vicinity of the sea imparts an agreeable moisture. The winters are colder than is ordinarily the case in similar latitudes. In the northern mountains snow falls abundantly, but it is never seen in the lowlands of the southern districts. There is a considerable amount of rain, especially on the coast, between October and March. In the elevated districts the climate is generally healthy, but fever and malaria prevail in the low flat lands. Thunderstorms and hurricanes are frequent. Every species of European and many semi-tropical fruits and vegetables are grown abundantly; grain, flax, and hemp, are cultivated in the more elevated districts, rice in the lowlands, and a large extent of country is devoted to the culture of the vine and olive. Many of the mountains are clothed with forests of cork, oak, and chestnut. Very fine cattle are reared in the north, sheep are extensively bred, and bees and silkworms are reared. Fish is abundant on the coast, especially the tunny and anchovy.

Rivers.—The largest rivers entering Portugal from Spain, or forming part of the boundary, are the Minho, in the north; the Douro, which forms part of the boundary on the north and north-east, and enters the sea at Oporto; the Tagus intersects the kingdom from the northern frontier to the southern termination of the Serra de Estrella, and enters the sea at Lisbon; the Guadiana, quitting Spain near Badajoz, has a southward course; and the Mondego, Vouga, and Sado, which all rise within the limits of Portugal.

Minerals.—Some gold, lead, copper, antimony, iron, coal, slate, marble, and salt.

Area.—35,812 square miles.

Pop.—4,307,000. In the southern districts, the traces of Moorish descent are very apparent.

Administrative Divisions.—There are six provinces, MINHO, TRAS-OS-MONTES, BEIRA, ESTREMADURA, ALEMTEJO, and ALAGARVE.

Chief Towns.—LISBON, the capital; OPORTO, BRAGA, COIMBRA, ELVAS, EVORA, Setubal, and Ovar.

Colonial and other Possessions.—The AZORES, MADEIRA, PORTO SANTO, and Cape Verde islands in the Atlantic; in Africa, ANGOLA, AMBRIZ, BENGUELA, and MOSAMEDES; in Asia, Goa and some other small settlements in India; Macao in China, and some settlements in the Indian Archipelago. The total area of these possessions is about 709,470 square miles, and the population 3,258,000.

Constitution and Government.—The crown is hereditary in the female as well as male line; but with preference of the male in case of equal birthright. There are two legislative chambers, the Câmara dos Pares, or house of peers, and the Câmara dos Deputados, or house of commons, which are conjunctively called the Cortes Geraes. The peers, unlimited in number, are named for life by the sovereign, by whom also the president and vice-president of the first chamber are nominated.

Religion and Education.—The Roman Catholic faith is the state religion; but all other forms of worship are tolerated. Public education is entirely free from the supervision and control of the church. By a law enacted in 1844, it is compulsory on parents to send their children to a place of public instruction: but this prescription is far from being enforced, and only a very small fraction of the children of the middle and lower classes really attend school. There is only one university in the kingdom, that of Coimbra.

Commerce.—The commercial relations of Portugal are chiefly with Great Britain, and there is very little trade, either by land or sea, with other countries. Next to Great Britain, but far below, stand Brazil and France. The single article wine constitutes more than two-thirds of the value of Portuguese exports to all countries. The other exports are cattle, cork, olive oil, oranges and lemons, pyrites of iron or copper, elephants' teeth, and sheep's wool.

Railways and Telegraphs.—There are about 700 miles of railway in operation, and 2,200 miles of telegraph lines.

History.—Portugal forms the greater part of the ancient Lusitania, and was known, at least along its coast, to the Phœnicians and Carthaginians. It constituted a Roman province under Augustus, and was overrun by tribes of Alani, Suevi, and Visigoths. In the 8th century it was subjected by the Moors, who in the 13th century were expelled from the kingdom. In the 11th century it became subject to Ferdinand I. of Castile; and in 1095, Henry of Burgundy obtained it as a dependent fief. His son, Alfonso I., having gained a great victory over the Moors in 1139, was proclaimed an independent king. Portugal afterwards became a great naval power, her navigators making many discoveries in Africa, and finding the maritime route to India. The old Burgundian line became extinct in 1580, and after many struggles, the duke de Braganza, a descendant of the old line, was established on the throne in 1640. In 1807 a French army occupied Lisbon, and the royal family removed the seat of government to Brazil, which was in their possession till 1826. The government of Portugal was formerly despotic, everything being in the power of the king. But a revolution took place in 1826, which originated with the army, the soldiers declaring their attachment to a free constitution, and their resolution to submit no longer to the despotism. A free government was accordingly organised, and was proceeding very peaceably with various important reforms, both civil and ecclesiastical, when, after the entrance of the French troops into Spain, in 1823, a counter-revolution took place, and from 1827 to 1833 the throne was occupied by the usurper Don Miguel. In 1836 several changes took place, and the present constitution was established.

PORTUS, FRANCIS, por'-tus, an eminent Greek professor, who filled the chair of classical literature at Padua, Modena, and Ferrara. Having embraced the reformed faith, he quitted Italy and went to Geneva, where he obtained a professorship in 1562. His works are, additions to the Greek dictionary of Constantine; commentaries upon Pindar, Thucydides, Longinus, Xenophon, and other ancient authors.

Born in the island of Crete, 1511; died at Geneva, 1581.

PORUS, por'-us, king of part of India, near the river Hydaspes, on the banks of which he was defeated by Alexander, who, asking him how he would wish to be treated,—"As a king," said Porus. This answer so pleased the victor, that he not only restored to him his dominions, but added thereto several provinces. He was treacherously put to death by Eudamus.

Died 317 B.C.

POSEIDON, po-si'-don, in Greek mythology, the son of Cronos and Rhea, the god of water, and afterwards of the ocean generally. The worship is supposed to have come to the Greeks from Lybia. (See NEPTUNE.)

POSEN, GRAND DUCHY OF, po'-zen, a province of Prussia, bounded E. by Russian Poland, S. and W. by Silesia and Brandenberg, and N. by Prussia. Area, 11,500 square miles. Desc. Mostly level, and in some parts marshy. Rivers. This province is watered by the Netze, the Warta, the Vistula, and Prosna. Pro. Hemp, flax, tobacco, hops, wool, bog-iron, and nitre. Manf. Woollens, brandy, and leather. Pop. 1,703,397, chiefly Poles. Lat. between 51° 30′ and 53° 30′ N. Lon. between 15° 30′ and 19° E.

POSEN, the capital of the grand-duchy of Posen, at the confluence of the Prosna and the Warta, 144 miles from Berlin. It is surrounded with a mound and ditch, and is built with tolerable regularity. Of its public edifices, the cathedral and council-house are old; the principal guard-house, and the building that was the Jesuits' college, are comparatively recent. Here, also, are a theatre, a theological seminary, a college, and school. Manf. Linen, leather, and watches; also firearms. Here, as in the rest of Poland, the sale and purchase of goods are chiefly managed by Jews, who occupy a particular quarter of the town. Pop. of the dist., 1,095,873; of the city, 68,177, military inclusive.

POSEY, po'-se, a county of Indiana, United States. Area, 400 square miles. Pop. 20,000. The capital is Mount Vernon.

POSHAVEVATZ. (See PASSARONITZ.)

POSIDONIUS, pos-i-do'-ni-us, an astronomer of Alexandria, who undertook to ascertain the circumference of the earth, which he made to be 30,000 furlongs.

Lived in the 2nd century B.C.

POSIDONIUS, a Stoic philosopher, who was a native of Apamea, in Syria, and taught with reputation at Rhodes. Josephus charges him with having invented the calumny against the Jews, that they worshipped the head of an ass. Cicero makes several allusions to his writings.

Died 51 B.C.

POSING, po'-sing, a town of Hungary, 12 miles N.E. of Presburg. It has celebrated mineral baths. Manf. Paper, lime, and saltpetre. There is a considerable trade in wood, floated to the Danube. Pop. 5,000.

POSTEL, GUILLAUME, pos'-tel, a French mystic. He was sent by Francis I. into the East, to collect manuscripts, and, on his return, was appointed royal professor of mathematics and languages. He lost this post, however, in consequence of his extraordinary opinions, and went to Rome, where he turned Jesuit; but was expelled from the order and imprisoned, for maintaining that the authority of councils was superior to that of Popes. On gaining his liberty he went to Venice, and formed an intimacy with an old woman who had given herself up to mystic reveries. Postel started the strange notion that women had been left without redemption, which was now accomplished by Mother Joan, the name of this visionary. For his wild fancies he was again imprisoned: but recovered his liberty, and returned to Paris. He afterwards wrote a retractation, and was restored to his professorship; but again relapsed, and was confined in a monastery. He wrote a great number of works on theology, and the oriental languages.

Born at Dolerie, Normandy, 1510; died at Paris, 1581.

POSTHUMUS, MARCUS CASSIUS LATIENUS, post'-hu-mus, a Roman general, who was elected emperor in Gaul on the death of Valerian, in 260. He defeated the Germans in several actions, and displayed talents and virtues worthy of his dignity; but having refused to allow his soldiers to plunder Mayence, they rose against and slew him and his son.

Died 267.

POTCHINKY, pot-tchin'-ke, a town of European Russia, government of Nijni-Novgorod, 800 miles S.E. of St. Petersburg. There is a great trade in corn and potash. Pop. 8,000.

POTEMKIN, GRIGORI ALEXANDROVITCH, po-tem'-kin, a Russian general, and favourite of Catherine II. He entered the cavalry of the Russian guard at an early age, and having attracted the notice of Catherine by his tall and handsome person, she made him first a colonel and gentleman of the bedchamber, and afterwards minister of war; and he soon acquired a complete political ascendancy. In 1787 he renewed the war against Turkey, and put himself at the head of the army. The year following he took Oczakow, and put its inhabitants to the sword. He established a Black Sea fleet, built Sebastopol, and other strong fortresses, and was appointed governor of Taurida: the Czarina paying him the memorable visit in the course of which she was so audaciously deceived as to the true conditiien of the southern provinces of Russia. Potemkin acquired prodigious riches, was appointed field-marshal of Russia, grand hetman of the Cossacks, and possessed almost uncontrollable power. He was a man of debauched principles, and an inordinate epicure, which produced a disorder that carried him off. His remains were interred under a magnificent mausoleum at Cherson. He is said to have aspired to the duchy of Courland, and to the kingdom of Poland.

Born near Smolensk, 1736; died at Nikolaiev, 1791.

POTENZA, po-ten'-dza, a town of Italy, in the province of the same name, 54 miles E. of Salerno. There is a fine cathedral, and the town is walled. Manf. Woollens, serges, cottons, leather, and earthenware. Pop. 20,000.

POTENZA, a province of Italy, formerly known as Basilicata. It is thickly wooded, and is memorable for the disastrous earthquakes which have occurred at various periods. Area, 4,122 square miles. Pop, 545,242.

POTI, po'-te, a fortified town of Russia, in the Caucasian government of Kutais, on the eastern coast of the Black Sea, at the mouth of the Phasis, 161 miles N.W. of Tiflis. There is a considerable foreign transit and coasting trade. Pop. 7,000.

POTOMAC, po-to'-mak, a river of the United States, rising in two branches, in the Alleghany Mountains, uniting in Maryland, and forming part of the boundary between Virginia and Maryland. After a generally south-easterly course of 400 miles, it flows by a wide estuary into Chesapeake Bay.

POTOSI, po-to'-se, a province of Bolivia, South America. There are lofty mountain ranges, rising in many parts above the line of vegetation. The richest silver mines in South America are in this province, on the summit of the Cerra de Potosi, or Silver Mountain, 15,300 feet high. Area, 54,300 square miles. Pop. 282,000.

POTOSI, a city of South America, capital of the above province, and the second town in Bolivia, situate 13,330 feet above the sea level, 70 miles S.W. of Chuquisaca. The large central square is surrounded by public buildings, and in the centre is an obelisk in honour of Bolivar. Pop. 11,000.

POTOSI, SAN LUIS DE. (See SAN LUIS.)

POTSDAM, pots'-dam, capital of the Prussian province of Brandenburg, a city, and the second royal residence of Prussia, standing on the Havel, 16 miles S.W. of Berlin. It consists of the Alstadt, or old town, and Neustadt, or new town, with several suburbs. Potsdam is to Berlin what Versailles is to Paris, and it is indebted for its chief improvements to Frederick II. The old town consisted of only four streets; the new town was either built or repaired entirely by Frederick II. The streets are regular and spacious, and there are fine squares, some planted with trees. It is surrounded by a wall and ditch, and has nine gates, the finest being the Brandenburger-Thor, a triumphal arch copied from Trajan's Arch at Rome. Most of the gates open to fine avenues of trees. The old palace, situate on the banks of the Havel, is a magnificent structure. The famous palace of Sans-Souci, the favourite residence of Frederick the Great, is in a beautiful park, near the town, and not far from it are the New Palace, 680 feet long, with nearly 100 rooms, and Charlottenhof, a royal villa in the Pompeian style. The Marble Palace, famous for its frescoes, stands in the New Garden. The finest churches are the Garnisonskirche, or garrison church, where Frederick the Great is buried; and St. Nicolai, recently rebuilt in imitation of the Pantheon, at Paris. The market-place is ornamented by an obelisk, and by statues of the kings of Prussia. There are a gymnasium, various schools, charitable institutions, and orphan houses, on a large scale, for the children of soldiers. The suburbs of the town are very pleasant. Pop. 48,447, exclusive of the garrison.

POTSDAM, a town of the state of New York, United States, on Raquette river, between Lakes Ontario and Champlain. The falls of the river supply motive power to various mills and factories, and there are quarries of sandstone in the vicinity. Manf. Joinery, cutlery, machinery, and agricultural implements. Pop. 4,000.

POTT, AUGUST FRIEDRICH, pot, German philologist, who studied at Göttingen, and in 1833 was appointed professor of the science of language at Halle. His writings on comparative philology are of the highest value; and among the most important of his latest productions are "Difference of Races from a Philological Point of View," and "Diversities of European Languages."

Born at Hanover, 1802.

POTTAWATTAMIE, pot-ta-wat'-ta-me, a county of Iowa, North America. Area, 960 square miles. Pop. 39,850. The capital is Council Bluffs.

POTTAWATTAMIE, a county of Kansas, United States. Area, 851 square miles. Pop. 16,350. The capital is Louisville.

POTTER, PAUL, pot'-ter, Dutch painter, who at the age of 15, had already obtained a reputation. He died at the age of 29. He excelled in painting landscapes with cattle, and in representing the effect of the meridian sun upon objects. His "Bull" is universally admitted as an extraordinary piece of animal-painting: it is in the museum at the Hague.

Born at Enkhuysen, 1625; died at Amsterdam, 1654.

POTTER, ROBERT, a learned English divine, who made several excellent translations of classical authors, the most important of which were his Sophocles, Euripides, and Æschylus. He was also the author of a vindication of Gray, the poet, against Dr. Johnson.

Born 1721; died 1804.

POTTER, JOHN, a learned English prelate, son of a linendraper of York. He was educated at the university of Oxford, was appointed chaplain to Queen Anne, in 1706, and professor of divinity at Oxford, in 1708. In 1715 he was preferred to the see of Oxford, whence, in 1737, he was translated to Canterbury. He wrote "Antiquities of Greece," "Discourse on Church Government," an edition of Lycophron, an edition of Clemens Alexandrinus, and some theological works. He was a dry and dull scholar, and his works are now superseded.

Born at Wakefield, Yorkshire, 1674; died 1747.

POTTER, a county of Pennsylvania, United States. Area, 1,000 square miles. Pop. 13,797. The capital is Coudersport.

POTTERIES, THE, pot'-ter-eez, a name applied to several towns in Staffordshire, where china and stoneware are manufactured.

POTTSTOWN, a town of Pennsylvania, United States, on the Schuylkill river, 32 miles N.W. of Philadelphia. Manf. Iron and steel, carriages, soap, and cigars. Pop. 6,000.

POUCHING-HEIN, poo-tching'-heen, a town of China, province of Foo-keen, on a tributary of the Min. It is surrounded by ancient walls, and has extensive suburbs. A large trade in tea is carried on. Pop. 100,000.

POUGHKEEPSIE, po-kep'-se, a city of the state of New York, United States, on the east bank of the Hudson, 75 miles N. of New York. It is situated 200 feet above the river, and contains a city hall, and various educational establishments, among them a college for females. The collegiate school is on an eminence, commanding a most magnificent view. There are 21 churches. Manf. Iron, locomotives, carriages, carpets, and silk. Pop. 21,000.—This town was settled by the Dutch in 1690, was at one time the state capital, and it was here the convention of 1788 met, to ratify the constitution of the United States.

POUINIPET ISLAND, poo-e'-ne-pai, an island in the North Pacific, one of the CAROLINES.

POURÇAIN, ST., poor-sai', a town of France, department Allier. There is an ancient church. A considerable trade is carried on in wine, corn, poultry, cattle, and fish. Pop. 5,000.

POUSSIN, GASPAR, poos-sa, an Italian painter, of French extraction, and whose real name was Dughet (known in Italy as Gaspara Duche), but he took that of Poussin, his sister having married Nicolas Poussin, under whom he studied. His landscapes, particularly those which represent land-storms, are very fine.

Born at Rome, 1613; died at the same city, 1675.

POUSSIN, NICOLAS, a French painter, who, after studying in Paris under many difficulties, went to Rome, where he applied himself principally to landscape. On his return to France, in 1639, he was named first painter to Louis XIII., and provided with apartments in the Tuileries. He was also appointed to ornament the gallery of the Louvre; but, being thwarted in his plans while executing that great work, he went to Rome, and Louis XIII. having died, continued to reside there until his death.

Born near Le Grand-Andely, Normandy, 1594; died at Rome, 1665.

POWELL, REV. BADEN, pou'-el, an eminent English mathematical professor, who received his education at Oriel College, Oxford, and, in 1827, became Savilian professor of geometry in the same university. During his long connection with Oxford, he was one of the most energetic supporters of reform, and a constant advocate for the introduction of a more extensive system of teaching with respect to the natural sciences than was there pursued. He was the author of a great number of papers and works on scientific, especially mathematical subjects and on the connection of theology and science, and contributed the essay "On the Study and Evidences of Christianity," to the famous "Essays and Reviews."

Born in London, about 1798; died 1859.

POWELL, EDWARD, an English Roman Catholic priest, who was ordered by Henry VIII., in 1523, to write a work against Luther and in favour of the Pope; but having, at a later period, maintained the same views in opposition to his former royal patron, he was condemned to be hanged and quartered.

Died in 1540.

POWELL, a county of Kentucky, United States. Area, 300 square miles. Pop. 2,600. The capital is Stanton.

POWERS, HIRAM, pou'-ers, an eminent modern American sculptor, who was the son of a small farmer in Vermont, United States. On the death of his father, being left in poor circumstances, he was compelled to maintain himself by his own resources, but studied art diligently and became known as a successful modeller of moveable wax figures. In 1837 he proceeded to Italy, which for a long period had been a cherished idea. In that land of art his progress was very rapid. The first work by which he acquired fame as a sculptor was an "Eve" in marble. In 1851, his "Greek Slave" was placed in the Great Exhibition of London, where it became an object of popularity to a most remarkable degree. From that period his fame became European, and he was everywhere admitted to be a highly-gifted representative of American art.

Born at Woodstock, Vermont, 1805; died at Florence, 1873.

POWESHIEK, pou'-shcek, a county of Iowa, United States. Area, 576 square miles. Pop 19,000. The capital is Montezuma.

POWHATAN, pow-hat'-an, a county of Virginia, United States. Area, 300 square miles. Pop. 7,700, more than 5,000 being coloured. The capital is Powhatan Court House.

POYAIS, po'-yai, a district of Central America, Mosquito, named from a river which falls into the Carribbean sea, in lat. 15° 10′ N.; lon. 85° 10′ W. —A disastrous attempt at settlement was made here by a number of Scotch people, in 1819, and after great sufferings on the part of the colonists, abandoned in 1825.

POZOBLANCO, po'-zo-blan'-ko, a town of Spain, province of Cordova, 36 miles N. of the town of that name. Manf. Baizes (formerly very extensive), earthenware, chocolate and soap. Pop. 6,800.

POZZO DI BORGO, CARLO ANDREA, Count, pot'-so de bor'-go, a Corsican nobleman, who was educated at Pisa, and afterwards practised with great success as an advocate in Corsica, where he made the acquaintance of young Buonaparte whom he afterwards offended by his friendship with Paoli. He was sent, in 1791, as deputy to the National Assembly, to thank that body for having annexed Corsica to France; but afterwards returned to his native island, and acted, in concert with General Paoli, for the establishment of a free government, under English protection. In 1797, the English having abandoned Corsica, he repaired to London, where he became the leader of the French refugees. In the following year he went to Vienna to promote an alliance of Austria and Russia against France, and accompanied the Russian army in the campaign of 1799. In 1803 he went to Russia, and entered the diplomatic service of that country. After the treaty of Tilsit, he went to Vienna, and Napoleon demanded his extradition, in consequence of which he went to England in 1810, returning to Russia shortly afterwards. He was the chief agent in inducing Murat, Bernadotte, and Moreau, to withdraw from Napoleon, and drew up the famous declaration that "the allies made war, not on France, but on Napoleon." The emperor Alexander appointed him his ambassador to Louis XVIII., in 1814, and, as the envoy of Russia, he took part in all the acts of the Holy Alliance. He was present, as Russian commissioner, at the battle of Waterloo, where he received a wound; and afterwards was one of those who suggested that Napoleon should be exiled from Europe. He represented the emperors Alexander and Nicholas at the court of France until the year 1834, when he returned to St. Petersburg. Shortly afterwards he resumed his former post at Paris, and in 1835 repaired to London as ambassador extraordinary of the czar. In 1839 he retired from public affairs and took up his residence at Paris.

Born at Alala, Corsica, 1768; died at Paris, 1842.

POZZOLENGO, pot'-so-lain'-go, a town of Austrian Italy, 8 miles from Verona. Pop. 2,000.—This place was occupied by the Austrians on the 24th June, 1859, when they were defeated by the French at the battle of Solferino.

POZZUOLI, pot-soo-o'-le, a city of Italy, province of Napoli, on the eastern side of the bay of Naples. It is very interesting on account of the many remains of antiquity, among them the large temple of Serapis, where sick people assembled to drink the mineral waters; a temple of Augustus (now the cathedral), an arch erected to Antoninus Pius; pillars near the harbour, the remains of arcades; and portions of an immense amphitheatre. The famous Sibyl's cave, the ruins of Cumæ, the Elysian Fields, and other classic places are in the vicinity. Saline springs of great value in cutaneous diseases are in the Solfatara, or Forum Vulcani. Manf. Soap. Pop. 16,350.—This was the ancient Puteoli, so named from the sulphur springs. During the time of the Roman emperors, it was the port of Rome and the most important commercial city in Italy. It was destroyed by the Goths, but rebuilt by the Byzantine Greeks.

PRADON, NICHOLAS, pra'-dawng, a French poet, who wrote some tragedies, one of which, "Phædra and Hippolytus," acted in 1677, was very successful, and set up in opposition to Racine, by those who were envious of that writer's great reputation. He wrote a satire upon Boileau.

Born at Rouen, 1632: died at Paris, 1698.

PRADT, DOMINIQUE DUFOUR, prat, Abbé de, a French political writer. On the outbreak of the Revolution, he was vicar-general of the archbishop of Rouen, was elected by the clergy of Normandy to the States-General, but having sided with the royalists, fled to Hamburg in 1791. He returned to France in 1800, and, through the influence of his relative, General Duroc, was appointed almoner to the emperor, received the title of baron, and was made bishop of Poitiers. He accompanied Napoleon to Bayonne in 1808, and assisted to bring about the abdication of Charles IV. of Spain, and was rewarded with the archbishopric of Mecklin. In 1812 he was appointed minister at Warsaw, but, displeasing Napoleon, fell into disgrace. After the battle of Waterloo he endeavoured unsuccessfully to gain the favour of the Bourbons, but was deprived of his archbishopric and retired out of the country. In 1827 he was elected to the chamber of deputies for the department of Puy-de-Dôme, but resigned soon afterwards.

Born at Allanches, 1759; died 1837.

PRAED, WINTHROP MACKWORTH, prade, poet and politician. He was educated at Eton and Trinity College, Cambridge. When very young he contributed, with Macaulay and others, to the "Etonian," and he highly distinguished himself at college. He was called to the bar in 1829, and in the following year was returned to the House of Commons for the now extinct Cornish borough of St. Germains. In 1834 he was appointed secretary of the Board of Control. He was the author of many elegant poems and graceful and witty vers de société.

Born in London, 1802; died 1839.

PRAGA. (See WARSAW.)

PRAGUE (German PRAG), praag, capital of Bohemia, and of the circle of the same name, is picturesquely situated on the slopes of hills on both sides of the Moldau, 155 miles N.W. of Vienna. It consisted of four quarters, two on each side of the river, which is crossed by a fine stone bridge of 16 arches, and also by a chain bridge. On the right bank are the Hradschin, or palace district (where are the imperial castle, and some of the finest churches and palaces), and the Kleinsite, the aristocratic quarter, which contains most of the public offices and residences of nobility and officials. On the opposite side of the river are the Josephstadt, or old town, known also as the Jews' quarter, where business is carried on, and the Neustadt, or new town (enclosing the Altstadt), and having wider streets, modern residences, and places of public resort. Immediately to the south of the town is the Wyscherad, or citadel, formerly the residence of the dukes of Bohemia, and strongly fortified. The town is enclosed by a wall and fosse, with strong outworks, and is entered by eight gates. The only suburb is Karolinenthal, which has some fine buildings, numerous manufacturing establishments, and many gardens. In the Hradschin is the old palace of the Bohemian kings, containing 400 apartments, one of them a Gothic hall, in which the Bohemian nobles swear allegiance to their sovereign, and other splendid palaces. In this quarter, too, is the cathedral of St. Veitz, a fine but unfinished specimen of the Gothic of the 14th century, and containing many tombs and shrines of great historical interest, including those of kings and emperors of Germany, St. Wenceslaus and St. John of Nepomuk. There are altogether 55 Catholic and 3 Protestant churches, 15 monasteries, and 10 synagogues. Among the most interesting churches are St. Nicolas, or the church of the Jesuits, with several towers and costly decorations; the Thein Kirche, built at the beginning of the 15th century; the old Hussite church, where Tycho Brahe was buried, and where there are some very interesting monuments; the old Byzantine church of St. George; the Lovetto chapel, and the restored church of St. Laurenz. Prominent among the other buildings of interest are the Alte Rathaus (old town-hall, an irregular Gothic edifice of the 15th century); the Clementium (in the Aldstadt, near the bridge), an immense pile, which contains a series of fine halls in the Italian style, used as lecture rooms and library; the Carolinum, or university, founded in the 15th century; and the dilapidated palace erected at immense cost by Wallenstein. There are besides, a picture gallery, a military hospital (originally a Jesuit college), a national museum, a fine opera house, and a theatre. There are many public gardens, parks, and other places of recreation. Manf. Linen, cotton, and silk goods, paper, brass-ware, jewellery, plated goods, glass, tobacco, candles, beetroot-sugar, machinery, mathematical and musical instruments. There is a large trade, owing to the central situation, and several important fairs are held. Pop. 162,323. Prague is supposed to have been founded in the 8th century, and in the 14th and 15th centuries rose into great importance, partly on account of the university. It has often been exposed to the calamities of war, and was taken by storm in November, 1741, for the elector of Bavaria, then emperor; but Marshal Belleisle was obliged to leave it in 1742. The king of Prussia bombarded and took it in 1744, making the garrison, consisting of 16,000 men, prisoners of war; but he was obliged to abandon it the same year. In 1757 the king of Prussia again besieged it; but his efforts proved ineffectual. It 1848 it was bombarded, and great cruelties were perpetrated.

PRAHRAN, pra'-ran, a town of Victoria, Australia, 2 miles S.E. of Melbourne. The town-hall is a prominent building, and in the outskirts are many elegant residences. Pop. 21,169.

PRAIA-GRANDE, or NETHEROHY, pri'-a-grand, capital of the Brazilian province of Rio de Janeiro, on the east side of the bay, 3 miles E. of the town of Rio de Janeiro. It is well built, with a royal and a governor's palace, other good public buildings, and well constructed wharves along the shore. Manf. Sugar, bricks, and tiles. Coffee and fruit are extensively cultivated in the vicinity. Pop. 25,000, of whom about 20,000 are slaves.

PRESBURG (Magyar, POZSONY), pres'-berg, a town in the west of Hungary, on the Danube, which is here crossed by a bridge of boats, 34 miles E. of Vienna. The fortifications have been demolished; and no distinction is now made between the town and suburbs. The principal church is the old Gothic cathedral, in which the kings of Hungary were crowned, and there are fine churches attached to three monasteries. The royal palace, partially destroyed by fire in 1811, is still in a ruinous condition. The other public buildings are the hall of the Diet, an archbishop's palace, a barracks, and educational and charitable institutions. Manf. Silk, woollens, tobacco, rosoglio, leather, paper, glass, chemicals, and nitre. The trade of the place is, in a great measure, transit, particularly in corn and linen. Pop. 48,006. of whom about two-thirds are Roman Catholics, and 7,000 Jews.—Near the town is the King's Hill, to which kings rode after their coronation, and brandished their swords to the four quarters of the heavens. Presburg is noted for the treaty here concluded between France and Austria in 1805, when the Tyrol was given to Bavaria and Venice to the French.

PRESCOT, pres'-kot, a market-town of Lancashire, 8 miles E. of Liverpool. Manf. Cotton, sail-cloth, and earthenware; but the chief trade consists in the making of watch-tools and movements. Pop. 6,418.—A station on the London and North-Western railway.

PRESCOTT, WILLIAM HICKLING, pres'-kot, American historian. His grandfather, Colonel William Prescott, commanded the American forces at Bunker's Hill; his father was a prominent judge at Boston. In 1811 he was sent to Harvard university, where he graduated in 1814. While at college, he was deprived by an accident of the use of one eye; and the sight of the other became so impaired as to compel him to abstain from any lengthened course of study. Soon after quitting college, being advised to travel, he went to Europe, and spent two years in an extended journey through England, France, and Italy. At the end of that time he returned to his native country with restored health, but with no great improvement in the state of his eyes. His marriage took place soon after, and from this period his days flowed on in diligent and uneventful devotion to literary pursuits. He was compelled to employ a reader and amanuensis, and the difficulties of literary research and composition under such circumstances were immense. In 1838 the first of his historical works was produced under the title of "The History of Ferdinand and Isabella the Catholic of Spain." The work became universally successful, and was translated into French, Spanish, and German. Its author was immediately elected a member of the royal academy of Madrid. Prescott's literary industry was not checked by the success of his first work. He immediately devoted himself to the history of another brilliant period in the history of Spain, the fruits of which appeared in 1843, in a work in three volumes, called "The History of the Conquest of Mexico," which was received with even greater favour than that which had greeted the "History of Ferdinand and Isabella." The literary world recognised in it the same careful research, the same accuracy of statement, the same persuasive sweetness and beauty of style. In 1847 he published the "History of the Conquest of Peru," a work of kindred and commensurate excellence to that of the "History of the Conquest of Mexico." The historian next devoted himself with unabated ardour to the preparation of a work of wider range and broader scope—the "History of the Reign of Philip II." It was while preparing himself for this task that he paid a brief visit to England, where he was cordially received by individuals of the highest literary and social distinction, and where the favourable impression created by his works was confirmed by his prepossessing manners and appearance. The first two volumes of the work appeared in 1855; and the highest expectations formed by the public were justified. In the following year he produced an edition of Robertson's "Charles V.," to which notes and a supplement, containing an account of the emperor's life after his abdication, were added. In the last year of his life he published the third volume of his "History of Philip," which, unfortunately, did not complete the work. His other works consist of essays upon Italian, Spanish, English, and American literature, and a memoir of Brockden Brown, the American novelist. He obtained the highest acknowledgments of literary distinction. The university of Oxford, in 1850, conferred upon him the degree of doctor of laws. In 1845 he received the highest of all distinctions of its kind, in being elected a corresponding member of the class of moral and political philosophy in the French Institute, succeeding Navarete, the Spanish historian. Of most of the learned societies of Europe he was a member.

Born at Salem, Massachusetts, 1796; died 1859.

PRESCOTT, a county of the province of Ontario, dominion of Canada, to the south of the Ottawa river. Area, 491 square miles. Pop. 22,857. The capital is L'Original.

PRESIDIO, prai-se-de-o, a county of Texas, United States. Area, 14,500 square miles. Pop. 2,000.

PRESQUE ISLE, prais'-ke, a county of Michigan, United States. Area, 700 square miles. Pop. 3,113.

PRESTER JOHN, pres'-ter, or PRIEST JOHN, the name given in the middle ages to a supposed Christian sovereign dwelling in the interior of Asia, probably Ung Khan, said to have been defeated by Genghis Khan, about 1210. The report appears to have been created by the Nestorian Christians, who declared that they had come into possession of some letters addressed by him, a khan, residing somewhere near the banks of the Amoor, to the pope, the king of France, and the emperor of Constantinople, in which he signed himself John, the High Priest. In the 13th century two friars were dispatched by the pope to this imaginary personage; but although they penetrated as far as the wall of China, they met with no Prester John. The tradition continued to be believed till the 15th century, but disappeared soon after the Portuguese had reached India by the way of the Cape of Good Hope.

PRESTON, pres'-ton, a market-town and municipal and parliamentary borough of Lancashire, on an eminence, on the north bank and at the head of the estuary of the Ribble, 27 miles N.E. of Liverpool. The river is crossed by two bridges and several railway viaducts. Christ Church is a very fine specimen of Norman architecture, and the parish church, recently rebuilt in the decorated style of the 14th century, has a spire 196 feet high. There are 12 other churches, several Roman Catholic chapels, and many chapels for dissenters. The town-hall, a Gothic structure, containing the guild-hall and exchange, and built at a cost of £60,000; the corn exchange and market house; and the royal infirmary are among the most striking public buildings. There are various literary and educational institutions. Manf. Cotton, giving employment to about 28,000 persons, linen, machinery, carriages, and rope. A large export trade, principally in coal, is carried on, and four great annual fairs are held. Pop. 96,532.—A station on the London and North Western, and Lancashire and Yorkshire railways. The Preston guild of merchants, established by royal charter 700 years ago, still exists.

PRESTON, a county of West Virginia, United States. Area, 600 square miles. Pop. 19,091. The capital is Kingwood.

PRESTONPANS, pres'-ton-pans', a village of Scotland, in Haddingtonshire, 8 miles E. of Edinburgh. Pop. 2,100.—A little above this village, the king's troops under Sir John Cope, were disastrously defeated in 1745, by the army of the Young Pretender.

PRETI, MATTIA, prai-te (known as "Il Calabrese"), an Italian painter, who executed many fine frescoes and altar-pieces.

Born at Taverna, 1613; died 1699.

PREVISA, prai-ve'-sa, a fortified seaport of European Turkey, in Albania, on the shore of the Gulf of Arta. It is built out of the ruins of the ancient Nicopolis, which are situate at a small distance to the north. Pop. 8,000. Lat. 38° 56′ N. Lon. 20° 44′ N.

PREVOST-PARADOL, LUCIEN ANATOLE, prai'-vost-par'-a-dol, French author, who in 1851 obtained from the Academy, the prize for eloquence, and in 1855 was chosen professor of French literature at Aix, a post he resigned the following year, when he was appointed one of the editors of the Journal des Débats. He was twice an unsuccessful candidate for a seat in the chamber. In 1865 he was elected a member of the Academy, and in 1870 was appointed ambassador to Washington, but before the date fixed for his departure, war with Prussia was proclaimed, and, bitterly disappointed by the course of public affairs, he committed suicide.

PREVOST, ANTOINE FRANÇOIS, Abbé, French author, educated for the church, but joined the army, and then being disappointed in love, returned to monastic life, but dissatisfied with the rigour of the rulers escaped in 1727 and went to Holland and England. In 1734 he returned to France, and became chaplain to the Prince of Conti. He published translations from Cicero, Hume, and Richardson. He is best known by "Manon Lescaut," and as editor of a collection of works of travel.

Born near Montreuil, 1697; died near Chantilly, 1763.

PRIAM, pri'-am, in Homeric legend, the last king of Troy, father of Hector, Paris, Troilus, Cassandra, and many others; for Homer allots to him 19 sons by his wife Hecuba, besides about 30 others.

PRICE, Rev. Thomas, price, a Welsh scholar, whose life was passed as pastor to different congregations of his countrymen. The object of his life was to rescue Welsh literature from the neglect into which it had fallen. In 1829 he made a tour in Brittany, and published an interesting account of that country. His principal works are,—"An Essay on the Influence which the Welsh Traditions have had on the Literature of Europe;" a "Critical Essay on the Language and Literature of Wales;" "History of Wales and the Welsh Nation, from the early ages to the death of Llewelyn ap Gruffyd;" and an Essay upon the "Comparative Merits of the Remains of Ancient Literature in the Welsh, Irish, and Gaelic Languages."

Born in Brecknockshire, 1787; died 1848.

PRICE, Richard, a dissenting minister and political writer, who was for many years a preacher at Hackney and Stoke Newington, and at the commencement of the American war, distinguished himself by his zeal in behalf of republicanism, and published his "Observations on Liberty and Civil Government," for which he received the thanks of the city of London, and which attracted the attention of Franklin and other Americans who invited him to settle there, an offer he declined. He also wrote "Observations on the National Debt," in which he endeavoured to prove that the kingdom was on the eve of bankruptcy. Soon after the breaking out of the French revolution, he preached a discourse at the Old Jewry, in which he exulted over the misfortunes of the royal family of France, in such a manner as to call forth the keen animadversions of Burke. His principal works were, "On the Importance of Christianity," "A Review of the Principal Questions and Difficulties in Morals," "Discussion of the Doctrines of Materialism and Necessity, in a Correspondence with Dr. Priestley."

Born at Tynton, Glamorganshire, 1723; died 1791.

PRICHARD, James Cowles, pritch'-ard, an English physician and ethnologist, who was the son of a Bristol merchant, a member of the Society of Friends. At home he studied hard, mastering the principal European languages, and received his education for the medical profession at St. Thomas's Hospital, London, and at Edinburgh; and in 1810 he commenced practice as a physician at Bristol. His inaugural thesis, when taking his M.D. degree, was the physical history of mankind, and to that subject his attention continued to be devoted till, in 1813, his "Physical History of Mankind" was produced. In that work, not only anatomy and physiology, but also philology, was introduced, to found a systematic history of the races of mankind. This work has been several times reprinted, has been translated into French and German, and is generally admitted to be one of the best works of its class. The author, as a necessary aid to the study of ethnology, made himself acquainted with the chief oriental languages. Dr. Prichard also devoted much attention to the study of nervous and mental diseases, and was appointed visiting physician to the Gloucestershire Lunatic Asylum, and, in 1845, became one of the commissioners of lunacy. He was fellow of the Royal, and president of the Ethnological Society, and, upon the installation of the late duke of Wellington as chancellor of the university of Oxford, Dr. Prichard was nominated M.D. of that seat of learning. His principal works were, "On the Crania of the Laplanders and Finlanders," "On the Eastern Origin of the Celtic Language," "An Analysis of Egyptian Mythology," "On the Different Forms of Insanity in relation to Jurisprudence," and a "Review of the Doctrines of the Vital Principle."

Born at Ross, Herefordshire, 1785; died at London, 1848.

PRIDEAUX, Humphrey, a learned English divine, was educated at Westminster, under Dr. Busby, and at Christ Church College, Oxford. In 1676, he published, under the title of "Marmora Oxoniensia," an account of the Arundel marbles, with a comment on them, which gained him great reputation; it also procured him the patronage of the chancellor Finch, who gave him a living at Oxford. In 1681 he was promoted to a prebend of Norwich, of which cathedral he became dean in 1702. Being disabled from public duty through an ill-performed surgical operation, he devoted himself to composition, and produced his "Connection of the Old and New Testament," an admirable work, which was translated into several languages, and passed through numerous editions. Besides the above works, he was the author of "Directions to Churchwardens," "The Life of Mahomet," "The Original Right of Tithes."

Born at Padstow, Cornwall, 1648; died at Norwich, 1724.

PRIDEAUX, John, pré'-do, a learned English prelate, who was admitted of Exeter College, Oxford, of which he became fellow, and, on the death of Dr. Holland, was chosen rector. He was afterwards appointed regius professor of Divinity, in which he displayed considerable talents. He also served the office of vice-chancellor, and, in 1641, was advanced to the bishopric of Worcester; but was deprived of the revenues by the rebellion. He wrote extensively upon grammar, logic, and theology, and was described as "a plentiful fountain of all sort of learning."

Born at Stowford, Devonshire, 1578; died at Bredon, Worcester, 1650.

PRIEGO, pre-ai'-go, a town of Spain, province of Cordova, near the Salado, 34 miles S.E. of Cordova. There are a castle, erected by the Romans and enlarged by the Arabs, an old Gothic church, two public fountains (one, the Fuente del Rey, very handsome), and good promenades. Formerly the town was celebrated for the manufacture of silk fabrics, but very few are now made. Pop. 15,606.

PRIESSNITZ, Vincenz, preese'-nitz, the founder of the hydropathic system, or system of curing diseases by water. He was the son of a farmer in Austrian Silesia, and, after receiving some education at the town school, was put to the work of the farm. After remaining at this employment for several years, he studied medicine, and, in time, formed an establishment at Gräfenberg, which was soon resorted to from all parts of Germany.

Born 1799; died 1851.

PRIESTLEY, Joseph, preest'-le, an English natural philosopher and theologian, was son of a draper, at Fieldhead, near Leeds. He studied hard, especially theology, and at the age of 22, became assistant minister to an independent congregation at Needham Market, in Suffolk; after which he was chosen pastor of a congregation at Nantwich, in Cheshire, where also he kept a school. Here he wrote a work on the "Doctrine of Remission," in which he adopted Unitarian views. In 1761 he removed to Warrington, as tutor in the belles-lettres in the academy there. His connection with that institution ended in 1767, when he accepted an invitation from the dissenters at Leeds, where he published several theological works which attracted considerable notice and led to a sharp controversy. In 1773 he went to reside with the earl of Shelburne as librarian and companion. Several years afterwards he appeared as a champion of the doctrine of philosophical necessity, in which he had his friend Dr. Price for an opponent. While thus engaged in metaphysical and theological disputations, he pursued his philosophical inquiries with ardour; the result of which appeared in the "Philosophical Transactions," and in separate publications, particularly his "Experiments and Observations on Different Kinds of Air." The term of his engagement with lord Shelburne having expired, Dr. Priestley, with a pension of £150 a year, retired to Birmingham, where he became pastor of a congregation of Unitarian dissenters in 1780. He there published several of his works; as, "Letters to Bishop Newcome on the Duration of Christ's Ministry," and the "History of the Corruptions of Christianity." This last brought him into a controversy with Dr. Horsley. Dr. Priestley, however, still persevered, and published his "History of Early Opinions concerning the Person of Christ." In 1791 a riot happened at Birmingham, owing to an imprudent meeting of some of his friends to celebrate the destruction of the Bastille. Several houses were pulled down and burnt, and Dr. Priestley's among the rest; by which he lost his library, manuscripts, and philosophical apparatus. In consequence of this disgraceful transaction, he retired to London, and for some time officiated as pastor to the Unitarian congregation at Hackney, of which Dr. Price had been minister. (See PRICE, RICHARD.) But his mind being greatly depressed by late events, he went to America in 1794, and settled at Northumberland, in the state of Pennsylvania. He was a fellow of the Royal Society, and of other learned bodies in different parts of the world. He lived to see his phlogistic system of chemistry universally exploded; yet he persisted in defending it to the last. He was also equally tenacious of his Socinianism. His writings are too various to be enumerated. The principal and best are his "Charts of History and Biography," his "History of Electricity," the "History and Present State of Discoveries relating to Vision, Light, and Colours;" lectures on the "Theory and History of Language," and on the "Principles of Oratory and Criticism." Cuvier pronounced an éloge before the National Institute of France after his death. Dr. Thomson declares that Priestley "was perfectly sincere and unaffected, and the discovery of truth seems to have been in every case his real and undisguised object." A statue of Priestley was erected in Birmingham in 1874, the centenary of his discovery of oxygen.

Born near Leeds, 1733; died in America, 1804.

PRILOUKY, or PRILUKI, pri-loú-ke, a town of European Russia, government of Poltawa, 150 miles N.W. of the town of that name. Tobacco is extensively cultivated in the neighbourhood, and there is a large trade in corn, cattle, and tallow. Pop. 11,000.

PRIM, JUAN, prim, marquis de los Castillejos, count de Reuss and viscount del Brueusch, a Spanish general and statesman, who took an active part on the side of Isabella II. in the civil war that followed her accession. Like most of the Spanish statesmen of his time, he was sometimes in favour and sometimes in disgrace, until his trial and imprisonment for alleged high treason compelled him to retire awhile from public life. In 1853-4 he fought on the side of Turkey in the Russian war, and in 1859-60, greatly distinguished himself in the war between Spain and Morocco, for which he was made a marquis and grandee of Spain, in 1861, in which year he commanded the Spanish contingent in the joint expedition against Mexico by England, France, and Spain. In 1866 and 1867, he headed two movements against the government of Isabella II., but was compelled, through their utter failure, to leave Spain. He was not, however, destined to be long an exile, for, in 1868, the troops and navy declared against the queen, who retired to France. Prim then became minister for war in the provisional government, and held the same post, with that of prime minister, during the regency of Serrano. He ultimately rendered himself supreme in this capacity, and held the reins of government in his hands till the accession of Amadeus to the throne of Spain. On the eve of these events he was shot, while he was in his carriage, proceeding from the Cortes to the ministry of war.

Born 1814; assassinated, Dec. 30, 1870.

PRIMATTICIO, FRANCESCO, pré-mat-tí-cho, an eminent Italian painter and architect, who was commissioned by Francis I. of France to decorate the palace of Fontainebleau with frescoes, and was afterwards appointed commissary-general of the royal buildings.

Born at Bologna, 1490; died in France, 1570.

PRIMORSK, prim'-orsk, or Littoral Province, the easternmost division of Siberia. (See SIBERIA.)

PRINCE, THE BLACK. (See EDWARD).

PRINCE'S ISLAND, a small island in the Bight of Biafra, 140 miles from Fernando Po. It is about 9 miles long and 5 wide, of volcanic origin, and containing summits 4,000 feet high. There are several good harbours. The island belongs to the Portuguese. Lat. 1° 39′ N. Lon. 7° 26′ E.

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND, a province of the dominion of Canada, in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, separated from Nova Scotia and New Brunswick by the strait of Northumberland. It is of irregular shape, about 130 miles long, and with a breadth varying from 34 to only 4 miles. The coast line is for the most part marked by lofty cliffs of red sandstone, with numerous bays and inlets, the most important of which are Cardigan Bay on the east coast, and Spillsborough Bay on the south, which afford good anchorage for large vessels. Bedeque and Egmont Bays on the south, and St. Peter's, Richmond, and Holland Bays, on the north, are smaller inlets. The surface of the island is generally undulating, and a range of low hills traverses it from north and south. The soil is of great fertility, and very large crops of wheat and other grain are raised. The climate is milder, and, being free from fogs, healthier than that of other parts of North America in the same latitudes, and fruits and vegetables are abundant. The rivers are short and unimportant. Small quantities of copper and bog-iron are known to exist; but the chief wealth of the island, besides agricultural produce, consists in the extensive fisheries of mackerel, herrings, cod and hake.

Area.—2,173 square miles.

Divisions and Chief Towns.—There are three counties, Prince, Queen's, and King's. The chief towns are CHARLOTTE-TOWN (the capital), George Town, and Summerside.

History.—The island was taken possession of by the British in 1745, and again in 1758, when it was established as a portion of British North America. It was a separate colony until 1873, when it became one of the provinces of the Dominion of Canada.

PRINCE EDWARD, a county of Virginia, United States. Area, 350 square miles. Pop. 14,668, more than half being coloured. The capital is Farmville.

PRINCE EDWARD, a county of the province of Ontario, dominion of Canada, on the northern shore of Lake Ontario. Area, 388 square miles. Pop. 21,000. The capital is Picton.

PRINCE GEORGE, a county of Virginia, United States. Area, 350 square miles. Pop. 10,000, more than half being coloured. The capital is Prince George Court House.

PRINCE GEORGE'S, a county of Maryland, United States. Area, 600 square miles. Pop. 26,451, nearly half being coloured. The capital is Upper Marlborough.

PRINCE OF WALES ISLAND, or PENANG, one of the Straits Settlements, belonging to the British, at the mouth of the Strait of Malacca, near the west coast of the Malay peninsula. A mountain ridge traverses the island from the south to the north, where it rises to a height of nearly 3,000 ft., forming a sanitarium, Strawberry Hill. The climate is generally healthy, and tropical fruits and spices are abundant. Sugar, coffee, and pepper, are extensively cultivated. The exports are of the annual value of about £2,000,000. George Town, at the north-western extremity of the island, is the capital. Area, 106 square miles. Pop. 190,597, chiefly Malays; the remainder (except a few hundred whites) being Chinese, Siamese, Burmans, and Bengalese.

PRINCE WILLIAM, a county of Virginia, United States. Area, 325 square miles. Pop. 9,500, nearly one-third being coloured. The capital is Brentsville.

PRINCE WILLIAM HENRY, or LOSTANGE ISLAND, in the Pacific Ocean. It is one of the Low Archipelago. Lat. 18° 43′ S. Lon. 141° 42′ E.

PRINCE WILLIAM'S SOUND, a great inlet of the North Pacific Ocean, on the North American coast, 43 miles wide at the entrance, containing numerous islands, but having no good harbour. Lat. 60° to 61° 20′ N. Lon. 146° to 148° W.

PRINCESS ANNE, a county of Virginia, United States. Area, 400 square miles. Pop. 9,300, about half being coloured. The capital is Princess Anne Court House.

PRINCESS ROYAL ISLANDS, a group on the western coast of British North America, to the eastward of Queen Charlotte's Islands. Lat. 52°—54° N.

PRINCETON, a township of New Jersey, United States, 11 miles N.E. of Trenton, the seat of the famous Princeton College, and of the theological seminary of the Presbyterian church. The college buildings are handsome and extensive. Pop. 4,000.

PRINCIPATO CITERIORE, and PRINCIPATO ULTERIORE, formerly provinces of Italy, now forming the modern provinces of SALERNO and AVELLINO.

PRINSEP, JAMES, prin'-sep, Oriental scholar, who went out to India at an early age, as a subordinate in the Mint department at Benares. In that city he collected a valuable body of observations, which he published in an important work, entitled, "Sketches of Benares." In 1832 he was appointed editor of the "Journal of the Asiatic Society," which was produced at Calcutta, to which place he had some time previously removed. In 1832 he succeeded Wilson as secretary of the Asiatic Society. One of the most important of his later researches was the deciphering of some inscriptions which had baffled all previous Oriental scholars. He likewise devoted himself to a profound study of Bactrian coins, and by his enlightened and indefatigable efforts succeeded in obtaining an almost unbroken series, from the days of the successors of Alexander the Great to modern times. He also furnished articles on chemistry, Indian antiquities, and numismatics, to the journal of which he was the editor.

Born in England, 1800; died 1840.

PRIOR, MATTHEW, pri'-or, an English poet and diplomatist, son of a London mechanic. He was sent to Westminster school, and afterwards attracting the attention of the earl of Dorset, was enabled to enter at St. John's College, Cambridge, where he obtained a fellowship. In 1687 he wrote, in conjunction with the Hon. Charles Montague, afterwards earl of Halifax, a burlesque upon Dryden's "Hind and Panther," in a poem entitled the "Story of the Country Mouse and City Mouse." The earl of Dorset introduced him to court after he left the university; and, in 1690, he was appointed English secretary to the congress at the Hague, and gave so much satisfaction that king William made him gentleman of his bedchamber. In 1697 he was secretary at the treaty of Ryswick; and in 1701 entered Parliament, soon after which he deserted the Whigs, who had previously been his friends, and attached himself to the Tory party. In 1711, he was sent to Paris with private proposals for peace, which led to a charge of treason being preferred against him, and in 1715 he was arrested by order of the House of Commons, and committed to prison. He was even excepted from the act of grace; but, in 1717, he recovered his liberty without being brought to trial. Besides his poems, which are easy, lively, and elegant, he wrote the history of his own times. There is a monument to his memory in Westminster Abbey, for the erection of which he left £500 in his will.

Born in London, 1664; died at Wimpole, Cambridgeshire, 1721.

PRIPET, or PRIPIAT, prip'-et, a river of European Russia, rising in the government of Volhynia, flowing south and south-east; and after a course of about 400 miles joining the Dnieper on the right bank.

PRISCIANUS, or PRISCIAN, pris'-i-ai'-nus, surnamed Cæsariensis, an eminent Roman grammarian, whose work, "De Arte Grammatica," is the most complete ancient treatise on the subject extant. From several inferences in his works, he is said to have become a Christian. He was so exact in his judgment and criticisms, that to "break Priscian's head," became a proverb for false grammar.

Lived in the 5th century.

PRISCILLIAN, pris-sil'-li-an, founder of a sect of Christians in Spain and Gaul. He was of high birth, and possessed great talents; but was excommunicated for heresy by a synod held at Saragossa in 380, although afterwards ordained bishop of Avila; but the Emperor Maximus sentenced him to death. He was the first Christian executed for heresy.

Died at Treves, 385.

PRISREND, or PERSERIN, a town in European Turkey, district of Albania, on the Rieka, 80 miles E. of Scutari. The citadel is more than 1,100 feet above the sea level. It is surrounded by walls, and defended by a castle, once the residence of Servian kings. This is one of the most thriving towns in Turkey, there being an active trade in saddlery, glass, copper, and steel wares. Pop. 26,000.

PRISTINA, or PIRISTONA, pris-tē'-na, a town of European Turkey, 50 miles N.E. of Prisrend. Pop. 12,000. Near it is the tomb of Sultan Amurath I.

PRITHU, prī'-thoo, in Hindoo mythology, a king who levelled the earth, and established towns and villages. He is a favourite hero of the legendary Puranas.

PRITZWALK, pritz'-valk, a walled town of Prussia, on the left bank of the Temnitz, 66 miles N.W. of Berlin. Manf. Woollens, linen, and tobacco. Pop. 6,100.

PRIVAS, prē'-va, a town of France, capital of department Ardèche, on three rivulets near the Rhone, 21 miles S. of Valence. Manf. Woollens, silk thread, and yarn, leather, and brandy. A good trade is carried on. Pop. 7,200.—This was formerly a place of importance, and a stronghold of the Protestants, who were massacred by order of Louis XIII.

PRIZZI, prit'-ze, a town of Sicily, 28 miles S.E. of Palermo. Several fairs are held. Pop. 11,200.

PROBUS, MARCUS AURELIUS, prō'-bus, a Roman emperor, who, from being a common soldier, rose to the highest military rank, and was appointed governor of the whole Asiatic possessions of Rome. After the death of the emperor Tacitus, in 276, the Eastern army proclaimed Probus, as the reward of his valour and integrity. He was also acknowledged by the senate; after which, he turned his arms against the Gauls and Goths, whom he completely subdued. He next defeated the Sarmatians, and made an advantageous peace with Persia. The interval of peace he employed in rebuilding cities and occupying his soldiers in useful works. The Persians again taking up arms, Probus prepared to attack them, but was murdered by his soldiers, who resented as degrading being employed in draining swamps, and on other works of public utility.

Born about 230; died 282.

PROCIDA, prō-chē'-da, an island of Italy, on the western coast, separated from the mainland by a channel about 1½ mile across. It is only 3 miles long, with a breadth of 1½. The capital, of the same name, has a good harbour, a palace, and a notorious prison, where the kings of Naples confined state prisoners. (See POERIO). Pop. 14,000. Lat. 40° 45′ N. Lon. 95° 5′ E.

PROCIDA, JOHN OF (GIOVANNI DE), an Italian gentleman, lord of the island of Procida, who distinguished himself as physician to the emperors Frederic II. and Conrad IV., both of whom loaded him with honours and possessions. Having been despoiled of a great portion of his wealth by Charles of Anjou, he formed the resolution of depriving him of his crown, and placing it upon the head of Peter III., king of Aragon. For that purpose he organised a conspiracy against Charles in 1282, and was one of the prime movers of the great massacre of all the French in Sicily, known in history under the name of the "Sicilian Vespers." He became, at a subsequent period, the confidential adviser of the Aragonese princes of Sicily, and died at a very advanced age.

Born about 1225.

PROCLUS, prō'-klus, a Neo-Platonic philosopher, who studied at Alexandria and Athens, and became acquainted with the creeds and rites of the ancient world, practising many varied ceremonies, considering them as allegories, which shrouded the great truths of religion and philosophy. He offended the Christians, who banished him from Athens, to which, however, he subsequently returned.

Born at Constantinople, 412; died at Athens, 485.

PROCOP, ANDREA, prō'-kop, a Hussite leader, who belonged to a noble family of Prague, and was in early life intended for the church. At the outbreak of the religious wars in the early part of the 15th century, he sided with the Hussites, and exhibited so much military ability, that he rose to be leader in the war with Austria, and committed great devastations in the German states. His successes ensured great concessions to the Hussites for the performance of their worship; but Procop and his adherents refusing to acknowledge the supremacy of the Pope, fresh dissensions broke out, and Procop was killed in a conflict with the Bohemian nobles.

Died at Lipau, 1434.

PROCOPIUS, prō-kō'-pi-us, a Byzantine historian, whom Justinian took into his confidence, and appointed to several high offices. He wrote a "History of the Wars of the Persians, the Gauls, and the Goths," also a "Secret History."

Died 565.

PROCRUSTES, prō-krus'-tees, in Greek legend, a famous robber of Attica, called also Polypemon, who tied travellers on an iron bed, and, if their length exceeded that of the bed, he used to cut off a portion of their limbs; but, if they were shorter, he had them stretched to make their length equal to it. Theseus conquered him, and made him suffer the tortures he had inflicted on others. "The bed of Procrustes" is a proverbial phrase.

PROCTOR, BRYAN WALLER, prok'-tor, a modern English poet, generally known under the pseudonym of Barry Cornwall. He went to school at Harrow, and was educated for the legal profession. During many years he held an important appointment as one of the commissioners of lunacy. His first volume of poems was produced in 1819, under the title of "Dramatic Scenes and other Poems." His "English Songs," Memoir and Essay, prefixed to an edition of Shakspere, "Marcian Colonna," and others, evinced, in their author, the possession of a graceful and refined order of mind. Some of his songs became very popular; and one of his tragedies (that entitled "Mirandola"), which was produced at Covent Garden theatre, was highly successful.

Born in London, 1790; died there, 1874.

PRODICUS, prod'-i-kus, a sophist and rhetorician, who taught at Athens, and had for disciples Euripides, Socrates, Isocrates, and Xenophon. The Athenians put him to death, on pretence that he corrupted the morals of their youth.

PROME, or PRONE, prome, a city of Burmah, on the left bank of the Irawaddy, 160 miles N.W. of Rangoon. Pop. 28,813; of district of same name, 322,342.

PROMETHEUS, prō-mē'-the-us, in Greek mythology, was brother to Atlas and Epimetheus, and surpassed all mankind in knowledge. Hesiod and Æschylus, in his tragedy, present the myth under different aspects. It appears to represent the struggles between the active human mind and the forces of nature, a hero sacrificing himself for the good of humanity.

PROPERTIUS, SEXTUS AURELIUS, prop-per'-shi-us, a Latin poet, who was the esteemed friend of Mæcenas, Ovid, and Tibullus. His elegies are usually printed with those of Catullus.
Born about 56 B.C.; died about 16 B.C.

PROPONTIS, SEA OF. (See MARMORA.)

PROSERPINA, or PROSERPINE, pros-ser'-pi-na, pros'-er-pine (Greek, PERSEPHONE), in Roman and Greek mythology, a daughter of Ceres (Greek, Demeter), who was so beautiful that Jupiter himself became enamoured of her. She resided in Sicily, and delighted in the flowery meadows and limpid streams which beautified the plains of Enna. From this solitary retreat Pluto (or Dis) carried her away into the infernal regions, of which she became the queen. (See PLUTO.) The myth is generally understood to represent the progress of the seasons.

PROSKUROV, pros'-ku-rof, a town of Russia, government of Podolsk, at the confluence of the Ploskaia with the South Bug. Pop. 7,400.

PROSPER, ST., pros'-pair, a French theologian, whose youthful life was licentious; but, when his country was ravaged by the barbarians, he altered his conduct, and became a penitent. He was a disciple of St. Augustine, whose memory he defended. He also opposed the Pelagians with considerable zeal.
Born in Aquitaine, 403; died about 463.

PROSNITZ, pros'-nitz, a town of the Austrian empire, in Moravia, on the Rumza, 12 miles S.W. of Olmutz. Manf. Woollen goods, linens, cottons, spirits, and beer. Pop. 16,000, of whom about 2,500 are Jews.

PROTAGORAS, pro-tag'-o-ras, a Greek sophist of Abdera, who was at first a porter. He became the disciple of Democritus, to whose system he added remarks, doubting whether the gods existed or not, for which his books were burnt at Athens, and the author banished. His works are lost, and his theories are only known through the refutation by Plato.

PROTEUS, pro'-te-us, in Greek mythology, a sea deity, who generally resided in the Carpathian Sea, and reposed himself on the shore. He was difficult of access, and, when consulted, he refused to give answers, by immediately assuming different shapes and eluding the grasp. Aristæus was in the number of those who consulted him, as also Hercules.

PROTOGENES, pro-toj'-e-nees, a Greek painter, a native of Kaunus, in Caria, who was the rival of Apelles; but there remained a close friendship between them.
Died about 300 B.C.

PROUDHON, PIERRE JOSEPH, proud'-awng, a modern French writer on political economy, the son of a poor cooper of Besançon, where, by the aid of friends, he was educated at the college. He worked as a printer, and became known for scholarship. He acquired considerable notoriety in 1840, by publishing a work entitled "What is Property?" a question which he himself answered in the first line of his work as follows: "All property is robbery." His other works, which are principally remarkable for their Utopian and impracticable character, are, "The Solution of the Social Problem," and a "System of Contradictions in Political Economy." From 1843 to 1847 he was engaged in superintending a scheme of water transport on the Seine and Rhone. On the outbreak of the revolution of 1848, he went to Paris, and started a violent democratic newspaper, the "Representat du Peuple," and was returned to the Constituent Assembly for the department of the Seine. There he was very unpopular, and he then started other daily papers, each of which was suppressed. In 1849 he attempted to form a "People's Bank;" but the scheme was broken up by the condemnation of M. Proudhon to three years' imprisonment, for alleged libel; upon which he took to flight.
Born at Besançon, 1809; died at Paris, 1865.

PROUT, SAMUEL, prout, an eminent English watercolour painter, who was the companion of Haydon in their student days. He won a high position, and produced remarkable lithographic facsimiles of drawings made upon the continent of Europe. The most important of these were, "Sketches made in Flanders, Germany, France, Switzerland, Italy, &c." He also wrote "Hints on Light and Shade, Composition, &c."
Born at Plymouth, 1783; died 1852.

PROVENCE, prov'-vance, an old province in the south-east of France, now forming the departments of Basses-Alpes, Bouches du Rhone, Var, and the east part of Vaucluse. The name is derived from Provincia, "the province," the name by which Gaul was frequently known to the Romans.

PROVIDENCE, prov'-i-dence, a city, seaport, and one of the capitals of Rhode Island, United States, built on both sides of Providence river (an arm of Narraganset Bay), 43 miles S.W. of Boston. It ranks as the second city in New England, has 76 churches (including the oldest Baptist church in America, founded by Roger Williams in 1638); Brown university, a college of the Society of Friends, an Athenæum, with a large library, and various other literary and educational institutions. There is a beautiful park on the borders of the cove formed by the river. Manf. Cotton and woollen, both extensive; iron, gold and silver ware, and jewellery. Pop. 105,000.—This place was founded in 1636 by a colony of refugees from Massachusetts, under Roger Williams, and was the first instance of a community established on principles of perfect toleration.

PROVIDENCE, a county of Rhode Island. Area, 380 square miles. Pop. 197,874. The capital is PROVIDENCE.

PROVIDENCE, NEW. (See NEW PROVIDENCE.)

PROVIDENCE, OLD, an island in the W. part of the Caribbean Sea, near the coast of Honduras. Ext. 10 miles long, with a breadth of 4. Pop. 400.

PROVINCE WELLESLEY, one of the Straits Settlements, on the west coast of the Malay peninsula, immediately opposite Penang. It is a slip of land 35 miles long and 4 wide, undulating, and with a healthy climate. Pop. about 65,000, mostly Malays.

PROVINCETOWN, a township of the United States, Massachusetts, 55 miles E. of Boston. It has a good harbour and extensive salt-works. It is noted for its cod, mackerel, and whale fisheries. Pop. 4,000.

PROVINS, pro'-vance, a town of France, department of the Seine-and-Marne, 29 miles from Melun. It is an ancient town, surrounded by walls. In its neighbourhood roses are cultivated for medicine and perfumery. Pop. 5,800.

PRUDENTIUS, AURELIUS CLEMENTIUS, pru-den'-shi-us, a Latin Christian poet, who was successively an advocate, a magistrate, and a soldier, and distinguished himself in all these professions.

PRUSHANU, proosh'-a-noo, a town of Russia, government of Grodno, on the Makavetz, 80 miles S. of Grodno. Pop. 4,700.

PRUSSIA (German PREUSSEN), prush'-a, the principal state of the German empire, comprising the greater part of northern Germany, bounded N. by the German Ocean, Denmark, and the Baltic; S. by Bavaria, Saxony, Hesse-Darmstadt, several of the smaller German states, the Alsace-Loraine provinces, and Austria; E. by Russia; and W. by Belgium and the Netherlands. Prussia also possesses the principality of Hohenzollern, and Jahde, on the North Sea, which lie within the boundary of other German states. Since 1866, Prussia has included the former kingdom of Hanover, Electoral Hesse, the duchies of Nassau and Schleswig-Holstein, portions of Bavaria and the grand duchy of Hesse and the city of Frankfort. The length from east to west is 700 miles, and the breadth from north to south, 470 miles. Geographically the kingdom is divided into two unequal portions, presenting marked difference of geographical characteristics. The eastern part, by far the largest, is a portion of the great plain of central Europe, and belongs to the basins of the Baltic Sea and the German Ocean; the western portion belongs to the basin of the Rhine, which intersects it. The eastern part, except on the south of Hanover and Silesia, where the Harz Mountains and the Riesenbirge reach in some parts an altitude of about 2,500 feet, the surface is generally nearly unbroken level, but gradually rising towards the east into a tract of moderate elevation, diversified with numerous small lakes. On the northern slope of this tract there are several fertile districts, especially near the Niemen, Vistula, and other rivers, which have been embanked. Near the Baltic large tracts lie so low that, were it not for the sand hills and banks of gravel thrown up by the sea, they would be inundated, and behind these hills in some parts are extensive lagoons, or "haffs," communicating with the sea by narrow channels. The coast line, about 500 miles long, is flat, and there are few good harbours, the only large gulf being that of Dantzic. Near the western extremity of the coast line is the isle of RUGEN, which at the northern extremity rises into a cliff 300 feet high. In the south, the plain of Prussia rises into the Trebnitz heights, attaining, near Breslau, on the Oder, an elevation of 1,000 feet. Between this southern and the northern elevation is a large sandy plain, in which Berlin, the capital, is situated, and in the north and north-west of Hanover are marshes and peat-moors. South of the great sandy tract, in Silesia and Prussian Saxony, the soil is very fertile. The western part of Prussia, including the Rhine province, Westphalia, and Hesse-Nassau, presents a striking contrast, in physical characteristics, to the eastern portion. Ranges of mountains, of moderate elevation, traverse it in various directions, forming beautiful and fertile valleys, the largest of which, that of the Rhine, is almost unsurpassed for beauty and fertility. On the right bank of the Rhine is the Taunus ridge the highest point, the Feldberg, 2,800 feet; and north east of the junction with the Moselle, is the Westerwald range, which reaches a height of 2,000 feet; farther north are the Sauerland, or Süderland mountains, the highest point of which is the Astenberg, 2,625 feet; and, to the north-east, following the course of the rivers Möhne and Ruhr, presenting to both rivers, bold cliffs; the Haar, or Haarstrang, in no part more than 700 feet high. The Teutoburger-Wald (1,030 feet in greatest elevation), and a continuation of the Weserbirge range are on the extreme north of this portion of Prussia. On the left, or western side of the Rhine, are the Hundsrück mountains, between the Moselle and the Nahe, reaching in the Iderwald and Hochwald the heights of 2,260 and 1,560 feet. Farther to the north-west, is the Eifelgebirge plateaux, stretching westward for about 45 miles, and having its greatest breadth between Andernach and Bonn. This district has a mean elevation of 1,600 feet, with a few hills of greater height. (See RHINE.) In the fertile districts of Prussia, grain, maize, linseed, millet, hops, potatoes, tobacco, flax, and hemp, are extensively cultivated. In the western districts are many vineyards, the Rhine wines having a great reputation. There are extensive forests. The climate varies greatly according to the locality. In the eastern part the summer is very dry, and the winter extremely cold. In the western part the average annual temperature is high, and there is a larger rainfall. In the wooded districts are wild boars, fallow deer, bears, lynxes, and abundance of small game; fish are abundant in the rivers and lakes.

Rivers and Lakes.—The Baltic receives about five-sixths of the drainage of the eastern part of Prussia. The most important river is the ODER, and next, the VISTULA, communicating with the former by a canal. Between them are the Leba, Lupow, Persante, Rega, Stalpe, and other small rivers. Farther east are the Passarge, Pregel, and NIEMEN. The principal river discharging into the German Ocean is the ELBE. Of the western part of the kingdom more than four-fifths belong to the Basin of the RHINE. The MAESE, MOSELLE, EMS, and WESER, are the other most important rivers in this portion of Prussia. There are more than 500 lakes (nearly all in the eastern portion), mostly small, and uninteresting in scenery.

Minerals.—Coal and iron, both extensively worked; lead, zinc, copper, cobalt, antimony, manganese, nickel, arsenic, alum, sulphur, slate, lime, freestone, salt, agate, jasper, and onyx. Amber is found on the shore of the Baltic. There are about 100 mineral springs, of great repute, chalybeate, sulphureous, and saline.

Provinces and Governments.—The kingdom is divided into 11 provinces, subdivided into 35 districts; and includes in addition the duchy of LAUENBERG, and the principality of HOHENZOLLERN. The following are the provinces and districts:—

PROVINCE OF PRUSSIA.—Konigsberg, Gumbinnen, Dantzic, Marienwerder.
POSEN.—Posen, Bromberg.
POMERANIA.—Stettin, Cöslin, Stralsund.
SILESIA.—Breslau, Oppeln, Liegnitz.
BRANDENBURG.—Potsdam and Berlin, Frankfort.
SAXONY.—Magdeburg, Merseburg, Erfurt.
WESTPHALIA.—Münster, Minden, Arnsberg.
RHINE PROVINCE.—Köln (Cologne), Dusseldorf, Coblenz, Trier, Aachen.
HESSE-NASSAU.—Cassel, Wiesbaden.
HANOVER.—Hanover, Hildesheim, Lüneberg, Stade, Osnabruck, Aurich, and Clausthal.
SCHLESWIG-HOLSTEIN.—Kiel, Schleswig.

Area.—137,066 square miles.

Pop.—27,279,211, nearly 22,000,000 being Germans, 2,500,000 Poles; the remainder, Lithuanians, Walloons, Czechs, Danes, and other races. The average density of population is 187 to the square mile. Nearly one half of the people are engaged in agriculture.

Chief Towns.—BERLIN (the capital), Aix-le-Chapelle, BARMEN, BRESLAU, COLOGNE, ELBERFELD, FRANKFORT-ON-THE-MAINE, HANOVER, and MAGDEBURG, are the chief inland towns, and the principal ports are ALTONA, COLBERG, DANTZIC, EMDEN, FLENSBURG, GEESTEMUNDE, HARBURG, KIEL, KÖNIGSBERG, LEER, STETTIN, STRALSUND, SWINEMUNDE, and WOLGAST. (See separate headings for Manufactures and Commerce.)

Constitution and Government.—The crown is hereditary in the male line, according to primogeniture. In the exercise of the government, the king is assisted by a council of ministers, appointed by royal decree. The legislative authority the king shares with a representative assembly, composed of two chambers, the first called the "Herrenhaus," or house of lords, and the second the "Abgeordnetenhaus," or chamber of deputies. Military service for a certain term is enforced on every male Prussian subject as soon as he has completed his 20th year.

Religion and Education.—The royal family belongs to the United Evangelic faith; but all denominations of Christians enjoy the same privileges, and are equally eligible to places of trust or emolument. The Protestant religion, in its two branches of Lutheran and Calvinist, preponderates, and is professed by nearly 65 per cent. of the Prussian people. To the Roman Catholic church belong nearly 33 per cent., and to all other creeds nearly 3 per cent. of the population. In the provinces of Prussia, Pomerania, Brandenburg, and Saxony, the great majority are Protestants; while in Posen, Silesia, Westphalia, and Rhenish Prussia, the Roman Catholics predominate. In Hanover, Schleswig-Holstein, and other provinces annexed to the kingdom in 1866, the Protestants form the mass of the population. There are a few members of the Greek church, mostly immigrants from Russia. Jews are to be found in all the provinces, but principally in Posen and Silesia. Prussia has 10 Universities, namely, Berlin, Bonn, Breslau, Göttingen, Greifswald, Halle, Kiel, Königsberg, Marburg, and Münster. Education is general throughout the kingdom, and compulsory. Every town and community in town or country must maintain a school supported by the taxes and administered by the local authorities. The schools are divided into eleven classes, including schools of agriculture, mining, and architecture.

Railways.—About 10,500 miles of railway are in operation, of which nearly one-half are owned by the state.

History.—About 320 B.C. a people known as the Borussi, or Porussi (from whom the modern name is derived), conquered the country. In the middle of the 13th century, the Teutonic Knights, on their return from the Crusades, undertook the conquest and conversion of Prussia; in 1415, Frederick IV. of Nuremberg (founder of the house of Hohenzollern, the present reigning family) obtained the margraviate of Brandenburg from the Emperor Sigismund of Germany. In 1525, Albert of Anspach, a member of a branch of the same family, and grand master of the Teutonic knights, seized a considerable portion of the country, turned Protestant, and was acknowledged duke of East Prussia, holding it as a fief of Poland. In 1618, Johannes Sigismund, son-in-law of the son of Albert, was recognised by his people and the king of Poland as duke of Prussia. In 1701, duke Frederick III., assumed the title of king as Frederick I. His son, Frederick II. (the Great), shared in the partition of Poland, adding considerably to the dominions. His successor and nephew, Frederick William II., took part in the second and third partitions of Poland. His son, Frederick William III., came to the crown in 1797, and having taken up arms against France, lost the battle of Jena. The peace of Tilsit, however, restored little more than half the Prussian states. The peace of Paris, in 1814, after the fall of Napoleon I., confirmed by that of 1815, gave them not the same extent of territory in Poland, but an ample equivalent in Saxony and the Lower Rhine, and restored Prussia to all her former importance. In 1866, Hanover, Electoral Hesse, Nassau, and Frankfort, were annexed to the kingdom of Prussia. (See GERMANY, FREDERICK II., HANOVER, HOLSTEIN, &c.)

PRUSSIA, PROVINCE OF, a province of the kingdom of Prussia, bounded N. and W. by Pomerania and the Baltic, E. and S. by Russia. It is popularly divided into two portions, known as East and West Prussia. Agriculture is the most important branch of industry, wheat, especially, being extensively cultivated. A large number of horses are bred. KÖNIGSBERG and DANTZIC are the chief towns. Area, 24,880 square miles. Pop. 3,339,834.

PRUTH, prooth, a river of Europe, rising on the north-east side of the Carpathian Mountains, Galicia, and, after a course of about 500 miles, falling into the Danube 12 below Galatz. The principal affluents on the right are the Czeremosz, Elan and Kagarlui; on the left, the Tchugor, Beghirla, and Lapushna. The Pruth forms a portion of the Russian frontier.

PRYNNE, WILLIAM, prin, an English lawyer, who was educated at Oriel College, Oxford, and having adopted the law as his profession, became a bencher at Lincoln's Inn. He attached himself to the Puritan party, and in 1632, was tried in the Star Chamber for writing a libel, under the title of "Histriomastix, or a Discourse on Stage Plays." For this he was sentenced to stand in the pillory, to lose both his ears, pay a fine of £3,000, be degraded from the bar, expelled from Oxford and Lincoln's Inn, and condemned to perpetual imprisonment. In another pamphlet (which, although in prison, he found means to publish) he attacked Laud and the bishops, for which he was condemned to lose the stumps of his ears, to pay a fine of £5,000, to be branded on both cheeks, and to be imprisoned for life. These atrocious sentences were rigidly carried into effect, and he was imprisoned in Caernarvon Castle, and afterwards in Mount Orgueil, Jersey. The House of Commons released him in 1641. He sat in the Long Parliament; but though he had been active in promoting the rebellion, he was an enemy to Cromwell, whom he assailed rigorously in pamphlets, and who caused him to be imprisoned. At the restoration he was made keeper of the records in the Tower. He wrote a very large number of books, chiefly on politics and religion; also the "History of Archbishop Laud," and the lives of kings John, Henry III., and Edward I. Notwithstanding all he had suffered, his taste for writing libellous pamphlets remained to the last, and he narrowly escaped expulsion from the House of Commons.

Born at Swainswick, near Bath, 1600; died in London, 1669.

PRZEMYSL, pzhem'-isl, a town of the Austrian empire, in Galicia, on the right bank of the San, 56 miles S.W. of Lemberg. The town is walled, and there is an old ruined castle on an adjacent height. A handsome covered bridge spans the river, and there are two Gothic cathedrals and several other churches, a nunnery, a military and other schools. Manf. Linen, and articles in wood. Pop. 1,000.—The town was founded by Casimir the Great, in 986.

PRZIBRAM, pzib'-ram, a mining town of the Austrian empire, in Bohemia, on the Litawka, 35 miles S.W. of Prague. Lead and silver are extensively worked. Pop. 7,700.

PSALMANAZAR, GEORGE, sal-ma-na'-zar, a notorious impostor, who is supposed to have been a native of Switzerland, or the south of France. After obtaining a good education in a monastery, he rambled about Europe, assuming various characters, went to Germany, where he pretended to be a Japanese converted to Christianity. Being reduced to distress, he entered a Scotch regiment in Flanders, the chaplain of which (a shrewd and unscrupulous man, who detected the deception, but saw his way to profit by it), brought him to England, where he passed for a native of Formosa, and, to support the character, lived upon raw flesh. He wrote a pretended Formosan grammar, and a history of the island, which imposed upon many learned persons. At length the deceit was discovered, and Psalmanazar was abandoned by his patrons, and it is said that he was the subject of religious impressions, and determined thenceforth to lead an honourable life. He engaged with the booksellers in compiling the "Ancient Universal History," his share of which shows siderable erudition. He also wrote "An Essay on Miracles," and a memoire of his life which was published after his death. His latter years made ample amends for his former irregularities.

Born about 1680; died in London, 1762.

PSAMMENITUS, psam'-me-ni'-tus, king of Egypt, succeeded his brother Amasis. Cambyses declared war against him, and having taken him prisoner, put him to death after reigning six months.

Died 526 B.C.

PSAMMETICHUS, psam-met'-i-kus, king of Egypt, son of Necho I. He reigned, in conjunction with eleven others, between 671—656 B.C. He was subsequently driven by his colleagues to the seacoast; but with the assistance of the Ionians and Carians, he defeated his enemies at Memphis; on which he became master of Egypt. He greatly encouraged the Greeks, and enriched his country by commerce; he was also a patron of the arts and sciences.

Died about 610 B.C.

PSAPHON, psaï'-fon, in Greek legend, a Libyan, who is said to have taught birds to repeat these words, "Psaphon is a god," and then to have set them free. His countrymen, hearing these sounds uttered by the birds of the air, believed it to be a miracle, and accordingly paid divine honours to the ingenious impostor.

PSIOL, or PSLA, pse-ol', a river of European Russia, which, after a course of 300 miles, joins the Dnieper, on the left bank, 10 miles from Krementchug. The chief affluents are the Khoral and Goltva.

PSKOV, pskof, a government or province of the north-west of European Russia. There are hills in the western part, and lakes in the south and south-east. The forests are extensive, and cattle are largely reared. Area, 17,069 square miles. Pop. 894,712.

PSKOV, a town of European Russia, capital of the above government, on the banks of the Velikaia, 160 miles S.W. of St. Petersburg. It has a cathedral, 42 churches, several convents, and schools. Pop. 21,170.

PSYCHE, si'-ke, in the later Greek and Roman mythology, a nymph whom Cupid married and carried into a place of bliss. Venus put her to death because she had robbed the world of her son; but Jupiter at the request of Cupid, granted immortality to Psyche. The word signifies "the soul;" and Psyche personified is generally represented with the wings of a butterfly, to intimate the lightness of the soul, of which the butterfly is the symbol.

PSYCHRISTUS, JACOBUS, si-kris'-tus, a celebrated Alexandrian physician, who held high office, and was so revered by the people that a statue of him was set up in the baths. Such eagerness had he for improving his own art, that the people imagined the soul of Æsculapius had been transfused into him. He never bled, and seldom resorted to fire or the knife.

Lived in the 5th century.

PTOLEMÆUS, or PTOLEMY, tol'-e-me'-us, tol'-e-me, the name of a number of Greek kings of Egypt, the most celebrated of whom were:—

PTOLEMY I. (Soter, or the Preserver), first Greek king of Egypt, was the natural son of Philip of Macedon. He was the favourite and one of the best generals of Alexander the Great, on whose death he obtained Egypt, Libya, and part of Arabia, to which, on the death of Perdiccas, he added Cœlesyria, Phœnicia, Judæa, and the isle of Cyprus. He made Alexandria his capital, where he built a lighthouse called the Pharos, as a guide to pilots for that harbour. He encouraged literature and formed an academy, with a museum at Alexandria. Ptolemy is said to have written the life of Alexander the Great, and other works, which are lost.

Died 285 B.C.

PTOLEMY II. (Philadelphus), son and successor of the above. He obtained his surname (which signifies brother-loving) in ridicule for having put to death his two brothers. He first married Arsinoë, his niece, and then her mother, also named Arsinoë, his own sister. Ptolemy formed an alliance with the Romans. He was a great encourager of commerce for which purpose he built a city on the Red Sea. He also constructed considerable fleets both there and in the Mediterranean. He was a liberal patron of learned men, and caused the Scriptures to be rendered into Greek, in that version called the Septuagint.

Born in Cos, 309 B.C.; died 247 B.C.

PTOLEMY, III. (Euergetes), the son and successor of the preceding. He declared war against Seleucus Callinicus, king of Syria, to avenge the death of his sister Berenice. Ptolemy made himself master of Syria and Cilicia, and was extending his conquests when the news of a revolt recalled him to Egypt. He soon quelled the insurgents, and by the prudence of his reign acquired the name of "Euergetes," or benefactor. He was poisoned by his own son.

Died 222 B.C.

PTOLEMY IV. (Philopater), ("father-loving"), ironically so called, from his cruelty in poisoning his father. He put to death his mother, brother, uncle, and sister, and is said to have exposed a number of Jews, on a plain, to the fury of his elephants; but those animals instead of destroying the intended victims, fell upon the Egyptians; on which the tyrant, out of fear, conferred great favours on the Jewish nation.

Died 205 B.C.

PTOLEMY V. (Epiphanes, or "Illustrious,") succeeded his father Philopater, and at the age of 14, assumed the reigns of government. The decree published on that occasion forms the inscription on the famous Rosetta stone, which gave the final clue to the interpretation of Egyptian hieroglyphics. During his minority, Antiochus the Great conquered large portions of his kingdom; but afterwards restored them to Ptolemy, when he gave him his daughter in marriage. Ptolemy was poisoned 181 B.C.

PTOLEMY VI. (Philometor,) son and successor of the preceding. Having declared war against Antiochus Epiphanes, he was taken prisoner by him. The Egyptians then placed his brother on the throne, whom Antiochus deposed, and restored Philometor, who died of a wound received in battle against Alexander Balas, king of Syria.

Died 146 B.C.

PTOLEMY VII. (Physcon), so called from the prominence of his belly, succeeded his brother Philometor, and was a cruel and sensual tyrant. He married Cleopatra, his own sister, and the widow of his other brother, Philometer, and on the same day murdered her infant son. He afterwards divorced Cleopatra and married her daughter by her first husband, for which he was driven from his throne by his indignant people, and he revenged himself by murdering his own and Cleopatra's son and sending the head and hands as a birthday present to her.

Died 117 B.C.

PTOLEMY VIII. (Lathyrus, "gray pea"), so called from an excrescence on his nose resembling a pea. He succeeded his father Physcon; but was soon after driven to Cyprus by his mother, Cleopatra, who gave the crown to her son Ptolemy Alexander. Lathyrus, having mustered an army, invaded Judæa, and committed great cruelties on the Jews; after which he marched to Egypt, but was unsuccessful. On the death of Alexander, he ascended the throne.

Died 81 B.C.

PTOLEMY XI. (Auletes), which surname he obtained from his skill on the flute, was the illegitimate son of the preceding, and ascended the throne after the death of his father. He ceded Cyprus to the Romans, with a large tribute, which so displeased his subjects, that they revolted, and placed his daughter Berenice on the throne. By the help of his allies, he recovered his dominions, and put his daughter to death.

Died 51 B.C.

PTOLEMY XII., the illegitimate son of the preceding, ascended the throne with his sister Cleopatra, whom he married, according to the will of his father. Pompey the Great, who had been his guardian, fled into Egypt after his defeat at Pharsalia, and was murdered by him. Ptolemy, who was no more faithful to Cæsar than he had been to his rival, was drowned in the Nile, after being defeated by the Romans.

Died 46 B.C.

PTOLEMY, CLAUDIUS, an eminent Egyptian geographer and mathematician. He is celebrated for his System of the World, in which he placed the earth as the centre of the system, round which sun, planets, and stars revolved. His Geography describes the whole world as it was known in his day, and was the great text-book of the science of which it treats until the 15th century, when the discoveries of the Venetians and Portuguese demonstrated its errors. Flourished at Alexandria early in the 2nd century.

PUBLICOLA, pub-lik'-o-la. (See VALERIUS, PUBLIUS.)

PUBLIUS SYRUS, pub'-li-us, a comic poet of Syria, who was at first slave to a patrician named Domitius, who gave him his liberty. His works are lost, but some quotations from them are preserved in the writings of ancient authors.

Lived at Rome, about 40 B.C.

PÜCKLER-MUSKAU, HERMANN LUDWIG HEINRICH VON, Prince, pe(r)k'-ler, moos-kou', a German author and traveller, who was raised to the rank of prince in 1822. He travelled in Europe and the East, and published accounts of his travels, remarkable for racy and eccentric descriptions.

Born 1785; died 1871.

PUDSEY, pud'-se, a town of Yorkshire, on an elevated situation, 6 miles W. of Leeds. There is a spacious modern church. Manf. Chiefly woollen goods. Pop. 15,459.

PUEBLA, pwaib'-la, a state of the republic of Mexico, North America. It is bounded N.E. by Vera Cruz, E. by Oaxaca, S. by the Pacific Ocean, and W. by the intendancy of Mexico. The surface is mountainous, the greater portion being traversed by high cordilleras. Beyond the 18th degree of latitude the whole country is a plain, eminently fertile in wheat, maize, and fruit trees. The plain is from 5,900 to 6,560 feet above the level of the sea. In this intendancy is also the most elevated mountain of Mexico, the Popocatepetl, a volcano continually burning. There are silver mines and marble quarries. Area, 12,021 square miles. Pop. 784,466. Lat. between 16° 20′ and 20° 15′ N. Lon. between 97° and 99° 15′ W.

PUEBLA DE LOS ANGELES, capital of the above department stands on a table-land, about 7,380 feet above the level of the sea, 76 miles S.E. of Mexico. The streets are wide, and drawn in straight lines from east to west, and from north to south. The principal square in the centre of the city is very magnificent. It is adorned on three sides with uniform porticoes, where are shops filled with all kinds of commodities; and on the fourth side is a grand cathedral, which has a beautiful front and two lofty towers. Besides the cathedral, there are about 70 churches, 20 monasteries and convents, well built and finely adorned. There are, also, several colleges and charity schools, both for male and female pupils, and 44 public fountains. Manf. Hard soap, iron and steel wares, particularly swords, bayonets, glass, earthenware, &c. Pop. 75,000.

PUEBLA (DE DON FADRIDQUE), a town of Spain, province of Granada, 80 miles N.E. of the town of that name. Manf. Linen, baize, and soap. Pop. 6,200.

PUEBLA (DE MONTALBAN), a town of Spain, province of Toledo, 20 miles N. of the town of that name. An annual fair is held. Pop. 4,500.

PUEBLO, a county of Colorado, United States. Area, 2,200 square miles. Pop. 7,617. The capital is Pueblo.

PUENTE, pwain'-tai, a "bridge," a town of Spain, province of Cordova, on a height above the Genil, 45 miles S. of Cordova. Manf. Earthenware, bricks, and oil. Pop. 6,400.

PUERTO, pwair'-to, a "port," a prefix to the names of many places of Spain.

PUERTO BELLO, a seaport of the republic of Colombia, on the northern shore of the isthmus of Panama, 40 miles N.W. of Panama. It has a fine harbour, and was for some time the rival of Panama, but has fallen into decay. It is famous for the bombardment by Admiral Vernon, in 1759. Pop. 3,500.

PUERTO CABELLO, a fortified maritime town of the republic of Venezuela, South America, on an island in the Gulf of Taiste, 22 miles N.W. of Venezuela. There is a good harbour, and a large trade is carried on. Pop. 7,500.

PUERTO DE LA MAR. (See COBIJA.)

PUERTO DE SANTA MARIA, or EL PUERTO, a seaport of Spain, in the province of Cadiz, at the mouth of the Guadalete, 6 miles N.E. of Cadiz. The town is well built; its streets are broad, well paved, and kept carefully clean; and there are some fine promenades, planted with orange trees. Manf. Soap, starch, leather, liqueurs, and earthenware. It is the principal place for the import of the wines of Xerez. Pop. 22,000.

PUERTO MONTE, capital of the province of Llanquihui, republic of Chili. Pop. 15,000, chiefly German settlers.

PUERTO PRINCIPE, SANTA MARIA DE, an inland town of Cuba, on the eastern part of the island, connected by railway with its port, Las Nuevitas, 45 miles N.E. Pop. 46,641.

PUERTO REAL, a seaport of Spain, province of Cadiz, 7 miles E. of the town of that name. Manf. Linen, leather, pottery, vermicelli, and starch. Pop. 4,000.

PUERTO RICO. (See PORTO RICO.)

PUFENDORF, or PUFFENDORF, SAMUEL DE, poof'-en-dorf, a German writer on jurisprudence. He studied at Leipsic, and afterwards at Jena, and applied himself to philosophy, law, and mathematics. In 1658 he was appointed tutor to the son of Coyer, ambassador of the king of Sweden to the court of Denmark; but war breaking out between the two countries, the family of the ambassador was thrown into prison, and Puffendorf with the rest. There he composed his treatise on "Universal Jurisprudence," which was printed at the Hague in 1660. This work obtained for him the professorship of the law of nature and nations at Heidelberg; whence, having given offence by a work on the constitution of the German empire, he removed, in 1670, by the invitation of the king of Sweden, to Lund, and was appointed professor in the university of that city. He was afterwards created a baron, and historiographer, by the Swedish monarch. In 1688 he went to Berlin, where he became counsellor of state. His other works are, "History of Sweden from 1628 to 1654;" "History of Charles Gustavus;" "History of Frederick William the Great, elector of Brandenburg;" treatise on "The Law of Nature and Nations."

Born at Chemnitz, Saxony, 1632; died at Berlin, 1694.

PUGATCHEFF, YEMELYAN, poo'-ga-tchef, a Cossack, at first a chief of robbers, and afterwards he served in the Russian army. Taking advantage of a great personal resemblance between himself and the Czar Peter III., he announced that he had escaped from death, and raised an insurrection against the Empress Catherine II., issuing a manifesto signed Peter III. Many Tartar and Finnish tribes joined him, he took several fortresses, and marched upon Moscow, but was betrayed for a large bribe, and executed.

Born at Simoviesk, 1726; died at Moscow, 1775.

PUGET SOUND, pu'-jet, a bay and harbour on the north-western border of Washington Territory, United States, forming the southern termination of Admiralty Inlet.

PUGIN, AUGUSTUS, pu'-jin, an eminent French architectural draughtsman, who settled in London, and became an assistant to the architect Nash. He also published a number of works on architecture, the most important of which were—"Specimens of Gothic Architecture from various Edifices in England;" "Specimens of the Architectural Antiquities of Normandy;" and "Gothic Ornaments."

Died 1832.

PUGIN, AUGUSTIN WELBY NORTHMORE, an eminent English architect and son of the preceding, under whom he acquired the elementary principles of his art. He was next engaged as the designer of furniture for the apartments at Windsor Castle, and subsequently devoted himself to the production of Gothic designs for furniture, gold and silversmith's work, &c.. About 1841 he embraced the doctrines of the Roman Catholic faith, and soon afterwards became extensively employed in designing ecclesiastical structures for the service of that church. From his plans, churches, chapels, convents and schools were erected throughout Great Britain. His best works are, the cathedral church of St. Marie, at Derby; the cathedral of St. George's, Southwark, London: and the Roman Catholic churches at Liverpool, Manchester, Oxford, Cambridge, and Newcastle-upon-Tyne. For the earl of Shrewsbury, who was his constant patron, he built a monastery and church at Alton Towers; he also designed the gateway to Magdalen College, Oxford. His latest employment was the designing and superintendence of the interior of the new palace at Westminster. His chief literary works were "Glossary of Ecclesiastical Ornaments;" "True Principles of Pointed or Christian Architecture:" and "An Apology for the Revival of Christian Architecture." He unfortunately outlived his mental powers.

Born 1811; died at Ramsgate, 1852.

PUGLIA. (See APULIA.)

PULASKI, or PULAWSKI, CASIMIR, poo-las'-ke, son of a Polish nobleman, who distinguished himself against the Russians, but being outlawed, went to Turkey, France, and America, where he served with great distinction under Washington. He was killed at the assault on Savannah.

Born 1747; died 1779.

PULASKI, the name of seven counties in the United States:—

ARKANSAS.—Area, 1,200 square miles. Pop. 33,000 about one-fifth being coloured. The capital is LITTLE ROCK.

GEORGIA.—Area, 650 square miles. Pop. 14,000, half being coloured. The capital is Hawkinsville.

ILLINOIS.—Area, 175 square miles. Pop. 9,000. The capital is Mound City.

INDIANA.—Area, 345 square miles. Pop. 9,851. The capital is Winamac.

KENTUCKY.—Area, 550 square miles. Pop. 21,318. The capital is Somerset.

MISSOURI.—Area, 1,332 square miles. Pop. 7,250.

VIRGINIA.—Area, 30 square miles. Pop. 8,755 about 2,000 being coloured. The capital is Newbern.

PULCHERIA, ST., pul-kee'-ri-a, empress of the East, was the daughter of the emperor Arcadius, and ruled in conjunction with her brother, Theodosius the Younger. On his death, in 450, she espoused Marcianus, and associated him in the government. She convened the council of Chalcedon in 451, and liberally patronised learned and religious men.

Born 399; died 453.

PULCI, LUIGI, pool-che, an eminent Italian poet, friend of Lorenzo de' Medici. He wrote an epic poem, entitled "Morgante Maggiore," in which are blended sacred and profane matters, in a very extraordinary manner. He wrote another poem, showing nearly equal power, but in some parts very indecent.

Born at Florence, 1431; died at the same city, 1487.

PULCI, BERNARDO, elder brother of the above, translated the eclogues of Virgil, and wrote several poems of a serious cast.

Lived in the 15th century.

PULCI, LUCA, brother of the preceding, wrote some metrical romances, and a poem in honour of the success won by Lorenzo de' Medici in a tournament.

Lived in the 15th century.

PULO PENANG. (See PENANG.)

PULSZKY, FERENCE AUREL, pool-ske, Hungarian politician and writer, who, after completing his education as an advocate, accompanied his uncle, M. Fejervary, an eminent Hungarian antiquary, on a tour through Germany, Italy, and Great Britain. In 1840 he became a member of the Hungarian diet; but having lost his seat at a subsequent election, he devoted himself to political literature, and, among other employments, acted as Hungarian correspondent of the "Allgemeine Zeitung." Upon the outbreak of the revolution in Hungary he was sent by Kossuth upon a mission to England, to secure the support of that power for Hungary. In his absence, the Hungarian cause was lost. After Kossuth's arrival in England, he became his intimate companion, and accompanied him on his tour through America. A description of his American journey was published in a volume entitled "Red, White, and Blue;" he also wrote "Diary of a Tour in Great Britain," and, in conjunction with his wife, "Tales and Traditions of Hungary."

Born at Eperies, Hungary, 1814.

PULTENEY, WILLIAM, pult'-ne, earl of Bath, an English statesman. He became a member of the House of Commons early in life, and at the prosecution of Walpole, in 1712, defended him with great eloquence. When George I. ascended the throne, he was appointed secretary at war, under Walpole; but he subsequently became a severe and constant antagonist of that minister, until at length he succeeded in depriving Sir Robert of his place; after which he was created earl of Bath, and was admitted of the privy council. He had been a popular idol up to this time; but then, in the words of Chesterfield, sank "into insignificance and an earldom."

Born 1682; died 1764.

PULTOWA. (See POLTAVA.)

PULTUSK, or PULTOWSK, pool'-toosk, a town of European Russia, in Poland, government of Lomsha, on an island formed by the Narew, 35 miles N.E. of Warsaw. Pop. 7,200.—A great but indecisive battle was fought here between the Russians and French in 1806.

PUNA, an island of Ecuador, South America, situate at the mouth of the Guayaquil, 40 miles S.W. of Guayaquil. It is 30 miles long, with a breadth of 10. Well wooded and fertile. There is a good harbour. Lat. 2° 50′ S. Lon. 70° 58′ W.

PUNDERPOOR, pun-der-poor, a town of British India, presidency of Bombay, on the right bank of the Beema, 110 miles S.E. of Poonah. It is well built, and a very large trade is carried on. Pop. 25,000. Lat. 17° 56′ N. Lon. 75° 12′ E.

PUNITZ, poo'-nitzh, a town of Prussian Poland, 45 miles from Posen. Pop. 2,000.—Here, in 1706, a battle was fought between the Saxons and the Swedes.

PUNJAB, pun-jaub', "five rivers," an extensive province of British India, comprising the country traversed by the "five great waters," of which the Indus is the most westerly, and the Sutlej the most easterly. The northern part is very mountainous, being traversed by spurs of the Himalayas; but in the southern part the surface is nearly level, with the exception of the Salt Range, between the Indus and Jhelum, which rises in some parts to an elevation of 5,000 feet. Sloping to the south-west, is a vast alluvial plain, intersected by large streams into five "doabs," or tracts between rivers. The soil is various, being in some parts barren, and in others marked by considerable fertility. There are few trees. The chief productions are grain of all kinds, with opium, indigo, and tobacco; the orange, the palm, and other fruit-trees. Camels and buffaloes are extensively reared. In the plains the climate is oppressively hot and dry in the summer, but cool and sometimes even frosty in the winter. There is scarcely any rain, except in the mountainous districts.

Rivers.—The Indus, and its five affluents, the Jhelum, Chenab, Ravi, Beas, and Sutlej.

Minerals.—Rock salt, alum, sulphur, gypsum, and coal.

Area.—104,975 square miles.

Pop.—22,712,120, of various races, including about 9,000,000 Hindoos, 11,000,000 Mahometans, 1,100,000 Sikhs and 34,000 Christians.

Administrative Divisions and Chief Towns.—The province is divided into 10 divisions or commissionerships:—Delhi, Hissar, Ambala, Jullundhur, Amritsur, Lahore, Rawalpindi, Mooltan, Deerajat and Peshawur. The chief towns are LAHORE, MOOLTAN, LOODHIANA, and PUTTEALA.

History.—The Punjab was traversed by Alexander the Great, 327 B.C.; by Tamerlane, 1398; and by Mahmond of Ghizni, about 1,000. In 1519, Baber, the founder of the Mogul empire, obtained possession, and in 1748 the Afghans over-ran the country, and retained possession till 1809, when Runjeet Singh established himself as ruler. Since 1849, the Punjab has formed a part of the British dominions.

PUNNAH. (See PANNA.)

PUNO, poo'-no, a department of Peru, South America, inclosed by Bolivia on the E., and on the other sides by the departments Arequipa and Cuzco. It is nearly inclosed by the Cordilleras of the Andes, and formerly famous for its silver-mines. Barley, potatoes, and cattle are reared. Area, 39,743 square miles. Pop. 256,594.

PUNO, capital of the above department, on the western shore of Lake Titicaca, at an elevation of 12,870 feet above the sea level. Pop. 6,000.

PURBACH, GEORG, poor'-bak, a German mathematician, so called from his native place, a village of that name in Germany. He studied philosophy and divinity at Vienna; but devoted himcipally to astronomical pursuits, translated Ptolemy's "Almagest," invented some astronomical instruments, constructed tables, and made numerous observations.

Born at Purbach, near Linz, 1423; died at Vienna, 1461.

PURBECK, ISLE OF, pur'-bek, a peninsular district of Dorsetshire. It is situate on the English Channel, is nearly surrounded by the sea and the river Frome, and comprehends the whole of the south-eastern corner of the county, from Luckford Lake eastwards. It is 10 miles long and 7 broad. Purbeck has been long famous for its stone, which is in great demand both for building and paving.

PURCELL, HENRY, pur'-sel, an English musical composer, was son of one of the gentlemen of the chapel royal, where he was trained to music. At the age of 18 he was made organist of Westminster Abbey, and, in 1682, of the chapel royal. His church music is in the grandest style, and his operas are very fine. Dryden, whose songs he set, has paid a fine compliment to his talents. His beautiful songs were published in a collection entitled "Orpheus Britannicus." He is generally considered the most eminent of English-born composers. He died of consumption, and was buried in Westminster Abbey.

Born in London, 1658; died 1695.

PURCHAS, SAMUEL, pur'-kas, English divine and writer, who was educated at Cambridge, and, after entering into orders, obtained the vicarage of Eastwood, in Essex, in 1604; but, having conceived the idea of compiling a collection of voyages, he removed to London, in order to prosecute his studies, and left his living to his brother. After settling in London, he was presented to the living of St. Martin, Ludgate, and was also appointed chaplain to Archbishop Abbot. His works are as valuable as they are curious: "Purchas his Pilgrimage; or, Relations of the World, and the Religions observed in all Ages and Places discovered from the Creation unto this Present," the materials for which he derived from upwards of thirteen hundred authors. He also produced "Purchas his Pilgrims," in which travels are related in the traveller's own words; and "Microcosmus; or, History of Man," and some volumes of sermons.

Born at Thaxted, Essex, 1577; died 1628.

PURMEREND, poor'-mer-end, a town of the Netherlands, province of North Holland, 10 miles N. of Amsterdam. A large trade is carried on in agricultural produce. Pop. 4,800.

PURNEAH, pur-ne-a', a town of British India, presidency of Bengal. Pop. 16,000. Capital of district of same name. Area, 4,956 square miles. Pop. 1,848,687.

PURUS, pu-rus', a river of South America, rising in the mountains east of Cuzco, in Peru, and flowing in a north-easterly direction to its junction with the Amazon, into which it falls by two large and three smaller mouths, the extremes of which are more than 100 miles apart. The total length is about 2,000 miles, more than half within Brazil, and it is navigable for nearly the whole course. This river is probably the Madre de Dios of the early Spanish explorers.

PURUVARAS, poo-roo'-va-ras, a legendary king of ancient India, famous for liberality, magnificence, truthfulness, and purity. He is a hero of the Puranas and other ancient books.

PUSEY, Rev. Edward Bouverie, D.D., pu'-se, an English divine, and the chief instrument of that movement in the established church of England which has been called the Anglo-Catholic and the Puseyite movement. He is a connection of the families of the earls of Radnor and Harborough, and his father, whose family name was Bouverie, assumed that of Pusey. He was educated at Eton and Oxford, where, about 1822, he was elected fellow of Oriel College. In 1828 he was appointed Regius professor of Hebrew. In 1835 he contributed to the Oxford "Tracts for the Times." These tracts, together with his sermons and letters, evinced a desire for the re-establishment of ceremonies and forms which had not been in use in the English church since the Reformation. He incurred the displeasure of most of his ecclesiastical superiors, and was suspended from preaching for three years for a sermon in which, it was alleged, he advocated the doctrine of the Real Presence; but, on the other hand, succeeded in finding a band of strong partisans among the clergy of England. Dr. Pusey has written several volumes of sermons, adapted some Roman Catholic devotional works for the use of the established church, and edited the "Anglo-Catholic Library."

Born 1800. Died 1882.

PUSHKIN, Alexander Sergeivitch, poosh'-kin, a Russian poet, who belonged to a good family, and was educated at the imperial lyceum of Tsarskoe Selo. Whilst a student, he was prominent for the expression of liberal opinions, and neglected his studies for poetry. Immediately after quitting the academy he began to exercise his talents in writing verses to Liberty; but these political views were unsuited to Russia, and the poet was compelled to accept an appointment at Odessa. Siberia would doubtless have been his destination, had he not brought out, at the same time, a patriotic poem, "Ruslam and Liudmila," relative to Vladimir, the Charlemagne of his country. He then led a rambling life for several years, and in 1822 he produced his "Prisoner of the Caucasus," which was not as successful as his later works; such as "The Gipsies," "Onegin," and "Poltava." The great popularity of these latter poems led to his recall. He secured the favour of the emperor Nicholas, who appointed him historiographer, with a pension of 6,000 roubles. After this his opinions underwent an almost total change. His last efforts were almost entirely confined to prose composition; but his labours were brought to a sudden and unfortunate termination by his being shot in a duel with an officer. The emperor bestowed a pension upon his widow and family, and ordered a fine edition of the poet's works to be produced at his own expense. His countrymen style him "the Byron of Russia."

Born at Pskov, 1799; died at St. Petersburg, 1837.

PUSTERHAL, poost'-ter-hal. (See Tyrol.)

PUTEAUX, pu-to', a town of France, department Seine, on the left bank of the Seine, 6 miles W. of Paris. Manf. Cottons, worsted, and silk. Large quantities of roses are grown in the neighbourhood. Pop. 16,000.

PUTIVL, poo-tivl', a town of European Russia, government of Kursk, on the Sem, at the confluence with the Putivl. It has numerous churches and chapels, and other public buildings. It trades chiefly in the rural produce of the vicinity. Manf. Vitriol, saltpetre, and tiles. Pop. 7,000.

PUTNAM, Israel, put'-nam, an American republican general. He was destined to the occupation of a farmer, and continued in that avocation till the French and Indian war broke out, when, at the age of 36, he took service in the English army, and from his known courage and energy, received the command of a company of light troops or "rangers," at the head of which he performed prodigies of valour during ten years. He was once captured by the Indians, who intended to roast him alive, and he was actually tied to a tree and the fire was kindled, when he was saved by the French general. When the dispute between his country and England commenced, he was following the quiet life of a farmer and tavern-keeper; but the first blood that was shed roused all his fiery energy. He was created major-general by Congress; and at Bunker's Hill, New York, and during Washington's retreat through New Jersey, he showed himself one of the bravest and most devoted of the patriot leaders. But in 1779 he was stricken with paralysis, and was prevented from participating in the final triumphs of his countrymen.

Born at Salem, Massachusetts, 1718; died at Brooklyn, Connecticut, 1790.

PUTNAM, the name of 9 counties in the United States:—

Florida.—Area, 610 square miles. Pop. 6,261, about one-third being coloured. The capital is Palatka.

Georgia.—Area, 350 square miles. Pop. 14,559, about two-thirds being coloured. The capital is Eatonton.

Illinois.—Area, 200 square miles. Pop. 5,554. The capital is Hennepin.

Indiana.—Area, 486 square miles. Pop. 22,501. The capital is Greencastle.

Missouri.—Area, 550 square miles. Pop. 13,555. The capital is Unionville.

New York.—Area, 234 square miles. Pop. 15,181. The capital is Carmel.

Ohio.—Area, 500 square miles. Pop. 23,713. The capital is Ottawa.

Tennessee.—Area, 500 square miles. Pop. 12,501. The capital is Cookville.

West Virginia.—Area, 350 square miles. Pop. 11,375. The capital is Winfield.

PUTNEY, put'-ne. (See London.)

PUTTIALAH, or PATIALA, put-le-a'-la, a native state of India, one of the Cis-Sutlej States. It is very fertile, and large quantities of grain are exported. Area, 5,412 square miles. Pop. 1,467,433.

PUTTUN, a town of India, in Guzerat, on the Saraswati, 63 miles N.W. of Ahmedabad. There are many remains of an older city. Manf. Silk and cotton goods, pottery, and cutlery. Pop. 30,000.

PUY, LE, pwe, a town of France, department Haute-Loire, on the Borne, 65 miles S.W. of Lyons. It stands on the southern slope of Mount Anis, crowned by the basaltic rock of Corneille. It has a large cathedral, built about the 11th century, but less remarkable for its architecture than for an image of the Virgin, which is believed to possess miraculous powers. Near the town is the remarkable basaltic cone, the Rocher de St. Michel, 265 feet high, about 170 feet in diameter at the base, and 16 feet at the summit. It is ascended by a winding stair, and there is a small chapel on the top. Manf. Lace, and bells for horses and mules. Pop. 19,000.

PUY-DE-DÔME, a department in the central part of France, towards the east. It is mountainous, being traversed in the east and west by branches of the Cevennes and the Auvergne mountains, and there are a large number of volcanic puys or peaks, the chief of which are Mont de Sancy and the Puy-de-Dôme. Its soil, in the high grounds is dry and stony; but in the beautiful valley of Limagne it is fertile. Grain, hemp, wine, and fruit, are cultivated. Chestnuts are the principal food of some of the inhabitants, and cattle and sheep are extensively reared.

Rivers.—The Allier, Dore, Sioule, Couze, Durolle, and Dordogne.

Minerals.—Some silver, iron, antimony, lead, alum, marble, and coal. There are many heated and cold mineral springs.

Area.—3,070 square miles.

Pop.—566,064.

Divisions and Chief Towns.—There are 5 arrondissements and 456 communes. The chief town is Clermont.

PUYLAURENS, pwe'-law-rang, a town of France, department Tarn, 13 miles S.E. of Lavaur. Pop. 5,600.—The fortifications of this place were dismantled by Louis XIII.

PWLLHELI, pool-hé'-li, a seaport and parliamentary borough (Carnarvon district) of Wales, on the north side of Cardigan Bay. There are building yards and a small harbour. Pop. 3,040.—A station on the London and North-Western railway.

PYCHMA, pitch'-ma, a river of European Russia, rising on the eastern slope of the Ural Mountains, near Ekalerinburg, and after a course of 280 miles, joining the Tura.

PYE, HENRY JAMES, pi, an English poet-laureate, who was educated at the university of Oxford, and produced several volumes of poor poems, and a translation of Aristotle's "Poetics," which obtained for him the office of laureate in 1790. He was also a member of parliament, a magistrate, and a commissioner of police.

Born in Berkshire, 1745; died 1813.

PYLADES. (See ORESTES.)

PYM, JOHN, pim, an English statesman, who was a member of a wealthy Somersetshire family, received his education at Pembroke College, Oxford, and afterwards applied himself to the study of the law. He early entered the House of Commons as member for Tavistock, and distinguished himself as a bold and eloquent debater. He was one of the most energetic opposers of the measures of Charles I., and in 1626 acted as one of the managers of the impeachment of the duke of Buckingham. He was one of the five members, the arrest of whom was attempted by the king. In 1640 he delivered a remarkable speech to the House of Commons, in which he declared that the earl of Strafford was the "principal author and promoter of all those counsels which had exposed the kingdom to so much ruin." The impeachment of Strafford was the result of this oration. Against Laud he also delivered an eloquent speech; and his power and influence became so great during the crisis which speedily ensued, that he was called "King Pym." In 1641, Pym delivered a speech to the Lords upon presenting petitions which had been received by the lower house, of such eloquence and boldness, that the Commons voted him their thanks. In the subsequent struggle between Charles and the parliament, Pym was nominated lieutenant of the ordnance; but his death occurred shortly afterwards. He was buried in state in Westminster Abbey, and the House of Commons voted £10,000 to pay his debts.

Born in Somersetshire, 1584; died in London, 1643.

PYRAMUS, pir'-a-mus, in Greek poetical legend, a Babylonian youth, who became enamoured of Thisbe, and believing that she had been killed by a lion when coming to meet him, stabbed himself. Thisbe coming up and finding him dead, killed herself with his sword.

PYRENEES, pir'-e-nees, an extensive mountain-range in the south of Europe, dividing France from Spain, and extending, almost in a straight line, with a length of about 270 miles, and a breadth of from 50 to 100 miles, from St. Sebastian, on the Bay of Biscay, to Cape Creux, on the Mediterranean. From them proceed, under various names, a number of inferior ramifications of mountains along the French territory to the north, and the Spanish to the south, and on the north-east they are connected, by the Cevennes Mountains, with the Alps. There are two parallel main ridges of which the southern is the more elevated. The area of the system is estimated at about 12,600 square miles. The acclivity of the Pyrenees on the side of Spain, is often extremely steep, presenting a continued succession of rugged chasms, abrupt precipices, and huge masses of naked rock; on that of France, the ascent is generally gradual, and the mountains both more accessible and of more pleasant aspect. The principal summits are Maladetta, 11,160 feet; Mont Perdu, 10,994 feet; the Vignemale, 10,820 feet; and the Peak of Nethou, 11,168 feet. They contain glaciers as in the Alps; but these masses of permanent ice are much less extensive. The snow line on the northern slope begins at an elevation of about 8,140 feet, and on the southern side 8,900 feet. There are necessarily many passes, some known as "cols," others as "puerto"; the total number, including paths for pedestrians, exceeds fifty; but the carriage roads hardly exceed five; and of these the most frequented are from Junquera to Perpignan on the east, from Vittoria to St. Jean de Luz on the west, and, at some distance inland, from Pampeluna to St. Jean de Pied de Port. The passes in the interior are over very high ground: thus that of Pineda is 8,248 feet above the sea; Gavarnie, 7,654; Lavareze, 7,350; and Tourmalet, 7,143. On the northern slopes are extensive forests and fine pastures. There are many mineral springs. The principal rivers rising in the Pyrenees are the Adour, Garonne, and Aude, flowing N., and the Slobregat and numerous affluents of the Ebro, flowing south.

PYRÉNÉES, BASSES (or Lower), a department of France, in the extreme south-west, occupying the northern slopes of the Western Pyrénées, branches of which divide it into numerous valleys, each traversed by a small mountain stream or gave. The soil is generally fertile, but not adapted for wheat, although there are good crops of barley and oats. The vine is extensively cultivated, and the wines of Auberlin, Gau, Jurançon, and Pontac are in good repute. Large numbers of horses, mules, cattle, sheep, and pigs are reared; and the department has a special reputation for hams.

Rivers.—The Bidouze, Nivelle, Gave d'Oloron and Gave de Pau.

Minerals.—Iron, copper, sulphur, alabaster, slate, and marble. The mineral springs, the most important of which are those of Biarritz, Cambo, Eaux-Bonnes, and Eaux-Chaudes, are of great repute and much resorted to.

Area.—2,943 square miles.

Pop.—434,466.

Divisions and Chief Towns.—There are 5 arrondissements and 558 communes. The chief towns are PAU, the capital and Biarritz.

PYRÉNÉES, HAUTES (or High), a department of France, east of the preceding, and containing the loftiest summits of the Pyrénées, near which the surface is rugged, with precipitous rocks; the centre of the department is undulating, and on the north are fertile plains, which are fertile and well cultivated. Horses, mules, cattle, sheep, pigs, and poultry are reared.

Rivers.—The Adour and Gave de Pau, neither of which is navigable, and several small streams.

Minerals.—Marble, abundant; iron, copper, lead, zinc, and antimony. There are sulphur springs at St. Sauveur and hot springs at Bagnères, Barège, and Cauterets.

Area.—1,742 square miles.

Pop.—236,474.

Divisions and Chief Towns.—There are 3 arrondissements and 480 communes. The chief towns are TARBES, the capital; Argeles, Bagnères, and Barège.

PYRÉNÉES ORIENTALES (Eastern), a maritime department of France, to the east of the above-named departments, and bounded E. by the Mediterranean. Spurs of the Pyrenees divide it into three valleys, running east and west. In the north and east is an extensive plain. Very fine grain and choice fruits are produced. The wines made include the well-known red wines of Roussillon and the white muscatel of Rivesaltes. The minerals are unimportant.

Rivers.—The Tel, Techa, and Gly, and in the south-west, the Segre (Spanish, Segura), a tributary of the Ebro.

Area.—1,592 square miles.

Pop.—208,855.

Divisions and Chief Towns.—There are 3 arrondissements and 231 communes. The chief town is PERPIGNAN.

PYRENEES, AUSTRALIAN, a name given to a mountain-range in the colony of Victoria, between the Australian Alps and the Grampians.

PYRITZ, pe'-rits, a walled town of Prussia, province of Pomerania, on an affluent of the Plön, 24 miles E. of Stettin. Manf. Woollen cloth and leather. In the neighbourhood is a fountain, in which Otho of Bamberg is said to have baptised 7,000 Pomeranians in 1124. Pop. 7,600.

PYRMONT, peer-mont', a watering-place of Germany, principality of Waldeck, in a beautiful valley on the left bank of the Emmer, 34 miles S.W. of Hanover. There are a palace, and a well-appointed bathing establishment. The water is a chalybeate, possessing valuable properties, and large quantities are exported. There is a grotto, with poisonous vapours. Pop. 6,300.

PYRRHON, pir'-ron, a Greek philosopher, who founded the Pyrrhonian or first sceptic school. After studying under Anaxarchus, he accompanied him in the train of Alexander's army into India, where he attended the Gymnosophists, and acquired a knowledge of the doctrines of the Persian magi. After his return to Greece, he lived a retired life, but obtained many disciples; and notwithstanding his scepticism, was chosen high-priest of his native city. None of his works—if indeed he ever wrote any—remain.

Born about 360 B.C.; died about 270 B.C.

PYRRHUS, pir'-rus, king of Epirus, in Greece, was an infant when his father was slain, but was saved from the fury of the insurgents by some faithful servants, and conveyed to Glaucias, king of the Illyrians, who brought him up and restored him to his throne. He was obliged to take Neoptolemus as a partner in the government; but the latter having attempted his life, Pyrrhus defeated him, and henceforth reigned alone. His reign dates from 295 B.C. He seized a great part of Macedonia, but was defeated and driven out of the country by Lysimachus, 283 B.C. In 280 B.C he went to assist the Tarentines against the Romans; and, though he fought under great disadvantages, defeated them upon the banks of the Liris. It is said that the sight of the elephants, which Pyrrhus was the first European to use in warfare, caused a panic among the Romans. He afterwards went to Sicily, and contributed to expel the Carthaginians; but in sailing to Tarentum, his fleet was defeated, and only a few of his ships escaped. He afterwards laid siege to Sparta, but without success. He was slain in an attempt on Argos.

Born 318 B.C.; died 272 B.C.

PYTHAGORAS, pi-thag'-o-ras, a Greek philosopher. His personal history is involved in considerable obscurity, but it is supposed that he studied in Egypt many years, and, after travelling over a great part of Asia, returned to his native place; but, finding that Polycrates had usurped the government at Samos, he went to Crotona, in Italy, where he taught philosophy with great reputation. Students came to him from all parts, on whom he imposed a probationary silence for five years; after which they were required to place their property in the common stock. His pupils, about 300 in number, were united almost in a religious brotherhood. He greatly reformed the manners of the people of Crotona and its neighbourhood, and several of his disciples became excellent legislators, particularly Zaleucus. He was the first who assumed the title of philosopher, or "lover of wisdom," and he held that the sun was in the centre of the universe, and that the earth revolved round it with the other planets. He maintained the doctrine of a transmigration of souls, and the unlawfulness of eating animal food. He left no writings, and there is considerable uncertainty as to the real nature of his philosophical teachings.

Born at Samos, about 580 B.C.; died about 500 B.C.

PYTHEAS, pith'-e-as, a Greek traveller, who was the contemporary of Aristotle, and rendered himself famous by his skill in mathematics. He travelled into various countries and made numerous discoveries, particularly with respect to the length of the days in different climates, and the obliquity of the ecliptic. In his "Description of the Ocean," he states that he sailed through the English Channel and as far as Thule, generally supposed to be Iceland.

Lived in the 4th century B.C.

Q.

QUADRIO, FRANCIS XAVIER, quad-re-o, a learned Italian writer, whose principal works are "On the Italian Poetry," "History of Italian Poetry," "Historical Dissertations upon the Valteline."

Born 1695; died at Milan, 1756.

QUANG, quang, the prefix of numerous places in E. Asia. (See KWANG.)

QUARLES, FRANCIS, quawrles, an English poet, who received the appointment of cupbearer to Elizabeth, daughter of James I. and queen of Bohemia, after which he became secretary to archbishop Usher, and chronologer to the city of London. He was a zealous royalist, for which his estates were sequestrated, and his goods plundered. The loss of his manuscripts is said to have preyed so much upon his spirits as to occasion his death. He wrote several works, the best known of which is his "Emblems, Meditations, and Hieroglyphics," a quaint production.

Born near Rumford, Essex, 1592; died 1644.

QUARTO, quawr'-to, a town of Sardinia, 4 miles from Cagliari, standing in a salt-marsh. It is very unhealthy. Pop. 5,400.

QUATRE-BRAS, katr-bra ("four arms"), a village of Belgium, province of South Brabant, 10 miles S.E. of Waterloo, at the intersection of the great roads from Brussels to Charlegoi, and from Nivelles to Namur, noted for an obstinate conflict between the British and French on the 16th June, 1815.

QUATREMÈRE DE QUINCY, ANTOINE CHRYSOSTOM, kat'-re-mair, an eminent French archæologist, who became a member of the Legislative Assembly in 1790; but having declared himself in favour of a constitutional monarchy, was thrown into prison during the Reign of Terror, and condemned to death, but escaped. At the restoration of the Bourbons he received the appointments of royal censor, intendant-general of the public arts and monuments, and member of the Council of Instruction. He subsequently became member of the French Institute, perpetual secretary of the Academy of Fine Arts, and member for the department of the Seine. His principal works were "Dictionary of Architecture," "The Arts of Design in France," and lives of Raffaelle, Canova, and Michael Angelo.

Born at Paris, 1758; died 1849.

QUATREMÈRE, ETIENNE MARC, French orientalist. Early in life he was employed in the Bibliothèque Impériale, Paris; at the age of 27 was appointed professor of Greek at Rouen; in 1819 was promoted to the chair of Ancient Oriental Languages in the College of France; and, in 1827, became professor of Persian in the School for Modern Oriental Languages. He wrote several valuable works on the language, geography, and history of Egypt, and made translations from Arabic and Persian historians. These and other works are highly valued.

Born at Paris, 1782; died 1857.

QUATTROMANI, SERTORIO, quat-tro-ma-ne, an Italian writer, who, through the influence of Paul Manutius, was admitted into the library of the Vatican, where he studied the Greek writers with great avidity. He was afterwards taken into the service of the duke of Nocera, who held him in great esteem. After the death of his patron, he accepted an invitation from the prince di Stigliano, but he did not long remain in his service. He translated the Æneid into Italian verse, and his works were printed together at Naples in 1714.

Born at Cosenza, Naples, about 1541; died about 1606.

QUEBEC, que-bek' (from the Indian Ke-bek, "narrow"), formerly Lower Canada, the most easterly and larger of the two great provinces of the dominion of Canada. It is bounded N. and E. by Labrador and the Gulf of St. Lawrence; S. and S. E. by the Gulf of St. Lawrence, New Brunswick, and the States of Maine and New Hampshire; S. by the States of Vermont and New York, and W. by the province of Ontario, from which it is mostly separated by the Ottawa river. The province has a coast-line on the Gulf of St. Lawrence, of nearly 2,000 miles, not including indentations. The principal islands are ANTICOSTI and the MAGDALENS. The surface is generally hilly. On the south of the St. Lawrence river the Green Mountains enter the province from Vermont, and are nearly 4,000 feet high in some parts. North of the river are the Laurentian Mountains, extending from the Labrador coast westward to the Ottawa river, and attaining in some parts a height of from 4,000 to 5,000 feet. The soil of the valley of the St. Lawrence is generally extremely fertile, with fine grazing districts, and there are immense tracts suited for agriculture, and rich valleys, on the border of the St. Maurice river, on the upper Saguenay, and in other parts of the province. There are extensive forests of red and white pine, ash, birch, beech, elm, maple, hickory, black walnut, and other valuable timber. The climate is generally healthy, but subject to extremes of temperature, and in the north-eastern part very cold.

Rivers and Lakes.—The ST. LAWRENCE and the OTTAWA; in the eastern part of the province, the Moisie, Manitou, Mingan, Natashquan, Esquimaux (St. Paul) and other streams flowing into the Gulf of St. Lawrence; in the southern part, the Restigouche, forming part of the boundary between Quebec and New Brunswick. There are numerous lakes, the largest being Lake St. John, 120 miles N. of the town of Quebec. It is 30 miles long by 25 broad.

Minerals.—Iron, copper, lead, platinum, [and zinc. Some gold has been found.

Area.—210,020 square miles.

Pop.—1,359,027, including 7,000 Indians. A large number of the inhabitants speak the French language.

Chief Towns.—The chief towns are QUEBEC and MONTREAL.

QUEBEC, a county of the above province, on the north bank of the St. Lawrence. Area, 2,598 square miles. Pop. 20,000, two-thirds being of French descent. The capital is Charlesbourg.

QUEBEC, capital of the province of Quebec, dominion of Canada, and an important military position, on a steep promontory of the St. Lawrence, formed by that river and the St. Charles, 400 miles W. of the Gulf of St. Lawrence. The ridge of land on which it stands is from one to two miles broad. It has Cape Diamond, a bold promontory, 350 feet high, on the north; and across it, at the north-east or lower end, the town of Quebec is built. The fortifications, extending across the breadth of the peninsula, have a circuit of about 2¾ miles, and are divided into two parts, namely, the Upper and Lower. The upper town may be said to stand on Cape Diamond, at least upon the side of it, which slopes towards the St. Charles; the lower is situate immediately under Cape Diamond. The communication from the upper to the lower town is by a winding street, at the top of which is a fortified gate; but the peculiar situation of the city occasions great irregularity and unevenness in the streets. The principal public buildings are the Parliament Buildings, an elegant structure, forming three sides of a square, and surmounted by a lofty dome, the castle of St. Louis, on the summit of the rock, the court-house, the Protestant cathedral, which has a lofty spire, the Catholic cathedral, the Hotel Dieu, nunnery and hospital founded in 1636, the Ursuline convent, the gaol, the barrack, a reading-room, royal institution, French grammar-school, medical school, mechanics' institute, city library, and several benevolent institutions. On the Plains of Abraham, to the south-west of the upper town, is a monument to the English and French commanders, Wolfe and Montcalme, who both fell at the taking of Quebec in 1759. There are two market-places, a place d'armes, a parade, and an esplanade. Manf. Soap, candles, tobacco; and there are distilleries, breweries, and shipbuilding-yards. The harbour admits ships of the line; about 1,500 vessels enter the port annually, and export the produce of the country, especially timber: and shipbuilding is very actively carried on. The exports are of the average annual value of £2,600,000. There is regular communication by steam-boats with London, Liverpool, and Glasgow. Pop. 62,446. Lat. 46° 49′ 1″ N. Lon. 71° 13′ W.—Quebec was founded by the French in 1608. In 1629 it was taken by the English, but afterwards restored. It was again taken, in 1759, by the English, under the command of general Wolfe; and by the peace in 1763 it was ceded, with the rest of Canada, to the conquerors. The climate of Canada is intensely cold during the winter; but it is not always that the St. Lawrence is frozen over. In 1845 a large part of the town, outside of the fortifications, was destroyed by fire, and there were very destructive conflagrations in 1876.

QUEDA, or KEDDAH, ked'-da, a state on the west coast of the Malay peninsula, extending for 140 miles from the Carrian river to the Talavise river, with an average breadth of 50 miles. The coast is studded with islands. There are several lofty mountains, the Goonong-Gerai, or Queda peak, rising to a height of 5,000 feet. The town of Queda is on both sides of the entrance of the river of the same name. The state was conquered by the Siamese in 1821. Pop. 21,000.

QUEDLINBURG, kwed'-lin-boorg, a walled town of Prussia, province of Saxony, on the Bode, 35 miles S.W. of Magdeburg. There are an old town (founded in 920), a new town, and several suburbs. Its abbey church is handsome; and on an adjoining eminence is the castle, formerly the residence of the princess-abbesses of Quedlinburg. Manf. Woollen stuffs. There is good trade in corn and cattle. Pop. 18,000.

QUEEN ANNE, a county of Maryland, United States. Area, 400 square miles. Pop. 19,257, more than one-third being coloured. The capital is Centreville.

QUEEN CHARLOTTE'S ISLANDS (See CHARLOTTE.)

QUEEN CHARLOTTE'S SOUND, the northern portion of the strait which separates Vancouver's island from the mainland. Lat. of entrance, 51° 55′ N. Lon. 131° 2′ W.

QUEEN'S, a county of New York, United States, on Long Island. Area, 410 square miles. Pop. 90,574. The capital is Long Island City.

QUEEN'S, a county of New Brunswick, dominion of Canada. Area, 1,480 square miles. Pop. 14,000. The capital is Gage Town.

QUEEN'S, a county of Nova Scotia, dominion of Canada. Area, 1,065 square miles. Pop. 11,000. The capital is Charlottetown.

QUEEN'S COUNTY, an inland county of Ireland, province of Leinster, bounded N. and W. by King's County; E. by Kildare and Carlow; S. by Kilkenny; and S.W. by Tipperary. Along the north-western boundary runs a range of high and steep mountains, the Slieve Bloom, and in the eartern division the Dysart hills form a prominent and picturesque object. In other parts the surface is generally undulating. The chief town is Maryborough.

Rivers.—The principal are the Barrow and the Nore.
Minerals.—There is some coal in the Dysart Hills, and limestone is worked.
Area.—664 square miles.
Pop.—72,598, chiefly Roman Catholics.
Parliamentary Representation.—Two members are returned for the county.
History.—This was the territory of the O'Mores, and in the reign of queen Mary, an insurrection against the English power led to its being made a shire, and it was named Queen's County, in honour of the queen, from whom also the chief town was named.

QUEENSFERRY, SOUTH, queens'-fer-re, a royal and parliamentary burgh (Stirling district burghs) of Scotland, in Linlithgowshire, on the south coast of the Firth of Forth, 9 miles N.W. of Edinburgh. The environs are very beautiful, and the place is much resorted to for sea-bathing. The ferry, from which the place takes its name, has existed since the 11th century. Pop. 1,520.—A station on the North British railway.—NORTH QUEENSFERRY, is a small village on the opposite side of the Firth of Forth, here about two miles wide.

QUEENSLAND, a British colony, comprising the north-eastern portion of Australia, bounded N. by Torres Strait and the Gulf of Carpentaria; S. by the colony of New South Wales; E. by the Pacific Ocean, and W. by lon. 141° as far as lat. 26° S., and thence by lon. 138° to the Gulf of Carpentaria. The southern extremity on the coast is Point Danger, and the northern are Torres Strait, Cape York, the extremity of the triangular peninsula, Cape York peninsula, which forms the northern portion of the colony, and the eastern side of the Gulf of Carpentaria. The eastern or Pacific coast-line is about 1,300 miles long, and the coast-line in the Gulf of Carpentaria, about 900 miles. The eastern coast is skirted by the Great Barrier coral reef (see AUSTRALIA). There are many small islands which belong to the colony. The principal harbour is MORETON BAY on the south, from which the settlements on this part of Australia were first named, and farther north Hervey Bay (formed by Frazer, or Great Sandy Island), Keppel Bay (marking the tropic of Capricorn), Broad Sound, Edgcumbe Bay, Halifax Bay, and Princess Charlotte and Shelburne Bays, inlets of Cape York peninsula. Nearly parallel with the coast, at a distance of from 50 to 100 miles, is the great mountain range of eastern Australia, described generally as the Great Dividing Range, but bearing various names in different parts of the chain. Near the centre of the colony it is known as the Expedition range, and further north as the Gilbert range. Besides the main chain, there are ranges running generally in a north-westerly direction,—Denham range, towards the south of the colony, and farther south, Peak, Dawes, Fletcher, Leichardt, Bellenden, Ker, and other ranges. In the last-named an altitude of 5,400 feet is attained; but the average height of the other ranges is about 2,000 feet. Between these ranges and the coast the country is generally beautiful and fertile, park-like in character, well-timbered, but not with dense forests, and well-watered grassy plains. To the west of the mountain ranges are lofty table-lands, or downs, stretching nearly 500 miles westward, and, from the New South Wales boundary, nearly a thousand miles to the fertile plains bordering the Gulf of Carpentaria. Still farther west are a series of steep declivities and gradually descending territories towards the low-lands of Central Australia. The downs include some of the finest pasture and agricultural land of the colony; and the western district, as yet only partially explored, is known to be generally well-watered and to have extensive grassy districts well suited for pasturage. The whole of the colony is well watered, being in this respect the best portion of the Australian continent. The soil and climate are suited for the production of a large variety of articles of general commercial value, such as wheat, barley, oats, maize, tobacco, coffee, rice, potatoes, arrowroot, sugar, and cotton. Rapid progress has been made in the cultivation of cotton since the remunerative character of this production has been ascertained. The cultivation of the sugar-cane is also rapidly extending, and is proving one of the most paying products of the colony. The yield varies from one to three tons to the acre. All kinds of semi-tropical and English fruits are abundantly grown, and the vine is cultivated with advantage. In the north the pearl fisheries are very profitable. The chief exports are wool, tallow, gold, copper, cotton, and hides. The value of the exports is about £2,200,000 annually. The wool and cotton are of very fine quality. The climate is described as resembling that of Madeira, and there is an absence of the hot winds from which the other Australian colonies frequently suffer; but with the exception of the large table-lands, which enjoy a more temperate climate, the weather is very warm. The temperature is more constant than in many other regions within the same latitudes, due partly to the sea breeze tempering the heat of summer, and partly to the copious rains which fall during the hottest months of the year. During a large proportion of the year the weather is fine, the sky cloudless, the atmosphere dry, elastic, and exhilarating. The summer months (December, January, and February) are hot, but not sultry or oppressive. The winter season, when dry (as it almost invariably is) is very agreeable. In a territory so extensive there are, of course, great varieties of temperature, and the heat is greater on the seaboard than on the elevated lands of the interior. The mean temperature during the year is about 70°, but a maximum of 137° is sometimes reached.

Rivers.—The Brisbane (a large river navigable for steamers for 75 miles), the Nevang, Pimpama, Logan, Pine, and Cabulture, discharge into Moreton Bay, in the southern part of the colony; The Fitzroy (the largest river of the colony, draining an immense district, and entering Keppel Bay), the Burnett, Pioneer, and Burdekin, flowing into the Pacific; The Albert, Leichardt, Flinders, Norman, Gilbert, Staaten, Mitchell, and various smaller streams, rising in the elevated districts in the north-west of the colony, and discharging into the Gulf of Carpentaria; the Barcoo (Victoria), the Parru, Warrego, and other streams, the courses of which are imperfectly known, rising in the downs near the centre of the colony, and having a general southern flow towards the Darling, in New South Wales, and Cooper Creek, in South Australia.

Minerals.—Gold, worked over an area of about 6,300 square miles, especially in Cook district, in the extreme north of the colony; copper, tin (extensive mines of which have been recently discovered, and are profitably worked), manganese, and coal (supposed to underlie a surface of above 24,000 square miles); marble, granite, sandstone, and freestone.

Area.—678,000 square miles, nearly twelve times the area of England and Wales.

Pop.—318 606, including more than 10,000 Chinese, and nearly 5,000 Polynesians, or South Sea Islanders. The aborigines, the number of whom is unascertained, are a finer and more vigorous race than the blacks of the southern part of Australia.

Divisions and Chief Towns.—The colony is divided into 12 large districts—Moreton, Darling Downs, Burnett, Port Curtis, Maranoa, Leichardt, Kennedy, Mitchell, Warrego, Gregory, Burke (the three latter lying inland and being thinly populated and pastoral in character), and Cook, which includes the northern peninsula. BRISBANE is the capital. Other towns of some importance are Ipswich, Dalby, Gympie, Maryborough, ROCKHAMPTON, TOOWOOMBA, and WARWICK.

Railways and Telegraphs.—About 1,500 miles of government railways and telegraphs are in operation.

Government.—The governor is appointed by the crown, and assisted by an executive council, and there is a parliament of two houses, the Legislative Council and the Legislative Assembly.

Religion and Education.—State religion is entirely superseded by voluntaryism, all sects being well represented. Primary and higher education, the former secular and free, is now provided in public and aided schools and colleges.

History.—Moreton Bay was discovered by Captain Cook in May, 1770, and in 1799 and 1802 Flinders examined the greater portion of the coast. In 1825 a convict settlement was formed at the mouth of the Brisbane river, the present site of Brisbane. The Moreton Bay district, as the various settlements were named, belonged to the colony of New South Wales previous to 1859, when they were made an independent colony, with the name of Queensland.

QUEENSTOWN, formerly COVE OF CORK, a seaport of Ireland, province of Munster, on the south side of Great Island, in the harbour of Cork, 14 miles S.E. of Cork. The streets are built around the sides of a slope in the form of an amphitheatre. The most remarkable building is the new Roman Catholic cathedral, as yet unfinished. Pop. 9,755. A station on the Great Southern and Western of Ireland Railway. The name was changed from Cove to Queenstown on the occasion of her Majesty's visit in 1849.

QUEENSTOWN, a division of the Eastern provinces, Cape Colony, South Africa. Area, 4,000 square miles. Pop. 44,500. The capital is Queenstown, containing about 2,000 inhabitants.

QUELPAERT, quel'-part, an island at the entrance of the Yellow Sea, 60 miles S.E. of Corea. It is 45 miles long, with a breadth of 12, volcanic, but well wooded. The highest peak is Mount Auckland, 6,544 feet high, near the centre of the island. Lat. 33° 29′ N. Lon. 126° 53′ E.

QUENTIN, ST., quent'-tin (Fr. kent-ta), a town of France, department Aisne, on the Somme, 80 miles N.E. of Paris. It has a public square, in which is situated the town-hall. This and the ancient cathedral (one of the finest in the north of France), both in the Gothic style, and the church of St. Jacques, are the only buildings of interest in the town. Manf. Linen, cambric, lawn, gauze, and cottons; also leather, soap, and sulphuric acid. Pop. 46,000, having doubled in 25 years. The St. Quentin Canal, connecting the Somme and the Scheldt, was completed in 1810.

QUERCIA, JACOPO DELLA, Italian sculptor, who produced many fine works in Lucca, Bologna, and Florence. He erected a very beautiful fountain at Siena, for which he obtained the name of Jacopo della Fonte.

Born at Siena, 1374; died there, 1442.

QUERETARO, ke-rai'-ta-ro, a state of the republic of Mexico, North America. It forms part of the central plateau of the Cordilleras, and has a rugged surface, traversed by mountain ranges. Grain is extensively cultivated, and large numbers of cattle are reared. Gold, silver, copper, lead, quicksilver, and antimony, are worked, but not to great advantage. Area, 3,420 square miles. Pop. 203,250.

QUERETARO, capital of the above state, situated 6,365 ft. above the sea level, 110 miles N.W. of Mexico. It has three grand squares, and an aqueduct about 10 miles long, for carrying the water to the city. The chief church is magnificent, and there are other fine churches and convents. Manf. Woollen and cotton goods and leather. Pop. 30,000. Lat. 20° 38′ N. Lon. 100° 11′ W.

QUERFURT, qwair'-foort, a town of Prussia, province of Saxony, on the Querna bach, 18 miles S.W. of Halle. There are walls and an old castle. Manf. Saltpetre. A trade in horses and cattle is carried on. Pop. 4,300.

QUERIMBA, ke-rim'-ba, a chain of islands extending along the east coast of Africa, in the Mozambique Channel, to the south of Cape Delgado. They are comprised in the Portuguese territory of Mozambique. The principal island is 4 or 5 miles long, containing a small fort. Lat. 12° 23′ S. Lon. 40° 39′ E.

QUERINI, ANGELO MARIA, quai-re'-ne, an Italian cardinal, who, at the age of 17, entered among the Benedictines. In 1710 he travelled in Germany, whence he passed to Holland, England, and France, in which countries he contracted an intimacy with the most learned men of the age, particularly Newton, Bentley, Fénelon, and Montfaucon. Benedict XIII. made him archbishop and cardinal, which dignities he filled with great reputation. Cardinal Querini formed a magnificent library, which he gave to the Vatican. His most important works were a Latin treatise upon the Antiquities and History of Corfu; a Literary History of Brescia; Lives of Popes Paul I., II., and III.; and an edition of the Letters of Cardinal Pole.

Born at Venice, 1680; died at Rome, 1755.

QUESADA, kai-sa'-da, a town of Spain, province of Jaen, 38 miles E. of the city of that name. Manf. White soap. Pop. 4,500.

QUESALTENANGO, kai-sal'-te-nan'-go, a town of the republic of Guatemala, Central America, 80 miles N.W. of the town of that name. It ranks as the second town of the republic, is well built, with a large and richly-decorated church, and good public buildings. There is a large trade in woollen and cotton fabrics, wheat, sugar, and cocoa. Pop. 20,000.

QUESNAY, FRANÇOIS, kes'-nai, a French physician and political economist, who studied at Paris, attained to great distinction in his profession, and became physician to the king of France, member of the Academy of Sciences at Paris, and of the Royal Society of London. He wrote several medical works, and some lectures of considerable value, among the first in which the principles of political economy were systematically treated.

Born at Mérey, 1694; died 1774.

QUESNEL, PASQUIER, kes'-nel, a French controversialist, who studied theology at the Sorbonne, and entered the Congregation of the Oratory at the age of 23. He became distinguished by his learning and piety; but being a zealous Jansenist, he was obliged to retire to Brussels, where he published his "Reflections on the New Testament," which work was attacked by the Jesuits, and occasioned so much controversy that Pope Clement XI. issued his famous bull, called "Unigenitus," against Quesnel's book. Through the intrigues of the Jesuits he was thrown into prison, and put in irons; but he effected his escape, with the assistance of a Spanish gentleman, and afterwards settled at Amsterdam. He wrote a number of pieces of practical and controversial divinity.

Born at Paris, 1634; died at Amsterdam, 1719.

QUESNOY, LE, ke'-noi, a fortified town of France, department Nord, 20 miles N. of Cambrai. Manf. Nails, chicory, leather, and cotton. Pop. 3,200.

QUESNOY (SUR DEULE), a town of France, department Nord, 7 miles N. of Lille. Manf. Chains, nails, and anvils, oil, and beetroot sugar. Pop. 4,300.

QUETELET, LAMBERT ADOLPHE JACQUES, ket'-e-lai, a modern Belgian astronomer and statistician, who, at 18, received the appointment of professor of mathematics at Ghent, and in 1819 at Brussels. In 1826 he became director of the new observatory at Brussels, and afterwards professor of astronomy at the Brussels military school, and member and perpetual secretary of the Academy of Sciences in the same city. His most important works were—"Theory of Probabilities applied to Moral and Political Science;" several important works on population, criminal statistics, and social laws; and a series of memoirs on astronomy, physics, and mathematics.

Born at Ghent, 1796; died 1874.

QUEVEDO Y VILLEGAS, DON FRANCISCO GOMEZ DE, kai-vai'-do, Spanish author, who studied at the university of Alcalá de Henares, acquiring the classical and European languages. He was engaged on several diplomatic missions, but cultivated both poetry and prose, and his works were much esteemed; but some of them gave such offence, that the author was thrown into prison, where he remained. His works, chiefly of a satirical and burlesque character, included romances, and poems; but he wrote some serious biographies, and other works, which exhibit an elevated style. His "Visions of Hell" have been translated into English.

Born at Madrid, 1580; died 1645.

QUIBERON, ke'-be-rawng, a small fishing-town of France, department Morbihan, at the extremity of a long and narrow peninsula of the same name, which, with some islands, forms one of the largest bays in Europe, 24 miles from Lorient. Pop. 700. In 1759, Admiral Hawke gained a victory over the French fleet in Quiberon Bay, and in 1795 a body of French emigrant royalists landed here, and endeavoured to excite a revolt against the Convention, were overpowered by the republican troops, and dispersed. Those who were taken were shot.

QUILIMANE, ke-le-ma'-nai, a seaport, with a fort, of Mozambique, in Eastern Africa, near the mouth of a river of the same name, situated on a mudbank, in a very unhealthy situation. It has a trade in gold and ivory, but its principal traffic is in slaves. Pop. 15,000, including the inhabitants of the immediate vicinity. Lat. 17° 51′ 8″ S. Lon. 37° 1′ E.

QUILLET, CLAUDE, keel'-lai, a French physician and Latin poet, who, to avoid the resentment of Cardinal Richelieu, retired to Rome, where he wrote his "Callipædia," a Latin poem, on the art of having beautiful children. In this piece he satirized Cardinal Mazarin, who, instead of punishing him, gave him an abbey. In 1656, Quillet published a new edition of his poem, dedicated to the cardinal, substituting an eulogy instead of satire. He also wrote a Latin poem, called "The Henriade." His "Callipædia" has been translated into English by Rowe.

Born 1602; died 1661.

QUILLOTA, keel-yo'-ta, a town of Chili, pleasantly situate on the Aconcagua, 20 miles from the Pacific. There are very rich copper mines in the vicinity. Pop. 10,000. Lat. 32° 50′ S. Lon. 71° 18′ W.

QUILOA, or KILWA, ke'-lo-a, a town and seaport of Eastern Africa, once the capital of the Portuguese settlements in that country. On a small island, is a fine estuary, which receives several large rivers. There are extensive ruins, showing the former importance of the town. Pop. 6,000. Lat. 8° 57′ S. Lon. 39° 37′ E.

QUILON, KOLUM, or COULAN, ke-lon', a seaport town of British India, on the Malabar coast, province of Travancore. It has an active import trade in pepper, other spices, and cotton. Pop. 20,000.

QUIMPER, or QUIMPER CORENTIN, kam'-pai, an old town of France, department Finistère, on the Odei, 35 miles S.E. of Brest. The only objects of interest are the cathedral (a fine building erected in the 15th century), the exchange, the public library, and the botanical garden. Manf. Earthenware and leather. Sardine fishing is actively carried on. Pop. 15,200.

QUIMPERLE, kam'-pair-lai, a town of France, department Finistère, at the junction of the Fillé d' Isole, 27 miles from Quimper. There is a Gothic church, two convents, and a college. Manf. Paper and leather. There is a broad quay, at which vessels of small size can unload. Pop. 6,800.

QUIN, JAMES, quin, an English actor, who was intended for the law; but, having a strong inclination for the stage, he joined a company of players, and, after performing at Dublin and other places with applause, was engaged at Covent Garden, where he played Falstaff with great success. He became the first actor of his time till Garrick appeared. In 1751 he retired from the stage, and afterwards received a pension.

Born in London, 1693; died at Bath, 1766.

QUINAULT, PHILIP, ke'-nolte, a French dramatic poet, who is considered the first author of French operas. He also produced several tragedies and comedies of considerable merit. He was a member of the French Academy, and obtained a pension from Louis XIV.

Born at Paris, 1635; died 1688.

QUINCY, quin'-se, a city of Illinois, United States, on the east bank of the Mississippi, 160 miles N. of St. Louis. Manf. Agricultural implements, iron, paper, woollens, sewing-machines, and tobacco. The town is a great railroad centre, and a large trade is carried on. Pop. 27,268.

QUINCY, a town of Massachusetts, United States, on Quincy Bay, a branch of Boston Harbour, 7 miles S.E. of Boston. There are a fine church and town house. Manf. Boots and shoes, harness, and coach lace. There are important quarries of granite, of which some of the finest edifices in the country have been built. Ship-building is carried on, and the fisheries are productive. Pop. 10,570.

QUINET, EDGAR, ke'-nai, French author and statesman, who studied at the university of Heidelberg, and on his return to Paris published a translation of one of Herder's philosophical works. In 1828 he was appointed a member of the scientific commission dispatched to the Morea, and, in 1839, became professor of foreign literature to the Faculty of Letters at Lyons. He afterwards became a professor at the College of France, and in association with Michelet made vigorous attacks on the Jesuits. After the revolution of 1848 he was elected a member of the Constituent and Legislative Assemblies, and attached himself to the "extreme left;" as a result of which he was, after the coup d'état, expelled from France. He took up his residence at Brussels, and devoted himself entirely to literature. As an author he was very prolific and diverse. His most important works were "Modern Greece," "Germany and Italy," "Liberty of Discussion in Religious Matters," "The Austrian, French, Spanish, and Neapolitan Crusade against Rome," which was an energetic protest against the attacks made upon the republic of Rome in 1848, "History of Epic Poetry," "The Philosophy of the History of France," and a dramatic poem. He also contributed many interesting and valuable articles to the "Revue des Deux Mondes." In 1852 he married, at Brussels, the daughter of the Moldavian poet Assaki. After the fall of the empire in 1870, he returned to France, and was reinstated as professor at the College of France, and in 1871 was elected a member of the Assembly.

Born at Bourg, 1803; died at Versailles, 1875.

QUINTANA, MANUEL JOSÉ, keen-ta'-na, a Spanish poet, who studied at Salamanca, pursued the profession of advocate until the French invasion of Spain, 1808, when by his patriotic odes and as author of the manifestoes of the insurrectionary juntas, he greatly aided the popular cause. His liberalism offended Ferdinand VII., and upon his return to Spain, Quintana was seized, and imprisoned during six years, and was subsequently banished to an obscure town in Estremadura. In 1828 he was permitted to return to Madrid, in consequence of his complying with King Ferdinand's request that he should write an ode upon the occasion of his third marriage. It would appear that his political opinions had experienced some modifications, for he was appointed director-general of studies and of public instruction; became a senator and a peer, and received in public, a crown of laurel from the queen of Spain. His odes written in favour of liberty are regarded as among the finest specimens of Spanish poetry. He was also the author of a series of biographies and one or two tragedies.

Born at Madrid, 1772; died at the same city, 1857.

QUINTANAR (DE LA ORDEN), keen-ta'-nar, a town of Spain, province of Toledo, 65 miles S.E. of Madrid. Manf. Blankets, counterpanes, soap, oil, and chocolate. There is a well frequented market. Pop. 5,700.

QUINTILIAN, or QUINTILLIANUS, MARCUS FABIUS, quin-til'-i-an, quin-til-i-ai'-nus, a Roman orator and critic. At the commencement of the reign of Galba, he opened a school of rhetoric at Rome, where he taught with great reputation, and was liberally rewarded by the government. He also pleaded in the forum, and was intrusted by Domitian with the education of his two nephews. His "Institutiones Oratoricæ" may be justly pronounced the finest system of rhetoric ever written. This work was discovered by Poggio Bracciolini in 1417, in the abbey of St. Gall.

Born about 42; died about 117.

QUINTIN, kan'-ta(n), a town of France, department of the Côtes-du-Nord, on the Gouet, 10 miles S.W. of St. Brieuc. There are a cathedral, a modern château, and a town-house. Manf. Linens, cambrics, and paper. A good trade is carried on. Pop. 3,800.

QUINTIN MATSYS. (See MATSYS.)

QUINTUS CALABER, or QUINTUS SMYRNÆUS, quin'-tus, a Greek poet, who wrote, in imitation of the style of Homer, a continuation of the "Iliad." The work was discovered by Cardinal Bessarion in Calabria, in the 15th century.

Lived in the 4th century.

QUINTUS CURTIUS RUFUS, a Roman historian, of whose life nothing is known, but who is supposed to have been the writer spoken of by Suetonius. He wrote the "Acts of Alexander the Great, King of the Macedonians," in ten books, two of which are lost. The clear style of the work has caused it to become a classic, although it is more a romance than a history, and it is full of errors in geography and chronology.

Lived in the 2nd century.

QUIROS, FERNANDES DA, ke'-rose, a Spanish navigator, who was employed by Philip III. in making discoveries in the Pacific Ocean. In 1605 he discovered the Society Isles and other places.

Died at Panama, 1614.

QUITA, DOMINIC, ke'-ta, a Portuguese poet, who at first followed the trade of a barber, during which period he acquired, unaided, the Spanish, Italian, and French languages. He subsequently found a patron in the duke of San-Lorenzo. His poems consist of sonnets, pastorals, and dramatic pieces.

Born 1728; died 1770.

QUITO, kee'-to, capital of Ecuador, South America, is situated on the eastern slope of the western branch of the equatorial Andes, at an elevation of about 9,500 feet above the sea. The volcanic mountain of Pichincha is the basis on which it rests; and owing to the inequalities of the ground, the streets are very irregular and uneven. Nearly all the chief buildings were destroyed by earthquake in 1859, but have been rebuilt. Manf. Coarse cotton and woollen goods, hosiery, lace, jewellery, and confectionery. It has a trade in agricultural produce, and exports iron, steel, and indigo. Pop. 76,000. Lat. 15' S. Lon. 78° 45' W.

QUITTA, or PRINCE'S TOWN, kwit'-ta, a British settlement of North Guinea, Africa, 87 miles N.E. of Africa. Pop. 5,000. Lat. 5° 55' N. Lon. 1° E.

QUORRA, kwor'-ra. (See NIGER.)

R.

RAAB, rab, a navigable river of Hungary, rising in Styria, and, after a course of 180 miles, falling into the Danube near Raab.

RAAB, GYÖR, or NAGY-GYÖR, at the confluence of the Raab and Little Danube, 67 miles N.W. of Buda. There are a beautiful cathedral, two other churches, two monasteries, and several educational establishments. Manf. Tobacco and cutlery. An important transit trade by road and river is carried on. Pop. 21,000.

RAALTE, ralt, a town of the Netherlands, province of Overryssel, 11 miles N.E. of Deventer. There is a good trade in agricultural produce, cattle, wool, timber, and bark. Pop. 5,600.

RAASAY, or RAAZA, ra-say', one of the western isles of Scotland, belonging to the Inner Hebrides, between the mainland of Scotland and the Isle of Skye, from which it is separated by a narrow sound. It is rough, rocky, and indifferently fruitful, with bold and dangerous shores. Pop. 350.

RABAN-MAUR, or MAGNENTIUS, ra'-ban-mor, a learned French prelate, who, after studying under Alcuinus, entered into orders, and was elected abbot of Fulda. In 847 he became archbishop of Mentz, and distinguished himself by writing against Goteschalcus the monk, whom he delivered up to Hincmar, archbishop of Rheims. His works consist of Commentaries upon the Scriptures and devotional treatises.

Born at Mayence, 776; died 856.

RABASTENS, ra'-ba-stáns, a town of France, department Hautes-Pyrénées, on the Tarn, 21 miles S.W. of Toulouse. Pop. 3,400.

RABAT, ra-bat', a fortified maritime town of Morocco, in the kingdom of Fez, at the mouth of the Bu-Regreb, 20 miles from Medeyah. It was formerly the centre of the trade of Morocco with Europe, but the silting up of the mouth of the river has caused the town to decline. Manf. Carpets, woollen, silk, and linen fabrics, and saddlery. Pop. 20,000, of whom 2,000 are Jews.

RABAUD-SAINT-ETIENNE, JEAN PAUL, ra'-bo, a French Protestant minister, who became a member of the national convention of France. He was proscribed, with other members of the Girondist party, and fled; but was taken and sent to Paris, where he was guillotined. He wrote —"A Letter on the Life and Writings of Count de Ghibelin;" "Letters on the Primitive History of Greece;" "Considerations on the Interests of the Third Estate."

Born at Nismes, 1753; died at Paris, 1793.

RABBA, rab-ba', a busy town of Central Africa, on the left bank of the Niger, where a large market for slaves, ivory, and articles of native and foreign manufacture is held. Lat. 9° 13' N. Lon. 6° 26' E.

RABELAIS, FRANÇOIS, ra'-be-lais, a French humorist, was the son of an apothecary, was educated at the abbey of Seully, and afterwards at the university of Angiers, became a monk of the order of St. Francis in the convent of Fontenay le Comte, where he devoted himself with remarkable ardour and study. His attainments, especially in languages, excited the envy of the other monks. It was suggested that he was heretical, and to avoid persecution he fled, and was permitted by the pope to transfer himself to the order of St.

Benedict, becoming an inmate of the monastery of Maillezais, which he quitted abruptly. It has been said that his licentious life was the cause of this act; but there is no good reason to believe the scandal. He afterwards attended the universities of Paris and Bourg, and then studied medicine at Montpellier, while he took his doctor's degree, and became professor in 1531. The chancellor Duprat having abolished the privileges of that university, Rabelais was deputed to wait on him, and he succeeded in obtaining a reversal of that decree. The cardinal du Bellay, ambassador to Rome, an old friend, appointed him his physician, and took him in his suite. He was then permitted to return to the order of St. Benedict. On his return to France he was rewarded with a prebend in an abbey, and the benefice of Meudon, which offices he filled until his death. His principal work is the famous satirical romance entitled "The History of Gargantua and Pantagruel." In this work, wherein acuteness, wit, and humour overflow, even to riotousness, mingled with the most audacious coarseness of expression and illustration, Rabelais, under the guise of allegory, ridiculed all the great personages of his country. The monks, especially, were lashed in the severest manner. The work consisted of five parts, which appeared separately between 1533—1564. Besides the above piece, he wrote some medical works and numerous letters.

Born at Chinon, Touraine, 1495; died at Paris, 1553.

RABINAL, rab-i-nal', a town of Guatemala, Central America, 50 miles S.W. of Vera Paz, in a mountainous district. Pop. 6,500.

RABUN, ra'-bun, a county of Georgia, United States. Area, 320 square miles. Pop. 3,300. The capital is Clayton.

RACCONIGI, rak'-ko-ne'-je, a town of northern Italy, on the Maira, 20 miles S. of Turin. There is a palace, a country residence of the royal family. Manf. Silk fabrics, twist, and woollens. Pop. 11,000.

RACE, CAPE. (See NEWFOUNDLAND.)

RACHEL, rai'-chel, second daughter of Laban, and second wife of the patriarch Jacob. She was the mother of Joseph and Benjamin.

RACHEL, ELISA RACHEL FELIX, ra'-shel, a French actress, who was the daughter of a Jew pedlar. The family gained a livelihood by periodically visiting various towns in Germany and Switzerland, and at length settled at Lyons, and in 1830 went to reside at Paris. Sarah, her elder sister, used to sing at the various cafés, to the accompaniment of an old guitar, while Rachel went from table to table to collect the offerings of the spectators. On one of these occasions the young minstrels attracted the notice of M. Choron, the founder of the Institution for the Study of Sacred Music, and he, more particularly noticing Rachel, took both sisters under his charge. It was soon found that her talent lay rather in declamation than in singing, and she turned her attention to the stage, appearing, but without exciting much attention, in 1833. In 1838 she made a great success in the part of Camille, in "Les Horaces" of Corneille, and from that time maintained the position of indisputably the greatest tragic actress of the French stage, receiving enormous sums for her performances. She visited England with equal success, and afterwards performed in America. Never of a robust constitution, the arduous labours of her profession at length led to an illness which cut her off prematurely.

Born at Munf, Switzerland, 1820; died 1858.

RACINE, JEAN, ra'-seen, a French tragic poet, who was educated at the college of Beauvais and in the society of Port Royal, where he gave his principal attention to the Greek tragic poets. His first publication was an ode on the marriage of Louis XIV. in 1660, which procured him a present of 100 louis-d'or. In 1664 he produced his tragedy of "Thébaide," which was followed, in 1666, by "Alexander." Till this time he wore the ecclesiastical habit, which he now renounced. In 1688 appeared his "Andromache," which was attacked by several critics, particularly St. Evremond. His next piece was the tragedy of "Britannicus," which far surpassed his former productions. In 1677 appeared his best tragedy, that entitled "Phèdre," which was opposed by one on the same subject written by Pradon, and occasioned violent controversies between the partisans of the respective poets. The intrigues of his rivals so irritated Racine, that he resolved to abandon the drama. Through the influence of Madame de Maintenon, Racine was associated with Boileau in writing the "History of Louis XIV.," a work which was never published. About this time he consented to write his sacred drama of "Esther," at the desire of Madame de Maintenon, and it was acted by the young ladies of her educational establishment of St. Cyr, in 1689. His best piece of this kind was his "Athalia." At the instance of his patroness, Madame de Maintenon, Racine drew up a memorial upon the best mode of alleviating the miseries of the people, which, falling under the king's eye, he was so displeased as to banish the poet from court. His health had for a long time been in a frail condition, and the loss of the court favour so greatly increased his sufferings, that, after lying ill for two years, he died. Besides his dramatic works, he wrote canticles or hymns for the use of St. Cyr; the "History of Port Royal;" "Letters and Epigrams," &c. Racine was not equal to Corneille in vigour and genius, but he surpassed him in variety, tenderness, and elegance.

Born at La Ferté-Milon, Aisne, 1639; died 1699.

RACINE, a county of Wisconsin, United States. Area, 350 square miles. Pop. 30,922. The capital is RACINE.

RACINE, capital of the above county, on Lake Michigan, to the north of Root river, 23 miles S. of Milwaukee. There are shipyards and the harbour is good. Manf. Agricultural implements, machinery, leather, paper, saddlery, woollens, wine, and silver-plated goods. Pop. 16,000.

RACZ, or O-BECSE, rax, a town of Hungary, on the right bank of the Theiss, 26 miles N.E. of Peterwardein. A large trade in corn is carried on. Pop. 11,000.

RADCLIFFE, JOHN, an English physician, who studied at University College, Oxford, and having taken the degree of M.B. in 1675, commenced practice as physician, and obtained a considerable reputation. In 1682 he took his doctor's degree, and not long after removed to London, where he rose to the height of his profession. He attended Queen Mary in her last illness and was consulted by William III., and occasionally by Queen Anne; but his abrupt manner and too ready wit was not agreeable to those royal personages. He became very unpopular because he refused to attend Queen Anne in her last illness, but he was himself suffering from illness, and died about three months afterwards. In 1713 he was chosen member of parliament for Buckingham. To the university of Oxford he was a munificent benefactor, particularly by founding the famous library which is called by his name. He bequeathed the whole of his large property to public uses.

Born at Wakefield, Yorkshire, 1650; died at Carshalton, Surrey, 1714.

RADCLIFFE, MRS. ANNE, an English romance-writer, whose works abounded in incidents of the terrible, the mysterious and the wildly imaginative type. Her maiden name was Ward. In 1789 she produced the "Castles of Athlin and Dunbayne," and, in subsequent years, published the "Mysteries of Udolpho;" "The Romance of the Forest," and several other romances. She was also the author of "A tour in Holland." All her works were translated into French, and were very popular on the continent, as well as in England. For some years before her death she had relinquished her pen.

Born in London, 1764; died 1823.

RADETZKY, JOHANN JOSEPH WENZEL, Count de Radetz, ra-detz'-ke, an Austrian general, who distinguished himself in the long struggle against Napoleon. He commenced his military career as cadet in a cavalry regiment in 1781. Having been successively governor of Ofen in Hungary, and Lemberg in Poland, he was, in 1822, appointed commander-general of the Lombardo-Venetian kingdom. In 1836 he was raised to the rank of field-marshal. In 1848, after many severely contested battles, he signally defeated Charles Albert, king of Sardinia, and was afterwards appointed general of Lombardy and Venice. It is a remarkable fact that his greatest reputation as a soldier was gained after he was 80 years old. After 73 years of service in the Austrian armies, he was permitted to resign at the commencement of the year 1857.

Born at Tzrebnitz, Bohemia, 1766; died at Milan, 1858.

RADNOR, NEW, a market-town and municipal and parliamentary borough of Wales, in Radnorshire, on the Somergill, 8 miles S.W. of Presteigne. It was formerly a place of importance, and the capital of the county. Pop. 2,200.—A station on the Great Western railway.

RADNORSHIRE, rad'-nor, a county of South Wales, bounded N. by Montgomeryshire and Shropshire, E. by Herefordshire, and S. and W. by Brecknockshire and part of Cardiganshire. The face of the country is extremely wild, bleak, and mountainous, except towards the eastern and southern borders, and also where it is intersected by several valleys, which are well watered. The loftiest of the ranges which traverse the county is known as Radnor Forest. The valleys of the Lugg, Radnor, and Wye, are famed for the richness of their pastures, on which large herds of cattle and flocks of sheep feed.

Rivers.—The Wye, with its tributaries the Ithon, Elan, and Lugg.
Area.—432 square miles.
Pop.—23,539.
Chief Towns.—Presteign, the county town, and New Radnor.
Parliamentary Representation.—One member is returned for the county, and one for New Radnor, in conjunction with other places, forming the Radnor burghs.

RADOM, ra-dom', a government of Russian Poland, S. of the government of Warsaw. The surface is mountainous, the Sandomir Mountains rising to about 2,000 feet. The chief rivers are the Vistula, Pilica, and Radomka. Area, 4,769 square miles. Pop. 644,827.

RADOM, capital of the above government, on the Radomka, 60 miles S. of Warsaw. A considerable trade is carried on. Pop. 11,000.

RADOWITZ, JOSEPH VON, rad-o-vitz', Prussian general and statesman. He was descended from a noble family of Hungary, and was educated for the army at Paris, and at the military school of Westphalia. He served first in the army of Westphalia, but in 1823 entered the Prussian service. In 1828 he married a Prussian lady of rank, and was soon recognised as a leader of the Court or Conservative party. In 1836 he was Prussian military commissioner to the German Diet; in 1842 ambassador at the Courts of Carlsruhe, Darmstadt, and Nassau; and in 1845 was raised to the rank of major-general. He became the chief adviser of Frederick William IV. In 1852 he was appointed secretary for foreign affairs, but retired in the following year. He was the author of some pamphlets on the relations between church and state, and shortly before his death wrote "Dialogues on the Present State of Affairs."

Born at Blankenburg, 1797; died 1853.

RADZIVIL, CHARLES, palatine of Wilna, distinguished himself by his opposition to the Russians, and was the great rival of the powerful Czartoryski family. Nominated, in 1762, governor of Lithuania, by Augustus III., king of Poland, he energetically combated Russian influence; but, not succeeding in preventing the dismemberment of his native country, he went into exile, but returned to Poland shortly before his death.

Died 1790.

RADZIVIL, NICHOLAS, rad'-zi-vil, palatine of Wilna and governor of Livonia, under Sigismund Augustus, king of Poland. He signalized himself by his valour against the Teutonic order in 1557, and against the Russians, whom, in 1565, he completely defeated. He abjured the Catholic for the Protestant religion, which he propagated zealously, and at his own expense produced a Polish translation of the Bible, which was condemned at Rome.

Born about 1500; died 1567.

RADZIVOLOV, rad-zi-vo-lof', a town of Russia, government of Volhynia, near the frontier of Galicia, 18 miles N.W. of Kremenetz. A large transit trade is carried on. Pop. 7,400.

RAEBURN, SIR HENRY, rā'-bern, Scotch portrait-painter, who was educated in Heriot's Hospital, Edinburgh, and then apprenticed to a goldsmith; but, having shown great taste and skill in miniature-painting, was sent to London with introductions to Sir Joshua Reynolds, and afterwards to Italy, for the purpose of improving himself. In 1787 he returned to Edinburgh, where he became a popular portrait-painter, and continued to reside there until his death. He painted portraits of many of the most eminent men of the time, and received many marks of honour both at home and abroad; was elected member of the academy of Florence and of New York, and became an R.A. in 1815. When George IV. visited Edinburgh in 1822, he created Raeburn a knight.

Born near Edinburgh, 1756; died at Edinburgh, 1823.

RAEGANJ, rai-ganj', a town of British India, in Bengal, 32 miles N. of Dinajpore. It is a place of great trade. Pop. about 6,000.

RAFFAELLE, or RAPHAEL, SANZIO, ra'-fa-ail'-lai, ra'-fa-el, an Italian painter, and generally considered the greatest painter of ancient or modern times. His father, an artist of some eminence, after teaching him the rudiments of the art, placed him under Perugino. At Florence he studied the famous cartoons of Da Vinci and Michael Angelo; after which he went to Rome, where he was employed by Pope Julius II. in the embellishment of the Vatican. He also painted several fine pieces for Francis I. of France, who liberally rewarded him. Leo X. employed him in designing the cartoons for the tapestry to be hung in the Sistine chapel. These drawings were sent to Flanders to be copied; and, after remaining there a century, seven were bought by Charles I., and are now in this country.

Born at Urbino, 1483; died at Rome, 1520.

RAFFLES, SIR THOMAS STAMFORD, raf'fels, an English colonial governor, traveller, and naturalist, who became a clerk in the India House at an early age, and in that capacity displayed so much zeal and talent as to be chosen, in 1805, to fill the post of under-secretary to the government of Pulo-Penang, or Prince of Wales Island. His ability was so great that, in a short time, he rose to the secretaryship, but was compelled to vacate that office in 1808, in consequence of ill-health. He went to Malacca, where he devoted himself to the study of the Malay language, and in 1809 published an essay thereupon. In 1811 he was appointed lieutenant-governor of Java, which had been taken from the Dutch. During the five years that he held this post, he made extensive reforms in the government and abolished slavery. At the same time he collected a vast and valuable body of information relative to the geology, geography, and natural products of the island. These materials he subsequently classified and published, after his return to England, in a work entitled "The History of Java." In 1818 he received the honour of knighthood, and was appointed lieutenant-governor of Bencoolen, in the island of Sumatra. As formerly, he was distinguished by his enlightened measures as an administrator, and emancipated the slaves. At Singapore he founded a commercial station, and a college for the study of Anglo-Chinese and Malay literature. He returned to England in 1824; but, unfortunately, the ship in which he had first embarked took fire, and almost the whole of the valuable collection of animals, plants, manuscripts, and drawings which he had formed, was totally destroyed. He was the founder and first president of the Zoological Society, and presented the museum of that body with a fine collection of preserved animals.

Born at sea, off Jamaica, 1781; died 1826.

RAFN, KARL CHRISTIAN, raf'-en, Danish archæologist, educated at the university of Copenhagen, of which he was appointed sub-librarian. His researches into old Norse history were indefatigable and valuable. He arrived at the conclusion that America was discovered by the Norsemen 400 years before the birth of Columbus, and published an elaborate work on the subject. Besides many other works, he edited and translated many of the northern sagas, and especially those relating to the history of Iceland.

Born in Funen, 1796; died at Copenhagen, 1864.

RAGLAN, JAMES HENRY FITZROY, Lord, rag'-lan, a modern English general, who left the Westminster school in his 16th year to enter the British army as cornet in the 4th Light Dragoons. After accompanying the British ambassador to Constantinople in 1807, he was placed upon the staff of the duke of Wellington, and subsequently became his aide-de-camp. He served throughout the Peninsular campaign, which was marked by the victories of Rolica, of Talavera, of Vimeira, and of Busaco. In the retreat to the lines of Torres Vedras, and in the subsequent operations, he evinced distinguished merit. At Waterloo he lost his right arm, and was subsequently created K.C.B. and a colonel. After the conclusion of the war he fulfilled the diplomatic duties of secretary and minister in the embassy at Paris. In 1819 he became military secretary to the duke of Wellington, both in the Ordnance and, at a later period, at the Horse Guards. Upon the death of the duke of Wellington, Lord Raglan was called to still higher military duties. He was appointed master-general of the ordnance, and at the outbreak of the war between England and Russia, he was selected to take the command of the British army destined to defend the Turkish empire; but he succumbed to disease before the capture of Sebastopol. After his death his remains were conveyed to England, a pension of £1,000 per annum was settled upon his widow, and one of £200 upon his son.

Born 1788; died before Sebastopol, 1855.

RAGOTSKY, GEORGE, ra-gotz'-ke, an Hungarian magnate, who was elected prince of Transylvania upon the death of Gabriel II., better known as Bethlen-Gabor, in 1629. He entered into an alliance with the Swedes against Poland, and died fighting against the Turks.

Died 1648.

RAGOTZKY, FERENCZ or FRANCIS, prince of Transylvania, an Hungarian patriot, who was, in 1701, appointed chief by the revolted Hungarians, and displayed, in that capacity, signal bravery and address. After holding Hungary separate from Austria during ten years, he, upon the proclamation of peace between the inhabitants of that country and the emperor, went to France, and thence to Constantinople, where he was held in great esteem.

Born 1676; died in Turkey, 1735.

RAGUENET, FRANCIS, rag'-nai, a French historian, who obtained a prize from the French Academy in 1689, for a discourse on the "Merit of Martyrdom." In 1704 he published a "Comparison between the Italians and the French, with regard to Music and the Opera," in which he defended the superiority of the former. This work occasioned a literary warfare. His other works are, "The Monuments of Rome; or, a Description of the works of Art, &c., in that City;" the "History of Oliver Cromwell;" "History of the Old Testament."

Born at Rouen, 1660; died 1720.

RAGUSA, a fortified city of Austria, in Dalmatia, on a peninsula on the Adriatic, which forms two large and commodious harbours, protected by works of considerable strength, 40 miles N.W. of Cattaro. It is built at the base and the sides of Mount Sergio. Outside the walls are two extensive suburbs. Manf. Oil, soap, liqueurs, silk, leather, and tobacco. There is a transit trade with Turkey. Pop. 6,000. Lat. 42° 38′ 9″ N. Lon. 18° 7′ E.—Ragusa was founded about the middle of the 7th century. This petty republic did not lose its independence until the successes of Napoleon I., who conferred on Marshal Marmont the title of duke of Ragusa. (See MARMONT.)

RAHWAY, ra'-way, a city of New Jersey, United States, on the Rahway river, 19 miles W. of New York. Manf. Carriages. Pop. 6,000.

RAIATEA, rai-a-te'-a, one of the Friendly Islands, in the Pacific, 130 miles N.W. of Tahiti. It has a circuit of 40 miles, with a mountainous surface, rising in the centre to 7,000 feet. Pro. Arrowroot and cocoa-nuts. Lat. 16° 50′ S. Lon. 151° 24′ W.

RAIKES, ROBERT, raiks, founder of Sunday schools, was the son of a printer, at Gloucester, and himself bred to the same trade. Having acquired a fortune in trade, he employed it in acts of charity, and in providing instruction to the inmates of the county bridewell and to the children and workmen employed in the factories. He established a number of Sunday schools, requiring only "clean hands, clean faces, and combed hair" in their attendants. In all his noble efforts he was very successful.

Born at Gloucester, 1735; died 1811.

RAIMBACH, ABRAHAM, raim'-bak, an English engraver. He was of Swiss descent on his father's side, and was, at an early age, placed as an apprentice to an engraver. He engraved most of the best works of Sir David Wilkie.

Born in London, 1776; died 1843.

RAIMONDI, MARC ANTONIO, rai-mone'-de, an Italian engraver, who studied under Francia, the head of the old Bolognese school, and was employed by Raffaelle to engrave his drawings. Clement VII. ordered him to be imprisoned for having engraved a series of obscene designs after Julio Romano, illustrating the sonnets of Aretino; but the pope having been shown his superb engraving of the "Martyrdom of St. Lawrence," he pardoned him and became his patron. When Rome was taken by the Spaniards, in 1527, Raimondi lost everything he possessed, and fled to Bologna, where he continued to work until his death.

Born at Bologna, 1488; died 1534.

RAIMONDI, GIOVANNI BATTISTA, an Italian orientalist, who resided for some time in Asia, and there acquired the Hebrew, Syriac, Arabic, and Armenian languages. He was employed at Rome to arrange the oriental works contained in that city, and formed the plan of a polyglot Bible on a more enlarged method than either that of Alcala or of Anvers; but was compelled to relinquish his ideal from want of the requisite funds. In 1610 he produced an Arabic grammar.

Born at Cremona, about 1540; died about 1620.

RAINS, ranes, a new county of Texas, United States. Area, 220 square miles. Pop. 3,035. The chief place is Emory.

RAINY LAKE, rai'-ne, a lake of North America, 160 miles to the W. of Lake Superior, at an elevation of 1,100 feet above the sea level, and forming part of the boundary line between the United States and British North America. It is 50 miles long, and 38 wide. There are about 500 wooded islands. The surplus water is carried off by the Rainy River, 100 miles long, divided by an isthmus into two parts.

RAISMES, raim, a town of France, department Nord, 3 miles N. of Valenciennes. There is an important coal field in the vicinity. Manf. Iron, nails, and chains. Pop. 4,580.

It has fallen into decay. There are remains of a magnificent palace. An important transit trade is carried on and there are 12 market places. Pop. 30,000.

RAJPOOTANA, raj-poo-ta'-na, a division of India. Pop. 10,268,392.

RAKONITZ, or RAKOWNJK, rak-o-nits', a town of the Austrian empire, in Bohemia, on the Gelden, 28 miles W. of Prague. It is surrounded by old walls, and entered by four gates, with towers. There is a fine market place. Manf. Iron, glass, earthenware, and soda. Pop. 3,600.

RALEIGH, SIR WALTER, ral'-e, an English navigator, colonizer, historian and poet, the son of a Devonshire gentleman. After receiving the rudiments of his education at home, he was, about 1568, sent to Oriel College, Oxford, where "he was worthily esteemed a proficient in oratory and philosophy," but did not long remain there; for having an enterprising spirit, he entered into a troop of gentleman volunteers who went to the assistance of the Protestants in France, where he continued about five or six years. He subsequently joined the expedition of General Norris in the Netherlands, in aid of the cause of the prince of Orange. Soon after his return he engaged with his brother-in-law, Sir Humphry Gilbert, in a voyage to America, whence they returned in 1579. One of the objects of this expedition stated by Raleigh was to discover a north-western passage to China and Cathay (India). The next year he was in Ireland, where he distinguished himself against the rebels of Munster. On his return to England he introduced himself to the notice of Queen Elizabeth by a romantic piece of gallantry. Her majesty, while taking a walk, stopped at a muddy place, hesitating whether to proceed or not; on which Raleigh took off his new plush cloak, and spread it on the ground. The queen trod gently over the foot-cloth, and soon rewarded the sacrifice of a cloak with a handsome suit to the owner, who soon became a favourite and accomplished courtier. Being still intent upon making discoveries, he, in 1584, fitted out a squadron, which endeavoured to establish the colony called, in honour of Elizabeth, Virginia; but almost the only fruits of the expedition were the bringing of the tobacco-plant and the potato to England. After spending £40,000 in an unsuccessful attempt to found a colony, he abandoned the scheme to a mercantile community. Meanwhile he had been created a knight, captain of the queen's guard, a lord warden of the stannaries, and lieutenant-general of Cornwall, and was granted between 1584 and 1589 several profitable grants, among them the privilege of exporting broadcloth, licensing ale-houses, and, under certain restrictions, regulating the price of wine. In the defeat of the Spanish armada, in 1588, Sir Walter bore a glorious part, for which he received distinguishing marks of favour from the queen. In 1591 he sailed on an expedition against the Spanish fleet, but without success. About the same time he incurred the queen's displeasure by an intrigue with Elizabeth Throckmorton, one of her maids of honour, whom he afterwards married. In 1595 he sailed to Guinea, and destroyed the capital of Trinidad. The year following, having been reinstated in the royal favour, he took a distinguished part in the taking of Cadiz. Honours were lavished in abundance upon him, and he obtained the lordship of St. Germaine, in Cornwall. Sir Walter was one of those who brought about the fall of Essex, and it is imputed to him that he received money from some of the earl's followers, for the use of his influence at court in their behalf. He remained in the favour of the queen till her death, in 1603; but, in the succeeding reign, his fortunes changed. He had made powerful enemies, was stripped of his preferments, tried, and condemned for high treason, on a charge the most frivolous, and without the least evidence. He was sentenced to death, but James I. feared to execute a man whose fame and popularity were so great; but Raleigh remained in the Tower thirteen years, during which he wrote several works on various subjects of great importance, the best of which was the "History of the World," which was published in 1614. Notwithstanding that nine unsuccessful expeditions to Virginia had been undertaken, his confidence was so great that he wrote to Cecil, "I shall yet live to see it an English nation." The year following he was released, occasioned by the flattering account which he had given of some rich mines in Guiana. On gaining his liberty, he sailed to that country in search of those pretended mines; instead of discovering which, he burnt the Spanish town of St. Thomas (in storming which his eldest son, Walter, was killed), and returned to England, where, in consequence of the complaint of Gondamar, the Spanish ambassador, he was apprehended, and, to the eternal infamy of the king, beheaded, on his former sentence. His works are historical, philosophical, poetical, and political. As an author, Hume declares him to be the "best model of our ancient style;" and Hallam speaks of him as "less pedantic than most of his contemporaries, seldom low, and never affected." The appearance and character of this poet, historian, courtier, navigator, statesman, and military and naval commander, are thus sketched by Aubrey:—"He was a tall, handsome, and bold man; but his fault was that he was damnable proud. He had a most remarkable aspect, an exceeding high forehead, and long-faced." Altogether, he was, for intellectual ability, elevation of character, and adventurous spirit, one of the most remarkable men of a remarkable age.

Born at Hayes, Devonshire, 1552; died 1618.

RALEIGH, a county of West Virginia, United States. Area, 380 square miles. Pop. 7,367. The capital is Raleigh Court House.

RALEIGH, the capital of North Carolina, United States, near the centre of the state and 6 miles W. of Nense river. It occupies an elevated situation, with a large central park. The principal buildings are a state-house, six churches, court-house, gaol, a governor's house, and market-house. Pop. 9,000, about half being coloured.

RALLS, a country of Missouri, United States, Area, 525 square miles. Pop. 12,000. The capital is New London.

RALPH, JAMES, rälf, an American writer, was originally a schoolmaster at Philadelphia, and went thence, in 1725, to London, where he published a poem entitled "Night." He also wrote a History of England, and several political pamphlets. Pope has given him a place in his "Dunciad," where he exclaims,—

"Silence, ye wolves, while Ralph to Cynthia howls,
And makes night hideous; answer him, ye owls."

Born about 1700; died at Chiswick, 1762.

RAMA, ra'-ma, in Hindoo mythology the name common to three incarnations of Vishnu.

RAMA, or RAMALIA, a town of Palestine, 26 miles N.W. of Jerusalem. There is a large convent, and in the vicinity are some ancient groves of olive trees. Pop. 2,000.

RAMBERVILLERS, ram'-ber-vil'-lai, a town of France, department Vosges, 16 miles N.E. of Epinal. It is an ancient town, once the property of the temporal bishops of Metz, and there are some traces of the old walls. Manf. Linen and cotton thread, hosiery, leather and earthenware. Pop. 5,000.

RAMBLA, ram'-bla, a town of Spain, province of Cordova, 23 miles S. of the city of that name. Manf. Water coolers, and other pottery. Pop. 6,000.

RAMBOUILLET, ram-bwoo'-e-yai, a town of France, department Seine-et-Oise, 27 miles S. of Paris. It has a royal château, in which Charles X. took refuge before his exile, in 1830. The first model farm in France was established in the park, and there were bred the merino sheep, brought from Spain by Napoleon, which have proved such a great source of wealth. Pop. 4,000.

RAMBOUILLET, CATHERINE, MARQUISE DE, leader of literary society in France, was of Italian parentage, and received a superior education under the care of her mother. Having married the Marquis de Rambouillet, a French nobleman, she resided at Paris, and in her salon received for 50 years the most eminent authors, scholars, and the women of genius of France, exercising a great influence on the literature and society of the 17th century. Attempts to imitate these famous gatherings were made in many of the provincial towns; but, in the absence of genius, affectation and pedantry were the most prominent features, and Molière satirized them in his Précieuses Ridicules. The Marquise was of handsome and dignified presence, possessed great talents, and enjoyed the admiration and friendship of the most eminent persons of the 17th century.

Born at Rome, 1588; died 1665.

RAMEAU, JEAN PHILIPPE, ra'-mo, a French musician, son of an organist of Dijon. After practising as organist at his native place he discharged the same office in the cathedral of Clermont, and at the church of Sainte Croix de la Bretonnerie, Paris. In 1733 he produced his opera of "Hippolyte et Aricie," which was followed by several others, especially "Castor et Pollux," generally considered his greatest work. But it was as a theorist in music that Rameau excelled; and on account of his two works, the "Demonstration of the Principles of Harmony" and the "Code of Music," he was called the Newton of that science. Louis XV., to whom he was composer, conferred on him the title of nobility and the order of St. Michael.

Born at Dijon, 1683; died 1764.

RAMESES, ram-é-ses, ("born of the sun,") the name of 13 Egyptian kings, commemorated on monuments. The most important was Rameses II., or the Great, who is generally supposed to be identical with Sesostris. (See SESOSTRIS.)

RAMGHUR, ram-goor', a district in the southern part of the province of BEHAR, British India.

RAMILLIES, ram'-e-lees (Fr. ra-mé'-yai), a village of Belgium, province of Brabant, 28 miles S.E. of Brussels. It is noted for a victory gained here, in 1706, by the duke of Marlborough over the French, commanded by Marshal Villeroy.

RAMISSERAM, or RAMISERUM, ram-is-se-ram', an island between the southern extremity of the peninsula and Ceylon, of irregular shape, about 11 miles long and 6 miles wide, with a long additional neck of land on the south-eastern side, joining the sands known as Adam's Bridge. The surface is generally low, and there are jungles and salt swamps, but a tract of considerable fertility in the centre. The chief port, Paumbun, is on the western coast. In the town of Ramisseram, on the eastern side, is a magnificent pagoda, with a tower 100 feet high. The island is a sacred place, and is visited by many thousands of Hindoo pilgrims. There is a considerable transit trade in grain, timber, and oil. Pop. 4,500.

RAMMOHUN ROY, ram-mo-hoon', a Hindoo rajah and Oriental scholar, who came of a high order of the Brahminical caste. While still quite a youth, he evinced heretical tendencies; and he states, "when about the age of 16 I wrote a manuscript, calling in question the validity of the idolatrous system of the Hindoos. This, together with my known sentiments on that subject, having produced a coolness between me and my immediate kindred, I proceeded on my travels, and passed through different countries, chiefly within, but some beyond, the bounds of Hindostan. When I had reached the age of 20, my father recalled me, and restored me to his favour; but my continued controversies with the Brahmins on the subject of their idolatry and superstition, and my interference with their custom of burning widows and other pernicious practices, revived and increased their animosity towards me; and through their influence with my family, my father was again obliged to withdraw his countenance, though his limited pecuniary support was still continued to me." He studied the English language, and obtained offers as a revenue collector, which he held for five years. After the death of his father, in 1803, he openly broke with the Brahmins, and wrote several works in Persian, Arabic, and Sanscrit, against idolatry. He published an English translation of portions of the Vedas in 1817, and subsequently became part proprietor of an English newspaper called the Bengal Herald. A series of selections from the New Testament, entitled, "The Precepts of Jesus the Guide to Peace and Happiness," translated into Sanscrit and Bengalee, was his next publication. He did not accept the divinity of Christ, and rejected the miracles. In 1830 he was sent to England as ambassador from the king of Delhi, who at the same time conferred upon him the title of rajah. He was on the eve of returning to his own country when he was seized with illness, which terminated in his death. He was a frequent attendant in the Unitarian chapels in England. He wrote and spoke English, Bengalee, Persian, Hindostanee, and was further acquainted with French, Hebrew, Latin, Greek, and Arabic. He was as acute as a diplomatist as enlightened and cultivated as a man. His representations to the British court led to the king of Delhi's receiving an addition to his income of £30,000; and while in this country he took great interest in the agitation for Parliamentary reform then going on.

Born at Bordwan, 1774; died at Bristol, 1833.

RAMSAY, ANDREW MICHAEL, ram'-sai, usually called the Chevalier Ramsay, a Scottish author, who was educated at Edinburgh; after which he became tutor to a nobleman's son at the university of St. Andrew's. In 1710 he was at Cambrai, where he was converted to the Roman Catholic religion by the celebrated Fénélon, whose life he wrote. He was afterwards employed as tutor to the duke de Château Thierry, and made knight of the order of St. Lazarus. He was also engaged by the son of the elder Pretender, in instructing his children. His works are, "Discourse upon Epic Poetry," "Essay upon Civil Government," "Remarks on Shaftesbury's Characteristics," "History of M. de Turenne," "Philosophical Principles of Natural and Revealed Religion."

Born at Ayr, Scotland, 1686; died in France, 1743.

RAMSAY, ALLAN, a Scotch poet, son of a mining-manager at Leadhills. At an early age he went to Edinburgh, where he became apprentice to a wigmaker and barber, but subsequently distinguished himself by several admirable poems and songs in the Scotch dialect. His principal performance is a pastoral of rustic Scottish life, entitled, "The Gentle Shepherd," which contains some charming songs. At the age of 39 he abandoned wig-making, and started in business as a bookseller. He was very successful, and when he reached old age retired upon a comfortable property. He lost some money by building a theatre, which the magistrates immediately closed, because Ramsay could not obtain a special license. He wrote a Jacobite allegory, "The Vision," and edited collections of Scottish poetry.

Born in Lanarkshire, 1686; died at Edinburgh, 1758.

RAMSAY, ALLAN, a Scotch portrait-painter, and son of the preceding. His early studies in drawing were made without the aid of any tutor; but he afterwards improved his skill by a visit to Italy. Lord Bute became his patron; and, through his means, he was introduced to George III., whose principal painter he became in 1767. He was an accomplished man beyond the immediate range of his profession, and was acquainted with the Greek, Latin, Italian, and French languages.

Born at Edinburgh, 1713; died at Dover, 1784.

RAMSDEN, JESSE, rams'-den, an English mechanician, who was at first a clothworker in Yorkshire, but in his 23rd year apprenticed himself to a mathematical instrument maker in London. He pursued his new employment with so much success that he was engaged by the best mathematical instrument makers in the metropolis, and was enabled in 1768 to open a shop in the Haymarket; but in 1775 he removed to Piccadilly, where he carried on business till his death. He greatly improved Hadley's quadrant or sextant; and he invented a machine for dividing mathematical instruments, for which he received a premium of £615 from the Board of Longitude. Mr. Ramsden also improved the construction of the theodolite, and the barometer for measuring the heights of mountains. The pyrometer, for denoting the expansion of bodies by heat, also employed his talents; and he made many important discoveries and improvements in optics. He improved the refracting micrometer, the transit-instrument and quadrant, and procured a patent for an improved equatorial. His mural quadrants were admirable, and much sought after. Mr. Ramsden was chosen a fellow of the Royal Society (from which he received the Copley medal) in 1786; and was also a fellow of the Imperial Academy of St. Petersburg.

Born near Halifax, 1735; died at Brighton, 1800.

RAMSEY, ram'-se, a market town of Huntingdonshire, formerly noted for a wealthy Benedictine abbey, founded in 969, of which there are now scarcely any remains. It is 10 miles N.E. of Huntingdon, and Whittlesea Mere is in its neighbourhood. Pop. 2,350.

RAMSEY, a town in the Isle of Man, on the shore of a spacious bay, 16 miles N. of Douglas. It is much resorted to on account of the salubrity of the climate; there are a large ship-building yard, harbour works, and a public promenade. The fishery is productive, and there is regular steam communication with Liverpool, Whitehaven, Greenock, and Glasgow. Pop. 4,000.

RAMSEY, a new county of Dakota Territory, United States. Area, 1,500 square miles. Pop. 281.

RAMSGATE, rams'-gait, a market, seaport-town and popular watering-place of Kent, a member of the cinque port of Sandwich, on the eastern coast of the Isle of Thanet, 15 miles E. of Canterbury. The harbour consists of two piers, one 3,000 feet and the other 1,500 feet long, bending towards each other so as nearly to approach and inclose an area of 40 acres. It is the largest artificial haven in England, a harbour of refuge for the Downs, and is bordered by wet and dry docks, guarded by batteries, and with a lighthouse at its entrance. The piers form a very delightful promenade. The sea-views are very fine, and in clear weather the cliffs of Calais may be seen, though at the distance of 30 miles. The older part of the town is situated on a depression in the chalk cliffs; but the newer part consists of streets, terraces, and crescents, mostly on the summits of the cliffs. On the West Cliff there is a handsome new town. There are six churches, several chapels, and a synagogue, and on the West Cliff a Roman Catholic church, St. Augustine's, and a Benedictine monastery, designed by the late Mr. Welby Pugin. Boat-building and the repairing of ships are carried on, sometimes to a considerable extent, and there is regular steamboat communication with London, Deal, Dover, Calais, and Boulogne. Pop. permanent, 22,605; in the season there are often 20,000 visitors.—A station on the South-Eastern and London, Chatham, and Dover Railways.

RAMTEAK, ram-teek', a town of India, in Nagpore, 24 miles E. of the town of that name. Near it are several Brahminical temples, visited on the occasion of the annual festival by 100,000 or more pilgrims.

RAMUS, ra'-moos, a French philosopher and mathematician. He was the son of a poor labourer named La Ramée, and he received his education in the college of Navarre, where he was servant to a wealthy scholar. He studied with such ardour as to be admitted to the degree of master of arts; his thesis on which occasion was an attack upon the doctrine of Aristotle, and a later thesis of a similar character occasioned a violent controversy, and Ramus was prohibited from teaching. But had made powerful friends, and he was appointed principal of the college of Presles, and in 1551, he was nominated to the professorship of philosophy and eloquence in the college. He was also obnoxious to the Sorbonne, for being a Protestant, and in the massacre of St. Bartholomew, this learned and worthy man fell a victim. His principal works are, treatises on Arithmetic and Geometry, which for more than a century were text-books; Greek, Latin, and French Grammars; a "Life of Cicero," with remarks on the Latin language; "Animadversions upon Aristotle:" "Commentaries upon Quintilian," &c.

Born at Cuth, Picardy, 1515; died at Paris, 1572.

RANDON, JACQUES LOUIS, Count, ran'-dawng, a French general and marshal of France. He was an illustration of the famous saying of the time of the empire, that every French soldier carried the baton of a marshal of France in his knapsack. He was but a sergeant in 1812, and he gained the epaulette of a sub-lieutenant by gallant conduct at the battle of Moskowa. His bravery and skill as an officer, during the various campaigns in Africa, between 1838-46, led to his rapid advancement. He was war minister to the prince president of the republic in 1851, after which he became governor-general of Algeria. In 1856 he was created marshal of France, and, soon afterwards, minister of war.

Born at Grenoble, 1795.

RANGOON, ran-goon', a fortified city and seaport of British Burmah, province of Pegu, on the left bank of the Rangoon river, the eastern branch of the Irrawaddi, 26 miles from the sea. The European inhabitants have erected many substantial houses of stone, but the native town is mean and irregular. There are a large number of colossal Buddhist temples, pagodas, and images. One temple, the shrine, or dagoda, of Dagon, is said to be 2,300 years old. It stands on a site 800 feet square, rising from an octagonal base to a small spire. It is lavishly decorated with gold, and of peculiar sanctity, as containing relics of the last four Buddhs. The shrine is surrounded by temples containing gigantic images. The export trade is considerable, including teak timber, rice, cotton, hides, ivory, jade, kerosene, petroleum, shellac, and tobacco. Pop. 134,176, of whom three-fourths are Burmese, the remainder Hindoos, Mahometans, and about 1,800 Europeans. Shipbuilding is carried on to a great extent. Lat. 16° 48′ N. Lon. 96° 10′ E.

RANKE, LEOPOLD VON, ran-ke(r), a modern German historian. At the outset of his career he was engaged as teacher in the gymnasium of Frankfort-on-the-Oder; but having had from his earliest years a strong predilection for historical studies, he devoted all his leisure to the composition of a "History of the Roman and German People from 1494 to 1535;" on the publication of which, in 1824, it was found to be so full of accurate and discriminating knowledge, that its author received the appointment of professor of history in the university of Berlin. The government of Prussia next granted him the means of prosecuting his researches among the archives of Vienna, Rome and Venice. The historian was thus enabled to produce his "Princes and Nations of South Europe in the 16th and 17th centuries," and "The Conspiracy against Venice in 1688." In 1836 his reputation was established on the most substantial basis by his great work entitled "The Popes of Rome; their Church and State in the 16th and 17th Centuries." For about four years he edited the "Historical and Political Gazette," a print which, being deemed too liberal in its views, was discontinued in 1836. In 1841 he became historiographer of Prussia. The most important of his subsequent works were, "History of Germany during the Reformation," "Memoirs of the House of Brandenburg," "History of Prussia during the 17th and 18th Centuries," and a "History of Servia and the Servian Revolution," and Histories of France and England in the 17th and 18th Centuries. In 1866 he was raised to the rank of nobility. He lived to be a nonagenarian.

RAPIN (PAUL DE, DE THOYRAS), rap'-a, a French historian, who was descended from a Protestant family of Savoy, and studied at the Protestant college of Saumur. He passed as an advocate, but, compelled to leave France on the revocation of the edict of Nantes, he visited England and Holland; and in 1688 accompanied William of Orange to England as a volunteer, and obtained a military command in Ireland; but, being wounded at the siege of Limerick, he disposed of his commission. He afterwards became tutor to the son of the Earl of Portland, whom he accompanied on his travels. His History of England, which he brought down as far as the death of William III., considered the best history published up to that time, was printed at the Hague in 1711, and was afterwards translated into English by Nicholas Tindal.

Born at Castres, 1661; died at Wesel, 1725.

RAPOLLA, ra-pole'-la, a town of Naples, in Basilicata, 2 miles from Malfi. Pop. 3,200.—In 1851 this place was visited by an earthquake.

RAPP, JEAN, rap, a French general, who, when young, was intended for the church, but preferred a military life. He greatly distinguished himself in Germany and Egypt, and after the battle of Marengo became aide-de-camp to Napoleon. At Austerlitz, a brilliant charge made by him on the Russian imperial guard was so successful that he was made a general of division. At Loban, he had the courage to disobey an order of Napoleon's, and by doing so won the battle, for which the emperor made him a count of the empire. He served in the Russian campaign, and for nearly a year defended Dantzic against a very powerful Russian army. The inhabitants of the town made him a present of a sword set with diamonds. Contrary to the articles of capitulation, he was sent to Russia as a prisoner, and did not return to France till 1812. He was well received by Louis XVIII., and was appointed to oppose the return of Napoleon, whom, however, he joined, and was appointed commander-in-chief of the army of the Rhine and made a peer. After Waterloo he retired to Switzerland, but in 1817, having received a full pardon, returned to France, was re-created a peer, and held various offices.

Born at Colmar, 1773; died at Paris, 1821.

RASHI, or BEN ISAAC, ra'-shi, Jewish commentator. He studied philosophy, philology, astronomy, law, medicine, and other sciences at the principal universities and schools of Italy, Greece, Germany, Egypt, and Palestine. He obtained an almost unequal proficiency in Scriptural and Talmudic studies. His great work is the commentary on the Old Testament, considered to be a masterpiece of exegesis, and his commentaries on the Talmud are also of high value.

Born at Troyes, France, 1040; died 1105.

RASK, RASMUS CHRISTIAN, rask, a Danish philologist, who displayed an extraordinary aptitude for the acquisition of languages from his earliest years. He was the son of parents in the humblest circumstances; but his talents procured him patrons, who furnished him with the means of prosecuting his studies, first at the university of Copenhagen, and, subsequently, in Russia, Sweden, and Finland. In 1808 he was employed in a subordinate capacity at the university library at Copenhagen, but was subsequently sent, at the cost of the Danish government, to the Caucasus, Persia, India, and Ceylon, acquiring the languages of the countries he visited, whence he brought home in 1823 a most valuable collection, consisting of upwards of a hundred old and rare oriental manuscripts. His later years were passed in the uninterrupted prosecution of his philological labours. In 1825 he was appointed professor of literary history, and in 1828 of oriental languages in the university of Copenhagen; in the following year chief librarian, and in 1831 professor of Icelandic. He died from overwork at the age of 45. His most important works were—an Armenian Dictionary; Anglo-Saxon Grammar; Investigations concerning the Northern or Icelandic Language; Spanish, Frisian, and Acra Grammars; and a treatise on "The Age and Authenticity of the Zend-Avesta." He also edited the two great Scandinavian Eddos.

Born in Funen, 1787; died at Copenhagen, 1832.

RASPAIL, FRANÇOIS VINCENT, ras'-pail, a modern French chemist and writer on scientific subjects, who, in 1825, was appointed editor of the natural history section of the "Bulletin des Sciences." Before that period he had been a successful writer upon scientific questions for various French journals. Two of his works were as remarkable for their originality as for their general excellence. These were, the "Natural History of Health," and the "Médicine et Pharmacie Domestique. M. Raspail was a man of strong political feelings, and, both with sword and pen, fought for the cause of republicanism. Under Louis Philippe he was twice imprisoned for his opposition to the government, and at the coup d'état, he was placed in confinement by Louis Napoleon.

Born at Carpentras, 1794; died 1878.

RASPEIG (SAN VICENTE DEL), a town of Spain, province of Alicante, 4 miles from the town of that name. Pop. 4,700.

RASTATT, ra'-stat, a strongly-fortified town of Baden, on the Murg, 3 miles from its junction with the Rhine. It has a magnificent mansion, formerly occupied by the princes of Baden. Manf. Carriages, firearms, mathematical and philosophical instruments, silver and plated ware, and tobacco. Pop. 12,356.—This place has been the scene of repeated diplomatic conferences. During one of these, in 1798-99, two of the representatives of France were assassinated by Austrian hussars, and their papers carried away.

RASTALL, or RASTELL, JOHN, ras'-tel, an old English printer, who pursued his calling in London. His wife was the sister of sir Thomas More. He was himself an author, translator, and compiler, and is said to have written the "Anglorum Regum Chronicon, or Pastyme of People."

Died in London, 1536.

RASTENBURG, ras'-ten-boorg, a town of Prussia, province of Prussia, district of Königsberg, on the Guber, 55 miles S.E. of Königsberg. There are a castle and three churches. Manf. Woollen cloths, leather, and articles in copper. Pop. 8,038.

It has ancient ramparts, ditches, and gates, and the streets narrow and crooked, and the houses high and old fashioned. On the opposite side of the river is a busy commercial suburb, Stadt am Hof. The cathedral, begun in 1275, but not completed for nearly 400 years, was restored between 1830 and 1838, and is now one of the finest specimens of German architecture. It contains a silver altar, monuments of bishops, and fine painted windows. There are 12 old Roman Catholic churches, and a church built in the 12th century, in the Byzantine style, and now used for secular purposes. The old town-hall was formerly the place of meeting of the Imperial Diet. There are a large royal library, several very ornamental fountains, and a monument of Kepler the astronomer. Manf. Articles in gold, silver, steel, and brass, paper, beetroot, sugar, brandy, candles, and earthenware. Shipbuilding is extensively carried on. Pop. 36,024.—This is one of the most ancient cities in Germany, the Reginium of the Romans, and was a place of great commercial importance. A bishopric was founded in 750. In the 12th century it was made a free city, and during the middle ages was the chief seat of the trade with the Levant, and one of the largest and wealthiest cities in Germany, and in the 17th and 18th centuries was the seat of the German Diet. After the close of the Napoleonic wars it was ceded to Bavaria.

RATTAZZI, URBANO, ra-tad'-se, an Italian statesman, was a native of Alessandria, and at the age of twenty-one took his doctor's degree. He first practised at the bar of Turin, but was induced to remove to Casale in 1838, and in less than a year from that date had established a reputation as one of the most judicious and able lawyers in Italy. In the struggles of 1848 he acquired so much renown by his high attainments and liberal opinions that the electors of Alessandria returned him as their representative in the Assembly of Turin. He had scarcely arrived to take his seat there before he was intrusted by M. Casati with the ministry of public instruction. In 1849 the Abbé Gioberti, who was charged with the formation of a new cabinet, conferred upon him the office of keeper of the seal, which office he shortly afterwards exchanged for that of minister of the interior. On the fall of Gioberti from power, Rattazzi succeeded him as president of the council, where he used his influence to advance the impatient policy of Charles Albert, and, in the disastrous defeat which resulted from the measures adopted, remained firmly attached to his party. In 1853 he was minister of justice in the Cavour ministry, but being accused of weakness in suppressing the Mazzinian movement of 1857, he retired. After the treaty of Villafranca, he superseded Count Cavour in the presidency, but was shortly afterwards compelled to relinquish the direction of affairs to the firmer hand of Cavour. In 1862, after acting for some time as president of the Chamber, Rattazzi once more became prime minister, but was forced to resign in the following year. He held office once more as premier of the kingdom of Italy for a few months in 1867.

Born at Alessandria in 1808; died at Frosinone, 1873.

RATZEBURG, ratz'-boorg, a town of Prussia, in the duchy of Lauenburg, 13 miles S.E. of Lubeck. It stands on a small island, at the south-eastern extremity of the Lake of Ratzeburg. There is a handsome cathedral. Pop. 3,000.

RAUCH, CHRISTIAN DANIEL, rouk, a modern German sculptor, who began the study of sculpture early in life, but on the death of his father, he went to Berlin, and became valet to king Frederick William II., after whose death he again studied art, and the new king noticing his abilities gave him facilities, and afforded him the means of visiting Rome, where he received instruction from Canova and Thorwaldsen. He was extensively employed by the various governments of Germany, and produced a large number of works, some of them of great excellence. The great monument of Frederick the Great, at Berlin; the monumental statue of queen Luise, at Charlottenburg, and statues of Maximilian of Bavaria, Albert Dürer, Goethe, and Schiller, are among his greatest works.

Born at Arolsen, Waldeck, 1777; died at Dresden, 1857.

RAUMER, FREDERICK LUDWIG GEORG VON, rou'-mer, German historian, who studied at Halle and Göttingen, and having filled several legal appointments, was, in 1811, appointed professor at Breslau, and in 1819 he became professor of history and political economy at Berlin, where he was also secretary of the Academy of Sciences, an appointment he resigned in 1847, in consequence of the unfavourable reception of an oration he delivered in honour of the king. He was afterwards a member of the Frankfort parliament, ambassador at Paris, and member of the first chamber at Berlin. In 1853 he was appointed "professor converitus" at the university of Berlin. He was the author of "Lectures on Ancient History," "History of the Hohenstaufen House," "History of Europe from the end of the 15th Century," and many other valuable historical and political works.

RAVENNA, ra-ven'-na, a city of Italy, province of the same name, near the mouth of the Montone, 4 miles from the Adriatic, which formerly flowed close to the town. Its most interesting objects are the monuments of antiquity, in particular the ruins of the palace of Theodoric and the Porta Aurea, a splendid gate of marble, built by the Romans. The cathedral, built in the 4th century, has five naves, supported by ranges of columns of Grecian marble. In it are some interesting memorials, and fine pictures. The church of St. Vitale is likewise supported by pillars of Grecian marble, brought from Constantinople. Another church, called Santa Maria Rotunda, is very ancient, and contains the tomb of Theodoric. The other objects are, the tomb of Dante, a pillar commemorating the death of Gaston de Foix and the victory of Louis XII. of France over Pope Julius II. in 1512; the mausoleum of Placida, containing the tombs of Honorius and Valentinian III.; statues of many of the popes in the public squares, various churches, a large public library, and hospitals. Manf. Silks principally. A canal to the sea facilitates trade. Pop. 59,000.—Ravenna was made a Roman colony and seaport by Augustus, was the seat of the emperor Honorius, and was successively occupied by the barbarians who invaded Italy. In 1218 it became a republic, taken by the Venetians in the 14th century, and in 1509 was annexed to the papal dominions.

RAVENNA, a province of Italy, bounded N by the province of Pewara, S. by Firenze, W. by Bologna, and E. by the Adriatic. There are branches of the Apennines in the southern part, but it slopes rapidly away towards the north, where there is an extensive plain, and farther to the east are plains and lagoons. The soil is fertile, producing grain, hemp, flax, saffron, and fruit. The climate near the coast is moist and unhealthy. Area, 742 square miles. Pop. 230,928.

RAVENSCROFT, THOMAS, rai'-vens-kroft, an English musical composer, who was educated in St. Paul's choir, and in his 15th year became bachelor of music of the university of Cambridge. His fine collection of part songs, including the famous "Canst thou love and lie alone?" was first published in 1611. In 1621 he produced the "Whole Book of Psalms, &c., composed into Four Parts by Sundry Authors," which included contributions from the father of John Milton, Tallis and Morley. Ravenscroft himself produced the justly-admired Bangor, St. David's, and Canterbury tunes. He is also supposed to have edited the famous collections of secular melodies known as the "Pamelia" and "Deuteromelia."

Born 1592: died 1635.

RAVIGNAN, GUSTAVUS FRANCIS XAVIER DELACROIX DE, rai-veen'-yan, a famous French Jesuit preacher, previously in the legal profession. At the age of 27 he studied for the church, entering the order of the Jesuits. When they were expelled from France in 1830, he retired to Switzerland, and having gained great reputation as a preacher, returned to France, and preached at Amiens, and afterwards for ten years at Notre Dame, Paris. His sermons are regarded as models of pulpit eloquence, and he was the author of some works in defence of the Jesuits.

Born at Bayonne, 1795; died at Paris, 1858.

RAVITZ, or RAWITSCH, thriving town of Prussia, province of Posen, near the confines of Silesia, 55 miles S. of Posen. It is fortified by a wall and ditch. Manf. Woollens, leather, linen, tobacco and salt. Pop. 12,260.

RAWLINSON, RICHARD, raw'-lin-son, an English antiquary, who collected materials for a continuation of Wood's "Athenæ Oxonienses" and "History of Oxford," which, with an account of his travels, he bequeathed to the university of Oxford, as well as a collection of medals and books. He also founded an Anglo-Saxon professorship in the same university; and his heart, agreeably to his own desire, was put in a marble urn, and placed in St. John's College chapel. He published a translation of Fresnoy's "Method of Studying History," and other works.

Born 1690; died 1755.

RAWLINSON, SIR HENRY CRESWICKE, oriental scholar, Assyriologist and diplomatist. In his 16th year he entered the military service of the East India Company, from which he retired in 1856, having won his way to the rank of lieutenant-colonel. He was also created a K.C.B., and appointed a director of the East India Company. In 1833 he had been appointed to reorganize the army of the Shah of Persia. His first efforts in the department of knowledge for which he became famous were in 1835, when he copied and read the Behistun inscription in Kurdistan. (See BEHISTUN.) While political resident at Bagdad, in 1843, he studied the inscriptions of Nineveh. He contributed many papers to the journals of the Asiatic and Geographical societies; and in 1852 published "Outline of the History of Assyria, as collected from the Inscriptions discovered by A.H. Layard, in the Ruins of Nineveh." He also put forth a "Memorandum on the Publication of the Cuneiform Inscriptions," and was employed to furnish copies of the inscriptions discovered at Nineveh and Babylonia. In 1858 he was elected member of parliament for Reigate, but in a few months vacated his seat, on being appointed member of the council of India. In the following year he was sent as envoy-extraordinary and military plenipotentiary to India, and on his return was elected member for Frome, retaining his seat till the general election of 1868. From 1871 till 1873, he was president of the Royal Geographical Society. He is a corresponding member of the Institute of France, and a chevalier of the Prussian Order of Merit. He is as eminent as a geographer as an archæologist. In 1875 he publishea "England and Russia in the East."

Born at Chadlington, Oxfordshire, 1810.

RAWLINSON, REV. GEORGE, brother of the preceding, educated at Oxford, where he became fellow and tutor, in 1859 Bampton lecturer, and in 1861 Camden professor of ancient history. In 1874 he was appointed to a canonry in Canterbury cathedral. He has written a series of valuable works, on the history of the five great monarchies of the ancient world, and later oriental monarchies; and produced a new edition of Herodotus.

Born 1815.

RAY, or WRAY, JOHN, rai, an English naturalist, whose father was a blacksmith, of Essex, but gave his son a good education at Braintree, whence he removed to Trinity College, Cambridge, where he became fellow and Greek and mathematical lecturer. While at the university, he cultivated the study of botany, which was then in a very disorganised state; but by his example and exertions, it became a favourite pursuit. In 1660 he published in Latin, his "Catalogue of Plants Growing in the neighbourhood of Cambridge," which laid the foundation of his "Synopsis Methodica, Stirpium Britannicarum." In 1662, he quitted his fellowship, and afterwards made numerous journeys over the kingdom and on the continent of Europe. He was chosen a fellow of the Royal Society in 1667, and contributed numerous papers to the Transactions of that learned body, on subjects of natural history. In 1679 he fixed his residence near his native village, where he continued perfecting his collections and works till his death. His botanical and zoological writings laid the foundations of the classification of the vegetable and animal kingdoms. His other works were, "Three Discourses on the Primitive Chaos, the Creation, Deluge, and Conflagration of the World;" several volumes attempting a classification of the whole animal kingdom; a translation of Rauwolf's "Travels in the East." After his death were published his "History of Insects," and a collection of Philosophical Letters between himself and several of his correspondents. Cuvier says that his labours "may be considered as the foundation of modern zoology; for naturalists are obliged to consult them every instant, for the purpose of clearing up the difficulties which they meet with in the works of Linnæus and his imitators."

Born at Black-Notley, near Braintree, 1628; died 1705.

RAY, a county of Missouri, United States. Area, 570 square miles. Pop. 20,000, about 2,000 being coloured. The capital is Richmond.

RAYNAL, WILLIAM FRANCIS, rai'-nal, a French historian, who entered early into the society of Jesuits, and on taking priest's orders became a celebrated preacher, but quitted his order in 1748; on which he fixed his residence at Paris, where he had recourse to literature as a means of support. In 1770 he published his celebrated work, the "Philosophical and Political History of the European Commerce in both Indies," which obtained him a great reputation. With a view to a more correct edition, he travelled in Holland and England. In 1781 he published at Geneva, a new edition of his history, greatly improved and enlarged. It was, however, proscribed by the parliament of Paris, and the author would have been arrested, had he not retired to Germany. In 1788 he returned to Paris, and, in 1791, he addressed a letter to the National Assembly, in which he exposed the dangerous course in which they were engaged, and predicted the evils which would result from revolution. His other works are,—"History of the Stadtholdership;" "History of the Parliament of England;" "History of the Divorce of Henry VIII. of England;" "On the Revolution of the English Colonies in North America."

Born at St. Geniez, 1711; died at Paris, 1796.

RAYNOUARD, FRANÇOIS JUSTE MARIE, rai'-noo-ar, French poet and philologist, a member of the bar, who was elected to the Legislative Assembly in 1791, and attached himself to the Girondins. He was imprisoned, but released after the fall of Robespierre. A few years afterwards he devoted himself to literature, and in 1805 achieved a great success with a tragedy, "Les Templiers." In 1807 he was chosen a member of the Academy, of which ten years afterwards he was appointed perpetual secretary. In 1806 he was a member of the legislative body, where he was distinguished by his independence of spirit. He wrote many dramas, and gave great attention to the study of the Provençal language and literature, publishing several works on the subject.

Born at Brignoles, 1761; died at Passy, 1836.

In 1708 he was admitted a member of the Society of Sciences. His principal works are, —"A History of Insects;" "A History of the Rivers of France;" and numerous papers in the Memoirs of the Academy of Sciences. He spent several years in researches into the conditions of the woods, gold bearing rivers and turquoise mines of France; and gave great attention to the methods of making steel, pottery, and glass. He wrote a treatise on the silk of spiders, which was translated into Chinese by command of the emperor. He was the inventor of the valuable instrument known as Réaumur's thermometer. His death resulted from a fall from his horse.

Born at Rochelle, 1683; died 1757.

REBOUL, JOHN, reb'-ool, a modern French poet, who was the son of a locksmith, and who himself followed the calling of a baker until the year 1839, when he repaired to Paris, where a brilliant reception awaited him, in consequence of the great popularity his poems had attained in the capital. The merit of bringing him before the public was due to M. de Lamartine, who addressed to the baker-poet one of his harmonies, entitled "Genius in Obscurity." He published several collections of poems, some of which ran through as many as six editions. His songs are frequently of the Anacreontic order. One of his tragedies was produced upon the French stage in 1850, and obtained a great and deserved success. In 1848 he was sent to the Constituent Assembly as the representative of his native department.

Born at Nismes, Gard, 1796.

RÉCAMIER, JEANNE FRANCOISE JULIE ADELAIDE BERNARD, Madame, rai'-ka-me-a, leader of French society, was the daughter of a barber of Lyons, and at an early age was married to M. Récamier, an elderly barber, whom she regarded more as a second father than a husband. After some years he lost his fortune, and Prince August of Prussia, having formed a great attachment to the lady, who reciprocated it, a divorce was proposed, in order that she might marry the prince. The husband's gentle remonstrance induced her to reconsider her position, and she was a faithful and attentive wife until his death, about 24 years afterwards. For nearly 50 years the salon of Madame Récamier, who retained her remarkable beauty almost till the last, was the resort of the most intellectual and accomplished men and women of France. Her friendship with Madame de Staël and Chateaubriand are historically famous. She died of cholera.

He studied first at Leipsic, where he made astonishing progress, and afterwards at Vienna under Purbach, whom he succeeded in the chair of astronomy, 1461. He was taught the Greek language by Theodore Gaza, and was thus enabled to read Ptolemy and other mathematicians of antiquity. He visited several countries, and received marks of distinction from sovereign princes, particularly Mathias Corvinus, of Hungary. About 1475 he published the first almanack that ever appeared in Europe. Sixtus IV. made him archbishop of Ratisbon, and employed him in reforming the calendar. He wrote extensively upon astronomy.

Born 1436; died at Rome, 1476.

REGNARD, JEAN FRANÇOIS, rain'-yar, a French comic writer. He was fond of travelling, and in a voyage from Genoa to Marseilles, was taken by an Algerine pirate, and carried to Algiers, where, by his skill in cookery, he obtained the favour of his master, but, being detected in an intrigue, he was condemned to suffer death or turn Mahometan. The French consul being made acquainted with the affair, ransomed him and sent him to France, after which he travelled through Flanders, Holland, Denmark, Sweden, and Poland. His dramatic works are considered to rank next to Molière's.

Born at Paris, 1656; died near Paris, 1710.

REGNAULT, HENRI VICTOR, rain'-yault, a French chemist and natural philosopher, who was, when a youth, shopman in a bazaar in Paris, but by hard study qualified himself for admission into the Polytechnic school, and was afterwards a mining engineer and professor of Lyons. In 1840 he was elected a member of the Academy of Sciences, and in 1854 was appointed director of the imperial porcelain factory at Sèvres. In 1869 he received the Copley medal of the Royal Society of London. His studies have been expressly directed to calculations connected with the working of steam engines, and data respecting the laws of exhaustion of gases, measurement of temperatures, &c.

Born at Aix-la-Chapelle, 1810; died 1878.

REGNIER, MATHURIN, rain'-yai, a French satirical poet, who secured the patronage of Cardinal Joyeuse, and obtained a pension and a canonry.

Born at Chartres, 1573; died at Rouen, 1613.

REGNIER, FRANÇOIS SERAPHIN, a learned French author, whose talents recommended him to the patronage of the duke de Crequi, whom he accompanied to Rome in 1662. While there, he wrote Italian sonnets in so good a style as to be admitted a member of the Academy della Crusca. In 1684 he succeeded Mezeray as secretary of the French Academy. His most important works were a French grammar; an Italian translation of Anacreon; French, Latin, Spanish, and Italian poems; and a history of the disputes of France with the court of Rome.

Born at Paris, 1632; died 1713.

REGULUS, MARCUS ATILIUS, reg'-u-lus, a Roman consul in 267 B.C and 256 B.C., who, in his second consulate, defeated Hamilcar and Hanno in a naval engagement off the coast of Sicily. This victory was followed by another on land, and the reduction of several places. The Carthaginians sued for peace, which was refused. Xantippus, a Spartan commander, coming with reinforcements to the Carthaginians, defeated Regulus, who was taken prisoner. The Carthaginians subsequently sent him as envoy to Rome to propose terms of peace, but on the condition of his return. Regulus advised the senate not to comply with the terms, and then, knowing the fate which awaited him, would not break his promise, and, returning, the Carthaginians put him to a cruel death. The legend, now rejected by most historians, is that he was placed in a barrel full of nails, the points projecting inwards, and then rolled about till he died.

Died about 250 B.C.

REHOBOAM, re-ho-bo'-am, succeeded his father Solomon 975 B.C. In consequence of his oppressive exactions, ten tribes revolted against him, and took for their king Jeroboam, who had been recalled from Egypt. Two kingdoms were thus formed,—that of Israel, consisting of ten tribes; and that of Judah, with only two,—Judah and Benjamin.

Born 1015 B.C.; died 958 B.C.

REICHENAU, ri'-he-nou, a town of the Austrian empire in Bohemia, on the Erlitzbach, 9 miles S.E. of Königgratz. There are an old and a very handsome new castle. Manf. Woollen cloth. Pop. 4,700.

REICHENBACH, ri'-ken-bak, a town of Prussia, province of Silesia, on the right bank of the Peilbach, 46 miles S.E. of Liegnitz. Manf. Linen, cotton, and woollens. Pop. 7,000.

REICHENBACH, a town of Saxony, 11 miles S.W. of Zwickau. Manf. Extensive, consisting of woollen fabrics, lace, damask, hosiery, cotton, and stoneware. Pop. 16,509, REICHENBACH, KARL, Baron von, German chemist, manufacturer and writer on animal magnetism. He was educated at Tübingen, where he took the degree of Ph.D. In early life he was imprisoned by the French authorities, then powerful in Würtemberg, for endeavouring to establish a German colony in the South Seas, a project which was supposed to have some political significance. In 1821 he established various manufactories in Moravia, by which he realised an ample fortune, and he then engaged in chemical investigations of great value, discovering creosote and paraffin. Animal magnetism then engaged his attention, and he professed to have discovered a new force in nature, which he named the Od force. He was the author of numerous treatises on geological and chemical subjects, and on the new force. He was created a baron by the king of Würtemberg.

Born at Stuttgart, 1788; died at Leipsic, 1869.

REICHENBERG, or LIBERK, ri'-ken-bairg, a town of the Austrian empire, on the Neisse, 52 miles N.E. of Prague. It ranks as the second town in Bohemia. Manf. Woollen, cotton, and linen stuffs, leather, shoes, gold and silver wares, fire-arms, and musical instruments. Pop. 25,000.

REICHENHALL, ri'-ken-hal, a town of Bavaria, on the Saale, 8 miles W. of Salzburg. In its neighbourhood are large salt works. Pop. 3,400.

REICHSTADT, DUKE OF, rike'-stat. (See NAPOLEON II.)

REID, MAJOR-GENERAL SIR WILLIAM, reed, a general of engineers and meteorologist, who received his education at the Royal Military Academy at Woolwich, and began his career as lieutenant of the Royal Engineers in 1809. He served in the Peninsula, and was present at Lord Exmouth's attack on Algiers, in 1816. In 1832 he was employed at Barbadoes in rebuilding the government buildings which had been destroyed by the hurricane of the preceding year; and then he first conceived the idea of endeavouring to trace the laws which govern the movements of these agents. Subsequently, as governor of Bermuda, Barbadoes, and Malta, as chairman of the executive committee of the Great Exhibition of 1851, and as the author of the "Law of Storms," he rendered signal services to his country. At the close of the exhibition he was made a K.C.B., and the government of Malta was conferred upon him, which he administered during the Crimean war.

Born at Kinglassie, Fifeshire, 1791; died 1858.

REID, THOMAS, a Scotch divine and metaphysician, connected by his mother's side with the talented Gregory family, was educated at Marischal College, Aberdeen, where, in 1752, he became professor of moral philosophy. In 1763 he succeeded Adam Smith as professor of moral philosophy in the university of Glasgow. His chief works are "An Inquiry into the Human Mind," and "Essays on the Intellectual and Active Powers of Man."

Born at Strachan, Kincardineshire, 1710; died 1796.

REIGATE, ri'-gait, a market-town and municipal borough of Surrey, on the Mole, 23 miles S. of London. It stands on a rock of white sand. The church, St. Mary Magdalene, parts of which date from the 12th century, contains the tomb of Lord Howard of Effingham, the famous admiral who defeated the Spanish Armada. The church was restored in 1858. A new church, St. Mark's, was erected in 1860, and a Gothic public-hall in 1861. There is a cave under the site of the old castle, in which, it is said, the barons met to arrange the articles of Magna Charta. The town formerly returned a member to parliament, but was disfranchised in 1867. Pop. 18,656.—A station on the South-Eastern railway.

REIMARUS, HERMANN SAMUEL, ri-mair'-us, German philologist, professor of Hebrew and mathematics at the gymnasium of Hamburg. Some papers contributed to a series published by Lessing, in which Reimarus denied the supernatural origin of Christianity, produced great excitement in Germany, and were followed by others of a similar tendency, and by valuable contributions and philological literature.

Born at Hamburg, 1694; died 1765.

REIMS. (See RHEIMS.)

REINESIUS, THOMAS, ri-ne'-si-us, a learned German critic. After being a burgomaster of Altenburg and counsellor to the elector of Saxony, he retired to Leipsic, where he practised medicine till his death. He published several learned and curious works on the Latin classics, and some lectures and epistles.

Born at Gotha, 1587; died 1667.

REINHOLD, ERASMUS, rine'-holte, an eminent German astronomer and mathematician, who was professor at the university of Wittemberg, and wrote some mathematical and astronomical works of a most important and valuable nature.

Born at Saalfeld, 1511; died 1553.

REINHOLD, KARL LEONARD, a German metaphysician, who received his education among the Jesuits, but quitted them to pursue the study of philosophy. He afterwards repaired to Weimar, where he married the daughter of Wieland. In 1786 he published "Letters upon the Philosophy of Kant," and, in the following year, was appointed professor of philosophy at Jena, where his lectures were very numerously attended. In 1794 he went to Kiel, where he held the professorship of philosophy until his death. He was a most prolific writer, and among other works produced a "Letter to Lavater and Fichte, respecting the Belief in God."

Born at Vienna, 1758; died at Kiel, 1823.

REJKIAVIK, ri-ki'-a-vik, a seaport, the capital of Iceland, on a tongue of land on the south-west coast of the island. There are a cathedral (the town being the see of a bishop), an observatory, public library, and good harbour. Pop. 1,000.

RELAND, ADRIAN, rai'-land, a Dutch writer, who, at the age of 24, was chosen professor of philosophy at Harderwijk; whence he removed to Utrecht upon being appointed professor of oriental languages and ecclesiastical antiquities. His principal works are "Dissertations on the Medals of the Ancient Hebrews," "Introduction to Hebrew Grammar," an edition of Epictetus, and a magnificent work upon the antiquities of Palestine.

Born at Ryp, North Holland, 1676; died at Utrecht, 1718.

REMBANG, rem'-bang, a town and seaport of Java, on the north coast of the same name, capital of a Dutch residency. There are a Protestant church, a government school, and an institution for girls. Pop. 12,000.

REMBRANDT, or HERMANSZOON, VAN RYN, rem'-brant, a Dutch painter and etcher, son of a miller. He acquired his art under several of the best painters of Leyden, Amsterdam, and Haarlem, and, early in life, grew famous. In 1630 he established himself at Amsterdam, and had many pupils whom he employed in making copies of his works, which he retouched and sold for large sums. He made a large fortune, but though avaricious in getting, he was extravagant in spending on works of art and objects of virtù, which, added to the expense of educating his children, involved him in difficulties. In paintings of historical subjects he was less successful than in portrait, where he displayed a brilliancy of colouring and a power of light and shade that was truly astonishing. His etchings, of which he executed a large number, are of great value. Several fine paintings of his are in the National Gallery.

Born near Leyden, 1608; died at Amsterdam, 1669.

REMI, or REMY, ST., rem'-e, archbishop of Rheims, who converted Clovis to Christianity, and baptized that monarch.

Born 439; died 533.

REMI, St., archbishop of Lyons, presided in the council of Valentia in 855. He supported the doctrine of St. Augustine on grace and predestination in some works which are extant.

Died 875.

REMIREMONT, rem'-eer-mawnt, a town of France, department of Vosges, on the left bank of the Moselle, 17 miles S.E. of Epinal. There are remains of a fine abbey. Manf. Cotton goods, leather, and iron wares. Pop. 6,000.

REMO, St., rai-mo, a seaport of Italy, province of Porto Maurizio, on the Mediterranean, 30 miles N.E. of Nice. There are an old and a new town, containing some handsome churches and other public buildings. The harbour is small. It has a coasting trade in fish, oil, and fruits. Pop. 15,000.

REMSCHEID, rem'-shide, a town of Prussia, Rhine Province, on an elevated situation, 18 miles S.E. of Dusseldorf. Manf. Iron wares and cutlery. Pop. 30,000.

REMUSAT, Charles, Count de, rem'-oo-sa, French philosopher and politician, son of the first chamberlain of the Emperor Napoleon, studied at the Lycée Napoleon, Paris, and commenced his career as a journalist and supporter of Guizot. In 1830 he was elected to the Chambers, and was for a short time, in 1836, under-secretary of state. After the revolution of 1848 he was a member of the Constitutional and Legislative Assemblies, supporting the party of order. The coup d'état sent him into exile, but he was allowed to return, and occupied himself for some years with literature and science. From 1871 to 1873 he was minister for foreign affairs under M. Thiers. He wrote essays on philosophy, a history of England in the 18th century, and essays on Bacon, Hartley, Locke, and other English philosophers.

Born at Paris, 1797; died 1875.

RÉMUSAT, Jean Pierre Abel, a French orientalist, and professor of the Chinese and Tartarian languages at the College of France. He adopted the profession of medicine, and was for some time an army surgeon. He acquired, without the assistance of a tutor, the Chinese, Thibetan, and Mantchou languages, was one of the founders of the Asiatic Society at Paris, and became conservator of the oriental manuscripts in the Bibliothèque Royale. His attainments as a Chinese scholar were very high, and he produced a number of works on the most difficult languages in the world, of a most excellent character. His principal productions were,—"Elements of the Chinese Grammar," "Researches upon the Tartarian Languages," a "History of Buddhism;" an edition of a Chinese novel, entitled "The Two Cousins;" and a volume of Chinese tales. He also contributed several valuable articles to the "Biographie Universelle," and to the "Journal des Savans."

Born at Paris, 1788; died there, 1832.

REMY, St., rai'-me, a town of France, department of Bouches-du-Rhone, 42 miles N.W. of Marseilles. There is a handsome modern town-hall. Pop. 6,300.

RENAIX, ren'-ai, a town of Belgium, province of East Flanders, 20 miles S. of Ghent. Manf. Linen, cotton, and woollen stuffs, damask, hats, and tobacco. Pop. 5,468.

RENAN, St., ren'-awng, a town of France, in the department of Finistère, 6 miles from Brest. Pop. 11,000.

RENAN, Joseph Ernest, French orientalist and theological writer, was educated for the church, studying at Paris and Issy, but declined to be ordained, and prepared himself for an academical career. At the age of 24 he attained the Volney prize for an essay on the Semitic languages, and a year afterwards obtained another success by an essay on the study of Greek in the West in the middle ages. In 1848 he started a periodical, to which he contributed many brilliant papers on theology, philosophy, history, and other subjects, marked by great boldness and thought. In 1855 he published a general history of the Semitic languages, and afterwards translated, with commentaries, the "Canticles," and the book of Job. In 1860 he made, at the instigation of the emperor Napoleon III., a tour in Syria and Phœnicia, and on his return was appointed professor of Hebrew in the College of France, of which he was deprived for the boldness of his inaugural lecture. His most famous work, "The Life of Jesus" (the first part of a work on the "Origin of Christianity," in which he rejects all supernatural agency regarding Christianity as simply a natural development of the human mind), appeared soon afterwards, and caused a great sensation. It was followed by histories of the Apostles and St. Paul, and a work named "Antichrist." He is also the author of other works of a theological nature.

Born at Tréguier, 1823.

RENAU D'ÉLIÇAGARAY, Bernard, ren'-o, a French mathematician and military engineer, who distinguished himself by his improvements in the construction and management of ships, and by the invention of a particular form of bombshell. He acted as engineer under Louis XIV. and Vauban, and at the siege of Gibraltar in 1704. He wrote "The Theory of Manœuvring Vessels," and several letters in defence of the work, against Huygen and Bernouilli.

Born 1652; died 1719.

RENAUDOT, Theophrastus, ren'-o-do, a French physician. He was the first who published, in France, a gazette, so called, as is supposed, from the Venetian coin una gazetta, for which such papers were originally sold at Venice. Renaudot obtained the privilege of publishing the "Gazette of France" for himself and family. His other works are, "An Abridgment of the Life of the Prince de Condé," and "The Life of Cardinal Mazarin."

Born at Loudun, 1584; died 1653.

RENAUDOT, Eusebius, a learned French writer, and grandson of the preceding. He entered into orders, and distinguished himself by his knowledge of the Arabic, Syriac, and Coptic languages. The cardinal de Noailles took him to Rome, where Clement V. gave him the priory of Fossey, in Brittany. On visiting Florence, the grand-duke gave him apartments in his palace, and the academy of that city chose him a member. He was also a member of the French Academy and of other learned societies. His most important works are a continuation of Nicole's book on the "Perpetuity of Faith," "History of the Jacobite Patriarchs of Alexandria," in Latin; "A Collection of the Ancient Oriental Liturgies," "Account of India and China," translated from the Arabic; and a translation of the "Life of Athanasius" from the Arabic.

Born at Paris, 1646; died 1720.

RENDSBORG, rends'-borg, a fortified town of Prussia, province of Schleswig-Holstein, on the Eyder. It stands on an island at the commencement of the Kiel canal. An active trade in timber is carried on. Pop. 12,500.—This place was taken by the Swedes in 1643, and by the Prussians in 1848.

RENÉ, or RENATOSI, rai'-nai, titular king of Naples and Sicily, son of Louis II., duke of Anjou and count of Provence. He married Isabella of Lorraine, sister-in-law to the duke of Burgundy, with whom he was in constant dispute as to the heritage of the house of Lorraine. In 1442, having failed to establish his claims, and being also defeated in his attempts to secure the throne of Naples, he retired to his hereditary dominions in Provence, and occupied himself with the cultivation of the fine arts, especially music and poetry. He was, too, a graceful poet. His amiability of disposition and love of peaceful pursuits obtained for him the title of "the good king." His daughter, Margaret of Anjou, married Henry VI. of England, and is famous in our history. (See MARGARET.) René is introduced as a character in Scott's historical novel, "Anne of Geierstein."

Born at Anjou, 1408; died 1480.

RENFREW, ren'-froo, an ancient royal, parliamentary, and municipal burgh of Scotland, capital of Renfrewshire, on the south bank of the Clyde, 6 miles N.W. of Glasgow. There is an ancient grammar-school. Manf. Silk and muslin fabrics, and iron. Shipbuilding is carried on. Pop. 7,439.—A station on the Glasgow and South-Western railway.

RENFREW, a county of Ontario province, dominion of Canada. Area, 2,389 square miles. Pop. 40,125.—The capital is Pembroke.

RENFREWSHIRE, a county of Scotland, bounded N. and E. by Lanarkshire, N. and W. by the river and Firth of Clyde, and S. by the county of Ayr. Diversified with hill and dale and with wood and water. The hilly or more elevated district is by far the most extensive, forming the south and western parts of the county, and attaining a height of 1,240 feet; but there are no rugged or lofty mountains.

Area.—254 square miles.
Pop.—262,981.
Chief Towns.—RENFREW (the capital), PAISLEY, JOHNSTONE, POLLOCKSHAWS, GREENOCK, and PORT GLASGOW.
Parliamentary Representation.—One member is returned for the county, one for Paisley, and one for Greenock.
Rivers.—The Clyde, White Cart, Black Cart, Gryffe, and the Lavern.
Minerals.—Coal and iron (extensively worked), lime and sandstone.

RENI, ren-e', a market town and port of Russia, in Bessarabia, at the confluence of the Pruth and the Danube. There is a trade in grain, chiefly with Constantinople. Pop. 7,400.

RENI, GUIDO. (See GUIDO.)

RENNELL, JAMES, ren'-nel, an English geographer, who, early in life, entered the navy, and served under Admiral Parker at the taking of Pondicherry. At the age of 20 he abandoned the naval for the military service, having entered the engineers of the East India Company. Under Lord Clive he served with considerable distinction, was wounded, and gained the rank of major. In 1782 he returned to England, and henceforth pursued his investigations in geography, history, and topography. He produced—"Map and Memoir of Hindostan;" "Marches of the British Army in the Peninsula of India during the Campaign of 1791;" "Observations on the Topography of the Plain of Troy;" "Treatise on the Comparative Geography of Western Asia," with a very valuable atlas; an "Investigation of the Currents of the Atlantic Ocean," a work which Lieutenant Maury, of the United States navy, afterwards extended and improved. Major Rennell also published, "Geographical System of Herodotus Explained and Examined," and a learned commentary upon the "Retreat of the Ten Thousand Greeks." Mungo Park was much indebted to his patient research and great acquirements in the production of his work on his African travels. He was a member of the Royal Society, and a frequent contributor to its "Transactions," as well as to those of the Antiquarian Society. After his death his remains were honoured with a place in Westminster Abbey.

Born near Chudleigh, Devonshire, 1742; died 1830.

RENNES, ren, a town of France, capital of the department Ille-and-Vilaine, and formerly the capital of Bretagne, situate at the confluence of the Ille-and-Vilaine, the latter dividing the town into two parts, connected together by bridges. The one on the left bank is called the Lower and that on the right the Upper town, which stands on an eminence, and forms the finest and most considerable portion of the city. It has several fine squares, and the principal promenades are called the Cours and the Thabor. The public edifices are, the modern cathedral, in the Grecian style; the palace of justice, the town hall, and the lyceum. The town is a great railway centre, and favourably situated for river and canal navigation. Manf. Sailcloth, thread, lace, and earthenware. Pop. 61,000.

RENNIE, JOHN, ren'-ne, a civil engineer, who was the son of a farmer of East Lothian, Scotland, and from his earliest youth had a great inclination for the study of what is termed "mechanical drawing." He also studied chemistry and mechanics under Drs. Black and Robison at Edinburgh, and, after working during sometime as an operative mechanist, went to Birmingham in 1780, and obtained employment in the famous firm of Boulton and Watt, who in 1789 employed him to superintend some extensive engineering operations in London, and at a later period he became engaged in designing and erecting public works. He built bridges at Kelso and other places, and afterwards constructed the Waterloo bridge over the Thames, and the Southwark iron bridge, over the same river. The Grand Western Canal, from the mouth of the Exe to Taunton; the Aberdeen Canal, and the Kennet and Avon Canal, were his best works in inland navigation. He was no less distinguished as a designer of docks; London Docks, the East and West India Docks, and those of Greenock, Leith, Hull, and Liverpool, attesting to his great acquirements as a civil engineer. The designs for London Bridge were made by him, but were carried to completion by his son, after his death. He likewise furnished plans for the improvement of the dockyards at Portsmouth, Plymouth, Chatham, and Pembroke; erected the pier at Holyhead, and designed the enlargements of the harbours of Berwick, Newhaven, &c.; and erected the famous Plymouth Breakwater. He was of remarkable stature and strength of body. His remains were interred in St. Paul's cathedral.

Born at Phantassie, Scotland, 1761; died in London, 1821.

RENNIE, GEORGE, civil engineer, and eldest son of the preceding. After completing his scholastic education at the Edinburgh university, he became an assistant to his father in the execution of the great works on which he was employed until his death. In 1818 he was appointed superintendent of the machinery at the Mint, and in 1821 he entered into partnership with his brother John, a civil engineer and manufacturer of machinery. He designed, improved, or extended many great engineering works in the United Kingdom and abroad. In Russia he carried out many works of the greatest magnitude, including bridges, harbours, dockyards, and many of the great naval works at Sebastopol, Cronstadt, Odessa, and other places, either in conjunction with his younger brother, Sir John Rennie, or, after the dissolution of their partnership, alone. The firm over which he and his brother presided also constructed engines for the vessels of the French, Russian, Spanish, and Belgian governments. He wrote several important works on subjects connected with his profession, the most important of which were, "Experiments on the Strength of Materials," and on "The Frictions of Solids."

Born in Surrey, 1791; died 1866.

RENNIE, SIR JOHN, younger brother of the preceding. He completed London Bridge, and was knighted at the opening.

Died 1874.

RENTON, ren'-ton, a town of Dumbartonshire, Scotland, on the right bank of the Leven, 2 miles N. of Dumbarton. There are large cotton-printing, dyeing, and bleaching works. Pop. 3,100.—A station on the North-Eastern Railway.

REQUENA, rai-kai'-na, a town of Spain, province of Cuença, 41 miles from Valencia. Manf. Silk, woollen, and cotton fabrics. Pop. 13,537.

REQUISTA, re-kees'-ta, a town of France, in the department of Aveyron, 22 miles from Rhodez. Pop. 4,500.

RESHD, reshd, the capital of Ghilan, in Persia, in the Bay of Enzelli, on the south-western shore of the Caspian Sea. It is a busy commercial town, with many large bazaars, shops, and warehouses, and a considerable trade is carried on. The port is Enzelli, 18 miles distant. Manf. Embroideries. Pop. 30,000.

RESINA, rai-se'-na, a town of Italy, province of Napoli, built partly on the site of the ancient Herculaneum, and facing the sea. It is much resorted to by the inhabitants of Naples, on account of its salubrity, and is the starting-point for ascents of Vesuvius. Pop. 15,528.

RESTIGOUCHE, res'-te-goo-shai', a river of New Brunswick, dominion of Canada, forming for about 50 miles the boundary between that province and the province of Quebec. After a course of 200 miles it falls into Chaleur Bay, which opens into the Gulf of St. Lawrence.

RETFORD, EAST, ret'-ford, a market town, municipal and parliamentary borough of Nottinghamshire, on the right bank of the Idle, 30 miles N. of Nottingham. On the opposite side of the river, connected by a bridge, is the small town of West Retford. Pop. 9,748.—A station on the Great Northern, Midland and Manchester, Sheffield and Lincolnshire railways.

RETHEL, rai'-tel, a town of France, department Ardennes, on the right bank of the Aisne, 24 miles from Rheims. Manf. Woollens, cottons, flannel, merino, leather, and iron. Pop. 6,800.

RETHEL, ALFRED, a celebrated German painter, whose genius for art was evinced at an early age; as, in his 15th year he produced a series of crayon drawings, the composition, truthfulness of outline, and correct expression of which were very remarkable. His first large subject in oil was entitled, "The Establishment of Christianity in Gaul," in which was displayed rare originality and vigour of treatment. He subsequently produced a series of frescoes, which are admitted to rank among the chefs d'œuvre of German art. At a later period he took up his residence at Rome, where he devoted himself to the composition of a series of paintings illustrative of the campaigns of Hannibal. Not less remarkable for vigour of imagination and power of design, were his book illustrations.

Born at Aix-la-Chapelle, 1816; died at Dusseldorf, 1859.

RETIMO, ret'-i-mo, a seaport-town of European Turkey, on the north coast of the island of Candia, or Crete. It is well built and defended by a citadel. The port is now of little use, being choked up with sand. Pop. 10,000.

RETZ, JEAN FRANÇOIS PAUL DE GONDY, Cardinal de, retz. He was descended from a powerful and wealthy family, and was educated for the church, a profession little suited to his unscrupulous and debauched disposition. In 1643 he was named coadjutor of the archbishop of Paris, his uncle; but, while he was soliciting the highest dignities in the church, he fought several duels. In the civil wars of the Fronde he raised a regiment, to which he gave the name of Corinth, because he was titular archbishop of that place. At length he made peace with the court, on condition of his being created a cardinal; but he still continued to cabal against the government, for which he was imprisoned at Vincennes and Nantes. He made his escape from the last place, and travelled in several countries. In 1661 he returned to France, and obtained his pardon and the abbey of St. Denis. This turbulent prelate wrote Memoirs of his own life, and the "History of the Conspiracy of Count Fiesco."

Born at Montmirail, 1614; died at Paris, 1679.

RETZSCH, FRIEDRICH AUGUST MORITZ, raitch, a German painter and engraver, who, after studying at the Dresden Academy, became, in 1824, professor of painting in the same institution. It was not as a painter, however, but as a designer that he became famous. His etchings in outline, illustrative of Göthe and Shakspeare, are works of great beauty and power, and became as popular in England, as in the native country of the artist. He also produced a set of illustrations to Bürger's "Lenora," to several of the poems of Schiller, and to the "Undine" and "Sintram" of Fouqué.

Born at Dresden, 1779; died 1857.

REUCHLIN, JOHANN, roik'-lin, a learned German writer, frequently styled Capnio, who acquired a profound knowledge of the Latin, Greek, and Hebrew languages. After pursuing his studies in France and Germany, he resided at Tubingen, as a teacher of jurisprudence and literature. In 1492 he was raised to the rank of a count of the German empire. He was employed in state matters by some of the German princes. He excited the enmity of the Dominicans and the Inquisition by his advocacy of the principles of toleration, and supported the position assumed by Luther. In 1520 he was appointed professor at the university of Ingoldstadt. He wrote extensively upon the Hebrew language.

Born at Pforzheim, 1455; died at Stuttgart, 1522.

RÉUNION, ILE DE LA. (See BOURBON.)

REUS, rai'-oos, a town of Spain, province of Tarragona, 8 miles W. of the city of that name. The older part was founded in the 12th century, but the modern portion has good streets and open places. Manf. Silk, cottons, leather, hats, soap, earthenware, brandy, and liqueurs. Pop. 27,595.

REUSS, rois, a river of Switzerland, rising in Lake Luzendro, Mount St. Gothard, and three small torrents, which unite in the valley of Ursern, canton Uri. It passes through the Lake of Lucerne, and ultimately joins the Aar, on the right bank. The total length of the course is about 100 miles, and in the upper part are many magnificent cascades.

REUSS-GREIZ, rois-grits', a principality of the German empire, between the kingdom of Saxony and the Prussian province of Saxony. The surface is hilly, being traversed by the Frankenwald, more than 2,000 feet high, and the valleys fertile and well cultivated. There are extensive forests and pastures, and cattle and timber are exported. The chief rivers are the Saale and the Elster. The capital is Greiz, or GREZ.

Pop.—53,000. nearly all Protestants.
Constitution and History.—There are a reigning prince and a legislative body of 12 members, 3 of whom are nominated by the prince, and 2 by the nobility. The family of Reuss traces its descent from Henry the Fowler (Heinrich I.), who died 936. Since the 11th century the heads of the house have always been called Heinrich, but in 1701 it was settled that the succeeding princes should not adopt a higher number than 100, but begin again at 1. The present prince is Heinrich XXII. In 1616 the possessions of the family were divided, the younger branch taking the larger portion, REUSS-SCHLEIZ.

REUSS-SCHLEIZ, separated from Reuss-Greiz by a portion of the grand duchy of Saxe-Weimar. The physical characteristics are similar to those of the other principality.

Pop.—108,000. Protestants.
Constitution.—There is a reigning prince, aided by a cabinet of three members, with a diet of 19 members, of whom 4 are elected by the chief landowners and 15 by the inhabitants in general. All the princes of the house bear the name of Heinrich, and the numbers attached to their names begin and end in each century. The late prince, born in 1789, was Heinrich LXVII., being the 67th prince of the house born in the 18th century, and the present ruler is Heinrich XIV., being the 14th born in the 19th century.

REUTER, FRITZ, roit'-er, German novelist and humorist, who has been styled the German Dickens. He studied law at Rostock and Jena. Having taken part in the movement for bringing about the unity of Germany, he was prosecuted by the Prussian government, convicted of conspiracy and sentenced to death, a sentence commuted to 30 years' imprisonment in a fortress. After seven years' confinement, he was liberated on the accession of Frederick William IV. A volume of tales and poems, written in the Low German dialect brought him into repute, and in 1863, he settled at Eisenach, and published several stories, remarkable for humorous and descriptive power.

Born in Mecklenburg-Schwerin, 1810; died at Eisenach, 1874.

REUTLINGEN, roit'-ling-en, a town of Würtemberg, on the Echatz, 20 miles S. of Stuttgart. The town was formerly fortified, but the site of the walls and moats is now occupied by streets. The church of St. Mary, built in the 14th century, has a very beautiful tower 325 feet high. Manf. Woollen, linen, and cotton stuffs, hosiery, leather, and cutlery. Pop. 16,609.

REVEL, rev'-el, a strongly-fortified seaport-town of European Russia, capital of the Baltic province of Esthonia, on a small bay of the Gulf of Finland, 240 miles S.W. of St. Petersburg. The upper or Dom town occupies the summit of a rocky ridge, is enclosed by old Gothic walls, and contains the cathedral, castle, official buildings, and the houses of the nobility. The lower town is at the foot of the ridge and extends to the harbour. There is an export trade in flax, linseed, skins, and grain. The town as a watering-place is much frequented. Pop. 50,488. Lat. 59° 26′ 5″ N. Lon. 24° 45′ 2″ E.—This town was founded by Valdemar II., king of Denmark, in 1218, and afterwards sold to the Lithuanian Knights. In 1710 it was taken from Sweden by the Russians, who in 1854 destroyed its roadsteads by sinking large blocks of stone to prevent the entrance of the Anglo-French fleet, whilst blockading the Russian ports in the Baltic during the same year. It was at one time the great emporium of the Hanseatic League for the trade with Novgorod.

REVEL, a town of France, department Haute-Garonne, 30 miles S.E. of Toulouse. Manf. Linen, woollens, stockings, and liqueurs. Pop. 6,000.

REVELLO, rai-vail'-lo, a town of northern Italy, on the left bank of the Po, 6 miles N.W. of Saluzzo. There are two ancient churches. Pop. 5,200.

REVERE, re-vair'-ai, a town of Italy, province of Venetia, on the Po, 16 miles S.E. of Mantua. Pop. 3,500.

REVILLA-GIGEDO ISLANDS, rai-veel'-la-gig-e'-do, a group of islands on the coast of North-west America. They are of volcanic formation. Lat. 18° 43′—20° N. Lon. 111° W.

REWA KANTHA, a protected state of India, under Bombay. It consists chiefly of an elevated table-land, with tracts of jungle. It is governed by a rajah in alliance with the British government. Area, 4,792 square miles. Pop. 543,452.

REWA, capital of the above state, 69 miles S.W. of Allahabad. It is enclosed by a double wall, the outer one of massive architecture and flanked by round towers. There is a fortified palace in a dilapidated condition, and the town generally presents a decayed appearance. Pop. 22,016.

REYNIER, JEAN LOUIS, rai'-ne-ai, a Swiss, who entered the corps of engineers of the French army, and rose by his skill and valour to great distinction in the Egyptian and Italian campaigns. He was subsequently minister of war at Naples, and fought at Wagram, in Spain, and in Russia, but was taken prisoner at Leipsic in 1813. Recovering his liberty, he repaired to Paris, where he resided until his death. He left some works upon Egyptian antiquities, &c.

Born at Lausanne, 1771; died at Paris, 1814.

REYNIER, JEAN LOUIS ANTOINE, was brother of the preceding, and became a government official under Murat at Naples. He wrote, among other works, "Public and Rural Economy of the Ancient Peoples," and "Egypt under the Romans."

Born 1762; died 1824.

REYNOLDS, SIR JOSHUA, ren'-olds, an English painter, and first president of the Royal Academy. He was the son of the rector of Plympton, Devonshire, and was intended for the profession of medicine; but having a great taste for drawing, he resolved to make painting his profession, and accordingly was placed, in his 18th year, under Hudson, the portrait-painter, and two years afterwards started as a portrait-painter at Plymouth Dock (now Devonport), and afterwards in St. Martin's Lane, London. In 1749 he went to Italy, on board the vessel of the Honourable Mr. Keppel, his early friend and patron. After studying the works of the most illustrious masters at Rome during two years, he returned to London. He did not confine himself to portraits, but painted several historical pictures of high and acknowledged merit. When the Royal Academy was founded, in 1769, he was appointed president, which station he held till 1791, when he resigned it. He was also appointed principal painter to the king, and knighted. His literary merits, and other accomplishments, procured him the friendship of the most distinguished men of his time, particularly Johnson, Burke, Goldsmith, and Garrick; and Sir Joshua had the honour of instituting the celebrated literary club of which they were members. He was a member of the Royal and Antiquarian Societies; and was created doctor of laws by the universities of Oxford and Dublin. Sir Joshua's academical discourses on painting display the soundest judgment, the most refined taste, a perfect acquaintance with the works of the greatest masters, and are written in a clear and elegant style. After his death he lay in state at the Royal Academy, and was buried in the crypt of St. Paul's cathedral.

Born at Plympton, Devonshire, 1723; died in London, 1792.

REZENDE, rai-zan'-de, a town of Brazil, on a height near the right bank of the Parahiba, 100 miles N.W. of Rio de Janeiro. Sugar-cane, coffee, rice, and tobacco are cultivated in the district. Pop. 5,000.

RHADAMANTHUS, rad'-a-man'-thus, in Greek and Roman mythology, a son of Jupiter and Europa, was born in Crete, which he left about the 30th year of his age. He passed into some of the Cyclades, where he reigned with so much justice, that the ancients declared he became one of the judges of Hades, and that he was employed in the infernal regions in obliging the dead to confess their crimes, and in punishing them for their offences.

RHAZES, ra'-ses, an Arabian physician of great learning, who wrote more than two hundred works upon medicine. His treatise upon small-pox and measles is the most ancient account of those disorders extant.

Died at Bagdad, about 932.

RHEA, re'-a, a county of Tennessee, United States. Pop. 6,000.

RHEIMS, rai(r)ns, an ancient city of France, department Marne, on the Vesle, in a fine plain, 25 miles from Châlons. The ramparts of the old fortifications are planted with trees, and form an agreeable promenade. The most remarkable public building is the cathedral, a vast Gothic edifice of the 13th century, and one of the finest specimens of that kind of architecture in France. The nave is 466 feet long, and 99 feet wide; the transept 160 feet long, and 144 feet high; the western front and "angel tower" are of great beauty. The older church of St. Remy is also worth notice for its architecture. The Porte de Mars, a Roman triumphal arch, has been restored. Manf. Woollen and mixed woollen and silk goods, merinoes and hosiery. Pop. 93,823.—Clovis was baptized here after the battle of Tolbiac, in 496. In 1179 Philip Augustus was here consecrated, and all his successors till the revolution of 1830, with the exception of Henry IV., Napoleon I., and Louis XVIII. Many councils have been held here; and before the revolution of 1793, Rheims had a celebrated university.

RHEINE, rine-e(r), a town of Prussia, province of Westphalia, on the left bank of the Ems, 23 miles N.W. of Münster. There are a castle, five churches, and an old monastery. Manf. Woollens, linen, and leather. Pop. 3,600.

RHEINLAND, or RHENISH PRUSSIA. (See RHINE PROVINCE.)

RHENANUS, BEATUS, re-nai'-nus, a German critic, who was at first corrector of the press for Frobedius, and by that means formed an intimacy with Erasmus. He wrote a "History of Germany," edited Velleius Paterculus, and translated many works from the Greek and Latin.

Born at Schlelestadt, Alsace, 1485; died at Strasburg, 1547.

RHENEN, or RHEENEN, a town of the Netherlands, province of Utrecht, on the right bank of the Rhine, 21 miles S.E. of Utrecht. Pop. 4,200.

RHEYDT, rait, a town of Prussia, Rhine province, on the Niers. There are a castle and two churches. Manf. Cotton, silk, velvet, mixed silk goods, soap, glue, vinegar, and leather. Pop. 19,087.

RHINE (German RHEIN), rine, the most important river of Germany, and one of the most famous of Europe, takes its rise in three main streams in the Swiss canton of the Grisons—the Vorder, Mittel, and Hinter Rhine. The Vorder (front) Rhine, the most easterly, rising in a glacier of the Ober Alp, 9,967 feet above the sea level, may be considered as the real, because the most distant source of the river. It is augmented by three branches, and at Dissentis, 12 miles from the source, is joined by the Mittel (middle) Rhine, which issues from lake Skur, and the united streams, taking an eastward direction, are joined at Reichenau by the Hinter (back) Rhine, which issues from a glacier on Mount Adela, on the Vogelberg. At Reichenau, the river is 2,021 feet above the sea level, about 140 feet wide, and at that point first receives the general name of the Rhine. It becomes navigable for rafts and flat boats at Coire, and on quitting the Grisons forms the boundary between the principality of Lichtenstein and the Vorarlberg, on the right, and the canton of St. Gall on the left, and flowing northward enters, at Rheineck, the Boden See (Lake of Constance), which is really an expansion of the river augmented by the confluence of numerous streams. At Constance it is 1,335 feet above the sea level. It then passes through the Unter See (lower lake), and, taking a westerly course, separates Switzerland from the grand duchy of Baden. About 13 miles below the Unter See are the famous falls of Schaffhausen, where the river rushes over a rock 70 feet high, and lower down are rapids, caused by a narrowing of the channel. Between Schaffhausen and Bale (Basel) are the falls of Laufenberg, Zurzach, and Rheinfelden. The river receives on the right bank, the Wutach and the Alb, streams rising in the Black Forest; and on the left the Goldach, Thur, Thöss, Glatt, and Aar. At Bale the Rhine, 750 feet wide, and 770 feet above the sea level, takes a sharp turn to the north, separating Alsace-Lorraine from Baden, forms the eastern boundary of Bavaria, and separates the grand duchy of Hesse from Nassau. On the right bank is Mannheim, and on the left Neu Breibach, Strasburg, Speyer, Worms, and Mayence (Mentz). In this part of the course the river is studded with innumerable islands, and flows through a wide valley, the limits of which are the Vosges on the west, and the heights of the Black Forest on the east, receiving from France the Ill and several smaller streams; from Baden, the Wiese, Elz, Kinzig, Pfinz, Neckar, and other rivers; and from Bavaria the Lauter and Queich. Between Mayence and Bonn is the most picturesque part of the river. At the former town, it takes a bend westward to Bingen, and then resumes its northern course, generally between steep banks, with castellated ruins, and vine-terraced hills. The principal points of interest to the tourist are Rheinstein Castle, restored, and one of the residences of the prince of Prussia; the fort of Pfalz (Palatinate), Schönberg Castle (traditionally the residence of seven beautiful sisters who were transformed into stone), the Gothic Liebfrauenkirche; the Lurlei-Felsen, where dwelt the siren Lurlei, or Loreley, and where there is a remarkable echo; Liebenstein and Sternberg Castle, "the Brothers;" the old strong fortress of Marksburg; the Stolzenfels, or "proud rock," an old castle, restored by the king of Prussia; Ehrenbreitstein, the castle built by Charlemagne's nephew, Roland, on his return from the Crusades, and the convent of Nonnewörth, on the adjacent island; and "the castled crag of Drachenfels," or dragon's rock, the loftiest of the Seven Mountains, 1,050 feet high. The Moselle joins the Rhine, on the left bank, at Coblenz, and the Ahr, also on the left bank, opposite Linz. Beyond Bonn, the river flows with many windings to Cologne, where it is only 121 feet above the sea level. From here to the mouths the Rhine flows through a level country, entering the Netherlands, province of Gelderland, and shortly afterwards divides into two branches, the left, known as the Waal, carrying off two-thirds of the water, and uniting with the Maas; the right, retaining the name of the Rhine, divides, before reaching Arnhem, into two branches, that to the right being known as the New Yssel, and the other, the Rhine proper, again dividing at Wykbij-Duurstede, one branch, the Kromme (crooked) Rhine, a small stream flowing past Utrecht, the other, the Lek, or Lech, uniting with the Maas, and entering the North Sea at Rotterdam. The delta formed by the many channels through which the two rivers discharge has an area of nearly 50,000 square miles, the land being protected from inundation by strong embankments. The length of the Rhine, including its windings, is nearly 800 miles, and the area drained by the river and its various feeders (of which 12,210 have been counted), is not less than 80,000 square miles. There is canal communication with the Danube; Rhône, Saône, Meuse and Scheldt. From its source to Bâle, the river is generally known as the Upper Rhine; from Bâle to Cologne as the Middle Rhine; and from Cologne to the sea as the Lower Rhine.

RHIN-BAS and RHIN-HAUT, formerly provinces of France, since 1871 included in the German state of Alsace-Lorraine. (See FRANCE.)

RHINE PROVINCE, RHEINLAND, or RHEINISH PRUSSIA, the most western of the provinces of Prussia, on both banks of the Rhine, and bounded W. by Belgium and the Netherlands. The surface is generally mountainous, being traversed by the Hundsrück, the Eifelgebirge, and branches of the Westerwald ranges, except in the north, but the valleys of the Rhine, Moselle, and other rivers are very fertile. In the northern districts considerable quantities of grain are raised.

Minerals.—Lead, copper, zinc, and coal. The sulphur springs have a great reputation.

Area.—10,289 square miles.

Pop. 4,074,000.

Divisions and Chief Towns.—There are 5 districts, Köln (Cologne), Düsseldorf, Coblenz, Trier, and Aachen. The chief towns are AIX, COLOGNE, COBLENZ, DÜSSELDORF, KREFELD, and WUPPERTHAL.

History.—The province was annexed to Prussia by the treaty of Vienna, in 1815. It includes the former duchies of Cleves, Geldern, and Berg; the principalities of Mörs and Lichtenberg, part of the former archbishopric of Cologne, and some districts formerly included in French territory.

RHIO. (See RIOUW.)

RHODE ISLAND, rode, one of the New England states of the United States, and the smallest in the union, bounded N. and E. by Massachusetts, S. by the Atlantic and W. by Connecticut. On the south-eastern side is NARRAGANSETT BAY. The surface of the state is generally hilly. The climate is mild, and on the islands of the bay delightful. The soil is generally better adapted for grazing than tillage. Here are found some of the finest cattle in New England; and corn, rye, barley, oats, and, in some places, wheat, are produced. There are numerous dairies, and the butter and cheese are of an excellent quality. Fruit thrives, especially the apple, of which more cider is made than is required for home consumption. The shores and rivers abound with fish.

Rivers.—The Pawtucket, Parocatuch, and others falling into Narragansett Bay, and affording valuable water power.

Minerals.—Iron, limestone, marble, and inferior coal.

Area.—1,306 square miles.

Pop.—277,000, about 5,000 being coloured. In respect of population it is the highest in proportion to size.

Divisions and Chief Towns.—There are 5 counties. The chief towns are PROVIDENCE and NEWPORT, the two capitals; Bristol, Pawtucket, Lincoln, Warren, and Woonsocket.

History.—This portion of America is supposed to have been the Vorland of the Norsemen (See AMERICA). It was settled in 1636 by Roger Williams (See WILLIAMS).

RHODE ISLAND, the island from which the above state takes its name, is situate in Narragansett Bay. It is 15 miles long, with a breadth of nearly 4 miles. The chief town is NEWPORT. Lat. 41° 25′ N. Lon. 71° 20′ W.

RHODES, rodes, an island of Asiatic Turkey in the Mediterranean, about 12 miles from the south-west coast of Asia Minor. It is 45 miles long, with a breadth of 20 at its widest part, and mountainous, being traversed by a range on which grow those forests of pine which supplied the ancient navies of the Rhodians, and are still in great demand for shipbuilding. The greatest elevations are Mount Artamiti, 6,000 feet, and Mount Artemira, 4,070 feet. Beneath this range rises a tract of lower hills, on which is raised the vine, which produces the perfumed wine so much prized by the ancients. The tract beneath, forming the greater portion of the island, slopes gradually down to the sea, and being watered by numerous streams, is capable of producing the most luxuriant crops. A great part of the island is left entirely waste, but the natural fertility of the soil is productive in corn, olives, pomegranates, lemons, wine, wax, honey, and figs. The climate is temperate and delightful.

Pop.—34,000, including about 7,000 Turks and 2,000 Jews, the remainder being Greeks.

History.—In ancient times Rhodes (Rhodos) was one of the most celebrated of the states of Greece, and distinguished, above all others, by its wealth, commerce, and naval power. It was among the last which yielded to the Roman arms, and was allowed even to enjoy the forms of liberty till the reign of Vespasian. In the Middle Ages the island became one of the latest retreats of the Knights of St. John of Jerusalem, who baffled the efforts of Mahomet II., the conqueror of Constantinople, and were not reduced by Solyman the Great till after one of the most memorable sieges recorded in history.

RHODES, a city and capital of the above island, standing at its north-eastern extremity. The streets are narrow and winding, devoid at once of regularity and elegance. A great explosion of powder, caused by a flash of lightning, in 1856, destroyed the old church of St. John, the chief public buildings, and about 1,000 houses, and by an earthquake, in 1863, 2,000 more houses were destroyed. The palace of the grand master is in ruins, and the hospital of the knights is used as a granary. There are numerous mosques. The suburbs, occupied by the Greek inhabitants, are very beautiful, consisting of good stone houses, with gardens well stocked with all the fruits of the climate. Rhodes has two good harbours, separated only by a mole, running obliquely out into the sea. The two extremities are defended by towers, distant 800 feet from each other, while, in the centre of the mole, there is a square tower 120 feet high. Pop. about 20,000.

History.—This is one of the most splendid and renowned cities of antiquity. Here stood the famous Colossus, a statue of Helios, in bronze, 70 cubits (105 feet) high, reckoned one of the seven wonders of the world. Rhodes was conquered by Alexander, but after his death the Macedonians were expelled. In 42 B.C. Cassius entered the city by force, seized the public property, and rifled the temple. It was for several centuries subject to the Greek emperors. The Knights of St. John of Jerusalem settled here in 1310; and in 1522 it capitulated to the Turks under Solyman the Magnificent, and it has since continued to be a part of the Turkish empire.

RHÔNE, rone, a river in the south of Europe, rising in the Rhône Glacier, Switzerland, on the western side of Mount St. Gothard, only 5 miles from the sources of the Rhine, and at a height of 5,500 feet. It flows in a western direction through a long and wide valley of the Swiss canton of Valais, and after being swelled by a variety of mountain streams, it passes through the Lake of Geneva. Flowing southwards it passes through a rocky gorge of the Jura, where it has a subterranean course of 300 feet. It then flows in a southern direction, dividing, near Beaucaire, into two branches, including the delta known as the Ile de la Camargue, and discharging, after a course of nearly 650 miles, into the part of the Mediterranean called the Gulf of Lyons. Its basin has an area of 30,000 square miles. The principal affluents are, on the right bank, the Ain, Saône, Doubs, Ardèche, and Gard: and on the left bank, the Arve, Isère, Drôme, and Durance. For its length, the Rhône is probably the most rapid river in the world. The mouths are impeded by shifting sandbanks, and communication with the Mediterranean is chiefly effected by means of canals; and by other canals the river is connected with the Seine, Loire, and Rhine.

RHÔNE, a department in the south-east of France, bounded by the departments of the Saône-et-Loire, the Ain, the Isère, and the Loire. It is almost covered by those ranges which connect the Cevennes and the Vosges, and have the summits of Mont d'Or and Pilat. The chief productions are corn and wine, some of which is excellent, especially the Macon and Rhône wines.

Area.—1,077 square miles.
Pop. 741,470.
Divisions and Chief Towns.—There are 2 arrondissements and 264 communes. LYONS (the capital) and VILLEFRANCHE are the chief towns.

RHÔNE, BOUCHES DU. (See BOUCHES-DU-RHÔNE.)

RIAD, or ABRUAD, ri-ad', a town of Central Arabia, capital of NJED, 470 miles N.E. of Mecca. It is divided into four quarters, the north-eastern being the residence of the richer inhabitants. The south-western quarter, openly built, is the chief residence of the members of the Wahabee sect. The town is surrounded by strong walls from 20 to 30 feet high. Pop. 40,000.

RIAZAN, ri-a-zan', a government of European Russia, S.W. of the government of Moscow. The river Oka divides it into two unequal parts, the northern being low and sandy, and the southern elevated and fertile. Grain and vegetables are cultivated, and manufactured goods and corn are exported. Minerals. Iron and limestone. Area, 16,254 square miles. Pop. 1,713,581.

RIAZAN, capital of the above government, on a branch of the Oka, near its junction with that river, 130 miles S.E. of Moscow. There is an ancient fort, the Kreml. Manf. Cloth, linen, and ironware. A large quantity of corn is exported. Pop. 18,000. The town was founded in 1208.

RIBAULT, JEAN, ri'-bolt, a French navigator, native of Dieppe, a Protestant, who, in 1562, discovered Florida, and, sailing along the coast, made a small settlement in South Carolina. He returned to France, and, in 1565, made another expedition, but a Spanish squadron arrived, drove him out, and, after many adventures, he and his followers were massacred by the Spaniards because they were Protestants.
Died in Florida, 1565.

RIBE, or RIPEN, reeb, a town of Prussia, province of Schleswig-Holstein, on the Ribe, or Rips-aue, 45 miles N.W. of Flensborg. There is a large cathedral, built in the 12th century, containing the tombs of several Danish kings. The harbour, once good, is now so shallow that it is nearly useless. A strong castle, built in the 12th century, is near the town. Pop. 3,600.

RIBEAUVILLE, re-bo-veel, a town of the German province of Alsace-Lorraine, 34 miles S.W. of Strasburg, at the foot of the Vosges mountains. Manf. Cotton goods. Excellent wines are made. Pop. 6,300.

RIBERA, ANASTASIUS-PANTALEON DE, ri'-bai-ra, a Spanish poet, called the Scarron of Spain. On account of his wit, he was entertained at the court of Philip IV. His poems, printed at Saragossa in 1640, are of the burlesque kind.
Born at Madrid, 1586; died 1660.

RIBERA, JOSE. (See SPAGNOLETTO.)

RIBNITZ, rib'-nitz, a town of the grand duchy of Mecklenberg-Schwerin, on a lake communicating with the Baltic, 15 miles N.E. of Rostock. Pop. 4,300.

RICARDO, DAVID, re-kar'-do, an English writer upon political economy, who was educated for a commercial career by his father, a member of the London Stock Exchange, and of Jewish descent. Young Ricardo became a Christian, and having acquired a large fortune, in 1819 entered the House of Commons, where he distinguished himself in the debates upon subjects of finance. As a writer his fame mainly depends upon his work entitled "The Principles of Political Economy and Taxation;" but he likewise made several important contributions to political economy in other works.
Born in London, 1772; died at Gatcomb Park, Gloucestershire, 1823.

RICASOLI, BETTINO, Baron, re-ka-so'-le, Italian statesman, descended from an ancient Tuscan family. He studied at Pisa and Florence, and for some years lived as a country gentleman, giving great attention to agriculture and the cultivation of the vine, olive, and mulberry. In 1847 he began to take an active part in politics as a liberal constitutionalist, and as one of those who recalled the grand duke of Tuscany after his flight, hoping that he would fulfil the promises he had made to govern constitutionally; but Ricasoli was bitterly disappointed, and retired to his estates for ten years, giving especial attention to the drainage of the Tuscan marshes. On the breaking out of the war of independence in 1859, and the flight of the grand duke, Ricasoli was made dictator. In 1861, on the death of Cavour, he was selected by the king of Italy to form a monastery, but he held office for only a year, but returned to power for a short time in 1866.

Born at Florence, 1809; died at Broglio, 1880.

RICAUT, or RYCAUT, SIR PAUL, rĭ-kaut, an English writer and diplomatist, who, in 1661, became secretary to the earl of Winchilsea, ambassador to Constantinople, and, while there, wrote "The Present State of the Ottoman Empire," published in London, 1670. He was subsequently consul at Smyrna during eleven years; and, in 1685, he became secretary for the provinces of Leinster and Connaught, in Ireland. King William appointed him his resident for the Hanse towns, where he remained ten years. His other works were,—"A Continuation of Knolles's History of the Turks;" "A Continuation of Platina's Lives of the Popes;" "A translation of Vega's Royal Commentaries of Peru."

Born in London, about 1625; died in London, 1700.

RICCI, MATTEO, rĭt'-che, an Italian Jesuit, who, previous to entering the order, studied law at Rome. He went as missionary to the East Indies, and having finished his studies at Macao, was sent to China, where, after much opposition, he at length, by his tact, and the publication of some moral treatises in the Chinese language, obtained the favour of the emperor, and was permitted to build a church at Pekin. He gained a great reputation as a teacher of mathematics and other sciences, and by his literary skill, and at length, through his exertions, missionary stations were established in several of the principal cities of China. Several of his letters and memoirs on China have been printed.

Born at Macerata, 1552; died at Pekin, 1610.

RICCI, or RIZZI, SEBASTIAN, an eminent Italian painter, who visited and painted at Vienna, Paris, and London, at all which places he acquired considerable distinction. He decorated the ceilings and staircases of several mansions of the English nobility, and painted a picture of the Ascension, in the cupola of Chelsea Hospital. The staircase of Montague House, afterwards the British Museum, was also painted by him. After residing in London during ten years, he quitted it when sir James Thornhill was appointed to paint the dome of St. Paul's Cathedral, a task which he deemed himself more qualified to perform.

Born in the Venetian state, 1659; died at Venice, 1734.

RICCIA, rĭt'-cha, a town of Italy, province of Campobasso, 14 miles S.E. of the town of that name. It has a collegiate church and several others, with sulphur springs in its neighbourhood. Pop. 7,600.

RICCIO, DAVID. (See RIZZIO.)

RICCIOLI, GIOVANNI BATTISTA, rĭt'-cho-le, an Italian Jesuit and astronomer, who became professor of divinity at Parma and Bologna; but is known chiefly by his mathematical works. He wrote treatises upon astronomy, geography, hydrography, and chronology.

Born at Ferrara, 1598; died 1671.

RICCOBONI, LUIGI, rĭt'-ko-bo-ne, an Italian actor and dramatic writer, who performed at the Italian theatre in Paris during some years; but, in 1729, renounced the stage, from religious scruples. He wrote several comedies, and a "Discourse of the Reformation of the Theatre;" observations on "Comedy" and on the "Genius of Molière;" "Historical Reflections on the Theatres of Europe," and a "History of the Italian Theatre."

Born at Modena, about 1674; died 1753.

RICE, rĭce, a county of Kansas, United States. Area, 900 square miles. Pop. 9,292.

RICE, a county of Minnesota, United States. Area, 575 square miles. Pop. 22,481. The capital is Faribault.

RICH, CLAUDIUS JAMES, rĭch, an eminent Oriental scholar, who was born in France, but was brought to England while an infant. By the time he had attained his 15th year, his remarkable talents for the acquisition of the Oriental languages enabled him to become versed in Arabic, Hebrew, Persian, Syriac, and Turkish. These acquirements gained for him, in 1803, the appointment of cadet in the service of the East India Company. Disguised as a mameluke, he travelled in Syria and Palestine, and, trusting to his knowledge of the manners of the country, entered the grand mosque at Damascus, with the pilgrims who were proceeding to Mecca. In 1807 he returned to Bombay, where he took up his residence at the house of sir James Mackintosh, whose daughter he married. In 1808 he proceeded to Bagdad, as resident of the East India Company. While holding that post, he made a valuable collection of manuscripts, gems, and coins, found at Nineveh, Bagdad, and Babylon; and also amassed the materials for his "Memoir on the Ruins of Babylon," which was published first at Vienna, and subsequently in England. In 1813 he was compelled, by the state of his health to leave Bagdad; and he proceeded to Paris, stopping at Constantinople on his way; but he returned to his duties in 1815. He was awaiting instructions at Shiraz from Bombay, in which presidency he had received an appointment, when his death took place. His most important works were, "Second Memoir on Babylon," and "Narrative of a Residence in Koordistan." His collection of coins, manuscripts, &c., was purchased from his widow for the British Museum.

Born near Dijon, 1787; died at Shiraz, 1821.

RICHARD I., rĭch'-ard, king of England, surnamed Cœur de Lion, ascended the throne on the death of his father, Henry II., in 1189. He had previously been engaged with his mother and brother in a rebellion against the king, and afterwards sided with Philip, king of France, against his father. His reign commenced with a fearful riot, and massacre of the Jews. In 1190, Richard joined the crusade with Philip-Augustus of France; but a division taking place between the two kings, the latter departed from Palestine. Richard remained in the East, where he displayed the most impetuous valour against Saladin, whom he defeated near Cæsarea; and having made a truce, embarked in a vessel, which was shipwrecked on the coast of Italy. He then travelled in disguise through part of Germany; but being discovered by his enemy Leopold, duke of Austria, he was made prisoner, and sent to the emperor Henry VI., who kept him confined in a castle in the Tyrol, bound with chains. At length he was ransomed by his subjects for 100,000 marks, and landed at Sandwich in 1194, after which he was crowned a second time. Philip-Augustus having, contrary to treaty, seized on part of Normandy, Richard invaded France with a large army; but a peace was concluded in 1196.

The war was renewed in 1199, and Richard, in besieging the castle of Chalus, in Aquitaine, received a wound from an arrow, of which he died. He was the greatest military hero of his age, and his prowess and great strength have made him a favourite hero of poetry and romance.

Born at Oxford, 1157; died 1199.

RICHARD II. was the second son of Edward, prince of Wales, commonly called the Black Prince, and Joanna of Kent, and succeeded Edward III., his grandfather, in 1377. In his minority he displayed remarkable promptitude in quelling the dangerous insurrection headed by Wat the Tyler, in Smithfield. When, however, the revolt was suppressed, no grievances were redressed, but, instead, more than 1,500 people were executed on the scaffold. The remainder of Richard's reign was unfortunate. Discontents prevailed among the nobility, of which Henry, duke of Lancaster, availed himself, and assumed the title of king. (See HENRY IV.) Richard was betrayed into his hands by the earl of Northumberland, in 1399, taken to London, and confined in the Tower, where he abdicated the throne before the assembled magnates of the kingdom. He was afterwards confined secretly in a castle, the locality of which is uncertain. It was stated by the court that he died in Pontefract, or Pompret, castle, and it is popularly believed that he was murdered there, a supposition adopted by Shakspeare. It has also been asserted, but on unsatisfactory evidence, that he escaped to Scotland, where he lived many years, and was buried at Stirling.

Born at Bordeaux, 1367; died about 1400.

RICHARD III. was the brother of Edward IV. and created duke of Gloucester. On the defeat and death of his father, the duke of York, Richard and his brother George, afterwards duke of Clarence, were sent to Utrecht, where they remained for a short time under the protection of the duke of Burgundy. At the age of 19 he returned to England, and assisted his brother Edward against the earl of Warwick. At the battles of Barnet and Tewkesbury he displayed great courage and ability. It is stated that, after the latter battle, he murdered prince Edward, son of Henry VI., and certainly he married his widow, lady Anne Neville, daughter of the earl of Warwick. He caused his nephews, Edward V. and Richard, duke of York, to be secretly murdered in the Tower; after which he was himself proclaimed king in 1483, and was for some time a popular monarch. The duke of Buckingham, who had assisted him in his usurpation, subsequently conspired against him, but was taken prisoner and beheaded. Henry, earl of Richmond, afterwards Henry VII., of the house of Lancaster, was abroad, but returned privately and landed at Milford, in Wales, where he was joined by a few followers, who soon increased. He then marched against Richard III., whom he encountered at Bosworth Field, where the king was slain. The nuns of Leicester begged his body of the victors, and buried it in their chapel. The character of Richard III. has been most variously represented by different historians: Walpole declared that all the crimes attributed to him were mere fabrications. The Richard of Shakspeare, crooked-backed, hypocritical, cynical, cruel, and desperate, is a far more familiar figure than the Richard of authentic history. The deformity is possibly a fiction, contemporaries having described him as a handsome, well-made man. It is, however, certain that he was as unscrupulous as he was energetic and determined.

Born at Fotheringay Castle, Northamptonshire, 1452; killed 1485.

RICHARD PLANTAGENET, earl of Cornwall, titular king of the Romans, and emperor of Germany, was the second son of John, king of England. Clear-headed, calm, practical, and very wealthy, he exercised great influence in the country, and successfully opposed Hubert de Burgh, who for some time was the most powerful man in England. He was elected to his German titles in 1256, but resided only a short time in the country. At the battle of Lewes, in 1264, he was taken captive by De Montfort, and was imprisoned for a time in Kenilworth Castle. From his natural daughter Isabel, who became the wife of Maurice de Berkeley, the earls of Berkeley claim to be descended.

Born 1208; died at Berkhampstead, 1272.

RICHARD OF CIRENCESTER (Latin name, Ricardus Corinensis), known also as "the monk of Westminster," an old English historian; was a native of Cirencester, and became a monk of the Benedictine monastery of St. Peter, Westminster. He wrote upon Saxon and British history, and a "Description of Britain," in Latin, the manuscript of which was discovered at Copenhagen in 1747. The historian Gibbon declares that the author "shows a genuine knowledge of antiquity very extraordinary for a monk of the 14th century." By some critics the genuineness of the work has been doubted. His "Historia ab Hengista" commences with the arrival of the Saxons in Britain, and ends at the year 1348.

Died about 1402.

RICHARDSON, SIR JOHN, rich'-ard-son, an Arctic traveller, son of the provost of Dumfries, was, in 1801, sent to the university of Edinburgh, and afterwards entered the royal navy as assistant-surgeon, in which capacity he saw a considerable amount of service. In 1819 he was attached to the Arctic expedition under captain Franklin, as surgeon and naturalist, and again in 1825. After nearly two years of arduous service, he returned in 1827, and published an account of his services, in a narrative which was attached to the great work produced by captain Franklin. After distinguishing himself by his works on the zoology of the northern parts of British America, he became, in 1838, physician to the fleet, in 1840 inspector of hospitals, and in 1846 was created a knight. In 1847, no tidings having been obtained of the vessels which had been dispatched to the Arctic regions under sir John Franklin, three expeditions were sent out by the British government, the command of one of which was entrusted to sir John Richardson. He started from Montreal, in Canada, in April, 1848, and returned to the same place at the close of the following year. He published a narrative of his journey, containing a large amount of valuable information relative to the geology, the natural history, and the mode of life of the Indians and Esquimaux inhabiting the country through which the expedition passed. He was a member of many learned societies, and wrote extensively on the natural history of the Arctic regions.

Born at Dumfries, Scotland, 1787; died 1865.

RICHARDSON, SAMUEL, an English novelist. He was the son of a joiner at Derby, whose circumstances did not permit him to give the future author more than a very ordinary education; after which he was bound apprentice to Mr. Wilde, a printer in London. At the expiration of his time, he became foreman and corrector of the press in his master's establishment. At length he set up in business for himself, in Salisbury-square, Fleet-street, and married the daughter of his late employer. He became one of the first printers in London; and, by the interest of Mr. Onslow, speaker of the House of Commons, obtained the printing of the journals of that house. In 1754 he was chosen master of the Stationers' Company, and in 1760 purchased a moiety of the patent of law printer to the king. In 1740 he made his first appearance as author, by publishing "Pamela," which may be considered as the precursor of the regular English novel, and at once became highly successful, provoking the "Joseph Andrews" of Fielding, intended as a burlesque sequel to the other work. His next performance was "Clarissa Harlowe," which is esteemed his masterpiece, though his novel of "Sir Charles Grandison" possesses great beauties. Besides these works he published a volume of "Familiar Letters," for the use of young people; an edition of Æsop's fables, with reflections; and a paper in the "Rambler." His correspondence with persons of eminence was published in 1804, with his life, by Mrs. Barbauld. Richardson possessed an amiable and friendly disposition, and had a strong sense of religion. He had a large circle of intimate friends, especially women, whose respect for his high character induced them to entrust him with their confidence, which may be partly attributed to his remarkable insight into female character.

Born at Derby, 1689; died near London, 1761.

RICHARDSON, JONATHAN, an English portrait-painter, who was one of the best English artists before Reynolds. He also wrote the "Theory of Painting," and an essay upon the art of criticism as it relates to painting.

Born about 1665; died in London, 1745.

RICHARDSON, a county of Nebraska, United States. Area, 550 square miles. Pop. 15,000. The capital is Falls City.

RICHBOROUGH. (See SANDWICH.)

RICHELIEU, ARMAND JEAN DU PLESSIS DE, reesh'-lee-uh, a French cardinal and statesman. He belonged to a noble, but poor family, and studied at the college of Navarre, intending to enter the military profession; but seeing his way to preferment in the church, studied theology at the Sorbonne, and afterwards repaired to Rome, in order to obtain the bishopric of Luçon from the pope. On his return to France, he advanced himself into favour by an insinuating address, and for his eloquence was appointed almoner to Mary de' Medici, through whom he obtained, in 1616, the appointment of secretary of state; but the death of his friend the marshal d'Ancre occasioned his temporary disgrace, on which he retired to Avignon. In 1622 he was elevated to the rank of cardinal, and at a later period he was created a duke and peer of France. Louis XIII. recalled him to the ministry, and he soon took the lead in the management of public affairs. Having a great dislike of the Calvinists, he pressed the siege of Rochelle in person, and, by his vigorous efforts, compelled it to surrender in 1628, but was more tolerant of the Protestants, than most of the Catholic statesmen of the time. He next devoted himself to the humbling of the house of Austria, at that period the greatest power in Europe. He overcame all opposition, broke down the power of the aristocracy, made even the king, who feared his greatness, subordinate to his stronger will, and for 18 years governed France with absolute power. Notwithstanding his ambition and cruelty, he had great qualities. He founded the French Academy, established the royal botanical garden, and was a liberal patron of men of letters, and the period of his ministry forms an important epoch in the history of France. He wrote his own "Memoirs," which were published at Paris in 1823.

Born at Paris, 1585; died at the same city, 1642.

RICHLAND, rich'-land, the name of six counties in the United States:—

DAKOTA.—Area, 1,400 square miles. Pop. 3,597.

ILLINOIS.—Area, 375 square miles. Pop. 15,545. The capital is Olney.

LOUISIANA.—Area, 550 square miles. Pop. 8,440, about half being coloured. The capital is Rayville.

OHIO.—Area, 450 square miles. Pop. 36,306. The capital is Mansfield.

SOUTH CAROLINA.—Area, 465 square miles. Pop. 28,573, two-thirds being coloured. The capital is COLUMBIA.

WISCONSIN.—Area, 576 square miles. Pop. 18,174. The capital is Richland Centre.

RICHMOND, rich'-mond, a town of the county of Surrey, on an eminence on the south bank of the Thames, 10 miles W. of St. Paul's Cathedral, London. It is a spot of great celebrity, both for the beauty of its scenery (the river of the Thames valley from the hills being particularly famous), and from its being the seat of a royal palace during several centuries. Edward III., Henry VII., and Elizabeth died there. This palace is now totally demolished, and its site occupied by several houses. The original name of the place was Sheen, but Henry VII. gave it the name of Richmond, from that of his own earldom. The church of Mary Magdalen contains memorials of Thomson, the poet, and Kean, the actor. A stone bridge, of five semicircular arches, was erected over the river here. There are many elegant residences in the neighbourhood. Richmond Park, a beautiful place, partly laid out in garden, and the remainder well stocked with deer, adjoins the town, and has a circuit of 8 miles. It is first mentioned in the reign of Edward I.; and several ornamental buildings were erected here by Caroline, George II.'s queen. George III. frequently resided here in the early part of his reign. Pop. 19,068.—A station on the London and South-Western railway.

RICHMOND, a market-town, and municipal and parliamentary borough of the North Riding of Yorkshire, on the north declivity of a lofty eminence rising from the left bank of the Swale, 42 miles N.W. of York. The parish church, St. Mary's, restored in 1860, is partly of Gothic and partly of Norman architecture. Holy Trinity is also an ancient church. There are interesting ruins of St. Martin's monastery and St. Agatha's abbey, near the town. Manf. Iron and brass, leather and paper. Pop. 4,450.—A station on the North-Eastern railway.

RICHMOND, capital of Virginia, United States, picturesquely situated on the north side of James river, 150 miles from its mouth. It is one of the most flourishing, wealthy, and commercial cities of the United States. Its public buildings are a capitol or state-house with a beautiful Ionic portico, in the centre of a park, a city hall, in the Grecian style, 50 churches, and 13 colleges. It has also an equestrian statue of Washington, and a statue of Henry Clay. A canal is cut on the north side of the river, terminating at the town in a large basin. Manf. Cotton, tobacco, and machinery. There is an extensive inland trade, and the foreign commerce is considerable. It was chosen the capital of the Confederate states in 1861. Pop. 64,000, about 25,000 being coloured.

RICHMOND, a town of Indiana, United States, on the eastern fork of the Whitewater. It is an important railroad junction, and a large trade in agricultural produce is carried on. Pop. 12,000.

RICHMOND, the name of four counties in the United States:—

GEORGIA.—Area, 350 square miles. Pop. 34,665, about half being coloured. The capital is Augusta.

New York.—Area, 59 square miles. Pop. 38,991. The capital is Richmond.
North Carolina.—Area, 730 square miles. Pop. 18,245. The capital is Rockingham.
Virginia.—Area, 175 square miles. Pop. 6,600, nearly half being coloured. The capital is Nassau.

RICHMOND, a county of Nova Scotia, occupying the southern part of Cape Breton island. Area, 623 square miles. Pop. 15,121, nearly half being of French descent. The capital is Arichat.

RICHMOND AND WOLFE, a county of Quebec, dominion of Canada. Area, 525 square miles. Pop. 26,339. The capital is Richmond East.

RICHMOND, a town of New South Wales, Australia, 38 miles N.W. of Sydney, in the centre of an agricultural district. The town is well laid out, and the public buildings are good. Pop. 1,100.

RICHMOND, a town of Victoria, Australia, adjacent to Melbourne. There is a fine town-hall, with a tower, 130 feet high. Pop. 23,500.

RICHMOND, a division of the eastern province of Cape Colony, South Africa. It is an entirely pastoral country. The principal village is of the same name. Area, 2,950 square miles. Pop. 6,200.

RICHTER, Jean Paul Friedrich, resh'-ter, a distinguished German author, familiarly known as "Jean Paul," who was the son of a village schoolmaster, and afterwards parish priest of Schwarzenbach, under whom he received his earliest education, but was afterwards sent to school, and finally, in 1780, to the university of Leipsic, where, although he suffered extreme want, he pursued a brilliant career. His studies were unsystematic, but extended over a vast field, and his memory was stored with curious knowledge. Having no other means of support, he determined to apply himself to literature, and produced two or three works, but obtained little success in his new employment. In 1785 he returned to the cottage of his mother, then a widow. He next found employment as a tutor in a family, and continued to be thus engaged till his published works began to attract the attention of the German public. In 1797 he took up his residence at Leipsic, his name having by this time become esteemed by the best critics of his country. He made the acquaintance of Schiller, Wieland, and others, and after residing at various places, repaired to Baireuth, where, in 1807, he received an annual pension of 1,000 florins. His manner was so attractive, his genius so magnetic, his nature so joyous, tender, and sympathetic, that he excited the love of more than one beautiful woman. The well-known Charlotte de Kalb, a married woman, offered to obtain a divorce that she might marry him; and another committed suicide because he did not return her love. He acted towards these and others with great purity of sentiment and dignified delicacy. In 1801, he married Caroline, the daughter of professor Mayer of Berlin. Henceforth his life flowed on in the uneventful pursuit of literature. As a writer he is distinguished by his originality, profound learning, and, indeed, obscurity, for even among his countrymen a key to his works has been found necessary; and also for graceful fancy, exuberant but peculiarly subtle humour, vivid imagination, and sensitive insight. In the last year of his life he was afflicted with blindness.

Born near Baireuth, 1763; died 1825.

RICKMANSWORTH, rik'-mans-werth, a market town of Hertfordshire, on the Chess, 10 miles S. of St. Albans. There are a large modern parish church, St Mary's, a new church, in the decorated style, at Mile-end, near the town, and several chapels. Manf. Straw-plait and horsehair. Two annual cattle fairs are held. Pop. (of parish) 6,162.—A station on the London and North-Western railway.

RICORD, Philip, rik'-o, an eminent modern French physician, who went to Paris in 1820 to study his profession under Dupuytren, Lisfranc, and other celebrated men. He subsequently became the most extensively employed physician of the French capital, and although he specially studied and illustrated by his writings some particular forms of disease, he displayed, both in his work and in his writings, a profound acquaintance with all the ills that afflict humanity. So clear and elegant is the style in which his works were written, that his compatriots surnamed him the "Marivaux of Medicine." Among his more important works were a collection of observations and researches communicated to the memoirs of the Academy of Medicine.

Born 1800.

RIDLEY, Nicholas, rid'-le, a learned English bishop, reformer, and martyr, who received his education at Newcastle-on-Tyne, and afterwards at Pembroke College, Cambridge, where he was elected fellow in 1524, and was afterwards president. He early adopted the principles of the Reformation, and his opinions were strengthened by a tour in Germany, where he met several of the leading reformers. On his return he was appointed proctor to the university of Cambridge, and protested against the claims of the papacy to supreme ecclesiastical jurisdiction in England. His great abilities and piety recommended him to the notice of archbishop Cranmer, through whom he was made chaplain to the king. In the reign of Edward VI. he was nominated to the see of Rochester, and had a principal share in framing the liturgy, articles, and homilies. In 1550 he was translated to the bishopric of London, and by his interest with the young king he obtained the foundation of the noble charities of Christ's Hospital, St. Bartholomew's, and St. Thomas's in Southwark. On the decease of Edward, he unfortunately joined the friends of lady Jane Grey, for which, and his zeal in the Reformation, he was committed to the Tower in 1553 by queen Mary, and afterwards sent to Oxford, to dispute with some of the popish bishops, and on his refusing to recant, was burnt there opposite Balliol College, in company with bishop Latimer. He wrote against transubstantiation, and after his death his sermons and letters were printed.

Born in Northumberland, about 1500; died at Oxford, 1555.

RIEGO, Raphael del Riego y Nunez, re-ai'-go, a Spanish patriot, who fought against the French in 1808, and was made prisoner; and, upon recovering his liberty, in 1814, became lieutenant-colonel of the regiment of Asturias. He shared in the conspiracy of 1819, and when Quiroja and others were arrested, he raised the standard of revolt, proclaimed the constitution of the Cortes, released Quiroja, overran Andalusia, forced Ferdinand VII. to accept the constitution, and was nominated captain-general of Aragon. In 1823 he attempted to oppose the French army which had come to the assistance of Ferdinand, but was captured, and delivered to the government of the king, who forthwith put him to death. He was the author of the patriotic hymn sung in 1820, which bears his name.

Born 1785; died 1823.

RIENZI, Cola di (proper name Nicola Gabrino Lorenzo), re-ain'-dze, an obscure Roman, son of a tavern keeper and a washerwoman, but who had received an excellent education, which was improved by a strong will and vigorous understanding. He made himself acquainted with the works of the best Latin poets and orators. His brother having been assassinated by a Roman noble, he determined to support the cause of the people against the aristocracy; and in 1343 was sent by the Guelph party of Rome with a deputation to Clement VI., at Avignon, in order to prevail upon that pontiff to return to Rome. His eloquence pleased the pope, though it did not persuade him. Rienzi, on his return, formed the design of making himself master of Rome, with the title of tribune, and described himself as "Consul of orphans, widows, and the poor." For some time the aristocratic party took little notice of him, probably thinking him a half-mad enthusiast. Having gained a considerable number of partisans, in 1347 he entered the Capitol, accompanied by the papal legate, harangued the people, and elevated the standard of liberty. He designed to unite the whole of Italy into one great republic, with Rome for its capital. For some time he was successful, his government was popular, the pope confirmed him in his authority, and Petrarch wrote in his favour, comparing him to Brutus. He convened an assembly of deputies for the Italian states, and summoned Ludwig of Bavaria and Karl of Bohemia, the rival candidates of the Imperial throne, to appear before him, that he might adjudicate between them, and select an emperor. This assumption of authority greatly offended the pope, and the nobles conspired against Rienzi, who was compelled to quit Rome, after exercising almost absolute power for seven months. He became a monk of the Franciscan order, but three years afterwards, being induced to believe that ancient prophecies pointed to him as a regenerator of the world, he went to Prague, and announced to the emperor Karl IV. that in a few months' time there would be two empires under the protection of the church, that Karl would reign in the East, and Rienzi in the West. The emperor, instead of adopting his views, imprisoned him, and then sent him to the pope at Avignon, where he was tried on charges arising out of his conduct while tribune of Rome, and condemned to death. On the intercession of Petrarch and others, his life was spared, and two years afterwards he was sent to Rome (then in a state of anarchy) with cardinal Athornoz, for the purpose of re-establishing order. He borrowed money, raised a small body of adherents, and entered Rome amid general acclamation, but he was no longer the enthusiastic generous patriot of former days, but severe, exacting, and tyrannical. In two months' time the angry populace attacked him in the Capitol, and cruelly put him to death and mutilated his body.

RIESA, ree'-sa, a town of Saxony, district of Dresden, at the confluence of the Jahna with the Elbe. There are a castle and a dockyard. Pop. 5,400.

RIESENGEBIRGE, ri'-sen-ge-berg-a ("giant mountains"), a range between Bohemia and the Prussian province of Silesia, about 23 miles long, and 12 in average breadth.

RIESI, ree-ai'-se, a town of Sicily, province of Caltanisetta, 15 miles from the town of that name. Sulphur is obtained in the vicinity. Pop. 11,893.

RIETSCHEL, ERNST FRIEDRICH AUGUST, reet'-shal, German sculptor, who studied at Dresden, afterwards at Berlin under Rauch, and at Rome. On his return he rose into great reputation by a colossal statue of Friedrich Augustus of Saxony. In 1832 he was appointed professor in the Dresden Academy. He executed many statues of eminent Germans, and designed the memorial statue of Luther at Worms.

Born at Pulssnitz, 1804; died at Dresden, 1861.

RIGA, ri'-ga, or ree-ga, a city and seaport of European Russia, capital of Livonia, and the centre of administration for the three Baltic provinces, Livonia, Esconia, and Courland, on the Dwina or Duna, about 5 miles from its mouth in the Gulf of Riga. The principal portion of the town is on the right, the suburbs on the left bank of the river. Of the public buildings, the principal are the castle, built early in the 13th century, and now the residence of the governor; the town house, the exchange, the arsenal, the hospital of St. George, and the Catharinenof, a public library, academy, cabinet of natural history, an observatory, and a society of Lithuanian literature. The church of St. Peter is remarkable for its fine tower, commanding a magnificent view of the harbour. The old town has narrow streets and old buildings; but the suburbs are modern and handsome. The whole town is defended by fortifications. The river is crossed by a bridge of boats, those in the centre being moveable to allow of the passage of vessels. In the winter, when the river is frozen over, so as to permit traffic, the bridge is removed. Manf. Cloth, leather, iron, glass, sugar, soap, candles, and earthenware. Shipbuilding is carried on, and there is a large export trade in flax, hemp, corn, linseed, timber, tallow, and tobacco. Pop. 169,320, nearly half being Germans, 25,000 Russians, and the remainder Letts. Lat. 56° 5' N. Lon. 24° 7' E. —The city was founded early in the 13th century, rose to eminence by its commerce, and was a member of the Hanseatic League. It was taken by Gustavus Adolphus in 1621, remaining subject to Sweden for about 90 years. In 1721 it was annexed to Russia.

RIGA, a township of the United States, in the W. of New York. Pop. 2,500.

RIGA, GULF OF, a bay in the north-east of the Baltic, between the coasts of Courland, Livonia, and Esthonia. It is more than 100 miles in length from north to south, and 70 miles wide. At the entrance are the islands of ORSEL, DAGO, Mohn, and Worms.

RIGAUD, HYACINTH, ree'-go, an eminent French portrait-painter, who became director of the Academy of Painting, and was granted letters of nobility, and the order of St. Michael, by Louis XV. He has been called the Vandyck of France.

Born at Perpignan, 1659; died at Paris, 1743.

RIGAULT, or RIGALTIUS, NICOLAS, ree'-golte, a learned French philologist. He was educated among the Jesuits, who endeavoured to prevail upon him to enter their order, which he refused, and embraced the profession of an advocate. On Casaubon's going to England, Rigault succeeded him as librarian to the king, who appointed him procureur-general of the supreme court of Nancy. He was afterwards intendant of the province of Toul. His works are editions of Martial, Juvenal, Tertullian, and Minutius Felix, with observations and notes upon other classics.

RIO DAS MORTES, ré'-o das mor'-tais, a river of Brazil, in the province of Matto Grosso, joining the Aragua after a course of 500 miles.

RIO DE JANEIRO, ré'-o ja-nai'-ro, a maritime province in the south-east of Brazil, bounded N. by the province of Espirito Santo, E. and S. by the Atlantic Ocean, and W. by the extensive region of the Minas Geraes. It is extremely fertile, producing sugar in great abundance, coffee, cotton, maize, rice, indigo, cocoa, and fine woods. The country is mountainous, being traversed by the Organ and other ranges from 6,000 to 7,000 feet high, and is well wooded and watered.

Rivers.—The Parahiba is the most important.
Area.—18,480 square miles.
Pop.—938,831.
Chief Towns.—PRAIA GRANDE is the capital, but RIO DE JANEIRO is the more important.

RIO DE JANEIRO, (generally known as RIO), capital of Brazil, and the most important commercial town of South America, at the west side and near the mouth or harbour, reputed one of the most secure, spacious, and beautiful bays in the world, extending 17 miles inland, with an extreme breadth of 12 miles, and entered by a passage a mile wide. In the bay, which is nearly enclosed by lofty hills, are several islands, and the harbour is protected by strong fortifications. The city is built on seven rounded hills and the intermediate valleys. Nearest the bay is the old town, laid out in squares, with narrow streets crossing at right angles. To the west, beyond an immense open park, the Campo de Santa Anna, is the new town, where are many elegant residences. In the Campo are the palace of the senate, foreign office, town-hall, national museum, and opera house. Along the edge of the water are excellent quays. There are about 50 churches, many of them very handsome and highly decorated buildings, especially the church of Candellaria, with two lofty towers; the church of the Cross, and a new church, Nossa Senora da Gloria, several convents and nunneries, the large College of Pedro, an imperial academy of medicine, national library, and many hospitals, asylums, and other charitable institutions. From the central portion of the city, lines of houses extend in three directions for four miles. Water is supplied by a noble aqueduct from springs on Mount Corcovado, three miles to the south-west of the city, and supplies the fountains in the squares.

Commerce.—This city is the chief mart of Brazil, and especially of the provinces of Minas Geraes, S. Paulo, Goyaz, Matto Grosso, and Curitiba. The mining districts, being most populous, require the greatest proportion of consumable goods, and in return send the most valuable articles of commerce; hence innumerable troops of mules are continually travelling to and from those districts. The exports consist chiefly of coffee, gold, diamonds, and other precious stones: tobacco, hides, cotton, sugar, rum, timber, horsehair, india-rubber, and wool. There is active steam-ship communication with other Brazilian ports and Europe, and by railway with other parts of the Brazilian empire.
Pop.—435,568.
History.—The first settlement was made here by the French in 1555, and the present city was founded by the Portuguese in 1567, and then named St. Sebastian. In 1763 it was adopted as the seat of government and residence of the viceroys, in place of Bahia, and on Brazil becoming an independent empire in 1822, became the capital.

RIO GRANDE, a new county of Colorado, United States. Area, 1,200 square miles. Pop. about 2,000. The capital is Del Norte.

RIO GRANDE, a river of W. Africa, rising in lat. 11° 20′ N., and lon. 11° W., and falling into the Atlantic between the Casamanza and the Nunez rivers. Its banks are covered with immense ant-hills, and the country which it waters is populous.

RIO GRANDE DEL NORTE, or BRAVO DEL NORTE, grand'-ai-del-nor'-tai, a large river of North America, rising in the Rocky Mountains, forming the boundary between Mexico and Texas, and after a course of 1,800 miles, discharging into the Gulf of Mexico about lat. 25° N. and lon. 97° W.

RIO GRANDE DO NORTE, a maritime province of the north-east of Brazil, bounded N. and E. by the Atlantic, W. by Ceara, and S. by Parahyba. The shore is flat, but in the interior are mountains. Except near the rivers the soil is generally unfertile. Cotton is cultivated and large herds of horses and cattle are reared on the extensive pastures. There are many salt lakes. The capital is NATAL.

Rivers.—The Piranhao and Potengo.
Area.—26,129 square miles.
Pop.—269,051.

RIO GRANDE DO SUL, a maritime province, forming the extreme southern part of Brazil, bounded S.W. by the republic of Uruguay, S.E. by the Atlantic, and W. by the river Uruguay. A range of mountains traverses the central district, and on each side are extensive fertile plains. The climate is very salubrious, all the cereals and fruits of central Europe can be cultivated advantageously, and immense numbers of cattle and sheep are reared on the plains. The exports, rapidly increasing, consist chiefly of cattle and horse-hides, grease, tallow, agricultural produce, and jerked, or dried, beef. There are some gold mines.

Area.—110,210 square miles.
Pop.—899 000.
Chief Towns.—SAO PEDRO and PORTO ALEGRE.

RIO NEGRO, nai'-gro, a river of South America, rising in Columbia, a principal tributary of the Amazon, which, it joins, after a course of about 1,000 miles, in lat. 3° 10′ S., lon. 59° W. Its chief affluents are, from the north, the Cassiquiare, the Cababuri, Padaviry, and Branco, and, from the south, the Vaupes.

RIO NEGRO, a river of South America, forming the greater part of the boundary between the Argentine Confederation and Patagonia. It rises in the Chilian Andes, and, after a course of 700 miles, enters the Atlantic Ocean, in lat. 41° 4′ S., lon. 62° 50′ W.

RIOBAMBA, or BOLIVAR, bam'-ba, a town of the republic of Ecuador, South America, province of Chimborazo, 100 miles S. of Quito. It is a modern town, replacing a larger and older place, destroyed by earthquake in 1797. There are several churches and a college. Pop. 16,000.

RIOJA, LA, re-o'-ha, a province of the Argentine Confederation, South America, near the Andes and inclosed by the departments Cordova, Catamarca, and San Juan. Area, 35,000 square miles. Pop. 87,000.—The capital is of the same name.

RIOM, re'-om, a town of France, department Puy-de-Dôme, 8 miles N.E. of Clermont, on a hill 1,173 feet above the sea level. The dark colour of its houses, built of lava, gives it a dull and gloomy appearance. There are many interesting specimens of Renaissance domestic architecture. Manf. Linen, cotton, leather, and brandy. Pop. 8,700.

RION or RIONS, a French town, in Gironde.

RIONERA, re-o-nai'-ra, a town of southern Italy, province of Potenza, 7 miles S. of Melfi. Manf. Wooden snuff-boxes. Pop. 12,500.

The cathedral, founded early in the 12th century, is cruciform and has a central tower and two towers at the west end. The length is 266 feet, and of the transept 132 feet. Trinity church is a fine modern cruciform building, in the early English style. There are other places of worship, a grammar school, and two hospitals. In the market-place is a cross 90 feet high. Manf. Machinery, leather, iron, brass and varnish. Pop. 7,390.—A station on the North-Eastern railway.

RIPPERDA, JAN WILLEM, duke de, rip-pair'-da, a Dutch adventurer, who was descended of an ancient Spanish house. He served some time as colonel of infantry in the Dutch service during the war of the Succession, and, in 1715, was nominated ambassador to the court of Spain, where he gained the favour of Phillip V., who made him a grandee of the kingdom, and minister of war and finances; but afterwards he fell into disgrace, and was imprisoned at Segovia. He escaped, and, going through Portugal, reached England; whence he went to Holland. Lastly he made a voyage to Morocco, where he turned Mahometan, taking the name of Osman Pacha, but endeavouring to introduce a new religion, compounded of Christianity, Judaism, and Mahometanism.

Born at Gröningen, about 1677; died at Tetuan, 1737.

RISTORI, ADELAIDE, ris'-to-re, an Italian actress. She was the daughter of a strolling player, and played, herself, children's parts at the age of 4 years. At 15 she attracted the notice of the famous tragic actress Charlotte Marchionni, who gave her some invaluable counsel. Upon her marriage with the young marquis del Grillo, she retired from the stage; but was induced to return to it by the triumphs she obtained when playing for a single occasion at the benefit of one of her own friends. She was playing at Rome in 1849, and divided her time between the theatre and her duties as an attendant upon the wounded in hospital. In 1855 she appeared at Paris, where she excited the utmost enthusiasm. On repairing to London, shortly afterwards, an equally brilliant reception greeted her, and she has since revisited the English metropolis, and achieved a great success in the United States.

Born at Cividale, 1821.

In 1839 he became professor of classical literature and rhetoric; in 1865, professor at Leipsic, and in 1867 was chosen foreign associate of the French Academy. His greatest work was a critical edition of Plaretus; but he was the author of many philological works of high value, and was generally considered the greatest classical scholar of his age. No fewer than 30 of his pupils became professors in German universities.

Born at Grossvargula, Saxe-Weimar, 1806; died 1876.

RITSON, JOSEPH, rit'-son, an English critic and antiquary. He was bred to the law, and became a conveyancer in Gray's Inn; but having purchased, in 1785, the office of high bailiff of the liberties of the Savoy, he devoted the remainder of his life to literature. His principal works are "Observations on Johnson and Steeven's Edition of Shakspere," "Cursory Criticisms on Malone's Edition of Shakspere," "Observations on Warton's History of English Poetry," "Collection of English Songs" and of Scotch Songs, "English Anthology," "Metrical Romances," "Bibliographia Poetica."

Born at Stockton, Durham, 1752; died 1803.

RITTENHOUSE, DAVID, rit'-ten-house, an American astronomer, who served his apprenticeship to a clockmaker, and was afterwards a farmer; but pursued his mathematical and astronomical studies with such success, that, in 1769, the American Philosophical Society requested him to make observations on the transit of Venus over the sun's disc, which he performed with great accuracy. He succeeded Franklin as president of that Society.

Born at Philadelphia, 1732; died 1796.

RITTER, HEINRICH, rit'-ter, German philosopher, who studied at Halle, Göttingen, and Berlin; in 1824 was appointed professor extraordinary at Berlin, in 1835 became a professor at Kiel, and in 1837 at Göttingen. He wrote numerous works on the history of philosophy, displaying a profound acquaintance with ancient and modern systems.

Born at Zerbst, 1791; died 1869.

RITTER, KARL, German geographer, who, upon the completion of his studies at the university of Halle, became a tutor in a nobleman's family, and made a tour with his pupils in Italy, France, and Switzerland. In 1820 he was appointed professor extraordinary of geography in the university of Berlin, after which time he devoted himself to his favourite science and was afterwards member of the Berlin Academy, and director at the military school. His most important works were "Geography in Relation to the Character and History of Mankind," "An Introduction to Universal Comparative Geography," "A Glance at the Sources of the Nile," "A Glance at Palestine and its Christian Population," and "Jordan and the Dead Sea." He was a member of the Academy of Berlin, and a foreign member of the Royal Society of London.

Born at Quedlinburg, 1779; died 1859.

ROATAN. (See RUATAN.)

ROBBIA, LUCA DELLA, rob-be'-a, Italian sculptor and inventor of the potter's ware that bears his name, at a very early age gave proof of his ability as a sculptor, and was employed to execute bassi-relievi and other decorations at Rimini, Florence, and other places. He was engaged for 10 years on the great bronze door of the sacristy of Santa Maria del Fiore at Florence. He then directed his attention to terra-cotta work, and invented an enamel which preserved it from the effects of the atmosphere. This style of work became very popular, and Cosmo de' Medici and others employed the artist, and he realised a considerable fortune.

Born at Florence about 1400; died 1481.

ROBERT I., king of France, rob'-ert, was the second son of Robert the Strong, and younger brother of Eudes, who also became king of France. He was chosen king at Soissons, in 922, to the prejudice of Charles the Simple. He was, however, killed at the battle of Soissons, in the following year.

Died 923.

ROBERT II., king of France, called the Sage and Devout, was crowned in 996, on the death of Hugh Capet, his father. He married his cousin Bertha, but pope Gregory V. declared the marriage void, and excommunicated the king, who took for his second wife the daughter of the count of Arles and Provence.

Born about 970; died 1031.

ROBERT I., duke of Normandy, rob'-ert, surnamed the "Magnificent" and the "Devil," succeeded his father, Richard II., having, it is said, poisoned his elder brother Richard. He repressed several revolts in his dominions, assisted Boudouin IV., count of Flanders, and attempted to defend Alfred and Edward, the sons of Edmund, who had been excluded from the English throne by Canute. To expiate the errors of his youth, he made a pilgrimage to the Holy Land, but died upon his return, it is said, of poison. He left only one son, the celebrated William the Conqueror.

Died at Nicæa, 1035.

ROBERT II., duke of Normandy, known as Curthose, was the eldest son of William the Conqueror, who created him duke in 1087. He had recourse to arms against his father, who was compelled to cede the duchy of Normandy to him. He sold nearly a third of his territories to his younger brother Henry, afterwards Henry I. of England, for the sum of £3,000. The latter invaded Normandy in 1105, and after a sanguinary battle beneath the walls of Tenchebrai Castle, Robert, with 400 of his knights, was taken prisoner. He was afterwards confined for the remainder of his life in Cardiff Castle. Some historians assert that his sight was taken away by his merciless brother Henry, but William of Malmesbury declares that his only punishment was that of solitary imprisonment during twenty-eight years.

Born 1060; died 1134.

ROBERT I., king of Scotland. (See BRUCE, Robert.)

ROBERT II., king of Scotland, was the son of Walter Stewart and Marjory, only daughter of Robert Bruce, and was the founder of the house of Stuart. During the infancy and exile of David II., the successor of Bruce, Robert Stewart held the reigns of government, in conjunction with the earl of Moray. In 1359 he was created earl of Strathearn, and, upon the death of David, in 1371, was declared king by the title of Robert II. After the demise of Edward III. of England, hostilities were renewed between the two countries, and throughout the remainder of his reign there was continual conflict with the English. In 1389, feeling the infirmities of age, he retired to his castle of Dundonald, in Ayrshire, and remained in seclusion until his death.

Born 1316; died 1390.

ROBERT III., king of Scotland, was the son and successor of the preceding. His baptismal name was John, but it was changed to Robert on his accession to the throne in 1390. During the first nine years of his reign he ruled in peace; but, in 1400, Henry IV. of England marched, at the head of a large army, into Scotland as far as Edinburgh. In 1391 the king's troubles were augmented by the death, at the age of 24, of his eldest son, the duke of Rothsay, who had been seized, imprisoned, and, traditionary history asserts, murdered, by his uncle, the duke of Albany. (This occurrence forms the basis of the plot of Sir Walter Scott's "Fair Maid of Perth.") Shortly afterwards his army was twice defeated by the English, and the king, suspicious of the ambitious designs of his brother, the duke of Albany, sent his only surviving son, James, earl of Carrick, to France, but the prince was captured on his voyage by an English vessel. (See JAMES I. of Scotland.) This last misfortune broke the heart of the Scottish king.

Born about 1340; died 1406.

ROBERT OF GLOUCESTER, an old English historian, whose Chronicle was written in verse, and ends shortly before the commencement of the reign of Edward I. He is supposed to have been a monk in the abbey of Gloucester, but little is known as to his personal history.

Died 1290.

ROBERT OF LINCOLN, surnamed Grossetête or Greathead, an English prelate, who, in 1235, succeeded to the important diocese of Lincoln. He was a learned divine, and a firm supporter of the rights of the English church against the pope, the king, and several of the most powerful persons. He made a number of translations from the Greek, some of which have been printed.

Born about 1175; died 1253.

ROBERT, LEOPOLD, ro-bair', an eminent French painter, who studied under Gerard and David, and perfected his talents in Italy, where he executed many of his finest pictures. His greatest works are, the "Neapolitan Improvisatore," "The Reapers," and "Venetian Fishermen." He committed suicide at Venice.

Born 1797; died 1835.

ROBERT, NICOLAS, an eminent French miniature-painter, who also excelled in depicting flowers, plants, and insects. For Gaston, duke of Orleans, he painted a magnificent collection of miniatures of all those objects. It is preserved in the Cabinet du Roi at Paris.

Born at Langres, about 1710; died 1784.

ROBERTS, DAVID, architectural painter, who was intended for the trade of a house-painter, but who, about 1821, went to London, where, during several years, he worked as a scene-painter, in conjunction with his friend Stanfield. By degrees he abandoned scene for architectural painting, and having obtained some success in the latter walk, he visited Spain in 1832, and upon his return, published a collection of drawings, entitled "Spanish Sketches," which fixed his reputation. From that period his rise was rapid; he became A.R.A. in 1839, and two years afterwards a full academician. He is generally admitted to have been the finest architectural painter England has produced. For many years his views and interiors were great attractions at the Royal Academy Exhibition, and are highly valued.

Born at Stockbridge, Edinburgh, 1796; died in London, 1874.

ROBERTSON, ÉTIENNE GASPARD, a Belgian natural philosopher and aeronaut, who became professor of physics at Liége, and perfected the mirror of Archimedes, invented phantasmagoria, and improved the parachute. He made several balloon ascents, which he collected a body of valuable observations in meteorology. He was the author of several volumes of scientific memoirs.

Born at Liége 1762; died at Paris, 1837.

ROBERTSON, FREDERICK WILLIAM, Rev., an English clergyman, who attained remarkable fame as a preacher. He was the son of a Scotch officer in the Royal Artillery, and was educated at the universities of Edinburgh and Oxford. About 1848 he accepted the incumbency of Trinity Chapel, Brighton, and exercised an extraordinary influence by his preaching, although displeasing the strictly orthodox by his breadth of views. He died of consumption.

Born in London, 1816; died at Brighton, 1853.

ROBERTSON, WILLIAM, historian and divine of the church of Scotland. He was educated at the university of Edinburgh, where he took the degree of doctor of divinity; and, having entered into orders, became one of his majesty's chaplains in ordinary for Scotland, and was offered considerable preferment in the church of England, which he declined. In 1759 he published the "History of Scotland." In 1762 he was elected principal of the university of Edinburgh; and in 1769 he published "History of Charles V.," in which are displayed superior powers of discrimination, together with an elegant and very luminous style. For this he was appointed royal historiographer for Scotland. His other works were the "History of America," and an "Historical Disquisition concerning India." He was a man of amiable manners and brilliant accomplishments.

Born at Borthwick, near Edinburgh, 1721; died 1793.

KENTUCKY.—Area, 175 square miles. Pop. 5,500. The capital is Mount Olivet.

TENNESSEE.—Area, 400 square miles. Pop. 18,500, about 5,000 being coloured. The capital is Springfield.

TEXAS.—Area, 840 square miles. Pop. 22,383, nearly half being coloured. The capital is Calvert.

ROBESON, a county of North Carolina, United States. Area, 900 square miles. Pop. 23,880. The capital is Lumbertown.

ROBESPIERRE, MAXIMILIEN MARIE ISIDORE DE, robes'-peer, a French revolutionist, who was the son of a provincial advocate, and was educated at the expense of a canon of the cathedral of Arras. After completing his studies at Paris, he entered upon the profession of the law at Arras, but with no great success. He was for some time a member of the criminal court, but, it is said, resigned because he had a conscientious objection to the infliction of the punishment of death—a remarkable scruple on his part, if the statement is true. Upon the outbreak of the Revolution he became a member of the National Assembly, after the death of Mirabeau obtained great influence, and in a short time rose to be chief of the Jacobins. He declared that "France must be revolutionized," and was soon named public accuser. Having risen to power, as the leader during the "Reign of Terror," he, to maintain it, had recourse to the most cruel expedients. The prisons were crowded with unfortunate victims of all ages and of both sexes. Numbers were daily put to death, and the streets were deluged with blood. At length a conspiracy was formed against him: he was accused of seeking his own aggrandizement by getting rid of his old colleagues, and was condemned to death. He was taken, but contrived to effect his escape, and marched against the Convention; yet he had not sufficient personal courage to turn the tide once more in his own favour, and was again taken prisoner. He attempted to destroy himself by a pistol-shot, but only succeeded in breaking his jaw, and, in that condition was, with twenty-two of his associates, dragged to the guillotine. His partisans surnamed him the "Incorruptible," and at his death he was worth but 50 francs. His character, made up of many contradictions, presents a problem not easily solved.

Born at Arras, 1758; died 1794.

ROBIN HOOD. (See HOOD, ROBIN.)

ROBINS, BENJAMIN, rob'-ins, an English mathematician and artillerist. His parents were Quakers; but he abandoned that form of faith soon after he had settled in London as teacher of mathematics. He distinguished himself by confuting a memoir by Bernouilli on the "Force of Bodies in Motion," and by a demonstration of the last proposition of Newton's "Treatise on Quadratures." In 1742 he published his "Principles of Gunnery," the result of his own experiments. He also contributed to the improvements in the royal observatory at Greenwich, and, in 1749, was appointed engineer in general to the East India Company. He received the gold medal of the Royal Society.

Born at Bath, 1707; died at Madras, 1751.

ROBINSON, REV. EDWARD, rob'-in-son, a learned American divine, who, upon the completion of his educational career at Hamilton College, Clinton, was for a time assistant professor of Hebrew at Andover. In 1826 he travelled in Europe, in order to study the Oriental languages and literature. On his return in 1830 he was appointed extraordinary professor of sacred literature and librarian at Andover; and in 1837, professor of Biblical literature in the Union Theological Seminary, New York. After spending some time in the Holy Land, he, in 1841, produced his "Biblical Researches in Palestine, Mount Sinai, and Arabia Petræa," a very learned and valuable work. He also translated the Greek Lexicon of Buttmann and the Hebrew Lexicon of Gesenius; and wrote "Commentary on the Apocalypse," "Dictionary of the Bible," and "Harmony of the Four Gospels in English." He was an active member of various scientific societies.

Born at Southington, Connecticut, U.S., 1794; died 1864.

ROBINSON, THERESE ALBERTINE LOUISE, wife of the preceding, and daughter of Professor Von Jakob, of Halle. Previous to her marriage, in 1828, she had studied the classical and modern languages and history, published a volume of tales, translated Scott's "Black Dwarf," and "Old Mortality," and edited a collection of popular songs of Servia. On her removal to America, she studied the Indian languages, translating works on the subject into German, wrote an essay on the historical characteristics of the popular songs of Germany, several historical works and novels, besides contributing industriously to periodical literature.

Born at Halle, 1797; died at Hamburg, 1870.

ROBISON, JOHN rob'-i-son, a Scotch mathematician and natural philosopher. He studied at Glasgow university, and became professor there in 1761. In 1770 he accompanied Admiral Sir Charles Knowles to Russia, and was made director of the marine cadet academy at Cronstadt. On his return to his native country in 1773, he was appointed professor of natural philosophy at Edinburgh. He was the author of the "Elements of Mechanical Philosophy," some articles in the "Encyclopædia Britannica," and various treatises in the "Philosophical Transactions."

Born at Boghall, Stirling, 1739; died at Edinburgh, 1805.

ROB ROY, rob roi', "Robert the Red," a famous Highland freebooter, whose real name was Robert Macgregor, but who took that of Campbell, his mother's name, in consequence of the clan Macgregor being outlawed. Previously to the rebellion of 1715, in which he joined the standard of the Pretender, he had been a trader in cattle; but the duke of Montrose having deprived him of his estates, he made reprisals upon the property of the latter. During some time he continued to levy "black mail" upon his enemies, notwithstanding every effort made to capture him. This bold, active, and courageous outlaw forms the hero of one of Sir Walter Scott's novels; but the novelist made free use of his privilege of departing from strict historical accuracy. Rob Roy had really some intellectual culture, and gave his sons a good education, not satisfied, as Scott represents him to have been, that "one could shoot a black cock on the wing, and the other drive a dirk through a two-inch board." Notwithstanding his desperate and irregular life, he died peacefully on his bed.

Born about 1660; died about 1735.

ROBUSTI, JACOPO. (See TINTORETTO.)

ROCHDALE, roch'-dail, a market town and municipal and parliamentary borough of Lancashire, on the Roach, 11 miles N.E. of Manchester. The public buildings are an ancient parish church, St. Chad's, partly in the Norman and partly in the Perpendicular styles, and dating from the 12th century; three other churches, several chapels, a Gothic townhall, built in 1867, and large public baths, opened in 1871. Manf. Flannels, blankets, kerseys, coarse calicoes, baizes, fustians, hats, and machinery. Flagstones, freestone, and slate, are quarried in the vicinity, and there are well attended general and cattle markets. Pop. 68,865.—A station on the London and North-Western, Lancashire and Yorkshire, Great Northern, Midland, and Manchester, Sheffield and Lincolnshire railways.

ROCHE LA, a prefix to the names of numerous towns and villages in France, with populations ranging between 1,000 and 3,000.

ROCHE, a town of Switzerland, with extensive saltworks, 40 miles from Geneva.

ROCHEFORT-SUR-MER, rosh'-for-soor-mare, a seaport and naval arsenal of France, department of Charente-Inférieure, on the Charente, 5 miles from its mouth. The streets are broad, straight, and laid out on a plan of perfect regularity. Nearly in the centre of the town is a spacious square, the Place d'Armes, with a fountain in the centre, and the town is surrounded by ramparts and protected by forts at the mouth of the river. The principal objects of interest are, the arsenal, a cannon-foundry, the barracks, extensive magazines of naval stores, and the docks; also the civil and marine hospital, artillery and naval schools, and a college. The harbour is one of the largest in France. It is formed by the Charente, which, if not wide, is secure, and capable, from its depth, of admitting vessels of great size. Manf. Cordage, stoneware, oil, and brandy. Ships of the largest size, steamers, and coasting vessels are built. Pop. 28,060. Lat. 45° 56′ 6″ N. Lon. 57′ 7″ W.

ROCHEFORT, GUILLAUME DE, chancellor of France under Louis XI. and Charles VIII. He was at first employed in the service of the dukes of Burgundy, but quitted his post to assume the former office, which he filled with considerable distinction.

Born 1433; died 1492.

ROCHEFORT, VICTOR HENRI, Marquis de Rochefort-Luçay, known as Henri Rochefort, is a son of the marquis Claude Louis Marie de Rochefort-Luçay. He studied at the college of St. Louis, and was appointed a clerk in the Hôtel de Ville. Finding his occupation little suited to his taste, he turned his attention to literature, and wrote dramatic and art criticisms for the newspapers. In 1868 he became one of the principal writers of the Figaro, and his satirical comments on the events of the day, and caustic notices of the emperor and his government, made the writer's name peculiarly obnoxious to the authorities. He assailed the imperial régime with great bitterness, in a series of weekly pamphlets, under the title La Lanterne, until the publication was seized, and the writer condemned to pay a fine, and be deprived of his civil and political rights for twelve months. To escape the consequences of these and other judicial proceedings, he fled to Belgium, where he remained till 1869. In the following year he was again arrested for his violent attacks on the government, and remained in confinement till the proclamation of the republic (Sept. 1870), when he was released, and shared for a short time the labours of the self-elected government of defence. Being unable to agree with his colleagues he resigned, and afterwards joined the commune, and at its fall was taken prisoner, and tried before a court-martial. He was sentenced to imprisonment for life, and in 1873 was transported to New Caledonia, whence he escaped in the following year, and has since resided in Switzerland, and, after the amnesty, in Paris, continuing to attack the government of the president.

Born at Paris, 1830.

ROCHEFOUCAULD. (See LA ROCHEFOUCAULD.)

ROCHEJACQUELEIN. (See LA ROCHEJACQUELEIN.)

ROCHELLE, LA, ro-shel', a seaport of France, capital of the department Charente-Inférieure, on an inlet of the Bay of Biscay, formed by the islands Ré and Oleron. Its fortifications, the work of the famous Vauban, are in good condition. It is entered by seven gates, and the streets are bordered by arcades. The town is well built, the streets are broad, and, in general, straight. The finest streets, Dauphine, Puits Doux, Chandelerie, Palais, and Grosse Horloge, form one splendid avenue, traversing the town from north to south. The principal public buildings are the cathedral, hospital, orphan-house, town-hall, and exchange. The harbour is surrounded by good quays, and there are commodious docks. Outside the walls are two large public gardens, the Promenade du Mail, and the Champs de Mars. Manf. Glass, earthenware, cotton-twist, sugar, and brandy. Shipbuilding, especially in connection with the Newfoundland fisheries, is extensively carried on. The trade, both to the colonies and to European ports, is considerable. Pop. 22,500. Lat. 46° 9′ 24″ N. Lon. 1° 9′ 16″ W.—La Rochelle is an ancient town, at first known as Rupella, or "little rock," from which its present name is derived, and was, for some time, in possession of the English, prior to 1224, when the French retook it. It was a stronghold of the Huguenots, and in 1628, after being frequently attacked by the Catholics, it was taken by Louis XIII., after a memorable siege of thirteen months.

ROCHESTER, roch'-es-ter, a very ancient episcopal city, municipal and parliamentary borough and river port, of the county of Kent, on the Medway, 7 miles S.E. of Gravesend. On the east it is connected by a continued range of buildings with the town of Chatham, and on the west by a bridge with Strood. The castle stands on an eminence rising abruptly from the river on the west. It was built by bishop Gundulph (the architect of the White Tower of the Tower of London). The keep, the only part remaining, is 104 feet high, and 70 feet square. The cathedral was also designed by bishop Gundulph, but not completed till 1130. The tower and spire were not erected till 1343. The nave and crypt are in the Norman and the choir and transepts in the early English style. The entire length is 310 feet. Adjoining it are some remains of the Norman priory. The cathedral was partially restored in 1875. Pop. 21,590.—A station on the South-Eastern and London, Chatham, and Dover Railways.—Rochester was a Roman station, but did not attain any celebrity until more than a century after the arrival of the Saxons. The Saxon name was Hroff's Ceaster, or castle of Hroff, a Saxon princess. From that the modern name is derived. Its bishopric is, after Canterbury, the most ancient in England. It was founded in the beginning of the 7th century. In 1877 the diocese was divided, a portion being included in the newly-erected diocese of St. Alban's.

ROCHESTER, a city of Genessee county, New York, on the Genessee river, 7 miles S. of its entrance into Lake Ontario. The upper falls of the river, 96 feet in perpendicular descent, are in the centre of the city, and two other falls, respectively 84 and 25 feet, are a mile and a half below. These falls give valuable water-power to the manufactories. There are 57 churches, a university, theological seminary, a large number of schools, hospitals, and a reformatory. A handsome cemetery, Mount Hope, is near the city, and in the suburbs are highly cultivated orchards and nursery gardens. A canal crosses the river on an aqueduct of seven arches. A considerable lake trade is carried on by means of the harbour at the mouth of the river. Manf. Agricultural implements, steam engines, clothing, and boots and shoes. Pop. 89,500.

ROCHESTER, John Wilmot, earl of, an English nobleman and poet, son of the first earl, who is better known as lord Wilmot. He was educated at Wadham College, and, when only 14 years of age, received the M.A. degree. He afterwards travelled in France and Italy, and was made a gentleman of the bedchamber to Charles II. When 18 years of age he went to sea under the earl of Sandwich, and took part in the attack on Bergen. Shortly afterwards he was committed to the Tower for the forcible abduction of Miss Mallett, a beautiful heiress, whom he afterwards married. He displayed unusual powers of wit and a fertility of imagination; but he disgraced his fine qualities by the most dissolute principles and licentious conduct. His satirical poems are keen, yet they were defaced by obscenity and impiety. It must be mentioned to his credit, that before his death he ordered all his licentious writings to be destroyed. His life was shortened by excess, but he was the subject of a remarkable conversion, and died a sincere penitent. Bishop Burnet wrote a remarkable account of the last days of the earl. Born at Ditchley, Oxfordshire, 1647; died 1680.

ROCHLITZ, rok'-litz, a town of Saxony, on the left bank of the Mulde, 30 miles S.E. of Leipsic. There are a high and a low town, with a castle, and two churches. Manf. Woollen and cotton goods, fustians, carpets, playing cards, needles, and earthenware. Pop. 5,200.

ROCHLITZ (Unter and Nieder), a town of the Austrian empire, in Bohemia, at the confluence of the Hüttenwasser with the Great Iser. There is a handsome church. Manf. Lawn and cambric, linen and cotton goods. Flax is cultivated in the vicinity. Pop. 8,000.

ROCK, rok, a county of Minnesota, United States. Area, 432 square miles. Pop. 3,669.

ROCK, a county of Wisconsin, United States. Area, 750 square miles. Pop. 38,823. The capital is Janesville.

ROCK BRIDGE, a county of Virginia, United States. Area, 700 square miles. Pop. 20,003. The capital is Lexington.

ROCK CASTLE, a county of Kentucky, United States. Area, 350 square miles. Pop. 9,670. The capital is Mount Vernon.

ROCK ISLAND, a county of Illinois, United States. Area, 350 square miles. Pop. 38,000. The capital is Rock Island.

ROCK ISLAND, capital of the above county, at the foot of the upper rapid, on the Mississippi, 3 miles above the mouth of Rock river, 181 miles S.W. of Chicago. Many manufactories are supplied with water-power by the falls. There is a national armoury on the island, which gives name to the town. Pop. 12,000.

ROCK RIVER, a river of the United States, rising in the south-eastern part of Wisconsin, running south-west into Illinois, and discharging into the Mississippi. It flows through a region of great beauty and fertility, and there are several falls. The length is about 210 miles.

ROCKDALE, a new county of Georgia, United States. Area, 200 square miles. Pop. 6,838.

ROCKFORD, a city of Illinois, United States, on the Rock river, 92 miles N.W. of Chicago. The river supplies water-power to several factories. Manf. Agricultural implements, machinery, woollens, cotton, and paper. Pop. 13,129.

ROCKHAMPTON, a town of Queensland, Australia, on the Fitzroy river, 45 miles from its mouth, and 420 miles N.W. of Brisbane. It is the port of shipment for a large district, and also for some of the produce of the Peak Downs copper and gold mines. The town is well laid out, and there are good public buildings. The gold fields in the vicinity give employment to a large number of miners. Hides, tallow, and preserved meats are exported. There is direct communication by steam boats with Brisbane and Sydney. Pop., including vicinity, 8,000.

ROCKINGHAM, CHARLES WATSON WENTWORTH, Marquis of, rok'-ing-ham an English statesman, son of the first marquis of Rockingham. In 1750, he entered the House of Lords, and immediately afterwards took a foremost part in the debates of that assembly. His consistent and honourable character, and his steady adherence to the principles of Whiggism, enabled the young statesman to rise gradually but certainly. He became a knight of the Garter in 1760, and five years later was appointed first lord of the Treasury and prime-minister, holding office during a year. Upon the retirement of lord North from the head of affairs, in 1782, the marquis of Rockingham again succeeded to power, and held place until his death, which took place a few months afterwards.

Born 1730; died 1782.

ROCKINGHAM, the name of three counties of the United States:—

NEW HAMPSHIRE.—Area, 700 square miles. Pop. 49,000. There are two capitals, Plymouth and Exeter.

NORTH CAROLINA.—Area, 600 square miles. Pop. 21,744, more than 6,000 being coloured. The capital is Wentworth.

VIRGINIA.—Area, 850 square miles. Pop. 29,567, about 3,000 being coloured. The capital is Harnsenburg.

ROCKLAND, rok'-land, a town of Maine, United States, on the west side of Penobscot Bay, 40 miles S.E. of Augusta. There is a large and good harbour. Very large quantities of lime are shipped to Boston and New York. Pop. 7,200.

ROCKLAND, a county of New York, United States. Area, 208 square miles. Pop. 28,000. The capital is New City.

ROCKTON, a township of New York, United States, on both sides of the Mohawk river, 91 miles N. W. of Albany. Manf. Woollen and paper. Pop. 5,000.

ROCKWALL, a new county of the United States.

ROCKY MOUNTAINS. (See AMERICA, NORTH.)

ROCROI, ro'-krwaw, a town of France department Ardennes, 15 miles N.W. of Mezières. Pop. 3,000.—Here the Spaniards were defeated with immense loss by the great Condé in 1643.

RODA, ro'-da, a town of the duchy of Saxe-Altenburg, 30 miles S.W. of Altenburg. There is a trade in cattle and salt. Pop. 3,600.

RODA, LA, a town of Spain, province of Albacete, 24 miles N.W. of the town of that name. Sheep and wool are exported. Pop. 5,400.—In 1081, king Alonzo of Castile was defeated here by the Moors.

RODERICK, rod'-e-rik, the last of the Visigothic kings of Spain. He was of humble birth, but rose by his ability and valour to an important command in the army, and when king Witiza was deposed, in 709, ascended to the throne. The sons of Witiza sought the aid of the Arabs, who prepared to invade Spain; and in 710 landed, under the command of Tarif, at Tartessus, now Tarifa. In the following year the Arabs again landed in greater force, at the foot of the rock of Calpe. The expedition was under the command of Tarik, and the place of landing was termed Gebel-Tarik, which became corrupted into Gibraltar. The Arabs advanced into the interior, and were met on the banks of the Frontera by Roderick, with a large but badly-disciplined army. A series of desperate engagements, occupying nine days, ensued, and resulted in the defeat of the Goths, the flower of whose chivalry, together with Roderick himself, were slain.

Died 711.

RODEZ, ro'-dai, a town of France, capital of the department Aveyron, on the north bank of the Aveyron river. The cathedral, a Gothic building, of the 15th century, has a tall clock tower. Manf. Woollen cloths. Cheese, made in the town, is of great repute. Pop. 15,500.

RODNEY, GEORGE BRYDGES, Lord, rod'-ne, an English admiral, who entered the navy in his 12th year, and distinguished himself in several actions. In 1752 he was elected member for Sandwich, and in 1759 was created rear-admiral, and was employed to bombard Havre-de-Grâce. In 1761 he was sent against Martinique, which island, together with Santa Lucia and Granada, he captured, and for his services was created a baronet. Owing to an electioneering contest for Northampton, and other causes, he was reduced to such a state of pecuniary embarrassment as to be obliged to reside on the continent, where, in the American war, he was tempted by the Count de Sartines, by brilliant offers, to enter into the French service. These overtures he refused; of which De Sartines liberally informed the British government, by whom sir George was recalled home, and obtained a command. In 1780 he defeated the Spanish fleet off Cape St. Vincent, and took several ships, capturing the Spanish admiral, Don Juan de Langara. But the most important exploit of this brave admiral was the defeat of the French fleet under Count de Grasse in the West Indies, in 1782, when the French admiral and a number of his ships were taken. For this he was created a peer, and obtained a pension of £2,000 per annum for himself and successors. There is a monument to his memory in St. Paul's cathedral.

Born at Walton-upon-Thames, Surrey, 1718; died 1792.

RODOLPH OF HAPSBURG. (See RUDOLF.)

RUDOSTO, ro-dos'-to, a town of European Turkey, vilayet of Adrianople, on the north shore of the sea of Marmora, 77 miles W. of Constantinople. It is surrounded by walls with towers, has well-built streets, several good public buildings, and an excellent harbour. Large quantities of fruit and vegetables are cultivated in the vicinity. Pop. 18,000.

RODRIGUEZ, ro'-dre-gais, an island in the Indian Ocean, 12 miles long, with a breadth of from 3 to 6. Lat. 19° 30′ S. Lon. 63° 50′ E.

RODRIGUEZ, VENTURA, a Spanish architect, who, in 1733, assisted Juvara in making the designs for the new palace at Madrid. In 1752 he became professor of architecture in the Academy of St. Fernando at Madrid. He designed a very large number of cathedrals, colleges, and churches throughout Spain, and was justly styled by his countrymen the restorer of architecture in his native country.

Born at Cienpozuelos, 1717; died at Madrid, 1785.

RODRIGUEZ, JUAN, a Spanish Jesuit missionary, who went to Japan, where he became interpreter to the emperor Taikosam. He was excepted from the proscriptions decreed against the missionaries, and took up his residence at Nagasaki, where he composed, among other works, a Japanese Grammar.

Born 1559; died 1633.

ROE, SIR THOMAS, ro, an English statesman, who, in 1614, was sent ambassador to the Great Mogul, at whose ccurt he remained nearly four years; of which embassy he published a very curious and interesting account. He subsequently acted in the same capacity at Constantinople. During his residence in the East he made a large collection of valuable manuscripts in the Greek and Oriental languages, which, in 1628, he presented to the Bodleian library. He also brought over the famous Alexandrian MS. of the New Testament, sent from Cyril, patriarch of Constantinople, to Charles I. In 1639 he was sent to negotiate peace between the kings of Poland and Sweden, in which he succeeded. In 1641 he went as ambassador to the diet of Ratisbon, and, on his return, was made a privy counsellor and chancellor of the Garter.

Born in Essex, 1580; died 1644.

ROELAS, JUAN DE LAS, ro'-ai-las, a Spanish painter, who is supposed to have studied under Titian, at Venice. "No one," says Ford, in his "Handbook of Spain," "ever painted the sleek grimalkin Jesuit like Roelas." His best works are, —the "St. Iago" in the cathedral of Seville; a "Holy Family with Jesuits," and a "Nativity."

Born about 1560; died 1625.

ROEMAR, OLAUS, re(r)'-mar, a Danish astronomer, who was educated at Copenhagen, and, on visiting Paris in 1671, became mathematical tutor to the dauphin. He also received a pension from Louis XIV., and assisted Cassini and Picard in performing the survey of France, and, during his ten years' stay in the kingdom, he made many important discoveries in astronomy, as well as inventing some new and excellent forms of astronomical apparatus. In 1681 he was recalled to his native country, and received from the king of Denmark the appointment of professor of astronomy at Copenhagen. His celestial observations, under the title of "Basis Astronomiæ," were printed by his pupils in 1735.

Born at Aarhuus, Jutland, 1644; died at Copenhagen, 1702.

ROER, rer, a river of Prussia and Holland, rising 20 miles S.E. of Aix-la-Chapelle, and after a course of 90 miles joining the Maas.

ROERMOND, rer'-mond, a town of the Netherlands, province of Limburg, at the junction of the Roer and the Maas. On the opposite side of the river, connected by a stone bridge, is a suburb, St. Jacob. There is a very handsome cathedral. Manf. Woollens, cottons, soap, leather, paper, pipes, and candles. Pop. 10,470.

ROESKILDE, re(r)s'-kild, a town and seaport of Denmark, in the island of Seeland, on the Roeskilde Fiord, 18 miles W. of Copenhagen. There is a harbour for small vessels. The chief buildings are a palace, erected for the meeting of the provincial states, a very fine cathedral, founded in 1084, and a convent for noble ladies. There are famous mineral springs. In 980 the town was established as a royal residence. Pop. 4,700.

ROFFAH, rof'-fa, a town of Nubia, on the right bank of the Blue Nile, 65 miles S.E. of Khartoom. It is the capital of the Sheikh of Shukory, who is nominally a dependent of Turkey. A large market for agricultural produce and cattle is held twice a week. Pop. Unascertained.

ROGASEN, or ROGAZNO, ro'-ga-sen, a town of Prussia, province of Posen, 23 miles N. of the town of that name. There are an old and new town and a suburb; with a Protestant and two Roman Catholic churches. Manf. Woollen cloths. There is a trade in cattle. Pop. 5,300, a large number being Jews.

ROGATSCHEW, ro-gats'-tchef, a town of European Russia, government of Moghiler, at the confluence of the Druez with the Dnieper. There are a castle and a Greek United and a Catholic church. Pop. 6,200.

ROGER I., roj'-er, Count of Sicily and Calabria, and founder of the Norman dynasty in those countries, was the youngest of 12 sons of Tancred de Hauteville. In 1058 his brother, Robert Guiscard (see GUISCARD), sent him to conquer Calabria, which he effected, and afterwards drove out the Saracens from Sicily. He became ruler there, with the title of count, and on the death of Robert seized from his sons several towns in Calabria, quieting his conscience by building several churches and monasteries, especially the cathedral of Messina

Born in Normandy, 1031; died in Calabria, 1101.

ROGER II., king of Sicily, second son of the preceding, succeeded his elder brother Simon in 1102, being then only 5 years old, the government being administered by his mother. When he was old enough to assume power, he commenced a series of aggressions on his cousin William, son of Robert Guiscard, depriving him of a considerable portion of his dominions, and the pope, Honorius II., not only confirmed him in possession, but added the duchy of Naples. Afterwards Anacletus, the antipope, his brother-in-law, gave him the title of king of Sicily. After considerable fighting with the dispossessed pope, Innocent II., and the princes of Naples and Capua, whose possessions Roger had seized, Innocent was captured by him in 1139, and having withdrawn the excommunication he had pronounced, regained his liberty, and was supported in his claim to the popedom by Roger. The king afterwards quarrelled with the Greek emperor, captured Corfu, and pillaged various towns, one result being that a number of Greek silk-workers were taken captive to Sicily, where they introduced the silk manufactories. He also made conquests on the northern coast of Africa. He was a monarch of great ability and energy, kept up a magnificent court, and had an unrivalled fleet. Like his father, he built several magnificent churches.

Born 1097; died at Palermo, 1154.

ROGER DE HOVEDEN. (See HOVEDEN.)

ROGERS, HENRY, roj'-ers, a modern English essayist, who received his education at Highbury College, and, for some time, officiated as an Independent preacher. Relinquishing this employment in consequence of ill-health, he became professor of the English language and literature in University College, London, which post he subsequently vacated to assume the chair of philosophy at Spring-Hill Independent College, Birmingham. He contributed extensively to the pages of the "Edinburgh Review." As a writer upon the religious opinions of the present time he was very successful, and produced, among other popular works upon that subject, "The Eclipse of Faith," and a "Defence" of the book, in reply to Mr. Francis Newman. He also wrote "The Life and Character of John Howe, M.A.," and "The Superhuman Origin of the Bible, inferred from Itself," published in 1874.

Born at St. Alban's, 1806.

ROGERS, JOHN, an eminent English divine, educated at Pembroke Hall, Cambridge, who became chaplain to the factory at Antwerp, where he assisted Tindal and Coverdale in translating the Bible into English. In the reign of Edward VI. he returned to England, and was appointed a prebend in St. Paul's cathedral, where he was a frequent and zealous preacher. Three days after the accession of Queen Mary, he preached at St. Paul's Cross against the errors of Popery, and this led to his trial and condemnation as a heretic. He was the first person executed in the reign of Mary, being burnt at the stake in Smithfield.

Born 1509; died 1555.

ROGERS, SAMUEL, an English poet, who was the son of a London banker, in whose house of business he was placed. At the age of 23, he produced his first volume of verses, under the title of "An Ode to Superstition, and other Poems." Between the appearance of his first publication and that of his second, "The Pleasures of Memory," which was given to the world in 1792, he travelled upon the continent and in Scotland. Six years later he brought out another volume, after which he remained silent during fourteen years; for he added nothing to his poetical works until the year 1812, when he published a fragment entitled "Columbus." During this interval, however, he had retired from active participation in the affairs of the bank, and his house in St. James's Place, near the Green Park, was for many years the resort of literary celebrities, who met there at the famous "breakfasts." "Jacqueline" was put forth in 1814, "Human Life" in 1819; and in 1822, the poet, then 60 years of age, produced the first part of his "Italy." The complete edition of this latter poem was not published until 1836. That he was a shrewd observer and brilliant talker, full of anecdotes, somewhat satirical and cynical, besides a poet, is evidenced by the publication of his "Table Talk," which appeared after his death.

Born at Newington Green, near London, 1763; died 1855.

ROGET, PETER MARK, ro'-zhet, a modern physician and physiologist, who studied his profession at Edinburgh, and afterwards settled in practice at Manchester, where he became physician to the lunatic asylum and fever hospital. He repaired to the metropolis at a later period, and was elected fellow and secretary of the Royal Society, and lecturer on physiology at the Royal Institution of Great Britain. His works were both numerous and important, the chief of them being one of the Bridgwater treatises; treatise on Physiology and Phrenology; articles for the "Encyclopædia Britannica" and the "Cyclopædia of Practical Medicine;" and papers published in the Transactions of various learned and scientific societies. He was a fellow of the Royal College of Physicians, and of the Astronomical, Zoological, Geographical, and Entomological societies. Apart from the scientific researches which engaged his pen, he produced an excellent work, entitled "A Thesaurus of English Words and Phrases, arranged and classified so as to facilitate the Expression of Ideas, and assist in Literary Composition."

Born in London, 1779; died 1869.

ROHAN, HENRY, Duke of, ro'-an, prince of Leon. He distinguished himself by his bravery at the siege of Amiens, and thereby obtained the friendship of Henry IV., after whose death he became the chief of the Huguenots in the reign of Louis XIII.; but upon the taking of Rochelle and the establishment of peace in 1629, he retired to Venice, where he was chosen generalissimo of the armies of the republic against the imperialists. He was subsequently recalled by the king, who employed him in the Grisons against the Germans and Spaniards. But the duke in 1637 gave up his command, and entered the service of the duke of Saxe-Weimar, by whose side he received a mortal wound at the battle of Rheinfeldch. He wrote the "Interests of Princes;" "The Perfect Captain; or, an Abridgment of Cæsar's Commentaries;" "On the Government of the thirteen Cantons;" and Memoirs.

Born in Brittany, 1579; died 1638.

ROHAN, LOUIS, Prince of, generally called the Chevalier de Rohan, who became a colonel of the guard under Louis XIV. He was a brave but unprincipled man, and engaged in a plot to deliver Quilleboeuf to the Dutch, which being discovered, he was sentenced to death and executed.

Born 1635; died 1674.

ROHAN, CARDINAL DE, a French prelate, who became the dupe of the Countess de Lamotte and others, by whom he was induced to purchase for Queen Marie-Antoinette a magnificent collar of diamonds, in the hopes of obtaining her favours. On the discovery of the affair, he was, in 1785, brought to trial before the parliament and acquitted, but exiled from the French court.

Born 1734; died 1803.

ROHILKUND, ro-hil-koond', a division of the North-West Province, British India, bounded on the E. by the province of Oude, and on the W. and S.W. by the Ganges. The surface is mostly level, watered by tributaries of the Ganges, and in the northern parts are extensive forests. The district derives its name from the Rohiltos, an Afghan tribe, who settled here in the 18th century. Area, 12,659 square miles. Pop. 5,122,557.

ROHTUK, ro-took', a town of British India, in the North-West province, 42 miles N.W. of Delhi. It is surrounded by a wall, and contains a good bazaar. Pop. 14,500.

ROLAND, ro'-land, a hero of chivalric romance. He was one of the paladins of Charlemagne, whose nephew he is by some stated to have been. It is difficult to separate his legendary from his authentic history. Charlemagne appointed him commandant of the Marches of Brittany, and afterwards took him with himself to the conquest of Spain. Returning from that expedition, he fell into an ambuscade at Roncesvalles, where, together with the flower of the French chivalry, he perished. His adventures are celebrated in the famous continental romance entitled the "Chanson of Roland." He is also the hero of the "Roland Amoureux" of Boiardo, and of the "Orlando Furioso" of Ariosto.

Lived in the 8th century.

ROLAND DE LA PLATIÈRE, JEAN MARIE, a French statesman, who was designed for the church; but, relinquishing his studies, became engaged in commercial pursuits. In time, his abilities being very great, he became inspector-general of the manufactories of Picardy, and afterwards of those of Lyons, of which city he was subsequently nominated deputy to the Constituent Assembly. In 1792 he became minister of the interior, holding the office for about nine months. When the party of Girondists, to which he belonged, was proscribed, he fled from Paris, leaving his wife, who refused to accompany him, behind. He concealed himself in Rouen, where, on hearing of the execution of his wife, he ran himself through the body. He wrote some works on the cotton and linen manufactures, "Letters from Switzerland, Italy, Sicily, and Malta," and a "Dictionary of Manufactures and Arts."

Born near Villefranche, 1734; died at Rouen, 1793.

ROLAND, MARIE JEANNE PHILIPON, the wife of the preceding. Her father was an engraver, who was eminent in his profession, and gave her an excellent education. As a child she exhibited remarkable precocity, reading with avidity, poetry, philosophy, and theology, but afterwards preferred the writings of Rousseau and the Encyclopedists. At the age of 25 she married M. Roland, who was attracted by her talents and beauty, though there was a great disparity in their ages. She rendered important services to him in his capacity of minister of the interior; and most of the official writings which he published were the productions of her masculine mind. On his flight, she was sent to the prison of the Abbaye and after an imprisonment of some weeks, was released; but she had scarcely reached her own house before she was again apprehended. In her last imprisonment she wrote an interesting work, entitled "An Appeal to Posterity," or historical notices, anecdotes, and memoirs of herself. At length she was dragged before the revolutionary tribunal, and sentenced to the guillotine. On the scaffold, she displayed great fortitude, saying as she looked on the statue of Liberty, "O Liberty, what crimes are committed in thy name!"

Born at Paris, 1756; died 1793.

ROLETTE, a new county of Dakota Territory, United States. Area, 1,850 square miles. Pop. Unascertained.

ROLLIN, CHARLES, rol'-la(n), a celebrated French writer, was the son of a cutler at Paris, who, after studying in the college of Plessis and at the Sorbonne, became successively professor of languages, rhetoric, and eloquence. In 1694 he was appointed rector of the university of Paris, where he revived the study of Greek, and introduced many important regulations in the academical exercises. Five years later he was appointed coadjutor to the principal of the college of Beauvais, but was dismissed in 1712 through the influence of the Jesuits, he being a zealous Jansenist. His principal works were, an edition of Quintilian; treatise on "Studying and Teaching the Belles-Lettres;" "Ancient History of the Egyptians, Carthaginians, and Babylonians" (which attained great popularity, and was translated into many languages, but is now superseded by abler histories), "History of Rome from the Foundation of that City to the Battle of Actium;" and "Miscellaneous Pieces."

Born at Paris, 1661; died 1741.

ROLLO, rol'-lo, a chieftain of Norway, who, being driven from that country by the king of Denmark, landed in Normandy, which was ceded to him by Charles the Simple in 911. Rollo embraced the Christian religion in the following year, and was baptized by the name of Robert. He assumed the title of duke of Normandy, married Giselle, the daughter of the French king, and was the ancestor of William the Conqueror.

Died 932.

ROMA. (See ROME.)

ROMA, ro'-ma, an island in the Indian archipelago, 17 miles long, and 16 broad. The inhabitants are few in number. Lat. 7° 42′ S. Lon. 127° 20′ E.

ROMA, a township of Queensland, Australia, 330 miles N.W. of Brisbane, in a rich pastoral district. Pop. 2,000.

ROMAGNOSI, GIAN DOMENICO GREGORIO GIUSEPPE, ro'-man-yo-se, an Italian jurist, who became doctor of law of the university of Parma in 1786. He commenced practice as an advocate, and soon became celebrated. He also published several legal works, which were well received in Germany, as well as in his native country. In 1806 he was invited by Napoleon I. to Milan, to assist in the compilation of a criminal code. In the following year he became professor of civil law in the university of Pavia. At the downfall of Napoleon, in 1814, he lost all his public appointments, and henceforth devoted himself to private teaching and to the composition of works of jurisprudence. His legal treatises, which are regarded as among the soundest in the whole range of Italian legal literature, were very numerous. The best known are, "Code of Criminal Procedure for the Kingdom of Italy;" "Fundamental Principles of Administration;" "Introduction to the Study of Universal Public Law;" and several treatises supplied to the "Statistical Annals of Milan." A monument to his memory was raised at Milan.

Born near Piacenza, 1761; died at Milan, 1835.

ROMAINE, WILLIAM, REV., ro'-main, an English divine and theological writer, was the son of a corn-dealer, of Hartlepool, a French protestant refugee. Upon entering into orders, he became a frequent preacher before the University of Oxford, till his strongly Calvinistic religious sentiments caused him to lose his appointments at that seat of learning. He then removed to London, where he held several curacies and appointments as lecturer. In 1766, he was chosen to the rectory of St. Andrew, Wardrobe, Blackfriars, and retained it until his death. As a preacher he exercised a remarkable influence on the "evangelical" party. He was the editor of Calasio's "Concordance to the Hebrew Bible," in which he made some unwarrantable alterations, and published many religious works.

Born at Hartlepool, 1714; died in London, 1795.

ROMAN, ro'-man, a town of Moldavia, Roumania, beautifully situated at the confluence of the Sereth with the Moldawa, 40 miles S.W. of Jassy. It is the see of a Greek bishop, and has Roman antiquities. Pop. Unascertained.

ROMANELLI, GIOVANNI FRANCESCO, ro-ma-nail'-le, an Italian painter, the disciple of Pietro da Cortona, whose style he imitated. Louis XIV. employed him extensively, and many of his works are contained in the Louvre at Paris.

Born at Viterbo, 1617; died 1663.

ROMANO, GIROLAMO, known as Il Romanino, Italian painter, who imitated the styles of Giorgione and Titian.

Born at Brescia, 1480; died 1560.

ROMANO, GIULIO, an Italian painter and architect, whose family name was Bippi. He was the disciple of Raphael, who made him his heir. His greatest pictures are, "The Fall of the Giants," and "The Battles of Constantine." As an architect and engineer he was almost as great, and he built some fine structures at Mantua, where he was patronized by the duke.

Born at Rome, 1492; died 1546.

ROMANOFF, or ROMANOV, MIKAIL, ro-ma-nof, czar or emperor of Russia, descended of a family of German origin, some members of which settled in Russia in the 15th century, and became allied by marriage with the royal house of Rurik, was elected by a council of the states at Moscow in 1613; but had to combat the rival pretensions of Sweden and Poland. The dynasty of Romanov reigned in Russia from the year 1613 until 1761, when the accession of Peter III. established a new dynasty, that of Romanoff-Ollenburg.

Born 1596; died 1648.

ROMANOW, a town of European Russia, government of Jaroslav, on the left bank of the Volga, 23 miles N.W. of Jaroslav. It is surrounded by ramparts and ditches, and has a cathedral and six other churches. Manf. Linen, silk, and leather. There is a considerable trade in corn. Pop. 5,400.

ROMANS, ro'-mawng, a town of France, department Drôme, on the right bank of the Isère, 14 miles N.E. of Valence. An ancient bridge connects the town with a small place, Peage, on the opposite side of the river. Manf. Silk and woollen fabrics. Pop. 14,000.

ROMANUS I., ro-mā'-nus, (Lecapenus), emperor of the East. He was an Armenian, and became a soldier in the army of the emperor Basil, whose life he saved in a battle against the Saracens, which proved the foundation of his fortune. He assumed the imperial power in 919, in conjunction with the emperor Constantine VI. He displayed great military talents, and to his other eminent qualities added the virtues of humanity and piety. He was deposed by his sons and compelled to enter a monastery in 944.

Died 948.

ROMANUS II., called the Younger, grandson of the above, and son of Constantine Porphyrogenitus, whom he poisoned and succeeded in 959. He died of intemperance or of poison.

Died 963.

ROMANUS III. (Argyrus), obtained the imperial throne by his marriage with Zoe, daughter of Constantine the Younger, in 1028. He was a weak prince, and was poisoned by his wife.

Born 968; died 1034.

ROMANUS IV. (Diogenes), succeeded, in 1067, Constantine Ducas, whose widow Eudoxia he married. He defeated the Turks, who had ravaged the empire, but, in 1071, he was taken prisoner by them, but was set at liberty on payment of a heavy ransom, by the sultan Alp Arslan. He was subsequently dethroned by Michael, the son of Constantine Ducas, who deprived him of his eyes.

Died 1101.

ROMANZOV, PIERRE ALEXANDROVITCH, ro'-man-zof, a Russian general, who, under the reign of Catherine II., distinguished himself by his victories over the Turks at Bender, Ismailoff, and other places. In 1771 he crossed the Danube, and advanced as far as Shumla, where the Turks were encamped. After the signature of peace in 1774, the empress loaded him with honours, and created him governor of Ukraine.

Died 1796.

ROMANZOV, NICHOLAS, Count, an eminent Russian statesman, son of the preceding, who, after holding various minor offices, became minister for foreign affairs in 1807. He was present at the interview between Napoleon I. and Alexander at Erfurt in the following year; signed the treaty of peace with Sweden in 1809; the treaty of alliance with Spain in 1812; and, in 1814, retired from public life, in order to devote himself to the cultivation of letters and the arts. At his expense were produced the "Diplomatic Code of Russia;" "History of the Byzantine writer Leo Diaconus;" a Russian translation of the "History of the Mongols and Tartars by Abdul-Ghazi." In 1814 he dispatched a Russian expedition under captain Kotzebue, upon a scientific voyage round the world, entirely at his own cost. He likewise established Lancasterian and Industrial schools upon his estate of Homel, in the government of Mohilev.

Born 1753; died 1826.

ROMBOUTS, THEODORE, rom'-boots, a Dutch painter, who was the son of Abraham Janssens, and excelled in painting historical subjects and conversational pieces, and attempted to rival Rubens, but without success.

Born at Antwerp, 1597; died about 1640.

ROME, rome, the most famous of ancient cities, for nearly 18 centuries the residence of the bishops of the Roman church and the popes, and the capital of the modern kingdom of Italy, is situated on both sides of the Tiber, about 15 miles from the sea. The river having a generally southward course, winds considerably, and a bold curve to the west and south, leaves a large tract of level ground, a peninsula of oval shape, the boundary of which on the east is formed by three hills, known as the Quirinal, Viminal, and Capitol hills. Farther to the east and forming in fact an outward range, are the Palatine, Esquiline, Cœlian, and Aventine hills, the latter approaching the river on the south of the city. These are the famous seven hills of Rome, and the plain enclosed by them and the river is the ancient Campus Martius, or open place for military displays. The Pincian hill, not included in the historical seven, is to the north of the Quirinal. These hills are of moderate elevation, none of them exceeding 200 feet above the sea level. The city is chiefly built upon the last named four of the seven hills, and on them and in the intervening valleys are the principal remains of the temples, palaces, amphitheatres, and other magnificent buildings which adorned the great city of the republic and the empire. The most closely built and busiest part of the modern town now occupies the site of the Campus Martius, the handsomer and more fashionable portion the slopes of the Quirinal, Viminal, and Capitol hills, while the other hills are almost covered with vineyards and gardens, and have scarcely any habitations except a few villas, convents, and cottages of the peasantry. On the left bank of the river is a tract of low ground, bounded by hills, the Vatican hill on the north-west, and the Janiculum on the west, together about a mile and a half long from north to south. On these hills and on the river bank are the suburbs of Borgo, in which are the great cathedral of St. Peter, the Vatican palace, and the castle of San Angelo; and the Trastavere ("beyond the Tiber"). The Borgo is also known as the Leonine city. The river has a length, including windings, of about three miles, and varies in breadth from 200 to 400 feet. At the part where the stream makes the second curve is the island of San Bartolomeo, characterized by classical writers as "the ship of the Tiber," from its shape. It is nearly 400 yards long and 110 yards wide in its broadest part. The current of the river is rapid and the water is tinged with yellow, from the deposits of mud brought down. (See TIBER). There are no quays, and as the banks are low, the low parts of the city are frequently inundated. The whole city, including the Esquiline, Cœlian and Aventine hills, and the Borgo and Trastavere, is enclosed by walls, nearly 13 miles in circuit. The wall which encloses the part of the city on the left bank was begun by Aurelian, in the year 271, completed by Probus, and has been at various times repaired, the last great restoration having been made by direction of pope Benedict XIV. in 1749. The wall enclosing the Leonine city is of comparatively modern construction, the greater part having been built in the 17th century. The old wall is for the most part of brick, but in some parts of stone. There are nearly 300 towers, 12 gates now available and 8 gates which have been closed. The wall has an average height of 50 feet on the outside and of 30 feet on the inside, and there is not a ditch. The gates will be separately mentioned further on. The visitor generally enters the city by the Porta del Popolo, the most northern entrance, which may be considered as the key of modern Rome. Immediately within the gate is a spacious open place, the Piazza del Popolo, in the centre of which is an Egyptian obelisk, brought from the temple of the Sun at Heliopolis by Augustus and erected in the Circus Maximus, and removed to its present site in 1589. It is of red granite and covered with hieroglyphics. On the southern side of the Piazza are two handsome churches each dedicated to Santa Maria, with domes, marking the points of divergence of three of the principal streets of the city. The central street is the Corso, (named from the horse-races which take place in it during the carnival), a noble avenue, a mile long, terminating at the Piazza di Venetia, at the northern foot of the Capitol hill. It is about 50 feet wide, with paved footpaths and lined with splendid palaces and churches. The best streets, most modern houses, and the residences of foreign visitors generally are to the east of the Corso, on the slopes and at the base of the Quirinal hill and a part of the elevated ground which unites it with the Verminal and Esquiline hills. The more easterly of the three main lines of road which meet in the Piazza del Popolo is the Strada del Babuino, leading to the base of the Quirinal; the other road is the Strada di Ripetta and the Via della Scrofa, near the centre almost skirting the river bank. A long road running from the bridge of San Angelo, in an easterly direction, crossing the Corso and the Strada del Bambuino to the Piazza della Trinità de'Monti, in the northern part of the city, being named in various portions of the line, the Via Tordina, Via della Fontanella, and the Strada de Condotti. A fine street nearly a mile long, the Strada Porta Pia, runs in a north-easterly direction from the Quirinal palace to the gate from which it takes its name. Another main road, including the Via Sistina, Via Felice and Via delle Quattro Fontane (street of the four fountains), runs from the Piazza Trinità de'Monti, in a south-eastern direction past the church of St. Maggiore, to the church of Santa Croce in Gerusalemme, at the eastern angle of the city. These are the most important and striking lines of thoroughfare. Between the Corso and the river, the streets are irregular and narrow, badly paved with small pieces of lava, without footpaths, and generally dirty. Near the river and at the western base of the Capital hill, is the Ghetto, or Jews' quarter, a wretched district of narrow alleys and old houses. Still farther south and along the bank of the river are clusters of narrow streets inhabited by the poorer classes. On the opposite side of the river the Borgo and Trastavere are united by a street the Lungara, built by Sixtus V., three quarters of a mile long, and nearly following the line of the river. There are few large squares or open places, the chief being the Piazza del Popolo, already noticed, and the Piazza Navona, to the west of the Corso, and about midway between that street and the river. It is on the site of the ancient Circus Agonalis and still retains the shape, that of a long oval, and has three fountains, the central one circular and 73 feet in diameter. Near this Piazza is the renowned Piazza di Pasquino, a little place, in which is an old mutilated statue, on which for three or four centuries past the Roman people have claimed the right of posting satirical and epigrammatic inscriptions, and the word now in general use, "pasquinade" is derived from this custom. The Piazza di Spagna in the northern part of the city, is at the foot of the eminence on which the church of Trinità de'Monti is situated. On the right bank of the Tiber, and at the eastern extremity of the Leonine city, is the great fortress of Rome, the castle of San Angelo, built for a mausoleum by the emperor Hadrian about the year 130. It is a massive circular tower, built of Parian marble, about 330 feet in diameter, standing on a square basement. It was converted into a fortress about 423; and at the close of the 6th century pope Gregory the Great, while going in public procession to offer up a solemn service to avert a pestilence, declared that he saw the archangel Michael standing on the summit of the fortress, in the act of sheathing his sword to show that the plague was stayed. To commemorate this remarkable vision, the pope erected a chapel on the tower, which was at a later period superseded by a colossal bronze statue of the archangel. In the 14th and 16th centuries the fortress was repaired and greatly strengthened, and in 1644 strong outworks were constructed. In 1825, it was discovered that the square basement contained a large sepulchral chamber. From the summit of the fortress, an extensive view is obtained. The Protestant burying ground, where Keats, the poet, and Gibson, the sculptor, were buried, is near the Porta di San Paolo. There are in modern Rome about 800 streets and lanes, including many built since the occupation of the city by the Italian government in 1870, and as yet only partially inhabited.

Gates.—The gates in the wall of the city now available are, reckoning from the north, by way of the east, round to the river—1, Porta del Popolo, designed by Michael Angelo, and erected in 1561, near the ancient Porta Flaminia, the entrance to the Flaminian way; 2, Porta Salara, greatly damaged in the siege of 1870, and rebuilt—the old gate was that by which Alaric entered Rome in 405, and by a breach in the wall near it the Italian troops stormed the city in 1870; 3, Porta Pia, commenced by Pius IV. from the designs of Michael Angelo, and recently completed; 4, Porta San Lorenzo, the ancient Porta Tiburtina, erected in 402; 5, Porta Maggiore, a noble arch of travertine (limestone formed by deposit from springs containing lime), and the finest gate of Rome; 6, Porta di San Giovanni, built in the 16th century, and from which passes out the road to Albano and the Pontine Marshes; 7, Porta Metronia; 8, Porta di San Sebastiano (the old Porta Appia), with two fine towers of brickwork resting on blocks of white marble; 9, Porta di San Paolo, partially rebuilt by Belisarius in the 6th century, and one of the most picturesque entrances to the city—about half a mile beyond this gate the walls reach the river; 10, Porta Portese, on the right bank of the river, built in the pontificate of Urban VIII., in the first half of the 17th century; 11, Porta di San Pancrazio (the ancient Porta Aurelia), on the Janiculum hill—this was the principal point of attack in the memorable siege made by the French in 1848; 12, Porta Cavelleggieri, near St. Peter's, deriving its name from a cavalry barracks near it. 13, Porta Angelica, erected by Pius IV., on the north side of St. Peter's, in the middle of the 16th century.

Bridges.—There are five bridges across the Tiber, and remains of others. The most northern and also the most important is the Ponte San Angelo (the ancient Pons Ælius), built by the emperor Hadrian in the 2nd century. It crosses the river immediately in front of the castle of San Angelo. The parapets are modern, having been added, with the statues of 10 angels on the piers by Clement IX. in 1668. The bridge has three large and two smaller arches. The statues of St. Peter and St. Paul at the extremity of the bridge were erected in 1530 by Clement VII. About 500 yards from the bridge is a suspension bridge built in 1863. The Ponte Sisto, about three-quarters of a mile lower down the river, has four arches, and was rebuilt in 1474 on the ruins of the Pons Janiculensis. The Ponte de' Quattro Capi ("four heads," from the figures of the four-headed Janus on the piers), connects the island in the Tiber with the eastern bank, has two large and one small central arch—it is the ancient Pons Fabricius, built about 45 B.C., and alluded to in one of the satires of Horace. On the opposite side of the island, and connecting it with the Trastavere, is the Ponte San Bartolommeo, the ancient Pons Cestius, built about the same time as the last-named bridge, and restored 367 A.D. It has one large central and two smaller arches. The Ponte Rollo (or "broken bridge"), a short distance below the island, was built in the 13th century by pope Honorius III., on the site of the Pons Æmilius, which had fallen down. It was twice restored in the 16th century, but in 1598 a great flood carried away the two arches nearest the left bank of the river. They have never been replaced, but a suspension bridge affords communication. About a quarter of a mile lower down may be seen part of the foundations of the oldest and most famous of the Roman bridges, the Pons Sublicius, built of wood about 630 B.C., and memorable as the scene of the heroic devotion of Horatius Cocles, "who kept the bridge so well in the brave days of old," against Lars Porsena. It suffered frequently from floods, and was entirely swept away in 780. Two miles above the city, is the Ponte Molle, rebuilt early in the present century, on the foundations of a bridge erected 108 B.C. At each end of the parapets are colossal statues. One arch was blown up by the French in 1849.

Cathedrals and Churches.—There are 365 churches and chapels, among them the most magnificent structure ever reared for Christian worship, and many others of great architectural and historical interest. Thirteen are known as Basilicas, having been built on the plan of the basilicas, or courts of justice, of ancient Rome, oblong in form, with nave and side aisles, separated by columns, and having in front an enclosed quadrangle, with colonnades round three sides. The old church of St. Peter was built in this style, and therefore the present cathedral, although having none of the original characteristics, is still reckoned as of the basilicas. There are four other large basilicas—the Lateran, or San Giovanni, Santa Maria Maggiore, Santa Croce, in Gerusalemme, and San Paolo and San Lorenzo, beyond the walls. St. Peter's occupies a low site, between the Vatican and Janiculum hills, and in front of a ridge connecting them, a most unfavourable position, rendering an advantageous view of the exterior of the structure unattainable. The cathedral is approached from the east through a superb colonnade, forming two semi-circular porticoes, consisting of 284 columns with 192 colossal statues of saints, and enclosing an area 787 feet wide. The colonnades terminate in two galleries 360 feet long leading to the flight of steps at the entrance of the church. The main body of the building is in the form of a Greek cross, with a nave leading from the superb vestibule. The extreme length of the building is somewhat variously stated, but is about 600 feet; the length of the transepts 445 feet, and the height from the pavement to the top of the cross 458 feet. The diameter of the dome, including the outer walls, is 195 feet. The cathedral exceeds St. Paul's, London, by 64 feet in height, 50 feet in diameter of dome, and 93 feet in length. It occupies altogether a site of five acres, more than twice that of St. Paul's. There are 28 chapels and altars. It is impossible here to describe the details of this magnificent building, the beauty of the decorations, the sculpture and paintings which adorn it. Plans for building the church on the site of the basilica founded by Constantine the Great were prepared in the 15th century. In 1506 the foundations of the new church, to be erected from the designs of Bramante, were laid by pope Julius II., and among succeeding architects, Raffaelle and Giulio Romano, the painters. At length Michael Angelo was appointed, and to him is due the real greatness of the structure, especially the dome, perhaps the noblest monument of his colossal genius. After his death other architects were employed, and various departures made from his designs. The façade, which is too prominent to permit a view of the dome from the piazza, was designed by Carlo Maderno, and completed in 1614. The church was dedicated by Urban VIII. in 1626, and the colonnades were begun, from the designs of Bernini, in 1667. Additions to the building have been made at a later date. From the time when the church was commenced, to the date of its dedication, the building occupied 176 years, and if we include the portions added in 1780 by Pius VI., three and a half centuries were required to bring the edifice to completion, its progress extending over the reigns of 43 popes, and the cost being about £15,000,000. It was to raise money for the erection of this cathedral that the sale of indulgences was resorted to so extensively as to cause the Protestant Reformation. The most interesting church of Rome, next to St. Peter's, is the basilica of San Giovanni, the Lateran, near the south wall of the city. This is considered the mother church of Rome, and five great councils have been held there. It was rebuilt by Clement V. early in the 14th century, and has been enlarged and decorated at later dates, the principal façade having been built in 1734. The statues and paintings are numerous and very fine, and there are several chapels, a baptistery, an oratory and cloister of great beauty. The third in rank of the basilicas is that of Santa Maria Maggiore, known also as the Liberian Basilica, on the Esquiline hill. It was first founded in 352, but the principal portions date from the 16th and 18th centuries. The interior is considered to be one of the finest in existence, and the chapels are magnificently decorated. In front of the church is a Corinthian column of white marble, surmounted by a bronze statue of the Virgin. The fourth in rank of the great basilicas is Santa Croce, or Gerusalemme, at the eastern extremity of the city. It takes its name from its supposed possession of a portion of the true cross and a quantity of earth which was brought from Jerusalem and mixed with its foundation. It has some fine columns of Egyptian granite, but is not otherwise architecturally interesting. San Paolo, the fifth of the great basilicas, is without the city, more than a mile beyond the Porta San Paolo. It was begun in 388, and was restored in the 8th century. The building was nearly destroyed by fire in 1823, but has been rebuilt in conformity with the original design and with great magnificence. The basilica of San Lorenzo is about half a mile beyond the gate of the same name on the road to Tivoli. The foundations were laid in 330; it was partly rebuilt in 578, and in 1216 great additions were made. The church of St. Pietro in Vincoli is regarded as the most ancient in Rome, and is a noble hall, supported by 20 pillars of Parian marble, and adorned with elegant tombs. It was built in 422, to preserve the chain with which, it was believed, St. Peter was bound at Jerusalem, and hence the name, meaning St. Peter in chains. This church contains the famous statue of Moses by Michael Angelo. St. Pietro in Montorio, contains the famous picture of the Transfiguration, by Raffaelle. Santa Maria Egiziaca, a building of the Ionic order, is supposed to be the ancient temple of Fortuna Virilis, and Santa Maria Sopra Minerva, a temple of that goddess; while the church of Ara Cœli is considered as occupying the site of the temple of Jupiter Capitolinus. The Pantheon, built in the reign of Augustus, and called from its circular form, the Rotonda, between the Corso and the Piazza Navona, is one of the most ancient and famous churches of Rome. It was originally a Pagan temple, built 27 B.C. and in 608 A.D. it was consecrated as a Christian church. The circular interior is 142 feet in diameter, above which is a majestic dome. The portico is 110 feet long and 44 feet deep, composed of 16 Corinthian columns of granite, 46 feet high, and each column is a single block. The belfries, quite unworthy of the building, were added in the 17th century. This church is the burial place of Raffaelle, whose tomb was opened for the purpose of verifying the fact, in 1833. It is impossible within our limits to particularise the remaining churches, many of the greatest beauty and interest, adorned with sculptures and paintings by Michael Angelo, Raffaelle, and other great artists, superbly decorated, containg monuments of great historical interest, and abounding with interesting associations. There are 54 parochial churches, 9 being without the walls.

Palaces.—The Vatican palace, the residence of the Pope, to the north of and immediately adjoining St. Peter's, is an immense and irregular pile of buildings, constructed at different periods, some portions dating from the early part of the 4th century. It was a handsome palace in the 8th century, and was occupied by Charlemagne at the time of his coronation. It was rebuilt in the 12th century, and made the residence of the pontiffs after their return from Avignon in 1377. Succeeding pontiffs added to the building, and it was completed nearly in its present form by Alexander VI., about 1500. The site occupied by the various buildings is nearly a quarter of a mile long, and the breadth about 250 yards. It has 20 courts, 4,422 apartments, 8 grand staircases, and 200 smaller staircases. The most remarkable portions of this magnificent palace are the Sala Regia, or hall of audience; the Capella-Sistina, or Sistine Chapel, 146 feet long and 50 feet wide, adorned with the renowned frescoes by Michael Angelo; the Capella-Paolina, or St. Paul's Chapel; the Loggie, with frescoes by Raffaele; the Picture Gallery, containing a small but priceless collection of pictures; and the Museum, consisting of a series of galleries, containing about 12 separate collections, in which are the finest specimens of sculpture in the world, including nearly all the most famous statues of antiquity; a library rich in the rarest manuscripts, and a manufactory of mosaics. The Vatican communicates by a covered gallery with the castle of San Angelo. A group of palaces, forming three sides of the Piazza del Campidoglio, crowns the Capitoline hill, ascended by a magnificent flight of steps, at the summit of which are colossal statues of Castor and Pollux, discovered in the 16th century. In the centre of the piazza is a bronze equestrian statue of Marcus Aurelius, admitted to be the finest statue of the kind in existence. The three palaces were designed by Michael Angelo. That in the centre is the Palace of the Senator, approached by a double flight of stairs, at the base of which is a large fountain, ornamented with a statue of Minerva, and figures emblematical of the Tiber and the Nile. Here are the offices of the municipality, the observatory, and a lofty tower, in which is the great bell which announces the death of the pope. On the western side of the piazza is the Palace of the Conservators, in which are a series of rooms, the Protomoteca, containing busts of illustrious Italians, a gallery of pictures, and various other halls. On the eastern side of the piazza is the Museum of the Capitol. The Quirinal palace, formerly the summer residence of the popes, now the royal palace of the King of Italy, was began by Gregory XIII., in 1574, and completed by several subsequent popes. The frescoes, paintings, statues, and tapestries are superb. The gardens are of considerable extent, handsomely laid out, and accessible to the public. In front of the palace is the Piazza de Monte Cavallo, so named from the colossal statues of Castor and Pollux reining in their horses, discovered in the baths of Constantine. The private palaces of Rome are about 75 in number, mostly of magnificent architecture. Among the finest are the Albani, Barberini, Colonna, Doria-Pamfili, Farnese, Farnesina, and Spada, in which is the statue of Pompey, at the foot of which "great Cæsar fell." The palaces in the more open parts of the city, surrounded by gardens, are known as villas, the most noticeable being the Albani, Borghese, Barberini, Medici, and Pamfili-Doria.

Galleries and Museums.—The principal public collections are at the Vatican, the Museum of the Capitol, the Quirinal palace, the Lateran museum, and the Collegio Romano; and at many of the private palaces, the most important being at the Borghese (palace and villa), Colonna, Corsini, Farnese, Farnesini, Rospigliosi, and Spada, and the Monte de Pietà. Some of the finest pictures in Rome are in the churches.

Theatre.—A splendid theatre, capable of accommodating 3,500 persons, near the Via Nazionale, was opened in the presence of the King of Italy, in November, 1880.

Promenades and Gardens.—The gardens of the Vatican and Quirinal palaces are open to the public. The gardens on Monte Pincio, on the north of the city, and of the Villa Pamfili, are favourite resorts.

Colleges and Academies.—The Collegio della Sapienza, or university, was founded as a school for canon and civil law in 1244, and the scope of studies was enlarged by Boniface VIII. in 1295, by Clement V. in 1310, and by later popes. It occupies a building designed by Michael Angelo, and finished in 1576. There are 42 professorships and about 1,100 students. The Collegio Romani is a Jesuit college, with about 1,250 students. The Collegio de Propaganda Fide is a training school for missionaries, founded by Gregory XV. in 1622. The Academy of St. Luke (the Roman academy of the fine arts), was established by Sixtus V. in 1588; and there are archæological societies, and English, Irish, Scottish, and American colleges.

Hospitals and Charitable Institutions.—These are numerous and well supported; San Spirito, near St. Peter's, founded at the end of the 12th century, is richly endowed, and combines a hospital for the sick with a foundling hospital and a lunatic asylum. Santissimo Salvatore, near the Lateran church, founded in 1219, chiefly for sick and aged females; La Consolazione, on the slope of the Capitol hill; Dei Benfratelli, on the island in the Tiber, on the site of the old temple of Esculapius, "father of the healing art;" San Gallico, in the Trastavere, for skin diseases; and Santa Trinità de' Pellegrini, near the Ponte de' Quattro Capi, chiefly for convalescents, and for the reception of pilgrims, are the chief public hospitals, and there are many smaller institutions for Protestants and foreigners, and there are several confraternities for assisting the poor at their own residences. San Michele, in the Trastavere, is an industrial school.

Antiquities.—The city abounds with stupendous memorials of the architecture and sculpture of ancient Rome, in the kingly, republican, and imperial epochs. Space will not permit an enumeration or description of all these remains, but the most extensive and famous may be briefly indicated. The great Roman forum, at the foot of the Capitol and Palatine hills, is now, and has been for three centuries, the Campo Vaccino, or cattle-market; there are remains of pillars, porticoes, and three fine temples. Trajan's forum, the forums of Nerva, Augustus, and Julius Cæsar, were other fine open spaces, adorned with statues and noble buildings, some traces of which remain. The most stupendous of all the remains is the Colosseum, or Coliseum, or Flavian amphitheatre, begun by Vespasian, 72 A.D., and completed by Domitian. It is situated between the Esquiline, Palatine, and Cœlian hills, is oval in shape, and covers an area of five acres. There are four stories or galleries, in the Doric, Ionic, and Corinthian styles. The height of the outer wall is 157 feet; the diameters respectively, including outer walls, 584 and 468 feet, and the building was calculated to hold 87,000 spectators. In the arena gladiatorial exhibitions, fights of beasts, and martyrdom of Christians took place. In 1750 Benedict XIV. consecrated the building to the memory of the Christian martyrs, and extensive works have recently been undertaken to preserve it from decay. There are some remains of the famous Circus Maximus, between the Palatine and Aventine hills, and of other amphitheatres. There are several triumphal arches, the most memorable being the arch of Constantine, between the Cœlian and Palatine hills, with fine sculptures and bas-reliefs; and the arch of Titus, near the Forum, erected in honour of Titus after his conquest of Jerusalem, and especially remarkable for the bas-reliefs representing the carrying away of the candlesticks, table of shewbread, and other sacred articles from the temple. The principal columns are that of Trajan, erected 114 A.D., adorned with sculptures winding spirally around it, 127 feet high, and surmounted by a statue of St. Peter in gilt bronze, replacing the colossal statue of Trajan which originally stood there; and the column of Marcus Aurelius Antoninus, in the Piazza Colonna, to which it gives the name. Recent explorations have disclosed remains of the palace of the Cæsars, near the Campo Vaccino, and the great temple of Jupitor on the Capitol hill; and there are remains of many temples, baths, aqueducts, and tombs, which we cannot here particularize. The Pantheon, or Rotonda, is mentioned under the heading "Churches."

Catacombs.—These are among the most interesting sights of Rome, consisting of large excavations, about 60 in number, in every direction outside the walls of the city. They served as places of refuge and worship for the early Christians, numbers of whom were buried there, and the inscriptions are numerous and extremely interesting. There is also a Jewish catacomb.

Divisions.—The city is divided into 14 quarters or Rioni, 12 on the left, and 2 on the right bank of the river.

Water, Gas Supply, and Sewerage.—Four aqueducts supply modern Rome, the Acqua Vergine, Acqua Felice, Acqua Paoli, and the new Acqua Pia. Gas is supplied by an English company, which has extensive works outside the Piazza del Popolo. The city is well drained by sewers, chiefly on the line of the Cloacæ constructed on so large a scale for ancient Rome.

Markets.—There is no regular meat market; a market for game and poultry is held in the streets near the Pantheon; there are two fish markets, one in the Ghetto and the other near the Corso, and there is a very well supplied fruit and vegetable market.

Manf.—Not extensive, consisting of woollen and silk goods, velvets, gloves, artificial flowers, chocolate, musical strings, jewellery, casts, and objects of art.

Pop. of the province of Roma, of which Rome forms a part, 926,732; the city of Rome, 271,702.

Lat. 41° 54′ N. Lon. 12° 28′ E.

History.—It is probable that in prehistoric times small fortified villages stood on each of the seven hills on which the city was afterwards built. The early annals are so infused with mythical tradition that it is difficult to speak positively as to remote events. But it would appear to be established that Romulus founded the city on the Palatine hill, 753 B.C. (see ROMULUS), and that after the union of the Romans and Sabines, the Quirinal and Capitol hills were added, and that the city soon spread over the other four hills. Servius, about 570 B.C., completed walls having a circuit of about five miles, and marking the limits of the city proper, although suburban districts sprang up until the end of the 3rd century A.D., when Aurelius built the walls now standing. In 387 B.C. the city was burned by the Gauls, but speedily rebuilt. At the commencement of the Christian era the population of the city was about a million. A large portion was burned by Nero, 64 A.D. In 410 it was taken by Alaric, in 455 by Genseric, and in 476 by Odoacer, and was subsequently taken and retaken several times. The city became independent under the popes about 728, was taken by Arnulf and the Germans, 896, and by the emperor Henry IV. in 1104. In 1309 the papal court removed to Avignon, returning to Rome in 1377. In the early part of the 16th century Leo X. greatly embellished the city, which was taken in 1527, after a desperate defence, by the Constable de Bourbon, who was killed in scaling the walls. Napoleon, in 1808, annexed it to the kingdom of Italy, and declared it to be the second city of the empire. It was restored to the pope in 1814. The pope having fled from the city in the outbreak of 1848, a French army besieged it in the following year, and after a brave resistance the Romans capitulated. The troops of the king of Italy took possession of Rome in 1870, and in the following year it became the capital of the new kingdom of Italy, the pope residing in the Vatican.

ROME, a city and one of the county seats of Oneida county, New York, United States, on the west Mohawk river, 100 miles N.W. of Albany. It is beautifully laid out, with wide streets, shaded by maple and elm trees, and there are public and private parks, and many fountains. Manf. Locomotives, machinery, and joinery. Pop. 13,000.

ROME, a city, and the county seat of Floyd county, Georgia, at the confluence of the Etonah and Oostenaula rivers, 60 miles N.W. of Atalanta. It is beautifully situated on several hills, and is in the centre of the rich iron ore deposits of north-western Georgia. Manf. Iron, machinery and nails. There are three suburban villages. Pop. 6,000.

ROMFORD, rum'-ford, a market-town of Essex, on the Rom, or Bourne, 12 miles N.E. of London. Near the middle of the town stand the market-house and town-hall. The church is an ancient building, consisting of a nave, chancel, and north aisle, with a tower at the west end. There are, besides, an almshouse, a workhouse, and a cavalry barracks. Manf. Agricultural implements. There are large breweries. Pop. 6,861.—A station on the Great Eastern railway.

ROMILLY, SIR SAMUEL, rom'-il-le, an English lawyer and law reformer, descended from a family of French Protestants who took refuge in England after the revocation of the edict of Nantes. He was articled to a clerk in chancery; but at the expiration of his term, in 1778, resolved to qualify himself for the profession of a barrister. In 1783 he was called to the bar. After remaining for several years with but little employment, he attracted the favourable notice of Lord Lansdowne, who had conceived a high opinion of his abilities, and twice offered him a seat in parliament, which he declined. After attaining to a large practice as a chancery lawyer, he, in 1800, became king's counsel; in 1806 he was appointed solicitor-general, elected a member of parliament, and, very much against his will, knighted. In the house of commons he distinguished himself by his impressive eloquence on the Whig benches. He advocated the reform of parliament, the abolition of the slave-trade, the mitigation of the severity of the criminal code, and the emancipation of the Roman Catholics. He published one of his speeches, in a pamphlet entitled "Observations on the Criminal Law, as it relates to capital punishment, and on the mode in which it is administered." Throughout the remaining years of his life he nobly persevered in his efforts to effect an amelioration of the terribly severe laws relative to the execution of criminal justice; there being, at that period, almost 300 crimes punishable by death. After the dissolution of parliament, in 1818, he was elected for Westminster; but, having about that time lost his wife, his mind was affected to such a degree that, in a fit of delirium, he put an end to his life.

Born in London, 1757; died 1818.

ROMILLY-SUR-SEINE, ro-mé'-ye, a town of France, department Aube, on the left bank of the Seine. It is beautifully situated among meadows, and there is a fine château, on the site of an ancient castle, of which some ruins remain. Manf. Hosiery. Pop. 4,600.

ROMNEY, GEORGE, rum'-ne an English painter, who was apprenticed to an itinerant artist, whom he soon surpassed. In 1762 he went to London, where he became a favourite portrait-painter. As soon as he had realised a sufficiency to enable him to visit Italy, he studied there with avidity, and returned to London, where he rapidly acquired fame and fortune.

Born at Dalton, Lancashire, 1734; died at Kendal, 1802.

ROMNEY, NEW, a market-town and borough of Kent, one of the Cinque Ports, 21 miles S.W. of Canterbury, in the middle of Romney Marsh. (See KENT.) It was formerly a seaport, but is now a mile and a half from the sea. It has an ancient church. Pop. 1,130.

ROMORANTIN, rom'-o-ran-ta(n), a town of France, department Loir-et-Cher, on the Sauldre, 25 miles S.E. of Blois. Manf. Woollens, tapes, and leather. Pop. 6,700.

ROMSDAL, roms'-dal, a district or "ampt" of Norway, extending from the Sneehattan, on the west, to the Atlantic on the north-west. The coast is very rugged, with a large number of islands and many fiords, and the interior is mountainous. Area, 5,650 square miles. Pop. 118,000.

ROMSEY, rum'-se, a market-town and municipal borough of Hampshire, on the Test, 7 miles N.W. of Southampton. There is a very large and handsome church, formerly belonging to an abbey founded in the 10th century. Manf. Leather, paper, sacking, and flax. A large trade in timber, coal, and corn is carried on. Pop. 2,060.—A station on the London and South-Western railway.

ROMULUS, rom'-u-lus, in Roman legend, the founder of the city, and brother of Remus, was the son of Sylvia, daughter of Numitor, king of Alba. She was placed among the vestals, but being delivered of these two children at a birth, declared that the god Mars was their father. Amulius, who had usurped the throne of Numitor, his brother, caused the children to be thrown into the Tiber. They were cast ashore at the foot of the Palatine hill, where they were suckled by a she wolf, and where they were found by Faustulus, the king's shepherd. On coming of age, they discovered their origin, put Amulius to death, and reinstated Numitor. A difference, however, arose between the two brothers, and Romulus put Remus to death. He afterwards founded the city of Rome, by collecting a number of strangers, chiefly runaway slaves, and to obtain wives they forcibly abducted the Sabine women, which led to a series of wars. After a reign of 37 years he was taken alive to the celestial regions.—Such is the story given by Plutarch, but modern writers, following the researches of Niebuhr, declare that there is very little historical foundation for any portion of the legend.

RONA, EAST and WEST, ro'-na, two small islands of the Hebrides.

RONALDSHAW, NORTH and SOUTH, ron'-ald-shai, two small islands of the Orkneys.

RONCESVALLES, ronce'-val, a frontier village of Spain, Navarre, 20 miles N.E. of Pamplona. It formerly possessed one of the most famous sanctuaries in Europe. Here the rearguard of the army of Charlemagne was destroyed, under Roland, in 778. (See ROLAND.)

RONCIGLIONE, ron-seel-ye-o'-ne, a city of Central Italy, 12 miles S.E. of Viterbo. There are a Gothic castle, several palaces, and a fine cathedral. Sulphurous springs are in the neighbourhood. Manf. Hats, cloth, cotton goods, iron and brass. Pop. 5,000.

RONDA, ron'-da, a town of Spain, province of Malagar, on the Guadiaro, 50 miles N.E. of Gibraltar. It is an old Moorish town, and consists of the town and a large suburb called El Mercadello, on the other side of the river. It has several churches, monasteries, and convents, and stands on the summit of a rocky mountain, divided by a deep ravine or fissure, over which there are two bridges, each of a single arch, the one at the height of 120 feet above the water, but the other at the almost unparalleled height of 280 feet. Manf. Principally leather and silk stuffs. There is a great annual fair. Pop. 20,000.—In the 14th century this place was the capital of the Moorish chief Abu-Malik.

RONGE, JOHANNES, rong'-a, a modern German religious reformer, who was the son of a small farmer, and was educated for the Roman Catholic priesthood. In 1842 he was, however, deprived of his charge for publishing a letter in which some errors and abuses of the Roman Catholic church were condemned. In 1844 he published a letter to the bishop of Breslau, in which he denounced the "Holy Coat," then being exhibited at Treves, as an imposture. The religious movement inaugurated by that epistle led to the foundation of a new German Catholic church independent of the papacy. Ronge was regarded as the apostle of the new church, and travelled over his native country making converts. He was called a "second Luther," and in a few years assisted in instituting upwards of 200 societies; but, subsequently to the revolution of 1848, the German governments determined to suppress these new congregations. Ronge became an exile in England, where he devoted himself to preaching to his fellow-countrymen in London, and to the propagation of Frœbel's system of infant education; upon which subject he published a book entitled "A Practical Guide to the English Kinder Garten (Children's Garden)."

Born at Birchofswalde, Silesia, 1813.

RONNE, ron, a town and seaport of Denmark, capital of the island of Bornholm, in the Baltic. It is defended by batteries, and has an hospital and a grammar-school. There is a good harbour, and shipbuilding is carried on. Pop. 5,500.

RONNEBURG, ron'-ne-boorg, a town of the duchy of Saxe-Altenburg, Germany, 14 miles S.W. of Altenburg. The town is walled and defended by two forts. Manf. Woollens. Pop. 6,300.

RONSARD, PIERRE DE, ron'-sar, a French poet, who was page to the dauphin and to the duke of Orleans, and afterwards served James V., king of Scotland; in which country he remained two years, and then returned to France, where he was employed in several negotiations of importance. He subsequently retired from court, and, on taking orders, obtained some ecclesiastical benefices. His poems were, in his age, so much esteemed as to procure him the title of the "Poet of France." His best poems were "Amours," and four books of odes. He was violently opposed to the Huguenots. Queen Elizabeth sent him a set of diamonds, and Mary Queen of Scots sent him a valuable set of plate.

Born 1524; died near Tours, 1585.

ROOKE, SIR GEORGE, rook, an English admiral, who entered the navy at an early age, and rose by his merit to the first honours of his profession. He gave eminent proofs of his skill and courage in many expeditions, and particularly in 1692, burning thirteen of the French ships at La Hogue, for which he was knighted, raised to the rank of vice-admiral of the red, and received a pension of £1,000 a-year. He afterwards destroyed a Spanish fleet, laden with treasure, off Vigo, and in 1704, in conjunction with Sir Cloudesley Shovel, he took Gibraltar by bombardment, after which he obtained a decisive victory over the French fleet off Malaga, in which desperate fight the English lost 2,000 and the French 3,000 men. Notwithstanding these eminent services, he was, by the influence of the Whig party, obliged to resign the command, whereupon he retired to his estate in Kent.

Born near Canterbury, 1650; died 1709.

ROOKS, a new county of Kansas, United States. Area, 900 square miles. Pop. 8,112.

RONSDORF, rons'-dorf, a town of Prussia, Rhine Province, on the Morsbach, 17 miles E. of Düsseldorf. There are a Roman Catholic and two Protestant churches. Manf. Cotton and silk goods, ribbons, lace, cutlery, paper, and iron. Pop. 10,000.

ROOKE, LAURENCE, an English astronomer, who, in 1652, was chosen Gresham professor of astronomy at the university of Oxford, which office he afterwards exchanged for that of geometry. He was one of the first members of the Royal Society, and wrote "Observations on Comets;" "Directions to Seamen;" "Method of observing the Eclipses of the Moon;" and "Observations on the Eclipses of the Satellites of Jupiter."

Born in Kent, 1623; died 1662.

ROOME, EDWARD, room, an English lawyer, who became solicitor to the treasury. He wrote some satirical papers called "Pasquin," against Pope, who gave him a place in his "Dunciad." He was also the author of a dramatic piece called "The Jovial Crew."

Died 1729.

ROORKEE, roor-kee', a town of British India. North-Western Province, 90 miles N.E. of Delhi. It is now an important station, and Thomason College has been established for instruction in civil engineering. A magnificent aqueduct, with 15 large arches, carries the great Ganges canal over the river Solane.

ROOSENDAL, roos'-en-dal, a market-town of the Netherlands, province of North Brabant, 14 miles S.W. of Breda. Several cattle fairs are held. Pop. 7,600.

ROQUE, ST., rok, a member of a noble French family, who, early in the 14th century, while on a pilgrimage to Rome, devoted himself to the relief of the sufferers from a terrible outbreak of plague at Piacenza. Being himself seized with the disease and abandoned by all about him, a dog licked his sores, and he was restored to health. He lived afterwards in great sanctity at Montpelier. He is a saint of the Catholic church, and is considered the patron of those sick of the plague.

Died at Montpelier, 1327.

ROQUE, ST., a city of Spain, province of Cadiz, 7 miles N.W. of Gibraltar. Manf. Cordage, vermicelli, liqueurs, leather, soap, and earthenware. Pop. 6,700.

ROQUEMAIRE, rok'-mair, a town of France, department Gard, on the right bank of the Rhone, 25 miles N.E. of Nismes. Manf. Casks, silk, and oil. There is a trade in horses, brandy, and cattle. Pop. 3,500.—This is supposed to be the place where Hannibal crossed the Rhone.

ROQUEVAIRE, rok'-vair, a town of France, department Bouches-du-Rhône, on the Huveaune, 11 miles N.E. of Marseilles. Manf. Soap, olive-oil, and paper. Pop. 3,700.

RORAAS, ro'-ros, a town of Norway, 67 miles S.E. of Drontheim. It is noted for its copper-mines. Pop. 3,500.

ROREE, or LOHRI, ro-ree', a town of Scinde, British India, on the east bank of the Indus. Manf. Cotton and silk fabrics, gold and silver wares, paper, and leather. Pop. 8,000.

ROSA, SALVATOR, sal-va'-tor ro'-sa, an Italian painter, who excelled in painting combats, sea-pieces, and landscapes of romantic scenery, with banditti. He also painted altar-pieces and historical subjects at Florence. He painted with the greatest rapidity, and was also a musician, poet, architect, and an excellent comic actor and improvisatore. His satirical poems so greatly irritated his enemies, that he was compelled to seek an asylum under the Medicis at Florence.

Born near Naples, 1615; died at Rome, 1673.

ROSA, MONTE. (See ALPS.)

ROSA, SANTA. (See SANTA ROSA.)

ROSAMOND CLIFFORD, ros'-a-mond, usually called Fair Rosamond, was the daughter of Walter de Clifford, baron of Hereford. She was the favourite mistress of Henry II., who is reported to have secreted her in a labyrinth at his palace of Woodstock, where, according to some writers, she was discovered and poisoned by Eleanor, queen of that monarch. But it seems more certain that she died in the nunnery of Godstow, in Oxfordshire. She had two sons by Henry, —William, called Longsword, earl of Salisbury, and Geoffrey, who became archbishop of York.

Died about 1173.

ROSARIO, ro-sa'-re-o, a city of the Argentine Confederation, province of Santa Fé, on the right bank of the Parana, 170 miles N.W. of Buenos Ayres. A very large shipping trade is carried on, and there is good railway communication with the interior provinces. Pop. 42,000, besides nearly 20,000 in the adjoining district, composed of a mixture of nearly all nations.

ROSARIO, or ASILO DEL ROSARIO, a town of Mexico, state of Sinaloa, on the river Rosario, about 30 miles from its mouth in the Pacific. It was formerly an important mining town, but is now much decayed. Pop. 7,000.

ROSAS, DON JUAN MANUEL, ro'-sas, ex-president of the Argentine Confederation. He was descended of an old Spanish family, and having displayed bravery and capacity in some minor appointments, was, in 1829, nominated captain-general or governor of Buenos Ayres. In 1835 he became president of the Argentine Confederation; but by seeking to obtain for the province of Buenos Ayres a preponderating influence and advancement, he became embroiled with Brazil, and afterwards with France and England, in consequence of an attack made upon Monte Video. Defeated in 1845, he nevertheless offered an obstinate resistance until 1850, when the states under his rule revolted against his tyrannical measures. Urquiza was nominated president, and in 1851 he totally defeated Rosas, who was compelled to make his escape from the country, and to take refuge in England, where afterwards he chiefly resided.

Born at Buenos Ayres, 1793; died 1876.

ROSCIUS, QUINTUS, rosh'-i-us, a Roman actor, who became the most famous performer of his age, and is said to have received about a thousand denarii per day (upwards of £35) for his acting. Cicero speaks in the highest terms of his talents. The Roman state assigned him a considerable pension, and he left an immense fortune.

Died 62 B.C.

ROSCOE, WILLIAM, ros'-ko, an English historian, was the son of a market-gardener near Liverpool, and having been placed for a short period in a bookseller's shop, was afterwards articled to an attorney. In 1774 his term expired, and he became an attorney; but in the meanwhile he had studied the Greek and Latin, and mastered the French and Italian languages. He also wrote some verses, one of which, upon the art of engraving, led to his introduction to sir Joshua Reynolds. At the outburst of the French revolution he defended its principles against the strictures of Burke. In 1796 appeared his fine "Life of Lorenzo de' Medici," a work which soon acquired for him a high reputation, and was translated into French, German, and Italian. His "Illustrations Historical and Critical of the Life of Lorenzo de' Medici" followed; and, in this work, he defended himself against a considerable amount of adverse criticism to which he had been subjected. The "Life and Pontificate of Leo X." was his next production, and formed a sort of continuation of the former work; and both illustrating, as they did, a brilliant period of modern Italian history, were hailed as splendid contributions to literature. He subsequently became member of parliament for Liverpool, and partner in a banking-house. In the House of Commons he voted with the Whigs, and advocated the abolition of the slave trade. He was a munificent patron of literature and art.

Born near Liverpool, 1753; died at Liverpool, 1831.

ROSKOFF, ros'-kof, a seaport of France, department Finistère, 33 miles N.E. of Brest. The harbour is good, and well sheltered. There are a handsome church, partly in the Gothic and partly in the Italian styles, and a Capuchin convent, in the garden of which is a famous fig-tree of enormous size. Pop. 4,100.

ROSCOMMON, ros-kom'-mon, an inland county of Ireland, in the province of Connaught, on the E. of the counties of Longford and Westmeath by the river Shannon, and bounded S. by Gal- W. by Mayo, N. by Sligo, and N.E. by Leitrim. The country is generally flat and open, in some places sprinkled with rocks, in many interrupted by extensive bogs, and rising in the north to the Curlew Mountains, the highest peak of which is Slieve Curkagh (1098 feet), and on the south into the Slieve Bawn (highest point 867 feet). The soil is generally light and fertile, and the famous "plain of Boyle" affords the finest sheep pasturage in Ireland.

Rivers.—The SHANNON and Suck, the latter of which divides it from Galway.

Area.—950 square miles.

Pop.—131,755.

Chief Towns.—ROSCOMMON, Boyle, Athlone, Elphin, and Spokestown. ATHLONE and BALLINASLOE are partly within the county.

Parliamentary Representation.—The county returns two members.

History.—This was the county of the Irish septs of O'Conor, O'Daly, O'Kelly, and MacDermot. There are within the limits of the county a great number of interesting Celtic antiquities, and the ruins of ecclesiastical edifices.

ROSCOMMON, a market town, capital of the above county, 96 miles N.W. of Dublin. There are the remains of a castle and Dominican abbey, built in the 13th century. Very little trade is carried on. Pop. 2,380, nearly all Roman Catholics. —A station on the Midland Great Western of Ireland railway.

ROSCOMMON, an almost uninhabited county of Michigan, United States. Area, 625 square miles.

ROSCOMMON, Wentworth Dillon, Earl of, an English writer, who received his first education at the seat of the earl of Strafford, his uncle, in Yorkshire. At the fall of Strafford, he was sent to Caen, in Normandy, where he had for his tutor the eminent scholar Bochart. At the Restoration he was made captain of the band of pensioners, which post he afterwards resigned, and went to Ireland, where he was appointed captain of the guards; but, dissipating his fortune by gaming, he returned to court, and was made master of the horse to the duchess of York. He now altered his course of life, married a daughter of the earl of Burlington, and applied himself to poetry. He wrote "Essay on Translated Verse;" "Horace's Art of Poetry translated into English Blank Verse;" and a collection of prologues and epilogues to plays. His remains were interred in Westminster Abbey.

Born about 1633; died 1684.

ROSCREA, ros-kra', a market town of Tipperary, Ireland, 94 miles S.W. of Dublin. It is a very ancient town, and there are remains of a large castle, a round tower, and two abbeys. The Roman cathedral is a handsome building. Manf. Coarse woollen cloth. There is a market for agricultural produce. Pop. 3,000, mostly Roman Catholics.

ROSEAU, rose-o', capital of the island of Dominica, West Indies, on the south-west coast. There is a good harbour. Pop. 5,000.

ROSEN, FRIEDRICH AUGUST, ro'-sen, German Oriental scholar. He studied at Leipsic and Berlin, and was for about three years professor of Oriental literature in the university of London. He was secretary of the Asiatic Society, and his editions of Oriental works, and original works on the subject are of great value.

Born in Hanover, 1805; died in London, 1837.

ROSENAU, ros'-e-nou, a town of Hungary, on the Sajo, 105 miles N.E. of Pesth. There are a Franciscan convent and college. Manf. Woollens, stoneware, leather, and paper. Pop. 4,800.

ROSENAU, or ROSNYO, a market-town of the Austrian empire, in Transylvania, 16 miles S.W. of Kronstadt. There are a Protestant and a Wallachian church, and an ancient castle, on a height near the market-place. Pop. 4,000.

ROSENHEIM, ro-sen-hime', a town of Bavaria, near the confluence of the Giessen with the Inn, 31 miles S.E. of Munich. Manf. Articles in brass and marble. There is a trade in salt, of which immense quantities are produced from the salt springs in the neighbourhood. Pop. 5,400.

ROSENMÜLLER, JOHANN GEORG, ro-sen-me(r)t-ler, German divine who held professorships successively at Erlangen, Giessen, and Leipsic, and was the author of several critical and historical works, in connection with Biblical literature and church history.

Born at Ummerstädt, 1736; died at Leipsic, 1815.

ROSENMÜLLER, ERNST FRIEDRICH KARL, eldest son of the preceding, Oriental scholar and Biblical critic, professor at Leipsic. His elaborate critical work on the Old Testament is highly valued by scholars, and he compiled a handbook of Biblical criticism and exegesis, and wrote treatises on the Arabic language.

Born 1768; died 1835.

ROSETO, ro-sat'-to, a town of Italy, province of Foggia, 16 miles S.W. of Lucera. Pop. 5,800.

ROSETTA, ro-set'-ta, a seaport city of Egypt, on the west bank and near the mouth of that branch of the Nile which now forms one of the two great channels by which it enters the sea, 40 miles from Alexandria. The town is distinguished by the beauty of its environs, being completely embosomed in a grove of date, banana, sycamore, and other trees. There is a sandbar at the mouth of the river, preventing the entrance of large vessels. Pop. 16,000. Lat. 31° 25' N. Lon. 30° 20' E.—Here was discovered, in 1799, the famous Rosetta stone (now in the British Museum), which afforded the first clue to the interpretation of Egyptian hieroglyphics.

ROSHEIM, ros'-hime, a town of Germany, in Alsace-Lorraine, in a beautiful valley at the foot of the Vosges, on the Mogel, 13 miles S.W. of Strasburg. It is walled and divided into a high, middle, and low town. There are several springs in the vicinity. Manf. Linen. Pop. 3,700.

RÖSKILDE. (See ROESKILDE.)

ROSLIN, ros'-lin, a village of Scotland, on the left bank of the Esk, 7 miles S. of Edinburgh. The ruins of Roslin castle and the beautiful chapel, founded in 1446, are very interesting. The castle was the seat of the St. Clairs, earls of Caithness and Orkney.

ROSS, SIR JOHN, ross, an English admiral and arctic navigator, who commenced his career as a volunteer on board the Pearl frigate, in 1786. During the subsequent five years he served on board various ships of the royal navy, but then joined the mercantile marine, returning, however, to the royal service in 1799, as midshipman of the Weasel sloop of war. He served with distinction until the end of the war in 1815, by which time he had attained the rank of commander, and was, in 1818, appointed to the command of the Isabella discovery vessel, and was sent out, in company with the Alexander, under lieutenant Parry, to ascertain the existence or non-existence of a north-west passage. In 1819 he produced a narrative of his voyage, and in 1827 attempted to reach the north pole; after which he again went upon a voyage of discovery to the Arctic Seas, in a vessel equipped at the expense of sir Felix Booth, sheriff of London. His nephew, commander James Clark Ross, accompanied him, and the ship left the Thames in 1829. They reached Felix Harbour, in the Gulf of Boothia, where, after being several times frozen up, Captain Ross was compelled to abandon his ship, in 1832. They struggled on in boats and sledges, gaining the entrance of Lancaster Sound in August, 1833. He reached England in September, 1833, and was knighted and created a companion of the Bath. The narrative of his second voyage was published in 1835; in 1839 he was appointed consul at Stockholm; in 1850 he was dispatched in search of sir John Franklin, and, having deemed himself neglected by the government, produced a "Narrative of the Circumstances and Causes which led to the failure of the Searching Expeditions sent by Government and others for the Rescue of Sir John Franklin." He reached the grade of rear-admiral in 1851. In addition to the works already quoted, he produced a "Treatise on Navigation by Steam," "Memoirs and Correspondence of Admiral Lord de Saumarez," and "Letters to Sea Officers."

Born in Wigtownshire, Scotland, 1777; died in London, 1856.

ROSS, SIR JAMES CLARK, Arctic explorer, captain in the royal navy, and nephew of the preceding, under whom he served as midshipman at the commencement of his career. Between the years 1819 and 1827 he served under sir William Edward Parry, in four expeditions to the Arctic Seas. In the latter year he was promoted to the rank of commander, and after his return from the second voyage of his uncle, he was, in 1834, created post-captain, in reward for the discovery of the northern magnetic pole. He was next engaged in performing a magnetic survey of Great Britain and Ireland. In 1839 he was placed in command of an expedition to the Antarctic Seas, the object of which was magnetic investigation. After an absence of four years, during which a vast and valuable body of information relative to magnetism, meteorology, geography, zoology, and botany, was collected, he returned to England. He had discovered a large continent in the Antarctic regions, to which he gave the name of Victoria Land, and an active volcano, 12,000 feet high, which he named Mount Erebus. In 1848 he went out in search of sir John Franklin, but, like the other explorers, unhappily met with no success. He was one of the most skilful and scientific officers in the royal navy, was accorded the degree of D.C.L. by the university of Oxford, and was fellow of the Royal, Geographical, Astronomical, and other societies. In 1844 he was created a knight. He produced a "Voyage of Discovery and Research in the Southern and Antarctic Regions, during the years 1839-43; with plates and woodcuts."

Born in London, 1800; died 1862.

ROSS, SIR WILLIAM CHARLES, an English miniature-painter, whose parents were both devoted to the arts; his father as a miniature-painter and drawing-master. By the time he was 9 years of age, the proficiency in drawing of "little Ross" was almost unprecedented. In the year 1808, at the age of 13, he was admitted a student of the Royal Academy, where his assiduous study attracted the notice of many. The first ambition of the young aspirant was to excel in historical art, and from Benjamin West, the president of the time, he received much kind precept. When he was about 20, however, he altered his course, and adopted that branch of art in which he became unrivalled. In 1837 he was appointed miniature-painter to the queen, and in 1838 he was elected associate of the Royal Academy, in 1842 academician, and in the same year was knighted. The desire for historical composition adhered so strongly to him, that so late as 1843, a cartoon by him, "The Angel Raphael discoursing with Adam," was exhibited at Westminster Hall, and obtained one of the premiums of £100.

Born in London, 1794; died 1860.

ROSS AND CROMARTY, one of the most extensive counties in Scotland, extending from the eastern to the western seas, taking in the whole breadth of the island, and having the insular district of Lewis politically annexed to it. It is bounded N. by Sutherland, E. by the German Ocean, S. by Inverness-shire, and W. by the Atlantic. Previous to 1871, Ross and Cromarty were considered to be separate counties. (See CROMARTY.) The coast line is very irregular, being much indented by numerous lakes and firths, particularly the firths of Cromarty and Dornoch on the east coast, and on the west those of Loch Carron, Loch Broom, and various other inlets of the sea. The eastern coast, to a short distance from the sea, is well improved, abundantly fertile, and ornamented with a variety of country seats. Beyond this tract the inland districts become rude, lofty, and terrific; but, though wild and mountainous, there are many pleasant glens, or valleys, which afford abundance of pasture for black-cattle and sheep. Some of the mountains are from 3,000 to 4,000 feet high.

Rivers and Lakes.—The principal are the Carron, the Orrin, the Beauly, which forms its boundary with Inverness-shire, and Oickel, which is the boundary with Sutherland. Lakes are numerous in the valleys; the chief of which are Loch Maree, Loch Fannich, Loch Monar, and Loch Lichart, in which many streams have their sources.

Minerals.—Limestone, ironstone, granite, and mica-slate. There are several mineral springs.

Area.—3,151 square miles.

Pop.—78,539.

Chief Towns.—DINGWELL, FORTROSE, and TAIN.

Parliamentary Representation.—One member is returned for the county.

ROSS, a market-town of Herefordshire, on the left bank of the Wye, 14 miles S.E. of Hereford. It has a church, built in 1316, hospitals, charities, workhouse, market-house, and mechanics' institute. It is noted for its cider. Pop. 3,590.

ROSS, a county of Ohio, United States. Area, 650 square miles. Pop. 40,000. The capital is Chillicothe.

ROSS, NEW. (See NEW ROSS.)

ROSSANO, ros-sa'-no, a city of southern Italy, province of Cosenza, on a rocky hill, 2 miles from the Gulf of Tarento. It is walled, has a castle, and a beautiful cathedral. Pop. 17,901.

ROSSBACH, ros'-bak, a village of Prussia, province of Saxony, 8 miles S.W. of Merseburg, where, in 1757, Frederick the Great defeated the French and imperial armies.

ROSSE, WILLIAM PARSONS, Earl of, ross, astronomer and constructor of the magnificent instrument called the "Monster Telescope." He received his education at Trinity College Dublin, and Magdalen College, Oxford, and succeeded to the earldom on the death of his father, in 1841, having previously, as Lord Oxmantown, represented King's County in the House of Commons. He paid great attention to the construction of reflecting telescopes, and after many experiments produced the magnificent telescope erected, at a cost of £30,000, under his personal superintendence, at Birr Castle, near Parsontown. In 1855 he was created a knight of the Legion of Honour, having previously acted as president of the Royal Society; he was likewise a member of most of the learned and scientific bodies in Europe. He wrote an account of the monster telescope, the manufacture of its speculum, and full descriptions of the machinery; "Letters on the State of Ireland;" and "Memorandum presented to the Council of the Royal Society for rendering the Council of the Society more efficient."

Born at York, 1800; died 1867.

ROSSEL, ros-sel', a town of East Prussia, 51 miles from Königsberg. Manf. Linen and woollen fabrics. Pop. 3,000.

ROSSETTI, GABRIELE, Italian poet and commentator. He came to England as a political refugee in 1824, and soon afterwards published an analogical comment on Dante, maintaining that the character of Beatrice was allegorical, meaning the true church, and that the "Divine Comedy," was an attack on the papacy. His views, maintained with great vigour and extraordinary erudition, excited great opposition. He was professor of Italian literature in King's College, London, but, being afflicted with blindness, resigned the chair in 1845. His patriotic poems attained great popularity in Italy. Several members of his family have exhibited great talent. His son, GABRIEL CHARLES DANTE ROSSETTI, who died in April, 1882, was one of the most active of the Pre-Raphaelite artists, and he also produced translations from the Italian Poets. His brother WILLIAM, and his sisters, CHRISTINA and MARIA, have also exhibited great literary power, as poets and art critics.

Born 1783; died in London, 1854.

ROSSI, PELLEGRINO, ros'-se, Italian statesman, studied at the university of Bologna, and when 25 years of age was appointed professor of law in that university. In 1815 he attached himself to Murat, after whose death Rossi was exiled, and became professor of the science of law at Geneva. In 1833 he was invited to France by Louis Philippe, and was appointed professor of political economy, naturalized and made a peer of France. He was sent to Rome as ambassador in 1845. He again became an Italian subject and in 1848 was called to the ministry by pope Pius IX. He favoured the project of a confederation of Italian princes, with the pope as the head, and this made him unpopular, and he was assassinated by an unknown hand. His legal and political writings display great ability, and in 1862 a bust of him was solemnly inaugurated in the university of Bologna.

Born at Carrara, 1787; died at Rome, 1848.

ROSSIENU ro-se-noo', a town of European Russia, government of Kovno, on the Dubissa, 50 miles N.W. of Kovno. Pop. 6,300.

ROSSINI, GIOACCHINO, ros-se'-ne, an illustrious Italian composer, who was the son of a strolling musician, by whom he was taught the rudiments of his art; but, having a fine voice, he was placed under a skilful tutor in order to acquire the art of vocalization. At 12 years of age he sang in the churches of Bologna; and when, at 15, his voice broke, he was entered of the Lyceum of Bologna, in order to acquire a more abstruse knowledge of the musical art. He studied assiduously, and in 1813 he produced his opera of "Tancredi," which at once made its composer famous throughout Europe. In 1816 he produced his world-famous "Barber of Seville," at Rome. Those of his later works, which still keep the stage, are "La Cenerentola," "La Gazza Ladra," "Semiramide," "La Donna del Lago," and "Gulielmo Tell." This last was written at the age of 37, and with it closed the career of Rossini as a dramatic composer. He afterwards produced the favourite "Stabat Mater." His last years were spent in Paris, where he was almost as famous as a wit as he was as a musician. In 1864 a memorial statue was inaugurated at Pesaro.

Born at Pesaro, near Bologna, 1792; died 1861.

ROSSWEIN, ross'-vine, a town of Saxony, district of Leipsic, on the right bank of the Mulde, 24 miles from Dresden. Manf. Woollens and other stuffs. Pop. 7,500.

ROSTOCK, ros'-tok, a seaport town of the grand duchy of Mecklenburg-Schwerin, on the Warnow, 9 miles from its mouth in the Baltic, and 44 miles N.E. of Schwerin. It is surrounded by old fortifications, has three suburbs, and is divided into three parts,—the old, middle, and new towns. The principal edifices are a grand ducal mansion, St. Peter's church, built in the 12th century, with a tower 420 feet high, a town house, with seven towers, and a university founded in 1419. There is a colossal statue of Blücher in the square named after him. Manf. Canvas, linen, tobacco, ships, anchors, soap, and vinegar. There are, besides, breweries, distilleries, and sugar-refineries. Its trade is extensive, and the port is Warnemündie, at the mouth of the Warnow. Pop. 39,212.—This was, for a lengthened period, one of the Hanse towns, rivalling Lübeck in commercial importance.

ROSTOF, or ROSTOV, ros-tof', an ancient town of European Russia, government of Jaroslav, 40 miles S.W. of the town of that name. There are a cathedral, episcopal palace, monasteries, and several schools. Manf. Linen, leather, soap, candles, vinegar, and white lead. Pop. 12,000.—One of the largest fairs in Russia is held here annually.

ROSTOF ON THE DON, a town of European Russia, government of Ekaterinoslav, on the Don, at the head of the delta of that river. It originated in the fortress of St. Demetri, erected in 1749, and it is now the centre of the trade of South Russia. Manf. Cast-iron, tobacco, maccaroni, soap, leather, ropes, and bricks. Wheat, iron, tallow, and linseed are exported. Pop. 72,576.

ROSTOPCHINE, or RASPTOPCHIN, FEODOR VASILIEVITCH, Count, ros-top'-tchine, a Russian general, was descended of an old Russian family, which could trace its descent in a direct line from a son of Genghis Khan. After concluding his education, and making the tour of Europe, he became an officer of the Guards, and the favourite of the grand-duke Paul, who created him a count. He subsequently fell into disgrace, but was again preferred to high appointments, under the emperor Alexander, who also gave him the command at Moscow. Napoleon proclaimed that the great conflagration, which proved so destructive to his army, was kindled at the orders of Rostopchine. In 1823, however, the Russian count, who was then a resident at Paris, produced a small work, called "The Truth as to the Conflagration of Moscow," in which he declared that the fire was not the result of a preconcerted plan, but that it originated in many of the shopkeepers and others having voluntarily applied the flame to their own dwellings. He accompanied the emperor Alexander to the Congress of Vienna, after which he lived for several years in Paris, but returned to Russia in 1825. He was a spirited and witty writer, and produced several works, and also wrote a singular piece of biography, entitled, "My Memoirs, written in Ten Minutes."

Born 1765; died at Moscow, 1826.

ROTA, ro'-tă, a seaport of Spain, province of Cadiz, on a point of land at the north-western extremity of the bay of Cadiz. It has a castle, a monastery, and a church, with a fine Gothic nave. Pop. 8,000.

ROTHE, RICHARD, ro'-te(r), German theologian, who in 1837 was appointed professor of theology at Heidelberg, and between 1849 and 1854 held a professorship at Posen. His principal works, which have excited much controversy, are a system of theological ethics, and "Beginnings of the Christian Church." He is opposed to the scholastic theology, and recognises in theology only a system of divine morality.

Born at Posen, 1790.

ROTHENBURG ON THE TAUBER, ro'-ten-boorg, an old and irregularly built town of Bavaria, on the Tauber, 31 miles S. of Wurzburg. Manf. Woollens, paper, and gunpowder. Pop. 5,400.

ROTHERHAM, roth'-er-ham, a market town of the West Riding of Yorkshire, near the confluence of the rivers Rother and Don, 6 miles N.E. of Sheffield. The parish church is a handsome Gothic building, erected in the reign of Edward IV., and on the middle of the old stone bridge crossing the Don is a small Gothic chapel. There are various other churches, chapels, a court house, market house, free grammar school, public library, a college of the Independents, almshouses, a workhouse, and different schools. Manf. Stoves, grates, machinery, starch, rope, glass, and soap. In its neighbourhood coal and iron are abundant. Pop. 34,782.—A station on the Midland, Manchester, Sheffield and Lincolnshire railways.

ROTHERHITHE, or REDRIFF, roth'-er-hithe. (See LONDON.)

ROTHESAY, roth-soi', a seaport, royal burgh and watering-place of Scotland, capital of the county of Bute, in the island of Bute, at the bottom of an extensive bay, 30 miles W. of Glasgow. There is a good harbour, and a handsome promenade has been formed for the use of the visitors who are very numerous in the bathing season. The ruins of Rothesay castle are in the centre of the town. Manf. Cotton-spinning, and it has shipbuilding docks. The herring, salmon, haddock, and whiting fisheries are prosecuted. Pop. 8,538.

ROTHSCHILD, MEYER ANSELM, roths'-child, the founder of the celebrated commercial family which bears his name. He was designed for the Jewish priesthood; but becoming an orphan in his 11th year, he was placed in a banking-house at Hanover. After acquiring some little capital, he returned to Frankfort, where he began business upon a modest scale as banker or exchange-broker. His skill and reputation for probity gained for him general confidence, and, in 1801, he became banker to the landgrave of Hesse, whose private fortune was preserved through the tact of Rothschild during the troubled period when Napoleon I. held undisputed sway over Germany. The house subsequently attained unexampled prosperity, and upon the death of Meyer Anselm, his sons were left a legacy of enormous wealth and boundless credit. He had ten children, five of whom were sons. The eldest, Anselm, was the chief of the Frankfort house, Solomon of that of Vienna; Nathan settled at Manchester in 1800, and afterwards in London. He was regarded as the ablest of the family, and to his sagacity is principally due the great prosperity of the house. He advanced money to the English government during the last years of the continental war, and was the first to introduce foreign loans into England. Charles was established at Naples, and James at Paris. Although widely separated from each other, the five brothers were in reality but the heads of departments of one great firm.

Born at Frankfort-on-the-Maine, 1743; died 1812.

ROTTECK, KARL VON, rot'-tek, an eminent German historian and statesman, who was appointed professor of history at the university of Baden, in 1798. He travelled through Europe to increase his knowledge of constitutional law, and, after his return, published several works remarkable for their liberal tendency. In 1806 he was appointed councillor to the grand-duke of Baden, and afterwards professor of law and political economy at Fribourg. He subsequently became vice-president of the Chamber of Baden, wherein he zealously defended public liberty, and especially the liberty of the press. He edited a political dictionary, and was the author of several valuable historical works.

Born in Baden, 1775; died 1840.

ROTTENBURG, rot'-ten-boorg, a town of Wurtemburg, on the Neckar, 7 miles S.W. of Tübingen. There is a castle, built in 1216, now used as a prison. Hop-gardens, vineyards, and orchards are in the vicinity. Pop. 6,200.

ROTTERDAM, rot'-ter-dam, an important commercial city of the Netherlands, province of South Holland, on the north bank of the Maas, which here resembles an arm of the sea, and at its confluence with the Rotte, 40 miles from Amsterdam. The form of the city is triangular, its longest side stretching along the bank of the river. It is traversed by the Rotte, and is, even more than other towns in Holland, intersected by canals, which divide the half of it near the river into many insulated spots connected by drawbridges. These canals are almost all bordered with trees. The row called the Boompjes ("little trees") is the finest in the city, as well in regard to buildings, as for its pleasant prospect across the Maas. Next to the Boompjes comes the Hoogshaat. The other streets are, in general, long, but narrow. Of the public buildings the principal are the exchange, the church of St. Laurence, a large building, erected in the 15th century, with a lofty tower and many interesting monuments, several other churches, the town-house, the admiralty, the academy, the theatre, the central prison of the Netherlands, charitable institutions, and schools. In the market-place is a statue of Erasmus, a native of the town. Rotterdam contains both an English episcopal and a Scotch presbyterian church, there being more English residents in Rotterdam than in any other town in the Netherlands.

Manf.—Tobacco, soap, leather, paper, iron, vinegar, cigars, liqueurs, gin or Geneva, sugar, salt, oil, and articles of gold and silver. Ship-building is carried on.

Pop.—169,477, about two-thirds being Protestants.

Lat. 51° 55′ 3″ N. Lon. 4° 29′ 5″ E.

History.—Rotterdam is a place of considerable antiquity. It became a privileged town, and was surrounded with walls, in the 13th century. Along with the general commerce of Holland, it suffered by the invasion of the French; but the overthrow of Napoleon I. proved the harbinger of its reviving prosperity. The city has lately been greatly improved, and the waterway deepened.

ROTTI, rot'-te, an island of the Indian Archipelago, belonging to the Netherlands. It is 36 miles long, and about 11 miles broad. The surface is moderately elevated, and the soil fertile. The chief products are the Lontar palm, the gabang, a tree the fruit, fibre, and pith of which are applied to many purposes; cocoa, plantains, and bananas. The timber is valuable, including ebony and mahogany. A considerable export trade is carried on in horses, tortoise-shell, wax, and edible birds'-nests. Pop. 75,000, a fine race. Lat. 10° 39′—10° 56′ S. Lon. 122° 57′—123° 29′ E.

ROTWEIL, rot'-vile, a town of Wurtemberg, on the left bank of the Upper Neckar, 38 miles N. of Freiburg, in Baden. There are several interesting churches, and a fine exchange. Manf. Silk, woollen and cotton goods, and gunpowder. There is an important corn-market. Pop. 5,200.

ROUBAIX, roo'-bai, a town of France, department Nord, 6 miles N.E. of Lille. It is abundantly supplied with water from Artesian wells. Manf. Woollens, carpets, Turkish satins, linen, camelots, and serges. It is one of the most rapidly rising commercial towns of France. Pop. 91,757.

ROUBILIAC, LOUIS FRANÇOIS, roo-bil'-i-ak, sculptor, who was a native of France, but who settled at an early age in England, where he became the most popular sculptor of his time. His best works are,—the statue of George II. in Golden Square, of Shakspeare in the British Museum, of Handel in Westminster Abbey, of Sir Isaac Newton at Cambridge, and of the duke of Argyle, Marshal Wade, and the Nightingale family, in Westminster Abbey.

Born at Lyons, about 1695; died in London, 1762.

ROUEN, roo'-a(ng), a city in the north of France, capital of the department Seine-Inférieure, and formerly of Normandy, 75 miles N.W. of Paris. It is situate on the right bank of the Seine, in a fertile, pleasant, and varied country. The river is nearly 1,000 feet wide, and deep enough to admit large vessels to the quays, which are very commodious and handsome. In the channel of the river is the island of Lacroix, across which is the chief bridge, Pont de Pierre, built in 1829, and on which is a statue of Corneille. A chain bridge connects the city with the busy suburb of St. Sever, and there are other suburbs. The old fortifications have been converted into spacious boulevards. In the older part are narrow streets, with picturesque, quaintly-carved and gabled houses. The new streets are wide and regular, with handsome well-built houses. The cathedral of Notre Dame, built in the early part of the 13th century, is one of the finest specimens of Gothic architecture in France, cruciform in shape, with a tower 464 feet high, terminating in a modern spire of cast-iron, the old wooden belfry having been destroyed in 1822, and there are two other towers at the western end. There are in the cathedral 22 highly-decorated chapels, and historical monuments of great interest, and the heart of Richard Cœur-de-Lion is preserved in the sacristy. Rivalling the cathedral in beauty is the Gothic church of St. Ouen, the building of which was begun in 1318, but not completed for more than 200 years. It was restored in 1852. There are 13 other churches, some very handsome and interesting. The Palais de Justice occupies three sides of a quadrangle, the central portion having been erected in the 15th century for the parliament of the province of Normandy; the other parts are modern. The Grosse Horloge, or belfry, having an arch across the street, dates from the 14th and 15th centuries. There is a fine old Gothic public fountain. The Hôtel-de-Ville has a large public library and a gallery of pictures. There are a large hospital, the Hôtel Dieu, various benevolent institutions, literary and scientific societies, schools, and a botanical garden. In the Place de la Pucelle, where, according to popular history, Joan of Arc was burned, in 1431, is a statue to her memory. Manf. Cotton fabrics (especially checked and striped goods), lace, velvets, shawls, hosiery, blankets, chemicals, paper, steel, lead, and machinery. Ship-building is carried on. Pop. 105,906. —In 842 the Northmen settled here, and it was the residence of the dukes of Normandy till the conquest of England. In 1204 Philippe Augustus annexed it to the French crown.

ROUFFACH, roof'-fak, a town of Germany, in Alsace-Lorraine, on the Lauch, 7 miles S. of Colmar. There are an old Gothic church and an ancient castle on a height in the centre of the town. Manf. Cotton goods and felt for hats. Pop. 3,800.

ROUHER, EUGÈNE, roo'-hair, a French statesman, who practised as an advocate at Riom, and in 1848 was returned to the Constituent Assembly for the department Puy-de-Dôme, and in the following year to the Corps Législatif. In the same year he was appointed Minister of Justice; in 1852 Vice-President of the Council of State; and in 1855 minister of agriculture, commerce, and public works, and while holding that office, assisted to arrange with Mr. Cobden the treaty of commerce with England, and he also arranged a treaty of commerce with Italy. In 1863 he was appointed president of the council of state, and a few months afterwards minister of state. He became a member of the Senate in 1856. In 1872 he was returned to the National Assembly for Corsica. He is one of the best debaters in France, a statesman of great ability, and the acknowledged leader of the Imperialist party.

Born at Riom, 1814. Died 1884.

ROULERS, roo'-lai, a town of Belgium, province of West Flanders, on a branch of the Lys, 10 miles N.W. of Courtrai. Manf. Chiefly linen goods, flax being extensively grown in the vicinity. Pop. 13,500.

ROUMANIA, or RUMANIA roo-ma'-ne-a, a kingdom of south-eastern Europe, formed by the union of Turkish provinces of Moldavia and Wallachia. (See MOLDAVIA, WALLACHIA, and DANUBIAN PRINCIPALITIES.)

Area.—491,463 square miles.

Pop.—5,149,000, of whom the great majority are members of the Greek Church.

Constitution and Government.—The constitution now in force was voted by a constituent assembly, elected by universal suffrage, in the summer of 1866. The charter vests the legislative power in a parliament of two houses, a senate, and a chamber of deputies. The senate consists of 76 members, and the other house of 157 deputies, of whom 82 are for Wallachia and 75 for Moldavia. The king has a suspensive veto over all laws passed by the chamber of deputies and the senate. The executive is in the hands of a council of five ministers.

History.—Early in the 16th century, the two principalities, the inhabitants of which were of mixed Roman and Dacian origin, with a large infusion of Mongols, placed themselves under the protection of the Porte; but in 1802 Russia attained a great influence, strengthened by the fact that a considerable number of the nobles were then of Greek descent, and members of the Greek church, and in 1821 a great effort was made to obtain complete independence of Turkish rule. In 1822 Russia compelled Turkey to choose the princes or hospodars from natives. The principalities were united under one ruler in 1858, and under one administration in 1861. The first hospodar was colonel Couza, who assumed the title of prince Alexander John I. He was compelled to abdicate in 1866, and a son of the German prince Karl of Hohenzollern-Sigmaringen was elected to succeed him, with the title of Karl I. In 1877, on the outbreak of the great Russo-Turkish war, Roumania announced its independence of Turkey. It was created a kingdom in 1881.

ROUMELIA, EASTERN, is a district of European Turkey, newly constituted by the Treaty of Berlin, in July, 1878. It is nominally part of Turkey, but has conferred upon it, by the treaty, almost independent powers of self-control under a governor-general. Area, 13,500 sq. m. Pop. 976,000.

ROUSSEAU, JEAN BAPTISTE, roos'-so, a French poet who was the son of a shoemaker. He, however, received a liberal education, and wrote some poetical pieces in his youth, which brought him into so much notice, that marshal Tallard took him to England as his secretary. Several virulent satires having been circulated against persons of eminence, to whom Rousseau was known to have an aversion, the general voice attributed them to him; when so great was the odium he incurred, that he was banished from the kingdom. He then went to Switzerland, and being introduced to Prince Eugene, accompanied him to Vienna. He afterwards lost the favour of the prince, on which he went to Brussels, where he contracted an intimacy with Voltaire, which ended in a quarrel, and the two poets lampooned each other without mercy. Besides his epigrams, sonnets, and other poems, he wrote some comedies and letters.

Born at Paris, 1670; died at Brussels, 1741.

ROUSSEAU, JEAN JACQUES, a French author, was the son of a watchmaker of Geneva. His mother died while he was a child, which, he says, was the first of his misfortunes, but an aunt took care of him, and at the age of 10 he was placed with a Protestant pastor. His education, however, was very confined, and at the age of 13 he was put apprentice to an engraver; but, according to his own account, he learned nothing but lying and pilfering. He ran away from his master three years afterwards, and in a destitute condition was taken under the protection of a lady named Madame de Warens, who had quitted the Protestant religion for the Catholic, and who sent the young fugitive to a Roman Catholic seminary at Turin. He did not long remain there, but ran away and lived with the wife of a soldier, who, on his return, kicked him out. He then hired himself as footman to a lady, who dismissed him for stealing a ribbon and accusing a maid-servant of the theft. His friend, Madame de Warens, then became his mistress, and having some talents for music, he set up as a teacher of that art at Chambery, but during a temporary visit to Montpelier he fell in love with a young lady, and on his return found that Madame de Warens had also another lover. He then, in 1740, went to Lyons, and afterwards to Paris, and to Venice as private secretary to the French envoy. In 1745 he returned to Paris, where he lived in great poverty during some time, till Dupin, the farmer-general, gave him a place in his department. In 1750 he obtained a prize from the academy of Dijon for the best essay in answer to the question "Whether the re-establishment of the arts and sciences has conduced to the purity of morals?" This success prompted him to produce a discourse upon "The Origin of Inequality among Mankind." He made many friends among the literary celebrities of the time, and Madame D'Epinay gave him a pleasant residence, the Hermitage, near Paris, where he lived with a young woman named Thérèse le Vasseur, by whom he had five children, each of whom the unnatural father sent to the foundling hospital. He afterwards married the mother. In 1758 he published a letter to d'Alembert upon the project of establishing a theatre at Geneva. In this letter, which was well written, he declared himself as adverse to theatrical exhibitions, though he had before published a comedy, and also a pastoral, both adapted for the stage. He next published his "Dictionary of Music." He had previously produced a dissertation on French music, or rather a censure of it. In 1761 appeared his romance of the "New Heloise." It is in the form of letters, exhibiting a strange mixture of beauties and deformities, but it was read with avidity. This work was eclipsed by his "Emile," a moral romance, in which he condemns every other mode of education but that of following nature. Rousseau, in this work, attacks the prophecies and miracles of the Christian religion, while he praises the gospel, and draws a beautiful picture of its Divine Author. The parliament of Paris condemned the book, and prosecuted the writer, who having quarrelled with many of his old friends, fled to Switzerland, where he received so many insults on account of his principles, that he returned to Paris, and on the invitation of Mr. Hume went to London in 1766, where he found a quiet asylum during a short period; but, having quarrelled with his friend, he went back to France, and sometimes appeared in the Armenian dress. His "Confessions," in which he details with amazing candour the profligacy and meanness of his early life, concealing no odious thought or act, are perhaps the strangest revelations of a man's inner nature ever made public. He had little stability of character, but his wonderful literary gifts, his tender, if false, sentimentalism, and the audacity of his social theories, gained him a host of admirers, and exercised great influence on the literary and political character of the age.

Born at Geneva, 1712; died at Ermonville, near Paris, 1778.

ROUSSELAR, roos'-se-lar, a town of the Netherlands, in East Flanders. Pop. 3,100.

ROUSSILLON, roos-see'-yawng, an old province of France, now embraced in the department of the Pyrénées Orientales.

ROUVILLE, roo-veel', a county of Quebec province, Canada. Area, 244 square miles. Pop. 18,000, nearly all of French descent. The capital is Ste Marie de Monnoir.

ROVEREDO, rov-a-ra'-do, a city of the Austrian empire, in Tyrol, picturesquely situated on the Leno, 12 miles S. of Trent. Manf. Silk, for which there are 60 factories, employing about a quarter of the entire population. Pop. 9,100.

ROVIGNO, ro-veen'-yo, a seaport of the Austrian empire, on the coast of Istria, built on a rock which projects into the sea, and forms two good harbours, 40 miles S. of Trieste. A large quantity of olive oil is exported, ship-building is carried on, and there are tunny and sardine fisheries. Pop. 9,600.

ROVIGO, ro-vee'-go, a province of Italy, at the north of the river Po. It is fertile, producing good crops of wheat and maize, fruit, and walnuts. Large numbers of cattle are reared. Area, 652 square miles. Pop. 224,819.

ROWAN, a county of North Carolina, United States. Area, 600 square miles. Pop. 20,000, nearly one-third being coloured. The capital is Salisbury.

ROWE, NICHOLAS, ro, an English dramatic poet, who was educated at Westminster school, after which he, in his 16th year, entered of the Middle Temple, where he was called to the bar, but never distinguished himself in that profession. At the age of 25 he produced his "Ambitious Stepmother," a tragedy, which was so well received as to encourage him to pursue the dramatic career, which he did with increasing reputation. His tragedies, "The Fair Penitent," "Jane Shore," and "Tamerlane," were great successes, and long held possession of the stage. He was appointed under-secretary of state, and, upon the accession of George I., was made poet-laureate in 1715, and land-surveyor of the customs in the port of London. Besides his tragedies, he wrote some poems, and translated Lucan's "Pharsalia" and Quillett's "Callipædia" into verse, and edited Shakspeare. His remains were interred in Westminster Abbey.

Born at Little Barford, Bedfordshire, 1673; died 1718.

ROWLANDSON, THOMAS, ro'-land-son English caricaturist, studied art in Paris, and at the Royal Academy, London, but is best known by his illustrations of "The Tour of Dr. Syntax," and by a number of coarse but humorous caricatures, which were very popular.

Born in London, 1756; died 1827.

ROWLEY, WILLIAM, an English dramatic writer. He was a comic actor of some reputation in the reign of James I., and was assisted in his plays, "A New Wonder, a Woman Never Vext," "The Witch of Edmonton," "The Old Law," and others, by Decker, Ford, and Massinger.

Died about 1662.

ROXANA, rox-á'-na, the wife of Alexander the Great, was the daughter of a Bactrian prince, and celebrated for her beauty. At the death of Alexander she was pregnant of a son, who was named Alexander the Younger. Cassander put to death both the mother and her son.

Died 311 B.C.

ROXBURGH, WILLIAM, rox'-bur, a Scotch botanist and physician, in the service of the East India Company, and while employed at Samulcottah, introduced pepper, coffee, cinnamon, the bread-fruit tree, &c., to the plantations of the district. In 1793 he became superintendent of the botanic garden at Calcutta. He caused two thousand drawings of the plants he had discovered to be made, and sent them to the Court of Directors. His researches led to the publication of the celebrated "Flora Indica," and "Coromandel Plants," which latter was produced subsequently to his death.

Died 1815.

ROXBURGHSHIRE, a border county of Scotland, of a very irregular form, bounded E. and S. by Northumberland and Cumberland, S.W. and W. by the counties of Dumfries and Selkirk, and N. and N.W. by Berwickshire and a small portion of Mid-Lothian. The surface is diversified, exhibiting many scenes both beautiful and romantic. The south and west divisions of the county are mountainous, the Cheviot and Launder hills forming half of the boundary, but the east and north are generally flat and fertile.

Rivers.—The Tweed, Teviot, Gala, Leader, Allan, Eden, Hermitage, and Liddel. The Ale and Borthwick are northern branches of the Teviot, which, on the south, is augmented by the Kail, the Oxnam, and the Jed; and nearer to its source it receives the Rule, the Slitrig, and the Alien.

Minerals.—Coal, lime, and freestone.

Area.—670 square miles.

Pop.—54,000.

Parliamentary Representation and Chief Towns.—One member is returned for the county. The most important towns are JEDBURGH, the county town; HAWICK, and KELSO.

ROXBURY, rox'-ber-e, formerly a separate city of Massachusetts, United States, now incorporated with Boston, which it adjoins. It is attractively situated. Manf. Steam-engines, cotton, wool, carpets, starch, glue, and cordage. Pop. 36,100.

ROY, WILLIAM, Major-General, a British mathematician, who conducted the first trigonometrical survey of the United Kingdom, which was commenced in 1787. He was the author of a valuable work, entitled, "The Military Antiquities of the Romans in Britain," in which he traced the march of Agricola from South into North Britain, and gave a description of the wall of Antoninus Pius, commonly called Graham's Dyke. At the outset of his career he had been employed in surveying and mapping, first the Highland districts, and afterwards the whole of Scotland. At his death he was fellow of the Royal Society (which awarded him the Copley gold medal), surveyor-general of the coasts, deputy quartermaster-general, and major-general of the royal artillery.

Born at Carluke, Lanarkshire, 1706; died in London, 1790.

ROYAN, roy'-áh(r)n, a seaport of France, department Charente, on a cliff on the right bank and at the mouth of the Gironde, 37 miles S. of La Rochelle. There is a small harbour defended by a fort. The place is much resorted to for sea-bathing. Pop. 4,200.

ROYER-COLLARD, RENE PAUL, roy'-ai-kol'-lar, a French statesman and philosophical writer, who practised as an advocate, and at the outbreak of the great revolution was elected one of the representatives of the commune of Paris. He retired to the country during the Reign of Terror, but in 1797 was chosen one of the Council of Five Hundred. Being disappointed in his hopes of a restoration of the royal family, he retired from politics. In 1809 Napoleon appointed him professor in the university of Paris, where his teaching exerted a great influence. After the fall of the empire, he was, in 1815, appointed president of the commission of public instruction, and in the same year represented the electors of Marne in the Chamber of Deputies. In 1819 he withdrew from the government, was chosen a member of the Academy in 1827, and in the following year became president of the Chamber of Representatives. In 1842 he retired altogether from public life. He was one of the founders of the French school of politicians called Doctrinaires; and introduced into France that system of philosophy illustrated by Cousin, Jouffroy, and Damiron, which bears close analogy to that of Reid, and the other Scotch philosophers.

Born at Sompuis, Marne, 1763; died 1845.

RSHEV, rshev, a town of European Russia, government of Tver, on the Volga, 68 miles S.W. of Tver. It is a well-built town, with nine churches, and good schools. Manf. Agricultural implements, chemicals, and paints. There is a stone quarry in the vicinity. A large general trade is carried on, and two great annual fairs are held. Pop. 17,500.

RUATAN, or RATTAN, roo'-a-tan, an island in the Bay of Honduras, off the north coast of Central America. It is 30 miles long and 9 broad. The climate is fine and the soil fertile. Pop. 2,000, of whom only 200 are whites. (See BAY ISLANDS and HONDURAS.)

RUBENS, PETER PAUL, roo'-bens, roo'-bans, the most powerful and brilliant painter of the Flemish school. After studying under several of the most eminent of the Flemish artists, he went, in 1600, to Italy; where he greatly improved himself by the study of the works of the best masters, but chiefly Titian and Paul Veronese. He sojourned at Rome, Florence, Mantua, and Genoa, and in 1609 settled at Antwerp, where he gained so great a reputation as to be sent for to Paris to paint the gallery of the palace of Luxembourg. He was afterwards employed by the infanta Isabella and the king of Spain in some important negotiations, which he executed with such credit as to be appointed secretary of the privy council. On going to England in 1630, as ambassador from the infanta Isabella, widow of the archduke Albert, governor of the Netherlands, he obtained the favour of Charles I., who conferred on him the honour of knighthood, and made him some valuable presents. While in England, he sketched the design for the ceiling of the banqueting-house at Whitehall. He subsequently returned to Antwerp, where he resided, enjoying the splendid fortune he had realized, till his death. His historical pictures, altar-pieces, and portraits, are among the most valuable of art treasures. A grand celebration of the tricentenary of his birth was held at Antwerp in 1877.

Born at Siegen, Westphalia, 1577; died at Antwerp, 1640.

RUBICON, ru'-bi-kon, the ancient name of a small river in the north-east of Italy, noted chiefly as the limit prescribed by the Roman senate to the advancing of Cæsar, when that commander became suspected of aiming at the chief authority, and which he boldly crossed, giving rise to the proverbial phrase, "Crossing the Rubicon." It is a matter of doubt whether the modern Luso, or the Fiumicino, is the famous river.

RUBINI, GIOVANNI BATTISTA, roo-be'-ne, an Italian vocalist, the son of a professor of music, and was at first engaged as an instrumentalist in the orchestra of the theatre of Romano. He subsequently appeared as a singer, and was soon recognised as one of the greatest operatic vocalists of Europe. His voice was a tenor of the most beautiful and extensive kind.

Born at Romano, 1795; died 1854.

RUBINSK, roo'-binsk, a town of Russia, 60 miles from Jaroslav. It is a great centre of the internal commerce of the empire. Pop. 4,000.

RUBINSTEIN, ANTON, roo'-bin-stine, Russian musical composer and pianist. He is of Jewish descent, but brought up in the Greek Church. He was instructed in music when a child, and at the age of nine gave his first public concert. He afterwards studied at Paris, and then travelled in the principal countries of Europe. At the age of nineteen he produced his first opera, "Dmtri Donski." He has since composed many operas and other works, and as a pianist occupies the very first rank. He founded, and for nine years superintended, the conservatory at St. Petersburg.

Born in Bessarabia, 1830.

RUBRUQUIS, GUILLAUME DE, roo'-brooke, a French traveller of the Middle Ages. He was a monk of the Franciscan order, and his real name was Ruysbrock, which, according to the pedantic custom of his time, he changed into the Latinized form. In 1253 he was sent by Louis IX. into Tartary for the purpose of forming an alliance with the son of the khan of Keptchak, a Tartar settled on the Volga, and supposed to be a Christian. After undergoing dreadful fatigues, he and his two companions succeeded in gaining the encampment of Baatu-Khan, upon the banks of the Volga. They next proceeded, under the escort of Baatu-Khan, to Mandchu-Khan, the Tartar emperor. In 1254 he was presented to Mandchu-Khan, at whose court he found ambassadors from Persia, India, and Turkey. He was subsequently sent back to the court of Baatu, his journey occupying four months and ten days; during which he was but one day off his horse. He finally returned through Armenia, Persia, and Asia Minor, to Tripoli in Syria, after an absence of two years and six months. It is doubtful whether he was afterwards allowed to leave Syria, where he was ordered to take up his residence in a monastery, by the superior of his order. An account of his travels was transmitted to King Louis, at Paris.

Born at Brabant, 1230; died subsequently to 1293.

RÜCKERT, FRIEDRICH, re(r)k'-airt, a German lyrical poet, who was educated at the university of Jena, in 1826 was appointed professor of oriental languages at Erlangen, and in 1840 professor and privy councillor in Berlin, but resigned these offices in 1849, and retired to his estate in Coburg. His earlier works were published under the name of Freimund Raimur. He was the author of many translations from the oriental languages, and poems on eastern subjects; but his fame rests chiefly on his lyrics, written in every variety of metre, and brilliant with wit and fancy, mingled occasionally with deep pathos.

Born at Schweinfurt, 1789; died 1866.

RUDDIMAN, THOMAS, rud'-di-man, a Scotch schoolmaster and grammarian, who studied at King's College, Aberdeen, and was, during nearly fifty years, keeper of the advocates' library at Edinburgh, and in the latter part of his life was in business as a printer, achieving a great reputation for the beauty and correctness of the classical editions he issued. He completed the "Diplomata et Numismata Scotiæ," to which he wrote an excellent preface. He also published "Institutions of Latin Grammar," and many other works. He founded the newspaper, The Caledonian Mercury.

Born at Raggel, Banff, 1674; died at Edinburgh 1757.

RUDOLPH I., of Hapsburg, ru'-dolf, the founder of the reigning house of Austria, and emperor of Germany, surnamed the "Clement," was son of the count of Hapsburg, exhibited great military skill at an early age, and inherited the greater part of Aargau and portions of the Swiss territory. He was elected emperor of Germany in 1273. He defeated Ottocar, king of Bohemia, who did him homage; but, afterwards renewing the war, Ottocar lost his kingdom and his life. Rudolph was a monarch of great ability and public spirit, subdued and punished the arrogant and refractory nobility, and encouraged commerce.

Born 1218; died 1291.

RUDOLPH II., son of the emperor Maximilian II., was educated in Spain by the Jesuits, became king of Hungary in 1572; of Bohemia in 1575; was elected king of the Romans the same year; and, in 1576, ascended the imperial throne. His reign was unfortunate; the Turks ravaged his territories; and his brother Matthias having revolted against him, obtained the kingdoms of Hungary and Bohemia. Rudolph was intolerant and narrow-minded, and believing in astrology and the possibility of discovering the philosopher's stone, encouraged Kepler, Tycho Brahé, and other men of science.

Born 1552; died 1612.

RUDOLSTADT, roo'-dol-stat, capital of the principality of Schwarzburg-Rudolstadt, on the left bank of the Saale, over which is a stone bridge, 18 miles S. of Weimar. Pop. 7,200.

RUEIL, roo'-ail, a town of France, department Seine-et-Oise, 5 miles N.E. of Paris. Near it is Malmaison, the favourite residence of the empress Josephine, who is buried in the church. Pop. 7,000.

RUFIJI, ru-fé'-je, a large river of Eastern Africa, discharging by several mouths into the Indian Ocean in lat. 8° S. It is much swollen in the spring.

RUFINUS, ru-fi'-nus, a father of the Church, a native of Aquileia, who was for some years the most intimate friend of St. Jerome, but, attaching himself to the tenets of Origen, an opposition between them ensued, and they wrote against each other with great asperity. Rufinus retired to Palestine, where he founded a monastery on Mount Olivet, and had numerous followers. He translated into Latin the works of Josephus, and several of the writings of Origen. He also gave a version and continuation of Eusebius, and wrote a "Defence of Origen," "Lives of the Fathers of the Desert," "Explanation of the Creed," and other works.

Died in Sicily, about 410.

RUFUS, the surname of William II.

RUGBY rug'-be, a market town of Warwickshire, on the left bank of the Avon, 15 miles N.E. of Warwick. It has a public school, founded in 1567 by Lawrence Sheriff, a London shopkeeper. The Temple Library and Art Museum, erected at a cost of £7,000, was opened in July, 1879. The parish church is ancient, and there are a handsome modern church and several chapels. Pop. 9,890.—A station on the London and North-Western and Midland railways.

RUGELEY, rooj-le, a market-town of Staffordshire, on the right bank of the Trent. Ironworks and collieries are in the neighbourhood. Pop. 3,375.—A station on the London and North-western railway.

RÜGEN, re(r)'-gen, an island in the Baltic, belonging to Prussia, opposite to Stralsund, and separated from Pomerania by a narrow channel about a mile in breadth. The coast line is deeply indented, forming a number of narrow peninsulas. The island is fertile and well wooded. Large quantities of corn and numbers of cattle are shipped to Stralsund. Its fisheries are important. Pop. 45,000. The chief town is BERGEN.

RUGENWALDE, roo'-gen-val'-de(r), a town of Prussia, province of Pomerania, on the right bank of the Wipper, near its mouth in the Baltic. Manf. Linens, woollens, and sail-cloth. Pop. 5,500.

RUHNKEN, DAVID, roon'-ken, a learned German critic. He studied at Wittenberg and Leyden, and in 1761 became professor of eloquence and history, and in 1774 librarian of Leyden. His Commentaries were written in an elegant Latin style, and he edited a number of the ancient classics.

Born in Pomerania, 1723; died 1798.

RUHRORT, roo'-rort, a town of Prussia, Rhine Province, on the right bank of the Rhine, 16 miles from Dusseldorf. There are a good harbour and ship-building yards. A railway crosses the river here, the carriages being lowered on to a steamer, the deck of which is fitted with rails. A very large trade in coal, corn, timber, and wood is carried on by means of a large fleet of steamers. Pop. 8,000.

RULSK, or RYLSK, rilsk, a town of Russia, in the government of Kursk, and 62 miles from the town of that name. It has many churches, several schools, and two annual fairs. Pop. 6,000.

RUMA, roo'-ma, a town of the Austrian empire, in Slavonia, on an affluent of the Save, 35 miles N.W. of Belgrade. The vine is cultivated in the country, and a large number of horses are bred. Pop. 8,000.

RUMBOWE, room'-bo, an inland native state of the Malay peninsula. There is a trade in timber and wax. Area, 400 square miles. Pop. 9,000. Lat. 2° 49′ N. Lon. 102° 30′ E.

RUMBURG, or RAUNEBERG, room'-boorg, a town of the Austrian empire, in Bohemia, 58 miles N. of Prague. Manf. Woollens, cottons, and linens, hosiery, papier mâché, and potash. Pop. 9,500.

RUMFORD, BENJAMIN THOMPSON, Count, rum'-ford, an American natural philosopher and philanthropist, who was at first engaged in mercantile pursuits, afterwards studied medicine, and then became a school-master at Rumford, in New Hampshire. In the contest between England and America he espoused the royal cause, and, having married a wealthy widow, was enabled to raise a regiment of Dragoons. He repaired to England in 1784, and was created a knight, and appointed under secretary-of-state for the colonies. Afterwards he returned to America, and served with the British army, and then, proceeding to Bavaria, obtained a distinguished position in the service of that state, where he reorganised the army, and engaged in several schemes of social amelioration, and was created a lieutenant-general and a count, taking his title from Rumford, now Concord, in the United States. About 1797 he returned to England, where he distinguished himself by his experiments in the science of natural philosophy, and in assisting to found the Royal Institution. He gave great attention to the subject of chimneys and cooking stoves. He returned to Bavaria, where he was appointed president of the council of regency, and minister plenipotentiary to London; but the English government, considering him a British subject, refused to recognise the appointment. In 1802 he took up his residence at the French capital, where he married his second wife, the widow of the celebrated chemist Lavoisier. After being separated from this lady, he fixed his residence near Paris, and remained there until his death. In Bavaria and in England he projected many important improvements in social economy, accounts of which are contained in his "Essays, Political, Economical, and Philosophical." His projects for relieving the condition of the poor were as sound as they were benevolent. As a philosopher his fame partly rests upon his papers on natural philosophy and mechanics, contributed to the Transactions of the Royal Society.

Born at Woburn, Massachusetts, 1753; died at Auteuil, 1814.

RUMILI. (See ROUMELIA.)

RUNCORN, run'-korn, a market town and river-port of Cheshire, on the left bank of the Mersey, 12 miles S.E. of Birkenhead, at the termination of the Bridgewater and Mersey and Irwell canals. Manf. Iron, soap, and chemicals. There are ship-building yards, and, in the vicinity, quarries of freestone and slate. Pop. 15,133.

RUNEBERG, JOHAN LUDVIG, roon'-bairg, a poet of Finland, who was educated at the university of Abo, and at the age of 23 took the degree of doctor. In 1830 he published a volume of poems, followed in 1832, 1836 and 1841, by three great idyls founded on the heroic history of the Finnish people, followed by an epic founded on a Russian legend, and "Kung Fjallar," a cycle of old Norse romances. The most popular of his works is a series of songs and metrical stories, illustrating the war with Russia and the conquest of Finland. He also produced a number of psalms, a comedy and a poetic tragedy, and attained high reputation as an æsthetic critic. The Swedish government awarded him a pension in 1841, and in 1842 he was appointed professor of Greek in the college of Borga.

Born at Jakobstad, 1804; died 1877.

RUNGPOOR, or RUNGPUR, roong-poor', a town of British India, in the northern part of the presidency of Bengal. There are several temples and mosques. Pop. 16,000. Lat. 25° 43′ N. Lon. 89° 22′ E.

RUNJEET SINGH, roon'-jeet sing, the founder of the Sikh empire. He was the son of a Sikh chief, Sindar of Sukur-Chukeah, who died when Runjeet was 12 years old, leaving him to the care of his mother, who died suddenly (it is supposed poisoned by him) when he was 17. On succeeding to power he displayed his ambitious and warlike instincts by making inroads upon the territories of his neighbours. In 1799 he obtained the grant of the province of Lahore from the shah of Afghanistan, for military services rendered to him. During the subsequent thirty years his career was that of acquisition by craft, or conquest by force, of large tracts of surrounding territory. By the time he had reached his 29th year he had made himself master of a vast country, and had approached the boundaries of the British possessions. In 1809 he entered into a treaty, by which he engaged "to preserve peace and amity with the British; not to keep more troops on the left bank of the Sutlej than were necessary for preserving his territories;" which engagement he, crafty and prudent as he was courageous, faithfully kept during the remainder of his life. He subsequently made himself ruler of Goojerat, Moultan, Peshawur, and Cashmere, where by stratagem he obtained possession of the celebrated Koh-i-noor diamond, now the property of her majesty Queen Victoria. Having thus extended his dominions upon every side, he assumed, in 1819, the title of maharajah (king of kings). At a later period he invited the European generals Allard, Ventura, and Court, to organize his army; and it was through these officers that the Sikh soldiery became so highly disciplined. In 1829 he took the province of Peshawur from the Afghans. Despite his active and ambitious disposition he had always indulged in excesses; so that in his 50th year he became disabled by bodily ailments, and in the last few years of his life could not even stand without support. He was short and slight in stature, had lost the sight of one eye by small-pox, and was totally uneducated; but was one of the most energetic and at the same time lenient rulers who ever attained power in the East. At his death he left money, jewels, horses, elephants, &c., to the value of at least £12,000,000.

Born at Gugaranwalla, 1780; died 1839.

RUNNELS, run'-nels, a county of Texas, United States. Area, 750 square miles. Pop. 18,986.

RUPALMONDE, roo'-pel-monde, a town and port of Belgium, province of East Flanders, on the left bank of the Scheldt, near the confluence of the Rupel, 25 miles N.E. of Ghent. The old castle, partially rebuilt and modernized, is now used as a state prison. Pop. 3,000.

RUPERT, roo'-pert, Prince, was the son of Frederick V., elector palatine, by Elizabeth, daughter of James I. He went to England at the beginning of the civil war, and, embracing the cause of his uncle Charles I., proved himself brave and impetuous, but rash and unskilful as a general of the royalist cavalry. At Marston Moor his want of discretion was the ruin of the king's cause, and having subsequently surrendered Bristol to the parliamentarians, after a mere show of defence, he was deprived of his command. He was, however, appointed commander of the king's ships, and served upon the Irish coast; but after being blockaded in port, and chased over the sea by Blake, his vessels were nearly all destroyed by the latter, in 1651. He escaped to the West Indies, and there, with his brother Maurice, led the life of a buccaneer, for a few years, afterwards going to France. In the reign of Charles II. he served in the fleet, and distinguished himself in several actions with the Dutch. The last years of his life were occupied with philosophical pursuits, and in making experiments in chemistry, engraving, painting, and mechanics. He is stated, but erroneously, to have been the inventor of mezzotint engraving which, however, he greatly improved.

Born 1619; died in London, 1682.

RUPERT'S LAND, the name formerly given to a large tract of British America, forming the basin of Hudson's Bay and Strait, now mostly included in the dominion of Canada.

RUPPIN, NEW, roop'-pin, a town of Prussia, province of Brandenburg, 38 miles N. of Potsdam. It has a church and castle. Manf. Woollens and linen. Pop. 13,985.

RUREMONDE. (See ROERMOND.)

RURIK, roo'-rik, founder of the Russian monarchy, a Scandinavian warrior, who, in 861, took possession of a large district to the south of the Gulf of Finland, making Novgorod the seat of government. He subdued, with terrible vigour, several insurrections, and reigned nearly 20 years. His dynasty lasted until 1598, when it was succeeded by the allied house of Romanoff. Many of the Russian nobility claim descent from this famous chief.

Died 879.

RUSH, BENJAMIN, rush, an American physician, who studied at Philadelphia, London, Edinburgh, and Paris, and in 1769 was made professor of chemistry at Philadelphia Medical College. On the outbreak of the War of Independence, he was elected a member of the Continental Congress, and signed the declaration of independence, and was afterwards surgeon and physician-general of the American army, and a member of the convention which ratified the Federal constitution. He then became professor in the Philadelphia Medical College, and obtained an extraordinary reputation for his skill, especially in the treatment of yellow fever. In 1779 he was appointed treasurer of the United States mint. Notwithstanding his extensive professional practice and official duties he found time to write medical works of great repute.

Born near Philadelphia, 1745; died 1813.

RUSH, a county of Indiana, United States. Area, 410 square miles. Pop. 19,000.

RUSH, a new county of Kansas, United States. Area, 900 square miles. Pop. 5,490.

RUSHOLME, rush'-ome, a township of Lancashire, 2 miles S.E. of Manchester. There are three handsome churches. Pop. 11,237.

RUSHWORTH, JOHN, rush'-werth, an English historical compiler, who was educated at Oxford, and was afterwards called to the bar, chiefly employing himself in taking reports of the proceedings in the Star Chamber, law courts, and parliament. In 1640 he was appointed assistant clerk at the House of Commons, being expert in taking down speeches in shorthand. He was employed by the parliament in several capacities; and his relation, Sir Thomas Fairfax, general of the forces, made him his secretary. He sat for Berwick in Richard Cromwell's parliament. His "Historical Collections of Private Passages of State" have proved of inestimable service to the historians of the Revolution. He fell into poverty, adopted intemperate habits, and died a debtor in the King's Bench prison.

Born in Northumberland, 1607; died 1690.

RUSK, rusk, a new county of Dakota territory, United States. Area, 1,600 square miles. Pop. 45.

RUSK, a county of Texas, United States. Area, 1,025 square miles. Pop. 20,000, nearly half being coloured. The capital is Henderson.

RUSKIN, JOHN, rus'-kin, a modern English art critic. He was the son of a merchant in London, and received his education at the university of Oxford, where, in 1839, he gained the Newdigate prize for English poetry; but although his academic career was highly successful, his mind was mainly fixed upon the study of art. Many of the best painters of the English school of landscape-painting engaged his attention; but Turner became his idol. In 1843 he produced the first volume of his remarkable and powerfully-written work on art, under the title of "Modern Painters, their Superiority in the Art of Landscape-painting to all the Ancient Masters." This remarkable work was completed in five volumes in 1860. Meanwhile the author had produced, in 1849, the "Seven Lamps of Architecture," in which, in a strain of fervid eloquence, he sought to prove that "the attributes of a building were those of action, voice, and beauty," and adorned his bold theories with a multitude of ethical and philosophical dissertations. "The Stones of Venice" followed, comprising three volumes, and containing an impassioned rhapsody upon the architecture, the historical associations, and picturesque beauty of the fallen city. His Lectures upon Architecture and Painting, delivered at Edinburgh, "Notes on the Construction of Sheep-folds," and a pamphlet upon the opening of the Crystal Palace, followed, and were in time succeeded by a pamphlet entitled "Pre-Raphaelitism." Not less eloquent in style, or authoritative in tone, were his "Notes on the Principal Pictures exhibited in the Royal Academy," which for several years in succession he published. In 1851 he produced a charming fairy tale, entitled "The King of the Golden River, or, the Black Brothers." In 1869 he was elected Slade professor of fine arts at Oxford, and in 1871 the university of Cambridge conferred on him the degree of LL.D. In the same year he was elected Lord Rector of the university of St. Andrews. He has published an essay on the Greek myths of cloud and steam, lectures on art, an essay on political economy, and a series of tracts, "Fors Clavigera," in which he discusses many artistic and social questions.

Born in London, 1819.

RUSSELL, HOUSE OF, a famous historical family of England, descended from the De Rozels, of Normandy, possessors of the barony of Briquebéc. Hugh de Rozel was present at the battle of Hastings, and established himself in England. In the 13th century the present spelling of the name was adopted. In 1538 John Russell was elevated to the peerage as Baron Russell of Cheyneys, county of Buckingham, and was afterwards created earl. In 1694, William, the 6th earl, was created duke of Bedford.

RUSSELL, EDWARD, Earl of Orford, English admiral, held an office in the household of the Duke of York, afterwards James II., but retired from court after the execution of Lord William Russell, his cousin. He supported the Revolution, and under William III. obtained high naval command. In 1692 he obtained a great victory over the French at La Hague; created earl of Orford, 1697, and was three times appointed first lord of the Admiralty.

Born 1651; died 1727.

RUSSELL, WILLIAM, Lord, an English statesman and political martyr, second son of the 5th Earl Russell. He was educated at Cambridge, and after some years of travel, returned to England, and entered the House of Commons as member for Bedfordshire. He eloquently opposed the corruption of the court, and the dishonourable subjection to French influences, and laboured with great earnestness for the exclusion of the duke of York from the succession to the throne. This excited the enmity of the duke, who influenced his less malicious brother, Charles II., and in 1683 "the Rye-House Plot" having been discovered by his political opponents, he and other members of the Whig party, including Essex and Algernon Sidney, were brought to trial for high treason, charged with conspiring to attack the king as he returned from the races at Newmarket, and to place the duke of Monmouth upon the throne. The jury was packed, the judges were corrupt, infamous witnesses were obtained, and Russell was condemned upon the most insufficient and contradictory evidence. Several even of his political opponents begged that his life might be spared; his father obtained the good offices of the duchess of Portsmouth, the king's mistress, and offered £100,000 if his son's life could be spared, and Russell himself, at his father's and wife's entreaty, petitioned the king, solemnly disclaiming the slightest intention to injure the king or to change the constitution. But the relentless duke of York was determined that he should die, and influenced by him the king would not interfere to prevent the judicial murder. Russell met his fate with dignity and religious resignation, and was beheaded on the 21st of July in Lincoln's Inn Fields.

Born 1639; died 1683.

RUSSELL, RACHEL, Lady, the devoted wife of the preceding; was second daughter of the earl of Southampton. At the trial of her husband she sat by him acting as his secretary, taking notes of the proceedings to assist his defence. She survived him for 40 years.

Born 1637; died 1723.

RUSSELL, JOHN, Earl, an English statesman, third son of the sixth duke of Bedford. He received his early education at Westminster school, and a private school in Kent, after which he travelled in Spain with Lord Holland. On his return, he went to the university of Edinburgh, where his studies were directed by Professor Playfair, and he had the celebrated Dugald Stewart among his teachers. He again travelled in Spain, and in 1813, being then in his 21st year, entered the House of Commons as the representative of the Whig borough of Tavistock, which was at the disposal of his father. The strong ministry of Lords Liverpool and Castlereagh was then in power, and the young politician went into opposition as a member of the Whig party. His conscientiousness and talents, no less than the advantage of his birth, concurred to pave his way to the leadership of the Whigs. As early as 1819 he energetically demanded parliamentary reform, and, after having forced the Tory government to make concession after concession, he, in 1830, entered office as paymaster of the forces in the Whig administration of Earl Grey, an administration which was pledged to carry parliamentary reform. Early in the year 1831 he introduced the Reform Bill to the house, and after a struggle which convulsed the nation, the bill passed in the following year. When the Whig cabinet of Lord Melbourne supplanted the Tory administration of Sir Robert Peel, in 1835, he became home secretary and ministerial leader of the House of Commons. His party remained in office until 1841, and Lord John Russell went into opposition to Sir Robert Peel's Conservative administration till 1846, when, upon the disruption of Sir Robert's party, mainly in consequence of their chief having abolished the corn laws, Lord John Russell succeeded to power. In 1851 his cabinet was weakened by the secession of Lord Palmerston, who, in the following year, defeated his former chief upon the Militia Bill. Lord John Russell thereupon resigned. In the coalition administration of Lord Aberdeen, he held the appointment of foreign secretary during few months, when, resigning the post to Lord Clarendon, he remained out of office, but as a member of the cabinet. In 1854 he became lord president of the Council, and introduced his new Reform Bill, the consideration of which, however, gave way to the more pressing exigencies of the war in which England, allied with France, was engaged with Russia. As to the conduct of that war he disagreed with Lord Aberdeen, and, accordingly, withdrew from his administration. Upon the fall of the Aberdeen cabinet, in 1855, Lord Palmerston became premier, and Lord John took office under him as colonial secretary; but, at a later date, proceeded to the Vienna conference as British plenipotentiary. In 1855 he resigned, but subsequently rejoined Lord Palmerston as secretary of state for foreign affairs. In 1861 he was called to the House of Peers as Earl Russell, and on the death of Palmerston, in 1865, again became prime minister, but resigned in the following year. No modern statesman has earned a higher character for rectitude, energy, and moral courage. Besides the life-long adherence to the cause of parliamentary reform, he has been an earnest advocate of the admission of Catholics and Jews to political rights, of free trade, and the education of the people. He has distinguished himself in the world of letters as the author of a biography of his ancestor, Lord William Russell, and by an "Essay on the History of the English Government and Constitution, from the Reign of Henry VII. to the Present Time;" "Don Carlos, a tragedy;" the "Affairs of Europe from the Peace of Utrecht;" and memoirs of Fox and the poet Moore.

Born in London, 1792; died at Richmond, 1878.

RUSSIA, EMPIRE OF, rus'-shе-a, the most extensive empire in the world, including a considerable portion of the north and the whole of the north-eastern and eastern part of Europe; the whole of northern Asia and a part of Central Asia, extending from the Baltic Sea on the west to the Pacific on the east, and occupying about one-seventh of all the land in the world. The countries forming this vast empire are RUSSIA IN EUROPE (including POLAND and FINLAND), the CAUCASUS, SIBERIA, and CENTRAL ASIA. Each of these countries is described separately, and in this place the information is limited to that which relates to the empire in its entirety.

Area.—8,644,100.

Pop.—102,970,831; about 87,105,089 being in Russia in Europe, and 15,865,740 in Russia in Asia.

Geographical and Administrative Divisions.—Russia in Europe consists of Russia Proper, sub-divided into Great Russia, Little Russia, Eastern Russia, South Russia, Western Russia, and the Baltic Provinces; Poland, Finland, Cis-Caucasia, and Trans-Caucasia. Russia in Asia consists of Siberia and Central Asia. Finland is a grand duchy, the kingdom of Poland is now included in Russia Proper, and the Caucasus, Siberia, and Central Asia are ruled by governors-general, or viceroys. There are 14 military general governors (who are appointed or dismissed only by the emperor)—Caucasus, Finland, Kazan, Kharkov Kiev, Moscow, Odessa, Orenburg, St. Petersburg, Siberia (East), Siberia (West), Turkestan, Warsaw, Wilna. There are 98 governments, or provinces, of which 81 are in Europe and 17 in Asia. (See RUSSIA IN EUROPE and RUSSIA IN ASIA.)

Constitution and Government.—The government of Russia is an absolute hereditary monarchy. The whole legislative, executive, and judicial power is united in the emperor. The law of succession to the throne, is, according to a decree of the Emperor Paul, of the year 1797, that of regular descent, by the right of primogeniture, with preference of male over female heirs. Every sovereign of Russia, with his consort and children, must be a member of the orthodox Greek Church. The administration of the empire is entrusted to four great boards, or councils, possessing separate functions, but centering in the 'Private Cabinet of the Emperor.' The first of these boards is the Council of the Empire, established in its present form by Alexander I., in the year 1810. It consists of a president and an unlimited number of members appointed by the emperor. The second of the great boards is the Directing Senate, established by Peter I., in the year 1711. The functions of the senate are partly of a deliberative and partly of an executive character. It is the high court of justice for the empire, controlling all the inferior tribunals. The third board, established by Peter I., in the year 1721, is the Holy Synod, and to it is committed the superintendence of the religious affairs of the empire. It is composed of the principal dignitaries of the Church. The fourth board is the Council of Ministers, divided into eleven departments, the heads of which communicate directly with the sovereign, or with the 'Private Cabinet of the Emperor, in which body centres the whole executive authority of the empire. The local administration of the empire differs in different provinces; government having always allowed conquered or annexed countries to preserve their own laws and institutions, except in so far as they were hostile to the general constitution of the empire. The grand-duchy of Finland has a special and partially independent form of government; and the provinces wrested from Sweden by Peter the Great, Courland, and those formerly belonging to Poland, have peculiar institutions and privileges, which, however, have latterly been much modified.

Religion and Education.—The established religion of the empire is the Greco-Russian, officially called the Orthodox-Catholic Faith. The Russian Church separated from the See of Rome in 1054, and from the Byzantine patriarchate in 1589. It has its own independent synod, but maintains the relations of a sister church with the four patriarchates of Constantinople, Jerusalem, Antioch, and Alexandria. There are in Russia nearly 500 cathedrals and about 29,000 churches attached to the established faith, the latter employing about 70,000 secular or parochial clergymen. There are also about 550 convents, of which 480 are for men and 70 for women. The clergy are either secular or regular—the former consisting of the parochial clergy, and the latter of the higher dignitaries, monks, and priests. The hierarchy is composed of bishops, archbishops, and metropolitans. There are in all 38 dioceses. With the exception of the restraints laid on the Jews, who are not allowed to settle in Russia Proper, all religions may be freely professed in the empire. No member of the Russo-Greek Church is, however, permitted to renounce his creed; and when a marriage takes place between one of its members and a person belonging to another faith, the children must all be brought up in the established church. Catholics are numerous in the Polish provinces. Lutherans in those of the Baltic, and Mohammedans in Southern Russia. The Jews are almost all settled in the western and south-western frontier districts. The number of members of the principal religious creeds in European Russia may be stated in round numbers as,—Orthodox Greek Catholics, 54,000,000; United Greeks and Armenians, 267,000; Roman Catholics, 7,200,000; Protestants, 2,560,000; Jews, 2,610,000; and Mohammedans, 2,360,000. The state wholly or partially supports 8 universities and 22,800 primary schools, besides some training and district schools. The great mass of the population is densely ignorant. Only about one in eight of the recruits levied for the army can read and write. In the grand-duchy of Finland, which has a system of public instruction separate from that of the rest of the empire, education is all but universal, the whole of the inhabitants being able at least to read, if not to write.

Commerce.—The value of imports is about £60,000,000 annually; of the exports, £52,000,000; nearly half of the total exports is to England, consisting chiefly of grain, flax, hemp, linseed, tallow, timber, wool, bristles, hides, and cattle. The mercantile navy consists of about 2,500 sea-going vessels, and there are nearly 400 trading steamers on the rivers and lakes, especially on the Volga and its affluents.

Railways and Telegraphs.—About 12,000 miles of railway are open; and there are 31,500 miles of telegraph lines.

History.—Previous to the 9th century that portion of northern and eastern Europe now known as Russia was thinly peopled by Scythian and Slavonic tribes, without any settled form of government. Rurik, a Scandinavian or Norman, obtained possession of a considerable portion of territory, establishing Novgorod as the seat of his government. (See RURIK.) After his death Kiev became the capital. Christianity was introduced by Olga, widow of Igov, the son of Rurik, about 960 (see OLGA), and in 988, Vladimir II., who had married Anna, sister of the Greek emperor, publicly professed Christianity, and his example was followed by a great number of his subjects. After his death, in 1015, his sons quarrelled among themselves, and for more than two centuries the country was distracted by internal feuds. About 1220 an immense horde of Tartars, under Toushi, the son of Ghengiz Khan, invaded the country and defeated the combined Russian princes on the south-eastern frontier, near the Sea of Azof. The Khan of Khaptschak established his "golden horde," or royal residence, in Russia, the great republican city of Novgorod almost alone preserving its independence. In 1252, the Khan assumed the title of grand duke of Russia, and in 1300 Moscow was made the capital. The Tartar supremacy was not thrown off, although many gallant efforts were made (especially by Demetrius IV., in 1380), until 1462, when Ivan III. succeeded in destroying their power and making them tributary. He was an able and vigorous, if despotic and harsh ruler, re-uniting the various principalities, capturing Novgorod and defeating the Poles and Lithuanians. He opened up communications with the great European states, and for the first time foreign ambassadors were received at Moscow. His son and successor, Ivan IV. "the Terrible," assumed the title of Czar, and increased the importance of the country, adding Siberia to his territories. The Cossack tribes were subdued in 1671. Peter the Great developed the resources of the country, introduced many of the arts of civilization, established the new capital of St. Petersburg, and although a cruel and despotic ruler, may be considered as the founder of the colossal power of the Russian monarchy. In 1715 Esthonia, Livonia, and a large portion of Finland were annexed; the Crimea was successfully invaded at various times between 1769 and 1784; Poland was dismembered between 1772 and 1795. (See POLAND.) The Circassian tribes of the Caucasus were subdued and their country annexed after a long conflict in 1864; in the following year Turkestan was added to the Russian dominions; in 1868 Samarcand was taken, and in 1873 Khiva surrendered to the Russian forces, the empire thus extending its dominions to the banks of the Oxus, in Central Asia. The most important events in the modern history of Russia have been the Crimean war of 1854-5; the emancipation of the serfs in 1858-63; the Russo-Turkish war of 1877, and the assassination of the Emp. Alexander, in March, 1881.

On the northern coast the chief inlets are the* WHITE SEA, or Bielo More, separated by the Kaminskaia peninsula from the Gulf of Tcheskaia, farther to the east, and the Kara Sea, marking the boundary between Europe and Asia. On the western coast the principal inlets are the gulfs of FINLAND and RIGA; and on the southern (Black Sea) coast, the Gulf of Paekop and Sea of AZOF. The islands belonging to Russia are NOVA ZEMLA, SPITZBERGEN, and some smaller islands in the Arctic Ocean; the ALAND group, and DAGO and OESEL, in the Baltic. The surface of the country consists of two immense plains, divided by an elevated tract, the Alaunsky plateau, and bordered E. by the Ural Mountains, S. and S.E. by the Crimean Mountains and the Caucasus, W. by branches of the Carpathians, and N.W. by the rocky hills of Finland. The Alaunsky plateau, with an average elevation of 1,200 feet, rises on the eastern frontier of Poland, and traverses the country in a north-easterly direction to the Ural Mountains, about lat. 62° N., forming the great watershed of the rivers discharging into the Arctic Ocean, the Baltic, Black, and Caspian Seas. The sloping country to the north of the plateau is geographically known as the Ural-Baltic, and that to the south as the Ural-Carpathian plateaux. In the northern parts the soil is marshy, and there are extensive forests, chiefly of fir, larch, alder, and birch; but in the central and southern provinces there is a great deficiency of timber. The most fertile districts are beyond the Oka and the Volga; the southern provinces consist generally of steppes extending along the shores of the Black and Caspian Seas, and including many salt marshes and tracts of shifting sand. Pro. Agriculture is in general in a very backward state. Rye, barley, and oats, are the principal grains of the northern provinces, wheat being cultivated only in the southern; but the crops of all kinds of grain are so abundant as to permit of a large export beyond the quantity required for home consumption. Potatoes are found in the coldest districts. Hemp and flax are adapted to a great part of the empire. Among the products of the south are tobacco and maize, the latter chiefly in the Crimea. In the southern provinces and the Crimea the vine is extensively cultivated, and a wine resembling champagne is made. Grazing is a natural occupation in almost every province, and sheep and oxen are reared in immense numbers on the steppes. Not one-sixth of Russia is yet in cultivation. The rearing of bees is greatly attended to. The climate, of course, varies greatly in so extensive a country. In the north the winter is about nine months long, and the thermometer often indicates 60° below freezing; but in the summer a temperature of 80° is not unfrequently reached. In the more temperate zone, the variations are also very great, intense summer heat being often followed by rigorous cold in winter. In the south the heat is intense in the summer, yet the sea of Azof is generally frozen between November and April. The sufferings endured from the extreme cold in winter by the allied armies in the Crimea, where the summer heat is so great, attest the extreme character of the climate.

Rivers and Lakes.—The principal are the Dniester, Dnieper, and South Bug, discharging into the Black Sea, near Odessa; the Don, into the Sea of Azof; the Volga and the Ural, into the Caspian; the Neva, Narva, and Kymmene, into the Gulf of Finland; the Vistula and its tributary, the Western Bug, and the Niemen, or Memel, which enter Prussia before discharging into the Baltic; the Kemi and Tornea, into the Gulf of Bothnia; the Dwina, Onega, and Mezen, into the White Sea; and the Petchóra into the Arctic Ocean. Each of these rivers has several affluents. Canals connect the Baltic and Caspian Seas, the Baltic and Black Seas, and the Caspian and White Seas, uniting the navigable rivers. The lakes are chiefly in the north-west, and belong to the basin of the Baltic. The largest are LADOGA (the largest lake in Europe), ILMEN, ONEGA, Peipus (55 miles long and 30 wide), and Pskov (27 miles long and 15 wide).

Minerals.—Gold, iron, copper, platinum, salt, coal, china clay, emeralds, jaspers, and diamonds of inferior quality. The Ural Mountains contain the most valuable mineral deposits, especially of iron.

Zoology.—The principal wild animals are bears, wolves, wild boars, and, on some of the southern steppes, wild horses. In the south immense numbers of sheep, many of the fine merino breed, are reared, and horses and cattle are extensively bred. Reindeer are employed in the north and camels in the south. Seals and walruses are found on the northern coast; eider ducks and wild fowl are abundant, and there are important fisheries in the Caspian and Black Seas, and the Sea of Azof.

Pop.—87,105,089; of whom about 50,000,000 are Russians, divided into three groups known as Great Russians (or Velika-Russ), Little Russians (or Malo-Russ), and White Russians (or Bélo-Russ); 3,200,000 Fins; 2,500,000 Lithuanians; 7,000,000 Slavonians (including Poles); 2,000,000 Armenians, and 2,500,000 Tartars. The Jews number about 2,500,000, and there are 1,300,000 of German descent, 100,000 Swedes, and 500,000 Greeks, or of Greek descent; the remainder of the population being made up of foreigners and half-civilized communities of mixed nationality. Previous to the emancipation of the serfs, in 1861, there were 22,000,000 serfs or slaves, the property of the noble and wealthy classes, and an equal number of crown peasants, or serfs.

Language.—The Russian language, which is the vernacular of at least four-fifths of the inhabitants, is based on the old Slavic, which before the time of Peter the Great was the only written language. Modern Russia is largely indebted to the Mongolian, Polish, German, French, and Dutch languages. The first grammar was published in 1696.

Administrative Divisions.—Russia in Europe is divided for official purposes into Russia Proper, which includes Great Russia, Little Russia, Eastern Russia, South Russia, Western Russia (known also as White Russia), the Baltic Provinces; Poland, Finland, and Cis-Caucasia. These are sub-divided into the following governments:—

Great Russia.—Archangel, Jaroslav, Kaluga, Kostroma, Koursk, Moscow, Nijni-Novgorod, Novgorod, Olonetz, Orel, Pskov, Riazan, Smolensk, Tambor, Tula, Tver, Vladimir, Volagda, Voronej.

Little Russia.—Kharkov, Kiev, Poltava, Tchernigov.

Eastern Russia.—Astrakhan, Kazan, Oranburg, Penza, Perm, Samara, Saratov, Simbirsk, Ufa, Viatka.

South Russia.—Bessarabia, Cossacks of the Don, Ekaterinoslav, Kherson, Sea of Azof, Taurida (Crimea).

Baltic Provinces.—Courland, Esthonia, Livonia, St. Petersburg.

Poland.—Kalisch, Kielcé, Lomsha, Lublin, Piotrkov, Plotzk, Radom, Siedlce, Suwalki, Warsaw.

Finland.—Abo-Bjovneberg, Knopio, Nyland, St. Michael, Tevastehus, Ulesborg, Viborg, Wasa.

Cis-Caucasia.—Kubán, Stavropal, Ter.

Chief Towns.—The following cities contain more than 600,000 inhabitants: St. Petersburg and Moscow; and Warsaw, Odessa, Kicheneff, and Riga have more than 100,000; only 9 other towns—Saratoff, Vilna, Kasan, Kieff, Nicolaieff, Tiflis, Kherkoff, Tula, and Berditcheff—have more than 50,000 inhabitants. Cronstadt, Astrakhan, Novgorod, and Vovenze, have each over 40,000. The principal ports for foreign trade are St. Petersburg, Odessa, and Riga.

(See RUSSIA, EMPIRE OF, and principal places, under separate headings.)

RUSTSCHUK, rus'-tchuk, a fortified town of European Turkey, in Bulgaria, on the south bank of the Danube, at the influx of the Kara Lom, opposite Giurgevo. There are nine mosques, Greek and Armenian churches, baths, and other public buildings. Manf. Cotton, silk, linen, woollen, and tobacco. Pop. 26,163.

RUTE, root, a town of Spain, province of Cordova. On a hill near the town is a strong Gothic fortress, and there are traces of an ancient town. Manf. Linen, sackcloth, oil, and brandy. Pop. 7,700.

RUTH, ruth, a Moabitish woman, who married first Mahlon, son of Elimelech and Naomi, and afterwards Boaz, by whom she had Obed, the father of Jesse and grandfather of David.

RUTHERFORD, a county of North Carolina, United States. Area, 850 square miles. Pop. 15,198, about 2,700 being coloured. The capital is Rutherfordton.

RUTHERFORD, a county of Tennessee, United States. Area, 550 square miles. Pop. 36,741, nearly half being coloured. The capital is Murfreesboro.

RUTHERGLEN, or RUGLEN, rut'-ther-glen, a royal, parliamentary (Kilmarnock district), and municipal burgh of Scotland, in Lanarkshire, on the Clyde, 3 miles S.E. of Glasgow. Manf. Muslins, cotton prints, and chemicals. Pop. 13,801.

RUTHIN, rith'-in, a market town, municipal and parliamentary borough of North Wales, in Denbighshire, on the right bank of the Chwyd, 8 miles S.E. of Denbigh. The castle is a modern Gothic edifice, on the site of an ancient building. Pop. 3,300.

RUTILIUS-RUFUS, PUBLIUS, ru-til'-i-us, consul of Rome, 150 B.C. His love of justice gave such offence to some of the Roman knights, that they accused him of peculation, and he was banished. Upon his passage from Italy to Asia, all the cities he passed through showed him the greatest honours, so that his progress had more the appearance of a triumph than an exile. Sylla subsequently offered to recall him to Rome, but he refused, and died in exile at Smyrna.

Died 105 B.C.

RUTLAND, rut'-land, a county of Vermont, United States. Area, 1,600 square miles. Pop. 42,000. The capital is RUTLAND.

RUTLAND, capital of the above county, at the junction of West River and East Creek. There are quarries of beautiful marble in the vicinity. Pop. 12,149, of whom 3,000 are foreigners.

RUTLAND, the smallest county of England, bounded on the W. by Leicestershire, on the N. and E. by Lincolnshire, and on the S.E. and E. by Northamptonshire. The face of the country is, generally speaking, very beautiful, especially where well timbered, being much diversified by small and gently rising hills, running E. and W., with valleys of about half a mile in width intersecting them; so that fresh views occur at the distance of every few miles. The climate has always been considered as mild, healthy, and pleasant. The soil is very various, but, on the whole, fertile. Great numbers of oxen and sheep are reared. There are several chalybeate springs.

Rivers.—The Welland, which forms the south-eastern boundary, and its affluents, the Wash and the Chater.
Area.—148 square miles.
Pop. 21,434.
Parliamentary Representation and Chief Towns.—Two members are returned for the county. The chief towns are OAKHAM (the county town) and UPPINGHAM.

RUVIGADO, roo-vi-ga'-do, a town of the republic of Colombo, South America, department of Cundinamarca, on one of the head waters of the Magdalena, situated 8,900 feet above the sea-level. Pop. 10,000.

RUVO (in APULIA), roo'-vo, a city of southern Italy, province of Bari, and 22 miles W. of the city of that name. There are many churches and two museums. Manf. Pottery. Pop. 17,828.

RUYSDAEL, JAKOB, rois'-dail, a Dutch landscape painter. He also painted sea pieces, and was an admirable etcher.
Born at Haerlem, 1625; died at the same place, 1681.

RUYSSELEDE, rois'-se-lar'de, a town of Belgium, province of West Flanders, 14 miles S.E. of Bruges. Manf. Linen. Pop. 8,000.

RUYTER, MICHAEL ADRIANSZOON VAN, roi'-ter, a Dutch admiral, who went to sea at an early age, and after passing through the different ranks of the service, became an admiral in 1641. Not long afterwards, he defeated the corsairs on the coast of Barbary. In 1652, while in command of a squadron conveying merchant ships, he had an indecisive but gallant engagement with an English fleet, and in 1653 he was second in command under Van Tromp, whom he ably supported against the English in three engagements. In 1659 he was sent to succour the king of Denmark against the Swedes, and for his services was ennobled and pensioned by that monarch. In 1666 he again served against the English, and was signally defeated by Prince Rupert and the Duke of Albemarle, but in the next year he sailed up the Thames and Medway, destroying shipping. He was killed on the coast of Sicily, in a desperate engagement with the French. There is a fine monument to his memory at Amsterdam.
Born at Vlissingen, 1607: died 1676.

RYBINSK, ri-binsk', a town of Russia in Europe, government of Jaroslav, on the right bank of the Volga. It is a very important centre of the corn trade, and a great transshipping and forwarding trade is carried on, the landing-places extending for several miles along the river. It is estimated that articles of the value of £12,000,000 are annually forwarded by canal to St. Petersburg. Pop. 14,600.

RYDE, ride, a watering-place on the north coast of the Isle of Wight, 5 miles S.W. of Portsmouth, from which it is separated by the roadstead of Spithead. The modern part of the town is near the sea, and there is a long pier. Yacht and boat-building are carried on. Pop. 11,260.—A station on the Ryde, Newport, and Cowes railway.

RYE, ri, a seaport, market town, and municipal and parliamentary borough of Sussex, one of the Cinque ports, at the mouth of the Rother, 10 miles N.E. of Hastings. The parish church is large and handsome, with transepts and a central tower, in the early Norman style, and there is a castle, now used as a jail. The harbour admits vessels of 200 tons. Pop. 3,865.

RYLAND, WILLIAM WYNNE, ri'-land, an English engraver, who introduced the art of engraving copper plates so as to yield an impression resembling drawings in chalk. He was appointed engraver to George III. In 1782 he was found guilty of having committed a forgery on the East-India Company, for which he was tried and executed.
Born in London, 1732; died 1783.

RYLSK. (See RULSK.)

RYMER, THOMAS, ri'-mer, an English antiquary and critic. He became historiographer royal in 1692, and formed an immense collection of public acts, treaties, conventions, and state letters, under the title of "Fœdera," published in London in 20 volumes folio. He was also the author of a "View of the Tragedies of the Last Age," in which he made an absurd attack upon Shakspeare.
Born in Yorkshire, 1639; died in London, 1714.

RYSBRAEK, PIETRO, rise'-braik, a Dutch landscape painter, who was an imitator of Poussin, and became director of the academy of Antwerp. His figures and trees are well designed, and he painted expeditiously and with spirit.
Born at Antwerp, 1657; died at that city, 1716.

RYSBRAEK, JOHAN MICHAEL, a sculptor, and son of the preceding. His most celebrated works were the equestrian statue of William III., in Soho Square; the monument to Sir Isaac Newton, in Westminster Abbey; the statue of George II., for Greenwich hospital; the monument to the duke and duchess of Marlborough, in the chapel at Blenheim; and those to Milton, Ben Jonson, Sir Godfrey Kneller, Gay, and Rowe, in Westminster Abbey.
Born at Antwerp, 1693; died in London, 1770.

RZESZOW, rzes'-zow, a town of the Austrian empire in Galicia, on the Wislok. Manf. Woollen and linen goods and imitation jewellery and cheap trinkets. Pop. 6,800.

S.

SAADE, sa-ad, a town of Arabia, in the mountainous district of Yemen. There are iron mines in the vicinity.

SAAD-ED-DEEN, MOHAMMED, sa'-ad ed-deen', a Turkish historian, who was professor in the college attached to the mosque of St. Sophia, and subsequently became tutor to Murad, the son of Selim II. When Murad succeeded to the throne, in 1574, he was taken into the most intimate confidence, and, in 1598, became mufti, the highest ecclesiastical dignity in the state. His work is entitled "Tadj-al-Towarikh," or "Crown of Histories," and contains an account of the Turkish empire, from its establishment by Othman, in 1299, to the death of Selim I., in 1520. He also produced a history of Selim I.

Born 1536; died at Constantinople, 1599.

SAADI, sa'-a-di. (See SADI.)

SAALE, sa'-al (known as the Saxon Saale, to distinguish it from smaller streams of the same name), a river rising in Bavaria, on the western slope of the Fichtelgebirge, and flowing northward through Prussia, joins the Elbe, 25 miles above Magdeburg, after a course of 200 miles.

SAALFELD, sa'-al-feld, a town of the duchy of Saxe-Meiningen, on the left bank of the Saale, 21 miles S.W. of Saxe-Weimar. It is an old town, with walls, and a castle. Manf. Tobacco, chicory, and chemicals. Pop. 5,400.—Here, in 1806, Prince Louis Frederick of Prussia was defeated and killed by the French.

SAAR, sa-ar, a river of France and Prussia.

SAARBRUCKEN, sa-ar-brook-en, a town of Prussia, Rhine Province, on the Saar, 18 miles from Luxemburg. Manf. Woollen and linen, pottery and tobacco. Pop. 7,700.

SAARDAM, or ZAARDAM, sa'-ar-dam, a town of the Netherlands, province of North Holland, at the junction of the Zaar with the Y, 5 miles N. of Amsterdam. It is noticeable for the great number of windmills, and as having been the place where Peter the Great of Russia worked as a shipwright. Pop. 13,171.

SAARGEMÜND, or SARREGUEMINES, a town of Germany, in Alsace-Lorraine, 41 miles E. of Metz. Manf. Pottery, velvet, and hempen fabrics. Pop. 6,800.

SAAR-LOUIS, sa'-ar-loo'-is, a fortified town of Prussia, Rhine Province, on the left bank of the Saar, 43 miles S. of Treves. Manf. Wire, hardwares, firearms, and leather. In the neighbourhood are both lead and iron mines. Pop. 8,000.

SAATZ, sa'-atz, a town of the Austrian empire, in Bohemia, on the Eger, 45 miles N.W. of Prague. Pop. 10,000. There is a division of same name.

SAAVEDRA, MIGUEL CERVANTES DE. (See CERVANTES.)

SABADELL, sa'-ba-del, an important and rising manufacturing town of Spain, province of Barcelona, 10 miles N.W. of Barcelona. Manf. Woollens, cottons, muslins, and paper. Pop. 18,000.

SABAS, sai'-bas, the founder of a sect called Messalians, who maintained that the Gospel was to be followed literally. In supposed conformity with this rule, Sabas made himself a eunuch. This sect appeared about 310, but became extinct at the close of that century.

Lived in the 4th century.

SABBATTA, or SABBATHAIS LEVI, sa-ba-ta le'-vi, a Jewish impostor, who, while a youth, deeply studied the Talmud and other Jewish writings, and declared himself to be the Messiah, and although excommunicated by the supreme rabbinical council, and expelled from his native town, Smyrna, was acknowledged by several rabbins and other Jews, who sent letters to their dispersed brethren in all parts of the world, announcing the great event. By the time he was 23 years of age he had 80,000 followers, and large revenues, and announced his intention to found a new empire in Palestine. Sabbatta, however, was arrested at Constantinople, and sent to prison, whither the misguided Jews flocked in crowds, and bribed the governor by large presents for the privilege of kissing his chains. The sultan, Mahomet, having directed him to be brought into his presence, to test his pretended Divine powers, ordered poisoned arrows to be shot at him. To escape this, the pretended prophet immediately offered to become a Mussulman, and adopted the turban, but was afterwards sent to prison, where he died.

Born at Smyrna, 1625; died 1676.

SABELLIUS, sa-bel'-li-us, the founder of a religious sect called by his name. He maintained that there was no distinction of persons in the Trinity, and his followers became very numerous. The heresy was condemned by the council of Constantinople in 381.

Lived in the 3rd century.

SABINA, JULIA, sa-bi'-na, the wife of the emperor Adrian, and celebrated for her private and public virtues. When Adrian found his end approaching, he compelled her to take poison, that she might not survive him.

Died 138.

SABINE, EDWARD, SIR, sa-bine', a major-general of the British army, who greatly distinguished himself by his researches into electricity and terrestrial magnetism. He first served in the Royal Artillery, and accompanied Ross and Parry in their Arctic expedition of 1819-20, making important observations. He contributed several papers to the "Transactions" of the Royal Society, and to the "Philosophical Transactions." In 1852 he was president of the British Association, in 1856 was raised to the military rank of major-general, was elected president of the Royal Society in 1861, created a knight commander of the Bath in 1869, and in 1875 was chosen to be a corresponding member of the French Academy.

Born 1790.

SABINE, a river of the United States of America, rising in the north-eastern part of Texas, and after a course of 500 miles, discharging into the Bay of Sabine, in the Gulf of Mexico.

SABINE, a county of Louisiana, United States. Area, 1,300 square miles. Pop. 7,500, nearly one-third being coloured. The capital is Manny.

SABINE, a county of Texas, United States. Area, 525 square miles. Pop. 3,500, about one-third being coloured. The capital is Hemphill.

SABINUS, JULIUS, sa-bi'-nus, a Roman officer, who proclaimed himself emperor at the commencement of the reign of Vespasian. He was soon afterwards defeated in battle, and, to escape from the conqueror, hid himself in a cave with two faithful domestics, and remained unseen during nine successive years. His wife having discovered his retreat, spent her time with him, until her frequent visits to the cave divulged the secret of her husband's concealment. Sabinus was dragged forth, and by Vespasian's order was put to death, although his wife showed him the twins whom she had brought forth in the subterraneous retreat.

Lived in the 1st century.

SABLE, sab-lai', a town of France, department Sarthe, at the junction of the rivers Sarthe and Erve. There is a bridge of black marble over the Sarthe, and the remains of a strong castle, on a height above the town. Manf. Gloves and serge. Marble and anthracite are abundant in the vicinity. Pop. 5,600.

SABLE ISLAND, sai'-bel, a sandy island off the east coast of Nova Scotia, about 25 miles long, and nearly 5 miles broad. It is treeless, but there is abundant grass, and horses and domestic cattle are pastured. The prevalence of fogs and the irregularity of the currents cause many wrecks to take place on the coast. Lat. 43° 59′ N. Lon. 59° 47′ W.

SABLES D'OLONNE, LES, sabl-do'-lon, a seaport of France, department Vendée, 45 miles from Nantes. Pop. 8,000.

SABRINA LAND, sa-bri'-na, the name given to a tract of land in the Antarctic Ocean, discovered in 1839. Lat. 69° 58′ S. Lon. 121° 8′ E.

SAC, sak, a county of Iowa, United States. Area, 576 square miles. Pop. 8,774. The capital is Sac city.

SACATEPEC, sa-ka-te-pek', a province of the republic of Guatemala, Central America. Area, 3,000 square miles. Pop. 56,000.

SACCATOO, or SAKATU, sak'-ka-too', a town of Central Africa. The houses are chiefly in the Moorish style. The inhabitants are chiefly Fellatahs, who have many slaves. A considerable trade is carried on. Lat. 13° 3′ N. Lon. 6° 12′ E.

SACCHETTI, FRANCO, sak-ket'-te, an Italian novelist and poet, who was the contemporary of Boccacio, to whom he was scarcely inferior. He came of a considerable family of Florence, and in 1383 acted as one of the Council of Eight, or magistrates of that republic. He was also chief magistrate of Bibbiena.

Born about 1335; died after 1400.

SACCHI, ANDREA, sak'-ke, Italian painter, and one of the great luminaries of the Roman school. He received his first instruction in the art from his father, and afterwards became the most skilful of all Albano's pupils. In 1623 he was commissioned to paint a large altar-piece for St. Peter's. Among other distinguished pupils, he taught Carlo Maratta. St. Peter's, and various ecclesiastical edifices at Rome, are in possession of his finest paintings.

Born near Rome, 1559; died 1661.

SACCHINI, ANTONIO MARIE GASPAR, sak-ke'-ne, an Italian composer, whose operas are composed in a fine style, and many of the best were executed by him in London; but they are now almost forgotten.

Born at Naples, 1735; died at Paris, 1786.

SACHEVERELL, HENRY, sa-shev'-e-rel, an English divine, who was educated at Magdalen College, Oxford, of which he became fellow, and proceeded to the degree of doctor in divinity, in 1709. He translated into English verse part of Virgil's first Georgic in Dryden's "Miscellanies," and Addison addressed to him the dedication to his "Farewell to the Muses;" but what has made his name remarkable was his trial by impeachment for two political sermons, the first preached at Derby, and the second before the lord mayor at St. Paul's, in 1709. In these sermons he held up the Whig party, which was then in power, to ridicule; and preached passive obedience to the regal authority. The trial occupied the public attention in an extraordinary manner; he was found guilty, and suspended for three years, and the obnoxious sermons were burned by the hangman; but on his release he was appointed to preach before the House of Commons, and queen Anne, who found his politics much to her taste, presented him, as soon as that period expired, to the valuable living of St. Andrew, Holborn.

Born at Marlborough, 1672; died 1724.

SACHS, HANS, saks, a German poet, whose real name was Loutzdorffer. He was the son of a tailor, and was himself brought up to the craft of shoemaking, at which he worked for many years in Nuremberg. He embraced the principles of the reformed religion, which he defended in his writings. He wrote upwards of six thousand different compositions, songs, dramatic pieces, dialogues, and many tales and fables. Only a small portion of his writings are printed in an edition which appeared at Nuremberg in 1579. They are redolent of a native wit and shrewdness, and exhibit considerable humour of a homely, good-natured kind, fancy and healthy morality.

Born at Nuremberg, 1494; died at the same city, 1578.

SACKVILLE, THOMAS, earl of Dorset. (See DORSET, earl of.)

SACKVILLE, EDWARD, sak'-vil, an English statesman, earl of Dorset, and grandson of the first earl. In 1613 he fought a desperate duel in Zealand with lord Bruce, who was slain. He was one of the principal commanders sent in 1620 to assist Frederick, king of Bohemia, and was at the memorable battle of Prague in 1620. The year following he was sent as ambassador to the court of France. He was in great favour with king Charles, and became knight of the Garter, president of the council, and lord privy seal.

Born 1590; died 1652.

SACKVILLE, CHARLES, earl of Dorset, an English statesman, who, after concluding his travels, sat in parliament, and in the Dutch war of 1665 served as a volunteer under the duke of York, and the night before the sea engagement in which the enemy were defeated, wrote the famous song commencing "To all ye ladies now on land." He engaged early in the interest of the prince of Orange, and, upon the accession of William III., he was made a member of the privy council, lord chamberlain, and knight of the Garter. He was a patron of men of letters, particularly Prior, and wrote some poetical pieces of merit.

Born 1637; died at Bath, 1706.

SACKVILLE, GEORGE, lord Viscount, was the third son of the first duke of Dorset. In 1737 he obtained a commission in the army, and served at the battles of Dettingen and Fontenoy. He was afterwards with the duke of Cumberland in Scotland, where he contributed to the quelling of the rebellion. In 1758 he was appointed lieutenant-general, and sworn a member of the privy-council. In 1759 he went to Germany, where, at the battle of Minden, he commanded the British and Hanoverian horse. In the action he was ordered to charge with his cavalry, but took no notice of the command. He was, in consequence, severely censured, his name was struck out of the list of the privy council, and by court-martial dismissed from the service. On the accession of George III. he was restored to favour, and, in 1769, by the will of lady Elizabeth Germaine, succeeded to her property; on which occasion he took her name. In 1775 he became secretary of state for the American colonies, and directed the American war. He is one of those to whom, on very slight evidence, the authorship of "Junius" has been attributed.

Born 1716; died 1785.

SACO, sai'-ko, a town of York county, Maine, United States, on the west bank of the Saco, 4 miles from its mouth, 14 miles S.W. of Portland. Manf. Cotton (extensive). There are saw mills and shipyards. Pop. 6,000.

SACRAMENTO, sak'-ra-men'-to, a river of the United States, rising in the north-eastern part of California, between the Rocky Mountains and a range running parallel to the coast, and after a course of 500 miles, falling into the Bay of San Francisco. In the upper part of its course it is known as Pitt river and the Upper Sacramento.

SACRAMENTO, a county of California, United States. Area, 1,026 square miles. Pop. 34,390, including 3,500 Chinese. The capital is SACRAMENTO.

SACRAMENTO, capital of California, United States, on the east bank of the Sacramento river, 125 miles from the sea. It is the centre of the mining district. The first house was built in 1849, at the time of the great gold discoveries, and in 1854 was made the state capital. Pop. 21,420.

SACROBOSCO, JOANNES DE, or JOHN of HOLYWOOD, sai'-kro-bos'-ko, an English mathematician, who was contemporary with Roger Bacon. He wrote treatises in Latin upon arithmetic and the figure of the earth, and was one of the first European doctors who made use of the astronomical writings of the Arabians. He was chosen professor of mathematics at the University of Paris, in which city he principally resided.

Died at Paris, 1256.

SACUHI, or SUSSUHI, sa'-koo'-he, a river of Brazil, rising in the province of Minas-Geraes, and after a course of 250 miles joining the Doce, on the left bank.

SACY, ANTOINE ISAAC, Baron Silvestre de, sa'-se, a French orientalist. At a very early age he became proficient in the Greek and Latin languages, and, becoming acquainted, in his 12th year, with a learned Benedictine monk, he imbibed from that scholar a taste for the eastern tongues. He proceeded to study Hebrew, Arabic, Chaldee, Samaritan, Syriac, and Ethiopic, as well as English, Spanish, German, and Italian. To this vast store of knowledge he added the Persian and Turkish languages, and in 1780, he being then only in his 23rd year, made some valuable Biblical researches notably in examining a Syriac manuscript of the Fourth Book of Kings, contained in the Bibliothèque Royale. In 1875 he was elected a member of the French Academy; he contributed two memoirs to the "Transactions of the Academy of Inscriptions and Belles-Lettres," upon Arabian literature, and was employed to make extracts from the oriental MSS. in the royal library. At the outburst of the French revolution he retired from Paris, and while the storm of republicanism was raging, he employed himself with some profound researches in oriental literature. In 1793 he published the "Annals of Mirkhond," translated from the Persian. In 1803 he was appointed professor of Persian in the College of France. Two years afterwards he became a member of the Corps Legislatif. After the establishment of the imperial government, De Sacy was sent upon a mission to Genoa, the object of which was the examination of the Arabic MSS. preserved in the archives of that city, and in 1806 presented to the Academy a report of his labours. Napoleon I. created him a baron of the empire: but, upon the restoration of the Bourbons, he gave his adherence to the new order of things, and was rewarded with the post of member of the Council for Public Instruction and the presidentship of the Asiatic Society of Paris, a learned body which he himself mainly contributed to found. Under the monarchy of Louis Philippe he became keeper of the oriental manuscripts in the king's library, and perpetual secretary to the Academy of Inscriptions. This distinguished scholar produced, among other important works, an Arabic Grammar, the result of fifteen years' assiduous application; "Biographies of the Persian Poets;" "Principles of General Grammar;" "Chrestomathie Arabe," a selection of extracts in prose and verse from different Arabian authors; the Arabic text of the Fables of Pilpay; and some valuable memoirs upon the antiquities of Persia. At his suggestion, and under his direction, were established the professorships of Hindostanee, Sanskrit, and Chinese, at Paris, as well as the institutions formed for the study of the oriental languages in Russia and Prussia. His last great work was an "Exposition of the Religion of the Druses." He also contributed extensively to periodical literature."

Born at Paris, 1758; died there 1838.

SADDLEWORTH, sad'-del-werth, a town of the West Riding of Yorkshire, 12 miles from Huddersfield. Manf. Principally woollen goods. Pop. 22,300.—A station on the London and North-Western railway.

SADI, sai'-di, SHIEKH MUSLEH ADDIN, poet of Persia, descended from Ali, the son-in-law of Mahomet. He was of poor parentage, but was educated at Bagdad. He travelled extensively, not only in the East (penetrating as far as India), but even in Europe, Barbary, and Egypt. He was taken prisoner by the Crusaders near Jerusalem, but ransomed by a merchant of Aleppo, whose daughter he married. The last years of his life were passed near Shiraz, and after his death, a splendid mausoleum, with mosque and college attached, was erected to his memory, and was for many centuries visited by pilgrims. The Persians consider him one of the greatest of poets, and his works, especially the "Gulistan," or "Rose-garden," exhibit great elegance of style and vigour of imagination. He wrote both in Persian and Arabic.

Born at Shiraz, 1184; died 1263.

SAFED, sa-fed', a town of Syria, pachalic of Acre, on a lofty mountain, 12 miles N. of Tiberias. There are many synagogues and a Jewish college. ST.-CYR, LAURENT GOUVION DE, seer, marshal of France. He was the son of a tanner, but received a fair education, and after spending his early manhood successively as a teacher of drawing and as an actor, he entered the army in 1792, as a chasseur. Having reached the grade of general of division, he served under Jourdan, and next under Moreau, and, in 1797, was chosen by the Directory to supersede Massena as commander-in-chief of the army of Rome. In the Prussian and Polish campaign he increased his reputation, and, in 1807, was appointed governor of Warsaw. Upon the invasion of Russia in 1812, Napoleon I. placed him in command of the sixth corps of the grand army, and, having won a great battle over the Russians at Polotsk, he was immediately created a marshal, but, after the battle of Leipzic, he was forced to capitulate with 16,000 men. After the return of Napoleon from Elba, he remained inactive, and then joined the cause of the Bourbons, by whom he was loaded with honours, and appointed minister of war. He wrote a number of military works.

ST. JUST, LOUIS ANTOINE DE, zhoost, a French democrat and the colleague of Robespierre. He studied at Soissons and Rheims, and on leaving college became an enthusiastic adherent of the principles of the revolution, and was elected to represent the department of Aisne in the Convention. He made himself remarkable by the violence of his opinions, greatly contributing to the condemnation of Louis XVI., the establishment of the republic, and the concentration of absolute power in the Convention. He allied himself with Robespierre, was a member of the Committee of Public Safety, and was one of those who organised the reign of terror. He was guillotined at the same time as Robespierre. He cultivated letters, and was the author of a work on the "Spirit of the Revolution and of the Constitution of France."

Born at Decize, 1769; guillotined, 1794.

ST. LEONARDS, EDWARD BURTENSHAW SUGDEN, len'-ards, Baron, English lord chancellor, who was called to the bar at Lincoln's Inn in 1807. At the outset of his professional career he obtained a large amount of practice in consequence of the popularity of his "Concise and Practical Treatise of the law of Vendors and Purchasers of Estates." Until the year 1817, he was mainly occupied as a conveyancer and chamber counsel, and in preparing for publication several works upon jurisprudence, which achieved the largest amount of success. One of these, that entitled "A Series of Letters to a Man of Property on Sales, Purchases, Mortgages, Leases, Settlements, and Devises of Estates," was republished in 1858, with additions, in a work called "A Handy Book of Property Law," in which form it attained a larger share of popularity than was ever before the case with respect to a treatise upon legal questions. In 1817 he devoted his time to the chancery bar, where he obtained very considerable practice. He was made king's counsel in 1822, and in 1828 entered the House of Commons as member for Weymouth. In the following year he was knighted and appointed solicitor-general, which office he vacated upon the retirement of the duke of Wellington's administration, in 1831. In 1835 he was appointed lord chancellor of Ireland under Sir Robert Peel, but held the office during only a short period. He resumed the Irish chancellorship in 1841, and held it until 1846. Under the administration of 1852 he was appointed lord chancellor of England, and was created a peer with the title of Lord St. Leonards. He resigned this post with the retirement of the Conservative ministry at the close of the same year. Although not remarkable as a parliamentary debater, his profound acquaintance with the law made him an important member of the political party with which he acted.

Born in London, 1781; died 1875.

ST. PIERRE, EUSTACE DE, pé-air, a citizen of Calais, who signalised himself when that place was besieged by Edward III., king of England, in 1347. The brave resistance made by the inhabitants, so irritated the English monarch, that he is said to have demanded six of their principal citizens to be delivered up to him that they might be put to death. St. Pierre offered himself for one, and was joined by the five others, who went out to the English camp in their shirts, with halters about their necks and bearing the keys of the city. At the entreaty of Queen Philippa, Edward pardoned and dismissed them with presents.

Died 1371.

ST. PIERRE, CHARLES IRENÆUS CASTEL DE, a French ecclesiastic and politician, who accompanied cardinal Polignac to the conference at Utrecht, and was also admitted a member of the French Academy; but after the death of Louis XIV. he was excluded for some political opinions which he had hazarded. His principal works were, "Project for a Universal Peace between the Powers of Europe," "Memoirs for Correcting the Police," and a series of "Reflections on Duelling, the Celibacy of the Priesthood, on Reforms of the French Tariffs," &c. Cardinal Dubois called his writings "the dreams of an honest man."

Born in Normandy, 1658; died 1743.

ST. PIERRE. (See PIERRE, ST.)

ST. SERVAN. (See SERVAN, ST.)

ST. SIMON, LOUIS DE ROUVROI, Duke de, sé-mawng. He claimed to be descended from Charlemagne, and throughout his life exhibited the most intense aristocratic feeling. After serving in the army under Marshal Luxembourg, and signalising himself at Namur, and at the battles of Fleurus and Neerwinden, he quitted the military profession, resolving to devote himself to the court and a diplomatic career. He was, however, little employed in state affairs under Louis XIV.; but in 1721 he went as ambassador to Spain to demand the infanta in marriage for Louis XV. After the death of the regent duke of Orleans, he lost the court favour; whereupon he retired to his estate, and there occupied himself with the composition of his memoirs. In this exceedingly interesting and valuable contribution to history, the author supplied the most curious and ample details of the court of Louis XIV. and during the subsequent regency.

Born at Paris, 1675; died at the same city, 1755.

SAINT-SIMON, CLAUDE HENRI, Count de, a French social philosopher, was a member of another branch of the same family as the preceding. After completing his education under D'Alembert and other eminent French professors, he repaired to America in 1777, as an officer in the expedition dispatched by Louis XVI. to assist the colonists in their struggle against Great Britain. After seeing some service under Washington, he made a tour in Mexico, was captured by the British and kept prisoner for about a year in Jamaica, and finally returned to his native country. He was appointed colonel in the French army, but took no active participation in military affairs, he having resolved to "study the march of human spirit, in order, eventually, to labour for the advancement of human civilization." To this work he was, he asserted, urged by a dream, in which Charlemagne appeared to him. In 1785 he set out upon a tour in Holland and Spain, in which latter country he suggested to the government several important social improvements. Returning to France just as the revolution was bursting forth, he warmly sympathized with the movement, which he regarded as a work of social regeneration; but he took no share in the subsequent events. He entered into partnership with a Prussian nobleman—the Count de Redern,—and bought a considerable quantity of confiscated land, with the view of establishing a large scientific and industrial school; but the scheme was a failure, and Saint-Simon retired from it after losing a vast sum of money. He had now attained his 38th year, and came to the resolution of devoting himself to what he termed a "physico-political" reformation. In order to qualify himself for the task, he took up his residence near the Ecole Polytechnique, where he gave his "whole attention during three years, according to his own methods, and with all the appliances which money could furnish, to the study of the physical sciences—mathematics, astronomy, general physics, and chemistry. He studied also the phenomena of human nature, taking drugs to produce the effects of old age, and inoculating himself with loathsome diseases. In 1807 his 'experiments' ended. His marriage proved an unhappy one, and he offered to obtain a divorce and marry Madame Stael, pleading that she was the most extraordinary woman in the world, and he the most extraordinary man; but the lady declined, and he was left so poor that he became a clerk in the Mont de Piété (government loan office), at a yearly salary of £40. In 1812, being then in his 52nd year, he considered it time to 'establish his theories.' He commenced the publication of a number of remarkable works, which, however impracticable and visionary in their character, attracted around their author a circle of enthusiastic disciples; among whom were Augustin Thierry, the historian, and Comte, the future author of the 'Positive Philosophy.' His last efforts were directed towards the foundation of a new religion, which he called the 'New Christianity;' one of the objects of which was "the most rapid possible amelioration, physical and moral, of the condition of the class the most numerous and poor. To attain this object, society was to be reorganized upon this formula:—to each man a vocation according to his capacity, and to each capacity a recompense according to its worth." He also proposed a European parliament, having the right to arbitrate between nations. Before breathing his last, this extraordinary man gave his final instructions to his chief disciples. His most important works were,—"Introduction to the Scientific Labours of the 19th Century;" "The Reorganization of European Society;" and "New Christianity."

Born at Paris, 1760; died 1825.

ST. THOMAS, one of the West India islands, belonging to Denmark, 38 miles E. of Puerto Rico. The port is CHARLOTTE-AMALIE. Area, 23 square miles. Pop. 14,000. Lat. 18° 20′ N. Lon. 64° 65′ W.

The chief town is KINGSTON. Pop. 36,000, of whom about 2,500 are whites, and 7,000 of mixed race, the remainder being blacks.

SAINTE-BEUVE, CHARLES AUGUSTIN, bu(r)ve, a modern French poet and critic, who at first studied medicine, but subsequently turned his attention towards literature, for which he had a strong predilection from his earliest years. He commenced by writing articles on history, philosophy, and criticism for a French newspaper, and, in 1828, produced his "Historical and Critical Picture of the Poetry and Drama to the 16th Century," a work which was accepted as a choice specimen of criticism. Some poems followed, but were less favourably received. He next supplied papers to the Revue des Deux Mondes, to the National, and other important French organs; but his great work on the "History of Port Royal," which appeared between the years 1840-48, gave him the high position among French littérateurs which he from that period maintained. His remaining works were,—"Literary Portraits," several volumes of criticism and literary studies, and a great number of biographical and critical prefaces to classical authors.

Born at Boulogne-sur-Mer, 1804.

SAINTE-CLAIRE DEVILLE, HENRY, de-veel', a modern French chemist, who, in 1845, became professor at the Faculty of Sciences, Besançon, and, in 1851, succeeded M. Balard in the chemical professorship at the Normal school. He was the first to obtain aluminium in quantities sufficiently large to be available in the city. He has contributed many valuable papers on his favourite study to the French annals of chemistry and natural philosophy.

Born at St. Thomas, in the Antilles, 1818.

SAKHALIN ULA HOTUN, or AIGUN, sak-ha-lin'-oo-la-ho-tun', a town of Manchuria, on the right bank of the Amoor, 14 miles below the junction of the Dzeya. There are many gaily-painted temples. Pop. 15,000.

SAKMARA, sak'-ma-ra, a river of Russia, rising in the Ural mountains, and, after a course of 450 miles, joining the Ural, 10 miles below Orenburg. The principal affluents are the Ik and Salmich, both on the right bank.

SAKUNTALA, sak'-kun-ta-la, in Hindoo mythology, a water nymph, the heroine of the dramatic poetic drama, "Kâlidâsa," translated from the Sanscrit by Sir William Jones. Other translations have since been made into most of the European languages.

SAL, sal, a river of European Russia, rising in the western part of the government of Astrakhan, and after a course of more than 300 miles, joining the Don on the left bank 20 miles N.E. of Novo-Tcherkask. The chief affluents are the Gashun and Razsoch, both on the right.

SALA, sa'-la, a mining town of Sweden, 21 miles W. of Westeras. The largest and most productive silver-mines in Sweden are in the vicinity. There is a shot factory. Pop. 3,900.

SALA, LA, a town of Italy, province of Salerno, 20 miles S.W. of Potenza. There are a handsome episcopal palace, 5 churches, and a convent. Pop. 7,000.

SALADIN, or SALAH-EDDIN, YUSSUF IBN AYUB, sal'-a-din, a sultan of Egypt and Syria, belonging to a Kurdish tribe, who, in the time of the crusades, distinguished himself by his valour. (See NOUREDDIN.) He became grand-vizier of the Fatimite calif, and received the title of El-melek-el-nasr, "the victorious prince." After the death of Noureddin, he became sultan of Egypt and Syria, made great conquests in Syria, Arabia, Persia, and Mesopotamia; and in 1187 he defeated the Christians with great slaughter, near Tiberias, and took Guy de Lusignan, king of Jerusalem, prisoner. This was followed by the surrender of Jerusalem, where he behaved with great generosity to the Christians. In 1189 Richard Cœur-de-Lion, with his ally Philip Augustus, king of France, laid siege to Acre, which, after a two years' struggle, was taken by them. The crusaders subsequently took Cæsarea and Jaffa, and Richard Cœur-de-Lion advanced to within a short distance of Jerusalem; but a truce was afterwards concluded between Saladin and the Christians; soon after which the sultan died, broken down by disease and toil. He was an able and intelligent ruler, as well as eminent warrior. He founded the Ayubile dynasty, which ruled over Syria till 1259.

Born at Tekreit (on the Tigris), 1137; died at Damascus, 1192.

SALADO, RIO, sa-la'-do, a river of the Argentine Confederation, rising in the Andes, and, after a course of 600 miles, joining the Parana at Santa Espiritu.

SALADO, RIO, a river of the Argentine Confederation, flowing into the estuary of the Plata, after a course of about 400 miles.

SALAMANCA, sa-la-man'-ka, a province of Spain. Area, 5,626 square miles. Pop. 289,869.

SALAMANCA, a city of Spain, capital of the above province, on the ascent of three hills, on the right bank of the Tormes, 50 miles N.E. of Ciudad-Rodrigo. It is surrounded by a wall with nine gates, has several squares and fountains, and a number of massive buildings. The principal square, the Plaza Mayor, is extensive, with piazzas all around. A bridge of Roman foundation, with 27 arches, crosses the river. The cathedral, begun in 1513, is a majestic Gothic edifice, entered by a fine gate, and admired in the interior for the boldness of the vaults and the finish of the sculpture. The old cathedral is a massive edifice, built in the 12th century, and there are five other churches of equal antiquity. In 1812 the French destroyed 20 colleges, and as many convents. The university was founded in 1200, and in 1243 the university of Palencia was incorporated with it, and previous to the invasion of the French had 25 colleges. The college buildings are very handsome. It is still celebrated, Salamanca being the principal seat of learning in Spain. Manf. Woollens, leather, and earthenware. Pop. 18,000. It is noted for the defeat of the French under Marmont, by Wellington, in 1812.

SALAMIS, sal'-a-mis, the modern Koheri, an island of Greece, in the gulf of Ægina, 10 miles from Athens. The chief town is KOLURI. Area, 30 square miles. Pop. 4,000. Near this island Themistocles gained a famous naval victory over the Persians in 480 B.C.

SALANGORE, sa-lan-gor', a state of the Malay peninsula, running for 120 miles along its western side, with a breadth of about 45 miles. Pop. 12,000. Lat. 2° 50'—3° 40' N. Lon. 101°—102° E.

SALAWATTY, sa-la-wat'-te, an island of the Indian Archipelago of the north-west coast of the island of Papua. It is 35 miles long, with a breadth of 25. Pop. Unascertained. Lat. 1° S. Lon. 130° 35' E.

SALCITO, sal-che'-to, a town of Naples, on the Trigno, 15 miles from Campobasso. Pop. 3,000.

SALDANHA, JOAO CARLOS, duke of, sal-dan'-a, a modern Portuguese marshal and statesman. He served with distinction in the Peninsular war while the Portuguese army was commanded by General Beresford. In 1814 he proceeded to England, whence he repaired to Brazil, where he signalized himself in both a military and a diplomatic capacity. He was governor of Oporto and minister for foreign affairs in 1826; but resigned these posts, and again retired to England, in the following year. The usurpation of Don Miguel recalled him to his native country, when, after experiencing some varieties of fortune, he became commander-in-chief of the constitutional army, and was created a marshal. In 1835 he became minister of war and president of the council, which posts he retained but for a short period, choosing rather to ally himself with the reactionary party. His political views again led to his being exiled; but after spending ten years in England and France, he returned to Portugal during the revolt of 1846. He held power under great difficulties until 1856, when the respect entertained by king Pedro II. for constitutional government led to his dismissing the old marshal, who afterwards assumed the leadership of the opposition. In 1870, after the dissolution of the Cortes, Saldanha headed a military insurrection, forced his way into the palace, and compelled the king to dismiss the Marquis de Loulé, and entrust Saldanha with the formation of a new ministry. He soon afterwards resigned, and became ambassador to England, where he passed the remainder of his life.

Born at Lisbon, 1790; died in London, 1876.

SALE, GEORGE, sail, an English orientalist, who was bred to the law, but scarcely anything is known of his private life. He assisted in the compilation of historical works and dictionaries, but his greatest work was an excellent translation of the Koran, to which he prefixed a curious dissertation.

Born 1698; died 1736.

SALE, SIR ROBERT HENRY, an English general in the service of the East-India Company. He entered the army in 1795, being then in his 13th year, and after particularly distinguishing himself in Burmah, and at the taking of the Mauritius, he was, in 1838, appointed to the command of a brigade. In that capacity he participated in the storming of Ghuznee, and for his bravery was created K.C.B. and a major-general. In 1840 he commanded against Dost Mahomed, whom he totally defeated and took prisoner. He subsequently played a brilliant part in those operations which redeemed the British name in Afghanistan. He forced the Khoord Cabul and Jugdulluk passes; and, after being shut up in Jellalabad during several months, he led his weary soldiers to an attack upon the besiegers, under Akbar Khan, who was completely routed. He afterwards took part in the capture of Cabul, and was created a G.C.B., and received the thanks of parliament. After enjoying a very brief repose, he was again called upon to serve his country, being appointed quartermaster-general to the army of the Sutlej. He was unfortunately killed at the battle of Moodkee, his left thigh being shattered by a grape-shot.

Born 1782; killed, 1845.

SALE, FLORENTINE, Lady, wife of the above, whom she married in 1809. Her maiden name was Wynch. She, with other ladies, was imprisoned by Akbar Khan. She published a narrative of the events.

SALEM, sal'-lem, a seaport, city, and capital of Essex county, Massachusetts, United States, 14 miles N.E. of Boston. It is chiefly built on a tongue of land, formed by two inlets from the sea, called North and South rivers; over the former of which is a bridge, connecting Salem with Beverley; and the latter forms the harbour. There are in the town 20 churches, the Peabody Academy of Science, and other educational institutions. Manf. Cotton, leather, varnishes, and chemicals. Pop. 27,000.—The town was founded in 1626, and is memorable for the witch panic, which broke out in 1692, which caused 19 persons to be executed for witchcraft.

SALEM, capital of Marion county, Oregon, United States, on the east bank of the Willamette river. It is the seat of Willamette university, and of three state institutions. Pop. 6,200.

SALEM, a county of New Jersey, United States. Area, 540 square miles. Pop. 24,000. The capital is Salem.

SALEM, a district of British India, province of Madras, bordering on Mysore. Iron ore is abundant, and the district is the chief seat of the Indian steel manufacture. Area, 7,617 square miles. Pop. 1,599,595.

SALEM, a town of British India, 193 miles S.W. of Madras. Manf. Cotton and silk. Pop. 50,670.

SALEMI, sa-lai'-me, an inland town of Sicily, 15 miles from Mazzara. It has a number of churches and convents. Pop. 15,500.

SALERNO, sa-lair'-no, a city and seaport of Italy, capital of the province of the same name, on the north shore of the Gulf of Salerno, 32 miles S.E. of Naples. It is enclosed by a Gothic wall of large stones without mortar. There are in front of the Gothic cathedral (erected by the Normans) 28 ancient granite columns, with Corinthian capitals. Pop. 30,000.

SALERNO, or PRINCIPATA CITERIORE, a province of southern Italy. The greater part of the interior is broken by spurs of the Apennines, but along the shore of the Gulf of Salerno the surface is level, and stretching from north-west to south-east is the fertile Val di Diana. Area, 2,116 square miles. Pop. 567,073.

SALERNO, GULF OF, a semicircular indentation on the western shore of southern Italy, separated by Point Campanella from the Bay of Naples. The gulf is 36 miles wide and 24 miles deep.

SALES, ST. FRANCIS DE, sales, a saint of the Roman Catholic church, member of a noble family of Savoy. He studied at La Roche, Annecy, and afterwards at Paris, where, at the early age of 11, he entered the school of the Jesuits, where he remained six years, and then studied seven years at Padua. His father intended him for a political career, but he determined to enter the Church, and was ordained, soon acquiring a great reputation as a preacher. In 1596, he was, with much reluctance, induced to become coadjutor to the bishop of Geneva, with the title of bishop of Nicopolis. He afterwards preached with great success in Paris, and, it is said, converted several leading Huguenots. He however refused the offer of a French bishopric, and in 1607 declined the cardinalate. He greatly desired to renew the monastic spirit, and established an order of nuns of the order of the Visitation. He died of paralysis, and forty years after his death he was canonized by Alexander VII. He was of a sincerely pious and gentle spirit, and his most famous work is the "Introduction to a Devout Life."

Born at Sales, near Annecy, 1567; died 1622.

SALEYER, or SALEYER ISLANDS, sa-lai'-yer, in the Eastern Archipelago, off the southern extremity of the island of Celebes. They are more than 30 in number, and the largest, Great Saleyar, is 40 miles long and 7 wide. Ebony, teak, and other valuable timber are in the forests, and maize, millet, cotton, indigo, coffee, and mustard are cultivated. Pop. 60,000.—There are 14 native rajahs, governing under the superintendence of an agent of the Netherlands.

SALINS, sa'-la, a town of France, department Jura, on the Furieuse, 20 miles S.W. of Besançon. It has a trade in wine and brandy, but the principal article of export is salt. Pop. 6,400.

SALISBURY, or NEW SARUM, salz'-ber-e, an episcopal city, municipal and parliamentary borough, and the county town of Wiltshire, in a vale on the Avon, here crossed by three bridges, 81 miles S.W. of London. The principal streets are laid out with great regularity. Five of them run from north to south, and other five cross these at right angles. This arrangement gives to the town an open and airy appearance. The cathedral (built between 1220 and 1274, and recently restored) is justly regarded as one of the finest ecclesiastical buildings in Europe, and is a highly interesting specimen of Early English architecture. It is in the form of a double cross, has a beautiful west front, the length is 449 feet, and width at the transept of 203. The height of the spire is 404 feet. The cloister, on the south-west side, is now used as a cemetery. The bishop's palace, near the south-east corner of the cathedral, is a large irregular building, bearing evidence of being the work of different and distant periods. There are three parish churches, St. Martin's, St. Edward's, and St. Thomas's, several places of worship for dissenters, and a Roman Catholic church, built in 1851, from the designs of Mr. Pugin. The new council-house is of brick, with the angles of each front ornamented with rustic-work in stone. Courts of law occupy the left, and the council the right wing. In front of the building is a statue of Lord Herbert of Lea, by Marochetti. There are, besides, the infirmary, assembly and concert-rooms, corn-exchange, a museum, a theatre, and grammar-school. Pop. 14,576.—A station on the London and South-Western and Great Western railways.

SALIVAPANA, sal'-i-va'-pa-na, in Hindoo legend a prince who instituted an era, known as Saka, which commenced 78 years after the Christian era.

SALLEE, or SLA, sal-lé', a seaport on the western coast of Morocco, at the mouth of the Bu-Regreb. It was formerly the great hold of Moorish piracy, and, from the depredations of former conspiracies, great interruptions of European commerce took place. It has still an immense and dreary dungeon, formed underground, for the reception of unfortunate captives. The entrance of the river is strongly fortified. On its opposite side stands Rabatt, called often New Sallee, which is properly to be considered as another quarter of the same town. Manf. Carpets. An export trade in wool is carried on. Pop. about 10,000. Lat. 34° 3′ N. Lon. 6° 50′ W.

SALLUST, CAIUS CRISPUS, sal'-lust, a Roman historian. He was educated under the grammarian Atteius Philologus, and after passing through different employments at Rome, became successively quæstor and tribune. His manners were depraved, and he was degraded from the rank of senator, in consequence of an illicit intercourse with the wife of Milo, but was restored by Cæsar, who gave him the government of Numidia, to repair his dissipated fortune. On his return to Rome, he built a superb palace, still known as Sallust's garden, on the Quirinal hill, and spent the rest of his life in luxury and debauchery. It is surprising that such a man should spare time for literature; yet his talents were great, and his histories of Catiline's conspiracy, and of the Jugurthine wars, take a high rank in historical literature.

Born at Amiternum, 86 B.C.; died at Rome, 34 B.C.

SALMANASAR, or SHALMANESER, sal-ma-nai'-sar, king of Assyria, succeeded his father Tiglath-pileser, B.C. 724. He carried the inhabitants of Samaria into captivity, thereby putting an end to the kingdom of Israel. He was defeated at sea by the Tyrians.

Died 712 B.C.

SALMASIUS, or SAUMAISE, CLAUDE DE, sal-ma'-se-us, or só'-maisse, a French scholar, who received his first education under his father, and afterwards studied at Paris and Heidelberg, where he publicly adopted the Protestant religion. Richelieu offered him a considerable pension on condition of settling in France, which Salmasius refused. The king, however, conferred on him the order of St. Michael and the brevet of a councillor of state. He studied the Oriental languages, and in 1631 succeeded Joseph Scaliger as professor at the university of Leyden. In 1649 he wrote a violent defence of Charles I., king of England, which was replied to by Milton, who defended the execution of the king, with a virulence equal to that of his antagonist, but with far greater literary ability and eloquence. The year following, Salmasius went to Sweden, on an invitation from Queen Christina. His principal works were written in Latin, and as a scholar and commentator he was greatly esteemed by his contemporaries.

Born near Semur, 1588; died at Spa, 1653.

SALO, sa'-lo, a town of Italy, province of Brescia, on the west shore of Lake Garda, 14 miles N.E. of Brescia. There are an old castle and several churches. Manf. Thread and distilled waters. There are many lemon and orange groves in the neighbourhood. Pop. 3,700.

SALON, sa'-lawng, a town of France, department Bouches-du-Rhône, 20 miles N. W. of Aix. There are an old and new town, the former with ruined walls and a church of the Templars, built in the 13th century. There is a boulevard between the two towns. Manf. Olive oil, soap, and silk. A large trade is carried on. Pop. 6,700.

SALONA, sa-lo'-na, a town of Greece, at the foot of Mount Parnassus. It contains several well-built churches, as well as spacious and commodious baths. On its acropolis are picturesque ruins of its ancient citadel. Manf. Cotton goods, yellow leather, and tobacco. Pop. 6,000.

SALONICA, or SALONIKI, sa-lon-é'-ka, a town of European Turkey, and, next to Constantinople, the chief commercial town of the empire, in an eyalet or province of the same name, beautifully situated at the northern extremity of the Gulf of Salonica, in the Ægean Sea, 270 miles from Constantinople. It is built on the acclivity of a steep hill, which rises from the bay at its north-east extremity. It is commanded by a large citadel, called Vedi-Kuleh, "the seven towers," the ancient Acropolis, within which is a triumphal arch; and there are very fine Roman remains, among them a triumphal arch, erected in honour of Augustus, after the battle of Philippi, and now one of the gates of the town. Some of its mosques, nearly all, in former times, Christian churches, are extremely handsome, and the one dedicated to St. Sophia is a model of a similar one at Constantinople. Bazaars are numerous, and there is a large trade done in British produce. Manf. Silk. The exports consist of maize, wheat, barley, timber, tobacco, cotton, wool, and sponges. Pop. 60,000, of whom 20,000 are Greeks, and 20,000 Jews. This town is the ancient Therma. It was rebuilt about 315 B.C., and named Thessalonica. It was for a long period the first city in Greece, and was in later times the great bulwark of the Eastern empire. It was taken by the Saracens in 904, by the Sicilian Normans in 1185, and by the Turks in 1430.

SALOP, or SHROPSHIRE. (See SHROPSHIRE.)

SALSETTE, sal'-set-te, an island on the west coast of British India, immediately north of Bombay (See BOMBAY). It is 18 miles long by 11 broad, and is densely wooded, but there are many fertile tracts in which sugar, indigo, cotton, and flax are cultivated. The chief town is THANAR, on the east coast, and on the north is a healthy watering place, Ghorá Bandar. A number of remarkable caves, with elaborate sculptures are in the centre of the island. Pop. 167,000.

SALTA, sal'-ta, a northern province of the Argentine Confederation, South America. It is traversed by branches of the Andes, forming in the south and south-west elevated plateaux, about 12,000 feet high. The soil is fertile. Area, 45,000 square miles. Pop. 89,000.

SALTA, or SAN MIGUEL DE SALTA, capital of the above department, on the banks of the upper Salado, nearly 4,000 feet above the sea level. Pop. 12,000.

SALTASH, salt'-ash, a market-town and borough of England, in Cornwall, on the Tamar, 4 miles W. of Devonport. Here a tubular railway-bridge crosses the river, and is one of the greatest works of the engineering skill of modern times. The length is 2,240 feet, and the height of the roadway above high-water mark, 100 feet.

SALTCOATS, salt'-kotes, a seaport of Scotland, in Ayrshire, on the Firth of Clyde, 30 miles S.W. of Glasgow. It has large salt-works, and exports quantities of coals. It is a cheerful place, and is much resorted to for sea-bathing. Pop. 5,096.

SALTILLO, sal-teel'-lo, a city of Mexico, capital of the state of Cohahuila, on the river Tigre. Manf. Blankets and ponchos. An extensive trade is carried on. Pop. 26,000.

SALT LAKE, GREAT, an inland lake of North America, in the territory of Utah. Ext. 75 miles long, and from 15 to 30 broad. It contains several islands, and although it receives the Bear river and the Jordan, it has no visible outlet.

SALT LAKE, a county of Utah, United States. Area, 1,200 square miles. Pop. 31,977. The capital is SALT LAKE CITY.

SALT LAKE CITY, chief town of the territory of Utah, United States, and principal residence of the Mormon community, on the east bank of the Jordan, 20 miles S. of Salt Lake. It is situated 4,350 feet above the sea level, is regularly laid out in 260 lots of 10 acres, has very wide streets shaded with trees, and through each of which is a stream of pure water. The chief edifices are the great Mormon temple, the tabernacle, which will hold 15,000 persons, the treasury, a large hall, forming a theatre and ball-room, the Deseret University, episcopal, Presbyterian and Methodist schools, and a Roman Catholic nunnery. Pop. 20,000.

SALUZZO, sa-loot'-so, a city of Italy, province of Cuneo, at the foot of the Alps, near the Po, 28 miles S.W. of Turin. It contains a cathedral built in 1480, with colossal statues and beautiful marble pillars; an ancient tower of the Communes, and a civic palace and castle, both of considerable antiquity. There are also the remains of an abbey founded in the 12th century. Manf. Silk, leather, iron articles, and hats. Pop. 15,398.

SALVATOR ROSA. (See ROSA, Salvator.)

SALVIATI, FRANCISCO, sal-ve-a'-te, an eminent Florentine painter, whose family name was Rossi, which he changed out of respect to his patron, Cardinal Salviati. He executed some fine works for various churches at Rome, and subsequently visited France, where he was patronised by Francis I., for whom he painted a portion of the embellishments of the château of Fontainebleau.

Born at Florence, 1510; died at Rome, 1563.

SALZBRUNN, NEU, NIEDER, and OBER, salz'-broon, three adjacent villages, in Prussia, province of Silesia, 37 miles S.W. of Breslau. There are baths, which are much frequented, and eight mineral springs, furnishing an immense quantity of alkalo-saline water for exportation. Pop 3,000.

SALZBURG, salts'-boorg, a western province of the Austrian empire. It is traversed by the Noric Alps and branches of the Rhætian Alps, which separate it from Tyrol. The former range rises to 12,360 feet within the province, and the latter to 9,580 feet, and in the more elevated regions are snow fields and glaciers. The chief river is the Salza, which flows first east and then north. Large numbers of cattle and horses are reared. The chief towns are SALZBURG and HALLE. Area, 2,767 square miles. Pop. 163,570.

SALZBURG, capital of the above province, on both banks of the Salza, 156 miles S.W. of Vienna. The most striking feature of the place is its romantic situation amidst lofty mountains, with a citadel, the Hohen-Salzburg, built in the 11th century, standing on a lofty cliff, the Mönchsberg, on the left bank of the river. On the opposite cliff is a capuchin convent. The cathedral, erected in the early part of the 17th century, is a beautiful building in the Italian style; St. Peter's, containing Haydn's monument; St. Sebastian's, St. Margaret's (recently restored), and the university church are conspicuous buildings, and there are 15 other places of worship, including one for Protestants. There are several libraries, museums, and other educational institutions. The city is surrounded by decayed walls. In one of the squares, the Hauptplatz, is a statue of Mozart, a native of the town. In another square, the Domplatz, is a fine bronze statue of the Virgin. Pop. 21,000.

SAN SALVADOR, sal'-va-dor, a republic of South America, bounded N. and N.E. by Honduras, N.W. by Guatemala, E. by Nicaragua, and S. by the Pacific. The coast line, about 150 miles in extent, is deeply indented, with several good harbours, the most frequented being La Union, Libertad, and Acajutla. The surface is traversed by lofty mountain masses, with five volcanoes, the loftiest of which are San Vicente and San Salvador, each about 9,000 feet high, and Yzaleo. The soil is very fertile; indigo, maize, sugar, coffee, tobacco, and cotton are successfully cultivated; and the famous balsam of Peru is obtained in large quantities.

Rivers.—The Lempa, forming part of the boundary between San Salvador and Honduras; the Paza, and the San Miguel (or Serama).

Minerals.—Iron, gold, and silver.

Area.—7,225 square miles.

Pop.—613,273, mostly aboriginal and mixed races, there being only about 10,000 whites.

Chief Towns.—SAN SALVADOR, SAN VICENTE, SAN MIGUEL, and SANTA ANNA (or Sonsonante).

Constitution and Government.—The republic of San Salvador dissolved its federative union with Honduras and Nicaragua in 1853, and is governed nominally under a constitution proclaimed in March, 1864, but undergoing frequent alterations through internecine war. The constitution vests the legislative power in a congress of two houses, the senate, composed of 12, and the house of representatives, composed of 24 members. The executive is in the hands of a president, originally elected for six years, but whose tenure of office was in 1867 limited to four years.

SAN SALVADOR, capital of the above republic. The town was nearly all destroyed by earthquake in 1854, and a new town, Nueva San Salvador, erected, and this, too, was nearly destroyed by a series of earthquakes 1873-9. Pop. 13,274.

SAN SALVADOR, or CAT ISLAND, one of the Bahamas, about 36 miles long and from 3 to 7 broad. This was the first land seen by Columbus on his first voyage.

SAN SEBASTIAN, sai'-bas-te-an', a seaport of the north-west of Spain, capital of the province of Guipuscoa, 380 miles N.E. of Madrid. It is built on a peninsula at the foot of Mount Orgullo, a conical hill, 400 feet high, on the summit of which is a very strong castle. On the western side is a fine roadstead, and a narrow neck of land connects the town with the mainland. The fine beach and the beauty of the situation attract many visitors in the bathing season. A large export trade is carried on. Pop. 21,355.—In 1813 the town was captured by the duke of Wellington, when the French garrison set it on fire and nearly destroyed it. It has been rebuilt on a regular plan.

SAN SEVERINO, sai-vai-ré-no, a city of central Italy, province of Macerata, 15 miles S.W. of Macerata. The Polozzo Comunale, episcopal and other palaces, are very handsome. Pop. 14,019.

SANCHO I. and II., kings of Portugal, succeeding to the throne in 1185 and 1223.

SANCHONIATHON, san'-ko-ni'-a-thon, supposed to have been a Phœnician historian, who was secretary to Adonilibnas, king of Byblus, at whose command he wrote a history of his country, which also contained an account of the Egyptian theology; but it is doubtful whether the history is not a collection of fragments by several hands, and whether the reputed author ever existed. The work is lost, but it was translated into Greek by Philo of Byblus. Of this translation, only some fragments remain in Porphyry and Eusebius.

SANCROFT, WILLIAM, san'-kroft, an English prelate, who was educated at Emanuel College, Cambridge, where in 1632 he obtained a fellowship, which he lost in the following year, for refusing to take the Solemn League and Covenant. After the Restoration he became chaplain to the bishop of Durham; in 1664 he was made dean of York, whence he removed to the deanery of St. Paul's. In 1677 he was raised to the archbishopric of Canterbury, in which office he conducted himself with zeal and judgment. He was one of the seven bishops sent to the Tower by James II., but, when the prince of Orange was declared king, as William III., he refused to take the oaths and was in consequence removed from his archbishopric. He then retired into private life. He wrote a curious little dialogue in Latin, against Calvinism, called "The Predestinated Thief;" "Modern Politics;" and several sermons.

Born at Fresingfield, Suffolk, 1616; died there, 1693.

SAND, GEORGE. (See DUDEVANT.)

SANDALWOOD ISLAND, or JEE-DANA, san-dal-wood, a large island in the Asiatic archipelago, nominally subject to the Netherlands, but the rajahs are nearly independent. The coast is steep and rocky, but the soil is fertile, and there are large forests abounding in sandalwood, but the natives refuse to cut them down, believing that they contain their ancestors' souls. Cotton, pepper, wax, tortoise-shell, horses, and timber are exported. Area, 5,000 square miles. Pop. 1,000,000. Lat. 9° 18′—10° 20′ S. Lon. 119°—120° 43′ E.

SANDAY, san'-dai, one of the most northern of the Orkney Isles, about 13 miles long, with a varying breadth of from 1 to 3. Pop. 2,050. Lat. 59° 13′ N. Lon. 2° 18′ W.

SANDEMAN, ROBERT, san'-de-man, a Scotch minister, who, about 1728, formed a sect, which still exists, under the name of "Sandemanians." In 1766 he went to New England, where he obtained many followers.

Born at Perth, Scotland, 1718; died in America, about 1770.

SANDERS, NICHOLAS, san'-ders, an English Roman Catholic writer, was a fellow of New College, Oxford. About 1560 he went to Rome, where he entered into priest's orders, and was made doctor of divinity. He accompanied Cardinal Hosius to the Council of Trent, and afterwards to Poland. Pope Gregory XIII. sent him as nuncio to Ireland, where, to avoid falling into the hands of the English, he wandered about in the woods and bogs, and perished of want in 1581. His principal work is a treatise against the Reformation.

Born at Charlwood, Surrey, about 1530.

SANDERSON, ROBERT, san'-der-son, an English prelate, who was, in 1606, chosen fellow of Lincoln College, Oxford. Upon the recommendation of Laud, he, in 1631, became chaplain to king Charles I., who always had a great regard for him; and in 1642 appointed him regius professor of divinity at Oxford. He attended Charles to the Isle of Wight, and at his desire wrote his "Judgment of Episcopacy," when the parliament proposed to abolish that form of church government. At the Restoration, he was promoted to the bishopric of Lincoln, and was moderator at the Savoy conference between the Episcopal and Presbyterian divines. Bishop Sanderson was one of the most eminent casuists of his time, and profoundly learned. His chief works are, "Artis Logicæ Compendium," a "Collection of Sermons," "Cases of Conscience," and a "Censure upon Antony Ascham's Confusions and Revelations of Government."

Born at Rotherham, Yorkshire, 1587; died 1663.

SANDHURST, or BENDIGO, sand'-hurst, a city of Victoria, Australia, on the Bendigo Creek, 100 miles N.W. of Melbourne. It is the headquarters of a rich gold-mining district. The principal street is named Pall Mall, with good shops on one side and an open space, Rosalind Park, on the other, and there are many handsome commercial establishments, banks, and hotels. There are 19 places of worship for different denominations. Manf. Iron, carriages, pottery, leather, bricks, and tiles. Pop. 40,000.

SANDOVAL, FRAY PRUDENCIO DE, san'-do-val, a celebrated Spanish historian, who was educated for the church, became a Benedictine monk, and afterwards abbot of San Isidoro at Valladolid, and historiographer to Philip III. When he had acquired fame by his historical works, he was rewarded with the bishopric of Pamplona. He produced a number of historical works displaying great learning; the best known of which are those abridged and rendered into English, under the titles of "The Civil Wars of Spain," "The History of the Emperor Charles V.," and the "Chronicle of Alfonso, king of Castile and Leon."

Born about 1560; died 1621.

SANDUSKY RIVER, san-dus'-ke, a river of Ohio, U.S., falling into Sandusky Bay.

SANDWICH, an island of the South Pacific, about 17 miles long. Lat. 2° 15′ S. Lon. 150° 44′ E.

SANDWICH, EDWARD MONTAGU, earl of, a gallant English admiral, who served under Cromwell, and with Blake as admiral, but afterwards concurred in the restoration of Charles II., by whom he was created an earl. In the battle of Southwold Bay, after he had by his conduct rescued a great part of the fleet from the most imminent danger, and given astonishing proofs of his bravery, his ship caught fire; on which he leaped into the sea and was drowned. He translated from the Spanish a treatise on metallurgy. His Letters and Negotiations have also been printed.

Born 1625; died 1672.

SANDWICH, JOHN MONTAGU, earl of, was appointed first lord of the admiralty in 1763. He wrote "Voyage round the Mediterranean," published after his death. He was a man of dissolute life, and one of the "brothers" of Medmenham Abbey, renowned for the licentious orgies held there.

Born 1718; died 1792.

SANDWICH ISLANDS, a group in the North Pacific, consisting of four large, four smaller islands, and five uninhabited islets, extending in a curve from north-west to south-east. The largest are HAWAII, PAPU, and KAUAI. They are all mountainous, and of volcanic origin. The climate is temperate. They are much resorted to by whaling ships, and a considerable trade is carried on. (See HONOLULU.)

Pop.—81,000, including about 4,000 half-castes, 18,000 Chinese, 12,000 foreigners, and something over 40,000 aborigines, who are much like the Maories of New Zealand.

Lat.—19°—22° 20′ N. Lon. 154° 50′—160° 40′ W.

History.—The islands were discovered, in 1778, by Captain Cook, who lost his life at Hawaii (see COOK). In 1810, king Kamehameha I. voluntarily placed the islands under British protection. The civilization of the inhabitants was greatly advanced by king Kamehameha III. (who married Miss Emma Young, a lady of English descent, and reigned 30 years), and carried on by his brother and successor. Christianity, introduced in 1820, has been for many years adopted, and, after some disputes, Catholic missionaries have now equal rights with the Protestants.

SANDYS, EDWIN, san'-dis, an English prelate, who, at the accession of Mary, was vice-chancellor, and on refusing to proclaim her, was deprived of his office, and sent to the Tower; but, after a short term of confinement, he was set at liberty; on which he went abroad. When Elizabeth ascended the throne, he returned, was appointed one of the commissioners for revising the Liturgy, bishop of Worcester, and had a share in that translation of the Scriptures commonly called the "Bishop's Bible." In 1570 he was appointed bishop of London, and in 1576 archbishop of York.

Born at Hawkshead, Lancashire, 1519; died 1588.

SANDYS, GEORGE, an English poet, and son of the preceding. He received his education at Oxford, after which he travelled through several parts of Europe and Asia. In 1615 a curious account of his travels was printed in a work entitled "Relation of a Journey in, and Description of, the Turkish Empire, Egypt, and the Holy Land, &c." He afterwards went to America, but returned to England, where he became gentleman of the privy chamber to the king. He produced poetical paraphrases of the Psalms, and translated Ovid's "Metamorphoses." Both Dryden and Pope bestow upon him great commendations.

Born at Bishopsthorpe, Yorkshire, 1577; died 1644.

SANFORD, san'-ford, a county of Alabama, United States. Area, 600 square miles. Pop.

9,000, nearly 2,000 being coloured. The capital is Vernon.

Lived probably in the 8th or 9th centuries.

SANMICHELI, MICHAEL, san-me'-ke-le, an Italian civil and military architect, who studied at Rome, and was employed by the republic of Venice, in 1525, to erect fortifications at Verona, Dalmatia, Cyprus, and other places. In those works he was the first to make use of triangular and pentangular bastions. The emperor Charles V. made him flattering offers if he would take service under him; but these were refused. He was equally successful as the designer of palaces and churches, his best edifices being the Palazzi Cornaro and Grimani at Venice, and the Capella Pellegrini at Verona.

Born at Verona, 1484; died 1559.

SANNAZARO, JACOPO, san-na-za'-ro, an Italian poet. A disappointment in love developed the poetic faculty. The most celebrated of his poems is his "Arcadia," printed first in 1502, in which, in the purest and most elegant Italian, he described the scenes and occupations of rural life. He also wrote some Latin poems, besides sonnets, madrigals, &c., in his native tongue.

Born at Naples, 1458; died 1530.

SANSON, NICOLAS, san-sawng', a French geographer, engineer and geographer to Louis XIII. His maps, amounting to three hundred, are accurate and valuable. He wrote several learned and curious works on ancient geography, and is regarded as the founder of the geographical science in his native country.

Born at Abbeville, 1600; died 1667.

SANSOVINO, JACOPO, san-so-ve'-no, an eminent Italian sculptor and architect, who pursued his studies with Andrea del Sarto, and took lessons from Sansovino, whose name he assumed. He studied both architecture and sculpture at Rome, and in the latter department of the arts, produced three master-pieces,—a Bacchus, destroyed by fire at Florence in 1762, and two statues of Mars and Neptune, which are contained in the ducal palace at Venice. The mint, the library of St. Mark, and some portions of St. Mark's at Venice, are magnificent specimens of his skill. So highly were his merits appreciated by the republic, that when a tax was laid upon the inhabitants of Venice, Titian and himself were exempted.

Born at Florence, 1479; died at Venice, 1570.

SANSOVINO, FRANCISCO, a learned Italian printer, and son of the preceding. He took his degrees in law at Padua, but afterwards set up a printing-office at Venice. He published a translation of Plutarch, "Chronology of the World," "Annals of the Ottoman Empire," and a collection of novels, entitled "Cento Novelle scelti de' più Nobili Scrittori della Lingua Volgare."

Died at Venice, 1586.

SANTA ANNA, ANTONIO LOPEZ DE, DON, an'-na, a Mexican general and statesman, who, at the outset of his career, served in the Spanish army, in which he attained the grade of lieutenant-colonel in 1821; but, in the following year, while stationed at Vera Cruz, he joined the movement inaugurated by Iturbide, which resulted in the total defeat of the Spanish forces, and the reduction of the whole of that province. He next turned his arms against and overthrew Iturbide, who had proclaimed himself emperor. The Mexican republic was proclaimed by Santa Anna in 1822, and, from that period until the year 1833, when he succeeded in himself obtaining the presidentship of the republic, he was engaged in opposing or defending, at the head of the Mexican troops, the claims of rival chiefs. He maintained his position as president until 1836, when he was defeated and taken prisoner at San Jacinto, by his political opponents. Liberated in 1837, he participated in the repulse of the French troops at Vera Cruz, on which occasion he lost a leg. He was once more president, from 1841 to 1845, in which latter year he was deposed and banished for ten years; but was recalled soon afterwards, reinstated as president, and charged to defend Mexico against the United States army. He was defeated in several encounters by Generals Scott and Taylor, and finally, in 1848, was compelled to resign, Mexico having proclaimed peace with the United States, by the cession of California, and by submitting to the erection of Texas into an independent state. From the close of the year 1853 until the middle of 1855, he again held the reins of power, only to be driven into exile, however, at the latter date, by General Carrera, who had revolted against his rule. When the archduke Maximilian was proclaimed emperor of Mexico, Santa Anna announced his adhesion to the new order of things, returned to Mexico, and accepted the rank of grand marshal. Very soon, however, he began to plot against the emperor, and issued proclamations to the people on his own behalf. He was compelled to leave the country, and went to the United States, where he organised an expedition against Juarez, who had succeeded to power. He was taken prisoner, and condemned to death, but pardoned on condition that he would leave the country. He went to New York, but, after the death of Juarez, returned to Mexico.

Born 1798; died 1876.

SARDINIA, sar-din'-i-a. (Ital. SARDEGNA, sar-dain'-ya), a large island of the Mediterranean, situate to the south of Corsica, from which it is separated by the Strait of Bonifacio. The island is generally mountainous, with Mount Genargentu rising in its centre, to a height of 7,000 feet. In the north-west, is the Limbara range, many of the peaks of which are extinct volcanoes. Between the ranges are fertile valleys, but there are several extensive stony and sterile plains. The coasts are steep and rugged, but have several good harbours. There are various small islands around the coast. The rivers are small, and only one is even partially navigable. The climate is mild, but the malaria of the low lands is dangerous, especially in autumn. The vine and the olive flourish: also the mulberry, the lemon, the orange, the fig, and, in the warmest situations, the pomegranate and palm-tree. There are extensive forests of aged oak, chestnuts, and cork-trees. Deer, wild boars, and foxes abound, and the skins of hares, rabbits, foxes, and martins, are exported.

Area.—9,363 square miles.
Pop.—706,194. The people resemble the Greeks, and speak a mixed dialect of Italian, Spanish, and Greek.
Divisions and Chief Towns.—The island forms two provinces of the Italian kingdom, Sassari, in the north, and Cagliari, in the south. The chief towns are CAGLIARI, the capital, and SASSARI.
Lat. 38° 51′—41° 15′ N. Lon. 8° 3′—9° 3′ E.
History.—The Phœnicians and Greeks, who called this island Icanusa, first sent colonies to it, and erected several small states, as they had done in the south of Italy and Sicily. The Carthaginians succeeded them, and had the dominion nearly of the whole island. The Romans dispossessed the Carthaginians. The Saracens held it in the 9th century, as they did Naples and Sicily. The republics of Genoa and Pisa recovered part of the island from them. Pope Boniface took upon him to transfer it to the king of Aragon, who subdued the Genoese, Pisans, and the rest of the inhabitants, and annexed it to his own dominions. It remained united to the crown of Spain till the allies made a conquest of it, in 1708. It was allotted to the emperor at the peace of Utrecht, 1713. The Spaniards recovered it in 1717, but were obliged to abandon it about two years after; and it was conferred on the duke of Savoy, in lieu of the kingdom of Sicily, in 1730. Previous to 1847 it was governed by a viceroy, but was then incorporated with the kingdom of Sardinia. (See ITALY.)

SARPI, PIETRO, or FRA PAOLO, sar'-pe, an Italian philosopher and historian, who, at the age of 20, became a member of the religious order of Servites, and while still a young man acquired a great reputation for his extensive learning and penetrating genius. Besides his acquaintance with ancient and modern languages, he was well versed in mathematics, theology, and medicine, but the boldness of his views led to his being suspected of heresy. In the disputes between the republic of Venice and Pope Paul V. he displayed so much ability on behalf of his country, that the pope ordered him to Rome, and on his refusal to go thither, excommunicated him. An attempt was then made to murder him, and he was attacked on the bridge of St. Mark by five assassins, who left him pierced with wounds. This infamous deed roused the indignation of the senate, who offered large rewards for the apprehension of the assassins; but they were never discovered. He recovered from his wounds, but with ruined health, and retired to his monastery, where he wrote several esteemed works, the chief of which were, "The History of the Council of Trent," "Considerations on the Censures of Paul V. against the Republic of Venice," and "Treatise concerning the Inquisition." His writings indicate not only antipapal opinions, but even an approach to Rationalism.

Born at Venice, 1552; died there, 1623.

SATSUMA, sat'-soo-ma, a province of Japan, on the western coast of the island of Kiushiu. It includes the islands south of Van Diemen Strait, and is generally mountainous and volcanic. (See JAPAN.)

SATTARA, sat-ta-ra', a town of British India, known as the capital of a native state incorporated into the Bombay presidency in 1848, and forming part of the northern division of that presidency. Pop. of the state, 318,687; of the town, 29,028.

SATURN, sat'-urn (SATURNUS, sa-tur'-nus), in Greek and Roman mythology a son of Cœlus, or Uranus, and Terra. He obtained his father's kingdom by the consent of his brother Titan, provided he did not bring up any male children. Pursuant to this agreement, Saturn always devoured his sons as soon as born, till his wife Rhea concealed from him the birth of Jupiter, Neptune, and Pluto, giving him, instead of the children, large stones to eat. Titan afterwards made war against Saturn, and dethroned and imprisoned him.

SATYRS, sat'-irs, in Greek mythology, rural demigods, who are represented like men, but with the feet and legs of goats, short horns on the head, and the whole body covered with thick hair.

SAUGOR, sau-gor', a town of British India, in the division of Jubbulpore, Central Provinces, on the Bees, a feeder of the Jumna, 225 miles S.W. of Allahabad. It is situated 1,940 feet above the sea level, in the seat of a military cantonment, has many European residents, and there are a Gothic church, and a collegiate school, in which English, Hindoo, Persian, and Mahratta are taught. Manf. Goldsmiths' work, especially chains. Pop. 44,416; of the district, 564,950.

SAUGOR, a small island near the eastern shore of the entrance of the Hooghley, about 8 miles long and 4 miles broad. There is an ancient temple, with a large tank, annually visited by large numbers of Hindoo pilgrims. Pop. 10,000.

SAUK, sawk, a county of Wisconsin, United States. Area, 900 square miles. Pop. 28,729. The capital is Barraboo.

SAUL, sawl, the first king of the Hebrews. He was a man of great stature and personal beauty, and is closely connected with the history of David. His history is related in the books of Samuel, in the Old Testament.

Died 1040 B.C.

SAULCY, LOUIS FÉLICIEN JOSEPH CAIGNART DE, sole'-se, a modern French antiquary, who was educated for the military profession, and was attached to the army as an artillery officer, but devoted his leisure to the study of archæology and numismatics. His early works upon those sciences obtained a great amount of success. In 1836 he gained a prize from the Institute for his work entitled "An Essay on the Classification of Byzantine Coins," and subsequently became professor of mechanics at the military school of Metz. Having been fortunate enough to secure the notice of the duke of Orleans, eldest son of Louis Philippe, he was appointed conservator of the Museum of Artillery at Paris, and was thus enabled to prosecute his studies under more favourable circumstances. In 1850 he set out for Palestine, with the view of making researches into the antiquities of the Holy Land. The discoveries he announced led to a warm controversy. His best known works are the narrative of his travels, and treatises on Judaic numismatics and art. In 1859 he was created a senator, having previously been elected a member of the Academy of Inscriptions and Belles-Lettres, and an officer of the Legion of Honour.

Born at Lille, 1807.

SAULIEU, sole'-yu(r), a town of France, department Côte-d'Or, 39 miles W. of Dijon. There is an ancient and very beautiful church in the Romanesque style. Manf. Woollens, leather, and embroidery. Pop. 3,800.

SAUMAISE. (See SALMASIUS.)

SAUMAREZ, JAMES, Lord de, so'-ma-res, an English admiral, who entered the navy in his 13th year. He served with great distinction in the American war, and under sir Hyde Parker, Kempenfelt, and Rodney. In 1793 hostilities again commenced between the English and the French republic, and captain Saumarez was appointed to the Crescent frigate, in which, after a desperate fight off Cherbourg, he captured the French frigate La Réunion. For this service he was knighted. In 1794 he saved a small force of three frigates which had been attacked in the English Channel by an enemy more than doubly superior in numbers. In the following year he signalized himself in the action under lord Bridport; and, in 1797, he bore a gallant part in the defeat of the Spaniards off Cape St. Vincent. He was second in command at the battle of the Nile, where he was severely wounded. He became a rear-admiral in 1801, and was created a baronet. In the same year he was rewarded with the order of the Bath, for a gallant action with the French and Spanish fleet, and received the thanks of parliament. He was, at the close of the war, in 1814, created full admiral, personally thanked by the allied sovereigns on their visit to England, and subsequently appointed vice-admiral of Great Britain. In 1831 he was created lord De Saumarez, of Saumarez, in the island of Guernsey, and a general of marines. He spent the remainder of his life in quiet retirement upon his estate in Guernsey.

Born at St. Peter-Port, Guernsey, 1757; died in the same island, 1836.

SAUMUR, so'-moor, a town of France, department of the Maine-et-Loire, on the Loire, 28 miles S.E. of Angen. The churches of St. Pierre, Notre Dame de Nantelly, and Notre Dame des Ardilliers, the town-hall and old castle (now used as an arsenal), are prominent buildings. There is a great cavalry school, and there are extensive quays, good promenades, a noble bridge, and interesting remains of Roman and Celtic antiquities. Manf. Linen, glass, enamels, saltpetre, and leather. Pop. 14,000.

SAUNDERS'S ISLAND, san'-ders, an island in the South Atlantic Ocean, so called by Captain Cook. It is uninhabited and covered with snow. Lat. 57° 49′ S. Lon. 26° 44′ W.

SAUNDERS, a county of Nebraska territory, United States. Area, 750 square miles. Pop. 15,810. The capital is Ashland.

SAUNDERSON, DR. NICHOLAS, san'-der-son, an English mathematician. He lost his sight when twelve months old, by the small-pox, but was sent to the free-school at Penistone, Yorkshire, where he acquired great proficiency in classical learning. At the age of 18 he was introduced to Mr. West, a gentleman of fortune, and a lover of the mathematics, who instructed him by means of ingenious mechanical contrivances, in algebra and geometry; and he made such progress that his friends sent him to Cambridge, where he delivered lectures on mathematics to crowded audiences. Having been created master of arts by royal mandate, he was appointed Lucasian professor of mathematics in 1711, and in 1728 he received the degree of doctor of laws. His "Elements of Algebra" were printed at Cambridge in 1740, and his treatise on Fluxions was also printed after his death.

Born at Thurleston, Yorkshire, 1682; died 1739.

SAURIN, JACQUES, so'-ra(ng), a French Protestant divine, who went with his father to Geneva, after the revocation of the edict of Nantes in 1685. In the 17th year of his age he quitted his studies to bear arms in the English service, but soon returned to Geneva. On finishing his education, he went to London, and preached among his fellow exiles for five years. About 1705 he went to Holland, where he became minister of the French church at the Hague. He was an eloquent and majestic preacher. His greatest work is entitled "Discourses, Historical, Critical, and Moral, on the most Memorable Events of the Old and New Testament."

Born at Nismes, 1677; died at the Hague, 1730.

SAURIN, BERNARD JOSEPH, a French dramatic poet, and son of the preceding. He was intimate with Voltaire, Montesquieu, and Helvetius, the latter of whom allowed him a pension. He wrote several plays of great merit; as "Spartacus," and "Blanche and Richard," tragedies; and the "Anglomania," a comedy. His dramatic works were printed in 1783.

Born at Paris, 1706; died 1781.

SAURIN, JOSEPH, a French mathematician, who entered the ministry of the Protestant church; but, in 1690, abjured that religion at Paris, obtained a pension from the government, and devoted himself to mathematical science. He became a member of the Academy of Sciences. Jean Baptist Rousseau, having been accused of writing some libellous verses against persons of distinction, falsely charged Saurin with being the author. Saurin was, however, acquitted, and his accuser banished. He contributed many valuable papers to the Journal des Savans, and to the Memoirs of the Academy of Sciences; and wrote his own life.

Born at Courtaison, Vaucluse, 1659; died at Paris, 1737.

SAUSSURE, HORACE BENEDICT DE, sose'-soor, a Swiss naturalist, who received his education at the college of Geneva, of which learned establishment he was appointed professor, in his 22nd year. His life was spent in uninterrupted devotion to physical science, either as a teacher, writer, or adventurous explorer. He examined the geology and mineralogy of the Alps, Vosges, and Jura, and of the principal mountains of Germany, Switzerland, Italy, Sicily, and England. He resigned his professorship in 1786, and subsequently became a member of the council of Two Hundred, and later still, when Geneva was united to the French republic, a member of the National Assembly. But the Revolution robbed him of nearly all his property, which had been invested in the public funds. He was the inventor of a thermometer for ascertaining the temperature of water at all depths, an electrometer for showing the electrical condition of the atmosphere, and other valuable philosophical apparatus. His most important works were,—"Essays on Hygrometry," "Dissertatio Physica de Igne," and his invaluable "Travels in the Alps," in 4 volumes.

Born at Geneva, 1740; died there, 1799.

SAUVAGES, FRANÇOIS BOISSIER DE, so'-vage', a French physician, who became royal professor of medicine and botany at Montpellier, member of the Royal Society of London, and of several other learned bodies. He was called the Boerhaave of Languedoc, and during thirty years laboured at a work in which he sought to classify diseases in a methodical system. His most important works were "Medical Nosology" (in Latin), "Methodus Foliorum," and a translation of Hale's "Statistical Essays," from the English.

Born at Alais, Lower Languedoc, 1706; died 1767.

SAUVAL, HENRY, so'-val, a French historian, who, after a laborious study of the archives and maps relating to the city of Paris, produced a learned and voluminous work, entitled "History and Researches relative to Paris." This monument of patient labour and erudition was published after the author's death, in 1724.

Born at Paris, 1620; died 1670.

SAUVES, CHARLOTTE DE BEAUNE-SEMBLANCAY, Baroness de, sove, a French lady, who was equally distinguished for her beauty and wit. She was one of the attendants upon Catherine de' Medici, and was beloved by the king of Navarre, afterwards Henry IV., over whom she, for a long time, held considerable ascendency. She was subsequently married to the marquis de Noirmoutiers.

Born 1551; died 1617.

SAUVEUR, JOSEPH, so'-vu(r), a French mathematician, who was dumb till he was seven years of age, and even then his organs of speech were so imperfect that he was never able to speak distinctly. From an early age he evinced a capacity for the study of mathematics, which he cultivated at the Jesuit's college, Paris, and at the age of 20 had prince Eugène for a pupil. In 1686 he was appointed mathematical professor of the Royal College. He wrote a treatise on fortification, and another on music, besides several papers in the Memoirs of the Academy of Sciences, of which he was a member.

Born at La Flèche, 1653; died 1716.

SAVAGE, RICHARD, sav'-aj, an English poet, who was the natural son of the countess of Macclesfield, by earl Rivers. His mother caused him to be brought up without a knowledge of his origin, and framed a story of his death, to prevent his father from leaving him a proper support. After the death of his nurse, he found some papers which disclosed the secret of his birth; but every effort made by him to gain his mother's favour was ineffectual. Having the misfortune to kill a man in a tavern broil, his mother devised every possible means to get him executed; and when he was condemned, she endeavoured to prevent his receiving a royal pardon. His friends, however, procured him a reprieve, and lord Tyrconnel took him into his family, and allowed him an income of £200 a year. But the temper and conduct of Savage were most unfortunate: he quarrelled with his patron and was discarded. Queen Caroline allowed him a pension of £50, which he lost at her death, and was reduced to great distress. Pope and others raised a subscription to enable him to live quietly in Wales, but he went to Bristol, lived in a reckless manner, and died in the debtor's prison of that city. Savage had considerable genius, but it was uncultivated. He wrote some plays and poetical pieces, the best of which is the poem entitled "The Bastard." Dr. Johnson, who, at the outset of his career, was the companion of the poet's distress, wrote his biography, which is the best piece in the "Lives of the Poets."

Born 1698; died 1743.

SAVAGE ISLAND, South Pacific, 33 miles in circumference, and of coral formation. It was discovered by Captain Cook in 1774, and named by him from the ferocity of the natives. They are now greatly improved, about 300 professing Christianity. Pop. 1,000. Lat. 19° 10′ S. Lon. 169° 50′ W.

SAVAII, sa-vai'-i, the largest of the NAVIGATOR'S ISLANDS, 40 miles long and 20 broad. It is mountainous and of volcanic formation. The interior is unexplored. There is a safe harbour, the Bay of Matsatua, at the northern extremity. Pop. 20,000.

SAVANNAH, sa-van'-na, a river of the United States, formed on the Alleghanies, by the union of the Tugalo and Keowee, 100 miles above Augusta. It separates South Carolina from Georgia, and runs south-east into the Atlantic. Total course, about 300 miles.

SAVANNAH, a city and port of Georgia, United States, on the right bank of the Savannah, 17 miles from its mouth. It contains a court-house, custom-house and state arsenal, exchange, and 14 churches (some very handsome), and a synagogue. The city is regularly laid out, and the squares and public walks are planted with fine trees. It is the great emporium of the state, and is a place of much trade. Pop. 31,000, nearly half being coloured. The town was founded in 1733 by general Oglethorpe.

SAVARIN. (See BRILLAT-SAVARIN.)

SAVARY, ANNE JEAN MARIE RENÉ, duke of Rovigo, sa'-va-re, a French general, who entered the army in 1789, and in four years became a captain. At the battle of Marengo, in 1800, he became aide-de-camp to Bonaparte. In 1802 the first consul appointed him head of the secret police, and while holding that post, he had the superintendence of the Duke d'Enghien's execution. In 1805 he was created general of division, and, after distinguishing himself at Austerlitz, Eylau, Ostrolenka, and Friedland, he received the title of duke of Rovigo, and was nominated governor of Prussia. He was, in 1808, appointed to the command-in-chief of the army of Spain, and retained it until the arrival of Joseph Bonaparte. In 1810 he succeeded the duke of Otranto as minister of general police. In 1815 his devotion to the fortunes of Napoleon caused him to follow the deposed potentate to Rochfort, and he even requested to be allowed to accompany him to St. Helena, but was refused permission by the British government and imprisoned in Malta, but contrived to effect his escape. His unpopularity with his countrymen was very great, and he only emerged from obscurity on two subsequent occasions—in 1823, when he attempted to vindicate his conduct in the execution of the Duke d'Enghien, but only drew upon himself greater discredit, before which he was compelled to leave France; and again in 1831-33, when he held the command in Algeria, where he displayed great energy and ability.

Born at Mans, 1774; died 1834.

SAVARY, NICHOLAS, an eminent French traveller, who, in 1776, went to Egypt; whence he travelled through Greece and the islands of the Archipelago. On his return to France, about 1781, he published the "Koran," translated from the Arabic; "Letters on Egypt;" and "Letters on Greece."

Born at Vitré, 1750; died 1788.

SAVE, sav, a river of the Austrian empire, rising in Illyria, and, after a course of 644 miles, joining the Danube between Semlin and Belgrade. The chief affluents are the Laibach, Kulpa, Unna, Bosna, and Drina.

SAVERNE, sa'-vairn, a town of Germany, in Alsace-Lorraine, on the Zorn, 19 miles N.W. of Strasburg. Manf. Woollen fabrics, hosiery, leather, bricks, tiles, and hardware goods. Pop. 5,500.—The town was several times besieged during the Thirty Years' War.

SAVIGLIANO, sa'-veel-ye-a'-no, a town of northern Italy, province of Cuneo, 9 miles E. of Saluzzo. It has several convents and a Benedictine abbey, and is a handsome and well-built town. Manf. Woollens, silks, and linens. Pop. 16,844.

SAVIGNY, FRIEDRICH KARL VON, a German jurist, descended from a French Protestant family, who studied at Marburg, and was, in 1808, appointed professor of law in the university of Landshut, Bavaria, and subsequently fulfilled similar functions in the university of Berlin. His works upon jurisprudence take the highest rank, the principal being,—"History of the Roman Law in the Middle Ages;" "Legal History of Nobility in Modern Europe;" and "The System of Modern Roman Law."

Born at Frankfort-on-the-Maine, 1779; died 1861.

SAVILE, SIR HENRY, sav'-il, an English mathematician, who became fellow and warden of Merton College, Oxford, and provost of Eton college. James I., on his accession, conferred on him the honour of knighthood. He was a munificent patron of learning, and founded two professorships at Oxford, one of astronomy and the other of geometry. He published editions of St. Chrysostom's works, translated part of Tacitus, and wrote a treatise on Military Affairs, or the Roman warfare, &c.

Born near Halifax, 1549; died at Eton, 1622.

SAVOIE, sa-voi', a department of the south-east of France, formerly, with the department HAUTE-SAVOIE, the duchy of SAVOY, of which this department was the southern part. The surface of the country is mountainous, but the valleys are fertile and highly cultivated. The scenery is very picturesque, and in some parts terraces have been artificially constructed on the sides of the hills, and the vine is cultivated. The climate is temperate, with long and severe winters, notwithstanding which many of the vegetable products of warmer climates thrive. The pasturage is rich and abundant, and there are extensive plantations of mulberry trees. Cattle, horses, mules, bees, and silkworms are reared.

Rivers.—Several affluents of the Rhône.
Minerals.—Iron, copper, antimony, lead, zinc, manganese, silver, marble, granite, gypsum, sulphur, salt, and coal. There are thermal springs, much resorted to.
Area.—2,324 square miles.
Pop.—266,438.
Divisions and Chief Towns.—There are 4 arrondissements and 327 communes. The chief towns are CHAMBERY, the capital; ALBERTVILLE, MOUTIERS, and ST. JEAN DE MOURIENNE.

SAVOIE, HAUTE, a department of France, the most elevated tract in Europe; very mountainous, including Mont Blanc, the greatest elevation of Western Europe. The scenery is of the grandest and most beautiful character, with mountains, lakes, fertile valleys, deep gorges, cascades, and extensive glaciers.

Rivers and Lakes.—The Drance, flowing into the Lake of Geneva; the Arve, Ussen, Fier, Laisse, Cuier, and Isère affluents of the Rhône. The largest lakes are those of GENEVA and ANNECY.
Minerals.—Similar to those of SAVOIE.
Area.—1,667 square miles.
Pop.—274,087.
Divisions and Chief Towns.—There are 4 arrondissements and 313 communes. The chief towns are ANNECY, the capital; BONNEVILLE, CONFLANS, THORON, and St. Julien.

SAVONA, sa-vo'-na, a maritime city of northern Italy, province of Genova, 25 miles S.W. of Genoa. There are a beautiful cathedral, and several churches and monasteries. A good trade is carried on with Marseilles. Pop. 28,710.—This is an ancient city, the Sava of the Romans.

SAVONAROLA, GIROLAMO, sa-vo-na-ro'-la, an Italian monk, of the order of Dominicans, member of a noble family of Ferrara, who became a celebrated preacher at Florence, where he publicly declaimed against the vices of the priests and the corruptions of the Roman church, for which he was excommunicated by the pope, and with two companions were executed and their bodies burned. He wrote Sermons, a treatise entitled "The Triumph of the Cross," and other works. His enthusiastic and stern determination of character exercised a great influence on some of the highest minds of the age, and at Florence he desired the wealthy inhabitants to destroy their jewels and ornaments, burn books of poetry and fiction, and gambling and licentiousness were severely punished.

Born at Ferrara, 1452; died 1498.

SAVOY, sa-voi', formerly a duchy in the south of Europe, and the N.W. part of the continental states of the kingdom of Sardinia. The princely house of Savoy traces its descent from Wittekind, the last independent king of the Saxons. The first Count of Savoy was Amadeus, who received the title from the Emperor, Henry V., in 1111. In 1416, the title of Duke of Savoy was conferred by the Emperor Sigismund; in 1713, the island of Sicily was added to the duchy, and the title of king assumed. In 1720, Sicily was exchanged for the island of Sardinia. Savoy was annexed to France in 1860. (See SAVOIE.)

SAVU, sa-voo', the largest island of a group of the same name, in the Indian Archipelago, subordinate to the Dutch. It is 20 miles long and 8 broad, beautiful and fertile. Pop. 35,000.—Lat. 10° 35' S. Lon. 122° E.

SAXE, HERMANN MAURICE, sax, (Count Maurice of Saxony), marshal of France, was the natural son of Frederick Augustus I., elector of Saxony and king of Poland, and of the countess von Königsmark. From his childhood he evinced proofs of a martial spirit. When only 12 years old, he ran away from home, and served with Prince Eugène and Marlborough in the Netherlands. He next displayed great valour under his father, in the war against the Swedes, particularly at the siege of Stralsund. At the age of 18 he married a young German lady, who had good cause for jealousy, and he obtained the annulment of the marriage. In 1717 he was with Prince Eugène in Hungary, where he raised the siege of Belgrade, and contributed to the defeat of the Turks. After the peace of Utrecht he went to France, where the duke of Orleans, at that time regent, gave him the rank of Maréchal-de-camp. Having obtained a regiment, he employed himself in improving military tactics, and introducing a new system of manœuvres. In 1726 the States of Courland elected him their duke, on which Poland and Russia joined against him, and, after a brave defence, the count was obliged to quit the government and the country. He then returned to France, where he applied himself to the study of mathematics, and wrote his Reveries. On the death of his father, in 1733, war was rekindled between France and Austria, and the elector of Saxony, his brother, offered him the command of his forces, which he declined, giving the preference to the French service. He then joined marshal the duke of Berwick on the Rhine, and displayed great skill and bravery at the siege of Philipsburg, for which he was made lieutenant-general. In 1741 he took Prague, which was followed by the capture of Egra. In 1744 he was made marshal of France, and commander-in-chief in Flanders. The next year he gained the battle of Fontenoy, though he was so ill as to be carried on a litter. This victory was followed by the fall of several strong towns, particularly Brussels. In 1746 he gained the battle of Rocoux, and the same year was appointed marshal of all the French armies, governor of all the places conquered in the Low Countries, and loaded with honours by Louis XV. Marshal Saxe was a ripe and good soldier both theoretically and practically, though his literary acquirements were of a mean order; but his work upon military matters nevertheless contains much that is valuable. It was translated into English by Sir William Fawcett, under the title of "The Reveries, or Memoirs upon the Art of War, by Field-Marshal Count Saxe." He was a man of great size and extraordinary personal strength.

Born at Dresden, 1696; died in France, 1750.

SAXE ALTENBURG, ak'-ten-boorg, a duchy of the German empire, lying between the kingdom of Saxony, the Prussian province of Saxony, the grand duchy of Saxe-Weimar, the duchy of Saxe-Meiningen, and the principality of Schwarzburg-Sondershausen, and divided into two nearly equal parts by the principality of Reuss-Gries, the eastern part being the circle of Altenburg and the western the circle of Saal-Eisenberg. The former is undulatory and fertile, and the inhabitants are noted for their industry and skill in agriculture. ALTENBURG is the capital.

Rivers.—The Pleisse, Saale, Orla, and Rode.

Area.—509 square miles.

Pop.—160,000, chiefly of Slavonic origin, and many retaining the Slavonic dress and customs. They are nearly all Protestants.

History and Constitution.—The reigning family of Saxe-Altenburg, formerly called Saxe-Hildburghausen, dates its origin from the year 1482, when the separation took place between the Ernestine and Albertine lines of Saxony. Up to the year 1826, Saxe-Altenburg formed part of Saxe-Gotha, and was then by a general exchange of territories among the Saxon princes, made over to the Hildburghausen family. The constitution bears date April 29, 1831, but was altered at subsequent periods. It vests the legislative authority in a chamber composed of 24 representatives, of which 8 are chosen by the Ritterschaft, or land-holding nobility, 8 by the inhabitants of towns, and 8 by those of rural districts. The chamber meets every three years, and the deputies are elected for two sessions. The duchy has one vote in the council of the German empire, and one representative in the Diet.

SAXE-COBURG-GOTHA, ko'-boorg-go'-ta, a duchy of the German empire, part lying between Prussia, the principalities of Schwarzburg, the duchy of Saxe-Meiningen, and the grand duchy of Saxe-Weimar; and another and smaller part (COBURG), between Saxe-Meiningen and Bavaria. Gotha consists generally of low, undulatory, and fertile land; Coburg, on the southern slope of the Thuringer-wald range, has beautiful valleys and extensive forests. The climate, except in the mountainous parts, is mild, and agriculture is skilfully pursued, and large numbers of horses, cattle, and sheep bred. The seat of government is alternately at COBURG and GOTHA.

Rivers.—The Werra (an affluent of the Weser), the Unstrut (of the Saale), the Itz and Rodach (of the Main).

Area.—816 square miles, nearly three-fourths being included in Gotha.

Pop.—198,600.

History and Constitution.—The immediate ancestor of the reigning family of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha, formerly called Saxe-Saalfeld-Coburg, and previously Saxe-Coburg, was prince Albrecht, second son of duke Ernst, surnamed the Pious, who died in 1699. A dispute about his heritage lasted through three generations, and was only settled, towards the end of the 18th century, by a redistribution of the territories of the Saxon princes. A new division took place in 1826, on the extinction of the line of Saxe-Gotha, and it was then that the house of Saxe-Saalfeld-Coburg exchanged its name for that of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha. The fundamental law of the duchy, proclaimed May 3, 1852, vests the legislative power in two separate assemblies, one for the province of Coburg and the other for the province of Gotha. The Coburg chamber consists of 11, and that for Gotha of 19 members, chosen in as many electoral divisions, by the indirect vote of all the inhabitants. The two assemblies meet separately every year; and every second year they unite into one chamber, to which the Coburg diet deputes 7, and that of Gotha 14 members.

SAXE-MEININGEN, mi'-ning-en, a duchy of the German empire, to the N. of Bavaria and Coburg. It is traversed on the east and north by Thuringer-wald range, which throws out spurs to the west, and on the south-west are the Rhöngebirge. In some parts the mountains attain an elevation of 2,700 feet. There are many very fertile valleys, especially that of the Werra, and agriculture is skilfully and successfully pursued. In the east and north important mining operations are carried on.

Rivers.—The Werra, Saale, Milz, and Steinach.

Minerals.—Iron, copper, cobalt, sulphur, coal, porcelain clay, and salt.

Area.—933 square miles.

Pop.—212,000, mostly Protestants.

History and Constitution.—The line of Saxe-Meiningen was founded by duke Bernhard, third son of Ernst I. of Saxony. The duchy was only one-third its present size up to the year 1826, when, by the extinction of the ancient family of Saxe-Gotha, the territories of Hildburghausen and Saalfeld fell to the present duke. The charter of the duchy bears date August 23, 1829. It provides for a legislative organisation, consisting of one chamber of 24 representatives. Eight of these are elected by the proprietors of nobiliar estates; eight by the inhabitants of towns, and eight by those of rural districts. The chamber meets every three years, and new elections take place every six.

SAXE-WEIMAR, vi'-mar, a duchy of the German empire, consisting of three principal portions—Weimar, lying between Prussia, Saxe-Altenburg, and Schwarsburg, Rudelstadt; Eisenach (the western portion), to the north of Bavaria and Meiningen; and Neustadt, to the east of the kingdom of Saxony—and the small outlying districts of Altstadt (within Prussia), and Ilmenau (in Gotha). The Weimar portion is hilly and irregular in surface; Eisenach is traversed on the north by the Thuringer-wald, and on the south by the Rhöngebirge; and Neustadt by offshoots of the Erzgebirge. Nearly one quarter of the entire area of the duchy is occupied by forests, the remainder being tolerably fertile and well cultivated. Horses, cattle, and sheep are extensively bred. The chief towns are WEIMAR, the capital, EISENACH, JENA, and NEUSTADT.

Rivers.—The Werra, Fulda, Ulster, Suhl, Orsel; the Elster, Orla, and Ilm, affluents of the Saale.
Minerals.—Iron, copper, cobalt, coal, and marble.
Area.—1,421 square miles.
Pop.—309,577, the great majority Protestants.
History and Constitution.—Saxe-Weimar was formed into an independent duchy towards the end of the 16th century, when elector Johann Wilhelm of Saxony divided his territory between his two sons, Friedrich Wilhelm and Johann, giving the former Saxe-Altenburg and the latter Saxe-Weimar. At the congress of Vienna a considerable increase of territory, together with the title of grand-duke, was awarded. The constitution was granted May 5, 1816; but slightly altered by the law of October 15, 1849. According to this charter the legislative power is vested in a house of parliament represented by one chamber, elected every seventh year. It is composed of 31 members, of whom 10 are chosen by the proprietors of nobiliar estates; 10 by the towns; 10 others by the inhabitants of rural districts, and 1 by the senate of the university of Jena.

SAXO, saz'-o, surnamed "Grammaticus," a Danish chronicler, who went to Paris in 1177, and became a member of the religious order of St. Geneviève. He wrote the "History of the Northern Nations," founded upon the popular traditions; the "Icelandic Sagas;" and the "Songs of the Scalds."
Died about 1204.

SAXONY, KINGDOM OF, saz'-o-ne, is situate towards the north-east of Germany, and is bounded S. and S.E. by Austria, N. and N.E. by Prussia, and W. by Bavaria. In shape Saxony resembles a triangle, of which the longest line is the frontier on the side of Bohemia, formed by the Erzgebirge range of mountains, extending in a long line from south-west to north-east. In the southern and mountainous parts, the valleys only are well cultivated; but in the level districts in the north, tillage is general. The scenery of the valley of the Elbe is very striking. The chief products are wheat, barley, oats, and other grain; also tobacco and hops; and in a few situations of favourable exposure, vines. Fruit is extensively cultivated, and a fourth of the surface is covered with excellent timber. The breed of the merino sheep is celebrated, and yields valuable wool, and the cattle are of a superior kind.

Rivers.—The Elbe and its affluents, the Muglitz, Mulde, Trubsch, White Elster, and Wilde-Weisseritz, on the west, and the Wessnitz, Black Elster, and Spree, on the east; and the Neisse, belonging to the basin of the Oder.
Minerals.—Few countries equal Saxony in mineral riches. The topaz is frequently found, also chrysolites, amethysts, chalcedonies, cornelians, agates, jasper, garnets, and tourmalins; and among the coarser stones, serpentine, asbestos, amianthus, barytes, and fluates of lime. The porcelain clay in the neighbourhood of Meissen is well known; here are also fullers'-earth, terra-sigillata, and other minerals with an argillaceous base: petrifactions are very common. The lofty primitive mountains abound in iron; the secondary in copper and lead. Next to these are arsenic, cobalt, antimony, manganese, zinc, sulphur, alum, vitriol, and borax. Coal and marble are abundant. The salt mines and springs of Saxony are included in the districts ceded in 1815 to Prussia. There are also a few silver-mines.
Area.—5,790 square miles.
Pop.—2,972,805.
Religion and Education.—The royal family profess the Roman Catholic religion, and there are about 54,000 Roman Catholics, but the large majority of the people are Protestants of the Lutheran church. The university of Leipsic is the second largest in Germany. Education is general, attendance of every child at school being compulsory.
Divisions and Chief Towns.—There are 4 government districts—Dresden, Leipsic, Bautzen, and Zwickau. The chief towns are DRESDEN (the capital), LEIPSIC, CHEMNITZ, ZWICKAU, PLAUEN, GLAUCHAU, and FREIBURG.
History and Constitution.—After being many years an electorate, Saxony was formed into a kingdom in 1806, in consequence of the occupancy of Prussia by Napoleon. The present constitution dates from Sept. 4, 1831; but has undergone alterations and modifications. The king possesses the sole executive power, which he exercises through responsible ministers. The legislature is jointly in the king and parliament, the latter consisting of two chambers. The upper chamber comprises the princes of the blood royal; the proprietors of 8 baronial domains; 12 deputies elected by the owners of other nobiliar estates; 10 noble proprietors nominated by the king for life; the burgomasters of 8 towns; and the superintendents and deputies of 5 collegiate institutions, of the university of Leipsic, and of the Roman Catholic chapter of St. Peter at Bautzen. The lower chamber is made up of 20 deputies of landed proprietors; 25 of towns and city corporations; 25 of peasants and communes; and 10 representatives of commerce and manufacturing industry. Saxony sends 4 members to the Bundsrath of the German empire, and 23 to the Reichstag.—(See GERMANY.)

SAXONY, or SACHSEN, a province of Prussia, to the west of the province of Brandenburg. The western part is traversed by the Harz mountains, the highest point being the Brocken, 3,738 feet. The greater portion of the surface has a gentle slope towards the north. The soil is very fertile, and is well cultivated, especially a district known as the Goldene Aue, on the south-west. The capital is MAGDEBURG.

Rivers.—The Elbe, with its affluents the Saale and Mulde.
Area.—9,729 square miles.
Pop.—2,312,007.
History.—The greater portion of this province was detached from the kingdom of Saxony and ceded to Prussia by the congress of Vienna, in 1815.

SAY, JEAN BAPTISTE, sai, a French writer upon political economy, who was among the first to popularise that study in his native country. Part of his early life was passed in commercial pursuits in England, and on his return to France he was for some time secretary to Clavière, the minister of finance. In 1799 he became a member of the Tribunale, but his opposition to consul Bonaparte caused him to withdraw in 1804. He then engaged in manufacturing pursuits, again visited England, and in 1819 became professor of industrial economy in the Conservatoire des Arts et Métiers, and in 1831 professor of political economy in the Collége of France. His chief works were, a treatise and a catechism of political economy, and "Letters to Malthus upon various Questions in Political Economy."

Born at Lyons, 1767; died at Paris, 1832.

SAY, a town of western Africa, on the left bank of the Niger, 190 miles W. of Sokolo. Pop. 8,000.

SAYULA, sai-oo'la, a town of the state of Talisco, Mexico, 64 miles S.W. of Guadalaxara. Manf. Earthenware. Pop. 9,500.

SCÆVOLA. (See MUTIUS.)

SCALA, BARTOLOMEO, ska'-la, an Italian statesman, who was held in great esteem by Cosmo, duke of Tuscany, and obtained several honourable appointments in his native country. He wrote a "History of Florence" in Latin; "Letters," and other works.

Born at Florence, about 1424; died 1497.

SCALA NOVA, no'-va, a well-built seaport of Asia Minor, at the head of a gulf of the same name (40 miles long and 20 broad), 40 miles S. of Smyrna. It stands on a slope rising from the sea, and has mosques and public baths. Pop. 20,000.

SCALIGER, JULIUS CÆSAR, skal'-e-jer, an Italian scholar, whose proper name was GIULIO BORDONI, son of a geographer and miniature painter of Padua, who assumed the surname Della Scala, which his son afterwards transformed into Lascalle de Bordonis, and afterwards into Scaliger, adding Cæsar to his Christian name. He studied and practised medicine at Padua and Venice until more than 40 years of age, and then he accompanied the bishop of Agen to France, and remained there till his death. He was a man of extraordinary acquirements, both in science and in the learned languages; but it is as a commentator upon the Greek and Latin writers that his fame chiefly rests. His most important works were a "Treatise on the Art of Poetry," "Exercitations against Cardan," "Commentaries on Aristotle's History of Animals," "Notes, Dissertations, and Commentaries upon the Greek and Latin Classics," the treatise of Hippocrates on Dreams, and Latin poems.

Born at Riva, 1484; died at Agen, 1558.

SCALIGER, JOSEPH JUSTUS, a French scholar, who was the tenth son of the preceding. He studied at the college of Bordeaux, and afterwards at Paris. Becoming a Calvinist, he, in 1593, removed to Leyden, and obtained the professorship of literature. Scaliger was a man of the most extensive learning, having mastered not only the Latin and Greek and principal European languages, but Hebrew, Syriac, Persian, and other languages, also, so that he could speak 13 languages, ancient and modern. He was petulant, illiberal, and excessively vain, boasting of an illustrious pedigree, which he must have known to be fictitious. His principal works are, "De Emendatione Temporum," in which he established a sound system of chronology; Latin epistles, commentaries, and annotations upon ancient classics and Latin poems.

Born at Agen, 1540; died at Leyden, 1609.

SCAMANDER, or XANTHUS, ska-man'der, a river of the plain of Troy, in Asia Minor, rising immediately beneath the site of old Troy, and falling into the Ægean Sea. It is now identified with the modern Mendere.

SCAMOZZI, VINCENZIO, ska-mot'-se, a celebrated Italian architect, whose principal works are at Venice, and the most remarkable is the citadel of Palma. He composed a treatise on his art, of great merit, entitled "Architettura Universale."

Born at Vicenza, 1552; died at Venice, 1616.

SCANDER-BEG, skan-der-beg', the name given by the Turks to GEORGE CASTRIOTA, a prince of Epirus, Albania. He was given by his father, John Castriota, with his three brothers, as hostages to Amurath II., who caused him to be educated as a Mussulman, treated him with the greatest favour, and placed him in command of 5,000 cavalry. On the death of his father, in 1432, he formed the design of recovering the throne of his ancestors; and being sent against Hungary, he entered into a secret treaty with John Hunniades, who was afterwards regent, seized the sultan's secretary (whom he afterwards murdered to avoid detection), and compelled him to write and seal an order to the governor of Albania, commanding him to deliver the capital to Scander-beg. He then repaired thither, and ascended the throne in 1443. Amurath laid siege to Croia, the capital of Albania, but was twice defeated. The war was continued by his successor, Mahomet II., till 1461, when the independence of the country was settled by treaty. Scander-Beg afterwards went to Italy, to assist Ferdinand, king of Aragon, who was closely besieged in Bari. The Albanian hero relieved the place, contributed to the defeat of the count of Anjou, and restored the kingdom of Naples to Ferdinand. Afterwards, at the instigation of the pope, he broke faith with the sultan, and entered on a new war with the Turks, gaining several great victories, but he died before the war was concluded.

Born in Epirus, 1404; died at Alessio, 1467.

SCANDINAVIA, skan'-di-nai'-vi-a, a general name given by the ancients to the great tract of country lying to the north of Germany, comprising Denmark, Norway, Sweden and Iceland.

SCARBOROUGH, skar'-bur-o, a market-town, seaport, municipal and parliamentary borough, and very fashionable watering-place, in the North Riding of Yorkshire, 42 miles N.E. of York. It stands in the recess of a beautiful bay, on the borders of the German Ocean, and rising from the shore in the form of an amphitheatre, and protected on the north-east by a promontory terminating in a cliff 300 feet high, on which is a castle built in the 12th century, and now used as barracks. The older part of the town is connected with the new by a cast-iron bridge, 75 feet high, stretching over a chasm 400 feet wide; and another bridge (erected in 1865) spans a picturesque ravine, and connects the western part of the town with the large and fashionable southern suburb. The principal streets are spacious and well paved. The buildings on the cliff stand almost unrivalled in respect of situation, having in front a beautiful terrace, nearly 100 feet above the level of the sands, and below is a new promenade, the Foreshore road. The more prominent of the buildings are the large Grand Hotel, erected in 1867, in the Italian style, and the Spa, on the North Cliff. The parish church, St. Mary's, recently restored, belonged to a Cistercian abbey, and there are various other places of worship for different denominations of Christians, some new and splendid edifices. An aquarium, erected at a cost of £100,000, and 500 feet long by 250 feet wide, was opened in 1877. There are saline and chalybeate springs. The harbour is the only haven of consequence on the eastern coast, between the Humber and Tynemouth; hence it is much resorted to during the violent easterly storms which often prevail here. It is extensive and commodious, and of easy access. There are three piers and a lighthouse. Pop. 30,484. resident; but in the season, from June to October, there are an immense number of visitors. A station on the North Eastern, Great Northern,

London and North-Western, and Lancashire and Yorkshire railways.

SCARDONA, or SCRADIN, skar-do'-na, a town of the Austrian empire, in Dalmatia, on the right bank of the Kerka, 30 miles S.E. of Zara. There are a cathedral, the ruins of a Turkish castle, and a harbour for small vessels. Pop. 7,400.

SCARLATTI, ALESSANDRO, skar-lat'-te, an Italian composer, was the founder of the Neapolitan school of music. He was chapel-master at Naples, and for a few years at St. Maria Maggiore, at Rome, and is said to have written two hundred masses, more than a hundred operas, and three thousand cantatas.

Born at Trapani, Sicily, 1659; died 1721.

SCARLATTI, DOMENICO, an eminent Italian composer, and the son of the preceding, who made the acquaintance, at Venice, of Handel, to whom he was ardently attached, and followed to Rome. In 1735 he was appointed master of the royal chapel at Madrid, and teacher to the queen of Spain. He wrote several operas, and a collection of pieces for the harpsichord, on which instrument he was the first performer of his day.

Born 1685; died at Madrid, 1757.

SCARLETT, JAMES. (See ABINGER, Lord.)

SCARPA, ANTONIO, skar'-pa, an Italian physician and anatomist, who was born of parents in very humble circumstances, but was, through the liberality of a distant relation, enabled to pursue his studies at the university of Padua. In 1772 he was invited to fulfil the professorship of anatomy at the university of Modena, and subsequently became surgeon-in-chief to the military hospital of the same city. After visiting France and England, in both of which countries he made the acquaintance of the most illustrious physicians of the time, he, in 1783, became professor of anatomy in the university of Pavia. In 1814 he was appointed director of the Medical Faculty of Pavia. He wrote upon the anatomy of the organs of smell; of hearing; upon the cure of aneurism, hernia, the diseases of the eye; on the operation for the stone; and decided in the affirmative the question whether the heart was supplied with nerves, a disputed point until his time.

Born at Castello-Motta, Friuli, 1747; died at Pavia, 1832.

SCARPANTO, skar-pan'-to, the ancient Carpathus, a small island in the Mediterranean, belonging to Turkey, between Candia and Rhodes, 28 miles from Rhodes. It is 32 miles long, with a breadth of 8, and very mountainous. There are quarries of marble, several harbours, and at its north-western extremity a village of the same name. Pop. 5,000.

SCARRON, PAUL, skar'-rawng, a French burlesque writer. His father, a counsellor of parliament, having married a second time, Paul left home and went to Italy, where his conduct was characterised by the utmost license. Once during the carnival, he and three of his companions daubed their bodies with honey, and afterwards rolled in feathers. Thus plumed, they went forth; but the people attacked them, and, to escape from their assailants, they hid themselves in the rushes on the banks of the river Sarthe. Scarron alone survived the cold and exposure to which the unfeathered bipeds had been subjected, but at the cost of remaining a cripple for life. He subsequently removed to Paris, where, after suffering great poverty, he found employment, and even obtained an ecclesiastical benefice at Mans, which he held for three years, when he returned to Paris, and again led an irregular life. He obtained a pension from Cardinal Mazarin, whom he afterwards lampooned, and a much larger pension from Forquet. He was an inveterate beggar, and when money could not be obtained from his friends, would take anything, even poultry or cheese, or firewood, that they were willing to give. In 1652 he married Françoise d'Aubigné, afterwards the famous Madame de Maintenon (see MAINTENON), and thenceforth he passed his days as the head of a witty and brilliant society which made his home its rendezvous. Scarron, who was a man of infinite humour, maintained his cheerfulness, and indeed made a joke of his sufferings, throughout his life. He wrote a number of comedies; a travesty of Virgil's "Æneid;" several poems; and the "Roman Comique," an amusing account of the adventures of strolling players. One of his dramatic characters suggested the famous Tartuffe of Molière.

Born at Paris, about 1610; died there, 1660.

SCHADOW, JOHANN, GOTTFRIED, sha'-dou, an eminent German sculptor, who studied at Rome, and, upon returning to Berlin in 1788, obtained ample employment. His finest works are, the monument to Count Von der Mark; the equestrian statues of Frederick the Great, and of Field-Marshal Blucher; and the sculpture on the Mint at Berlin. He was professor, and afterwards director of the Academy of the Fine Arts at Berlin. His writings upon art were valuable; the most important of them being, "Polyklet, or the Groups of Mankind, according to their Races and Periods;" and "National Physiognomy, or Observations upon the Distinction of the Features, and of the External Form of Human Heads."

Born at Berlin, 1764; died there, 1850.

SCHADOW, GODENHAUS FRIEDRICH WILHELM VON, German painter, son of the preceding, one of the most famous of the "Düsseldorf school. Having studied at Rome, he was appointed professor of the academy of Berlin, and was afterwards director of the academy at Düsseldorf.

Born at Berlin, 1789; died 1826.

SCHADRINSK, shad-rinsk', a town of Russia, government of Perm, on the Iset. Manf. Soap and leather. Pop. 6,700.

SCHAERBEEK, sharé'-beek, a village of Belgium, immediately adjoining Brussels, of which it may be considered a suburb, on the north-east. There are many fine residences, and two churches. Pop. 23,000.

SCHAFFHAUSEN, shaf-how'-sen, a canton in the north of Switzerland, separated by the Rhine from the cantons of Zurich and Thurgau, on the south, and surrounded on the other side by the great duchy of Baden. It is generally hilly, with many beautiful valleys of remarkable fertility. Wine of fine quality is made in the valley of the Klettgau. Two members are sent to the national council. (See SWITZERLAND.) Area, 116 square miles. Pop. 38,000, nearly all Protestants.

SCHAFFHAUSEN, capital of the Swiss canton of the same name, on the right bank of the Rhine. Many of the houses are of very antique architecture, and there are a church, founded in 1502, and an old strong castle supposed to be of Roman construction. A wooden bridge, of very ingenious construction, is here thrown across the Rhine, and forms a channel of communication between this town and the rest of Switzerland. The Fall of Schaffhausen is a cataract of the Rhine, 3 miles below the town, and has a descent of about 100 feet. It is one of the most striking waterfalls in Europe. Pop. 11,795.

SCHALL, JOHANN ADAM VON, shal', a German Jesuit missionary to China, at the age of 20 entered the Jesuit order at Rome, and having distinguished himself by mathematical and astronomical knowledge, was selected partly on that account as a missionary to China. He was received with favour, invited by the emperor to Pekin, created a mandarin, and entrusted with the direction of the imperial mathematical school. He obtained permission for the erection of Catholic churches, and in a few years the Jesuits had made a hundred thousand converts. The emperor died and his successor opposed the missionaries, imprisoned Schall, and sentenced him to death. The sentence was not carried out, but he died in prison. He wrote, in the Chinese language, many treatises on scientific and religious subjects, and translated European works into the Chinese language.

Born at Cologne, 1591; died in China, 1669.

SCHAMYL, sha'-mil, a leader of the independent tribes of the Caucasus, belonging to a family of wealth and distinction, who commenced his warlike career in 1824, by ardently throwing himself into the struggle which Kasi-Mollah, the supreme chief of his country at that period, had commenced against the Russians. Until the year 1831 the Circassians successfully maintained themselves against their enemies; but, at that date, General Rosen, with a formidable army, drove them from all their positions, and besieged them in the stronghold of Himry, in the north of Daghestan, which place was taken, although with great loss to the Russians. Kasi-Mollah and nearly all his followers perished, and Schamyl was left for dead upon the sanguinary field. When he re-appeared, it was thought he had risen from death, and he found his fellow-countrymen acting under another chief, whose commands he himself prepared to obey implicitly. This chief was, however, shortly afterwards slain with most of his bodyguard, of which Schamyl was one, although he once more escaped as if by a miracle. From this time he came to be regarded as their born leader by the Circassians, who, moreover, so great was his character for piety, began to look upon him as a prophet. In 1836 he preached a holy war against the Russians, which he sustained during nearly a quarter of a century, keeping large armies in check with a mere handful of men, defending step by step his native fastnesses, and, by a mixture of skill and audacity, drawing his antagonists into ambuscades, or compelling them to beat disastrous retreats. In 1859, however, he found himself deserted by many of the native chieftains, whose co-operation was necessary to enable him to maintain the struggle against the power and resources of Russia. For some time he maintained a guerilla warfare, but at length he and his son were taken prisoners, and sent to St. Petersburg. The Czar received him with great kindness, and assigned him a residence at Kaluga, with a good pension. In 1870 he was allowed to go to Mecca on parole.

Born at Daghestan, 1797; died at Medina, 1871.

SCHÄSBURG, shäs'-boorg, a town of the Austrian empire, in Transylvania, on the Great Kokel. It is divided into an upper and lower town. The former, situated on an eminence, is surrounded by a wall; the latter, in the valley, is an open town. There are two Protestant and two Roman Catholic churches. Manf. Linen and cotton. Pop. 8,300.

SCHAUMBURG-LIPPE, shoum'-boorg-lip'-pe, a principality of Germany, bounded N. by Hanover, W. by Westphalia. The surface is generally flat, and in the western part is the large forest of Schauenburger Wald. The soil is very fertile and the climate mild. The capital is BÜCKEBURG.

Area.—212 square miles.

Pop.—36,000.

History and Constitution.—The reigning house of Lippe is descended from a count of the same name, who lived in the 16th century, acquiring some small territorial possessions in Westphalia. The principality has a constitution, dated November 17, 1868, under which there is a legislative diet of 15 members, two of whom are appointed by the prince, one nominated by the nobility, one by the clergy, one by certain functionaries, and the rest elected by the people. To the prince belongs part of the legislative and all the executive authority. He acts through a minister, called the president of the government.

SCHEELE, CARL VILHEM, shaï'-le(r), a Prussian chemist, who was at first an apprentice and assistant to an apothecary at Gottenburg, but afterwards set up in business on his own account at Upsal, and, later, at Köping. His discoveries in chemistry were numerous, and of the highest scientific importance. He made known oxygen gas, chlorine, tartaric acid, fluoric acid, barytes, and the arsenite of copper, or mineral green, so well known as "Scheele's green," and was the first to obtain prussic acid in a separate form, &c.; he was also one of the founders of organic chemistry. He contributed many treatises and memoirs to the Transactions of the Royal Academy of Stockholm. Another important work of his was the "Chemical Observations and Experiments on Air and Fire."

Born at Stralsund, 1742; died at Köping, near Stockholm, 1786.

SCHEEMAKERS, PIETER, shaï'-ma-kers, a Flemish sculptor, who took up his residence in England, and became the rival of Roubillac and Rysbrack. In 1770 he returned to Antwerp, where he died.

Born at Antwerp, 1691; died about 1773.

SCHEFFER, ARY, shef'-fer, historical painter, who, after studying in Holland, went to Paris, where he finished his artistic education under Baron Guerin. In 1812 he exhibited his first picture at the Paris Exhibition, and from that time rose rapidly to the highest position both as an historical and genre painter. His manner partook of the lofty and devotional character of the modern German school, combined with a certain Gallic style of colour and effect. As a portrait-painter he was likewise eminently successful. Many of his finest productions have been made familiar to the English public through the medium of the engraver's art; as, for example, the reproductions of his "Faust," "Mignon," "Francesca da Rimini and her Lover meeting Dante and Virgil in Hell," and Byron's "Giaour." In the latter part of his life he produced many powerful pictures of a religious character. He was an officer of the Legion of Honour, and received many other acknowledgments from the different continental governments of his genius as an artist.

Born at Dort, in Holland, 1795; died at Argenteuil, 1858.

SCHELDT, or SCHELDE, shelt, a river of France and the Netherlands, rising in the French department Aisne, and flowing in a northerly direction past Cambray, Bouchain, and Denain, to Valenciennes, where it becomes navigable. It passes Conde, Tournay, and Oudenarde, and, reaching Ghent, is joined by the Lys. From Ghent it winds its course to Antwerp, where it is divided into the two branches of East and West Scheldt, both of which discharge themselves into the German Ocean; the former by several mouths. The total course is about 210 miles.

SCHELLING, FRIEDRICH WILHELM JOSEPH VON, shell'-ling, a German philosopher, who studied at Tübingen and Leipsic, and succeeded Fichte as professor of philosophy in the university of Jena. At first an ardent advocate for the theories of the latter philosopher, he gradually drew away from them, until in 1802, he established a new set of philosophical ideas, an account of which was given to the German public in a work entitled "Essay upon the Difference in the Systems of Schelling and Fichte." In 1808 he became secretary to the Academy of Arts at Munich, and was raised to the rank of nobility by the king of Bavaria. In 1841 he was appointed professor at the university of Berlin, in which city he continued to reside until his death.

Born at Leonberg, Würtemberg, 1775; died at Ragaz, Switzerland, 1854.

SCHEMNITZ, or SELMECZ-BANYA, shem-nitz', a royal free mining-town in the north-west of Hungary, in an elevated situation near a river of the same name, 65 miles N. of Pesth. There are six suburbs, some at a considerable distance from the town. The mines of Schemnitz are the most extensive in Hungary, and extend under the town. The chief metals are gold, silver, lead, and copper. Arsenic and sulphur are also obtained. Below the mines is the adit constructed by Joseph II., which can be used both as a canal and a railway, and which is considered a magnificent work of engineering skill. Pop. 14,500.

SCHENECTADY, she-nek'-ta-de, a county of New York, United States. Area, 221 square miles. Pop. 23,538. The capital is SCHENECTADY.

SCHENECTADY, capital of the above county, on the south bank of the Mohawk, 16 miles N.W. of Albany. It contains a court-house, 17 churches, a college, and Union. Manf. Cotton fabrics, brooms, carpets, paper, machinery, leather, and agricultural implements. Pop. 13,655.—The town was settled by the Dutch in 1661, and is memorable for a terrible massacre by the French and Indians in 1690.

SCHEVENINGEN, skat'-ven-in-gen, a fashionable watering-place of the Netherlands, province of South Holland, 2 miles from Hague, with which it is connected by a planted avenue, with a tramway. From here, William, prince of Orange, sailed for England in 1688. Pop. 8,500.

SCHIEDAM, shké-dam, a town of the Netherlands, province of South Holland, on the Schie, 4 miles from Rotterdam. It has numerous churches, a chamber of commerce, and a Latin school. It is the chief seat for the manufacture of "Hollands," or Dutch gin. Pop. 22,000.

SCHILLER, JOHANN CHRISTOPH FRIEDRICH VON, shil'-ler, a German poet and dramatist, who was the son of an official in the employ of the duke of Würtemberg, who noticed the boy's talents, and undertook the charge of his education. He at first studied the law, which he exchanged for medicine, and, after taking his degree, became physician to a regiment stationed at Stuttgardt. Meanwhile his leisure had been given to the study of the poets and dramatists of England and Germany; and in secret he composed his tragedy of "The Robbers," which was produced at Mannheim in 1782. The tragedy obtained immense success; but the author having ventured to go without leave to the theatre at Mannheim, he was, for that offence, put under arrest. Soon afterwards he fled to Franconia under an assumed name, but afterwards returned to Mannheim, obtained employment as dramatist to the theatre, produced two tragedies, "Fiesco" and "Intrigue and Love," and translated Shakspeare's "Macbeth." In 1785 he went to Leipzic, afterwards to Dresden, and in 1787 to Weimar, where he associated with Herder, Wieland, and Göthe. In 1789 he settled at Jena, where he had been appointed professor of history. It was here that he married and wrote his "History of the Thirty Years' War," and some essays upon the Kantian philosophy. The duke of Meiningen made him a privy councillor, and the French republic conferred on him the rights of citizenship. In 1799 he produced his play of "Wallenstein." His "Mary Stuart" appeared in 1800; and in the following year "The Maid of Orleans." "The Bride of Messina" was produced in 1803, with less success than his previous works; but "William Tell," which came out in the following year, redeemed the comparative failure of its predecessor. In 1805 he was attacked by a fatal illness, partly induced by excessive study. His poems of the lyrical order have always been held in the most enthusiastic admiration in Germany, and his dramatic productions occupy a foremost part in German literature.

Born at Marbach, 1759; died at Weimar, 1805.

SCHIMMELPENNINCK, RUTGER JOHN, shim'-mel-pen'-nink, an eminent Dutch statesman, who practised as advocate, and, in 1785-86, played a distinguished part in the efforts made by the United Provinces to accomplish a revolution. In 1795 he displayed great eloquence at the National Batavian Convention. He was afterwards ambassador at Paris, plenipotentiary at the congress of Amiens (1802), and finally ambassador at London. During fifteen months (1805-6) he governed Holland with the greatest success as grand-pensionary. Whilst Louis Bonaparte reigned in his native country, he lived in retirement, but was, nevertheless, frequently consulted on matters of state. When Holland was incorporated with the empire, he became a member of the "Sénate Conservateur" of France.

Born 1761; died 1825.

SCHINKEL, KARL FRIEDRICH, shin'-kel, a Prussian architect, who studied in Italy, and in 1820 was appointed professor at the Berlin Academy of Arts. He erected many fine buildings at Berlin and Potsdam.

Born at Newrippen, 1781; died 1841.

SCHIO, shé'-o, a town of Italy, government of Venetia, on the Timanjo, 15 miles N.W. of Vicenza. In the neighbourhood are mineral springs, quarries of marble, and beds of porcelain earth. Pop. 11,000.

SCHLAN or SLANY, shlan, a town of the Austrian empire, in Bohemia, on the Rothenbach, 18 miles N.W. of Prague. It is surrounded by walls, and has three suburbs. There are a Franciscan monastery, a town-house, and a college. Manf. Woollen cloth and hosiery. Pop. 7,500.

SCHLEGEL, shlai'-gel, AUGUST WILHELM VON, a German poet and critic. He studied at Gottingen, and was afterwards a lecturer at the same university. He commenced his poetical career with some poems and translations of Dante, which secured him a high place among the writers of his country. He began his celebrated translation of Shakspeare in 1797, and, in the same year, was appointed to a professorship at Jena. In 1805 he became acquainted with Madame de Staël-Holstein, whom he accompanied upon a journey through several countries. In 1808 he commenced the delivery of his famous lectures on dramatic art; having previously produced some poems, and criticisms upon literature and the fine arts, which were received with applause. After the fall of Paris he went to reside at the country seat of Madame de Staël, and remained with her until her death, in 1818. In the following year, having achieved a very distinguished reputation and been raised to the rank of nobility, he was nominated professor of history in the university of Bonn, and, after devoting himself assiduously to the study of Sanskrit, he established, at his own cost, a printing-office at Bonn, for the production of works in that ancient language. He also founded a review for the discussion of Indian literature; and gave Latin translations of the "Ramayana" and the "Bhagavad-Gita," two classics of the Sanskrit tongue. His last work was his "Essays, Literary and Historical," which appeared in 1842. The most important works of this distinguished scholar, critic, and poet, were,—"Lectures on Dramatic Art and Literature," (the translation of "Shakspeare;" an edition of the "Niebelungen;" and a collection of poems. He was twice married, in each case unhappily.

Born at Hanover, 1767; died at Bonn, 1845.

SCHLEGEL, FRIEDRICH KARL WILHELM VON, a critic, philosopher, and philologist, the younger brother of the preceding. He was designed for commercial pursuits; but his disposition was so strongly inclined towards literature, that his father sent him to the university of Gottingen, where he devoted himself to the study of philology. He afterwards went to Leipzic, and, in 1798, produced a portion of a History of Greece and Rome, as well as a fragment of a German translation of Plato. He had been previously engaged with his brother in editing a literary journal called the Athenæum, the influence of which print upon the contemporary literature of Germany was enormous. His next great undertaking was the delivering of a course of lectures upon philosophy at Jena, in 1800; his tragedy of "Alarkas" appeared two years later; and, in 1808, he produced a fine work upon the literature of India. Some excellent poems followed in the course of the two subsequent years. In 1809 he was appointed imperial secretary to the Archduke Charles, and while holding that office, he produced a series of proclamations against France, of the most patriotic and spirit-stirring character. About this time he became a member of the Roman Catholic Church. His later years were chiefly spent as a diplomatic official under Metternich, who was his constant patron, as the editor of some Vienna periodicals, or in the composition and delivering of lectures upon modern history, ancient and modern literature, and the philosophy of history and of language.

Born at Hanover, 1772; died 1829.

SCHLEIERMACHER, FRIEDRICH ERNST DANIEL, shli'-er-ma'-ker, a German theologian and philologist, who received his earliest education under the Moravians, his parents having belonged to that religious sect: but, at 18, he quitted that body, and went to the university of Halle, where he devoted himself with the utmost assiduity to theology and philology. In 1790 he was engaged as tutor in the family of a nobleman, after which he became a preacher at Berlin. His first original works were some contributions to the Athenæum, a literary paper conducted by the brothers Schlegel. In 1799 appeared his famous "Discourses on Religion," which attracted great attention, and are considered to mark a great epoch in German theology. After a distinguished career as a preacher, and as commentator upon the ancient classics, especially Plato, he was, in 1804, appointed professor of theology and philosophy in the university of Halle. When, in 1806, Halle was incorporated in the new kingdom of Westphalia, he repaired to Berlin, where he became pastor of the church of the Trinity, and was engaged in delivering lectures upon theological questions; and he never lost an opportunity to denounce from his pulpit the French oppressors of Prussia. In 1810 he was nominated professor of theology in the Berlin university, which he retained with a constantly increasing reputation until his death. Schleiermacher was distinguished no less for his oratorical powers than for his profound erudition. He was the author of a variety of learned works, embracing philology, philosophy, and classical criticism.

Born at Breslau, 1768; died at Berlin, 1834.

SCHLEITZ, shlitze, a town of Germany, capital of the principality of Reuss-Schleitz, on the left bank of the Wiesenthal, 25 miles from Jena. Manf. Cotton and woollen fabrics, and leather. Pop. 5,000.

SCHLESWIG, or SLESVIG, shles'-vig, a district of the Prussian province of Schleswig-Holstein. It is generally undulating, with well-wooded districts in the eastern and central parts, and near the western boundary there are extensive marshy tracts protected by dams from encroachments of the sea. The coast is deeply indented, and there are numerous islands. Off the eastern coast are the islands of Alsen, Aroe, and Femera, and on the west are the Halligers, which are so exposed to the action of the sea, that the houses are built on dams. The chief towns are FLENSBORG, SCHLESWIG, HADERSLEBEN, Husum, and Tonder. Area, 3,000 square miles. Pop. 20,555.

SCHLESWIG, a seaport of the above district, at the head of the Schlei, 69 miles N.W. of Hamburg. It is divided into the Aldstadt (old town), Lollfuss and Fredericksberg, and there is a small suburb, Bustorf. The market-place is in the Aldstadt, and the chief street, two miles long, in the Lollfuss. The cathedral is a fine Gothic building of the 12th century, and at the northern end of Fredericksberg is the old castle of Gottorf, the seat of the government of the province. The harbour will admit only small vessels. This is the oldest town in the duchy, having been founded in the 9th century. Pop. 15,446.

SCHLESWIG-HOLSTEIN, a province of Prussia, ceded by the Danes in 1864, comprising SCHLESWIG and HOLSTEIN. Pop. 1,127,149.

The chief buildings are the Gothic church of St. George, built in the 14th century; the church of St. Foy, built in the 11th century on the model of the church of the Holy Sepulchre at Jerusalem; a fine Gothic gateway, with a clock-tower; and the palace of justice, formerly a Jesuit college. The fortifications were demolished after the Franco-German war of 1870. Pop. 9,200.

SCHLEY, shlai, a county of Georgia, United States. Area, 200 square miles. Pop. 5,200, more than half being coloured. The capital is Ellaville.

SCHLOSSER, FRIEDRICH CHRISTOPH, shlos'-ser, a German historian, who concluded his education at the university of Gottingen, after which he became private tutor in a nobleman's family, and later, a school teacher. But he devoted all his leisure to the study of history, in which he had greatly distinguished himself while a student, and, in 1812, gave to the world his "History of the Iconoclast Emperors," which enhanced his reputation for learning, and also gained for him the appointment of professor in the Lyceum of Frankfort. In 1817 he obtained the professorship of history at Heidelberg. Between the years 1823-46 he published his great work entitled "The History of the Eighteenth and Nineteenth Centuries," "A History of the Ancient World and its Civilization," "Critical Examination of Napoleon," and some minor historical pieces, were his latest works. His "History of the Eighteenth and Nineteenth Centuries" has been translated into English.

Born at Jever, in the lordship of Kniphausen, 1776; died at Heidelberg, 1861.

SCHLÖZER, Augustus Ludwig von, shlö'-zer, a German historian and political writer. After completing his education at Gottingen, he became tutor in a Swedish family, and proceeded to Stockholm, where he produced his first work, a "History of Commerce." Having a great proficiency in the Eastern languages, he was offered the post of literary assistant by Müller, the historiographer of the Russian empire. In 1765 he was appointed professor of Russian history in the Academy of St. Petersburg. In 1767 he was permitted to leave the country, and he became professor of political science at Gottingen. In 1804 he was raised to noble rank by the emperor of Russia, and created privy councillor of justice. His most important works were "General History of the North," "Picture of the History of Russia," and "Researches into the Fundamental Laws of Russia." He also edited some of the old Russian chronicles.

Born at Jagstadt, in the principality of Hohenloe-Kirchberg, 1737; died 1809.

SCHNEIDER, Johann Gottlieb, shnī'-der, a German philologer and naturalist, who studied at Leipzic, and during 34 years he held the professorship of philology at the university of Frankfort, and was finally appointed chief librarian to the same seat of learning after it had been transferred to Breslau. His works were very numerous both in philology and natural history; the most important of them being, an edition of Aristotle's "Natural History;" a Greek Dictionary; an edition of the works of Xenophon; and several works elucidatory of the natural history of the ancient writers.

Born near Wurzen, Saxony, 1750; died at Breslau, 1822.

SCHNEIDER, Eugène, French manufacturer and statesman. Early in life he turned his attention to mechanical engineering, and in 1830, established the immense engineering works at Creuzot. (See Creuzot.) In 1845 he entered the Chamber of Deputies, and in 1851 was appointed minister of agriculture, and in 1852 member of the Corps Legislatif. He was also regent of the bank of France, and president of various Chambers of Commerce and Agriculture.

Born at Nancy, 1815.

SCHNORR, Von Karolsfeld Julius, shnor, a German artist, son of the director of the Art Academy at Leipzic. After studying for a time at Vienna, he, in 1815, repaired to Rome, where he became a member of that society of young German painters at whose head were Cornelius and Overbeck. He soon obtained a foremost position in that artistic community, and was engaged with his great compatriots to embellish the walls of the Villa Massimi at Rome, with designs in fresco, the subjects being chosen from the works of Dante, Ariosto, and Petrarch. Some scriptural works also employed his brush while at Rome. When King Louis of Bavaria resolved to embellish Munich with architectural and pictorial masterpieces, Schnorr was invited, and other celebrated German artists, to carry out the royal patron's ideas. In 1827 he was nominated professor of historical painting in the Academy of Fine Arts at Munich. In that city he remained until the year 1846, when he removed to Dresden, on being appointed director of the picture-gallery, and professor in the Academy of Fine Arts there. Meanwhile, he had decorated the state apartments of the new palace at Munich with a series of magnificent frescoes illustrative of the history of Charlemagne, Frederick Barbaroesa, and Rudolph of Hapsburg, and likewise of the national poem of the "Niebelungen-lied." He also produced some fine designs for book illustrations.

Born at Leipzic, 1794; died at Dresden, 1853.

SCHŒLCHER, Victor, shēl'-sher, a French littérateur and democratic politician, who, after quitting college, joined the ultra party which was opposed to the Restoration. Until the revolution of 1830 he was engaged as a journalist and art critic. He had visited the United States, Mexico, and Cuba, and had returned to France a determined advocate for the abolition of slavery. Devoting himself to that as a special question, he published a number of works thereupon, all of them pleading eloquently for the emancipation of the black populations. Egypt, the coast of Africa, and other parts, were subsequently visited, for the purpose of making himself acquainted with the condition of the servile races. In 1848 he returned to Paris, and was at once appointed to a post in the ministry of marine. In that capacity he drew up a proclamation for the immediate emancipation of the black population of the French colonies, and also promulgated a decree by which flogging in the navy was abolished. Subsequently he, as journalist, member of the legislative Assembly, and vice-president of the "Mountain," or ultra-democratic party, defended the views of that section of French politicians. This line of conduct caused him to become one of the victims of the coup d'état of 1851. Expelled from his native country on that occasion, he repaired to England, where he produced several works, the most important of which was a complete and careful biography of the great musician Handel, which was published in English, having been translated from the author's MS. His writings, chiefly political, are to be found in the columns of the best democratic journals of France, to which he was for a long period an eloquent and enlightened contributor.

Born at Paris, 1804.

SCHÖFFER, PETER, sheof'-fer, one of the improvers of the art of printing, who appears to have been at first a copyist at Paris, but was afterwards employed in the establishment of Guttenberg and Faust of Mentz. By one account he is said to have discovered the more easy method of casting the types. When Faust and Guttenberg separated, in 1455, he became the partner of the former; after whose death he printed many works alone. His three sons also became eminent as printers.

Born near Darmstadt, 1430; died 1502.

SCHOHARIE, sko-a-ree', a county of New York, United States. Area, 675 square miles. Pop. 33,500. The capital is Schoharie.

SCHOLZ, JOHANN MATTHIAS AUGUST, sholz, a German philologist, who, after completing his studies at the university of Breslau, devoted himself to the production of an improved edition of the text of the New Testament. With this object, he visited London, Paris, Vienna, Italy, Egypt, and Palestine. He was professor of theology at Bonn. His most important publications were, "Handbook of Biblical Archæology;" the text of the New Testament, under the title of "Novum Testamentum Græce;" and an account of his travels in the East.

Born at Kapsdorf, near Breslau, 1794; died 1852.

SCHOMBERG, FREDERIC ARMAND DE, a distinguished soldier, who fought under Frederick Henry, prince of Orange, and his son William; but, in 1650, passed into the French service, and obtained the governorship of Gravelines and Furnes. In 1661 he was sent to Portugal, where he commanded with such success as to force Spain to make a peace. He rose to the rank of marshal; but, upon the revocation of the edict of Nantes, he left France and went to Brandenburg, the elector of which made him minister of state. He accompanied the prince of Orange to England at the revolution of 1688; was raised to a dukedom, made knight of the Garter, and had a large sum voted him by parliament. In 1689 he went with William to Ireland, and was shot by mistake, as he was crossing the Boyne, by the French refugees of his own regiment.

Born 1618; died 1689.

SCHOMBERG, HENRI COUNT DE, marshal of France, who was descended from a German family. He served in 1617 in Piedmont under Marshal d'Estrées, and afterwards against the Huguenots in the cival wars. In 1625 he was made marshal, and, two years afterwards, defeated the English at the isle of Rhé. In 1632 he defeated the rebels in Languedoc, at the famous battle of Castelnaudary, for which he was made governor of that province.

Born at Paris, 1575; died 1632.

SCHOMBURGK, SIR ROBERT HERMANN, modern traveller and naturalist. He was a Prussian by birth, and early in life engaged unsuccessfully in commercial pursuits in the United States. In 1835 he undertook an exploratory journey into the interior of Guiana, under the auspices of the English Royal Geographical Society, and, while ascending the Berbice river, first met with the magnificent aquatic plant afterwards named the Victoria regia water-lily. He subsequently published a work of great value upon British Guiana, of which country he was, in 1840, employed by the British government to make a survey. For his successful accomplishment of this mission he received the honour of knighthood, and his distinguished services as a traveller and naturalist were acknowledged by various European courts and learned bodies. In 1840 he was nominated British consul to the republic of Saint Domingo, and in 1857 went as British representative to Siam, returning to England in 1864.

Born 1804; died 1865.

SCHOOLCRAFT, HENRY ROWE, skool'-kraft, an American philologist and ethnologist, whose youth was devoted to the study of the natural sciences and to the acquisition of languages. In 1817 he commenced that career in which he subsequently earned a high reputation, by making a journey of exploration through Missouri; whence he returned to Washington, with a valuable mass of notes and mineralogical specimens. His "Mines and Mineral Resources of Missouri," published in 1819, met with the most decided success, and obtained for its author the post of geologist to the exploring expedition dispatched to the sources of the Mississippi in the following year. He was chosen to fulfil, in succession, posts of great responsibility and distinction. In 1821 he acted as secretary to an Indian conference at Chicago. He married a highly educated lady, whose mother was an Indian, and with her help made a systematic study of Indian dialects and traditions. He afterwards explored the Mississippi to its remotest source. At a later period he devoted himself to the task of arranging and publishing his vast stores of information upon Indian language, antiquities, and ethnology, which he had spent thirty years in collecting. One of his works suggested the "Hiawatha" of Longfellow. He was a member of the chief European and American literary and learned societies.

Born at Hamilton, New York, 1793; died 1864.

SCHWANTHALER, LUDWIG MICHAEL, shwan-ta'-ler, a German sculptor, whose ancestors had been of the same profession during some generations. He received his artistic education at the Munich Academy of the Fine Arts, and subsequently repaired to Rome, where he gained the friendship of Thorwaldsen, who aided him with some valuable advice. His first successes in his profession were due to the patronage of king Louis of Bavaria. He continued to labour with unceasing zeal until he became the acknowledged head of the Munich school of sculpture. In 1835 he was appointed professor of sculpture. His grandest work was the colossal statue of Bavaria which occupies the centre of the Bavarian Hall of Fame, and is about 60 feet in height. His colossal statues of St. Peter, St. Paul, Count Tilly, and monumental statues of Göthe, Jean Paul Richter, and Mozart, are noble productions. The new palace of King Louis of Bavaria, the Walhalla of Ratisbon, and, indeed, many of the finest art collections throughout Germany and in England, are enriched by his splendid works. At his death he bequeathed his studio, together with models of his most important works, to the Fine Arts Academy of Munich; and in the same city there is a street named in his honour.

Born at Munich, 1802; died there, 1848.

SCHWARTZ, BERTHOLD, shwartz, a German monk, who is said to have been of the order of the Cordeliers. According to one statement he was the discoverer of gunpowder, which he obtained while making some experiments with sulphur, charcoal, and saltpetre. Another account gives to Roger Bacon the discovery; but the compound appears, in reality, to have been known at a more remote date. A monument to his memory was erected at Freiburg, 1853.

Died 1384.

SCHWARTZ, CHRISTIAN FRIEDRICH, a Prussian missionary, who studied at Halle, and joined the Danish mission at Tranquebar, in 1750. He laboured altogether for nearly half a century zealously in the conversion of the Hindoos to Christianity. He earned and received the warm support of the British and of the native princes throughout his honourable career, and at his death the East-India directors erected a monument to his memory in St. Mary's Church, at Madras.

Born in Brandenburg, 1726; died in the East Indies, 1798.

SCHWARTZBURG, shwartz'-boorg, a German historical family, founded about the middle of the 12th century. The two great modern branches are descended from Count Günther, who lived in the 16th century.

SCHWARTZBURG-RUDOLSTADT, a small principality of Germany, bounded E. of Saxe-Weimar, Allenburg, and Meiningen, and with a small detached portion in Prussian Saxony. The surface is hilly, being traversed by spurs of the Thuringerwald; but there are fertile valleys, and the scenery is very attractive. The larger portion is known as Rudolstadt, the other as Frankenhausen.

Rivers.—The Schwarza, Ilm, and Saale.
Area.—341 square miles.
Pop.—87,000.
Constitution.—For all legislative measures the prince has to obtain the consent of a chamber of representatives of 16 members, three of whom are elected by the nobility, five by the inhabitants of towns, and eight by the rural population. The deputies meet every three years, and their mandate expires at the end of two sessions.

SCHWARZBURG-SONDERSHAUSEN, shwartz'-boorg, a principality of Germany, partly surrounded by the Prussian province of Saxony. It is divided into two parts, Sondershausen and Arnstadt, the former being fertile and well cultivated, the latter mountainous. The manufacturing districts are chiefly in the Arnstadt.

Rivers.—The Helbe and Wipper.
Area.—311 square miles.
Pop.—72,300.
Constitution.—There is a diet of 15 members, 5 of whom are appointed by the prince, 5 nominated by certain highly-taxed land-owners and others, and 5 elected by the inhabitants in general. The sole executive and part of the legislative power is in the hands of the prince, who exercises his authority through a government divided into three departments.

SCHWARZENBERG, ADAM, Count von, shwartz'-en-bairg, prime minister of the elector Georg Wilhelm of Brandenburg. In the Thirty Years' War he adhered with great determination to Austria against the Protestant league, to the great injury of the country. On the accession of Frederick William, "the Great Elector," he was deprived of his power, and imprisoned in the fortress of Spandau, where he died.

Born 1587; died 1641.

SCHWARZENBERG, KARL PHILIPP, Prince von, an Austrian general, whose signal services in the campaigns against the Turks in 1789, and in the subsequent engagements with the armies of the French republic, gained for him, in 1797, the rank of major-general. In 1799 he raised a regiment of Hulans at his own expense, and greatly distinguished himself at Alm. In 1808 he was ambassador to Russia. When Napoleon I. invaded Russia, in 1812, he commanded the auxiliary force of Austria, then an ally of France. At the especial request of Napoleon he was raised to the rank of field-marshal. Shortly afterwards he was appointed to the command-in-chief of the armies allied against Napoleon, and was present at the battle of Leipzic, where the French army was almost annihilated. In 1814 he entered France, and marched into Paris, upon the capitulation of the city by Marmont. His subsequent career was less active; but he was loaded with honours by the emperor of Austria, made president of the imperial council, and received a grant of land in Hungary.

Born at Vienna, 1771; died 1820.

SCHWARZENBERG, FELIX LUDWIG JOHANN FRIEDRICH, Austrian statesman, nephew of the preceding. He was employed on several diplomatic missions, and while in London in 1830 made himself notorious by eloping with Lady Ellenborough. He served with distinction in the Austro-Italian war of 1848, and after the suppression of the revolution in Vienna was made prime minister. He died of apoplexy.

Born in Bohemia, 1800; died at Vienna, 1852.

SCHWARZWALD. (See BLACK FOREST.)

SCHWATZ, shwaz a town of the Austrian states, in Tyrol, on the right bank of the Inn, 16 miles N.E. of Innsbruck. In the neighbourhood are mines of copper and silver. Pop. 4,800.

SCHWEDT, shwet, a town of Prussia, province of Brandenburg, on the Oder, 31 miles S. of Stettin. It has a royal palace and several churches. Manf. Tobacco, leather, soap, and starch. Pop. 9,200.

SCHWEIDNITZ, shwide'-nitz, a fortified town of Prussia, and province of Silesia, on the left bank of the Weistritz, 30 miles S.W. of Breslau. Manf. Woollen and cotton goods, leather, and agricultural implements. There are well-attended fairs for corn, cattle, and yarn. Pop. 22,202.

SCHWEINFURT, shwine'-foort, a town of Bavaria, in Lower Franconia, on the Main, 29 miles N.E. of Wurzburg. It has several churches, a gymnasium, and a high school, founded by Gustavus Adolphus, king of Sweden. Manf. Chemicals and dyeing materials. Large cattle and wool markets are held. Pop. 12,601.

SCHWELM, shvelm, a town of Prussia, province of Westphalia, on the Schwelm, 32 miles S.W. of Arnsberg. Manf. Linen, cotton, ribbons, iron and steel, and metal wares. Pop. 5,500.

SCHWENCKFELD, KASPAR VON, shvenk'-felt, a German divine, who founded a sect which still exists in small numbers in Silesia. He was one of the first followers of Luther, but subsequently separated from him, and commenced preaching some entirely new doctrines. He declared that the Scriptures were not to be held as inspired, and that mankind should await without discussion until the true revelations should emanate from heaven. He likewise wrote in favour of the reuniting of the Roman Catholics and the followers of the reformed doctrines. He wrote upwards of eighty dissertations upon theology.

Born in Silesia, 1490; died at Ulm, 1561.

SCHWERIN, shvee'-rin, capital of the grand duchy of Mecklenburg-Schwerin, in the north of Germany, on the west shore of the Lake of Schwerin, 35 miles S.E. of Lubeck. It is divided into an old and new town, and a suburb, and has a grand ducal palace on an island in the lake, and a very fine Gothic cathedral. Manf. Woollen cloths, tobacco, and iron. Pop. 32,031.

SCHWERIN, or SCHWIERZYNA, a town of Prussia, province of Posen, at the confluence of the Obra with the Wartha, 60 miles N.W. of Posen. It has both Lutheran and Catholic churches. Manf. Woollen goods, leather, and tiles. Pop. 6,500.

SCHWERIN, CHRISTOPHER, Count, a general and field-marshal in the Prussian service. He entered the army at an early age, and distinguished himself on many occasions. In 1741 he gained the battle of Molwitz at the moment when the Prussians thought themselves lost. The king of Prussia erected a statue to his honour, as did the emperor of Germany a monument on the spot where he was slain.

Born 1684; killed at the battle of Prague, 1757.

SCHWIEBUS, shvee'-ai-boos, a town of Prussia, province of Brandenburg, on the Schwemme, 41 miles S.E. of Frankfort. Manf. Woollen cloths. Pop. 8,296.

SCHWYZ, or SCHWITZ, shwitze, a canton of Switzerland, between the Lake of Zurich and the Lake of Lucerne. It is nearly covered with mountains, including the whole mass of the Righi and the Rieselstock, 8,890 feet high, on the eastern frontier, except small tracts in the south-west and north-east, and the valley of the rivers. A very small portion is cultivated, and cattle-rearing is the principal occupation of the inhabitants. The capital is SCHWYZ.

Rivers.—The Aa, Muotta, and Sihl.
Area.—338 square miles.
Pop.—51,235, with a few exceptions, Roman Catholics.
History.—This was one of the three original cantons which formed the nucleus of the Swiss Confederation in 1307, and gave the name to the whole country of which it formed a part. (See SWITZERLAND.)

SCHWYZ, capital of the above canton, 16 miles E. of Lucerne. There are a very handsome church erected in 1774, a Dominican and a Capuchin convent, and an arsenal containing military trophies. Pop. 5,800.

SCIACCA, or XACCA, shak'-ka, a seaport on the south-west coast of Sicily, province of Girgenti, in the Val di Mazzara, 30 miles N.W. of Girgenti. It is defended by the castle of Luna, and has a fine cathedal, churches, and convents. There are hot-springs, around which are grottoes outside the walls. Grain is largely exported. Pop. 22,097.

SCICLI, shé'-kle, a town of the island of Sicily, province of Siracusa, 6 miles from Modica. Manf. Woollen goods. Pop. 12,000.

SCILLY ISLANDS, sil'-le, a group situate at the western extremity of the English Channel, about 30 miles westward of the Land's End, and included in, or belonging to, the county of Cornwall. They consist of about 40 islets and rocks, the principal of the former being St. Mary's (the largest, having an area of 2½ square miles), Tresco, St. Martin's, St. Agnes, and Bryhher, with a mild and healthy climate. Barley, peas, oats, and especially potatoes, with a little wheat, are cultivated. The inhabitants are chiefly engaged in agriculture, in fishing, and in the manufacture of kelp. St. Mary's island is the largest, the most important, and best cultivated of the whole group. It possesses three towns (Hugh Town being the chief), a pier, a garrison, custom-house, and other public buildings. At Tresco are the remains of an ancient abbey, and the ruins of a camp and castle built by the Parliamentarians in the civil war of the 17th century. On St. Agnes island is a lighthouse. Pop. 2,100.—These islands are the Cassiterides and Siluræ Insulæ of the Greek and Roman geographers.

SCILLY ISLANDS, a group in the Pacific. Lat. 16° 28′ S. Lon. 156° 10′ W.

SCINDE. (See SINDE.)

SCINDIA'S DOMINION. (See GWALIOR.)

SCIO, or CHIOS, shé'-o an island of the Ægean Sea, belonging to Turkey, at the entrance to the Gulf of Smyrna, off the coast of Asia Minor. It is 32 miles long and 18 miles in greatest breadth. Mountainous in the north, and extremely fertile. Silk, wool, gum-mastic, cheese, and figs are the principal products. The capital is SCIO. Area, 400 sq. m. Pop. Archipelago, 500,000. The island was anciently one of the 12 Ionian States. It was taken by the Greeks in 1346, and by the Turks in 1566. In the Greek insurrection in 1822, the island was the scene of a horrible massacre by the Turks, 25,000 persons being killed, and 45,000 sold as slaves. A destructive earthquake causing the loss of more than 5,000 lives, occurred in the spring of 1881.

SCIO, capital of the above island, on the east coast, with a harbour, defended by a castle. Manf. Velvet and other textile fabrics. Pop. 25,000.

SCIOPPIUS, KASPAR, si-op'-pi-us, a learned German philologist (real name Schoppe), who studied at Heidelberg and other universities, and travelled in Italy, Bohemia, Poland, and Holland. Having renounced Protestantism for Roman Catholicism, he was decorated by the pope, and received a pension and residence in the Vatican, in return for which he furiously attacked his co-religionists. Among his earliest productions was an abusive satire on the pretensions of Joseph Scaliger to be considered of noble descent, and he attacked Henry IV. of France, and James I. of England, with great asperity. He recommended the Catholic powers to exterminate the Protestants, for which advice the emperor of Germany received him with great favour at Vienna, and raised him to the dignity of Count Palatine. About 1614, while staying at Madrid, he was beaten by the servants of the English ambassador, Lord Digby, for his libels on the king of England, and in consequence fled the country. At the close of his life he employed himself in explaining the Apocalypse. His learning was extensive and profound, and he produced more than a hundred works upon the authors of antiquity.

Born at Neumark, in the Palatinate, 1576; died at Padua, 1649.

SCIOTO, si-o'-to, a river of the United States, rising in the state of Ohio, and, after a course of 200 miles, falling into the Ohio at Portsmouth. It is navigable for 130 miles, and has the Whetstone for its principal affluent.

SCIOTO, a county of Ohio, United States Area, 500 square miles. Pop. 33,500. The capital is Portsmouth.

SCIPIO, PUBLIUS CORNELIUS, sip'-i-o, surnamed Africanus, a Roman general. He is said to have made his first campaign at the age of 17, under his father, and to have saved his parent's life in the battle of Ticinus, B.C. 218. After the battle of Cannæ, he prevented the Roman officers from abandoning their country as they had intended, out of despair of saving it. Scipio was elected ædile at the age of 21. His father and uncle having fallen in battle, he obtained the command in Spain, where he defeated the enemy and took New Carthage. He put an end to the war in that country by a decisive battle, and then crossed over into Africa, where he defeated Hasdrubal and Syphax, B.C. 203. He afterwards gained the battle of Zama, which victory produced peace between Rome and Carthage. Scipio obtained a triumph and the appellation of Africanus for these brilliant services. He was also twice honoured with the consular dignity; but envy of his glory brought upon him a charge of taking bribes. Scipio appeared before the people; and saved himself by recalling to them his victory at Zama. The affair, however, was again brought before the tribunes; but he had retired to his villa near Liternum, where he continued to reside until his death. The virtues and generosity of Scipio, especially to his captives, were as distinguished as his valour and prudence.

Born 235 B.C.; died about 183 B.C.

SCIPIO, LUCIUS CORNELIUS, surnamed ASIATICUS, was brother of the preceding, with whom he served in Spain and Africa. In reward of his services, he obtained the consulate, B.C. 190. He afterwards conducted the war in Asia against Antiochus, over whom he gained a great victory on the plains of Magnesia. For this he was honoured with a triumph and the appellation of Asiaticus. Cato the censor, however, preferred a charge against him of peculation, and his estates were sold to pay the supposed debt he owed to the republic.

Lived in the 2nd century B.C.

SCIPIO, PUBLIUS ÆMILIANUS, was the son of Æmilius Paulus, and was adopted by the son of Scipio Africanus, whom he accompanied on his expedition to Macedon, and he afterwards served in Spain. He was called Africanus the Younger, in consequence of his victories over the Carthaginians. He served the office of ædile, and afterwards of consul, in which capacity he laid siege to, and succeeded in taking Carthage, B.C. 146, which, according to a decree of the senate, was razed to the ground. For this he was chosen consul a second time, and took Numantia, B.C. 133, whence he acquired the surname of Numantinus. He was assassinated in his bed, as is supposed by the direction of the triumvirs, who suspected him of aspiring to the dictatorship.

Born 185 B.C.; died 129 B.C.

SCLAVONIA. (See SLAVONIA.)

SCONE, skoon, a village of Scotland, in Perthshire, on the left bank of the Tay, 2 miles from Perth. It is noted for its palace, anciently the residence of the Scots kings, and the abbey, the place of their coronation. The abbey was destroyed by the adherents of the Lords of the Congregation in 1559. Its famous stone, upon which the ancient Scottish kings were crowned, is now in Westminster Abbey.

SCOPAS, sko'-pas, an architect and sculptor of the isle of Paros, who executed some of the basreliefs in the famous mausoleum for Artemisia, in honour of her husband, built the temple of Athena, at Tegea, in the Peloponnesus, and the famous group of sculpture representing Achilles conducted by the divinities of the sea, which formerly stood in the Flaminian circus, Rome.

Lived in the 4th century B.C.

SCOPIA, or USKUP, sko'-pe-a, a town of European Turkey, in Roumelia, 115 miles from Salonica. It contains several mosques, has a fortified castle, an aqueduct, and other remains of antiquity. Pop. 10,000.

SCORESBY, REV. WILLIAM, skors'-be, an eminent Arctic navigator, the son of a whaling captain of great experience and ability, under whom he acquired his earliest knowledge of nautical matters. He joined his father's vessel in his 10th year. In 1820, after having made seventeen whaling voyages, he produced a most valuable work, entitled, "An Account of the Arctic Regions, with a History and Description of the Northern Whale Fishery." Two years later he published a second remarkable work, entitled, "Journal of a Voyage to the Northern Whale Fishery, including Researches and Discoveries on the Eastern Coast of West Greenland." He quitted the service at that time, and was shortly afterwards elected a fellow of the Royal Societies of London and Edinburgh. Always deeply impressed with a sense of religious duty, he next resolved to qualify himself for holy orders. He entered as student of Queen's College, Cambridge; and, after being ordained, became chaplain of the mariners' church at Liverpool. He subsequently removed to a living at Exeter; but at a later period he became vicar of Bradford, in Yorkshire. He wrote several valuable papers upon practical magnetism and its relations to navigation, for the Transactions of the Royal Society of Edinburgh; and wrote also on the magnetism of iron ships. Some of his other works were, "Memorials of the Sea," "Discourses to Seamen," "Sabbaths in the Arctic Regions," and "Records of the Adventurous Life of the late William Scoresby." His great love for scientific research, particularly in the question of the magnetism of iron ships, induced him to make a voyage to Australia in the Royal Charter, from which he returned in 1856.

Born 1790; died at Torquay, 1857.

SCOT, or SCOTT, REGINALD, skot, a writer, well known for his opposition to the belief in witchcraft. He studied at Oxford, and in 1581 published his famous "Discovery of Witchcraft," in opposition to which James I. wrote his "Dæmonology." Other writers opposed him and his book was burned by the common hangman.

Born in Kent, early in the 16th century; died 1599.

SCOTLAND, skot'-land, the northern portion of Great Britain, bounded on the W. by the Atlantic Ocean, N. by part of the North Atlantic Ocean, E. by the German Ocean, S. E. by England, S. by the Solway Firth, and S.W. by that part of the Irish Sea called the North Channel. The shape is very irregular. On the east are two large peninsulas,—one of which, the county of Aberdeen, is the most eastern portion; and the other, farther north, formed by Sutherland and Caithness, separated by the Pentland Firth from the ORKNEY Islands. From the north-eastern point of the peninsula, Duncansby Head, the coast line runs due west for about 75 miles to Cape Wrath, and then turns abruptly to the south. The western coast is very irregular, with extensive inlets of the sea and bordered by numerous islands, some of great size and separated by narrow channels from the mainland, and farther to the west, separated by broad channels known as North Minch and Little Minch, are the Hebrides, or Western Isles. A long narrow peninsula, Cantyre, extends southward to within about 12 miles of the north-eastern coast of Ireland, from which it is divided by the North Channel. The entire coast line is at least 2,500 miles in length, generally bold and rocky, except in the north-east along the shores of the Moray Firth, and in the south along the Solway Firth, where are low and sandy beaches. The inlets on the eastern coast are known as firths, or friths, and on the western (with the exception of the Firth of Clyde and the Firth of Lorne) as lochs. In the south, the Solway Firth is between Scotland and the English county of Cumberland. The principal inlets (proceeding from the English boundary northward) are—on the east coast, the Firth of Forth, the Firth of Tay, the large Moray Firth (in which are the smaller inlets, Cromarty and Inverness Firths), and Dornoch Firth; on the south coast, Solway Firth, Wigtown and Luce Bays; on the west, the great Firth of Clyde, Loch Fyne, Loch Linnhe, Loch Nevis, Loch Carron, Loch Torridon, Loch Ewe, Loch Broom and several smaller inlets farther north. Most of these firths and lochs are the estuaries of considerable rivers. The channels separating the islands from the mainland are known as sounds, the principal being Kilbrennan, between the isle of Arran on the east and the peninsula of Cantyre on the west; the Sound of Jura, between the island of that name and Argyleshire; the Sound of Mull, to the north east of the island, and the Sound of Sleat between the island of Skye, and the mainland portion of the county of Inverness. The more prominent capes are, on the eastern coast, St. Abb's Head, Fife Ness, Buchan Ness, Kinnaird Head, Tarbut Ness, and Duncansby Head; on the north coast, Dunnet Head and Cape Wrath; on the west (from south to north) Burrow Head, the Mull of Galloway, the Mull of Cantyre, Ardnamurchan Point, and, in the far north, Stoir Point. The greatest length of the mainland is 287 miles between Dunnet Head in the north and the Mull of Galloway, in the south. The breadth varies considerably, from 155 miles between the most westerly part of Ross and Buchan Ness, in the county of Aberdeen, the most easterly point of Scotland, to 45 miles between Loch Broom and Dornoch Firth. Scotland is popularly separated into the two great divisions of the Highlands and the Lowlands, but more correctly into the Northern, the Middle, and the Southern. The first, or Northern division, is cut off from the Middle by the great mountain groups of the Grampians. The second, or Middle division, is separated from the Southern by the firths of Forth and Clyde, and the southern boundary of Stirlingshire. The Northern division consists generally of an assemblage of vast mountains including the Grampians, here and there intersected by fertile valleys, chiefly towards the south and east coasts. A portion of them is clothed with green herbage, more especially where sheep-farming prevails; but, in general, they are covered with heath, growing upon peat, rock, or gravel; and they frequently terminate in mountain-caps of solid rock, or in vast heaps or cairns of bare and weather-beaten stones. The Middle division is also mountainous; but there are some low-lying and fertile districts. The parts of Argyleshire included in this district, are rugged, mountainous, and deeply indented by inlets of the ocean. In these two divisions, which comprehend more than two-thirds of Scotland, the arable ground consists of but a small proportion to the mountainous regions, and there are extensive moors and deer-forests. On the eastern coast, however, the proportion of the cultivated to the uncultivated land is much greater. In the Southern division every variety of aspect is found: verdant plains, watered by copious streams, and covered with innumerable cattle; gently-rising hills and valleys, fertile in corn, waving with wood and interspersed with meadows; lofty mountains, craggy rocks, deep narrow dells, and tumbling torrents; nor are there wanting as a contrast, barren moors and wild uncultivated heaths. The extensive and fruitful valley, or "strath," of Strathmore, stretches from Stirling to Stonehaven, on the east coast. The climate is extremely variable, but the cold in winter is not so intense, nor the heat in summer so great, as in similar latitudes on the continent; and although the range of the thermometer is considerable, it seldom maintains an extreme for any length of time. In no part of the United Kingdom is agriculture carried to greater perfection than on the fertile lowland districts of Scotland (not more, however, than about one-third of the entire surface). The principal crops are wheat, rye, barley, oats, pease, beans, hay, potatoes, turnips, flax and hemp, and, in general, all the crops which are raised in the southern part of the island. Horticulture has made rapid progress in every part. Apples and other fruits are produced in abundance. Many extensive tracts of waste land have been planted with wood, and the alga marina, or sea-weed, which grows in great luxuriance on the rocky coasts, constitutes a valuable article of commerce from the burning of it into kelp.

Mountains.—The Grampians are the loftiest mountains in Great Britain, extending in irregular groups across the country from near the head of Loch Linnhe in the west, to the county of Kincardine in the east, and throwing out branches in a north-westerly direction into the county of Inverness, and to the south as far as Ben Lomond in the county of Stirling. These mountains are generally sterile, with bare, rocky summits; some are of a rounded form, others have irregularly shaped peaks with precipitous ravines, in some instances more than 1,000 feet in sheer descent. The loftiest summit is that of Ben Nevis, 4,406 feet; Ben Muiedhui, Cairngorm, and Cairntoul exceed 4,000 feet, an altitude nearly approached by Ben Avon, Ben More, Ben Lawers, and Ben Cruachan, and Schiehallion, Ben Voirioch, Ben Lomond, and Bannoch are considerably over 3,000 feet in height. Farther north another mountain range traverses the counties of Inverness, Ross, and Sutherland, Ben Slioch, 4,000 feet, Ben Dearig, 3,550, and Ben Wyvis, 3,420 feet, being amongst the loftiest summits. In Sutherlandshire the altitudes somewhat decrease as the mountains approach the coast, but there are several summits about 3,000 feet high. In the middle region are ranges of considerable elevation, including the Kilpatrick and Campsie Hills, in the counties of Dumbarton and Stirling; the Ochil Hills, extending from Perthshire into Fifeshire, and the Sidlaw Hills, in a direction nearly parallel to the others, across the south of Forfarshire. In the southern division are the Lammermoor and Pentland Hills, and many isolated mountain masses, with altitudes of from 2,000 to 2,700 feet. The Cheviot Hills, form a portion of the boundary between Scotland and England. (See CHEVIOTS.)

Rivers.—In the Northern division, the principal are the Beauly, Naver, Thurso, &c.; in the Middle division, the Spey, the Dee, the Don, and the North and the South

Esk: about 30 miles farther south is the Tay. In the Southern district are the Tweed and the Forth, discharging into the North Sea, the Clyde, into the Firth of Clyde, and the numerous rivers which empty themselves into the Irish Sea and the Solway Firth; the Ayr, the Girvan, the Southern Dee, the Nith, the Annan, and the Liddal.

Lakes or Lochs.—Numerous and extensive. The principal are Loch Lomond (the largest in Great Britain), Awe, Ness, Shin, Maree, Tay, Erich, Shiel, Lochy, and Katrine. The more important of these rivers and lakes, and the many beautiful waterfalls, are noticed under the headings of the various counties.

Islands.—The principal groups and separate islands belonging to Scotland are the Orkneys and Shetlands to the north-east; the Hebrides, St. Kilda, Skye, Ramsay, Rum, Coll, Tiree, Mull, Colonsay, Jura, and Islay, off the west coast, and Arran at the entrance of the Firth of Clyde. (See separate headings.)

Minerals.—Limestone, iron ore, and lead are abundant. Copper has been discovered in many places. The other metallic substances are, cobalt, bismuth, manganese, wolfram, plumbago, and mercury; the latter in very small quantities. Coal is abundant in the Southern and Middle districts. Limestone, freestone, or sandstone, and slate, are found in every district. Marbles are also found. Most of the gems and precious stones have been found among the mountains of Scotland, the diamond excepted. Jasper is found in great variety, and rock-crystal, commonly denominated cairn-gorm, from the mountain of that name in Banffshire. Chalcedony is also found, and gold is known to exist in Sutherlandshire.

Area.—30,685 square miles.

Pop.—3,734,441.

Divisions.—There are 33 counties, generally grouped into 8 geographical divisions:—

Northern—Shetland, Orkney, Caithness, Sutherland.

North-Western—Ross and Cromarty, Inverness.

North-Eastern—Nairn, Elgin, Banff, Aberdeen, Kincardine.

East-Midland—Forfar, Perth, Fife, Kinross, Clackmannan.

West-Midland—Stirling, Dumbarton, Argyle, Bute.

South-Western—Renfrew, Ayr, Lanark.

South-Eastern—Linlithgow, Edinburgh, Haddington, Berwick, Peebles, Selkirk.

Southern—Roxburgh, Dumfries, Kirkcudbright, Wigtown.

Chief Towns.—The capital is Edinburgh. The chief commercial and manufacturing towns are Glasgow, Aberdeen, Dundee, Dunfermline, Galashiels, Greenock, Inverness, Kilmarnock, Leith, Paisley, Perth, Peterhead, and Stirling. (See separate headings.)

Manf. and Industrial Occupations.—For manufactures see chief towns under respective headings. The different fisheries have been prosecuted with great industry and success. The whale-fishery to Davis' Straits and Greenland employs a great number of ships, and the white fishery is also prosecuted with great industry along the Moray Firth, Shetland, and the Western Islands, which bring profitable returns. The herring-fishery is carried on along the whole coast of the kingdom, as also the salmon-fishery in all the different rivers.

Religion and Education.—Presbyterianism was established by act of parliament, in 1696, and afterwards secured in the treaty of Union. The system is founded on a parity of ecclesiastical authority among all its presbyters, excluding all pre-eminence of order, all its ministers being held equal in rank and power. It is also exceedingly simple in its forms. In 1843, a large number of ministers, followed by their congregations, seceded and established the Free Church. There is a Scottish Episcopalian Church, with seven dioceses, the bishops being elected by the clergy and representatives of the laity. There are Catholic churches in the principal towns, and in the northern parts this religion has not been entirely superseded by the Reformation. An act, passed in the reign of William and Mary, ordained that there should be a school and a schoolmaster in every parish, and a Scotch Education Act, passed in 1872, enforces the election of a school-board in every parish and burgh. These establishments, in which are taught reading, writing, arithmetic, and also Latin and Greek, have been attended with the happiest results. There are four universities; namely, at Edinburgh, St. Andrews, Glasgow, and Aberdeen, and there are various colleges in connection with the Episcopalian, Free Church, and other churches.

Parliamentary Representation.—Scotland elects 16 representative peers for each parliament, and returns 60 members to the House of Commons, 33 for counties and the remainder for burghs.

History.—The earliest inhabitants were known as Picts, the Scoti, or Scots, coming from Ireland in the 5th century. The name of Scotland was not given to the country until the 10th century. Scotland, then known as Caledonia, was first visited by the Roman troops under Agricola, who penetrated to the foot of the Grampian Mountains, but were repulsed and driven southwards. It was afterwards exposed to the ravages of the Norwegians and Danes, with whom many bloody battles were fought. Various contests were also maintained with the kings of England. (See EDWARD I. and II., BALIOL, and BRUCE.) Robert Bruce, however, secured the independence of the country and his title to the throne, by the decisive battle of Bannockburn, in 1314. In 1603, James VI. of Scotland, son of Mary, Queen of Scots, and great grandson of the Princess Margaret, daughter of Henry VII. of England, ascended the throne of England, vacant by the death of Queen Elizabeth. In the reign of Charles I. a bitter contest broke out between the king, who was determined to establish episcopacy, and the Presbyterians, who allied themselves in a "solemn league and covenant" with the English Puritans, and the contest was renewed with terrible energy in the reigns of Charles II. and James II. In 1707 the Act of Union was passed, although strongly opposed by a majority of the people. The succession of the house of Hanover to the throne of Great Britain was considered an infraction of the rights of the Stewarts, and in 1715 and 1745, there was open rebellion in favour of the Pretender, finally suppressed by the battle of Culloden.

SCOTLAND, a county of Missouri, United States. Area, 400 square miles. Pop. 12,508. The capital is Memphis.

SCOTT, GEORGE GILBERT, Sir, an eminent modern architect, who, at the conclusion of his apprenticeship, entered into partnership with Mr. Moffatt, a fellow-pupil. While in partnership, Mr. Scott designed, among other works, the beautiful cross at Oxford known as the "Martyrs' Memorial;" and the handsome parish church at Camberwell. In 1845 he quitted Mr. Moffatt, and soon afterwards carried off, in competition with the best architects in Europe, the first prize for erecting the church of St. Nicholas at Hamburg. In 1855 he again defeated the leading architects, both English and continental, in the design for the Hôtel-de-Ville of the same city. These, and many other works executed in England, placed him in the foremost rank as a Gothic architect. His principal works were, the restoration of the choir of Ely Cathedral; the new chapel, library, and other buildings at Exeter College, Oxford; and the restoration of Hereford cathedral and St. Michael's church, Cornhill. In 1849 he became architect to the dean and chapter of Westminster Abbey, and was employed in designing the new abbey gate-house, and in making some restorations and improvements. He became an associate of the Royal Academy in 1855, a Royal Academician in 1860, and, in 1859, was appointed architect to the new Foreign Office, in conjunction with Mr. Digby Wyatt. He has been extensively employed in the restoration and erection of Gothic churches, designed the splendid metropolitan terminus of the Midland railway station, and has written several pamphlets on Gothic architecture. On the completion of the Prince Consort Memorial in Hyde Park, designed by him, he was knighted.

Born near Buckingham, 1811, died 1878.

SCOTT, JOHN. (See ELDON, earl of.)

SCOTT, WILLIAM. (See STOWELL, lord.)

SCOTT, SIR MICHAEL, a Scottish scholar and philosopher, whose personal history is very obscure. His skill in chemistry and mathematics caused him to be regarded as a magician. Fragments of his works on natural history, mathematics, and philosophy remain. Dante speaks of him as a magician, in the "Inferno," and frequent allusion is made to him by Boccaccio and other Italian writers. Scottish legend asserts that he was buried at Melrose, and Walter Scott made considerable use of the legend in "The Lay of the Last Minstrel."

Lived in the 13th century.

SCOTT, SIR WALTER, an illustrious Scotch author. He was the fourth son of a writer to the signet in Edinburgh, and descended from the Scotts of Harden, an old border family connected with the house of Buccleuch. In his earliest years he was afflicted with more than the ordinary ailments of childhood. When scarcely two years of age, his right leg was found to have become suddenly powerless, and the previously healthy boy was pronounced as lame for life. In his eighth year he appeared to have gained an accession of strength, and was sent to the High School of Edinburgh; but, in a few months, he was once more prostrated upon a sick couch. His naturally strong constitution triumphed over this, almost the last attack made upon it by disease, and he went for three years to the university of Edinburgh. Neither there nor at school did he distinguish himself as a student, and in 1786, he was apprenticed to his father. This took place when he was in his 15th year; but the youthful invalid had, meanwhile, been accumulating knowledge and arranging ideas, had been feeding an imagination stimulated by sickness, with stores which, though not likely ever to be utilized in his practice as a lawyer, were to prove of the most essential service to him in his career as an author. His grandfather at Sandy Knowe, on the Tweed, and a maiden aunt, who for a time had charge of him, were able to narrate to him those legendary tales upon which his mind longed to dwell. In his second illness, too, he was permitted to devour the contents of a circulating library, rich "in the romances of chivalry and the ponderous folios of Cyrus and Cassandra, down to the most approved works of modern times;" and he afterwards said, "I believe I read all the romances, old plays, and epic poetry, in that formidable collection." As he grew older and stronger, he took long rambles on foot or on horseback through the Highland and border counties, during which he was continually making additions to his stores of legendary tales, or marking character, or observing nature. He made acquaintance with the "Reliques of Ancient Poetry," while upon a visit to an uncle who resided near Kelso. The perusal of this, and the kindred works of Herd and Evans, led him towards philological and antiquarian research, and while attending the lectures of Dugald Stewart, in 1790, upon moral philosophy, he wrote an essay upon the "Manners and Customs of the Northern Nations of Europe," which, together with others on the origin of the Feudal System, the Scandinavian Mythology, and the authenticity of Ossian's Poems, subsequently composed, he read to the Speculative Society in 1792-3. He was called to the bar in 1792; in 1799 he received the appointment of sheriff of Selkirkshire, and, in 1806, he became one of the principal clerks of the Court of Session. To these sources of income were added a small property inherited from an uncle, and a moderate fortune received with his wife, Miss Charlotte Carpenter, whom he married in 1797.* He had long been addicted to verse-making, and had published, in 1796, a translation of Bürger's "Leonora" and the "Wild Huntsman," which marked the commencement of the poetical or first phase of his literary career. In 1799, Göthe's "Götz of Berlichingen," the ballad of "Glenfinlas," and "The Eve of St. John," followed; and when, in 1805, he gave to the public the "Lay of the Last Minstrel," he became the greatest poetical favourite of the day. "Marmion," the "Lady of the Lake," "Don Roderick," "Rokeby," "The Lord of the Isles," and the "Bridal of Triermain," followed in rapid succession. The comparative failure of the two last works, which were published anonymously, and the great popularity of Byron, seems to have decided Scott to abandon verse for prose. The second great epoch of his literary life may be said to have commenced with the anonymous publication of "Waverley," in 1814. It had been written for several years, but had remained unprinted in the author's desk. In four years it had for successors "Guy Mannering," the "Antiquary," the "Black Dwarf," "Old Mortality," "Rob Roy," and the "Heart of Mid-Lothian." His name was not placed upon these productions; but, although the secret of their authorship was well kept by his printer and publisher, and several persons in their employ, the public began to regard Scott, the poet, as the "Great Unknown." He declined to admit the authorship, and even denied it when directly questioned by George IV., on the occasion of his visit to Edinburgh in 1822. He afterwards justified this denial on the ground that the king had no right to take advantage of his rank to extort a secret. The public announcement that Scott and "the author of Waverley" were identical was made at the dinner of the Theatrical Fund, at Edinburgh in February, 1827, at which Scott was present. In addition to his professional and literary occupation, he was in partnership with Ballantyne, his printer, and had transactions with Constable, the Edinburgh publisher. He was thus connected with many publications, either as editor or contributor. He assisted to establish the "Quarterly Review;" he wrote the life of Dryden and of Swift, the biographical and critical prefaces to a collection of English novelists, and furnished notes to Sadler's Correspondence, and works of a kindred style. In this way he was engaged between the years 1796—1826. His novels and poems had made him famous, and had, moreover, raised him to apparent affluence, and he entertained a great ambition to become a landed proprietor and possessor of a fine estate which he might transmit to his posterity. In the presumption of his fertile genius, he became the proprietor of Abbotsford, where, in the intervals of literary composition, he dispensed the hospitalities of a prince. In brief, the interval 1820-26 may be described as one gorgeous dream. But the commercial crisis of the latter year made bankrupts of Constable & Co. and Ballantyne & Co. "A state of affairs," according to the Scotch term, was drawn up, and, in consequence of his connection with those firms, he was found to be liable for a sum of about £147,000. Yet he was undaunted before this fearful load of debt. "Gentlemen," he said to his creditors, "time and I against any two. Let me take this good ally into my company, and I believe I shall be able to pay you every farthing." He gave up all his property, proposed to lodge the receipts of his literary labours in the hands of trustees for the payment of his creditors, retired into modest lodgings in Edinburgh, and went resolutely to work to wipe off his liabilities. "The History of Napoleon," "The Letters on Demonology and Witchcraft," and other works, were produced to aid the good cause he had at heart, and in two years he had earned £40,000 for his creditors, and before his death, he had still farther materially decreased the load of debt, and, after that unhappy event, the profits of his writings wiped away the whole. Four years of this terrible strain upon brain and body produced the inevitable result. In 1830 he was stricken with paralysis. Government placed a frigate at his disposal, in order that he might make a voyage to Italy, and probably derive benefit from the climate. But it was too late, and he returned to die. He was buried in the old abbey of Dryburgh. As a picturesque and dramatic novelist, with a marvellous command of pathos and humour, and power of describing heroic and chivalrous characters, he is unrivalled among writers of fiction, and as a narrative poet, with a brave gaiety of style, and a mastery of legendary lore, and the rapid and striking alternations of the ballad metre, he has had few equals. His purely historical works are of less value. As a man he was generous, large-hearted, and sincere, and his nobility of character, saved him from the vanity which, with a weaker moral nature, his wonderful success might have engendered.

Born at Edinburgh, 1771; died at Abbotsford, 1832.

SCOTT, WINFIELD, an American general. He was the son of a Scotch gentleman, who emigrated to America after the battle of Culloden. He was educated at William and Mary College, Virginia, for the law, but quitted that profession for a military career. In 1812 he fought against the English, and was taken prisoner at the battle of Queenstown, Canada. After obtaining his exchange, he signalised himself by taking Fort George, for which he was created general of brigade. Severely wounded at the battle of Niagara, in 1814, he, at the conclusion of the war, repaired to Europe for the recovery of his health; and while at Paris devoted himself to the study of French military tactics. Named commander-in-chief of the American army in 1841, he was engaged in 1846 in the war with Mexico, and, in a single campaign, defeated Santa Anna in several engagements, took Vera Cruz and Xalapa, and marching into the city of Mexico, compelled the enemy to sign a treaty of peace. Notwithstanding his brilliant services, General Scott was twice an unsuccessful candidate for the presidentship. At the outbreak of the dispute between the United States and the Secessionists, General Scott was appointed commander-in-chief of the Federalist forces, but in consequence of failing health, resigned office in 1861, and went to Europe.

Born at Petersburg, Virginia, 1786; died at West Point, 1866.

SCOTT, the name of 11 counties in the United States:—

ARKANSAS.—Area, 800 square miles. Pop. 9,174. The capital is Waldron.

ILLINOIS.—Area, 225 square miles. Pop. 11,000. The capital is Winchester.

SCOTUS, DUNS. (See DUNS, JOHN.)

SCOTUS, JOHN. (See ERIGENA.)

SCRANTON, skran'-ton, a city of Luzerne county, Pennsylvania, United States, on the left bank of the Lackawanna, 105 miles N.W. of Philadelphia. It is a great railroad centre, and one of the most rapidly increasing towns in America, the population having nearly quadrupled between 1860 and 1870. Manf. Iron, machinery, and gunpowder. Pop. 45,850, nearly half being foreigners.

SCRIBE, AUGUSTIN EUGENE, skreeb, a French dramatic author, who was the son of a silk mercer of Paris, and was designed for the legal profession, but quitted it for dramatic authorship. In 1811, he, in conjunction with Germain Delavigne, an old schoolfellow, produced his first piece, entitled "The Dervish," which was unsuccessful. A similarly unfortunate reception greeted several of his after-efforts; but the young playwright persevered undauntedly, and, in 1812, produced a drama, which was received with the greatest applause. From that time until his death he continued to compose plays and operatic libretti with a rapidity truly astonishing. His power of constructing plots, delineating character, and composing witty and pointed dialogue, appeared to be inexhaustible. He wrote about four hundred pieces of various kinds. He became a member of the French Academy in 1834.

Born at Paris, 1791; died 1861.

SCRIVEN, skriv'-en, a county of Georgia, United States. Area, 540 square miles. Pop. 12,786, about half being coloured. The capital is Sylvania.

SCRIVERIUS, PETER SCHRYVER, called in Latin, skri'-ver, a Dutch writer, who produced "Batavia Illustrata," the chronicles of Holland, Zealand, Utrecht, &c. He also published editions of Vegetius, and other writers on military affairs.

Born at Haerlem, 1576; died 1660.

SCUDERI, MADELEINE DE, a French romancist, who wrote a large number of works, which were once highly popular, notwithstanding their enormous length. The chief of these were, "Clelia," "Artamenes, or the Grand Cyrus," "Ibrahim, or the Illustrious Bassa." "Conversations and Discourses," "A Discourse on Glory," &c., which were quite the rage, and her reputation attracted the most eminent of her contemporaries to her salon. She was admitted a member of the academy of Ricovrati at Padua, and had pensions from cardinal Mazarin and Louis XIV. She lived to the advanced age of 94.

Born 1607; died 1701.

SCUTARI, or ISKANDERE, skoo'-ta-re, a large fortified town of European Turkey, in Albania, on the river Boyana, at the south-eastern extremity of Lake Scutari. Its position is very favourable for defence. The town consists of four quarters, and has several mosques and Greek and Roman Catholic churches, and is defended by two castles. Manf. Arms and cotton goods. There are shipbuilding yards for small vessels. Pop. 30,000, about half being Roman Catholics.

SCUTARI, or USKUDAR, a city of Asia Minor, on the Bosphorus, immediately opposite to Constantinople, of which it is considered a suburb. Its site, on the sides and summit of a hill, is one of the most beautiful imaginable. It has a palace and gardens belonging to the sultan, a college of dervishes, barracks, public baths, and extensive cemeteries, where the Turks of Constantinople wish to be buried, attaching an almost sacred reverence to the soil of Asia. There is an English cemetery, with a monument, by Marochetti, to the memory of the British soldiers who fell in the Crimean war, during which a great hospital, the scene of the labours of Florence Nightingale and her associates, was established here. There is a considerable trade, being the rendezvous for the caravans which come from the interior of Asia. Pop. 60,000.

SCYLAX, si'-lax, a geographer, mathematician, and musician of Caria, near Halicarnassus, who was employed by Darius, son of Hystaspes, in making discoveries in India. Some attribute to him the invention of geographical tables.

Lived in the 6th century B.C.

SCYLLA, sil'-la, a town of Southern Italy, province of Reggio Calabria, on the Strait of Messina, built partly on a famous rocky promontory, 200 feet high, which bears the same name. A considerable trade and an active fishery are carried on. Pop. 7,500.

SCYLLA, a daughter of Typhon, or of Phorcys, who, according to Homeric legend, was beloved by Glaucus, one of the deities of the sea, and was changed into a monster by the jealous Circe. This sudden metamorphosis so terrified her, that she threw herself into that part of the sea which separates the coast of Italy and Sicily, where she was changed into rocks, which continued to bear her name and which, as well as the whirlpool of Charybdis, on the coast of Sicily, were universally deemed very dangerous to navigators.

SCYROS, an island of the Ægean Sea.

SCYTHIA, sith'-e-a, the ancient name given to the territory north and east of the Black, Caspian, and Aral seas, of which little was actually known by the Greek geographers.

SEAHAM HARBOUR, se'-ham, a seaport of the county of Durham, 6 miles S. of Sunderland, with a good harbour, and there is railway communication with the collieries in the vicinity. Manf. Iron, bottles, and chemicals. Pop. 7,140.—A station on the North-Eastern railway.

SEALKOTE, seel'-kote, a town of British India, in the Punjab, near the left bank of the Chenab, 65 miles N.E. of Lahore. It acquired a sad notoriety at the outbreak of the Indian mutiny in 1857, for the massacres and cruelties perpetrated by the sepoys. Manf. Paper. Pop. 26,000.

SEARCY, seer'-se, a county of Arkansas, United States. Pop. 7,278. The capital is Marshall.

SEBA, ALBERT, seb'-a, a Dutch naturalist, who produced a beautifully-printed and illustrated work upon natural history, at Amsterdam, in 1734. The explanations are in Latin and French.

Born 1665; died 1736.

SEBASTIAN, DOM, se-bas'-ti-an, king of Portugal, was the posthumous son of the infante John, by a daughter of the emperor Charles V., and succeeded John III. in 1557, he being then only in his third year. He engaged in an unsuccessful war with the Moors in 1574, and in 1578 he went in person to assist Muley Mohammed, son of Abdalla, sultan of Morocco, against his uncle the rightful heir to the throne; but, in a battle fought at Alcazarquiver, near Tangier, Sebastian was slain; or, according to some accounts, he was accidentally drowned after the battle.

Born at Lisbon, 1554; died 1578.

SEBASTIAN DEL PIOMBO. (See PIOMBO SEBASTIAN DEL.)

SEBASTIAN, ST., a martyr of the early Church. Although a Christian, he served in the Roman army, concealing his faith in order that he might be enabled to assist and protect other Christians. He rose to high favour with the emperor Diocletian, and then he announced his belief, and was consigned to martyrdom. A troop of archers shot at him and he was left for dead, transfixed by numerous arrows; but a Christian lady took the body to her house, and he recovered. Diocletian then ordered him to be beaten to death with clubs in the amphitheatre, and his body was thrown into the city sewers, but was found by means of an apparition (says the ecclesiastical legend) and decently buried in the catacomb at Rome, which still retains his name.

Born at Narbonne, Gaul, 255; died at Rome, 288.

SEBASTIAN, ST. (See SAN SEBASTIAN.)

SEBASTIAN, a county of Arkansas, United States. Area, 600 square miles. Pop. 19,560, about 1,500 being coloured. The capital is Greenwood.

SEBASTIANI, FRANÇOIS HORACE BASTIEN, Count, se-bas'-te-a'-ne, marshal of France, was the son of a tailor (although he claimed to be a member of a noble family), and was about to enter the priesthood when the Revolution caused him to join the army. After distinguishing himself in Italy and under General Moreau, he obtained the command of a regiment of dragoons, at the head of which he assisted Bonaparte to carry into effect his coup d'état of the 18th Brumaire. His after-career was marked with the greatest success, both as a soldier and as a diplomatist. He signalised himself at the battle of Austerlitz, in Spain, Russia, and at Leipsic. He retired from active life at the abdication of the emperor, but was a member of the deputation which waited upon the allied monarchs subsequently to the disaster of Waterloo. He was a member of the Chamber of Deputies during the Restoration; and, upon the accession of Louis Philippe, became minister of marine, and afterwards minister of foreign affairs. He was ambassador in London in 1835, and five years later received the marshal's baton. Soon after the murder of his daughter, the Duchess de Praslin, by her husband, in 1847, his health became so seriously affected that he was compelled to retire into private life. After his demise, his body was buried in the church of the Invalides, upon which occasion the building narrowly escaped destruction by fire.

Born in Corsica, 1776; died 1851.

SEBASTOPOL, or SEVASTOPOL, seb-as-to'-pol (popularly, but incorrectly pronounced se-bas'-to-pol), a Russian seaport, fortress, and arsenal, government of Taurida, near the south-western extremity of the Crimea, on the southern side of an inlet of the sea, forming a magnificent harbour, into which the river Tchernaya discharges. On the southern side of the inlet are South Bay, or Dockyard Harbour, and Quarantine Bay, the town being situated between them. The fine docks, the fortifications, and a great part of the town were destroyed in the memorable siege of 1854-5. Pop. 26,133.

SEBENICO, sai-bai-ne'-ko, a town of the Austrian empire, in Dalmatia, near the mouth of the Kerka, 42 miles S.E. of Zara. It has a fine cathedral, an old town-house (now used for other purposes), and other public buildings of Venetian architecture. It has also an excellent and well-defended harbour. Pop. 14,300.

SECHELLES. (See SEYCHELLES.)

SE-CHUEN, se-choo-en', a province of China, having Tibet on the W., and on the other sides it is inclosed by other Chinese provinces. It is mountainous and well watered, and silk, sugar, rhubarb, oranges, drugs, and musk are among the chief productions. The capital is Ching-too-foo. Pop. 67,712,897.

SECKENDORF, GUY LOUIS DE, sek'-endorf, a German historian, who became privy councillor to the Elector of Brandenburg, and chancellor of the university of Halle. He wrote, in Latin, "A Compendium of Ecclesiastical History," "State of the Princes of Germany," and "A Description of the Germanic Empire."

Born in Franconia, 1626; died at Halle, 1692.

SECKER, THOMAS, sek'-er, an English prelate, who, upon entering into orders, became chaplain to Bishop Talbot, and, in 1733, was instituted to the rectory of St. James, Westminster, and appointed king's chaplain. The year following he was consecrated Bishop of Bristol, and, in 1737, translated to Oxford. In 1750 he obtained the deanery of St. Paul's, and, in 1758, was advanced to the archbishopric of Canterbury.

Born at Sibthorpe, Notts, 1693; died in London, 1768.

SECONDIGLIANO, sek'-on-deel-ye-a'-no, a town of Italy, province of Napoli, 3 miles from Naples. There is a handsome church. Pop. 5,800.

SECUNDERABAD, or SIKANDARABAD, se-koon-de-ra'-bad', a town and military cantonment of India, in the Nizam's dominions, and head quarters of British military force, 6 miles N. of Hyderabad. In the vicinity are some tombs, the object of large annual pilgrimages. Pop. 35,000.

SECUNDUS, JOHANNES, se-kun'-dus, a Dutch poet, who wrote in Latin, and whose family name was Everts, which he altered to the Latin one by which he is known. He studied law under Alciatus, and afterwards became secretary to the Archbishop of Toledo. His poems, which are of the amatory order, and modelled after Catullus, are various and excellent. The most celebrated are the "Basia, or the Kisses," which have been translated into several languages.

Born at the Hague, 1511; died at Tournay, 1536.

SEDAINE, MICHEL JOHN, se-dain', a French dramatic writer. After the death of his father, an architect, he became so reduced in circumstances as to take up the trade of a stonemason; but was noticed by his master, who gave him a share in the business. A taste for the drama, however, induced him to quit his trade, and to write comic operas and plays, which possess considerable merit, and some of which have been translated into English; as, "Richard Cœur-de-Lion" (for which Gretry wrote the music) and "Blue Beard." He was a member of the French Academy, and secretary of that of Architecture.

Born at Paris, 1719; died at Paris, 1797.

SEDALIA, se-dal'-e-a, the capital of Pettis county, Missouri, United States, 64 miles N.W. of Jefferson city. Manf. Woollens, machinery, carriages, and agricultural implements. Pop. 9,500.

SEDAN, se-da', a fortified town of France, department Ardennes, on the Maas, 10 miles from Mezières. The town is divided into Upper and Lower. It has a large arsenal, and a monument to Turenne, who was born here. Manf. Woollen goods, of which it is a great centre; hosiery, leather, arms, hardware, and linen yarn. There are iron mines in the vicinity. Pop. 19,500.—This place was long an independent principality, and was united to France under Louis XIV. In 1646 the minister Colbert established here a great cloth factory; and in 1870 the town was made memorable by the battle resulting in the surrender of Napoleon III. and 90,000 men to the Prussians.

SEDBERGH, sed'-berg, a market-town of the W. Riding of Yorkshire, 65 miles from York. Manf. Cotton goods. Pop. 2,268.

SEDGWICK, REV. ADAM, sedj'-wik, geologist, who was educated at the university of Cambridge, where he became fellow of Trinity College in 1808. Ten years later he was chosen to fill the chair of geology founded by Dr. Woodward. As a geologist, he principally directed his attention to the study of the crystalline rocks. His literary contributions to science were principally furnished to the Transactions of the Cambridge Philosophical Society, and of the Geological Society, to the Reports of the British Association, the "Annals of Philosophy," and the "Edinburgh New Philosophical Journal." He was also the reputed author of the celebrated reply to the "Vestiges of the Natural History of Creation," in the "Edinburgh Review." One of the most important of his few separate works was that entitled "A Discourse on the Studies of the University of Cambridge," in which he enunciated his views relative to the bearings of physical philosophy upon the Christian religion. He was corresponding member of the French Institute and fellow of the Royal and Geological societies.

Born at Dent, Yorkshire, 1787; died 1873.

SEDGWICK, a county of Kansas, United States. Area, 1,512 square miles. Pop. 18,753. The capital is Wichita.

SEDLEY, SIR CHARLES, sed'-le, an English poet, who was one of the wits of the court of Charles II. His daughter became mistress to James II., who created her Countess of Dorchester. His poems are licentious, but are written in an elegant style; he also wrote some plays, which are remarkable for little else than their loose tone of morality.

Born at Aylesford, Kent, 1639; died 1701.

SEELAND, largest of the Danish islands.

SEFAN, or SOOFAN, the most eastern portion of Tibet. (See TIBET.)

SE-GAN-FOO, se-gan-foo', a town of China, capital of the province Shen-se, near the junction of the Ke-ei-ho and Kin-ho. It is surrounded by walls 10 miles in circumference. Pop. 300,000.

SEGO, se'-go, a large city, capital of the state Bambarra, in Central Africa. It is divided into four distinct towns, two of which are on the northern, and two on the southern bank of the Joliba (Niger). These towns are surrounded with high mud walls; the houses are built of clay, of a square form, with flat roofs; some of them have two stories, and many of them are whitewashed. There are an immense palace, and several mosques. Pop. 30,000. Lat. 13° 5′ N. Lon. 7° W.

SEGORBE, sai-gor'-bai, a town of Spain, province of Castellon-de-la-Plana, in a beautiful valley, on the right bank of the Palancia, 34 miles from Valencia. It has a cathedral, in which are some good paintings. Manf. Paper, brandy, starch, and pottery. Pop. 6,200.

SEGOVIA, sai-go'-ve-a, a province of Spain, formerly a portion of Old Castile. The surface is very varied, the mountains attaining an elevation of over 8,000 feet. There are large fertile plains and extensive pine forests. Area, 3,466 square miles. Pop. 152,157.

SEGOVIA, a city of Spain, capital of the above province, on a rocky eminence between two deep valleys, the one watered by the river Eresma, the other by a brook, 47 miles N.W. of Madrid. It is surrounded by a wall in the Moorish style, with round towers. The streets are narrow, crooked, and, in several parts, steep; the suburbs are built on more even ground. It contains a number of convents and churches, of which the most remarkable is the cathedral, a large pile, partly Grecian, partly Gothic, begun in 1525. The tower, surmounted by a cupola, is 330 feet high. The Alcazar, or ancient palace, is a Moorish building, splendidly repaired in the 15th century. The most remarkable monument of Segovia is the aqueduct, a Roman work, supposed to have been built by Trajan. It is built of freestone, without cement, and consists of two rows of arches, one resting upon the other, nearly 3,000 feet long and 102 feet high. Pop. 11,318.—This was an important Roman town; the Moors established here great manufactories of cloth; it was afterwards frequently the residence of the kings of Castile and Leon, and the French held it from 1808 to 1814.

SEGRAIS, JEAN REGNAULD DE, seg'-rai, a French poet, who was educated for the priesthood, which profession he declined. Mademoiselle, daughter of Gaston, Duke of Orleans, appointed him her gentleman in ordinary, and he was afterwards patronised by Madame de la Fayette. He was a member of the French Academy. He wrote some elegant eclogues, and translated the "Georgics" and "Æneid" of Virgil into French verse. His prose works are, a collection of novels, and "Segraisiana; or, a Miscellany of History and Literature."

Born at Caen, 1624; died 1701.

SEGUR, LOUIS PHILIPPE, Count de, say'-goor, a French diplomatist and historical writer, who fought against the English in America, in the service of the Americans, until the termination of the struggle; after which he returned to France. He was subsequently appointed ambassador to Russia, and became a favourite with Catherine II., whom he accompanied in her tour to the Crimea in 1787. He highly approved of the great Revolution, but took no part in it. He afterwards devoted himself to literature, and produced a great number of works, including histories, tales, fables, and songs, and memoirs and anecdotes. His style was remarkable for elegance and spirit.

Born 1753; died 1830.

SEGUR, PHILIPPE HENRI, Marquis de, father of the preceding, a French general, who served with distinction in Italy and Bohemia, and particularly at the battle of Prague. He was created a marshal by Louis XVI. in 1783, having previously been nominated minister of war. During the Revolution he was imprisoned in La Force, but was subsequently liberated by Napoleon when first consul, and also granted a pension of 4,000 francs.

Born 1724; died at Paris, 1801.

SEGURA, sai-goo'-ra, a river of the south-east of Spain, which, after a course of 180 miles, enters the Mediterranean at Guardamar.

SEHWAN, sai-wan', a town of British India, in Scinde, standing on the right bank of the Arrel, near its junction with the Indus. Here is the tomb of Sal Shah Baz, with gates of wrought silver, a place of pilgrimage alike to Hindoos and Mahometans; and a remarkable ruin of a fort, an oval mound 1,200 feet long. Pop. 2,000. Lat. 26° 21′ N. Lon. 67° 55′ E.

SEIK STATES, a tract of the Punjab.

SEINE, sain, a river of France, rising in the centre of the department Côte d'Or, about 1,420 feet above the sea level, and after a winding, but generally north-western, course of 470 miles, discharging into the English Channel at Havre. It is navigable for 350 miles. The chief affluents are, on the right bank, the Aube, Marne, and Oise; on the left, the Yonne, Loing, Essone, and Eure.

SEINE, the metropolitan and smallest department of France, and deriving its name from the river. The surface is undulating, and in no part more than 450 feet above the sea level. The soil is poor, but highly cultivated, the supply of manure from Paris being abundant, and large quantities of vegetables and fruits are produced.

Rivers.—The SEINE, MARNE, and BIÈVRE.
Area.—183 square miles.
Pop.—2,799,329.
Administrative Divisions and Chief Towns.—There are 3 arrondissements and 72 communes. The chief towns are PARIS, ST. DENIS, and SCEAUX.

SEINE-INFÉRIEURE, a maritime department of France, bounded on the N.W. by the English Channel, and S. by the department Eure. On part of the coast are lofty chalk cliffs, but there are also sandy and swampy districts. The Caux hills cross the department from east to west, and to the south of the range are rich pasture lands, and extensive forests.

River.—The Seine.
Minerals.—Marble and building stone, and some iron and coal.
Area.—2,328 square miles.
Pop.—814,068.
Administrative Divisions and Chief Towns.—There are 5 arrondissements and 759 communes. The principal towns are ROUEN (the capital), DIEPPE, HAVRE, NEUFCHÂTEL, and YVETOT.

SEINE-ET-MARNE, a department of the North of France, bounded E. by Seine-et-Oise. There are ridges of hills of moderate elevation, separated by fertile valleys, and large forests, including that of Fontainebleau. Wheat, vegetables, and fruit, especially grapes of fine quality, are extensively cultivated.

Rivers.—The SEINE and MARNE.
Minerals.—Building and mill stones, alabaster, gypsum, and potters' clay.
Area.—2,414 square miles.
Pop.—348,091.
Administrative Divisions and Chief Towns.—There are 5 arrondissements and 529 communes. The chief towns are MELUN (the capital), FONTAINEBLEAU, MEAUX, and PROVINS.

SEINE-ET-OISE, a department of the North of France, inclosing the department SEINE. In the northern part are forests, hills, and picturesque valleys, and in the south extensive plains. The soil is not naturally fertile, but well cultivated. There are extensive forests.

Rivers.—The Seine and Oise.
Minerals.—Iron, gypsum, building and mill stones, and potters' clay.
Area.—2,163 square miles.
Pop.—577,798.
Administrative Divisions and Chief Towns.—There are 6 arrondissements and 685 communes. VERSAILLES is the capital, and CORBEIL, ÉTAMPES, MANTES, PONTOISE, and RAMBOUILLET are the other chief towns.

SEISTAN, sise-tan', a western province of Afghanistan, bordering on Persia. The capital is Sekuha. Area, 5,000 square miles.

SEJANUS, Lucius Ælius, se-jai'-nus, the son of Seius Strabo, a Roman knight. He first ingratiated himself into favour with Caius Cæsar, the grandson of Augustus, but afterwards attached himself to Tiberius, who made him his confidant. He gained the affections of the people, the soldiers, and the senate, was appointed commander of the prætorian guards, and had the disposal of all places of trust and honour, which he gave to his own creatures. Inflamed by ambition, he aspired to the imperial throne, and, to gain his end, he murdered Drusus, the son of the emperor; after which he declared his intention of marrying Livia, the widow of Drusus; but this was opposed by Tiberius. The emperor at length perceiving the real views of his favourite, caused him to be accused before the senate; on which he was deserted by his friends and sent to prison, where he was strangled. His body, after being dragged about the streets, was thrown into the Tiber.

Died 31.

SELBY, sel'-be, a market town of the West Riding of Yorkshire, on the right bank of the Ouse, 12 miles S. of York. The church, a large and noble structure, 300 feet long, was part of an abbey founded by William the Conqueror, in 1068. In the market place is an ancient Gothic cross, and there are many old houses. Manf. Iron and brass, sailcloth, and ropes. Boats are built. Pop. 6,200. —A station on the North Eastern and Great Northern railways.

SELDEN, John, sel'-den, a learned English lawyer and writer. After receiving his education at the university of Oxford, he, in 1604, took up his residence in the Inner Temple, where he was called to the bar, and became distinguished as a profound lawyer and antiquary. At the age of 22 he drew up a treatise on the Civil Government of England before the Conquest, which gained him great reputation. In 1644 he published his "Titles of Honour," and in 1618 his "History of Tithes," which gave great alarm to the clergy, and was answered by several writers. Being prosecuted in the High Commission court, he made an apology for having questioned the divine right of the clergy to receive tithes. In 1621 he was committed to custody as the principal promoter of the protest made by the Commons respecting their privileges. In 1623 he was chosen member of parliament for Lancaster, and in 1625 returned for Great Bedwin, in Wiltshire. He afterwards again represented Lancaster, and was appointed one of the managers of the prosecution of the Duke of Buckingham, and had also a principal share in drawing up the Petition of Rights. For his opposition to the court he was, in 1629, sent to the Tower, whence he was removed to the King's Bench, and in 1634 admitted to bail. From this period he took a less active part against the king. In 1636 he published his "Defence of the King's Dominion over the British Seas," in answer to Grotius. In 1642 he was offered the great seal, which he refused, and in 1646 parliament voted him £5,000 as a compensation for his sufferings. Though he took the Covenant, and was appointed keeper of the records, as also a member of the Assembly of Divines, he refused to write a reply to the "Eikon Basilike," which he had been requested to do by Cromwell.

Born in Sussex, 1584; died in London, 1654.

SELENE, se-le'-ne, in Greek mythology, the goddess of the moon, equivalent to the Luna of the Romans.

SELENGA, se-len'-ga, a river of Siberia, rising by several heads in Mongolia, uniting about lat. 48° 30′ N.; lon. 103° E., and, after a course of 300 miles, falling by three mouths into the lake Baikal.

SELEUCIDÆ, se-lu'-si-de, the name of a Greek dynasty in Asia, founded, after the death of Alexander the Great, by Seleucus, one of the most distinguished generals of the Macedonian king. The era of the Seleucidæ begins with the taking of Babylon by Seleucus, B.C. 312, and ends with the conquest of Syria by Pompey, B.C. 65.

SELEUCUS, se-lu'-kus, surnamed Nicator, or Victorious, a general under Philip of Macedon and Alexander. After Alexander's death, he received Babylon as his province. When he had strengthened himself in his empire, Seleucus imitated the example of the rest of the generals of Alexander, and assumed the title of independent monarch. He founded no less than thirty-four cities in different parts of his empire, which he peopled with Greek colonies, whose national industry, learning, &c., were communicated to the indolent inhabitants of Asia. He was murdered in the 82nd year of his age.

Born 358 B.C.; died 280 B.C.

SELIM I., se'-lim ("the Fierce"), sultan of Turkey, was the second son of Bajazet II., whom in 1512 he dethroned and put to death, as he did his two brothers subsequently. Having secured the throne by these crimes, he turned his arms with success against Egypt and Persia. The former country he completely conquered, and put an end to the dominion of the Mamelukes, which had lasted above 260 years. He was an able, though severe ruler, built the great arsenal at Pera, ameliorated the condition of his people, and encouraged literature.

Born 1467; died 1520.

SELIM II., grandson of the above, succeeded his father Solyman II. in 1566. In 1570 he broke the treaty which his father had made with the Venetians, and took the island of Cyprus; but, the year following, he lost the battle of Lepanto, where his navy was almost wholly destroyed. This disaster obliged him to sue for peace.

Born 1524; died 1574.

SELIM III., son of Mustapha III. and nephew of Abdul-Ahmed, whom he succeeded in 1789. He was one of the most enlightened men of his country, and formed the idea of regenerating the Turkish empire. The commencement of his reign was, however, very much troubled. His army was defeated by the allied Austrians and Russians, the latter taking Bender and Ismail. In 1792 he lost the Crimea, which was incorporated with Russia. The French subsequently invaded Egypt, and his army was annihilated by Bonaparte: the province was, however, retaken by the English, who restored it to the Porte. Having purchased a peace at the price of conceding territory to Russia, he commenced his cherished plans of reform. He remodelled his army after the European plan, introduced new modes of raising the taxes, and sought to introduce European civilization into his empire; but a fresh war breaking out, in which he was defeated by the Russians and English, his army became dissatisfied. The Janissaries also rose in insurrection and deposed Selim, placing his nephew, Mustapha IV., upon the throne, who was also deposed, in favour of Mahmud II., and strangled with Selim.

Born 1761; died 1808.

SELIMNO, or ISLAMDJI, se-lim'-no, a walled town of European Turkey, in Roumelia, at the southern base of the Balkans, 78 miles N. of Adrianople. Manf. Woollen goods, attar of roses, and arms. A large annual fair is held here. Pop. 20,000.

SELKIRK, sel'-kirk, a royal and parliamentary burgh and market town of Scotland, and chief town of the county to which it gives name, situate on a commanding eminence below the confluence of the Yarrow and the Ettrick, near the borders of Roxburghshire, 38 miles S.E. of Edinburgh. The town has been greatly improved. It has county buildings, opened in 1870, and an old town hall, with a spire 110 feet high. There are, besides, monuments to Sir Walter Scott and Mungo Park, who was a native of the neighbourhood. Manf. Tweeds, hosiery, and blankets. Pop. 7,432.—A station on the North British railway.

SELKIRK, ALEXANDER, a Scotch seaman, who made several voyages to the South Sea; in one of which, having quarrelled with his commander, he was, in 1704, put ashore on the island of Juan Fernandez, with a few necessaries, a fowling-piece, gunpowder, and shot. Here he lived alone during four years and four months, and was then rescued by Captain Woods Rogers, of the Duke privateer. During the time of his remaining on the island he had nearly forgotten his native language. He returned to England in 1711, and his adventures suggested the famous "Robinson Crusoe" of Defoe. He afterwards served in the Royal Navy, and at the time of his death was lieutenant on board the Weymouth.

Born at Largo, Fife, 1676; died 1723.

SELKIRKSHIRE, sel'-kirk-sheer, a county in the south of Scotland, formerly known as Ettrick Forest, of a very irregular figure, and bounded W. and N. by Peeblesshire and Edinburgh, E. and S.E. by Roxburghshire, and S. by the county of Dumfries. It generally consists of a continued succession of mountains, gradually rising one above another in loftiness, very different in shape and magnitude, mostly green and bare, though several are heathy, and one or two partly covered with trees. Between the hills there are narrow and well-watered valleys everywhere interspersed. Barley, oats, turnips, and clover are cultivated, and large herds and flocks are reared.

Rivers.—The Ettrick, Yarrow, Tweed, Gala, and Caddon.
Area.—260 square miles.
Pop.—25,562.
Parliamentary Representation and Chief Towns.—In conjunction with Peebleshire, one member is returned to parliament. The capital is SELKIRK, and GALASHIELS is an important manufacturing town.

SELMA, sel'-ma, a town of Alabama, United States, on an elevated plateau, on the right bank of the Alabama, 42 miles W. of Montgomery. Manf. Machinery and joinery. A large export trade in cotton is carried on. Pop. 7,500.

SELTERS, or LOWER SELTERS, sel'-ters, a village of the duchy of Nassau, Germany, 24 miles from Mayence, noted for one of the most celebrated mineral springs in Europe. Of the waters (commonly known as seltzer) about 2,000,000 bottles are annually exported.

SEMELE, sem'-e-le, in Roman mythology a daughter of Cadmus, and mother of Hercules.

SEMENDRIA, se-men'-dri-a, a fortified town of Servia, on the right bank of the Danube, 28 miles S.E. of Belgrade. It was at one time the residence of the Servian kings. Pop. 12,000.

SEMIPALATINSK, sem-i-pa-la-tinsk, a government of Asiatic Russia, bounded E. and S. by the Siberian government of Tomsk, Turkestan, and the Chinese empire. It is traversed by several mountain chains, but there are extensive pasture lands, and cattle form the chief wealth of the inhabitants. The capital is SEMIPALATINSK.

Rivers and Lakes.—The Irtish, Ili, and Chui. There are several lakes, the largest being Issik-Kul, Ali-Kul, and Balkash.
Minerals.—Gold, silver, lead, and copper.
Area.—188,300 square miles.
Pop.—538,380.

SEMIPALATINSK, capital of the above government, on the left bank of the Irtish. A large transit trade is carried on. Pop. 14,200.

SEMIRAMIS, se-mir'-a-mis, a mythical queen of Assyria, whose history as given by the Greek historian is, in the light of modern discoveries, of very little value. (See ASSYRIA.)

SEMLER, JOHANN SALOMO, sem'-ler, a German Protestant theologian, who was educated at Halle. He was at first trained in the doctrines of the Pietists, but afterwards abandoned those views and became one of the most eloquent supporters of rationalism. In 1751 he was nominated professor of theology at Halle; but was removed from that and other posts by the minister Zedlitz, in 1779. His writings consist of dissertations upon the doctrines of rationalism, and argumentative essays against the Deists. He likewise produced a sort of autobiography of himself, and several works upon philology, ecclesiastical history, &c.

Born at Saalfeld, 1725; died 1791.

SEMLIN, sem'-lin, a fortified town of the Austrian empire, on the military frontier, separated from Belgrade by the Save. It consists of an inner town and a suburb named Franzensthal. Near the river is a poor quarter, the Zinkaberg (so named from having been inhabited by gipsies), near which are the ruins of a castle. It has a German theatre, schools, a quarantine establishment, and is the principal entrepôt of the trade between Austria and Turkey. Pop. 9,000.

SEMMES, RAPHAEL, semz, American officer, who served in the United States navy, but in 1861 joined the Confederates, made himself remarkable by daring exploits, and commanded the Alabama, which was sunk in a fight with the Kerseage (Federal war steamer), in the British channel. After the close of the war, he became a judge of probate at Mobile, and in 1866 professor of moral philosophy in one of the southern universities. He wrote two works describing his adventures during the civil war.

Born in Maryland, 1810; died 1877.

SEMPACH, sem'-pak, a small town of Switzerland, canton of Lucerne, on the east shore of Lake Sempach, 9 miles N.W. of Lucerne. It is surrounded by dilapidated walls. Here the Austrians were defeated by the Swiss in 1386, when Arnold von Winkelreid fell. His heroic death is still commemorated by an annual festival. Pop. 1,200.

SEMPRONIUS, TIBERIUS GRACCHUS, sem-pro'-ni-us, a Roman consul, who defeated the Carthaginians and the Campanians. He was subsequently betrayed by Fulvius, a Lucanian, into the hands of the Carthaginians, and was killed, after he had made a long and bloody resistance against the enemy. Hannibal showed great honour to his remains, a funeral pile was raised at the head of the camp, and the enemy's cavalry walked round it in solemn procession.

Lived in the 3rd century B.C.

SENECA, LUCIUS ANNÆUS, sen'-e-ka, a Roman philosopher, son of Marcus Annæus Seneca, a Roman orator and rhetorician. He received a liberal education at Rome, where he displayed great abilities as an advocate, obtained the office of quæstor, and rose to distinction, but was subsequently banished to Corsica, in consequence, it is supposed, of having had an intrigue with Julia, daughter of Germanicus. While in exile he wrote his Epistles, and treatise on Consolation. After some years he was recalled by Agrippina, wife of the emperor Claudius, and appointed tutor to her son Nero. This office Seneca discharged with great honour, and was bountifully rewarded; but, when his pupil came to the throne, Seneca, who was aware of his avaricious disposition, solicited him to accept the villas and vast riches which he had amassed, that he might retire to a life of study and solitude. This the emperor refused, but soon found an opportunity of destroying his preceptor. When the conspiracy of Piso was discovered, Seneca was declared to be implicated, and orders were sent to him to put an end to himself. The philosopher, without expressing any concern, took poison, which had no effect; he then had his veins opened, but the blood flowed so slowly, that he was removed into a hot bath, and thence to a stove, where he was suffocated. His wife, Paulina, resolving to die with him, also had her veins opened; but Nero, fearful that this would excite general indignation against himself, commanded that the blood should be stopped and her life preserved. His works consist of epistles, various moral treatises, and ten tragedies (his authorship of which has been doubted, but, according to the best authorities, without reason).

Born at Cordova, Spain, about 3 B.C.; died at Rome, 65 A.D.

SENECA, a county of New York, United States. Area, 330 square miles. Pop. 29,000. There are two capitals, Ovid and Waterloo.

SENECA, a county of Ohio, United States. Area, 540 square miles. Pop. 37,000. The capital is Tiffin.

SENEFELDER, or SENNEFELDER, ALOIS, sen'-e-fel-der, the inventor of the art of lithography, was the son of an actor in the theatre at Munich. He was designed for the legal profession, but had a strong predilection for the stage, as well as for dramatic composition. Being too poor to pay for the printing of his works, he resolved to make himself acquainted with some cheap substitute for typography, the result being the discovery of lithography. In 1809 he was rewarded for his early trials, in being appointed inspector of the royal lithographic establishment of Bavaria. In 1819 he received the gold medal of the London Society for the Encouragement of the Arts, and, about the same time, published an account of his invention.

Born at Munich, about 1772; died there, 1834.

SENEFFE, se-nef', a town of Belgium, province of Hainault, 12 miles N.W. of Charleroi. It was the scene of a sanguinary battle, in August, 1674, between the Prince of Orange, afterwards William III. of England, and the French under the Prince of Condé, who gained the victory. In 1794 the Austrians were beaten here by the French under Moreau. Pop. 3,500.

SENEGAL, or SENEGA, sen'-e-gawl', a large river of Western Africa, having its source in Mount Cero, about lat. 10° 30′ N., and lon. 10° 40′ W. After an estimated course of 1,000 miles, it enters the Atlantic Ocean, in lat. 16° N., and lon. 10° 33′ W. In the low part are numerous large and fertile islands.

SENEGAL, a colony of France, on the western coast of Africa. It includes the island and town of St. Louis, the island of Goree, and small settlements on the Gambia and south of Cape Verd, at the mouth of the above river. The most important branch of commerce consists in procuring gum-Senegal, which has been ascertained by experiment to be much superior to all the eastern kinds of the same article, and even to that of Arabia. The other exports consist of hides, wax, ivory, cabinet woods, and gold-dust. Pop. 607,000.—The first settlement was made in 1637.

SENEGAMBIA, sen'-e-gam'-bi-a, an extensive region of Western Africa, bounded on the E. by Nigritia Proper, W. by the Atlantic, S. by Guinea, and on the N. by the Sahara. The name is a compound of the names of the two rivers, Senegal and Gambia. The district includes the French settlements on the Senegal, the Portuguese on the Rio Grande, and the British settlement on the Gambia. Area, 400,000 square miles. Pop. of French portion, 197,644; the Portuguese, 9,000.

SENIOR, NASSAU WILLIAM, se'-ni-or, political economist, educated at Eton, and Magdalen College, Oxford, and nominated professor of political economy at Oxford, in 1850. He wrote extensively upon the same subject, and was a contributor to the "Encyclopædia Metropolitana," and other works. Educated for the legal profession, he obtained a mastership in chancery in 1836, and was re-elected to the professorship in 1847. In 1859 he published a valuable work, called "Journal kept in Turkey and Greece in 1857-58." He also published "Essays on Fiction," in which he criticises the works of some of the most eminent modern novelists.

Born 1790; died 1861.

SENJEN, sen'-yen, an island in the Arctic Ocean, off the north-west coast of Norway. It is 45 miles long and 30 broad. It is mountainous, with deeply indented shores. The surface is mostly covered with moss, on which reindeer are pastured. Pop. 3,000.

SENLIS, san'-le, an ancient town of France, department Oise, 33 miles N.E. of Paris. It has walls, with 16 towers, round the older portion, and a cathedral, much admired as a specimen of the early Gothic. Manf. Woollen cloth, lace, and thread. Pop. 6,000.

SENNA, sen'-na, a town of the Portuguese possessions, on the east coast of Africa, on the right bank of the Zambesi, 125 miles from its mouth. It is in a decayed condition, but was at one time a place of considerable trade.

SENNAAR, sen-nar', a country of Eastern Africa, forming the southern portion of Nubia. It has Abyssinia on the E., Darfur on the W., and lies mostly between the Bahr-el-Abiad and Bahr-el-Azrek, which unite to form the Nile. (See NUBIA.)

SENNAAR, the capital of the above, on the Bahr-el-Azrek, 155 miles from Khartoom. The city is large, though the houses are, in general, poorly built. Manf. Mats, leather, sandals, arms, iron-ware, and jewellery. Pop. 4,000. Lat. 13° 34′ N. Lon. 33° 30′ E.

SENNACHERIB, sen-nak'-e-rib, king of Assyria, succeeded his father Shalmaneser, B.C. 702. Hezekiah, King of Judah, having refused to pay him tribute, he entered his country, where he took several fortresses, and laid siege to Jerusalem; but his army being slain in the night, he was obliged to return to his own country, where he was killed by his two sons, in the temple. He was a powerful monarch, and built the palace of Koyunjik (see NINEVEH), executed many important public works, and invaded Babylonia, Media, Phœnicia, and Egypt.

Died 680 B.C.

SENS, sans, a town of France, department Yonne, on the right bank of the Yonne, 70 miles S.E. of Paris. It is surrounded by walls, chiefly of Roman construction, and the Gothic cathedral is admired both for its exterior and interior. There are Roman remains in the vicinity. Manf. Woollens, velvets, stockings, gloves, and leather. A good trade is carried on. Pop. 13,800.

SEPPINGS, SIR ROBERT, sep'-pings, an eminent English naval architect, who, during 50 years, fulfilled the duties of master-shipwright assistant at Plymouth, and master-shipwright at Chatham dockyards, and finally became surveyor of the navy. His great merits as a naval architect were acknowledged by his being created a knight and elected a fellow of the Royal Society, whose Copley medal was voted him. He was awarded the sum of £1,000 by the Admiralty, and both houses of Parliament gave a marked approbation to his labours.

Born 1768; died in Somersetshire, 1840.

SEPULVEDA, JUAN GINES DE, sai-pool-vai'-da, a Spanish historian, who studied at Cordova and Alcala, and, in 1556, became chaplain and historiographer to Charles V., who also appointed him tutor to his son, afterwards Philip II. He wrote, among other learned works, the histories of the reigns of Charles V. and Philip II., and of the Spanish conquests in Mexico; several historical and theological essays, and assisted Cardinal Cajetan in revising the Greek text of the New Testament.

Born near Cordova, 1490; died 1574.

SERETH, a town of the Austrian empire, in Galicia, on the right bank of the Sereth. There are three Greek churches and a synagogue. Pop. 6,500.

SERGIPE, sair'-zhe-pai, a maritime province of Brazil, bounded W. and S. by Bahia, and E. by the Atlantic. The shores are low and sandy, and the central part mountainous. In the eastern part are fertile and well-wooded districts, where sugar and tobacco are extensively cultivated; and in the western part large herds of cattle are reared. The chief river is the Vasa Barris, and the capital SERGIPE DEL REY. Area, 12,000 square miles. Pop. 200,000.

SERGIPE DEL REY, dail-rai', capital of the above province, at the mouth of the Vasa Barris. Pop. 9,000.

SERGIUS, ser'-ji-us, Patriarch of Constantinople in 610, was a native of Syria, and the chief of the sect of Monothelites, the principle of which was, that there are only one will and one operation in Christ. This heresy was condemned in the council of Constantinople.

Died 639.

SERGIUS I., Pope, and the successor of Conon, in 687. He baptized Cedwalla, King of the West Saxons, who had made a journey to Rome for that purpose. He opposed the canons of the council of Constantinople; whereupon Justinian II. sent his general-in-chief to arrest Sergius; but the Exarch of Ravenna protected the pope, who humanely interposed to save the life of Justinian's envoy. He instituted several ceremonies, and established various churches of Rome.

Born in Syria, 635; died at Rome, 701.

SERGIUS II. succeeded Gregory IV. in 844. He was elected without the authorisation of the Emperor Lotharius, who despatched an army into Italy, under the command of his son Louis. But the pope succeeded in inducing that prince to retire, after having crowned him king of Italy. Shortly afterwards, the Saracens from Africa ascended the Tiber, and ravaged the environs of Rome, but were prevented from gaining an entrance into the city itself, in consequence of the defence offered by the walls which surrounded it. Sergius was a native of Rome.

Died 847.

SERGIUS III. (Conti) became pope in 904, through the influence of the Marquis of Tuscany and of the notorious Roman lady Marozia. These personages were at the head of a powerful party which had deposed Christopher. A son of Sergius, by Marozia, afterwards became pope by the title of John X. The character of this pontiff has been variously represented; but he appears to have been an able but extremely profligate man.

Died 911.

SERGIUS IV. (Pietro Bocca di Porco) was elected in succession to John XVIII., in 1009. Under his rule, and in consequence of his exhortation, the Italian princes combined to drive out the Saracens from the country. In his time, also, the Normans began to enter Italy.

Died 1012.

SERINAGUR, or GURWAL, se-rin'-a-gur', a town of British India, nearly destroyed by an earthquake in 1803. Pop. 3,000. Lat. 30° 13′ N. Lon. 78° 49′ E.

SERINAGUR, SIRINUGGUR, or CASHMERE, the capital of Cashmere, on both banks of the Jhelum, or Behut, 170 miles N.E. of Lahore. It is wretchedly built of wood, the streets narrow, and the houses almost invariably out of the perpendicular. Clumsy wooden bridges connect the two portions of the town. The chief public buildings are the Jumna Musjid, or great mosque, said to be capable of holding 60,000 persons, the mosque of Sha Hamedan, a royal tomb, and the governor's residence. There are numerous small lakes connected with the city by canals. The Shahlimar Gardens, celebrated by Moore in "Lalla Rookh," border a lake to the east of the city. Pop. 40,000.

SERINGAPATAM, se-ring'-ga-pa-tam', "city of Vishnu," a decayed city of the south of India, and for a considerable period the capital of the province of Mysore, 9 miles from Mysore. It is situate at the upper end of an island of four miles in length by one and a half in breadth, in the river Kavari, or Cauvery, and is an ancient fortress; but was not distinguished for splendour till the reigns of Hyder Ali and his son Tippoo Sultan. Its fortifications were of great strength. It has a mausoleum of Hyder Ali and Tippoo. There are a great mosque, a pagoda, arsenal, and cannon foundry. A suburb, Shuton Gunjam, in the centre of the island, is large and well built, with wide streets. Pop. 10,500.—In 1792 it was invested by the British and allied armies, under the command of Lord Cornwallis; on which Tippoo Sultan acceded to the terms of peace proposed to him. In 1799, a war having again broken out between the British and Mysore, Seringapatam was stormed. Tippoo Sultan was killed, and the whole of his family and treasures taken by the conquerors.

SERINO, sai-re'-no, a town of Italy, province of Avellino, on the Sabbato, 6 miles S.E. of Avellino. In its neighbourhood are the remains of ancient Sebastia. Pop. 8,000.

SERLIO, SEBASTIAN, sair'-le-o, an Italian architect. Francis I. invited him to France, where he improved and ornamented the royal palaces, particularly Fontainebleau. He wrote a "Treatise on Architecture," and other works.

Born at Bologna, 1475; died 1552.

SERMIDE, sair'-me-dai, a town of Italy, province of Mantua, on the right bank of the Po. Pop. 5,700.

SERON, sair-on', a town of Spain, province of Almeria, 29 miles N. of the town of that name. There are veins of iron, lead and nitre, and quarries of marble, gypsum and lithographic stone. Manf. Linen, serges, blankets, and earthenware. Pop. 5,500.

SERPA, sair'-pa, a strong frontier town of Portugal, in the province of Alagarve, 16 miles S.E. of Beja. There is an elegant chateau, with fine gardens. A considerable trade is carried on. Pop. 5,600.

SERPENTARIA, ser-pen-tai'-re-a, an islet off the S.E. coast of Sardinia, in the Mediterranean.

SERPUKOV, ser-poo-kof', an ancient town of European Russia, government of Moscow, on the left bank of the Oka, 56 miles S. of Moscow. It contains a cathedral, numerous churches or chapels, a citadel, and has a large suburb. Manf. Woollen, linen, and cotton fabrics, sailcloth and leather. It has also large magazines. Pop. 22,418.

SERRANO, FRANCISCO, Duke de la Torre, ser-ra'-no, a Spanish marshal and statesman, who entered the army at the age of 15, and for a long course of years was a powerful supporter of the throne and dynasty of Isabella II. His opinions began to change about 1850, and in 1854 he was exiled for his share in the outbreak at Saragossa in that year. The revolution which immediately followed caused him to return to Spain, and he again took an active part in politics and was sent to France as ambassador in 1857. His liberal opinions becoming strengthened by the abuse which prevailed at the court of Isabella II., he became an object of suspicion in 1868, and, with several other generals, was exiled to the Canary Islands. Returning almost immediately he joined Prim, Topete, and others in causing the army and navy to rise against the queen and declare her dynasty at an end. Having defeated the royalists in the battle of Alcolea, he became the chief of the provisional government, and, after the settlement of the new constitution, in 1869, was made Regent of the kingdom until the nation had made choice of a king. In this capacity he continued to act until Prince Amadeo, son of the king of Italy, was prevailed upon to accept the Spanish crown. In 1872 he was chiefly engaged in suppressing the Carlist rising in Navarre. He was created a duke and grandee of Spain for his services at St. Domingo by the suppression of the insurrection of 1862.

Born near Cadiz, 1810. Died 1875.

SERRAVALLE, sair'-ra-val'-lai, a city of northern Italy, province of Venetia, on the Aleschio, 35 miles N. of Venice. The cathedral of St. Andrea is very ancient. Pop. 5,500.

SERRAVALLE, a town of northern Italy, on the left bank of the Scrivia, 22 miles N.W. of Genoa. The river is crossed by a handsome bridge of six arches. The walls have been recently removed, and the town has been modernized and improved. Pop. 3,100.

SERRES, or SERRANUS, JEAN DE, sair', a French Protestant divine, who escaped with difficulty from the massacre of St. Bartholomew, and became pastor at Nismes in 1582. He was taken into confidence by Henry IV., who employed him in several affairs, and subsequently appointed him historiographer. He wrote a treatise entitled "De Fide Catholica," the object of which was to reconcile Catholics and Protestants; and the consequence was, that the author was disliked by both. His other works were an edition of Plato in Greek and Latin, "Treatise on the Immortality of the Soul," "Catalogue of the History of France," "Memoirs of the Third Civil War," "History of Five Kings of France."

Born at Rhodez, 1540; died 1598.

SERRES, OLIVER DE, brother of the preceding, and called the "father of French agriculture." Henry IV. employed him in the improvement of his plantations. He was the first who introduced the culture of the white mulberry-tree into France, on which he wrote a treatise. His "Theatre of Agriculture" was long held as an esteemed authority upon the subject.

Born 1539; died 1619.

SERTORIUS, QUINTUS, ser-tor'-i-us, a Roman general, who made his first campaign under Marius, against the Cimbri and Teutones. He afterwards accompanied Marius and Cinna, when they entered Rome and slew their enemies. On being proscribed by Sylla, he fled first to Etruria and then to Spain, where he put himself at the head of the other exiles, and was regarded as a prince in that country, which he governed with great wisdom and moderation. He repulsed several armies that were sent against him, defeating both Pompey and Metellus. He entered into a treaty with Mithridates, who sent him money and ships, and sought to establish a new Roman republic in Spain. His soldiers followed him with the most blind devotion, believing him to be favoured by the gods. He was assassinated from motives of jealousy by Perperna, one of his generals.

Died 73 B.C.

SERVAN, ST. (See MALO, ST.)

SERVETUS, MICHAEL, ser-vē'-tus, a celebrated theologian and physician, whose proper name was Miguel Servede, who was educated for the profession of an advocate, at Toulouse, but afterwards studied physic at Paris, where he took his doctor's degree. Having embraced the Arian doctrine, he held a correspondence with Calvin on the subject, and many letters passed between them, which only irritated them against each other. Servetus, who was settled at Vienne, in Dauphiny, published a book in favour of his notions, entitled "Christianismi Restitutio;" but he avoided putting his name to it. The authorship was, however, discovered by Calvin, who gave information of it to the magistrates of Vienne, by whom Servetus was banished, and his effigy and book burnt at the gallows. He then formed the design of going to Naples to practise as a physician; but imprudently passing through Geneva in disguise, he was detected by Calvin, by whose means he was apprehended. Through Calvin, also, who acted as informer, prosecutor, and judge, Servetus was, contrary to law, condemned to be slowly burnt to death, which act of barbarity was carried into effect. He was possessed of very marked and varied ability, and wrote several books on the Trinity, a translation of Ptolemy's Geography, and some medical treatises. Having shown that he was acquainted with the pulmonary circulation, some writers have endeavoured to ascribe to him the discovery of the circulation of the blood, which he to some extent seems to have supposed possible, but which he never demonstrated.

Born at Villanueva, Aragon, 1509; burnt at the stake, at Geneva, 1553.

SERVIA, ser'-vi-a, a principality of southern Europe (formerly a tributary state of Turkey), corresponding to the Mœsia Superior of the Romans. It is separated from Hungary, on the N. by the Danube, and has on the E. Bulgaria, W. Bosnia and Albania, and S. the Balkan range, which divides it from Turkey. It is very uneven and mountainous, its surface containing a number of extensive forests, and large uncultivated heaths. In the north-east the mountains approach the Danube, to which they present an almost precipitous wall of rock, forming, with the mountains on the opposite shore, the famous "iron gate" of the river. The loftiest range of mountains is the Rudnik, which reach an altitude of 3,400 feet. The scenery is generally very beautiful. The climate is temperate, but the winter is of considerable length. The soil being in general fertile, the cultivated tracts produce abundant crops; but only a small proportion of the country is as yet under tillage. The most common crops are wheat, barley, oats, rice, hemp, flax, and tobacco; also vines, and fruits of various kinds, the pear being remarkably abundant. Cotton is raised in the valleys and other warm spots. Timber, especially oak, is abundant.

Rivers.—The Save, with its affluent the Kolubara, and the Morava and Timok, affluents of the Danube.

Minerals.—Iron, copper, and silver are abundant, but no mining operations are carried on, industrial pursuits generally being greatly neglected.

Area.—18,800 square miles.

Pop.—1,900,000, almost entirely Slav, Turkish races having much diminished since the Berlin Treaty.

Divisions and Chief Towns.—The country is divided into 17 departments. The capital is BELGRADE.

Political Constitution.—The executive power is vested in the prince, assisted by a council of seven ministers, who are responsible to the nation. The legislative authority is exercised by two independent bodies, the senate and the "Skoupchina," or house of representatives. The former consists of 17 members, nominated by the prince, one for each of the departments into which the country is divided. The "Skoupchina" is composed of deputies chosen by the people, one deputy to every 2,000 electors. The electors are the males of the country above the age of 21 years, paying direct taxes, and not being either domestic servants or gipsies, holders of government offices, or the clergy.

History.—Previous to 1040 Servia was a province of the Greek empire, under which it was governed by zupans, or native princes, but in that year Stephen Bojestam achieved independence, and his son Michael was the first king of Servia. In 1389 the Turks under Amurath invaded the country, which, notwithstanding numerous determined, but unsuccessful and disastrous revolts, remained more or less under Turkish rule until 1801, when an insurrection took place, led by Black George, or Czerny (see CZERNY), previously known only as the head of a band of robbers, but then honoured with the name of avenger of his country. Under his authority, it remained independent from 1806 till 1814, when he was compelled to fly into Russia, and terrible massacres by the Turks followed. In 1815 there was a new insurrection, led by Milosch Obrenovitch (see OBRENOVITCH). The war lasted from 1815 to 1829, when the Turkish government was compelled to grant virtual independence to Servia, acknowledging Milosch as prince. In 1856, Servia was placed, by the treaty of Paris, under the protection of the great European powers, as a semi-independent state. In 1876, war was declared against Turkey, and in 1878, Servia was proclaimed an independent principality.

SERVIUS TULLIUS, ser'-vi-us, the sixth king of Rome, who, according to the legend (which is, however, allowed to have some historical foundation), was son of Ocrisia, a slave of Corniculum, by Tullius, a man slain in the defence of his country against the Romans. Ocrisia was given by Tarquin to his wife Tanaquil, who brought up the youth with her family, and added the name of "Servius" to that which he had inherited from his father, to denote his being born of a slave. He was educated in the palace with great care, and obtained the daughter of Tarquin in marriage. His own private virtues recommended him to the notice of the people and of the soldiers; and by his liberality and complaisance he easily gained the throne on the death of his father-in-law. He endeared himself to his subjects as a warrior and a legislator; defeated the Veientines and Tuscans; established the census, which showed that Rome contained about 84,000 inhabitants; increased the number of the tribes, beautified the city, and enlarged its boundaries by taking within its walls the hills Quirinalis, Viminalis, and Esquilinus. He also divided the Roman people into tribes. Servius married his two daughters to the grandsons of his father-in-law; the elder to Tarquin, and the younger to Aruns. In this union he was unhappily deceived. The wife of Aruns murdered her own husband to unite herself to Tarquin, who had likewise assassinated his wife. Servius was next murdered by his son-in-law and his daughter Tullia, who cruelly ordered her chariot to be driven over the mangled body of her father.

Died 534 B.C.

SESHA, se'-sha, in Hindoo mythology, the great king of the serpent race.

SESIA, sai'-se-a, a river of Northern Italy, rising near Monte Rosa, and after a course of nearly 100 miles, joining the Po between Casale and Valenza.

SESOSTRIS, se-sos'-tris, a legendary king of Egypt, whom some historians have supposed to be identical with Rameses II.; but the exploits attributed to him were probably those of several kings of the 18th and 19th dynasties.

SESSA, sais'-sa, an ancient city of southern Italy, province of Caserta, 38 miles N.W. of Naples. There are a handsome cathedral, colleges, and a theological seminary. Manf. Woollen cloth. Pop. 19,500.

SESTINI, DOMINICO, sais-te'-ne, an Italian numismatist, who was at first librarian to the prince of Biscari, in Sicily. In 1810 he was appointed civil antiquary at Florence. His works are very valuable and numerous; the most important of them being, "System of Numismatics," letters upon the same science, and dissertations upon the Coins of the Ptolemies, the Macedonian kings, &c.

Born at Florence, about 1750; died at Florence, 1832.

SESTRI LEVANTE, sais'-tre-lai-van'-te, a seaport of northern Italy, 26 miles S.E. of Genoa, near the mouth of the Gromolo. There are fine paintings in the church of the Nativity. Pop. 10,770.

SESTRI, PONENTE, po-nan'-te, a town of northern Italy, 4 miles W. of Genoa, on the sea coast. There is a large government manufactory of tobacco. Pop. 6,000.

SETTA, set'-ta, a town of West Africa, in Dahomey, 30 miles N.E. of Abomey. Pop. 9,000.

SETTE-COMUNI, set'-tai co-moo-ne. (See VICENZA.)

SETTLE, ELKANAH, set'-tel, an English poet, who was educated at Trinity College, Oxford, and then went to London and entered on the career of a professional author. He wrote the tragedies of "Cambyses, King of Persia," "The Empress of Morocco" (played at Whitehall by the lords and ladies of the court), and "Fatal Love;" also poems, particularly "The Medal Reversed," and "Azariah and Hushai," both against Dryden; but, although he was for a time patronised by Rochester and the court party, sank into insignificance before his great rival (who attacked him in a terrible manner in "Absalom and Achitophel"), and falling into great poverty, he was glad to accept an asylum in the Charterhouse, where he died.

Born at Dunstable, 1648; died 1723.

SETUBAL, sai-too'-bal, a seaport of Portugal, province of Estramadura, on a bay of the Atlantic, at the mouth of the Sado, 20 miles S.E. of Lisbon. In the earthquake of 1755 it was almost entirely levelled with the ground, but was soon rebuilt in a better style. The large harbour has good quays and a lighthouse, and is protected by forts. There is a trade in wine, oranges, lemons, sea salt, and cork. Pop. 17,000.

SEVAJEE, sev-a-je', the founder of the Mahratta power in India. He commenced his career by dispossessing his father of Poonah; after which he continued to make acquisitions of territory, until, in 1658, the Bejapoor monarchy, whose vassal he was, sent a powerful force against him. He assassinated, by treachery, the general of the Bejapoor army, which he afterwards defeated and dispersed. He next surprised and plundered Surat. In 1670 he found himself sufficiently secure in his possessions to enter into hostilities with the Moguls. He again plundered Surat, and in 1672 totally defeated a Mogul force which had been sent against him. Two years later he was crowned at Rayghur, and soon afterwards he took some strong positions between Madras and Pondicherry, and then overran Mysore. In 1678 he again met the troops of Aurungzebe, this time in Golconda. He drove the Moguls before him; after which he became the greatest potentate in Southern India.

Died 1680.

SEVAN. (See GOUKEKA.)

SEVASTOPOL. (See SEBASTOPOL.)

SEVENOAKS, sev'-en-okes, a market-town of Kent, near the river Darent, 6 miles N. of Tunbridge. There are a very fine parish church (St. Nicholas), a new church, St. John's, erected in 1858, a handsome Congregational and other chapels. There are many elegant residences. Pop. 6,288.—A station on the South Eastern, and London, Chatham and Dover railways.

SEVERN, sev'-ern, a river of England, second only to the Thames, and also the principal river of Wales. It rises on the eastern side of Plinlimmon, on the borders of Montgomery and Cardigan shires, not far from the coast of Cardigan Bay, and after a circuitous course of 210 miles, passing through Montgomeryshire, Shropshire, Worcestershire, and Gloucestershire, discharges into the Bristol Channel. Above Llanidloes it is known as the Hafren. The phenomenon of the "bore," or tidal wave, is experienced at the mouth of the river. The chief affluents are the Wye and the Teme on the west, the Upper and Lower Avon on the east, and the Terne on the south. The area of drainage is about 6,000 square miles.

SEVERO, SAN. (See SAN SEVERO.)

SEVERUS, LUCIUS SEPTIMIUS, se-ve'-rus, a Roman emperor. He passed through various offices of the state, and was distinguished for his ambition, activity, and avarice. After the murder of Pertinax, he caused himself to be proclaimed emperor by the army in Germany, and at once advanced upon Rome to secure his title. His reception at Rome was gratifying to his vanity; but he was opposed by Pescennius Niger, who had a numerous army in the East. Many battles were fought between them; but at length Niger was destroyed, and his head sent to Severus, who behaved with the utmost cruelty to all the partisans of his unfortunate rival. Elated with this success, he pillaged Byzantium, and attempted to put away, by assassination, Albinus, whom he had previously accepted as his colleague in the empire; but being foiled, he had recourse to arms. Albinus was defeated and slain in Gaul, his family and adherents sharing his fate. Severus, on his return to Rome, put to death the wealthiest citizens, that he might possess himself of their property. Tired of an inactive life, he marched into the East, where he made numerous conquests. In 208 he set out upon his British campaign, accompanied by his two sons, Caracalla and Geta; and having reduced the island, he built a wall across the northern part, to defend the Roman possessions from the invasions of the Caledonians. It is said that he lost 50,000 men in his attempt to subdue Caledonia.

Born in Africa, 146; died at Eboracum (York), 211.

SEVERUS, Alexandrinus, a Greek rhetorician, who wrote, among other works, some "Ethopœia," or imitations of speeches adapted to the character and to the supposed persons. They contain, among others, the supposed speeches of Æschines upon going into banishment, and that of Menelaus upon the abduction of Helen by Paris.

Lived in the 5th century.

SEVERUS, Cassius, a Roman orator, who was banished into Crete by Augustus for his satirical language. His declarations were ordered to be destroyed by the senate.

Born 50 B.C.; died 33 A.D.

SEVERUS, Sulpicius, an ecclesiastical historian, and surnamed the Christian Sallust. The best of his works is his "Historia Sacra," which extends from the creation to A.D. 400.

Died 420.

SEVIER, se'-vi-er, the name of three counties of the United States:

Arkansas.—Area, 825 square miles. Pop. 6,192. The capital is Locksburgh.

Tennessee.—Area, 520 square miles. Pop. 15 541. The capital is Sevierville.

Utah.—Area, 7,000 square miles. Pop. 445.

SÉVIGNÉ, Marie de Rabutin-Chantal, Madame de, se-veen'-yai, a French letter-writer. She was the daughter of the Baron de Chantal, who lost his life in defending the Isle of Rhé against the English. After receiving a most careful education under her maternal uncle, she espoused, at the age of 18, the Marquis de Sévigné, who fell in a duel in 1651, leaving her with one son and a daughter, to whose education she paid strict attention. In Paris she moved in the most brilliant society, and attracted the admiration of some of the most distinguished men of the time; but she refused all offers of marriage. Her daughter married, in 1669, the Count de Grignan, commandant in Provence; and it was on a visit to her that the marchioness caught the small-pox, of which she died. Her letters (mostly addressed to her daughter, a beautiful and accomplished woman) are unequalled examples of the epistolary style, being elegant, picturesque, and animated.

Born at Paris, 1626; died in Provence, 1696.

SEVILLE, or SEVILLA, sev'-il (Sp. sai-veel'-ya), a province in the south of Spain, a portion of the old province of Andalusia, bounded N. by the province of Badajoz, S. by Malaga and Cadiz, E. by Cordova, and W. by Huelva and the Atlantic Ocean. The greater part of the province consists of fertile plains, but there are elevated districts, some of the highest peaks of the Sierra Morena and the Sierra Ronda being within the limits.

Rivers.—The Guadalquiver, which divides the province into two nearly equal portions; the Genil, Corbones, and Guadaira.

Minerals.—Iron, silver, lead, copper, and coal.

Area.—5,300 square miles.

Pop.—517,962.

SEVILLE, a town of Spain, and formerly capital of the ancient kingdom, and now of the province of the same name, 60 miles N.E. of Cadiz, in a fine plain on the left bank of the Guadalquivir. It is surrounded by an old Moorish wall of considerable height, in circuit 5 miles, entered by 15 gates, and having 66 towers. Beyond the walls are 10 suburbs. The interior is built mostly in the Moorish style, the houses having large courts and gardens; but in the newer part there are broad, straight streets, with small houses in the modern style. The squares are about 100 in number, and most of them have a fountain in the centre. There are here several beautiful public walks; one, in particular, on the banks of the Guadalquivir, which is frequented by the higher classes. The churches, convents, and hospitals, are very numerous. The cathedral is a large and magnificent Gothic pile, completed early in the 16th century, and is 431 feet long and 315 wide, superbly decorated, with painted windows of rare beauty, and paintings by Murillo and other great Spanish painters. Attached to the cathedral is the renowned Giralda tower, the greater portion built by the Moors in 1196, but in 1568 a splendid belfry was added, surmounted by the figure of a female in bronze, 14 feet high, which acts as a vane, being moved by the slightest breeze. The total height of the tower is 350 feet. Of the other churches (74 in number) and convents, several are elegant, but their chief attraction consists in their paintings. There is a large archiepiscopal palace. Of the edifices not ecclesiastical, the most conspicuous are the Alcazar, or palace, the Lonja, or exchange, the artillery school, and the mint. The Alcazar is a Moorish building, built in imitation of the Alhambra at Granada. Though the outside is mean, the inside is very different, containing the Court of Lions, halls of ambassadors, royal apartments, with fountains, galleries, and baths. The garden has also its fountains, evergreens, and walks paved with marble. The Plaza de Toros, or bull ring, can accommodate more than 12,000 spectators. Seville, being one of the most ancient cities of Spain, contains several interesting remains of antiquity, Roman as well as Moorish. It had an academy and public library in the time of the Moors, and at present it has an academy for the physical sciences, another for the fine arts, and a medical society: to these is to be added a university, founded in 1502. There is a public library in the cathedral, and another in the archbishop's palace. A remarkable old tower, the Tower of Gold, is on the left bank of the river, which is crossed by an iron bridge. Manf. Silk, woollens of the coarser kind, iron, machinery, leather, hats, soap, combs, porcelain, and tobacco and snuff on account of the government, employing several thousand persons, mostly females. Among the exports are wool, the skins of goats and kids, fruit, and, in a small quantity, oil and silk. Pop. 134,318.—Seville was the Hispal of the Phœnicians, and afterwards a Roman colony, called Hispalis, or Julia Romula. In 711 it was taken by the Moors, who corrupted the old name into Ishbillah, probably the origin of Sevilla. It was retaken by the Christians in 1248, and from that time till early in the 16th century was the capital of Spain. It was occupied by the French in 1810, and remained in their hands till 1812.

SEVIN, François, sev'-an(g), a French philologist, who became a member of the Academy of the Belles-Lettres, and keeper of the manuscripts in the library of the king of France. By order of Louis XV., he proceeded to Constantinople with the Abbé Fourmont, in search of manuscripts, of which they procured about 600. He afterwards wrote an account of his travels, in letters. He also wrote a dissertation on the first king of Egypt, the histories of Assyria and Lydia, and several other curious discourses.

Born 1682; died 1741.

SÈVRES, saivr, a town of France, department Seine-et-Oise, 6 miles S.W. of Paris. It is famous for its porcelain manufacture. Pop. 5,600.

SÈVRES, Deux, a department in the north-west of France, bounded W. by Vendée, and E. by Vienne. It is traversed by a chain of hills (known as the Monts du Poitou and the Plateau de Gatine), from the south-east to the north-west, forming the watershed between the Loire on the north and the Charente on the south. The soil is generally fertile and the climate healthy.

Rivers.—The Sèvre-Niortaise and the Sèvre-Nantaise, the former flowing into the sea, the latter into the Loire, and the two rivers giving name to the department.
Minerals.—Iron, marble, and freestone.
Area.—2,215 square miles.
Pop.—350,103.
Administrative Divisions and Chief Towns.—There are 4 arrondissements and 356 communes. The chief towns are NIORT (the capital), Bressuire, Melle, and Parthenay.

SEWARD, ANNA, su'-ard, an English authoress. She was the daughter of a clergyman at Lichfield, and several distinguished men visited her father's residence, among whom was Dr. Johnson. In 1782 she published a poetical novel, entitled "Louisa," which was so favourably received as to run through four editions. A collection of sonnets, and the "Life of Dr. Darwin," were her next publications. She bequeathed her unpublished works and letters to Sir Walter Scott, and to the publisher, Mr. Constable.
Born 1747; died at Lichfield, 1809.

SEWARD, WILLIAM HENRY, American statesman, who was educated for the law, which profession he practised during several years. In 1828 he was elected to the senate of the state of New York in opposition to the candidate of the Freemasons. After visiting Europe, he was, in 1838, elected governor of the state of New York, which position he retained until 1842. In 1849 he was returned to the senate of the United States, where he made himself remarkable for his speeches against slavery, and his adherence to what was called "the higher law" doctrine. In 1853 he published an edition of his speeches, state papers, and miscellaneous works. He afterwards re-visited Europe, and went to Egypt and the Holy Land. On his return he was a candidate for the presidency, in opposition to Mr. Lincoln, after whose election he became secretary of state. When President Lincoln was assassinated, an attempt was also made on Seward's life, and he was dangerously wounded. Under President Andrew Johnson he was secretary for foreign affairs, but resigned on the accession of President Grant. He afterwards made a tour in Europe, India, China, and Japan.
Born at Florida, State of New York, 1801; died 1872.

SEWARD, a new county of Kansas, United States. Area, 720 square miles. Pop. Unascertained.

SEWARD, a county of Nebraska, United States. Area, 576 square miles. Pop. 11,147. The capital is Seward.

SEWESTAN, se-wes-tan', a province on the south-east of Afghanistan, consisting of a flat dry plain of hardened clay, and fertile only near the rivers.

SEXTUS-EMPIRICUS, sex'-tus, a Greek philosopher of the Pyrrhonian sect, and a physician of that of the Empyrics, or those who guided their practice wholly after experience. Of his works there are extant—three books, called the "Pyrrhonian Hypotyposes," in which he gives all the arguments of the Sceptics, and a large treatise upon the impossibility of admitting any science.
Lived in the 3rd century.

SEYCHELLES ISLANDS, sai-shels', a group of about 30 islands in the Indian Ocean, a dependency of the colony of Mauritius. They are mountainous, and extremely fertile. The largest and most important is MAHÉ. The chief productions are timber, for ship-building, cocoa-vanilla, and tortoise-shell. Cotton and sugar are cultivated Pop. 11,000.—The islands were settled by the French in 1756, and named from the Count de Seychelles.

SEYMOUR, LADY JANE, se'-mor, daughter of Sir John Seymour, the third wife of Henry VIII., and the mother of Edward VI. She was at first maid of honour to Anne Boleyn, whom she supplanted in 1536. She died a few days after giving birth to her son.
Born about 1510; died 1537.

SEYMOUR, EDWARD, brother of Lady Jane Seymour, and uncle of Edward VI., was created Viscount Beauchamp and Duke of Somerset, in 1546. On the accession of his nephew to the throne, Seymour became his guardian, and protector of the kingdom. He was accused of abusing his high trust by the Earl of Warwick and other courtiers, and was beheaded.
Born about 1500; died 1552.

SEYMOUR, THOMAS, admiral of England, brother of the preceding. He was created Lord Seymour of Sudeley, and married Catherine Parr, widow of Henry VIII. He was brought to the scaffold on a pretended charge of treason.
Died 1549.

SEYMOUR, ANNE, MARGARET, and JANE, daughters of the Duke of Somerset, were distinguished for their poetical talents. They composed Latin distichs on the death of Margaret de Valois, Queen of France, which were translated into French, Greek, and Italian, and printed at Paris in 1551. Anne, the eldest of these ladies, married first the Earl of Warwick, and afterwards Sir Edward Hunton. Jane was maid of honour to Queen Elizabeth.

SEYMOUR, LADY ARABELLA. (See STUART, Lady Arabella.)

SEYNE, sain, a seaport of France, department of the Var, on the Mediterranean, 3 miles S.W. of Toulon. It carries on an extensive sardine and tunny fishery. Pop. 7,300.

SEYSSEL, CLAUDE DE, sai'-sel, an eminent French historian and classicist. He became professor of eloquence at Turin, afterwards councillor to Louis XII. of France, and at a later period, and in succession, bishop of Marseilles and archbishop of Turin. His most important works were,—"The Singular History of Louis XII.;" "The Great Monarchy of France; a treatise upon the Salic law; and translations into French, of Thucydides, Xenophon, Seneca, &c. He was among the first Frenchmen who wrote their native language with elegance and precision; and he was also a fine and vigorous writer of the Latin, in which language he composed a number of works.
Born 1450; died 1520.

SEZZE, or SEZZA, sait'-zai, an eminent city of Italy, province of Roma. There are the remains of an immense triple wall surrounding the rock on which the city stands. Pop. 6,000.

SFAX, sfax, a town of Tunis, in Northern Africa, on the north-east shore of the Gulf of Cabes. It consists of two parts, El Bled, inhabited exclusively by Mahomedans, and El Rhadh by Christians and Jews. The former is by far the more important division. Manf. Cottons and woollens. A large trade is carried on, especially in wool, oil, barrilla, sponges, and dried fruit. Pop. 13,500.

SFORZA, GIACOMO, or GIACOMUZZO, ATTENDOLO, surnamed sforz'-a (the compeller), founder of a famous Italian family of the name. He was brought up as a peasant and wood-cutter, but early in life he joined a company of adventurers, who gave their services upon hire to the petty rulers and republics of that period, and, after passing through the inferior military ranks, he became a leader. He was for a long time in the service of Joan, queen of Naples, who made him constable of the kingdom. Pope Martin V. appointed him gonfalonier of the holy church, and created him count de Cotignola, to which was added a large pension. He obliged Alphonso, King of Aragon, to raise the siege of Naples, and he retook several important places which had revolted. But being too eager in pursuing the flying enemy, he was drowned in the river Pescara.

Born 1369; died 1424.

SFORZA, FRANCESCO, natural son of the preceding, was brought up to the profession of arms under his father, and was with him at the time of his death. He was created a count, received some estates in Naples from Queen Joan, afterwards commanded with success against the King of Aragon; and on the death of Joan he attached himself to the Duke of Anjou, whom she had made her heir. The pope, the Venetians, and Florentines, elected him their general against the Duke of Milan, who purchased Sforza's alliance by giving him his daughter in marriage. On the duke's death the Milanese chose him for their general against the Venetians; but, after some actions, he turned his arms against themselves, besieged Milan, and compelled the inhabitants to elect him their duke. He also made himself master of Genoa and Savona. He was a man of great ability, patronized letters, and was a popular ruler.

Born 1401; died 1466.

SGRAVESANDE, WILLIAM JACOB, sgrav'-sand-e(r), a Dutch mathematician, who was sent to the university to study the law, and took his doctor's degree there in 1707. From his earliest years he had evinced a predilection for scientific knowledge. He visited England in 1715, and was elected a fellow of the Royal Society. After his return, he was appointed professor of mathematics at the university of Leyden. He was the first continental professor who taught the Newtonian philosophy.

Born in Holland, 1688; died 1742.

SHACKLEFORD, shak'-el-ford, a new county of Texas, United States. Area, 900 square miles. Pop. 2,037.

SHADWELL. (See LONDON.)

SHADWELL, THOMAS, an English dramatic poet, who studied for the law, but finding it distasteful, adopted literature as a profession. He produced a comedy, "The Sullen Lovers," which was successful and was followed by other productions of the same kind. When Dryden was removed from the office of poet laureate, Shadwell was appointed his successor. They had formerly been friends, but had quarrelled, Dryden ridiculing him under the appellation of MacFlecknoe, and as "Shadwell," who "never deviates into sense." Shadwell, was, however, a man of genius, and many of his dramatic pieces possess great merit. His principal pieces are, "Epsom Wells," "Timon the Misanthrope," the "Virtuoso," the "Gentleman of Alsatia," and the "Lancashire Witches."

Born in Norfolk, 1640; died 1692.

SHAFTESBURY, ANTHONY ASHLEY COOPER, Earl of, an English statesman, who, at the conclusion of his university career, entered upon public life, in 1640, as the parliamentary representative of Tewkesbury. Until 1643 he had adhered to the royal cause; but, having in that year taken umbrage at some act of the government, he, says Clarendon, "gave himself up body and soul to the service of the parliament, with an implacable animosity against the royal interest." He sat in the Barebones parliament, which was assembled by Cromwell after 1653; but, after the death of the Protector, he and Monk operated together to bring about the Restoration. When Charles II. ascended the throne, Sir Anthony was made governor of the Isle of Wight, chancellor of the exchequer, and received other important appointments in acknowledgment of his services. Moreover, he was raised to the peerage as Baron Ashley, and was one of the commissioners who sat upon the trial of the regicides, in 1670. He was created Earl of Shaftesbury in 1672, and lord chancellor, an office he held with little honour to himself, although he was complimented by Dryden, in "Absalom and Achitophel." The Duke of York, afterwards James II., succeeded in bringing about his dismissal from office, in 1673. Subsequently to this event, he entered into opposition, and lent all his energies to the harassing of the court party. His hostility to the government led to his being confined during a year in the King's Bench. He afterwards displayed so much eagerness in maintaining the truth of the infamous Titus Oates plot, that some historians have deemed it to be of his own invention. The next great measure in which he participated was in 1679, when he drew up and carried what was then called "Lord Shaftesbury's Act," now famous as the Habeas Corpus Act. His opposition to the succession of the Duke of York to the throne, and his intrigues with the Duke of Monmouth, led to his being committed to the Tower on a charge of high treason, in 1681. The bill of indictment was, however, ignored by the grand jury at the Old Bailey. Perceiving that it was the design of the court to effect his destruction, he endeavoured to form a plot for an armed insurrection; but, not succeeding in drawing his friends along with him in this desperate matter, he, in 1682, fled to Holland.

Born at Wimborne St. Giles's, Dorsetshire, 1621; died at Amsterdam, 1683.

SHAFTESBURY, ANTHONY COOPER, third Earl of, an English philosophical writer, was the grandson of the preceding. He was also the favourite of that statesman, who himself at first superintended the boy's education, afterwards conducted by the philosopher John Locke, who was his grandfather's friend. After travelling upon the continent, he returned to England, and entered the House of Commons in 1693, remaining there five years; at the end of which time, his health having suffered, he went to Holland. He succeeded to the earldom in the following year, and, during the few closing years of William III.'s reign, he distinguished himself by his eloquence in the House of Lords. Subsequently to the accession of Anne, he once more retired to Holland; but returned to his native country in two years; after which he devoted himself to literature. His most important works were: "Letter on Enthusiasm;" "Moralists, a Philosophical Rhapsody;" "Sensus Communis, or Essay on Wit and Humour;" "Soliloquy, or Advice to an Author;" and "Characteristics of Men, Manners, Opinions, and Times."

Born in London, 1671; died at Naples, 1713.

SHAFTESBURY, ANTHONY ASHLEY COOPER, seventh Earl of, a modern statesman and philanthropist. He completed his education at Christ Church, Oxford, and entered the House of Commons in 1826, as the representative of Woodstock. In the interval 1828-30 he was a commissioner of the Board of Control, and was lord of the Admiralty in the administration of Sir Robert Peel, 1834-5. As Lord Ashley he took charge of the Ten Hours' Bill and supported Sir Robert Peel in his measures with regard to the corn laws. The death of his father, in 1851, caused his accession to the peerage. He is an earnest and influential member of the "evangelical party" of the Established Church, and has distinguished himself by his support of any movement or society which had for its object to ameliorate the condition of the uneducated or neglected classes. In the religious world his influence is widely extended.

Born 1801. Died 1885.

SHAFTESBURY, a market town, and municipal and parliamentary borough of Dorsetshire, on an eminence, 27 miles N.E. of Dorchester. Its houses are chiefly built of stone dug out of the neighbouring eminences. Its principal edifices are St. Peter's, St. James's, rebuilt in 1867, on the site of an older edifice, two other churches, and several chapels. It formerly had an abbey, founded by Alfred the Great.

SHAH-ALUM I., sha'-a-lum, emperor of India, succeeded his father Aurungzebe, in 1707. His short reign was chiefly spent in contesting the throne with his two brothers, Azim and Cambaksh, who had been left the kingdoms of Bejapoor and the Deccan. Both these ambitious princes were defeated and slain in succession.

Died 1712.

SHAH-ALUM II. became nominally emperor in 1759. Unable to maintain his rule over the decaying empire, he, in 1765, sought the protection and assistance of the British, who assured him the possession of the city and district of Allahabad, and in return were granted Bengal, Behar, and Orissa, which territories formed the basis of the Anglo-Indian empire. When Delhi was taken in 1788, by Gholam Khadir, a Rohilla chief, Shah-Alum was deprived of his sight. In 1803, Lord Lake captured Delhi; whereupon the unhappy representative of the Mogul emperors became an English state-pensioner.

Died 1806.

SHAH-JEHAN, je-han', or "king of the world," the title taken by Khorrum-Shah, fifth Mogul emperor of India. He succeeded to the throne in 1627, and subdued the kingdom of Ahmednuggur, compelled the states of Bejapoor and Golconda to pay tribute, and commenced a fresh war in the Deccan; but, becoming prostrate with sickness in 1657, his four sons broke into revolt against his authority, and fought between themselves for the succession. Two of them, Aurungzebe and Mourad, united their forces against the elder brother, who was defeated and put to death by Aurungzebe. The two remaining brothers were subsequently got rid of by the same prince, who caused himself to be proclaimed emperor, and kept his father captive in Agra. (See AURUNGZEBE.) He was an able monarch, and the magnificence of his court was without parallel. He built the city of Shahjehanabad, or New Delhi; and the famous Taj-Mahal at Agra, as a tomb for his favourite queen.

Died at Agra, 1666.

SHAHJEHANPORE, sha-je-han-por', a town of British India, in the North-West Province, on the Gurra river, 50 miles E. of Bareilly. Pop. 75,000; of the district, 856,946.

SHAH ROKH BEHADIR, rok be-ha-dir', the fourth son and successor of Tamerlane. He defeated the Turcoman prince Kara Yousouf and his sons, restored the fortress of Herat in 1416, and rebuilt the city itself, which had been destroyed by his father. He appointed two of his sons governors of Mawarannahar (or the country beyond the Oxus) and of Persia; while he took with him a third as his subordinate in his Indian campaigns.

Died at Ray, Persia, 1448.

SHAH-ZEMAUN, king of Cabul and Afghanistan, who, with the view of driving the Mahrattas from Delhi, penetrated into India as far as Lahore, in 1795-8; but his brother Mahmoud having attempted to seize the crown, he was compelled to return to Cabul, where he was defeated and blinded by Mahmoud, who became king.

Died 1810.

SHAKSPEARE, SHAKESPEARE, or SHAKSPERE, WILLIAM, shake'-speer, the greatest dramatic poet of England, and, by universal consent, of the world. Less is known of the details of his personal history than of that of almost any man of great eminence since the invention of printing. He left no autobiography; not a scrap of his handwriting, except three signatures to legal documents, has been preserved; contemporary allusions to him are singularly scanty, and except one or two magnificent compliments paid to him by Ben Jonson and others, and later by Milton, and incidental references of a doubtful character, there is little to show that his mighty and universal genius was appreciated by his contemporaries. Indeed the remarkable absence of reference to him in contemporary literature has induced some writers to suppose that he was an obscure theatrical manager, who availed himself of the poverty of the dissolute men of genius, of whom there were so many in the Elizabethan age, to obtain works by them which were afterwards supposed to have been written by himself; while the even wilder theory has lately been vigorously maintained by an American writer, that the dramas generally known as Shakspeare's were really the work of the great Lord Bacon, who did not wish his own name to appear in connection with the productions. These absurd suppositions are utterly untenable when exposed to the light of criticism. For more than a century after the death of Shakspeare, a fashion prevailed in literature which ignored the lustre of his genius, and even the great actors of the latter part of the last and of the early part of the present century, while professing an enthusiastic admiration, were content to perform in mutilated versions of his plays, "adapted" and altered by inferior hands. To the great German critics is, in no inconsiderable measure, due the more universal recognition of the unrivalled powers of our national poet; and for many years past enthusiastic investigators have been seeking for authentic materials for the production of a more adequate biography than Nicholas Rowe, a loving and industrious investigator, was able to obtain when preparing his edition of Shakspeare's works. Records have been searched at Stratford and in London, every clue that could be found has been traced with scrupulous care; and assisted by the labours of Charles Knight, Halliwell, Dyce, Collier, Hudson, and others we are enabled to present a biographical sketch, very deficient in details, but accurate in the main. William Shakspeare was the third child and first son of John Shakspeare, an inhabitant of Stratford-on-Avon, Warwickshire, described in town records as a glover, and by tradition as a dealer in wool, no doubt combining trade with farming on a small scale, as before his marriage he was the owner of two small copyhold estates, and, afterwards, by right of his wife, of a farm of 56 acres and other properties. He was evidently a substantial townsman, and was chosen constable, chamberlain, and, a year after the poet's birth, bailiff of Stratford, rising afterwards to the position of head alderman. His wife was Mary Arden, the youngest of seven daughters, and apparently the favourite, of Robert Arden, a gentleman of some wealth, descended from one of the oldest families of Warwickshire, members of which held important offices in the court of Henry VII. Mary Arden was married to John Shakspeare probably about the end of 1557. The future poet, then, was born into a comfortable condition of life. His father was, for his position, a well-to-do man, of mark in his native town; his mother was of a wealthier and more courtly strain, united with historical associations and a long and honourable genealogy. Neither mother nor father could write their names, but to do so was rather an uncommon accomplishment even with persons far higher in the social scale. John Shakspeare, however, seems to have resolved that his son should enjoy better educational advantages, and sent him to the Stratford grammar school, founded by Thomas Jolyffe, in the reign of Edward IV., and established by a charter of Edward VI., as "the King's new school." Here the boy made an acquaintance with at least the elements of classical learning, and perhaps also with the pedantry of schoolmasters, whom he afterwards good-humouredly ridiculed in the characters of Sir Hugh Evans and Holofernes. When he was 11 years of age his father added to his property by purchasing two houses, with gardens and orchards. One of these houses, there is some reason to believe, was that now carefully preserved and shown as "the birth-place of Shakspeare," which of course it may have been, as his father may have lived in it before purchasing, but the matter is at least doubtful. About this time Queen Elizabeth made her memorable visit to Kenilworth, only 14 miles from Stratford, and no doubt the young William, an active lad, with traditions of his maternal ancestors' connection with the court of the Tudors in his memory, and his vivid and picturesque imagination, contrived to see something of the splendid pageantry, or at least of the visitors, with their troops of retainers thronging the Warwickshire roads on the way to the castle. Warwick Castle, too, one of the noblest aristocratic residences in England, is only 8 miles from Stratford, and armed knights, men-at-arms, pages, and serving-men must have been familiar objects to the Stratford boy, who had in them models to be afterwards elaborated into the characters of his chivalrous and historical plays. There was another and even a stronger influence moulding the mental powers and directing the inclinations of the future dramatist. Strolling companies of actors frequently performed in the town under the sanction of the authorities, and were, in some cases (especially in the case of the players in the service of the Earl of Leicester), paid by the town treasurer. As a leading townsman, John Shakspeare no doubt attended these performances, and there can be very little doubt that William contrived to witness them also, finding there, it may well be guessed, the originals of the player troop in "Hamlet." That the Earl of Leicester's players were considerably superior to common strolling mummers is shown by the fact that in 1574 (when Shakspeare was 10 years old), they received a patent under the great seal, and were afterwards known as "the Lord Chamberlain's servants," famous in English dramatic history. Shakspeare was a little over 18 when he married. Living at Shottery, a pleasant village adjoining Stratford, was Richard Hathaway, and his daughter Anne was eight years older than William, but still so young, and he a manly and precocious youth, with an appearance and manner no doubt in advance of his years, that no great disparity was perceptible. They had probably been associated from childhood, their parents being intimate friends, and an attachment ripened which it would seem led to a "love troth," not unfrequently in those days held as morally justifying pre-marital privileges, if marriage were really intended. Certainly, they were married hurriedly—some trouble being taken to obtain permission to shorten the time before the performance of the ceremony after the first publication of the banns—in November, 1582, and in the May following a daughter, Susanna, was born. In less than two years afterwards, twins, Hamnet and Judith, were born, and about a year afterwards Shakspeare left his wife and young family and repaired to London. There have been many speculations regarding his motives for taking this step. Some writers suppose, on very slight foundation, that he was weary of his wife; and a local tradition, long preserved and generally accepted by early biographers, asserts that he was engaged in a deer-stealing expedition in the park of Sir Thomas Lucy, at Charlecote, was prosecuted, and revenged himself by some bitter verses, which so enraged Sir Thomas, that Shakspeare found it advisable to leave the town to avoid the consequences of the anger of the knight, who seems to have been much disliked by the young townsmen generally. That there are allusions to Lucy and his coat of arms in "The Merry Wives of Windsor" is certain; but there are other and more probable reasons why Shakspeare should have quitted Stratford. His father was no longer the prosperous person he was in earlier days. He had become involved in law proceedings, and could not probably longer assist his son. William himself, with no definite means of support, had a young family coming rapidly upon him. He had tried, it would seem unsuccessfully, several trades—some local traditions say butchering and school-keeping among them; and knowing, as he could not fail to know, that he had capabilities demanding a wider field for exertion than a little dull country town could afford, he desired to find it in London. Among the players who had performed at Stratford were Robert Greene, a townsman, four or five years older than himself, and Richard Burbage, now risen into great repute at the Blackfriars' Theatre, as the best tragic actor of the day and leading member of the Earl of Leicester's company; and it is far from an extravagant supposition that Shakspeare himself, possessing such a marvellous dramatic talent, may have appeared upon the Stratford boards. To London he went, and at once obtained employment in a subordinate capacity, but, having a fine person and qualifications of face and voice, he attained (though not without exciting considerable jealousy), a good position in the company, of which, however, Burbage for his great histrionic ability remained the leading member. Dramatic authorship was soon added to the actor's vocation. In conjunction with Greene, perhaps with Marlowe and others, he produced one or more plays, and appears to have given himself with marvellous industry to the study of foreign, especially Italian, works of fiction and poetry. In less than four years he had produced the first part of "Henry VI.," "The Comedy of Errors," "The Two Gentlemen of Verona" (which contains the germs of several of his later masterpieces of character), "Love's Labour's Lost," "Taming of the Shrew," "Titus Andronicus" and "Pericles" (in both of which the work of other and inferior hands is very visible). In 1593 he published "Venus and Adonis," which, in the preface he speaks of as "the first heir of my invention," and which was probably a very youthful production, and dedicated it to the Earl of Southampton, who thenceforth became his fast friend. Next year appeared the "Rape of Lucrece," and shortly afterwards the mysterious "Sonnets," dedicated to "Mr. W. H.," who most critics suppose to have been William Herbert, Earl of Pembroke, a view recently contradicted with much vigour. They are exquisitely beautiful in diction, exhibiting occasionally an intensity of suppressed pathos and self-reproach, and of passionate love, which neither critic nor mental philosopher can satisfactorily explain. In some parts they would appear to indicate that the lowest depths of moral degradation had been reached; at others, that a mighty and mysterious passion was shaking the soul of the writer. One explanation is that they are only dramatic in character; that the writer only simulated the moods he expressed; another is that they were the result of a morbid state of mind, not unfrequent with men of keen susceptibility, which he soon outgrew. There are some passages which would appear to have been written in the ardour of his early love for Anne Hathaway. The Earl of Southampton made a handsome gift in return for the dedication of "Lucrece"—it is said, a thousand pounds—and in conjunction with Burbage and others, Shakspeare became a proprietor of the new and large Globe Theatre at Southwark. A younger brother, Edmund, followed him to London, adopted the profession of a player, died in 1607, and was buried in St. Saviour's, Southwark. Queen Elizabeth seems to have heard of Shakspeare's reputation, and to have read some of his plays, for she commanded several performances in her presence; and Shakspeare, in courtly fashion, paid her a magnificent compliment in "A Midsummer Night's Dream," which she was not likely to forget. His fame and fortune increased, he was prudent and knew the value of money as an aid to the accomplishment of the leading aim of his moderate ambition—that of becoming an independent gentleman in his native town, to which he made a yearly visit (which would scarcely have been the case if he had quitted his wife in anger or disgust, or if he had feared the ill-will of Sir Thomas Lucy). In 11 years he had realised enough to be able to purchase "New Place," formerly the residence of the Cloptons, a wealthy family of Stratford, and known as "the great house"—the best house in Stratford, with gardens and outbuildings. He had by this time produced "King John," "Richard II.," "A Midsummer Night's Dream," and "All's Well that Ends Well." Two years afterwards, in pursuance of his cherished aim, he obtained, not without great difficulty, and after three years' demur of the heralds, a coat of arms, as a gentleman, for his father, then an impoverished old man, on the ground of his marriage with a descendant of the Ardens of Henley. The profession he had adopted prevented Shakspeare himself becoming an armiger, or gentleman, from the heralds' point of view, but if the dignity were granted to his father, he, as eldest son, would inherit it, and so his object be attained. The first part of "Henry IV." appeared in 1598; "Romeo and Juliet" (previously published in a very crude form, little more than a sketch), in 1600, and within the next four years, "The Merchant of Venice," "Much Ado About Nothing," the second part of "Henry IV.," "Henry V.," "As You Like It," "The Merry Wives of Windsor" (said to have been suggested by Queen Elizabeth), "Twelfth Night," the original sketch of "Hamlet" (appearing in its matured strength and beauty a year afterwards), and "Othello." His London career was now ended. He appears to have set little value on his reputation as author or actor, but to have been careful to establish himself independently. He took no pains, apparently, to secure the correct printing of his plays, but left them to reach the public through the medium of editions published by actors of his company. Such was his mental affluence that he gave his treasures to the world with a magnificent prodigality and carelessness as to their value, as an eastern monarch might scatter jewels, not counting the cost. He had apparently a great love for his native county, and it would be ungenerous to suppose that domestic affections did not increase this attachment. Warwickshire names, phrases and allusions, descriptions of scenery characteristic of that midland county, of the country customs and superstitions familiar to his boyhood, frequently occur throughout his works. Before he returned to Stratford, about 1604, his father had died, and he therefore had inherited the coat of arms and position of "gentleman;" he had purchased property in Bishopsgate, London, and had added 107 acres of arable land and other property to his Stratford possessions. A year afterwards, having settled down as a Warwickshire gentleman, he paid £440 for the unexpired lease of tithes in Stratford, and in 1613 purchased more property in London, which he occasionally visited. The Homeric legends had already attracted his attention, and Chaucer's version of the story of Cressida was probably the immediate origin of "Troilus and Cressida," written shortly before he left London; and now, in his leisure he turned to Roman history, as seen chiefly through the medium of Plutarch, and to early British history. From the study of the old chroniclers, Holinshed and others, came "Macbeth," "Lear," and "Cymbeline;" from Roman history, "Julius Cæsar," "Coriolanus," and "Antony and Cleopatra." The dates of the composition of the plays is uncertain, and much critical ingenuity has been displayed in endeavouring to fix them; but there is reason to believe that his last effort was one of the most beautiful, "The Tempest;" and that, in the full maturity of his powers, he laid down his pen as the magician Prospero laid down his magic wand. "Henry VIII." is perhaps the next latest,—a reverting to English history suggested by the death of Queen Elizabeth. He lived to see his daughters married (his son had died in infancy), and his eldest, Mrs. Hall, a woman of admirable character, and inheriting much of her father's mental qualities, is buried near him in the chancel of Stratford church. His second daughter, Judith, was married to a Mr. Quiney, and the only scrap of personal correspondence respecting Shakspeare is a letter from this Quiney asking for a loan of money. Shakspeare kept up a liberal house, receiving visitors, and discharging with kindly grace his duties as a country gentleman. He died on the 53rd anniversary of his birth, and it has been stated that his death was caused by excess at a "merry meeting" with Drayton and Ben Jonson, but the only foundation for the story is an entry in the diary of Mr. Ward, the vicar of Stratford, made more than forty years after the poet's death. That Shakspeare died of a fever is quite probable; and the "hard drinking" may have been a very gratuitous assumption. There is no reason to suppose that he lived on other than affectionate terms with his wife; and although much has been said as to the bequest to her, in his will, of "his second-best bed," as a contemptuous slight, Mr. Knight has shown that by the ordinary operation of law she was entitled to dower from his freehold estates. To his daughter Susanna he bequeathed his house, with "appurtenances," including, we may suppose, the furniture. The first-best bed was probably reserved for visitors, in the hospitable fashion of the time, and the "second best bed" was that on which the husband and wife slept, and so especially valued as a memorial. Shakspeare wrote altogether 35 complete five-act plays; a considerable portion of two others ("Pericles" and "Titus Andronicus"), and probably more or less assisted in other dramatic productions; and his early poems would alone suffice to place him in the very first rank of English poets. His genius was phenomenal, and almost universal in its scope, exhibiting a combination of imaginative power, intellectual and moral insight, sympathy with every emotion human nature can experience, and every form of beauty, gaiety, and tenderness, a power of inspiring terror, and love, no phase of which has been rivalled by any other poet or dramatist. Some other men of genius have felt themselves isolated and unhappy because they were greater than their fellows. His mind was so familiarized with wonderful things by the fulness of his nature that he had no feeling of isolation, and morbid egotism was impossible.

Born at Stratford, 1564; died 1616.

SHAMAKA, or SHAMACHI, sha'-ma-ka, a town of Asiatic Russia, in Transcaucasia, government of Baku, on the Aksu river. Manf. Silk, cotton, and leather; and an active trade is carried on. Pop. 29,500.—In 1859 the town was almost destroyed by an earthquake.

SHAMMAI, sham'-ma-i, a doctor of the Jewish law, in the time of Herod, judge of the Sanhedrim, and head of a school known as "the house of Shammai." He was remarkable for Jewish exclusiveness and fanatical zeal.

Lived in the 1st century.

SHAMO, sha'-mo, a vast sandy desert of Central Asia. (See GOBI.)

SHAMYL. (See SCHAMYL.)

SHANGHAI, shang-hi', the most important seaport of China, on the left bank of the Woosung river, 12 miles above its entry into the Yang-tse Kiang. It is surrounded by a wall, and is generally wretchedly built. There are several temples, and the European Roman Catholics have a massive cathedral, and the Baptists a chapel with a lofty spire. Lower down the river are the English settlements, ship yards, docks, engineering shops, and an arsenal of the Chinese government. In the English part there are a chamber of commerce, and a literary institution. The London Missionary Society has established an hospital. In 1877 a Gothic cross, 36 feet high, was erected to the memory of Mr. Margary, the English officer who was murdered in Western China in February, 1876. The principal exports are tea, silk, and opium. Pop. 350,000.

SHANNON, shan'-non, the largest river in Ireland, rising in the Cuilcagh mountains, Cavan, and, pursuing a southern and south-westerly direction, divides the provinces of Leinster and Munster from Connaught. Above Limerick it is generally known as the Upper Shannon; beyond that town to the sea, the Lower Shannon. It falls into the Atlantic Ocean, between Kerry Head and Loop Head, after a course of 220 miles. The navigation has been greatly improved by a large outlay. It traverses several large lakes, and forms many extensive bays and estuaries, interspersed with beautiful islands. It receives above thirty other rivers in its course. From the number of rivers, lakes, and springs, flowing into it, the mouth of the Shannon is increased to an immense magnitude, being nearly 10 miles in breadth for the last 15 miles, and from 20 to 30 fathoms deep.

SHANNON, a county of Missouri, United States. Area, 1,150 square miles. Pop. 2,500.

SHAN-SE, shan-se', a province of the north-west of China, bounded N. by Mongolia. It is generally mountainous, and one of the finest mineral districts of the empire, abounding in iron, coal, copper, and marble. Area, 55,268 square miles. Pop. 12,211,453.—The capital is Tae-quen-foo.

SHAN-TUNG, shan-toong', a maritime province of China; is mountainous in the east, and intersected in the west by the Grand Canal. Area, 65,000 square miles. Pop. 36,247,835.—The capital is Tse-nan-foo.

SHAN STATES, the name given to several states, in Indo-China, those in the north being tributary to Burmah, and those in the south to Siam. A considerable portion of the territory is included in LAOS.

SHAN-TUK, or TY-LOONG, a town of China, province of Kwang-tung, between the Canton and Western rivers. It consists of a walled city and large suburbs. Pop. Unascertained.

SHAO-KING, or TCHAO-KHING, sha-o-king', a town of China, province of Kwang-tung, on the left bank of the Si-Kiang, 80 miles from the sea at Macao. It is a fine and densely populated town, in the centre of a district famous for tea and the grass used for making mats.

SHAOU-HING-FOO, sha-oo-ing-foo', a town of China, province of Che-Keang, on an affluent of the Hwuy-chow, 20 miles S.E. of Hang-chow. It is walled and fortified, and a large trade, especially in tea, is carried on. Pop. 270,000.

SHARJAH, shar'-yah, a town and port of Arabia, on the Persian Gulf. The harbour is small. A large export and import trade is carried on, it being emporium for the goods of Persia and India, and also a largely frequented slave market. Pop. 25,000, of mixed races.

SHARP, GRANVILLE, an English writer and advocate for the abolition of negro slavery. He was educated for the bar, but never practised. He wrote several excellent works upon law, philology, &c.; but it was as an opponent of negro slavery that he became known, both by his writings and by his conduct upon a particular occasion, when he protected a negro against the master, by whom he had been brought to England. Sharp brought an action against the master, and, in the end, twelve judges declared it to be the law of the land, that when a slave sets foot upon English territory he is free. He also wrote against the war with the Americans, the impressment of seamen, &c.

Born 1734; died 1813.

SHARP, JAMES, a Scotch prelate, who was educated at Aberdeen, afterwards visited England, and, on his return, was appointed professor of philosophy at St. Andrews, soon after the Restoration, was advanced to the archbishopric of St. Andrews, and had the management of ecclesiastical affairs in Scotland; but his conduct gave so much offence to the Covenanters and Presbyterians, that he was dragged from his coach and murdered.

Born at the castle of Banff, 1613; died 1679.

SHARP, a county of Arkansas, United States. Area, 600 square miles. Pop. 9,000. The capital is Evening Shade.

SHASTA, shas'-ta, a county of California, United States. Area, 4,500 square miles. Pop. 9,500. The capital is Shasta.

SHAT-EL-ARAB. (See EUPHRATES.)

SHATZK, or CHATZK, shatzk, a town of Russia, government of Tambov, on the Chatcha, 95 miles N.W. of Tambov. There is a trade in grain, cattle, iron, and hemp. Pop. 6,500.

SHAWANO, sha-wa'-no, a county of Wisconsin, United States. Area, 1,500 square miles. Pop. 10,371. The capital is Shawano.

SHAWNEE, shaw-ne', a county of Kansas, United States. Area, 546 square miles. Pop. 29,093. The capital is TOPEKA.

SHEBOYGAN, she-boy'-gan, a town and port of Wisconsin, United States, at the mouth of the Sheboygan river, on the west side of Lake Michigan. There is a good harbour, and a large trade is carried on in wheat and timber. Pop. 7,000, including a large number of Germans.

SHEBOYGAN, a county of Wisconsin, United States. Area, 500 square miles. Pop. 34,000. The capital is SHEBOYGAN.

SHEE, SIR MARTIN ARCHER, she, an eminent Irish portrait painter, who became president of the Royal Academy. In 1788 he quitted Dublin for London, where he was introduced by Edmund Burke to Sir Joshua Reynolds. In 1800 he was elected an R.A., and was chosen president of the Royal Academy, after the death of Lawrence in 1830. He was knighted upon the same occasion.

Born at Dublin, 1770; died 1850.

SHEERNESS, sheer-ness', a market-town and seaport of the county of Kent, at the north-western extremity of the Isle of Sheppey, at the confluence of the Medway with the Thames, 11 miles N.E. of Chatham. There are a large naval arsenal, and a very fine dockyard, recently greatly extended and improved, occupying 60 acres, and comprising wet and dry docks, storehouses, and the residences of the port admiral and other officials. The town is divided into Blue-town (including the official portion), Mile Town, Marine Town, and Westminster. The neighbourhood is now much resorted to for sea bathing, and there are a fine beach and cliffs. The harbour is large and safe. An extensive oyster fishery is carried on. Pop. 14,000.—A station on the London, Chatham, and Dover railway. In 1667 Sheerness was taken by the Dutch under De Ruyter.

SHEFFIELD, shef'-feeld, a manufacturing town, and municipal and parliamentary borough of the West Riding of Yorkshire, beautifully situated on several hills, at the confluence of the rivers Sheaf and Don. In the older part are steep and irregular streets. The parish church of St. Peter and the Holy Trinity, supposed to have been erected in the 12th century (the nave was rebuilt in 1805), is cruciform, 240 feet long and 130 broad, and has interesting monuments. It has been recently enlarged and beautified at an expense of £20,000, and was reopened in October, 1880. St. Paul's, St. James's, St. Philip's, and St. Mary's, are interesting buildings, and there are two very fine modern churches—All Saints, a cruciform structure, erected in 1867, and Sharrow church, built in 1868—23 other churches, and about as many chapels, and St. Mary's, the Roman Catholic church, with a tower 200 feet high. Other important buildings are the town-hall, cutlers'-hall, corn-exchange, large Albert-hall, erected in 1873; the police buildings, savings'-bank, and a club-house, and masonic-hall, opened in 1877, having been erected at a cost of £10,000. The market-hall, or Norfolk market, was erected by the Duke of Norfolk at a cost of £40,000. There are assembly-rooms, theatres, numerous educational institutions, a mechanics' institute, school of art, free library, and a public museum. There are statues of Ebenezer Elliott, the "Corn Law rhymer," and James Montgomery, the poet, and a Crimean memorial. There are three public parks—the Weston; Frith Park, presented by Mr. Mark Frith at a cost of £30,000, and opened in 1875 by the Prince of Wales; and Norfolk Park, consisting of three large open spaces in the densest part of the town, given by the Duke of Norfolk in 1876. There are a botanic garden and three cemeteries. Manf. Cutlery, for which the town has been celebrated for more than 500 years, plated goods, tools, machinery, buttons, armour-plates for ironclad ships, railway springs and rails. Pop. 284,410. A station on the Great-Northern, North-Eastern, Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire, Midland, and London and North-Western railways.—The origin and remote history of Sheffield are unknown. It existed as a town under the Saxons, and afterwards was distinguished for its castle, a strong fortress, situate on the north-east side of the town, near the confluence of the two rivers, and supposed to have been built during the reign of Henry I. During the civil wars in the time of Charles I., its castle sustained a long siege for the king. Scarcely a vestige of it can now be discerned.

SHEFFIELD, JOHN, Duke of Buckinghamshire. (See BUCKINGHAMSHIRE, Duke of.)

SHEHR, shair, a maritime town of Arabia on the south coast, 35 miles from Makallah. Manf. Coarse cotton goods, arms, and gunpowder. Considerable trade is carried on. Pop. 6,000.

SHEIL, RICHARD LALOR, sheel, an Irish politician and diplomatist, who studied law at Lincoln's Inn, and afterwards in Ireland, where he was called to the bar in 1814. The expenses of his student career were defrayed by the proceeds of five tragedies, the most successful of which was "Adelaide," and in which Miss O'Neill enacted the principal part. A zealous Roman Catholic and talented orator, he, in 1822, became a member of the Catholic Association, against the measure proposed for the suppression of which, he, in 1825, together with O'Connell, pleaded at the bar of the House of Lords. In 1829 he was enabled to enter the House of Commons, through the interest of the Marquis of Anglesea, who was at the time lord-lieutenant of Ireland, and had observed the powers of the impassioned declaimer. His oratorical powers expanded and ripened in the House of Commons, and in truth paved the way for his entrance into office. He was appointed a commissioner of Greenwich Hospital, and, in 1839, became vice-president of the Board of Trade, and a member of the privy council. Upon the return of the Whigs to office in 1846, Sheil became master of the Mint, which office he retained till 1850, at which date he was nominated British minister at the court of Tuscany.

Born at Dublin, 1793; died at Florence, 1851.

SHELBURNE, WILLIAM PETTY, Earl of, shel'-burn, an English statesman, who, in early life, entered the army and distinguished himself at the battles of Minden and Kampen. When George III. ascended the throne, in 1760, he became the king's aide-de-camp, and subsequently reached the grade of major-general. He succeeded to the earldom of Shelburne in the following year. At first a supporter of Bute, under whom he held office, his views relative to the impolicy of coercing the Americans led to his entrangement from that minister, and to his subsequent attachment to the Earl of Chatham, of whom he became an ardent admirer, and unswerving supporter. In 1782 he was called upon to form an administration, and entered office with the declaration that he would adhere to all those "constitutional ideas which, for seven years, he had imbibed from his master in politics, the late Earl of Chatham." During his ministry, although it extended over only seven months, the siege of Gibraltar came to a glorious termination, and Howe and Rodney won their triumphs upon the seas. He retired from office in 1783, resigning the leadership of his party to William Pitt. He was created Marquis of Lansdowne in 1784, and henceforth took little share in public affairs.

Born 1737; died 1805.

SHELBY, shel'-be, the name of 9 counties of the United States:—

ALABAMA.—Area, 900 square miles. Pop. 17,236, nearly one-third being coloured. The capital is Columbina.

TENNESSEE.—Area, 720 square miles. Pop. 78,430, nearly half being coloured. The capital is MEMPHIS.
TEXAS.—Area, 844 square miles. Pop. 9,523, about one-third being coloured. The capital is Shelbyville.

SHELDON, GILBERT, an English prelate, who received various preferments, and was appointed clerk of the closet to Charles I., whom he attended in the Isle of Wight, and for his loyalty was deprived of his appointments and imprisoned. At the Restoration he was made dean of the chapel royal and bishop of London. On the death of Archbishop Juxon he was raised to the primacy, in which situation he conducted himself with great zeal for the church, and expended above £66,000 in charitable uses.

Born at Staunton, Staffordshire, 1598; died 1677.

SHELLEY, PERCY BYSSHE, shel'-le, an English poet, son of Sir Timothy Shelley, and descended from an old Sussex family. He was instructed in Greek and Latin by the vicar of the parish of Warnham, in Sussex; but, on attaining his 10th year, he was sent to a school at Brentford, which was exchanged for that of Eton three years afterwards. A shy, diffident boy, whose appearance and manners were almost feminine, he was nevertheless of an unconquerable spirit. At Eton he not only improved his knowledge of Greek and Latin, but added French and German to his intellectual stores. He quitted Eton in 1809, and returned to his father's house, where he finished two romances commenced at Eton, and wrote verses to a cousin, with whom he had fallen in love. He proceeded to University College, Oxford, in 1810, and in his second year of residence printed an anonymous "Defence of Atheism." The object he seems to have had in view, was not so much to express his own opinions, as to excite discussion, and to draw forth the ideas of others upon his thesis. He sent copies of his pamphlet to the heads of colleges, who, having heard that he was the author, summoned him before them. He was requested to state whether he was the author. He declined to do so: but he would not state that he was not. He was expelled. His father refused to see him; upon which he took up his residence in London, where he completed his "Queen Mab." He had previously published two romances "Zastrozzo," and "St. Irvyne," and, in conjunction with Mr. G. Lewis, produced a small volume of verse. His father becoming reconciled to him, wished him to enter upon a political career, but he soon afterwards incurred his parent's lasting displeasure by eloping with, and marrying, at Gretna, Harriet Westbrook, the daughter of a retired hotel-keeper, and he afterwards, for the sake of making the legitimacy of his children beyond doubt, re-married her at St. George's, Hanover Square. He soon afterwards met with Mary Godwin, daughter of William Godwin, the author of "Caleb Williams," and Mary Wollstonecraft, and was inspired with a passion, which was one of the causes leading to a separation from his wife in 1813. He went abroad in the following year, and visited France, Germany, and Switzerland, in company with Mary Godwin, by whom he had children, and whom he subsequently married. The year 1815 was the happiest he had known for some time. His father agreed to allow him an income of £800 a year; and, while residing in Devonshire and at Great Marlow, he was deeply absorbed with his literary compositions. "Alastor" was produced at this period. In 1816 his wife committed suicide, whereupon Shelley claimed his two children, the issue of this marriage. But his late wife's father commenced a suit in chancery, alleging that Shelley, as one holding atheistical opinions, was disqualified to have charge of his offspring. Lord Chancellor Eldon decided that the children should be committed to Mr. Westbrook's care. He felt this decision to be unjust and tyrannical; and, in the "Revolt of Islam," which was written in 1817, made several allusions to the harsh decree. This poem originally bore another title, and the author was unable to find a publisher until he had considerably altered it, and excised passages justifying incest. In the following year he left England, to which he was destined never to return. Milan, Rome, Florence, and Leghorn were his halting-places during the three succeeding years. It was in that interval that he made the acquaintance of Lord Byron, with whom he passed much of his time. In July, 1822, after being absent some days from his house on the Gulf of Spezzia, he set sail, in a boat which belonged to himself, in company with his friend Lieutenant Williams. A squall overtaking the light craft, she went down, and the friends perished. An attempt has lately been made to show that his death was purposely contrived by a boatman employed for the purpose; but the assertion rests on very shallow evidence. His body was afterwards washed ashore; and, in accordance with the laws of Tuscany, that everything so cast up from the sea should be burned, all that was mortal of the great poet was consumed to ashes, which were collected, and afterwards placed in the Protestant burying-ground at Rome. Both Lord Byron and Mr. Leigh Hunt were at the last ceremony. In addition to the poems already mentioned, he wrote the tragedy of "The Cenci," "Adonais" (a monody upon the death of Keats), "Prometheus Unbound," and a number of smaller pieces. As a poet, he has been well described as "a genius unsurpassed in the description and imagination of scenes of beauty and grandeur; in the expression of impassioned love of ideal beauty; in the illustration of deep feeling by congenial imagery, and in the infinite variety of harmonious versification."

Born near Horsham, Sussex, 1792; died 1823.

SHELLEY, MARY WOLLSTONECRAFT, an English authoress, and wife of the preceding. While a resident in Italy with her husband, she wrote her remarkable novel, entitled "Frankenstein." After the poet's death, she produced "The Last Man," "Falkland," "Rambles in Germany and Italy;" and in 1839 made a collected edition of Shelley's works, to which she added some judicious notes, and a selection from the poet's letters.

Born 1797; died in London, 1851.

SHENANDOAH, shen'-an-do'-a, a river of the United States, in Virginia, rising in two branches near the centre of the state, and draining the valley between the principal range of the Alleghanies and the Blue Ridge, and, after a course of 170 miles, joining the Potomac.

SHENANDOAH, a county of Virginia, United States. Area, 500 square miles. Pop. 18,000. The capital is Woodstock.

SHENDY, shen'-de, a town of Lower Nubia, Africa, on the right bank of the Nile, 100 miles below Khartoum. Pop. 10,000.

SHEN-SE, shen-se', a central province of China, having a mountainous surface. It produces millet, rhubarb, timber, musk, iron, copper, jasper, and gold. Area, 67,400 square miles. Pop. 8,432,193. The capital is Se-gan-foo.

SHENSTONE, WILLIAM, shen'-stone, an English poet, who, after completing his education at Pembroke College, Oxford, spent some time in travelling. Subsequently, he retired to his paternal estate at Hales-Owen, which he greatly improved and ornamented, making it a model of the artificial style of landscape gardening of the period. His works consist of songs, elegies, the exquisite "Pastoral Ballad," and a poem in Spenser's manner, entitled, "The Schoolmistress;" letters, and miscellaneous essays.

Born at Hales-Owen, Shropshire, 1714; died 1763.

SHEPPEY, ISLE OF, shep'-pe, an island of the county of Kent, situate at the mouth of the Thames and Medway, and separated from the mainland by an arm of the sea called the Swale. It is about 11 miles in length and 8 in breadth. (See KENT.)

SHEPTON MALLET, shep'-ton mal'-let, a market-town of Somersetshire, 17 miles S. of Bath. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a large and handsome building, having a tower at the west end. It was partially rebuilt in 1837. Manf. Crapes, velvets, serges, and woollen stockings. A large corn-market is held. Pop. 5,322.—A station on the Great Western and London and South-Western railways.

SHERBORNE, or SHERBOURNE, sher'-born, a market-town of Dorsetshire, on the Yeo, 18 miles N.W. of Dorchester. Its principal building is a church, a magnificent cruciform structure, recently restored. It was originally built by Bishop Aldhelm, but was almost wholly renewed in the time of King Henry VI. Manf. Silk throwing. Pop. 5,053.—A station on the Great Western and London and South-Western railways.

SHERBROOKE, sher'-brook, a town of Quebec province, dominion of Canada, on the Magog, 95 miles S.E. of Montreal. There are a Roman Catholic and four Protestant churches. Manf. Woollen and cotton goods, paper, leather, iron ware, and railway carriages. Pop. 7,227.

SHERBROOKE, a county of Quebec province. Area, 219 square miles. Pop. 12,221, nearly half of French origin. The capital is SHERBROOKE.

SHERBURNE, sher'-burn, a county of Minnesota, United States. Area, 445 square miles. Pop. 2,500. The capital is Orono.

SHERIDAN, THOMAS, sher'-i-dan, an Irish divine and poet. At the conclusion of his educational career at the university of Dublin, he set up a school in Dublin, and afterwards was master of one at Cavan, which he sold, as he also did a living procured for him by Dean Swift, with whom he was in close intimacy. He was an improvident man; but, says Lord Cork, "his pen and fiddlestick were in continual motion." He translated into verse the "Satires" of Persius and the "Philoctetes" of Sophocles.

Born in the county of Cavan, Ireland, 1684; died 1738.

SHERIDAN, THOMAS, son of the preceding. He was educated at Westminster school, and next at Trinity College, Dublin, where he took a degree in arts. The death of his father leaving him without resources, he, in 1743, appeared on the stage in the character of Richard III. The year following he performed at Covent-Garden theatre. He afterwards became manager of the Dublin theatre, and, at a later period, an itinerant lecturer on elocution. He obtained a pension from George II. In 1776 he succeeded Garrick as manager of Drury Lane theatre, which situation he resigned in 1779. He now returned to his literary labours, and to reading occasional lectures. His principal works are, "A Dictionary of the English Language," "Lectures on the Art of Reading," "British Education; or, the Source of the Disorders of Great Britain;" "Life of Swift," prefixed to his works.

Born at Quilca, Ireland, 1721; died 1788.

SHERIDAN, FRANCES, wife of the above (maiden name Chamberlayne), was an accomplished woman, and wrote "Sidney Biddulph," a novel; a romance entitled "Nourjahad;" and "The Discovery," a comedy.

Born in Ireland, 1724; died at Blois, 1767.

SHERIDAN, RICHARD BRINSLEY, orator and dramatist, was the son of the preceding. After being at school in Dublin, he was sent to Harrow, which establishment he quitted with the character of an "impenetrable dunce," who wrote "think" for "thing." He commenced life by eloping to France with Miss Linley, a popular singer, whom, in 1773, he secretly married. During the first years of his marriage he appears to have subsisted upon a sum of £3,000, "which a good-natured old gentleman had settled upon Miss Linley, in default of being able to marry her." In 1775, however, he directed his attention towards literature, and produced his comedy of "The Rivals," which, upon the first representation, was unsuccessful, but subsequently became popular. The farce of "St. Patrick's Day" was his second production, which was quickly followed by the "Duenna," a comic opera, with some capital songs. He suddenly became a proprietor of Drury Lane theatre; but whence he derived the money necessary to take that step has never been shown. In 1777 he slightly altered Vanbrugh's comedy of "The Relapse," and put it upon the stage under the title of "The Trip to Scarborough." In the same year also he brought out "The School for Scandal," generally considered the best of English comedies. This was followed by the admirable burlesque, "The Critic," to some extent an imitation of the duke of Buckingham's "Rehearsal." Through the interest of Fox, he was enabled to enter the house of commons in 1780. He gave a warm and consistent support to the Whig party, and during the marquis of Rockingham's administration he held the office of under-secretary of state. He was one of the managers of the impeachment of Warren Hastings, and his great speech will always be remembered as a noble piece of oratory. His wife (immortalised in Macaulay's brilliant description of the opening of the Hastings trial as "the beautiful mother of a beautiful race") died in 1792, and three years later he married Miss Ogle, the daughter of the dean of Winchester, who was "young, accomplished, and ardently devoted to him." He now sold his shares in the Drury Lane theatre for £15,000: to this was added £5,000 obtained with his wife; and with the whole an estate in Surrey was purchased. His last productions were "The Stranger" and "Pizarro," both adaptations from the German of Kotzebue, and produced in 1798. But the end was approaching: always more or less embarrassed by pecuniary difficulties, his failing health and departed youth left him in fear of impending bailiffs, or caused him to shrink from duns whose patience was long exhausted, and whom in earlier years he would have pacified with a facility entirely his own. Now that his flashes of wit were extinguished by sickness and distress, he was no longer the welcome boon companion of the prince-regent. He expired near his dying wife, and while the bailiffs were in his house; but he received a public funeral in Westminster Abbey.

Born at Dublin, 1751; died in London, 1816.

SHERIDAN, a new county of Dakota territory, United States. Area, 1,750 square miles. Pop. Unascertained.

SHERIDAN, a new county of Kansas, United States. Area, 900 square miles. Pop. 1,567.

SHERLOCK, THOMAS, sher-lock, an English prelate, who was educated at Eton and Catherine Hall, Cambridge, of which he was chosen fellow, and afterwards became master. He succeeded his father in the mastership of the Temple in 1704, and in 1714 became vice-chancellor of his college. In the controversy excited by bishop Hoadley on the constitution of the Church, Dr. Sherlock bore a conspicuous part, and attacked the bishop in an able pamphlet, in vindication of the Corporation and Test acts. He also answered Collins in six discourses on the use and intent of prophecy, and wrote with equal strength a defence of the miracle of Christ's resurrection, against Woolston. He was successively dean of Chichester (1716), bishop of Bangor (1727), Salisbury (1734), and London (1748), and was offered the see of Canterbury, which he declined. He was an unflinching Tory in politics. His sermons achieved a great reputation.

Born in London, 1678; died near London, 1761.

SHERMAN, WILLIAM TECUMSEH, sher'-man, an American general, educated at the military academy, West Point. He served in the Mexican war. On the outbreak of the war of secession, he offered his services to the Federal government, and soon distinguished himself, and by his famous "march through Georgia," practically brought about the submission of the Confederates. In 1872 he was appointed commander-in-chief of the army.

Born in Ohio, 1818.

SHERMAN, a new county of Kansas, United States. Area, 900 square miles. Pop. Unascertained.

SHERMAN, a new county of Nebraska, United States. Area, 576 square miles. Pop. 2,061.

SHERWOOD FOREST. (See NOTTINGHAMSHIRE.)

SHETLAND, or ZETLAND ISLES, shet'-land, the north-east division of the Scottish northern isles, about 45 miles north-east of the Orkneys, with which they form a county. The islands, islets, and rocks are about 100 in number, of which 23 are inhabited, the three largest being Mainland 60 miles long, and from 3 to 10 broad; Yell, 20 miles long and 6 broad; and Unst, 11 miles long and 6 broad. Smaller islands are named—Bourra, Bressa, Fair Isle, Fetler, Foula, Housay, Ness, Papastour, Rooe (Mickle and Little), Skerries, Troudra, and Whalsey. Foula is the most northern, and is supposed to be the Ultima Thule of the Romans. The general appearance of the islands is rugged and sterile. Some patches of miserably-cultivated soil relieve the eye of a traveller; but not a tree or shrub is to be seen. The western parts are peculiarly wild, dreary, and desolate; consisting of grey rocks, stagnant marshes and pools, broken and precipitous coasts, excavated into vast natural arches and deep caverns. The climate is wet and tempestuous. The sea swells and rages in such a manner, that for five or six months the ports are almost inaccessible. Peat and turf for fuel are among the products. Great numbers of horses are bred in Shetland, though they are of very small size. These little animals, however, are full of spirit, and bear fatigue much better, in proportion to their size, than larger horses. The cattle are also of a small size, though, in point of shape, perhaps, inferior to the West Highland cattle only of all our native breeds. In the enclosed and drained districts Cheviot and black faced sheep are reared. The cod, ling, and herring fisheries are important. The chief town is LERWICK.

Area.—325 square miles.

Pop.—29,709, females greatly preponderating. The traces of Scandinavian descent are conspicuous, and there are many monumental remains evidently of Scandinavian origin. A large number of the men are engaged in the fisheries, and they make excellent sailors.

Exports.—Dried fish, fish oil, cattle, ponies, sheep, copper ore, chromate of iron, and hand-knitted woollen hosiery and shawls of great beauty and fineness.

Lat. 59° 51′—66° 51′ N. Lon. 0° 45′—1° 45′ W.

SHETLANDS, NEW SOUTH, a group of small islands to the south of Cape Horn, South America. The largest is Coronation Island, or Mainland; the others are Adelaide, Bridgeman (an active volcanic cone), Smith, Saddle, and Desolation. They are mountainous, and devoid of vegetation. Lat. 60° 32′—67° 15′ S. Lon. 54° 53′—68° 15′ W.

SHIAWASSEE, shi-a-was'-se, a county of Michigan, United States. Area, 576 square miles. Pop. 27,000. The capital is Corunna.

SHIELD, WILLIAM, sheeld, an eminent English musical composer, who was the son of a teacher of singing; but, losing his father, he was apprenticed to a boat-builder as a means of assuring him his future subsistence. He was afterwards engaged in the orchestra of the King's theatre, London, during twenty years. In 1783, his opera of "Rosina" was performed with the most brilliant success at Covent Garden. This was followed by the "Poor Soldier," "Robin Hood," "The Farmer," and other operas. In 1791 he visited France and Italy, and subsequently produced "Introduction to Harmony" and "Rudiments of Thorough Bass." His remains were interred in Westminster Abbey.

Born at Smaliwell, Durham, 1749; died in London, 1829.

SHIELDS, NORTH, sheelds, a market-town, municipal borough, and seaport of Northumberland, near the entrance of the river Tyne, stretching for more than a mile along its northern bank, adjoining TYNEMOUTH, and 8 miles N.E. of Newcastle. Three new churches have been erected, and there are a Presbyterian and other chapels, a custom-house, town-hall, and mechanics' institute. The harbour of North Shields is bordered with quays, and is calculated to accomm.date 2,000 vessels of considerable size. The principal trade consists in the exportation of coals to London, and other places along the eastern coast both of England and Scotland. Some vessels are also employed in the Baltic and American trade. Manf. Ropes, anchors, chain cables, hats, gloves, and tobacco. Shipbuilding is carried on. Pop. 20,384.—A station on the North-Eastern Railway.

SHIELDS, SOUTH, a market-town, seaport, municipal and parliamentary borough, of Durham, at the mouth of the river Tyne, directly opposite to North Shields, 6 miles from Sunderland. The Tyne Docks have 50 acres of water space, and about a million tons of coal are shipped annually. There is a long pier at the mouth of the harbour. St. Hilda's is a large church, and there are a public hall, library, and free college for education of seamen in navigation. A large colliery is in the neighbourhood. Manf. Ropes, glass, soap, soda, and bottles. There are extensive works for building iron ships and screw steamers. Pop. 56,922.—A station on the North-Eastern Railway.

SHIKARPOOR, or SHIKARPOOR, she-kar-poor', a town of Scinde, on the high route from India into Afghanistan by the Bolan pass. It is encompassed by a mud wall, has a bazaar, and many mansions of wealthy Hindoo merchants, and bankers of high repute. Its transit trade is large. Pop. 42,496, 16,218 being Hindoos, and the remainder Mahomedans. Lat. 27° 55′ N. Lon. 68° 40′ E.

SHIMONOSEKI, shi-mon'-o-se'-ke, a seaport of Japan, on the south-west coast of the main island. The forts were bombarded and destroyed by a combined European and United States fleet in 1864, and in 1873 a great part of the town was destroyed by fire. Pop. 10,000.

SHIRAZ, she-raz', a city of Persia, capital of the province of Fars, and, at several periods of the whole empire, 115 miles N.E. of Bushire. Its environs are almost unrivalled in point of beauty and fertility. They are laid out, to a great extent, in magnificent gardens, the flowers and fruits of which form a favourite theme of eastern poetry. The town has suffered greatly from earthquakes, especially in 1812, 1824, and 1853, which destroyed nearly all the principal buildings. Manf. Silk and woollen stuffs, rose-water, cutlery, sword-blades, glass, and earthenware. Its trade consists chiefly in receiving from Bushire the spices and cotton goods of India, and transmitting them to Ispahan and Yezd. The neighbouring hills produce excellent wine. Pop. 30,000. Lat. 29° 41′ N. Lon. 52° 38′ E.

SHIRE, shi'-re, a river of south-eastern Africa, having its source in Lake Nyassa, and, after a southerly course of 250 miles, joining the Zambesi. There are many cataracts.

SHIRLEY, JAMES, shir'-le, an English dramatic writer, who, after completing his degrees in arts at Cambridge, entered into orders, but subsequently embraced the Roman Catholic faith, and became a schoolmaster in London. He and his wife both died the same day, of a fright, occasioned by the fire of London. He wrote thirty-nine plays, a volume of poems, and some school-books.

Born in London, about 1594; died 1666.

SHIRLEY, SIR ANTHONY, an English writer, who became fellow of All Souls College, Oxford. After studying some time in the inns of court, he went to Holland under Sir Philip Sidney. In 1596 he made a voyage to America, and was afterwards with the earl of Essex in Ireland, where he was knighted. On going abroad, he was received at several courts, particularly that of Spain, where he was made admiral of the fleet, and a grandee. James I. ordered him to return, but he refused. He wrote a "Voyage to America," in Hakluyt's Collections; "Account of Muley Hamet's Rising in the Kingdom of Morocco;" History of his "Travels into Persia;" "Voyage over the Caspian Sea, and through Russia," in Purchas's Pilgrims; and History of his "Ambassages."

Born at Wiston, Sussex, 1565; died in Spain, 1630.

SHIRWA, or TAMANDUA, LAKE, shir'-wa, in south-eastern Africa, 30 miles S.E. of Lake Nyassa. It is 60 miles long, 10 to 23 miles broad, and 1,800 feet above the sea level.

SHISDRA. (See JIZDRA.)

SHISHAK, or SHASHANK, shi'-shak, founder of the 22nd, or Bubastite dynasty of Egypt. He marched against Jerusalem with a large army, and took away immense treasures. The exploit is commemorated on the monuments of Karnak.

Lived in the 10th century B.C.

SHOA, or SHWA, sho'-a, the most southerly of the three principal states in Abyssinia. (See ABYSSINIA.) It forms a series of plateaux, about 3,000 feet above the sea level, and is traversed by five mountain chains, attaining, in Mount Melatite, an elevation of 10,720 feet. There are deep precipitous chasms, through which the principal rivers rush, making cataracts, some of which are 700 feet in sheer descent. The valleys and undulating portions of the surface are very fertile and well cultivated, and the scenery is very beautiful. The climate is very hot in the summer season, and in the low grounds extremely unhealthy in the winter. ANKOBAR is the capital, and the only other town of importance is Angollola. Pop. 2,500,000, about half of whom profess Christianity.

SHORE, JANE, shor, mistress of Edward IV., was the wife of a goldsmith in Lombard Street; but the king, being enamoured of her charms, drew her from her husband. On the death of Edward, she lived with Lord Hastings, who was beheaded by order of Richard III., who also caused Jane Shore to be tried for witchcraft in 1483. She was sentenced to do public penance. She died more than 40 years afterwards, in the extremity of poverty.

Born 1460; died 1524.

SHOREHAM, NEW, shor'-ham, a market-town, seaport, and parliamentary borough of Sussex, on the coast of the English Channel, 6 miles W. of Brighton. It owes its origin to the decay of Old Shoreham, which is now a mere village. The church is a curious and interesting specimen of ancient Norman architecture. Shipbuilding is carried on. Pop. 3,680.—A station on the London, Brighton, and South-Coast Railway.

SHORTLAND, short'-land, a mining township of New Zealand, province of Auckland, 40 miles E. of Auckland. There are a fine church, and several other places of worship. This was the first township in the Thames gold-fields, with Grahamstown, now called Thames. Pop. 5,200.

SHOSHONE, sho-shone', a county of Idaho territory, United States. Area, 12,000 square miles. Pop. 1,000, nearly half being Chinese. The capital is Pierce City.

SHOVEL, SIR CLOUDESLEY, shuv'-el, an English admiral, who, from being a cabin-boy, rose to the first honours of his profession. For his gallant conduct against the French at the battle of Bantry Bay, in Ireland, he was knighted by William III., and created rear-admiral. He took a distinguished part in the victory of La Hogue, and in that off Malaga, in 1704. The year following he had the command of the fleet in the Mediterranean, and contributed to the taking of Barcelona. In 1707 he set sail for England; but, in the night of October 27, the admiral's ship, called the Association, and several others, struck upon the rocks of Scilly, and were lost. The body of Sir Cloudesley was discovered and conveyed to Portsmouth, whence it was removed to London, and buried in Westminster Abbey, where a monument was erected to his memory.

Born 1650; died 1707.

SHREVEPORT, shreve'-port, capital of Oaddo county, Louisiana, United States, on the west bank of Red river. It is the eastern terminus of the Texas and Pacific railroad. Large quantities of cotton are shipped, and there is a good trade in hides, wool, and tallow. Pop. 8,000.

SHREWSBURY, shruse'-ber-e, an ancient market-town, parliamentary and municipal borough, and capital of Shropshire, on the Severn, 38 miles from Chester. There are three suburbs, Abbey-Foregate and Coleham on the east, and Frankwell on the west, reached by two bridges, the "English" and the "Welsh," across the Severn; and a fourth suburb, Castle-Foregate, on the north. There are remains of the old castle, two monasteries, a Benedictine abbey, and of the ramparts and walls which once defended the town on its southern and eastern sides. St. Mary's is a large venerable building, in the form of a cross, and consists of a knave, side-aisles, transept, chancel, choir, and chapels, with a western steeple. The church of Holy Cross is a portion of the old Abbey church, and St. Chad's is a circular building in the Greek style. The other principal buildings are the public rooms, in the Greek style; and a market-hall, in the Italian style. The town-hall was destroyed by fire in November, 1880. At one end of the town is a column raised to the memory of General Lord Hill, and in the market square a statue of Lord Clive, erected in 1860. Manf. Linen, thread, canvas, and iron wares. There is a salmon fishery in the Severn. Pop. 26,478.—A station on the Great Western, and London and North-Western Railways. Shrewsbury is a place of great antiquity, and of considerable note in history. Its origin is referred to the 5th century, when the Britons are thought to have established themselves here, on account of the security afforded by the situation. The British name was Pengwern; the Anglo-Saxons named it Scrobbes-Byrig, from which the present name is derived. About two miles from the town was fought, in 1403, the battle of Shrewsbury, in which Henry V., then prince of Wales, first distinguished himself in the field.

SHROPSHIRE, or SALOP, shrop'-sheer, an inland county of England, on the borders of Wales, bounded on the N. by Denbighshire, the detached part of Flintshire, and Cheshire; E. by Staffordshire; S. by Worcestershire and Herefordshire; and W. by Radnorshire, Montgomeryshire, and Denbighshire. The surface is greatly diversified, and comprehending every variety of picturesque landscape. In the south it is generally mountainous, and level in the portion north and north-east of the Severn, where many cattle are fed, and much of the cheese sold under the name of Cheshire is made here. The hilly district is chiefly devoted to the pasture of sheep, the wool of which is of fine quality.

Rivers.—The Severn, which has a course of 70 miles within the county, receiving the Tern, Teme, and several smaller rivers.

Minerals.—Coal, iron, copper, lead, salt, sandstone, and limestone. Between the road from Shrewsbury to Bishop's Castle and the vale of Montgomery, rises a high rocky tract, the most elevated peak of which is called the Stiperstone; and it is here that the lead-mines of the county are situate. The iron-foundries in this county are extensive, and have been a source of great riches.

Area.—1,314 square miles.

Pop.—247,993.

Parliamentary Representation.—Four members are returned for the county and 2 for SHREWSBURY, the capital. Other important towns are BRIDGENORTH, LUDLOW, and WENLOCK.

SHUMLA, shoom'-la, a strongly fortified city of European Turkey, in Bulgaria, on the Little Balkan river, 50 miles W. of Varna. There are a strong citadel, barracks, arsenal, and military hospital, and in the vicinity a strongly entrenched camp, which can accommodate 50,000 men, and the approaches to the town are guarded by forts. Manf. Copper and tin ware, clothing and leather. Pop. 23,093.

SHUSTER, shoos'-ter, a city of Persia, capital of the province of Khuzistan, on an eminence overlooking the Karun, 30 miles S.E. of Dizful. It contains ruins which testify it to have been a place of vast extent and considerable magnificence, but it suffered greatly from an epidemic in 1832, and an inundation in 1840. Pop. 8,000.

SIAKH, se-ak', a native state, governed by a sultan, on the eastern coast of Sumatra. The coast is lined with islands, the resort of pirates.

SIAKH, capital of the above state, on both banks of a river of the same name. A large trade is carried on, and camphor, coffee, wax, and ivory exported. Lat. 0° 45′ N. Lon. 102° E.

SIAM, or THAI, si'-am, an extensive kingdom of Eastern Asia, situate in the heart of the great peninsula between India and China. It is bounded W. by Burmah, N. by Laos, E. by ranges of mountains which separate it from Cambodia and Cochin-China, S. by the Gulf of Siam and the peninsula of Malacca. There is a coast line of about 1,100 miles on the Gulf of Siam. In the northern part are mountains, but the general aspect of the country is that of a vast plain, and a great part of the country consists of extensive swamps and jungles. The large valley of the Menam, enriched by its periodical inundations, is a district of great fertility. There are several dependencies beyond the limits of the kingdom proper. The climate is generally salubrious, but the mountain districts are subject to fevers. The chief productions are rice, the only grain of the country, and the staple food of the inhabitants; sago, tobacco, sugar, pepper, coffee, cotton, cocoa-nuts, and gums. Teak, eagle (famous for its exquisite perfume), sandal, sapan, and rose woods abound, and there is not a region of the world which produces fruits more various and more exquisite.

Rivers.—The Menam, or Meinam (see MENAM), and the Mei-kong in the eastern part.

Zoology.—Elephants (especially the "white" variety, which is held sacred), tigers, rhinoceroses, wild boars, elks, and deer of many kinds. There are also crocodiles, lizards, and various kinds of serpents. Fish abound off the coast and in the rivers.

Minerals.—Gold, silver, copper, iron, tin, lead, and precious stones.

Area.—About 250,000 square miles; but the exact limits of the kingdom are imperfectly defined.

Pop. — 6,000,000; about 2,000,000 being Siamese, 1,000,000 Chinese, and 1,000,000 Malays; the remainder being natives of Laos, Cambodia, and Pegu.

Government.—There are two so-styled kings, but the first is the real occupant of the throne; the other (frequently the son of the first king), who has a court of his own and receives royal honours, being in reality the prime minister; but in many of the provinces the here ditary chieftains are virtually independent, and only pay a small annual complimentary tribute. There is no standing army, but, with the exception of the priests, and the Chinese settlers and others who pay for exemption, every adult male is liable to military service. The religion of the bulk of the inhabitants is Buddhism.

Administrative Divisions and Chief Towns.—There are 41 provinces, each presided over by a governor. BANGKOK is the capital, and the chief ports on the coast line are Bangplasoi, Chantaburi, Meklong, Paklat, and Paknam.

Lat. 4° 21′—20° N. Lon. 96°—102° E.

History.—The native annals extend to a very remote period, but very little is authentically known of the country until the 4th century. Cambodia was conquered in 1532. The present royal dynasty began in 1782. The first connection between this country and Britain commenced in 1685. Little intercourse took place, however, till 1821, when a new treaty was formed. The Burmese war of 1824 interrupted the friendly relations; but, since 1826, an amicable intercourse has subsisted between the countries.

SIAM, GULF OF, a great inlet of the Chinese Sea, bounded N. and W. by Siam; N.E. by Cambodia, and S.W. by the Malay peninsula. It is 450 miles long and 235 miles wide at the entrance. Four great rivers discharge into it.

SIAMO, or SIAO, sé-a-mo, an island in the Eastern Archipelago, situate off the north-eastern extremity of the island of Celebes. Ext. About 35 miles in circumference.

SIBERIA, si-beer′-i-a, the northern and larger portion of Asiatic Russia, including the vice-royalties of East and West Siberia, bounded N. by the Arctic Ocean, W. partly by the Ural Mountains and partly by the European governments of Perm and Orenburg, E. by the Pacific Ocean and Behring's Straits, and S. by the Russian government of Central Asia and the Chinese empire. The northern and eastern shores are very irregular, with large peninsulas, bold promontories, and extensive inlets, the latter including the sea of Okhotzk, the Gulf of Anadir, and the estuaries of the Obi and Yenesei; the adjacent islands of the Arctic Ocean, some of the ALEUTIAN and KURILE islands, and the large island of Saghalien on the east coast are included in Siberia. The whole country may be considered generally as a vast plain sloping from the elevated land on the western part of the southern boundary and the ALTAI chain to the Arctic Ocean. Eastern Siberia is mountainous, being traversed by ramifications of the Altai mountains, and the Stanovie hills which stretch north-east from the Amoor river to the Sea of Okhotzk. The valleys and hillsides of Eastern Siberia are moderately fertile and afford good pasture. The districts north of about lat. 62° N., are barren, with stunted vegetation, and near the Arctic Ocean are half-frozen moors. Furthe. south the hardier cereals are cultivated, and still farther are forests of cedar and other trees, and tracts of great fertility, especially in the valley of the Yenesei and the governments of Tobolsk and Tomsk, where immense quantities of grain are grown. In a country of such great extent, the climate, of course, varies greatly. In the north the cold is intense, much greater than in corresponding latitudes of Europe, where similar temperatures are found 10 or 11 degrees farther north. In January the thermometer frequently shows a fall to 90° below freezing point in the government of Yakutzk, where in the hieght of summer the mercury marks from 66° to 70°.

Rivers and Lakes.—The OBI, YENESEI, and LENA, flowing into the Arctic Ocean, are the principal, having numerous affluents. There are many lakes, some of which are little better than salt marshes, the largest being BAIKAL and BALKASH.

Minerals.—Gold, though not of the first importance, is found in considerable quantities. The mines of copper, iron, and lead, are much more extensive and valuable. Zinc, antimony, arsenic, and sulphur also abound. Siberia possesses, besides, mines of talc; and among the Ourals are found specimens of that singular mineral called the asbestos. The rock-salt which supplies the vast chain of saline lakes seems to exist chiefly in the mountains along the southern frontier. Malachite, a beautiful ore of copper, is found among the Ourals. Red lead, alum, sal-ammoniac, vitriol, nitre, and natron abound, and gems of considerable value, especially emerald and topaz, are found.

Zoology.—Wild animals are abundant; and of those yielding fur, the most precious is the species of weazel called the sable. It is found in almost every quarter; but the most valuable specimens are those of Yakutsk. The black fox ranks next in value, and after it the ermine, the marten, and different species of squirrel. In the northern districts the prevailing animal is the reindeer. The Siberian dog is of extraordinary size and strength, and is used, not only in Kamtschatka, but sometimes in other districts, for drawing sledges, like the reindeer. The most formidable tenant of this part is the bear, which is found not only on the shores of the Arctic Ocean, but among all the mountains, even of the southern part of Siberia. There are few other ferocious animals except the wolf, the lynx, and the wild hog. The elk is very general as far as 65°; the reindeer in the northern parts and in some of the mountain districts of the south. Cattle are numerous, and the argali combines the qualities of the sheep and the goat. The waters throughout do not less swarm with life; and winged game, particularly those that delight in rivers and marshes, abound; as wild ducks, geese, and swans. Notwithstanding the general severity of its cold, swarms of mosquitoes and other troublesome insects are generated in the summer months.

Administrative Divisions and Chief Towns.—There are 8 governments—Amoorskaya, Irkutsk, Primorsk, Tobolsk, Tomsk, Trans-Baikal, Yakutsk, and Yeniseisk. The chief towns are IRKUTSK, TJUMEN, TOBOLSK, and TOMSK.

Area.—4,826,287 square miles.

Pop.—4,093,535. In the central and western provinces, the inhabitants are either by birth or descent Russians and Poles, most of them exiles for political or criminal offences, and some of them colonists under government auspices. In the south are the Kirghiz and Kalmucks, and in the east and north-east the Buriats and Tunguses, of Mongolian and Tartar origin. In the north-west are Samoids and Ostiaks, and further east the Tchuktchis, allied to the Finnish and Esquimaux races.

History.—In the 16th century a Cossack, Vassali Yermak, who had absconded from Russia on account of his crimes, followed by a congenial band, made a settlement in western Siberia. In 1604, the Russians founded the town of Tomsk, and advances eastward followed in due course. In 1845 the left bank of the Amoor was reached, and in 1858 a portion of the eastern seaboard was annexed. (See RUSSIA.)

SIBLEY, sib′-le, a county of Minnesota, United States. Area, 500 square miles. Pop. 10,637. The capital is Henderson.

SICARD, ROCH AMBROSE CUCURRON, sé-kar, a French abbé, who devoted his life to the education of the deaf and dumb. After having for some time had the care of the institution for the deaf and dumb at Bordeaux, he was chosen to succeed the Abbé de l'Epée, at the Paris institution. In 1791 he was arrested at the order of the National Assembly, and narrowly escaped the guillotine. In 1815 he paid a visit to England with two of his favourite pupils, and was cordially received. He wrote several works upon his system of instruction.

Born near Toulouse, 1742; died 1822.

SICILIES, TWO, KINGDOM OF THE. (See ITALY.)

SICILY, the largest island of the Mediterranean, situate between Italy and the coast of Africa, and separated on the N.E. from Naples by the Strait of Messina, and forming a portion of the kingdom of Italy. From east to west about 180 miles, with a breadth of 120 at its widest points. It has sometimes been conjectured that Sicily was joined to the continent, as the principal chain of mountains, extending from east to west, seem only to be a continuation of the Apennines. In the north-eastern part the range is known as the Peloric, and in the south-west as the Madonian mountains. The greatest elevations are from 3,000 to 3,600 feet. There are, however, other ranges branching off from north to south, and a few insulated mountains, of which by far the greatest is ETNA. This mixture of mountain and valley causes a corresponding variety of products and scenery. The mountains are generally covered with forests in those parts where cultivation cannot be carried on. There are deep and romantic valleys between the mountains, and beyond large, beautiful, and fertile plains, especially those of Catania and Melazz in the north-east, Syracuse in the south-east, and Terra-Nova in the south. The climate is very pleasant in general; the winter corresponding to the spring of England, and the heat of summer being tempered by the fresh breezes from the sea. Snow is confined to the lofty mountains. Of the seasons, the spring is the most agreeable; but the drawbacks are the unhealthiness of particular districts, the occasional occurrence of earthquakes, particularly in the neighbourhood of Messina, and the debilitating effect of the sirocco, or south wind, during a few days of July and August. Agriculture is very backward. The products are maize, wheat, rice, pulse, beans, and other corn; cotton and sugar of fine quality; flax, hemp, vines, olives, saffron, liquorice, and manna. For silk the climate is highly favourable, also for the rich fruits of a southern latitude: wine is also produced. Merino sheep and mules are raised; but, with the exception of these, all live stock are very inferior. The tunny, sardine, and anchovy fisheries are important.

Rivers.—Mostly small, and some of them almost dry in summer, but many are interesting from classical associations. On the south and south-west coasts are the Salso, Platani, Calatabellota, and Belice; on the north, the Termini, Fiume Grande, and Pollina; and on the east, the Giaretta, or Simetus.

Minerals.—Iron, copper, argentiferous lead, mercury, and antimony; marble is very general, and stone for building is found in almost every part of the island. Agate, jasper, porphyry, and alabaster, are likewise found. Salt-mines have been discovered near Castro Giovanni, in the centre of the island; and near Messina is a large coal-mine. The sulphur-beds are of great value, there being about 150 mines wrought. They occupy an area of 2,700 square miles, and employ upwards of 12,000 men and boys.

Area.—10,670 square miles.

Pop.—3,061,101.

Administrative Divisions and Chief Towns.—Sicily includes seven provinces of the kingdom of Italy—Caltanisetta, Catania, Girgenti, Messina, Palermo, Siracusa, and Trapani.

History.—Sicily was successively occupied by the Greeks, who established several colonies between the 8th and 6th centuries B.C.; the Phœnicians, the Carthaginians, and Romans. In the 8th and 9th centuries, the Saracens succeeded in conquering it, and in making Palermo their capital. After keeping possession of it for about 200 years, they gave way to the Normans, who, during their progress to the crusades, made the conquest of the island in the 11th century. It passed successively into the hands of France, Germany, and Spain. By the peace of Utrecht, in 1713, it was given to the duke of Savoy, with the title of king; but in 1720, the Austrians prevailed on the new possessor to exchange it for Sardinia, and added the former to the kingdom of Naples. The war of 1734, however, carried on by France and Spain against Austria, transferred the crown of Naples to a branch of the royal family of Spain. In their hands it remained without interruption, until the French Revolution led, in 1799, to the expulsion of the royal family from Naples. They took refuge in Sicily, where they remained till 1815, when the overthrow of Murat restored the former family to the throne of Naples. In 1847, 1848, and 1849, attempts were made to shake off the oppressive yoke of the Bourbons; but the expedition of Garibaldi in 1860 put an end to the kingdom of Naples, Sicily then becoming a portion of the kingdom of Italy.

SICULIANA, sē'-koo-le-ā'-na, a town of Sicily, province of Girgenti, 8 miles N.W. of Girgenti. It has a harbour, and near it are extensive sulphur mines. Pop. 5,800.

SIDDONS, SARAH, sid'-dons, an English tragic actress, the sister of John and Charles Kemble. At the age of 18 she married a young actor named Siddons. While performing at Cheltenham, she attracted the favourable notice of Lord Brüce and others; upon whose recommendation Garrick engaged her for Drury-Lane theatre, where she made her début, in 1775; but she incurred the displeasure of the English Roscius, and was compelled to retire to the provincial theatres. Her fame, however, rapidly increased. In 1782 she again appeared at Drury Lane. She made her first appearance in her celebrated part of Lady Macbeth in 1785, and rapidly became the leading tragic actress of the English stage. She retired from the stage in 1812; but reappeared on some subsequent occasions, for benefits and charities. She gave readings from Shakespeare and Milton, at a latter period.

Born at Brecon, South Wales, 1755; died in London, 1831.

SIDI-BEL-ABBES, si-di-bel-ab'-bes, a fortified town of Algeria, province of Oran, 50 miles S. of the town of Oran. Pop. 6,000.

SIDI-HESHAM, hesh'-am, a small state of north Africa, previously to 1810 belonging to Morocco, to the W. and S.W. of that empire.

SIDLAW, or SUDLAW HILLS. (See PERTHSHIRE and SCOTLAND.)

SIDMOUTH, HENRY ADDINGTON, Viscount, sid'-mouth, an English statesman, who was the son of an eminent metropolitan physician. At the termination of his educational career at Oxford, he entered himself of Lincoln's Inn, was called to the bar in 1784, and, through the interest of William Pitt, entered the House of Commons. In 1789 he became the ministerial candidate for the office of speaker, and was elected. Upon the retirement of Pitt, in 1801, he formed a ministry, and held office, but with no great distinction, until 1803, when he was thrown out by Pitt. He gave the new ministry his support, and was in 1805 created president of the council, and at the same time raised to the peerage as Viscount Sidmouth. In 1806 he was lord privy seal in the Fox and Grenville administration, and soon afterwards became president of the council on the reconstruction of the same cabinet. After remaining out of office during five years, he again became president of the council, under Perceval; and, upon the assassination of that statesman, in 1812, he accepted the post of secretary of state for the home department in the ministry of Lord Liverpool. This office he held during ten years, and by his conduct relative to the reform meeting at Manchester, in 1819, as well as upon several other occasions, he became an object of great unpopularity with the great mass of the people. He resigned his appointment in 1822; but, at the urgent request of his chief, he retained a seat in the cabinet until 1824, at which time he made his final retirement rom public life.

Born at Reading, 1757; died at Richmond Park, 1844.

SIDMOUTH, a market-town and watering-place on the south coast of Devonshire, on the river Sid, 13 miles S.E. of Exeter. Pop. 3,360.—A station on the London and South-Western railway.

SIDNEY, ALGERNON, sid'-ne, an English statesman and political martyr, who was the son of Robert, second earl of Leicester. He became a colonel in the parliament army, and avowed himself a republican. When Cromwell assumed the title of protector, Sidney retired into private life. At the Restoration he went abroad, but returned in 1667, on obtaining a pardon. In 1683 he was apprehended on a charge of being concerned in the Rye-house plot, tried before Judge Jefferies, and most illegally sentenced to death. He wrote discourses concerning government, in which he placed the origin and right of power in the people, and other works.

Born 1622; died 1683.

SIDNEY, SIR PHILIP, an English soldier and poet, son of Sir Henry Sidney, a statesman of considerable talent. In his 15th year he was sent to Christ Church College, Oxford, and afterwards to Cambridge, and at the age of 18 went on his travels. He was in Paris during the massacre of St. Bartholomew, and was obliged to take refuge in the abode of Sir Francis Walsingham, the English ambassador. After visiting various cities in Hungary, Italy, and Germany, he, in 1575, returned to England, and in the following year Queen Elizabeth appointed him ambassador to the emperor Rudolphus, at whose court he contracted an intimacy with the famous Don John of Austria. On account of his declaring his sentiments freely against the queen's marriage with the duke of Anjou, in 1580, in his "Remonstrance" to her majesty, he retired from court, and in his retreat wrote his celebrated romance, called "Arcadia," and his "Defence of Poesie." In 1582 he received the honour of knighthood, and in 1585 was appointed governor of Flushing, and general of the troops sent to the assistance of the United Provinces. In September, 1586, Sir Philip displayed extraordinary bravery at the battle of Zutphen, but received a mortal wound in the thigh as he was mounting his third horse, having had two slain under him previously. His body was brought home and buried in St. Paul's Cathedral, a general mourning being observed throughout the country. He wrote, in addition to the works already mentioned, an "Apology for Poetry;" Sonnets; an English version of the Psalms of David; and several other pieces.

Born at Penshurst, Kent, 1554; died 1586.

SIDON. (See SAIDE.)

SIEDLCE, seed'-lce, a government of Russia, in the kingdom of Poland. The country is level and fertile, and the river Bug forms the eastern and north-eastern frontier. Area, 5,534 square miles. Pop. 630,238.

SIEDLCE, capital of the above government, 51 miles S.E. of Warsaw. There are a fine palace and town-hall. Manf. Sugar and agricultural implements. Pop. 10,500.

SIEGEN, se'-gen, a town of Prussia, province of Westphalia, on the Sieg, 38 miles S.W. of Arnsberg. Manf. Woollens, cotton, leather, iron and steel ware, especially files. In the vicinity are iron-mines and smelting-works. Pop. 15,024.

SIEGEN, LUDWIG VON, the inventor of mezzotint engraving. He was descended from an ancient Westphalian family, and became a page to one of the princes of Hesse. Upon the conclusion of the Thirty Years' war in 1648, he retired from military service, in which he had been engaged, and devoted his leisure to perfecting the new art, the invention of which has been erroneously credited to prince Rupert. (See RUPERT.)

Born at Utrecht, 1609; died subsequently to 1676.

SIENA, se-en'-na, a province of Italy. The north-eastern part is very mountainous; but a portion of the soil is fertile. Area, 1,465 square miles. Pop. 210,999.

SIENA, an ancient city of Italy, capital of the above province, 30 miles S. of Florence. Being built on three eminences, the streets are extremely uneven, winding, and narrow, so that the chief part of the town is impassable for carriages. The only handsome public square, the Piazza del Campo, is that in which is the noble Palazzo Pubblico, built in the 13th century. The cathedral is a magnificent marble structure in the Gothic style, built between the 11th and 13th centuries. It contains many fine paintings, frescoes, and sculptures; and the other churches are rich in works of art. There are in the city several ancient palaces, the most striking being the Magnifico, Buonsignori, and Piccolomineo; a city hall, an academy of the fine arts, a university, founded in 1330, and famous as a medical school, numerous convents, a citadel, two theatres, public libraries, hospitals, and literary societies. Manf. Woollen, leather, and paper. There are marble quarries in the vicinity. Pop. 23,000.

SIERRA, se-er'-ra, a county of California, United States. Area, 830 square miles. Pop. 6,800, more than 800 being Chinese. The capital is Downieville.

SIERRA LEONE, se-er'-ra-lai-o'-nai, a British settlement of Western Africa, on the Atlantic. It consists of a peninsula, 25 miles long and 12 broad, on the coast of Senegambia. The name is derived from a long ridge of mountains, which rise at no great distance from the southern bank of the river. The country fully equals, in point of fertility, any other in this part of Africa. It consists generally of one vast, almost impenetrable forest, only particular spots of which have been cleared and cultivated. The climate is very unhealthy. The rivers are the Sierra Leone and the Spierboro. Pop. 60,545, all, except about 250 Europeans, coloured. Lat. of Cape Sierra Leone, 8° 30″ N. Lon. 13° 18′ W.—The Portuguese were the first who discovered and formed settlements on the river Sierra Leone. The English settlement was formed in 1787, and, after the abolition of the slave trade in 1807, liberated slaves were sent here.

SIEYES, EMMANUEL JOSEPH, Count, sé-ai, usually styled the "Abbé Sièyes," a French political philosopher and consul of France. Educated for the ecclesiastical profession, he rose to the position of vicar-general and chancellor of the diocese of Chartres. But, from an early period of his life, his mind was strongly disposed towards the study of political economy; and, some time before the revolution of 1789, he evinced his participation in those ideas which were to prove the destruction of the monarchy and government. When Louis XVI. summoned the states-general, Sièyes produced three pamphlets upon the question of the day. He was elected deputy for Paris; and, upon the refusal of the nobility and clergy to unite with the "Tiers Etat," he counselled the people's representatives to form themselves into an independent body. The National Assembly thus sprang into existence. In the subsequent proceedings, which resulted in the Revolution, Sièyes played a prominent and energetic part. In 1791 he was offered, but refused, the appointment of constitutional bishop of Paris. During the Reign of Terror, he prudently retired from the capital. At the death of Robespierre, he reappeared and regained his former high position. An attempt to assassinate him was made in 1797, by the Abbé Poule; but he escaped with a shattered hand. In the following year he was sent to Berlin, to negotiate a treaty of alliance between France and Prussia, but without success. He became a member of the Directory upon his return, and after the revolution of the 18th Brumaire, he was appointed consul, with Bonaparte and Roger Ducos, but tendered his resignation in 1799. He retired with a reward of 600,000 francs, a grant of land, and a mansion in Paris. He was subsequently offered the presidentship of the senate, under the empire, but refused the honour, accepting, however, the title of count. When the Bourbons were restored, Sièyes was exiled; and although he returned to France after the revolution of 1830, he continued to live in retirement. He wrote a number of political works, the most important of which were, "Political Opinions," an "Exposition of the Rights of Man," and "The Preliminary Bases of a Constitution."

Born at Frejus, 1748; died at Paris, 1836.

SIGEBERT, sije'-bert, king of the East Angles, is celebrated as a man of learning and piety. He founded several churches, monasteries, and schools. After abdicating the throne, he became a monk at Burgh Castle, in Suffolk, where he was assassinated.

Died 635.

SIGISMUND, sig'-is-mund, emperor of Germany, was the son of Charles IV. He married Maria of Anjou, who became queen of Hungary, and on her death, in 1392, succeeded to the throne. He engaged in the defence of the Byzantine empire against the Turks, but was defeated at Nicopolis, and during his absence his throne was seized by Ladislas of Naples, who imprisoned him. Wenceslas of Bohemia, his brother, restored him, and was rewarded by having his kingdom of Bohemia taken from him by the ungrateful Sigismund, who was elected emperor in 1410. After establishing several constitutional regulations for restoring the peace of the empire, he set about effecting the tranquillity of the Church; for which purpose he prevailed with Pope John XXIII. to convene the council of Constance in 1414; but he tarnished his character by granting a safe-conduct to John Huss to attend that council, and afterwards suffering him to be executed in violation of it. The Hussites, irritated at this want of faith, rose under the famous Zisca, and gained many advantages over the German forces, and they were not reduced till sixteen years afterwards. He sold Brandenburg to Frederick, burgrave of Nürnberg, whom he also created elector. This was the foundation of the kingdom of Prussia.

Born 1366; died at Znaym, Moravia, 1437.

SIGISMUND I., king of Poland, known as the Great, the youngest son of Casimir IV., was chosen grand-duke of Lithuania in 1516, and a few months afterwards elected to the throne of Poland. He employed the first years of his reign in reforming public abuses, and in re-establishing the finances of his kingdom, which had been much disorganized by his prodigal predecessor Alexander. He drove the Muscovites out of Lithuania, recovered several places from the Teutonic Knights, expelled the Wallachians, who had invaded his territories, and lent valuable aid to the Hungarians against the Turks.

Born 1467; died 1548.

SIGOURNEY, LYDIA HUNTLEY, Mrs., se-goor'-ne, an American poetess and writer. Her maiden name was Huntley, and she married Mr. Sigourney, a merchant of Hartford. She made her first appearance as an authoress in 1815, with the publication of a volume entitled "Moral Pieces in Prose and Verse." In 1822 she produced her best poem, "The Aborigines of America." She made a tour in Europe in 1840, and resided for some time in England. An interesting narrative of her travels was published in 1842, after her return to America, under the title of "Pleasant Memories of Pleasant Lands." She has been termed the Hemans of America.

Born at Norwich, Connecticut, 1791; died at Hartford, 1865.

It consists of a series of mountain ranges, rising to the loftiest peak of the Himalayas, more than 28,000 feet. There are many summits more than 20,000 feet in altitude. There are magnificent forests on the mountain sides, and very fertile valleys. The climate is very humid. DARJEELING is the chief place, and the station of the British resident. Area, 4,400 square miles. Pop. 7,000, consisting of Lepchas, of Mongolian origin; the Limboos, and the Moornies, a scattered race. The majority profess Buddhism, more or less modified.

SILENUS, si-lé'-nus, in Greek mythology a demigod, who became the nurse, preceptor, and attendant of Bacchus.

SILESIA, or SCHLESIEN, si-lé'-shi-a, a province of Prussia, situate between Poland on the E., Bohemia on the W., Austrian Silesia on the S. In the south and south-west it is mountainous; a long range, bearing different names, such as the Riesengebirge, the Glatz Mountains, Moravian Mountains, &c., but all included in the Sudetic chain, dividing it from Bohemia and Moravia. From Hungary it is separated by the Carpathians. In other parts it is slightly undulating. The soil is fertile and well cultivated, and large numbers of sheep, mostly of the Merino breed, are reared, the wool being very valuable.

Rivers.—The Oder, which, flowing from south to north, traverses it nearly in the middle, and receives the Bober, the two Niesses, the Weistritz, and the Bartsch.

Minerals.—Lead, zinc, coal, iron, and copper.

Area.—15,666 square miles.

Pop.—4,007,025, including about equal numbers of Protestants and Roman Catholics, and 47,000 Jews.

Administrative Divisions and Chief Towns.—There are three districts—Breslau, Leignitz, and Oppeln. The chief towns are BRESLAU (the capital), GLOGAU, LIEGNITZ, and OPPELN.

History.—Silesia was taken by Frederick of Prussia from Austria in 1740, and gave occasion to a long and bloody war, known as the Seven Years' War, began in 1756, when the peace of Hubertsburg in 1763 left it conclusively in the hands of Frederick.

SILESIA, AUSTRIAN, that part of Silesia which was retained by Austria in 1742, when the province described in the foregoing article was ceded to Prussia. It is now a duchy and crown-land of the empire. In the west it is mountainous, but the greater portion of the surface is arable and fertile. Cattle and sheep are extensively bred, and great attention is paid to bee-keeping.

Rivers.—The Oder and Vistula.
Minerals.—Iron, lead, and coal.
Area—1,987 square miles.
Pop. 565,475.
Chief Towns.—TROPPAU (the capital), Bielitz, Jägendorf, and Teschen.

SILHOUETTE, ETIENNE DE, sil'-oo-et, a French writer, who, after being master of requests to the Duke of Orleans, became comptroller-general of the finances in 1757, but continued in office only eight months, owing to the failure of his schemes of reform and economy, which were turned into ridicule. His most important works were,—"General Idea of the Chinese Government;" "Political Reflections, translated from the Spanish of Gracian;" and translations of Pope's "Essay on Man" and Warburton's "Alliance of Church and State." During his short ministry, his name was much in vogue, and was given, in ridicule of his parsimony, to a cheap mode of producing likenesses from the shadow of the face.

Born at Limoges, 1709; died 1767.

SILISTRIA, or DRYSTRA, si-lis'-tre-a, a town of European Turkey, in Bulgaria, on the right bank of the Danube. It is well fortified, and has several handsome mosques and baths. Pop. 24,000.—It is a place of great antiquity, and was a fortress in the time of the Byzantine emperors. In 1854 it was besieged by the Russians, who, after sustaining a great loss of men, were forced to abandon all hopes of taking it. The success of the Turks was owing, in a great measure, to the assistance of two Englishmen, Nasmyth and Butler.

SILLIMAN, BENJAMIN, sil'-li-man, an American physical philosopher, was educated at Yale College, Newhaven, where he became professor of chemistry in 1803. He travelled in Europe, and distinguished himself by his researches in geology and mineralogy, as well as chemistry. In 1818 he founded the "American Journal of Science," of which he was for 28 years the editor. He was eminent as a scientific lecturer.

Born in Connecticut, 1779; died 1864.

SIMPSON, a county of Mississippi, United States. Area, 625 square miles. Pop. 5,800, more than one-fourth being coloured. The capital is Westville.

SIMROCK, KARL, sim'-rok, German scholar and poet. He was the son of a musical publisher at Bonn, and at an early age entered the public service, from which he was dismissed for writing a song inspired by the French Revolution of 1830. In 1850 he was appointed professor of old German literature at Bonn. He was recognised as the leader of what is known as the Rhenish school of German poets, and his songs are imbued with national feeling and love of the great German river. His "Am der Rhein" is one of the most popular songs of modern Germany. When a youth he translated the "Nieblungenlied" into modern German, and among his many works are a handbook of German mythology, an essay on the sources of Shakspeare's plays, and translations of some of the old German traditions.

Born at Bonn, 1804; died 1876.

SIMSON, DR. ROBERT, sim'-son, an eminent Scotch mathematician, who was sent, in his 14th year, to the university of Glasgow, where he rapidly acquired an extensive knowledge of the learned languages and mathematics. He obtained the professorship of mathematics in the university of Glasgow in 1711, and retained that office during the subsequent fifty years. His most important works were a corrected edition of Euclid's Elements of Geometry, which has become the standard text; a "Treatise on Conic Sections," and a restoration of Euclid's "Porisms."

Born in Ayrshire, 1687; died 1768.

SINAI, si'-ni, or si'-na-i, a mountain celebrated in Scripture history as that on which the law was given to Moses. It is generally identified by Biblical scholars and geographers as one of the mountains of the range known as Jebel Musa, near the extremity of the peninsula at the head of the Red Sea, and consists of several lofty summits, of which Mount Horeb forms a part of the northern end. On its north-east side is the fortified convent of Sinai, now tenanted by about twenty Greek monks. Dr. Beke, however, was strongly of opinion that the true Sinai is near the head of the Gulf of Akabah, the north-eastern inlet of the Red Sea.

SINALAO, sin-a-lo'-a, a state of the republic of Mexico, bounded W. by the Pacific and the Gulf of Mexico. The eastern part is mountainous, being traversed by the Sierra Madre, and the coast is indented with bays. The climate is excessively hot, and the soil fertile, producing abundance of tropical fruits.

Rivers.—The Fuerte, Canas, Sinaloa, and Culiacen.
Minerals.—Silver, gold, copper, iron, lead, platinum, and sulphur.
Area.—25,927 square miles.
Pop.—201,918.
Chief Towns.—CULIACEN (the capital), MAZATLAN, and SINALAO.

SINALAO, a town of the above state, on the right bank of the Sinalao river, 220 miles N.W. of Mazatlan, in the midst of a gold-mining district. Pop. 9,000.

SINCLAIR, SIR JOHN, sin'-klair, a Scotch author and agricultural improver, descended from a branch of the noble house of Caithness, who was educated for the legal profession, and became a member of the English bar and of the Faculty of Advocates in Scotland. He also sat in parliament and at the board of privy council. In 1791 he formed a society for improving wool, and subsequently contributed to the establishment of the Board of Agriculture in Scotland. He was an industrious writer, and during fifty years composed a large number of statistical and economical works.

Born at Thurso Castle, Caithness, 1754; died at Edinburgh, 1835.

SINDE, or SCINDE, sind, an extensive province of British India on both sides of the river Indus. This country bears a striking resemblance to Egypt, consisting, as it does, of a level plain, with the Indus fertilizing the banks as far as the inundation extends, and afterwards becoming a sandy desert, beyond which rises a range of barren mountains. The upper part of the country is the most productive, being watered by means of canals. The islands in the delta of the Indus are composed of sand, and are covered with a prickly shrub, very nourishing to camels; on which account a great number are bred in this district.

Rivers.—The INDUS, and its affluent the Narra.
Area, 48,014 square miles.
Pop. 2,413,823, the greater number Mahometans.
Chief Towns.—HYDERABAD, or Haidarabad, KURRACHEE, or Karatchi, and SHIKARPOOR.
History.—Of the ancient history of Sinde little is known. About the middle of the 6th century it was invaded by the Persians, and was the scene of many revolutions and of great anarchy. It was invaded from Delhi, and long continued to pay tribute to the Mogul. In 1739 all the territories west of the river Indus were ceded by the emperor Mohammed Shah to the Persian usurper Nadir Shah. The assassination of that person, in the year 1747, liberated the rulers of Sinde from their allegiance to Persia, and they again nominally professed themselves subjects of the court of Delhi. In the year 1786 the Sindian chiefs acknowledged themselves feudatories of Cabul, and agreed to pay an annual tribute, while the Shah issued a commission to Futteh Ali, and his three brothers, constituting them Ameers or rulers of Sinde, on his behalf. In 1808 the Bombay government sent an embassy to the ameers of Sinde, and a native agent, or chargé d'affaires, resided at Hyderabad on the part of the East-India Company. In 1843 they were defeated by Sir Charles Napier at Meanee and Dubba, and the country was made a dependency of the British empire.

SINDE, a river of Hindostan, in the province of Malwa, which, after a winding course of 250 miles, falls into the Jumna 25 miles from Etawah.

SINDIAH, sin'-di-a, the name of a celebrated family of Mahratta chieftains, India. (See GWALIOR.)

SINGAPORE, sin-ga-poor', an island off the southern extremity of the peninsula of Malacca, and one of the Straits' settlements belonging to Great Britain. It is 25 miles long and about 15 broad, separated by a deep narrow strait from the mainland. The surface is low and undulating. It was ceded by the sultan of Jahore to the East India Company in 1821, and has since risen rapidly into great commercial importance. The soil is very fertile. Pop. 139,208, of whom 2,769 are whites and 136,439 coloured; the total is made up of natives of S. India, Europeans, Armenians, Jews and Malays.

SINGAPORE, chief town of the above settlement, on the southern side of the island. It is well built, lighted with gas, and is the seat of government for the whole of the Straits' settlements. There are two good harbours with quays, and about 1,700 vessels, including 720 steamers, besides innumerable small native craft, visit the port annually. The exports, including camphor, coffee, sago, pepper, nutmegs, gutta percha, rattans, and tortoise-shell, are of the annual value of nearly £8,000,000. Pop. 62,000; the trading community being mostly Chinese.

SING-SING, sing'-sing', a town of West Chester county, New York, United States, in an elevated situation above the left bank of the Hudson, 36 miles N. of New York. Here is the principal prison of the state. Pop. 5,400. (See NEW YORK.)

SINIGAGLIA, sin-e-gal'-ye-a, a city and seaport of Italy, province of Ancona, on the Misa, at its influx into the Adriatic, 17 miles N.W. of Ancona. The town is walled, with handsome gates, and is modern in the style of buildings. Its cathedral is of the Corinthian order, and some other churches are admired on account of their architecture. The principal source of its wealth is a well-frequented fair, held annually in July. Pop. 10,500.

SINOPE, or SINOOB, si-no'-pe, a seaport of Asiatic Turkey, province of Anatolia, on the south side of a promontory running eastward into the Black Sea, 80 miles N.W. of Samsoun. It has a naval arsenal and a dock-yard, with a trade in timber, salt, fish, oil, and cordage. Pop. 9,000.—The place was bombarded by the Russians in 1853, when a Turkish squadron of thirteen ships, lying in the roadstead, was destroyed by the Russian fleet. On this occasion 4,000 Turks perished.

SIOUT, ES-SIOUT, or OSIUT, see-oot', the most important town of Upper Egypt, near the western bank of the Nile, 200 miles S. of Cairo. It is the residence of the governor of Upper Egypt, has five mosques and large bazaars, and is the resort of caravans coming from Darfur. Manf. Pipe-bowls. Pop. 25,000. The town occupies the site of the ancient Lycopolis.

SIOUX, or BIG SIOUX, se'-oo, a river of the United States, rising near the centre of Minnesota, and, after a course of 200 miles, joining the Missouri, on the left bank. It forms a portion of the boundary between Minnesota and Iowa.

SIOUX, a county of Iowa, United States. Area, 750 square miles. Pop. 5,426. The capital is Calliope.

SIPHANTO, se-fan'-to, an island of the Greek Archipelago, situate to the west of Paros. Area, 34 square miles. Desc. Fertile; producing corn, silk, figs, wax, and honey. Pop. 7,000.

SIRENS, si'-rens, in Greek mythology, beautiful nymphs who sat on a rock at the southern extremity of Italy, and sang beautifully to allure sailors to destruction.

SIR DARIA, or SIHUN. (See JAXARTES.)

SIRINAGUR. (See SERINAGUR.)

SIRICIUS, se-ris'-e-us, succeeded Damasus I. as bishop of Rome, in 384, under the reign of Valentinian II. He wrote a condemnation of the heresies of the Donatists, Priscillianists, &c., and also composed an epistle relative to the celibacy of the clergy.
Died 398.

SIR-I-PUL, sir-i-pool', a town of Bokhara, 45 miles S.W. of Balkh. It is the chief town of an Uzbek chief. Pop. 18,000.

SIRMOND, JACQUES, seer'-mawnd, a French Jesuit, who became secretary to Aquaviva, general of his order, at Rome, where he assisted Baronius in compiling his Annals. In 1613 he returned to France, and was appointed confessor to Louis XIII. He produced, among other important works, an edition of the Councils of France, editions of the works of Marcellinus, Theodoret, and Hincmar; and a great number of miscellaneous pieces on theological subjects.
Born at Riom, France, 1559; died 1651.

SISKIYOU, sis-ki-oo', a county of California, United States. Pop. 8,610.

SISMONDI, JEAN CHARLES LEONARD, de, sees-mond'-de, a distinguished historian, who was descended of an ancient Tuscan family, which had settled, first in France, and, after the revocation of the edict of Nantes, at Geneva. The historian received his education at the college of Geneva; but the Revolution having swept away a considerable portion of his father's property, he was compelled to enter a banking house at Lyons. In 1793 he went to England with his family, and, while there, he studied the English language and constitution, which knowledge was of essential service to him in after-life. In 1795 he settled in Italy as a farmer, and, in the leisure left from his agricultural pursuits, he occupied himself with the composition of his "Researches upon the Constitution of Free Peoples." His first published work was, however, the "Picture of Tuscan Agriculture," which appeared at Geneva in 1801. This was succeeded by a work upon political economy, in which the views of Adam Smith were followed. In 1805 he set out upon a tour through Italy, in company with Madame de Staël, with whom he had become acquainted at Geneva. That journey turned his attention to the history of the land of his ancestors; and, accordingly, in 1807, he published his first historical work, under the title of the "Italian Republics." He also wrote Italian biographies for the "Biographie Universelle" of Michaud. His "History of the French" considered to be his greatest work, was commenced in 1819, and occupied his pen till the close of his life; but in the meanwhile he gave to the world several less-important, but, nevertheless, highly valuable works; the chief of which were, "Lectures upon the Literature of the South of Europe," "History of the Fall of the Roman Empire and of the Decline of Civilization," and "Studies in Social Science."
Born at Geneva, 1773; died 1842.

SISOPOLS, or SIZEBOLI, sis-op'-o-le, the ancient Apollonia, a town of European Turkey, in Romania, 120 miles N.W. of Constantinople. It has one of the best harbours on the Black Sea, and is mostly inhabited by Greeks. In 1829 it was taken by the Russians.

SISTOVA, sis-to'-va, a town of European Turkey, in Bulgaria, eyalet of Widin, on the south bank of the Danube, 35 miles above Rustchuk. It has several mosques, and an ancient and strong castle. Manf. Cotton goods and leather. An active river trade is carried on. Pop. 11,540.

SISYPHUS, sis'-i-fus, in Greek mythology, a king of Ephyra, afterwards Corinth, and in some legends described as the father of Odysseus (Ulysses). After his death he was condemned in Hades to roll to the top of a hill a large stone, which had no sooner reached the summit, then it fell back into the plain; thus rendering his punishment eternal.

SITA, si'-ta, in Hindoo mythology, wife of Rama, and daughter of a king, Janika.

SITAPUR, a division of India. Pop. 2,777,803; of district of same name, 958,251.

SITKA, sit'-ka, an island in the Pacific Ocean, the largest of George the Third's Archipelago, lying off the west coast of North America. There was formerly a settlement here of the Russian-American Company. Lat. 57° 3′ N. Lon. 135° 18′ W.

SIUT. (See SIOUT.)

SIVA, si'-va, in Hindoo mythology, the third deity of the triad, representing the principle of destruction.

SIVAS, se-vas', a city of Asia, in Turkey, capital of an eyalet of the same name, situate on the Kizil Irmak, 60 miles S.E. of Tokat. It has many mosques and bazaars well supplied with goods. Manf. Coarse woollens and other fabrics. Pop. 25,000.

SIVAS, an eyalet or province of Turkey in Asia, bounded N. and E. by Trebizond. It is generally very fertile, and there are extensive pastures; but a portion of the surface is covered by branches of the Anti-Taurus mountains. Area, 26,000 square miles. Pop. 812,000.

SIWAH, or SIOUAH, se-wa', a considerable oasis, or fertile island, in the Libyan desert, Africa, on the route from Egypt to Fezzan. This valley is described by Horneman as 50 miles in circumference, hemmed in on every side by barren rocks. Its capital is of the same name, and divided into two portions, one inhabited by married people, and the other by bachelors. Near it are the ruins of the temple of Jupiter Ammon.

SIXTUS I., ST., sik'-tus, Pope, and successor of Alexander I., in 119. He was murdered.
Died 128.

SIXTUS II., ST., was the successor of Stephen I. He is stated to have been an Athenian and a pagan philosopher before his conversion to Christianity. He was one of those who suffered martyrdom in the persecution of the Christians by Valerianus.
Died 258.

SIXTUS III., ST., was the successor of Celestin I., in 432. He endeavoured to reconcile the disputes existing in the Eastern Church, particularly in the case of Cyril, bishop of Alexandria, and John of Antioch.
Died 440.

SIXTUS IV. (FRANCESCO D'ALBESCOLA DELLA ROVERE), was the son of a fisherman on the coast of Genoa, but became a monk of the order of the Cordeliers. His abilities procured him the chair of divinity at Padua and other universities of Italy. He also became general of his order, and was honoured with the cardinalship by Paul II., whom he succeeded in 1471. He is accused with having been a participator in the conspiracy of the Pazzi, the object of which was to destroy the Medici family. (See PAZZI.) He also endeavoured to raise a new crusade against the infidels, but without success. Sixtus issued a bull granting indulgence to those who celebrated the feast of the Immaculate Conception of the Virgin.
Born 1414; died 1484.

SIXTUS V. (FELICE PERETTI), was the son of a gardener of Ancona. When very young, he was put to keep swine, from which situation he was taken by a Cordelier, who was pleased with his quickness, and placed him in a convent belonging to that order, in a menial capacity. He made so great progress in learning as to be admitted into orders, and to become doctor and professor of divinity at Sienna; upon which he took the name of Montalto. After obtaining several marks of distinction, he was made cardinal in 1570. In 1585 he was elected pope. He commenced his pontificate by clearing the Ecclesiastical States of the numerous bands of robbers which infested it. He also punished with great severity all kinds of vice, and was inflexible in the administration of justice. He limited the number of cardinals to seventy, and reformed many abuses which prevailed in the government. He excommunicated Queen Elizabeth, but is stated to have secretly admired the opposition made by the English sovereign to the ambitious projects of Philip II. of Spain. He embellished Rome with several fine structures, and built the Vatican Library. By his orders, a new version of the Bible in Latin was published.
Born 1521; died 1590.

SKAGGERRACK or the SLEEVE, skag'-ger-rak, an arm of the North Sea between Denmark and Norway.

SKALITZ, or SZAKOCTZA, ska'-litzh, a walled town of Hungary, 47 miles N. of Presburg. Manf. Linen and woollen goods. Pop. 9,000.

SKAMANIA, ska-ma'-ne-a, a county of Washington territory, United States. Area, 1800 square miles. Pop. 809.

SKELTON, JOHN, skel'-ton, an English poet, who was educated at Oxford and Cambridge, and, on entering into orders, obtained the living of Diss, in Norfolk; but his conduct was very irregular. Having reflected severely on Cardinal Wolsey, in his poem entitled "Why come ye not to Court?" he was obliged to take refuge with Islip, abbot of Westminster, where he continued till his death. He wrote satires (the best known is "Colin Clout"), sonnets, and an invective against Lilly, the grammarian. He had a strong vein of grotesque and somewhat vulgar humour.
Born about 1460; died 1529.

SKIBBEREEN, skib'-be-reen', a market-town of Ireland, in the county of Cork, on the Ilan, 52 miles S.W. of Cork. Pop. 3,700.

SKIPTON, skip'-ton, a market-town of the West Riding of Yorkshire, 16 miles N.W. of Bradford. Manf. Cotton and woollen goods. Pop. 9,091.—A station on the Midland railway.

SKOPELO, or SCOPELLO, one of the Sporades, in the Grecian archipelago. It is 11 miles long and 5 miles wide, and highly cultivated. The chief town, on the south-eastern shore, is of the same name. Pop. 12,000.

SKOPIN, sko-pin', a town of Russia, government of Riazan, on the Verda, 160 miles S.E. of Moscow. Manf. Russia leather. There is a trade in corn and cattle. Pop. 9,600.

SKWIRA, skwi'-ra, a town of European Russia, government of Kiev, 60 miles S.W. of the town of that name. Pop. 9,300, mostly Jews.

SKYE, ski, the largest and most northerly island of the Inner Hebrides, on the coast of Scotland, and in the county of Inverness, separated from the mainland by a narrow strait. It is 47 miles long, with a breadth varying between 7 and 25 miles. Mountainous and moory, some of its masses having very irregular and picturesque outlines, and attaining a height of over 3,000 feet. The shores are deeply indented with numerous inlets, so distributed as to render no part of the island distant more than 4 miles from salt water. The scenery is remarkably striking and picturesque, and on the coast are immense basaltic formations, with caves and waterfalls. The climate is mild, but humid and variable, but the greater portion of the island is useless for the purposes of agriculture. Cattle, fish, and kelp, are the principal exports. The streams are small and unimportant. Many curious grottos, Druidical monuments, and ancient forts, are found in this island, the inhabitants of which dwell, for the most part, in scattered villages, as convenience or the situation invites.

Minerals.—Freestone, granite, and marble.
Area.—547 square miles.
Pop.—17,330.

SLAVE COAST, that portion of W. Africa between the rivers Volta and Lagos, which respectively separate it from the Gold Coast on the W. and Benin on the E.

SLAVE LAKE, GREAT, a lake of British North America, and about 500 feet above sea level, about 350 miles long, with a breadth of 50 at its widest points. There are many wooded islands. Lat. between 60° 40′ and 63° N. Lon. between 109° 30′ and 117° 30′ W.

SLAVONIA, a province of the Austrian-Hungarian empire, united with Croatia. The capital is Eszék. (See CROATIA.)

SLEAFORD, NEW, slé'-ford, a market-town of Lincolnshire, on a rivulet called the Slea, 18 miles S.E. of Lincoln. It has a church dating from the 13th century, town-hall, and grammar-school. Pop. 4,967.—A station on the Great Northern railway.

SLESWICK. (See SCHLESWIG.)

SLIGO, slī'-go, a maritime county of Ireland, province of Connaught, bounded E. by the county of Leitrim, S. by Roscommon, S.W. and W. by Mayo, and N. by the Bay of Donegal. The coast line is indented with numerous bays, the safest of which is the Bay of Sligo. The surface rises from the coast to the Slieve Gamph and Ox mountains, about 1,800 feet high. In the southern part are rich and fertile tracts, equally adapted for tillage or for fattening oxen.

Rivers.—The only navigable streams are the Garrogue, Moy, and Owenmore. Among the hills there are many lakes; among which may be named Lough-Arrow, Lough-Gill, and a part of Lough-Gara.
Minerals.—Lead, iron, copper, and manganese.
Area.—721 square miles.
Pop.—110,955, about 101,000 being Roman Catholics.
Parliamentary Representation and Chief Towns.—Two members are returned for the county. The town of Sligo was disfranchised in 1870. SLIGO (the capital), Dromore, and Tobereuny are the chief towns.
History.—This was the territory of the O'Connors, whose domestic feuds assisted the inroad of the Norman invaders.

SLIGO, a seaport and chief town of the above county, on the Garrogue, 131 miles W. of Dublin. Its public buildings consist of a gaol, a barrack, a court-house, an infirmary, and a charter school. It is the entrepôt of an extensive country, and is, therefore, a place of considerable trade in agricultural products and yarn, and there is a regular steam communication with Londonderry, Glasgow, and Liverpool. Pop. 10,808.—A station on the Midland Great Western railway of Ireland.

SLOANE, SIR HANS, slone, a physician and naturalist of Irish birth, but Scotch descent. He studied in London, where he contracted an intimacy with Boyle and Ray, and afterwards went to Paris, and attended the lectures of Tournefort and Du Verney. He returned to London in 1684, and became a favourite with Dr. Sydenham, who took him into his house. In the following year he was chosen a fellow of the Royal Society, and, in 1687, admitted of the College of Physicians. Shortly afterwards he went to Jamaica with the duke of Albemarle, governor of that island, as his physician; and, on his return, in 1689, he settled in London, and, in 1694, was chosen physician to Christ's Hospital. The preceding year he had been elected secretary to the Royal Society, upon which he revived the publication of the Philosophical Transactions. He was also active in promoting the establishment of a dispensary for the poor, and was one of the founders of the Foundling Hospital. In 1707 he published the first volume of his "Natural History of Jamaica:" but the second did not appear till 1725. In 1708 he was elected a member of the Academy of Sciences at Paris, and, on the accession of George I., created a baronet. In 1719 he became president of the College of Physicians, having previously been elected to the same distinguished post in the Royal Society, on the death of Newton. His magnificent collection of natural history, library, and manuscripts was purchased by parliament for £20,000, which did not amount to a fourth part of its actual value. This collection served as the foundation of the British Museum.

Born at Killyleagh, county Down, Ireland, 1660; died at Chelsea, 1753.

SLOBODSK, or SLOBODSKOI, slo-bodsk, a town of European Russia, government of Viatka, 16 miles N.E. of the town of Viatka. It has numerous churches and iron-foundries. Pop. 7,000.

SLONIM, slo-nim', a town of European Russia, government of Grodno. Manf. Cloth. Pop. 21,108.

SLOUGH, slou, a village of Buckinghamshire, 18 miles W. of London. The celebrated William Herschel had here his residence and observatory. Pop. 5,080.—A station on the Great Western railway.

SLUTSK, slootzk, a town of European Russia, government of Minsk, 63 miles S. of the town of Minsk. Pop. 9,700.

SMEATON, JOHN, smé'-ton, an eminent English mechanician and engineer. He was intended for the law by his father, who was an attorney, but, at his own request, he was placed under a mathematical instrument maker. Having acquired considerable reputation by his inventions in hydraulics, &c., he, in 1753, was elected a fellow of the Royal Society, and in 1759 he obtained the gold medal for his paper on "The Natural Powers of Wind and Water to turn Mills and other Machines depending on a Circular Motion." The two lighthouses which had been successively erected upon the Eddystone rock having been destroyed, the first by a storm and the second by fire, Smeaton was appointed to rebuild the structure, which he completed in a manner beyond expectation. He also made improvements in wind and water-mills, and the steam-engine; completed the harbour of Ramsgate, planned the great canal from the Forth to the Clyde, and executed a number of other great works. He was one of the chief promoters of the Society of Civil Engineers.

Born at Austhorpe, near Leeds, 1724; died 1792.

SMETHWICK, smeth'-ick, a town of Staffordshire, 3 miles N.W. of Birmingham. Manf. Iron and glass. Pop. 25,076.

SMIRKE, ROBERT, smirk, an English artist, who was originally a coach-painter, but became one of the first pictorial delineators of his time. He was elected a Royal Academician in 1792. He made a great number of designs for booksellers, and was one of the artists engaged to illustrate Boydell's Shakspeare.

Born 1751; died in London, 1845.

SMIRKE, SIR ROBERT, an architect, and eldest son of the preceding. Before he had attained his 30th year he was engaged to make the designs for Covent Garden theatre. His next great undertakings were the Mint, and the Post-office in St. Martin's-le-Grand, which last building was completed in 1829. The most important of his other works were—the College of Physicians, the Union Club in Trafalgar Square, the extension of King's Bench Walk, Temple; and King's College. Finally, his greatest structure is the British Museum, which was commenced in 1823, but was not completed until the year 1847. He was elected a Royal Academician in 1812, and created a knight in 1831.

Born 1780; died 1867.

SMIRKE, SYDNEY, an architect, and younger brother of the preceding. His first important work was the Oxford and Cambridge University Club in Pall-Mall, upon which he was engaged with his brother, the Pall Mall front being understood to be after his own designs. He superintended the restorations made in the Temple Church in 1842, and, afterwards, in conjunction with Mr. Basevi, designed the Conservative Club-house in St. James's Street. In 1847 he was engaged as the architect of the new Carlton Club. One of the most important of his later works was the reading-room of the British Museum, erected in the inner quadrangle of that building. In this undertaking, however, he only acted under the suggestions of Mr. Panizzi, the principal librarian of the Museum. He was elected a Royal Academician in 1859.

Born about 1800.

SMITH, JOHN, an English navigator, who, between the years 1606-14, made three voyages to Virginia, and assisted to found James-town. (See POCHAHONTAS.) He wrote a work, entitled "A Description of New England; or Observations and Discoveries of Captain John Smith."

Born 1579; died 1631.

SMITH, ADAM, a Scotch writer upon political economy. He received his education first at Kirkaldy grammar-school, and subsequently at the universities of Glasgow and Oxford. After being engaged during three years in reading lectures upon rhetoric and belles-lettres at Edinburgh, he was nominated professor of logic and moral philosophy at the university of Glasgow. In 1759, by the publication of his "Theory of Moral Sentiments," he acquired reputation, which was greatly heightened and extended by his profound work, entitled "Inquiry into the Nature and Causes of the Wealth of Nations," which first appeared in 1766. Some years subsequently to the publication of this work, he was, through the influence of the Duke of Buccleuch, appointed a commissioner of the customs in Scotland. He was the intimate friend of Hume, and published an Apology for his life, which was severely animadverted on by Dr Horne for its atheistical sentiments.

Born at Kirkaldy, Scotland, 1723; died 1790.

SMITH, JAMES, an English author, who was educated for the legal profession, and became solicitor to the Ordnance. After contributing a number of minor pieces to the magazines, he, in 1812, published, in conjunction with his brother Horace, a volume entitled "The Rejected Addresses," which instantly became highly popular. He subsequently wrote several entertainments for the elder Charles Mathews.

Born in London, 1775; died there, 1839.

SMITH, HORACE, brother of the preceding. He was the author of about twenty novels, the best known of which are "The Moneyed Man" and "Brambletye House." Like his brother, he also produced a number of light pieces of a humorous character in prose and verse.

Born in London, 1780; died at Tunbridge Wells, 1849.

SMITH, SIR JAMES EDWARD, an eminent English botanist, who was intended for a mercantile calling; but having from an early period evinced a decided predilection for scientific pursuits, his father was at length induced to send him to Edinburgh, with the view of qualifying him for the medical profession. Learning from Sir Joseph Banks, that the books, manuscripts, and natural history collections of Linnæus had been offered to him for £1000, and that he had declined the purchase, Mr. Smith, with some difficulty, succeeded in inducing his father to become the purchaser. This magnificent collection was, after the death of Sir James Smith, who had founded the Linnæan Society, presented to that body. After taking his medical degree at Leyden, he travelled in Italy, Switzerland, and France, and, in 1792, was appointed teacher of botany to Queen Charlotte. In 1814 he received the honour of knighthood. He wrote extensively upon his favourite science; his most important works being "English Botany," in 36 volumes; the "English Flora," and the botanical articles in "Rees's Cyclopædia." His wife survived him for many years, dying in 1877, at the great age of 103.

Born at Norwich, 1759; died 1828.

SMITH, SIR WILLIAM SYDNEY, an English admiral, who was, in 1793, sent by Admiral Hood to destroy the French vessels of war in the Harbour of Toulon, by means of fireships; but, being taken prisoner, he was confined during two years in the Temple at Paris. Having effected his escape, he was sent to act against the French in Egypt, and, by his bravery and skill, compelled Bonaparte to abandon the siege of St. Jean d'Acre, in 1799. In 1805 he was created a rear-admiral, and was afterwards appointed to defend Sicily from the invasion of the French, who were then masters of Naples. In 1807 he accompanied the king of Portugal to Brazil. Not being again employed upon active service, he devoted himself to the propagation of several philanthropic works. He also assisted to found a society, the object of which was to effect the suppression of piracy in the Mediterranean.

Born in London, 1764; died 1840.

SMITH, DR. JOHN PYE, a modern theologian and geologist, who became classical tutor in the Theological Academy at Homerton, belonging to the Independent denomination. His works are highly esteemed by theologians; the most important of them being, "The Scripture Testimony to the Messiah;" "The Mosaic Account of the Creation and the Deluge illustrated by the Discoveries of Modern Science:" and "On the Relation between the Holy Scriptures and some parts of Geological Science." Dr. Smith was a fellow of the Royal and Geological Societies, and LL.D. of Marischal College, Aberdeen.

Born at Sheffield, 1774; died 1851.

SMITH, JOHN THOMAS, an English antiquary, who studied drawing under the sculptor Nollekens, and at the Royal Academy; after which he became a pupil of Sherwin, the engraver. In 1791 he commenced his fine work entitled "Antiquities of London and its Environs," which was completed in 1800. His next publication of importance was "The Antiquities of Westminster." "The Ancient Topography of London" followed. In 1816 he received the appointment of keeper of the prints in the British Museum, an office he retained until his death. Besides the preceding works, he produced "Vagabondiana, or Anecdotes of Mendicant Wanderers through the Streets of London;" and "Nollekens and his Times."

Born in London, 1766; died 1833.

SMITH, JOHN STAFFORD, an eminent English composer, who, in 1802, became organist of the Chapel Royal, in succession to Dr. Arnold. His most admired compositions were glees. He also produced two musical works, entitled "Musica Antiqua," a collection of anthems; and "Ancient Songs of the Fifteenth Century."

Born at Gloucester about 1750; died 1836.

SMITH, WILLIAM, an eminent geologist, and entitled "the father of English geology." He produced the first geological map of England and Wales, and two works on "Organised Fossils." In consequence of his distinguished services, he obtained a pension of £100 from the crown, received the degree of LL.D. in Trinity College, Dublin, and the Wollaston medal of the Geological Society of London.

Born at Churchill, Oxfordshire, 1769; died at Northampton, 1839.

SMITH, JOSEPH, the founder of the body commonly known as Mormons or Mormonites. He was the son of a farmer of Sharon, Windsor county, Vermont, and when about 22 years of age, professed to have discovered the book of Mormon, engraved on plates of metal, apparently gold, and which could only be deciphered by the aid of the "Urim and Thummim," transparent stones, which he also professed to have discovered. He published a translation in 1830. The book was really a romance written by a Presbyterian preacher named Spaulding. In 1830 the first Mormon church, or, as the founder called it, that of the "Latter-day Saints," was established in the town of Manchester, Ontario county, state of New York. From that time the sect increased with astonishing rapidity, and churches were set up in Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Pennsylvania, Missouri, and New York. Despite ridicule, persecution, and tarring and feathering, the work went on, until, in 1838, the Mormonites were expelled from Missouri. They settled in Illinois, and in "the fall of 1839" founded the city of Nauvoo ("the beautiful"), on the banks of the Mississippi. Soon, from a wild tract, the spot became a city of 1,500 well-built houses, with more than 15,000 inhabitants. In 1844 the governor of that state issued a warrant against Joseph Smith, as the instigator of a riot, during which the printing-offices and premises of a "gentile" newspaper were destroyed by the Mormons. The prophet at first made symptoms of resistance, and called out his militia, of which he was lieutenant-colonel; but subsequently offered to surrender, if the governor would provide a guard for his safety until his trial should take place. He was lodged in Carthage gaol under a small guard, selected, it is affirmed, from Smith's enemies. A few days afterwards, a mob of turbulent ruffians broke into his prison, fired into the room where he was confined, and killed his brother Hiram, who was incarcerated with him. The prophet endeavoured to effect his escape by the window, but was taken and shot. His body was interred by his followers with the greatest solemnity, and he became the martyr of his sect, which, in consequence of its founder's fate, increased even more rapidly than before. (See YOUNG, BRIGHAM.)

Born at Sharon, Vermont, 1805; died 1844.

SMITH, SYDNEY, Rev., an English divine, essayist, wit, and humorist, descended by his mother's side from French refugees. He received his education at Winchester school and New College, Oxford, of which he was elected fellow in 1790. After officiating as curate at Nether-Avon, in Wiltshire, for about two years, he took up his residence at Edinburgh, where he remained about five years, becoming acquainted in that interval with Henry, afterwards Lord Brougham, Francis Jeffrey, afterwards Lord Jeffrey, and other gentlemen who subsequently acquired fame in science and literature. At one of the meetings of these brilliant young men, it was suggested that the Edinburgh Review should be started. The review made its first appearance in October, 1802, and Smith was the first editor. He took up his residence in London in 1804, having some time previously married the daughter of Mr. Pybus, a banker. For two years he remained without any preferment in the Church, although he had become famous as a wit, popular preacher at the chapel of the Foundling Hospital, lecturer at the Royal Institution, and as a constant contributor to the Edinburgh Review. Lord Erskine was one of his earliest patrons, and presented him to the rectory of Foston-le-Clay, in Yorkshire, in 1806. This living was exchanged for that of Combe-Florey, in Somersetshire, in 1830. He was also appointed to a stall in Bristol Cathedral, and, in 1831, one of the canons residentiary of St. Paul's Cathedral. His residence was, however, almost entirely fixed in London, where his brilliant wit and unrivalled conversational powers made him a welcome guest in the most distinguished circles. His contributions to literature, which are characterized by liberal views, clearness, and force of style, and wit and humour in abundance, principally were,—"Letters on the subject of the Catholics, by Peter Plymley;" a number of political pamphlets and reviews. His "Lectures on Moral Philosophy" were published after his death, and his memoirs, by his daughter, Lady Holland, appeared in 1855.

Born at Woodford, Essex, 1771; died in London, 1845.

SMITH, ALEXANDER, a modern poet, who was intended for the ministry; but circumstances having conspired to prevent his entering upon the necessary course of study, he was put to the business of a lace-designer, in Glasgow; while following which, he devoted his leisure to the composition of verse. Having forwarded some extracts from his "Life Drama" to the Rev. George Gilfillan, of Dundee, that gentleman was so highly pleased with the youthful poet's effusions, as to obtain a place for them in the columns of the "Critic." Although subjected to much adverse criticism, on account of its occasional extravagance of style, the "Life Drama" became very popular, both on its first appearance and on its republication separately. Smith, Sydney Dobell, and several others, were styled "the spasmodic school," and were vigorously ridiculed by Professor Aytoun, in "Firmilian." He subsequently produced several other volumes of verse, and a novel, "Alfred Hagart's Household." In 1854 he was appointed secretary to the Edinburgh University.

Born at Kilmarnock, Ayrshire, 1830; died 1867.

SMITH, GEORGE, Assyrian scholar and explorer. He was apprenticed to an engraver of bank-notes, but was attracted by the discoveries of Ninevite sculptures by Bolta and Layard, and studied with intense eagerness the inscriptions on the sculptures in the British Museum, where he obtained an appointment as assistant in the department of Egyptian and Oriental antiquities. He undertook two expeditions of discovery to the site of Nineveh, and made some most important discoveries of tablets and inscriptions, especially a series containing a record of the deluge, and another with an account of the creation. He died while arranging for further exploration, the victim of over-work and exposure. He was the author of "Annals of Assurbanipul," "Early History of Babylonia," and of various papers contributed to learned societies.

Born 1840; died at Aleppo, 1876.

SMOLENSK, smo-lensk', a government of European Russia, to the west of the government of Moscow. It is very fertile, and abounding in forests of great value. Corn, hemp, flax, hops, and tobacco, are grown, and swine are reared in large numbers, but cattle are not numerous. Great attention is given to the rearing of bees.

Rivers.—The Dnieper, Dvina, Gshat, Oka, and Iput.
Minerals.—Iron, copper, and salt.
Area.—21,638 square miles.
Pop.—1,191,172.

SMOLENSK, capital of the above government, built partly on two hills, and partly in a valley between them, watered by the Dnieper, 250 miles S.W. of Moscow. The part to the south of the river is surrounded with a massive wall. It is the see of an archbishop, and has three cathedrals, more than thirty churches, monasteries, and an episcopal palace. It has, besides, numerous schools, a college, hospitals, a house of correction, and assembly-rooms. Manf. Linens, leather, carpets, and soap. Pop. 35,830. Lat. 54° 50′ N. Lon. 31° 56′ 36″ E.—Smolensk was the scene of an obstinate conflict between the French and Russians in 1812, and, on quitting it in their disastrous retreat, the French blew up part of the works; and, as most of the houses were of wood, about the half of them were destroyed on these two occasions.

SMOLLETT, TOBIAS, smol'-let, a novelist, who was educated for a surgeon, and served on board a ship of the line at the bombardment of Carthagena. He afterwards quitted the service, and took his degree of doctor of physic; but not meeting with encouragement as a medical practitioner, he became a writer by profession. His first work of any pretensions was the novel of "Roderick Random," published in 1748, which soon ran through several editions. The year following appeared the "Regicide," a tragedy of little merit. This was followed by the novel of "Peregrine Pickle," in which were inserted Lady Vane's Memoirs; for giving place to which he received "a handsome reward." In 1754 he published the "Adventures of Ferdinand Count Fathom." He next established the Critical Review, which was chiefly conducted by him till 1763. For an article in this journal he was prosecuted by Admiral Knowles; on which he was confined in the King's Bench some time, and wrote there the "Adventures of Sir Lancelot Greaves," a feeble imitation of "Don Quixote." In 1757 he published the "History of England," which was afterwards printed in weekly numbers, attaining, in both forms, a large circulation. This work, though inaccurate and partial, brought him both profit and reputation. In 1762 he began a periodical paper, called The Briton, in defence of Lord Bute's administration, which print was replied to by Wilkes, in the North Briton. The year following he went abroad, and in 1766 he published an account of his travels. In 1771 appeared his novel of "Humphrey Clinker," an extremely humorous production. He also wrote some poems, compiled a collection of voyages and travels, and translated "Gil Blas" and "Don Quixote" into English. He was also the author of some graceful verses. As a novelist he ranks high from his power of depicting humorous character, and his high spirits; but he is often abominably coarse. His health failing, he went to Italy, where he died.

Born in Scotland, 1721; died near Leghorn, 1771.

SMYRNA, smir'-na (Turkish IZMIR, is-meer'), a commercial city of Asiatic Turkey, in Anatolia, and the most flourishing port of the Levant, situate at the head of the Gulf of Smyrna, an inlet of the Ægean Sea, 40 miles long and 20 wide. The modern town is about 4 miles in circuit, and extends about a mile along the water, in approaching from which it makes a very beautiful appearance. Its streets are narrow, dirty, and ill-paved, and the houses are mostly built of wood, one story high. The bazaars are provided with goods. There are separate quarters for Turks, Armenians, Franks and Jews, with churches and mosques. There are an English hospital and burying-ground. The harbour is excellent, and ships of large size can anchor close to the quay. The exports consist of very rich commodities, raw silk, Turkey carpets, unwrought cotton, and the beautiful goats' hair or mohair of Angora, which is used in several of our finer manufactures. It sends out also a considerable quantity of raisins, figs, muscadine wine, olive-oil, sponge, gums, nut-galls, and a variety of drugs,—as rhubarb, amber, musk, lapis lazuli, and gums. A certain number of pearls, diamonds, and other precious stones are also exported. The town is connected by railway with Aidin and Alashev, in the interior of Asia Minor. Pop. Estimated at 200,000; of whom 50,000 are Turks, 75,000 Greeks, 15,000 Jews, 10,000 Roman Catholics, 6,000 Armenians, and 5,000 Franks. Lat. 38° 29′ N. Lon. 27° 4′ 45″ E.—Seven hundred years before the Christian era Smyrna was a member of the great Ionian League. One of the earliest Christian communities (mentioned in the book of "Revelation" as one of the "seven churches") was established here. The town was taken possession of by the Turks. The town has suffered greatly from earthquakes and plague.

SMYTH, a county of Virginia, United States. Area, 5,000 square miles. Pop. 12,160, about 1,300 being coloured. The capital is Marion.

SMYTHESDALE, smithes'-dale, a town of Victoria, Australia, 12 miles S.W. of Ballaarat, in the midst of a rising district. Pop. 1,500.

SNAKE RIVER, a river of North America, rising in the Rocky Mountains, in the north-west part of Wyoming Territory, at an elevation of 8,000 feet above the sea, falling, after a course of 900 miles, into the Columbia, in lat. 46° 15′ W. Lon. 119° N. It receives many tributary streams.

SNEEK, sneek, a town of the Netherlands, province of Friesland, 13 miles S.W. of Leeuwarden. A very large market for butter and cheese is held here. Pop. 10,496.

SNEL, WILLEBORD, a Dutch mathematician who held the mathematical chair at Leyden. According to Huyghens and Vossius, he discovered the true law of the refraction of the rays of light, which has been attributed to Descartes.

Born at Leyden, 1591; died 1626.

SNIATYN, sné'-a-tin, a town of the Austrian empire, in Galicia, on the Pruth, formerly a frontier stronghold of importance. Pop. 11,000.

SNOHOMISH, sno'-ho-mish, a county of Washington Territory, United States. Area, 1,500 square miles. Pop. 1,387.

SNORRI, STURLESSON, snor'-ré, an Icelandic historian, who, as a lawyer, linguist, mathematician, architect, and antiquary, was one of the most learned men of his time. He was descended from the ancient kings of Norway, and was the last and greatest of the Icelandic Scalds, or old Scandinavian poets. He was a wealthy and influential man, and was chosen first magistrate of the island, but having engaged in various political intrigues, he was assassinated at the instigation of Haco, king of Norway. His most important work was entitled the "Heimskringla," a collection of Scaldic songs, partly original, and partly the effusions of other bards relative to the chronicles of the kingdom of Norway. He also produced the "Snorra-Edda," upon the Scandinavian mythology, and the exploits of heroes contemporary with himself.
Born 1178.

SNOWDON. (See CARNARVONSHIRE and WALES.)

SNYDERS, FRANCIS, sni'-ders, a Dutch painter and engraver. He excelled in hunting-scenes, the animals and landscapes of which are very fine, and in battle pieces, being occasionally assisted in the figures by Rubens. He also executed some masterly etchings.
Born at Antwerp, 1579; died there, 1657.

SNYDER, a county of Pennsylvania, United States. Area, 260 square miles. Pop. 18,000. The capital is Middleburg.

SOANE, SIR JOHN, sone, an English architect, who was the son of a bricklayer. He was taken into the service of Dance, the architect, as errand boy, but his liberal master, perceiving some talent in the lad, allowed him to study in his office as a pupil. He subsequently made such progress as to obtain the gold medal of the Royal Academy, for the design of a triumphal arch; and, on the recommendation of sir William Chambers, he was sent to Italy as travelling student. He afterwards obtained the lucrative appointment of architect to the Bank of England. In 1791 he became clerk of the works to St. James's Palace; in 1795, architect to the Woods and Forests; and subsequently professor of architecture to the Royal Academy, and surveyor to Chelsea Hospital. He received the order of knighthood in 1831. The greater part of his wealth was spent upon his house, museum, and library in Lincoln's Inn Fields, which building was, after his death, vested in trustees for the use of the public, who, under certain regulations, are admitted to it without charge.
Born at Reading, 1753; died in London, 1837.

SOBIESKI, JOHN. (See JOHN III., of Poland.)

SOCIETY ISLANDS, so-sï'-e-te, a cluster of 13 islands and some insignificant islets, in the South Pacific Ocean, so named by captain Cook, in the year 1769. They are Tahiti, the largest and most important; Eimeo, Lord Howe's Island, Maiaoiti, Maitia, Marua, Otapa, Scilly, Tetuaroa, and Tuta, under the French protectorate; and Borabora, Huahine, and Raiatea, independent states. The islands resemble Tahiti in general appearance and products. (See TAHITI.) Area, 580 square miles. Pop. 20,000. Lat. 16°—18° S. Lon. 148°—155° W.

SOCINUS, LÆLIUS, so-sï'-nus, founder of the Socinian sect. He was descended of an ancient family of Siena, and was designed by his father for the profession of the law; but having embraced the principles of the Reformation, he deemed it expedient to quit Italy in 1547. After passing through several countries, he settled at Zurich, where he was suspected of Arianism, and having put some "portentous questions" to Calvin, that theologian declined to answer them, assuring him that if he did not "timely correct this itch of inquiry, he would draw on himself great torments." Socinus profited by the hint, but more by the fate of Servetus (see SERVETUS), and retired to Poland, whence he went to Venice, and afterwards returned to Zurich.
Born at Siena, 1525; died at Zurich, 1562.

SOCINUS, FAUSTUS, nephew of the above, and the propagator and systematizer of his doctrines. He inherited his uncle's property, papers, and principles, which rendered it advisable to withdraw to Italy, where he was entertained at the court of the duke of Tuscany; but in 1574 he went to Germany, whence he removed to Poland, where the Unitarians were established in great numbers. Groundless charges of sedition were made against him, and he was compelled to leave Cracow, where he was attacked by the monks, and nearly murdered. His property in Italy had been previously confiscated.
Born at Siena, 1539; died near Cracow, 1604.

SOCORRO, so-kor'-ro, a county of New Mexico, United States. Area, 11,500 square miles. Pop. 7,000. The capital is Socorro.

SOCOTARA, or SOCOTRA, so-ko'-tra, an island of the Indian Ocean, near the entrance to the Gulf of Aden. It consists of a table land, about 800 feet in elevation, and of plains near the shore. The soil is not very fertile, but among the productions are, aloes of the finest quality, tamarinds, tobacco, and various fruits and gums. The island belongs to the sultan of Keshin, who, by a treaty signed in 1876, is a feudatory of Great Britain. Area, 1,000 square miles. Pop. 5,000, of mixed races.

SOCRATES, sok'-ra-tees, a philosopher of Athens, was the son of a sculptor, in which art he himself attained some proficiency. He served as a soldier, according to his duty as a good citizen, and distinguished himself in several actions, in which he saved the lives of Xenophon and Alcibiades, with whom he contracted a close friendship. On his return to Athens, he presented a remarkable contrast to his contemporaries, in the plainness of his dress and the frugality of his living. In his philosophical lectures he endeavoured to effect a general reformation by recommending virtue. He was followed by a number of illustrious disciples, whom he instructed sometimes in the groves of Academus, and at others in the Lyceum, or on the banks of the Ilissus. The independence of his mind, and the powerful eloquence of his discourses, excited against him many enemies, particularly Melitus and Anytus, at whose instigation Aristophanes ridiculed him in his comedy called the "Clouds." Socrates was next accused before the council of Five Hundred, of corrupting the Athenian youth, of introducing innovations in religion, and of ridiculing the gods. Upon these charges he was condemned to death. The solemn celebration of the festival of the Theora stayed his execution for a month, which time he employed in discoursing with his friends on sublime subjects. He was urged to make his escape, which he might easily have done, as the gaoler's permission had been obtained; but he nobly refused, observing, "Where am I to go to avoid death?" When the term of the festival was ended, he drank off the poison with perfect composure, after making a libation to the gods, and in a few moments he expired. Thus perished Socrates, whom the oracle had pronounced the wisest man in Greece. The Athenians repented of their ingratitude, and his enemies were universally hated, and died miserably. The life and sayings of Socrates have been transmitted to us by his two most eminent disciples, Xenophon and Plato. By his wife Xantippe, rendered proverbial by the violence of her temper, he had several children. He appears to have been persuaded that he was influenced by a preternatural power, which he termed his "dæmon," to seek out truth, and he directed his attention to defining the exact meanings of the words used in philosophical discussion, and by the system of questioning—the Socratic method—attempting to arrive at truth and the practical application of philosophy to the conscience and morals.

Born at Athens, 469 B.C.; died 399.

SOCRATES, surnamed the Scholastic, a native of Constantinople. He wrote an ecclesiastical history from the period where Eusebius ends,—that is, from the year 306 to 439.

Lived in the 5th century.

SÖDERMANLAND, se(r)'-der-man-land, a län or province of Sweden, to the south of Lake Mælar. It is generally level and fertile, and there are many lakes. The capital is Nyköping. Area, 2,600 square miles. Pop. 149,420.

SOERABAYA, so-er-a-ba'-ya, a Dutch residency of the island of Java, on the north-east coast. The coast is low and flat, but inland there are wooded mountains, rising in the volcano of Walirang to 11,500 feet. The soil is very fertile. Pop. 970,060.

SOERABAYA, or SURABAYA, a seaport town, capital of the above, in the strait of Madura. There are a large and secure harbour, docks, and ship-building yards, and an extensive shipping trade is carried on. Pop. 50,000. Lat. 7° 14′ S. Lon. 112° 44′ E.

SOERAKARTA, so-er-a-kar'-ta, a central province of Java, traversed on the northern part by a mountain-range, but consisting chiefly of a fertile valley. There are two volcanoes—Lawoe, 10,990 feet, and Merapi, 9,186 feet. The climate is favourable for Europeans. Pop. 400,000.

SOERAKARTA, or SOLO, capital of the above province, the residence of many important native dignitaries. There are a castle occupied by the Dutch governor, a Protestant church and institute for instructing European children in the laws of Java. The inhabitants are very industrious. Pop. 100,000.

SOEST, sohst, a town of Prussia, province of Westphalia, 33 miles S. of Munster. It is inclosed by walls, and has many fine churches, especially the Weisenkirche restored in 1850. Pop. 13,985.—This was formerly a place of very great importance and large population, and one of the Hanseatic towns, which generally adopted its municipal law.

SŒUR, HUBERT LE, sur, an eminent French sculptor, who settled in England about 1630. He modelled and cast the statue of Charles I. at Charing Cross.

Died in England, 1670.

SOFALA, so-fa'-la, a region of Eastern Africa, extending from Delagoa Bay northward to the delta of the Zambesi, and extending about 150 miles inland, but the boundaries are undefined. It is low, with large swamps, and densely wooded. The principal places are the town and fort of Sofala, on the Bay of Massangane; Tete and Senno. There are several Portuguese factories along the coast. The Portuguese claim the territory, but their authority, except in the forts and factories, is little more than nominal.

SOFIA, or TRIADITZA, so-fi'-a, a town of European Turkey, in Bulgaria, on the Isker, 170 miles N.W. of Adrianople. It has a very extensive trade, which is for the most part in the hands of Greeks and Armenians, and contains a number of handsome baths and mosques, and several Christian churches, being the see of a Greek and a Roman Catholic archbishop. There are hot springs. Pop. 20,501. This place was founded by Justinian, on the ruins of the ancient Sardica.

SOHAR, so-har', a town and port of Arabia, on the west shore of the Sea of Omar, 140 miles N.W. of Muscat, which has taken away a great part of the trade, once considerable, and the town is now in a decayed condition. Pop. 24,000.

SOHO, so-ho', a suburb of Birmingham. (See BIRMINGHAM.)

SOIGNIES, swoin'-ye, a town of Belgium, province of Hainault, 22 miles S.W. of Brussels. The church of St. Vincent Maldegaine, founded in the 10th century, is probably the oldest in Belgium. It has both breweries and distilleries, and a trade in lime, and large fairs are held. Pop. 7,000.

SOISSONS, swois'-sawng, a town of France, department Aisne, on the river Aisne, 65 miles N.E. of Paris. It has a cathedral, founded in the 12th century, and a valuable library, and the remains of the castellated abbey of St. Jean des Vignes. In the vicinity is an institution for the deaf and dumb, on the site of the famous abbey of St. Médard. Pop. 8,200.—It occupies the site of the Noviodunum, mentioned by Cæsar as the capital of the Suessones, whence the present name. Under the reign of Clovis this place was the capital of a kingdom.

SOKOTO, so'-ko-to, a kingdom of Africa, in the Soudan, to the south-west of Lake Tchad and the state of Bornu. Area, 117,180 square miles. Pop. Unascertained, but large.

SOKOTO, capital of the above kingdom, on the Zirmie, an affluent of the Sokoto, which flows into the Quowa or Niger. Manf. Leather goods, and there is a trade in raw silk, glass-wares, and perfumery. The market is well attended. Pop. 21,000.

SOLARIO, ANTONIO DE, so-la'-re-o, an eminent Italian painter, who was by birth a gipsy, whence he was termed Il Zingaro. He also excelled as an illuminator of MSS. and Bibles.

Born in the Abruzzi, about 1382; died 1455.

SOLENT, THE, so'-lent, a part of the sea between the mainland and the Isle of Wight, having a length of 18 miles and a breadth of 3.

SOLESMES, so'-laim, a town of France, department Nord, 20 miles E. of Cambrai. There are an ancient abbey and a large and handsome church, with famous groups of statues. Manf. Cotton goods, merinos, soap, and leather. Pop. 5,700.

SOLEURE, so'-lur' (Germ. SOLOTHURN, so-lo-toorn'), a canton of the north of Switzerland, bounded W. and S. by the canton of Bern, and N. and E. by Basel and Aargau. There are tracts of great fertility along the bank of the Aar, and there is good pasturage in the hilly districts. Area.

254 square miles. Pop. 80,000.—The canton entered the Swiss Confederation in 1481. The grand council consists of 116 members, chosen directly by the people.

SOLEURE, capital of the above canton, 16 miles N.E. of Bern, at the foot of Mount Jura, on the Aar, which divides it into two parts, connected by wooden bridges. The principal building is the cathedral of St. Ursinus, with a cupola and Corinthian façade. There is a large transit trade. Pop. 7,100.

SOLIKAMSK, sŏl-i-kamsk', an old town of European Russia, in the government of Perm, and 102 miles from Perm. It has salt springs and copper mines. Pop. 4,500.

SOLIMAN, EBN ABD-EL-MALEK, sol-i-man', the seventh caliph of the Ommiades race, who commenced his reign in 715. He conquered the territory upon the south coast of the Caspian, and dispatched his brother Moslemah to besiege Constantinople with a powerful fleet and army; but the fleet was destroyed by the Greek fire. He was about to proceed to reinforce Moslemah when he died.

Died 717.

SOLIMAN, EBN CUTULMISH, the founder of the first Turkish dynasty in Asia Minor. He was a Seljukian prince, and was, in 1074, provided with an army for the conquest of the West, by Malek Shah, sultan of Persia. He is supposed to have been either killed in battle, or to have perished by his own hand after a defeat.

Died 1086.

SOLIMAN I., TCHELIBI, "the noble," the son of Bajazet I., after whose defeat at Angora, by Timur, in 1402, he made his escape to Europe, and established himself at Adrianople, where he reigned during several years. In 1406 he attempted to subdue the Asiatic provinces, but was recalled to Adrianople by an insurrection excited against his rule by his brother Musa, who was defeated. The latter again marched against Soliman in 1410, and defeated and slew him, near Adrianople. Soliman was a patron of literature, and one of the bravest and most generous princes of the line of Othman.

Died 1410.

SOLIMAN "the Magnificent," succeeded his father Selim I., as Ottoman sultan in 1520. Having concluded a truce with Ismael, sophi of Persia, and quelled a rebellion in Syria, he turned his arms against Europe. In 1521 he took Belgrade, and in the following year Rhodes fell into his hands, after an obstinate defence. In 1529 he made himself master of Buda, and then laid siege to Vienna, whence he was obliged to retreat, with the loss of 120,000 men. In 1534 he marched into the East, and took Tauris from the Persians, but was soon afterwards defeated by the shah. His forces were also repulsed before Malta; but he took the isle of Chios in 1566. He was a poet, legislator, and warrior of eminent greatness for an Oriental. He encouraged arts and literature, made roads, bridges, erected noble mosques and public buildings, and superintended the compilation of an administrative code.

Born 1495; died at Szigeth, Hungary, 1566.

SOLINGEN, so'-ling-en, an old town of Prussia, province of the Rhine, 13 miles S.E. of Dusseldorf. Manf. Steel and ironware, handbells, and cutlery, for which it has a great reputation. Pop. 16,940.

SOLIS, ANTONIO DE, so'-lees, a Spanish historian and dramatic poet. He became secretary to Philip IV., and historiographer of the Indies, but afterwards entered into holy orders. He wrote many comedies and poems, but his great work is the "History of the Conquest of Mexico." It has been translated into English by Townshend.

Born at Placentia, 1610; died 1686.

SOLIS, JUAN DIAZ DE, a Spanish navigator, who, with Pinzon, discovered Yucatan, in 1507, and explored a portion of Rio Janeiro. He was killed by the Indians.

Died 1515.

SOLLER, sol'-lair, a town of Spain, in the island of Majorca, 14 miles N. of Palma. It has a harbour, defended by two forts, and exports oranges and wine. Pop. 7,000. Lat. 39° 48′ N. Lon. 2° 47′ E.

SOLOMON, sol'-o-mon, king of Israel, was the son of David and Bathsheba. He was anointed king B.C. 1015, and was the wisest and most magnificent and powerful prince of his age. During his reign the kingdom of Israel attained its greatest prosperity; but the commencement of its decline dates from his death. His history is related in the Old Testament books of Kings and Chronicles, and he was the author of the books of Proverbs, Ecclesiastes, and Song of Solomon.

Born 1033 B.C.; died 975 B.C.

SOLOMON ISLANDS, a chain of islands in the Indian Archipelago. Area, 10,000 square miles. Pop. Unascertained; in a semi-savage condition. Lat. 4° 50′—11° 50′ S.

SOLON, so'-lon, legislator of Athens, and one of the seven wise men of Greece. He was descended from the royal house of Codrus, and was the relation of Pisistratus. After studying philosophy at Athens, he travelled into various countries to increase his knowledge, and became known as a poet. On his return home, he found his countrymen divided by faction, and the state reduced to a wretched condition. Having composed a poem upon the loss of Salamis, he recited it in the Agora with so much effect that an expedition was organised for the recovery of the place. Of that undertaking, Solon was appointed the chief, and the result proving brilliantly successful, he became the most popular man in the state, and was soon afterwards unanimously elected archon and sovereign legislator. He discharged his high office with great wisdom, integrity, and humanity. After completing his legislation, he asked to be allowed to retire from Athens for ten years, which request being acceded to, he went upon a journey into Egypt and Asia Minor. Subsequently to his return, Pisistratus became tyrant of Athens, and Solon, finding that he could not prevent his retaining absolute power, encouraged him to rule the people with moderation.

Born in Salamis, about 638 B.C.; died about 559 B.C.

SOLOR ISLANDS, so'-lor, a group in the Indian Archipelago, belonging to the Dutch residency of Timor. The longest are Adanara (302 square miles), Lomblem (520 square miles), Panlar (275 square miles), and Solor (105 square miles). The islands are very beautiful and fertile. The mountains, clothed with forests, attain an elevation of nearly 3,500 feet in Panlar, and in Lomblem the volcano Lobetolbe is more than 4,900 feet high.

SOMALI LAND, so-ma'-le, a maritime district of Eastern Africa, bounded N. by the Gulf of Aden, and extending southward to the northern frontier of Zanzibar. The interior is little known. The chief trading place is Berbera, on the north coast. Area, about 330,000 square miles. Pop. Unascertained; chiefly of Arab descent.

SOMERS, JOHN, Lord, sum'-ers, an English lawyer and writer upon jurisprudence, who was educated at Trinity College, Oxford, whence he removed to the Middle Temple. He distinguished himself at the bar, and, in 1681, was concerned in writing a piece entitled, "A Just and Modest Vindication of the Proceedings of the two last Parliaments." He was one of the counsel for the seven bishops; in the Convention Parliament he represented the city of Worcester, and, after the flight of James II., was one of the managers for the House of Commons, at a conference with the Lords upon the word "abdicated." After the Prince of Orange ascended the English throne as William III., Somers was appointed solicitor-general, and, in 1692, attorney-general and lord keeper. In 1697 he was made chancellor, with the title of lord Somers; but, in 1700, the seals were taken from him, and he was impeached of high crimes and misdemeanours, but he was acquitted by the Lords. Between the years 1708-10 he was president of the council, under queen Anne; but, after the latter date, his health became too infirm to admit of his playing any important part in the politics of his time. The principal works of lord Somers were—"Brief History of the Succession of the Crown of England," and "The Security of Englishmen's Lives; or, the Trust, Power, and Duties of the Grand Juries of England." He was a great constitutional lawyer, a virtuous patriot, and a patron of learning.

Born at Worcester, about 1650; died 1716.

SOMERSET, ROBERT CARR, or KER, Earl of, sum'-er-set, previously Viscount Rochester, a favourite of James I. He was a descendant of the Kers of Fernihurst, and was at first a sewer or page to the earl of Dunbar. Sir Thomas Overbury, while on a visit to Scotland, became acquainted with him, and brought him to London, where he was introduced to the notice of king James, who made him his favourite, and he was created a knight of the bath, viscount Rochester, and, upon his marriage with the profligate countess of Essex, in 1613, earl of Somerset. During two years, the earl of Somerset and his wife rested under the suspicion of having got rid of sir Thomas Overbury by poison. (See OVERBURY, Sir Thomas.) In 1615, James having by this time taken into his favour George Villiers, another handsome youth, Somerset and his countess were brought to trial. Their guilt was clearly established; nevertheless, they escaped through, it is said, Somerset threatening to reveal some secret in which the king was interested, while their agents were executed. Somerset retired into the country, with his wife, upon a pension of £4,000 per annum.

Died 1645.

SOMERSET, DUKE OF. (See SEYMOUR.)

SOMERSET, EAST, a division of the eastern province of Cape Colony, South Africa, intersected by the Great Fish River, and there are mountain ranges connecting the Sneeuwbergen and Great Winterberg ranges. Some of the best farms in the colony are in this division. The capital is of the same name. Area, 3,300 square miles. Pop. 10,000.

SOMERSET, the name of 4 counties of the United States:—

MAINE.—Area, 3,800 square miles. Pop. 32,333. The capital is Skowhegan.

MARYLAND.—Area, 400 square miles. Pop. 21,668, about 7,500 being coloured. The capital is Princess Anne.

NEW JERSEY.—Area, 275 square miles Pop. 27,000. The capital is Somerville.

PENNSYLVANIA.—Area, 1,000 square miles. Pop. 33,000. The capital is Somerset.

SOMERSETSHIRE, sum'-er-set-sheer, a maritime county in the south-west of England, bounded N.W. by the Bristol Channel; N. by Gloucestershire; E. and S.E. by Wiltshire and Dorsetshire; and S. and W. by Devonshire. It is diversified, and possessing every gradation of surface, from the lofty mountain and barren moor, to the rich and highly cultivated vale, and thence descending to the unimproved and unimprovable marsh and fen. The Quantock Hills (1,270 feet) extend northward from Taunton, and descend into a cultivated vale of some extent. The MENDIP HILLS rise near Wells, and run to the coast. Westward, the county is entirely mountainous and hilly, and is divided into various ranges, running from east to west, and from which numerous lateral branches are detached. This district is known as Exmoor, the greatest elevation, the Dunkery Beacon, being 1,668 feet above sea level. Along the slope and skirts of the hills, the low land is dry and well cultivated; but thence towards the coast it forms a vast and wide-spreading district of water-formed lands known by the name of the Marshes; in the middle of which, and separating them into two great divisions, are the Palden Hills. This county stands high in reputation for its agricultural and rural produce. The plains are remarkable for their luxuriant herbage. Grazing and the dairy form the great objects of the husbandry of the hill district. Much cheese (especially that known as Cheddar) is made in the lower parts of the county.

Rivers.—The Avon and Parret.

Minerals.—Iron, lead, calamine, coal, and excellent building stone. There are mineral and hot springs.

Area.—164 square miles.

Pop.—469,010.

Parliamentary Representation and Chief Towns.—Six members are returned for the county, which is divided into three electoral districts; 2 for Bath, 2 for Taunton, and 1 for Frome. The chief towns are TAUNTON (the capital), BATH, BRIDGEWATER, FROME, GLASTONBURY, SHEPTON MALLET, WELLS, and WESTON-SUPER-MARE.

History.—This county was one of the strongholds of the British against the Romans and Saxons. There are many traces of British camps, and the local dialects retain Celtic peculiarities. A Christian church was founded at Wells early in the 7th century.

SOMERVILLE, MARY, MRS. sum'-er-vil, a modern scientific writer, who was instructed in the mathematical and physical sciences by her father, admiral sir William Fairfax. Her first husband was Mr. Greig, who died three years after the union. She then married her cousin, Dr. Somerville, with whom she removed to London, where she enjoyed literary and scientific society, and distinguished herself by making some experiments on the magnetic influence of the solar rays of the spectrum. Lord Brougham engaged her to supply the Society for the Diffusion of Useful Knowledge with a popular resumé of the great work of the French mathematician Laplace, entitled the "Mécanique Céleste." The popular account of this profound work was given to the public under the title of "The Mechanism of the Heavens," in 1832. She subsequently produced—"On the Connection of the Physical Sciences," "Physical Geography," and "Molecular and Microscopic Sciences." Her services to literature were acknowledged by honorary membership of the Royal Astronomical Society, and a pension of £300 per annum from the civil-list fund. In the latter part of her life she resided chiefly in Italy. Her great scientific attainments were accompanied by genial and kindly domestic manners.

Born at Jedburgh, 1780; died at Naples, 1872.

SOMERVILLE, WILLIAM, an English poet, who, after completing his education at the university of Oxford, settled upon his paternal estate, where he diverted his leisure with poetical composition. He wrote "The Chase," "Field Sports," some fables and tales.

Born at Edstone, Warwickshire, 1692; died 1742.

SOMERVILLE, a new county of Texas, United States. Area, 300 square miles. Pop. 2,649.

SOMERVILLE, a city of Massachusetts, United States, on the Mystic river, 2 miles N.W. of Boston, situated on several small elevations. Manf. Leather, iron, carriages, glass, earthenware and bricks. Pop. 25,000, SOMMARIVA, JEAN BAPTIST DE, som'-ma-re'-va, director of the Cisalpine republic. He was educated for the law, and practised as an advocate until the outburst of the French revolution, when, adopting the republican theories, which at that period were the passport of an able and ambitious man to fame and position, he became secretary-general of the directory of the Cisalpine republic, and subsequently director. After the Austrian occupation, he took up his residence at Paris. He was a man of cultivated tastes, and expended the whole of his large fortune in forming a collection of art-treasures which became famous throughout Europe.

Born at Milan, about 1760; died 1826.

SOMME, som, a river of the north of France, rising in the department Aisne, and, after a course of 120 miles, falling into the English Channel between Boulogne and Dieppe.

SOMME, a maritime department in the north of France, bounded W. by the English Channel and N. by the department Pas-de-Calais. The surface is level, and in some parts marshy. Corn, vegetables, and fruits are extensively cultivated, and large herds of cattle are reared.

Rivers.—The Somme and its affluents.
Area.—2,377 square miles.
Pop.—550,837.
Administrative Divisions and Chief Towns.—There are 5 arrondissements and 833 communes. The chief towns are AMIENS (the capital), ABBEVILLE, DOULLENS, MONTDIDIER, and PERONNE.

SOMNAUTH-PUTTEN, som-nauth'-poot-ten, a town of Gujerat, India, on the south-west coast of the peninsula of Kattywar. It is walled and strongly fortified, and is famous for the ruins of the Hindoo temple of the idol Somnauth, which was destroyed, and the splendid gates, said to have been taken away by Mahmoud of Ghezni, in 1024. Lord Ellenborough, the governor-general of India in 1842, announced their restoration in an inflated proclamation, which caused great attention, and was disapproved of by the home government. Great numbers of pilgrims visit the town. Pop. 5,000.

SOMNUS, som'-nus, in Greek mythology, son of Erebus and Nox, one of the infernal deities, who presided over sleep.

SONDERBURG, a town of Prussia, in Schleswig, on the south-western side of the island of Alsen, 27 miles N.E. of Schleswig. There are shipbuilding yards. Pop. 5,600.

SONDERHAUSEN, son-der-how'-sen, chief town of the principality of Schwarzburg-Sonderhausen, Germany, on the Wipper, 36 miles N.W. of Weimar. Pop. 5,800.

SONDRIO, son'-dre-o, a province of the north of Italy, to the south and south-east of Switzerland, surrounded by branches of the Rhætian Alps and including the district known as the Valtellina. The soil is very fertile, and the cheese made is in great reputation. The capital is Sondrio. Area, 1,260 square miles. Pop. 123,400.

SONOMA, so-no'-ma, a county of California, United States. Area, 1,400 square miles. Pop. 25,926. The capital is Santa Rosa.

SONORA, so-no'-ra, the most north-western state of the republic of Mexico, extending along the Gulf of California, to the south of the United States territory of Arizona. There are several fine bays and many lagoons near the coast. In the eastern part are branches of the Andes; the western part is level and extremely fertile, producing two crops a-year.

Rivers.—The Sonora, Rio Colorado, Mayo, and Yaqui.
Minerals.—Gold, silver, lead, and copper in great abundance.
Area.—79,021 square miles.
Pop.—143,721.

SONSONATE, son-so-na'-tai, a town of the republic of San Salvador, Central America, 40 miles S.W. of the town of San Salvador. It stands in an extremely rich district, and has some splendid churches. Pop. 10,000.

SONTAG, HENRIETTA, son-tag', a German vocalist, who appeared with brilliant success at the opera houses of Vienna, Berlin, Paris, and London. In 1829 she married count Rossi, and soon afterwards quitted the stage. He lost his property in 1848, and she re-appeared with undiminished power.

Born 1806; died in Mexico, 1854.

SOOCHOW, soo-tchow', a large city of China, province of Keang-soo, 60 miles N.W. of Shanghai. There are four large suburbs beyond the walls. The town was sacked by the Taeping rebels in 1857. Pop. Probably about 1,000,000.

SOOLOO ISLANDS, soo-loo', an archipelago in the Indian Ocean, consisting of nearly 150 islands, most of them very small, divided into three groups, named after the largest and most important islands, Basilan, Sooloo, and Tawee-Tawee. Valuable timber and tropical fruits are abundant. The whole of the islands are ruled by a native sultan. The most important place is Soung, on the north-western coast of the island of Sooloo. Pop. 75,000, of Malay origin. Lat. 4° 44′—6° 56′ N. Lon. 119° 30′—122° 30′ E.

SOPHIA, so-fi'-a, a princess and regent of Russia. She was the daughter of Alexis Michaelowitch by his first marriage, as Peter the Great was the offspring of the second. (See PETER THE GREAT.)

Died 1704.

SOPHOCLES, sof'-o-klees, a celebrated tragic poet of Athens. As a youth he composed a pæan in honour of the victory of Salamis, and himself led the chorus of youths with song and dance. His first tragedy was produced upon the stage B.C. 468, and upon that occasion he won the prize, although he contended against Æschylus, the greatest dramatist of his time. In 440 B.C. he brought out his thirty-second play; after which he distinguished himself as a statesman and a general. Sharing the command with Pericles, he bore an honourable part in several battles. Of his private life nothing is known. He is stated to have composed 130 plays, and, although he had Æschylus, Euripides, and other illustrious writers for his rivals, he gained the first prize twenty times. Only seven complete plays of his are extant—"Antigone," "Electra," "Trachiniæ," "Œdipus," "Rex," "Ajax," "Philoctetes," and "Œdipus Coloneus."

Born near Athens, 495 B.C.; died 406 B.C.

SORA, so'-ra, a city of southern Italy, province of Caserta, on the Garigliano, 60 miles from Naples. Manf. Woollen cloth and paper. Pop. 13,027.

SORBON, ROBERT DE, sor'-bun, a learned French ecclesiastic, and founder of the Sorbonne college at Paris. He was confessor and chaplain to Louis IX., who had a great esteem for him, and gave him the canonry of Cambrai.

Born at Sorbon, Ardennes, 1201; died 1274.

SOREL, or WILLIAM-HENRY, sor'-el, a town of Quebec province, dominion of Canada, at the confluence of the Richelieu, or Sorel river, with the St. Lawrence. It has a barracks, an arsenal, and a fort. Ship-building is carried on. Pop. 4,800.

SORESINA, so'-rai-se'-na, a town of northern Italy, province of Cremona, 14 miles from Cremona. There is a great trade in preserved fruits and liqueurs. Pop. 6,800.

SORIA, so'-re-a, a province of the north of Spain, bounded N. by Burgos and Lopeno, E. by Saragossa, and N. by Segovia. It is almost covered by branches of the Pyrenees, and is generally unfertile; but there are some extensive pastures and forests. Area, 4,076 square miles. Pop. 155,715.

SORIA, capital of the above province, on the right bank of the Douro, 113 miles N.E. of Madrid. There are a Gothic palace and good churches and other public buildings. The old walls are well preserved. Pop. 3,400.

SOROCABA, so-ro-ka'-ba, a town of Brazil, province of San Paulo, on a river of the same name, 50 miles W. of San Paulo. Pop. 12,000.

SORRENTO, sor-ren'-to, a maritime town of Italy, province of Napoli, on the south-east side of the Gulf of Naples, 19 miles S.W. of Naples. There is a cathedral, and the place is celebrated for the beauty of its scenery. Pop. 6,700.

SOSIGENES, so-sij'-e-nees, an astronomer of Egypt, who was invited to Rome by Julius Cæsar, for the reformation of the calendar. He fixed the year at 365 days, called the Julian year, which commenced B.C. 46.

Lived in the 1st century B.C.

SOSTRATUS, sos'-tra-tus, an architect of Cnidos, who was invited to Egypt by Ptolemy Philadelphus, at whose command he constructed the tower of Pharos, in the Bay of Alexandria, on which he placed this inscription:—"Sostratus, of Cnidos, son of Lexiphanes, to the gods who protect navigation." This structure was one of the seven wonders of the ancient world.

Lived in the 3rd century B.C.

SOTADES, sot'-a-dees, a Grecian poet, who invented a kind of irregular iambics, which were called by his name. Having written a satire against Ptolemy Philadelphus, king of Egypt, he was thrown into the sea in a chest of lead.

Lived in the 3rd century B.C.

SOTHEBY, WILLIAM, sothé-be, an English writer, who after serving as an officer in the 10th dragoons, retired to his estate near Southampton, where, as well as in London at a subsequent period, he devoted his leisure to literature. He produced some tragedies and poems, and translated Wieland's "Oberon," the "Georgics" of Virgil, and Homer's "Iliad" and "Odyssey."

Born in London, 1757; died 1833.

SOTO, HERNANDEZ DE, so'-to, a Spanish adventurer, who accompanied Pizarro to Peru. He subsequently obtained from Charles V. the required permission to conquer Florida, and was also nominated governor of Cuba. In 1528 he restored Havannah, which had been despoiled by some French pirates. In 1539 he penetrated into Florida, and made several expeditions to the neighbouring countries, in one of which he was slain.

Died 1542.

SOUBISE, BENJAMIN DE ROHAN, baron of Frontenay, soo'-beese, a celebrated French Huguenot general. He was the brother of the duke de Rohan, the chief of the Reform party, and acquired the art of war under Maurice of Nassau in Holland. Being unsuccessful in France against the army of Louis XIV., he fled to England, and served in the English fleet under the Duke of Buckingham. His latter years, during which he was constantly intriguing against the French monarchy, were passed in England.

Born 1589; died in England, 1641.

SOUDAN. (See NIGRITIA.)

SOULIÉ, MELCHIOR FREDERICK, soo'-le-a, a French novelist and dramatist, who was educated for the bar, and was admitted as an advocate; but, obtaining little practice, he turned his attention to literature, for which he had always a marked predilection. He produced several poems and dramas, commenced contributing romances to the French newspapers, and succeeded so well in this new walk, that in a short time he became the most popular romancist of the day. His best romances are—"Mémoires du Diable," "Deux Cadavres," and "L'Homme de Lettres."

Born at Foix, 1800; died at Bièvre, 1847.

SOULOUQUE, FAUSTINUS, or FAUSTINUS I., soo-look', ex-emperor of Hayti, was born a slave, but was manumitted while in his childhood. At 14 he assisted in expelling the French from Hayti. He rose through the different grades of the republican army until in 1847 he was chosen president of the republic, and in the following year massacred the mulattoes at Port-au-Prince. In 1849 he declared himself emperor. He was driven from Hayti in 1858, and, after first seeking an asylum at Jamaica, retired to the south of France.

Born 1789; died 1867.

SOULT, NICOLAS JEAN-DE-DIEU, soolt, marshal of France and duke of Dalmatia. The son of a notary, he was designed for the same profession; but while at college, he evinced so great a distaste for study, that he was permitted to follow the bent of his own inclinations, which were decidedly military; and, accordingly, he entered the army as a private soldier in 1785. Soult distinguished himself in more than twenty fights, and his rise was consequently rapid. He was a general in 1800, at which time he was appointed commander-in-chief in Piedmont. He was one of the marshals created by the emperor Napoleon on his coronation. He was next appointed to organize the great army assembled upon the heights of Boulogne, and called the Army of England. He maintained his brilliant reputation throughout the German campaign of 1806-7. In 1808 he was sent to Spain, where he encountered the superior genius of Wellington. In 1813 he was recalled from the Peninsula by the emperor; but the disaster experienced by the French at Vittoria compelled Napoleon to send him once more to Spain. He displayed consummate skill, but was overmatched by the English commander. After the abdication of Napoleon, Soult attached himself to the Bourbons, and was appointed minister of war: but when Napoleon re-appeared in Paris, he again took service under his old master. As quarter-master-general he fought at Waterloo, after which he was banished from France. He was, nevertheless, permitted to return in 1819. Charles X. created him a peer; he became minister of war under Louis Philippe, who sent him as his representative to the coronation of Queen Victoria. The same monarch also created him marshal-general of France, a dignity which had lain in abeyance since the death of Marshal Turenne. His conduct in the province of Andalusia, where he levied cruel extortions upon the population and robbed the convents and mansions of the nobles of the pictures or whatever valuables his agents could pounce upon, reflects great discredit upon his name.

Born in the department Tarn, 1769; died 1851.

SOUND, or ORESOUND, sound, the strait or narrow sea between the island of Zealand in Denmark, and the continent of Sweden, through which vessels pass from the North Sea into the Baltic. It is about 4 miles across.

SOUR, or TSOUR, soor, a seaport-town of Syria, 28 miles from Acre. It is situate on the E. part of a peninsula, which in antiquity was the site of the maritime city of Tyre.

SOURABAYA. (See SOERABAYA.)

SOUTH, ROBERT, an English divine, who was educated at Christ Church, Oxford, where, in 1660, he was chosen public orator of the university. In the following year he was appointed chaplain to Lord Clarendon. In 1676 he accompanied the English ambassador to congratulate Sobieski on his election as king of Poland, of which country he wrote an account. After his return he was presented to the rectory of Islip, in Oxfordshire. Though he concurred in the revolution of 1688, he refused a bishopric. His sermons are remarkable for their wit and eloquence.

Born at Hackney, 1633; died 1716.

SOUTH, SIR JAMES, a modern English astronomer, who was educated for the medical profession. His devotion to astronomical science led him to relinquish his first profession. For his laborious observations, relative to the double stars, he was awarded the gold medal of the Royal Society. Of the same society he was elected a fellow in 1821. About 1826 he removed to the Observatory at Campden Hill, Kensington. He was knighted at the accession of William IV., in 1830; and, upon the same occasion, received the sum of £300 per annum for the prosecution of astronomical inquiry. He was member of the Imperial Academy of Science, St. Petersburg, and of the Brussels Royal Society of Sciences.

Born 1788; died 1867.

SOUTH AMERICA. (See AMERICA, SOUTH.)

SOUTH AUSTRALIA, a colony of Australia, extending across the centre of the great island of Australia, not, as its name might imply, occupying the most southern part, as nearly the whole of Victoria lies more to the south. It is bounded on the west by Western Australia; on the east by Victoria, New South Wales, and Queensland; on the south by the South Pacific Ocean; on the north by the Gulf of Carpentaria and the Indian Ocean. The western boundary is Lon. 129° E.; the eastern is 141° E. The district known as the Northern Territory, formerly a portion of New South Wales, lies north of Lat. 26° S., and between Lon. 129° and 138° E. MELVILLE ISLAND, on the north coast, and KANGAROO ISLAND, on the south, are included in the colony. The colony contains a great variety of soils and scenery. Extensive plains, comprising many millions of acres of arable land, and chiefly free from timber, extend from Aldinga in the south to Mount Remarkable in the north. These plains are flanked on the eastern side by a mountain chain of moderate elevation, Main or Flinder's Range, running from north to south, with occasional breaks, for 300 miles, and terminating at Cape Jervis, the southernmost point of St. Vincent's Gulf. The greatest eminences are Mount Lofty (near Adelaide), 2,334 feet; Mount Bryan, 3,012 feet; the Razorback, 2,992 feet; and Black Rock Hill, 2,750 feet. Beyond this range, to the eastward and north-east, the country is broken and hilly, with a good deal of timber, and a large extent of the finest agricultural land. The Gawler Range, on Port Lincoln peninsula, is a rugged range, attaining an elevation of 2,000 feet. Stuart Range consists of hills of a moderate elevation near Lake Torrens. The valley of the Murray varies in width from half a mile to a mile, and consists of a rich alluvial deposit, covered in many places with large gum trees. Cliffs of shell limestone, from 100 to 300 feet high, and alternating from one side of the valley to the other, run through nearly its whole extent. On each side of the river, throughout a large portion of its course, the country is a vast waterless scrub, with occasional open grassy plains. Between the Murray and the eastern boundary of the colony, after the scrub is passed, is the rich agricultural and pastoral district, of Mount Gambier, with its harbours of Guichen and Macdonnell Bays. The whole of this district exhibits traces of volcanic action. Nothing can exceed the beautiful park-like scenery of some parts of the colony. For scores of miles, in various directions, valley after valley presents a picture of rural beauty and quietude seldom to be met with elsewhere. Within its limits, however, are to be found almost every description of landscape. There are in several parts of the colony long stretches of arid plains on which vegetation is stunted and cultivation difficult, if not impossible. On these plains, however, the greatest mineral wealth is to be found. The southern part of the colony is wonderfully productive. The finest wheat ever produced in the world has been grown within a few miles of Adelaide. All the fruits that flourish in England grow well. Grapes, peaches, apricots, nectarines, and figs grow in the open air with a small amount of culture. Oranges have been cultivated with great success, and the water-melon grows freely. In the northern part of the colony tropical fruits can be produced to any extent. The pine-apple and banana, amongst fruits, and the sugar-cane, the cotton plant, rice, tea, and coffee may all be produced. In the pastoral districts immense flocks of sheep are bred, and wool is the most important export. The climate is salubrious, but in the summer months, from December to March, the heat is excessive. The average rainfall is greater than in England. The Northern Territory has been only partially explored. The east boundary line of this territory cuts the coast near the mouth of the Wentworth river on the west coast of the Gulf of Carpentaria, and the west near Cape Domett on Cambridge Gulf. (See AUSTRALIA.)

Rivers and Lakes.—The Murray, navigable as far as Albury, and emptying itself into Lake Alexandrina, whence it flows into the sea by a narrow opening called the Murray Mouth; the Wakefield, flowing in a westerly direction into the Gulf of St. Vincent; the Gawler runs in a western and south-western direction into the Gulf of St. Vincent; and the Torrens, rising near Mount Pleasant, flowing in the same direction, affording water-supply to Adelaide, losing itself in large, swampy reed-beds, which drain into the sea. In the northern territory the River Roper is a fine deep river, navigable for large ships and sea-going steamers for 100 miles from its mouth on the S.W. shore of the Gulf of Carpentaria, and the Adelaide and Victoria are also large rivers. There are several large lakes in the colony. Lake Torrens is a vast inland salt lake, 90 miles north of Spencer's Gulf; Lake Eyre is also salt, and lies about 40 miles east of the Denison Range; and Lake Gairdner, which is an immense salt lake to the north of the Gawler Ranges, at an elevation of 366 feet above the ocean level. Lakes Gregory, Blanche, and Blanchewater lie to the N.E. of Lake Eyre, and are probably connected with it in wet seasons. There are also several curious volcanic lakes, notably the Blue Lake, lying in the extinct craters of Mount Gambier, in the south-eastern part of the colony. Lakes Alexandrina and Albert, through which the Murray flows, are extensive fresh water lakes.

Minerals.—There are vast deposits of copper, iron, and silver lead. Copper and copper ore valued at nearly £800,000 are annually exported. The most famous copper mines are the Burra-Burra, 90 miles N.E. of Adelaide, and the Moonta and Wallaroo mines at the head of Yorke's peninsula, and the Kapunda (the first discovered); altogether 27 mines are in operation. Gold has been found at Echunga, 23 miles from Adelaide, in the Mount Barker hills, and in some other places. The silver-lead mines are mostly in the southern part of the colony, near Cape Jervis. There are quarries of marble, bitumen, and kerosene oil has been obtained.

Area.—915,300 square miles, about 2,080 being under cultivation.

Pop.—312,780, exclusive of about 3,500 aborigines in the settled districts.

Administrative Divisions and Chief Towns.—There are 23 counties, 18 electoral districts, and 6 pastoral districts. The principal towns are ADELAIDE (the capital), GAWLER, GLENELG, KAPUNDA, KOORINGA, MOONTA, MOUNT GAMBIER, PORT ADELAIDE, and WALLAROO.

Railways and Electric Telegraphs.—More than 1,000 miles of government railways are open, and the telegraphs are very extensive, including the great overland line traversing the continent from Port Darwin, in the north, to Port Augusta, in the south. A line following the coast to West Australia is included in the system, and there is communication with the other Australian colonies.

Government.—The executive power is vested in a governor in council. The legislative power is exercised by a parliament consisting of a legislative council and a house of assembly.

Religion and Education.—Church of England, dissenting and Catholic places of worship are entirely supported voluntarily, all sects being represented. Education is entrusted to a special department. It admits Bible-reading, but is otherwise secular. Public schools are partly free and partly subject to fees.

History.—The coast was first surveyed in 1802 by Lieutenant Flinders. (See FLINDERS.) The colony was established by act of parliament in 1834, and the first settlement was made on Kangaroo Island; two years afterwards, by emigrants from Great Britain, under the auspices of the South Australian Colonization Association. The present constitution was granted in October, 1856.

SOUTH BEND, the capital of St, Joseph county, Indiana, United States, on the south bank of the St. Joseph river, 85 miles S.E. of Chicago. There is a very fine courthouse. Manf. Agricultural machinery, carriages, joinery, sewing-machines, woollens, and paper. Pop. 13,280.

SOUTH CAROLINA. (See CAROLINA, SOUTH.)

SOUTH-EAST ISLAND, an island of the Louisiade Archipelago, 41 miles long and 10 broad. Near the south coast is an isolated peak, 2,700 feet high. Little is known of the interior, as the inhabitants are savages. Lat. 11° 38′ S., Lon. 153° 45′ E.

SOUTHAMPTON, south-hamp'-ton, a seaport and parliamentary and municipal borough of Hampshire, and a county of itself, on a peninsula formed by the river Itchen, and the estuary of the Test, or Southampton Water, which is about 7 miles long and 2 wide, the entrance being sheltered by the Isle of Wight. It presents a picturesque appearance from different points of view. The principal street runs from the quay northwards, and is upwards of a mile long, and is particularly handsome and spacious. The entrance to this street from the land side is by the Bar-gate, a venerable piece of antiquity. The more modern part of the town is known as Above Bar. There are two other gates, West Gate and South Gate. There are five parish churches. St. Michael's, a spacious Norman structure, forms the eastern side of the square of the same name, and consists of a nave, chancel, and side-aisles, with a low tower rising from the centre, and terminating in a fine slender, octagonal spire, which forms a very conspicuous object. It contains a handsome monument to the Lord Chancellor Wriothesley. Holy Rood and St. Mary's are ancient, but the latter has been modernised. All Saints is a very handsome church in the Grecian style. There are besides seven district churches and several chapels for various denominations. A Memorial Hall to Dr. Isaac Watts was founded in 1875. There is a public park of 365 acres, known as Southampton Common, on which races are held. The most important public buildings are the custom-house, corn-exchange, the ordnance survey office, the Hartley institution, founded in 1862; the Yacht club-house, the Royal South Hants Infirmary, and the Royal Victoria hospital. There are extensive docks and a pier nearly one-third of a mile long. Southampton is the point of departure for the steamers of the Peninsular and Oriental Company, and for many other important lines, and there is a large coasting and continental trade. Shipbuilding is carried on, and the annual cattle-fair is very important. Pop. 60,235.—A station on the London and South-Western railway.

SOUTHAMPTON, a county of Virginia, United States. Area, 600 square miles. Pop. 18,012, about half being coloured. The capital is Jerusalem.

SOUTHAMPTON, HENRY WRIOTHESLEY, earl of, English statesman. He served under Essex at Cadiz and in Ireland, and took part with him in the insurrectionary proceedings in London, for which he was sentenced to death, but queen Elizabeth remitted the sentence. He then interested himself with sir Walter Raleigh, Calvert (afterwards lord Baltimore), and lord Arundel in colonizing America, and was chairman of the London company of Virginia. In parliament he was a firm supporter of liberty, and was, probably for that reason, committed to prison by James I. on charges which appear to have had no foundation, for he was shortly afterwards released. He afterwards went to the Netherlands, to fight for Dutch independence, but he and his son were attacked with fever, the latter dying. The earl was sufficiently recovered to attempt to bring his son's body to England, but died on the way. He was one of the early friends and patrons of Shakspeare. (See SHAKSPEARE.)

Born 1573; died at Bergen-op-Zoom, 1624.

SOUTHCOTT, JOANNA, south'-kot, an English visionary or impostor, and founder of a sect. Until her 40th year she had been employed as a domestic servant at Exeter. In 1792 she came forward in the character of a prophetess, and, for a time, drove a considerable trade as the vender of sealed packets, which were to insure everlasting bliss hereafter to the purchasers. She then repaired to London, where her "warnings," and "prophecies," and "communications," had a large sale. Her confidence increasing, she announced herself as having conceived the "Second Shiloh." A cradle was made for the forthcoming Prince of Peace, large sums were collected, and on the night when the accouchement was predicted to take place, crowds of her followers assembled before her house to hear the first tidings of the event. But the time passed away without any second Shiloh appearing. At her death, which occurred shortly afterwards, it was ascertained that she had been suffering from dropsy.

Born in Devonshire, 1750; died 1814.

SOUTHEND, a watering-place of Essex, on a declivity facing the mouth of the Thames, 40 miles E. of London. There are a very long pier, and a sea-wall and promenade for visitors more than a mile long. Pop. 8,064 resident.—A station on the London, Tilbury, and Southend railway.

SOUTHERN, THOMAS, suth'-ern, a dramatic writer, who was educated at Trinity College, Dublin, and then entered himself of the Middle Temple, but afterwards abandoned law for literature. His principal dramatic works were,—"The Persian Prince;" "Isabella, or the Fatal Marriage:" and "Oroonoko," tragedies; "The Disappointment;" "The Rambling Lady;" "The Wives' Excuse," comedies.

Born at Oxmantown, county Dublin, 1660; died at Westminster, 1746.

SOUTHEY, ROBERT, sou'-thé, an eminent English poet and general writer, who was the son of a linendraper at Bristol. He was sent to Westminster school in 1788, from which establishment he was dismissed four years afterwards, in consequence of having written a sarcastic attack upon the system of corporal punishment pursued in the school. He was, however, entered of Balliol College, Oxford, it being intended that he should take holy orders. For this pursuit he himself had little sympathy; indeed, he was quite unqualified for it, being then a sceptic both in politics and religion. While at college he wrote a dramatic poem, "Wat Tyler," which was characterised in the House of Commons as seditious; and, about the same time, in conjunction with Coleridge and others, planned the establishment of a "pantisocracy," or perfect society. After leaving Oxford, he made the acquaintance of Coleridge, and the two poets married on the same day two sisters. After producing "Joan of Arc," Southey went to Lisbon. In 1801 he obtained an appointment as private secretary to the chancellor of the Exchequer for Ireland; but in six months relinquished it, and entered upon literature as a profession. He obtained sufficient employment from the booksellers, and after making several successful appearances as an author, he, in 1804, settled at Greta Hall, near Keswick, Cumberland, where the remaining years of his life were passed. In 1807 he received a pension from the government; in 1813 he succeeded Mr. Pye as poet-laureate, and under the ministry of Sir Robert Peel, a second pension of £300 per annum was bestowed upon him. He was at the same time offered a baronetcy by Sir Robert; but this Southey declined as being too poor to support the dignity. He lost his first wife in 1837, and two years later was united to Miss Caroline Bowles, the poetess. He was the author of more than 100 volumes of poetry, history, biography, ravels, &c.; and, moreover, produced 126 papers of various lengths, upon history, biography, olitics, and general literature. His overworked brain failed in the last year of his life.

Born at Bristol, 1774; died at Keswick, 1843.

SOUTH MOLTON. (See MOLTON, SOUTH.)

SOUTHPORT, a watering-place of Lancashire, at the mouth of the Ribble, 20 miles N. of Liverpool. It is a handsome and rising place, with good houses and hotels; 6 churches, a Roman Catholic chapel, and several places of worship for Dissenters. The town-hall, erected in 1853, is a handsome building in the Grecian style, and Cambridge Hall is another fine Grecian building. The Southport Baths were opened in 1871, having cost £40,000; and the Atkinson Free Library and Art Gallery in 1878. Pop. 32,191.—A station on the Lancashire and Yorkshire railway.

SOUTHSEA. (See PORTSMOUTH.)

SOUTHWARK, south'-wark. (See LONDON.)

SOUTHWELL, south'-wel, a market-town of Nottinghamshire, on the Greet, 14 miles N.E. of Nottingham. The collegiate church, built in the 12th and 13th centuries, is celebrated for the beauty and variety of its architecture; Holy Trinity, a new and handsome church, was opened in 1846. Manf. Silks, lace, and stockings. Pop. 11,151.—A station on the Midland railway.

SOUTHWELL, ROBERT, an English Jesuit, who was descended of an ancient Norfolk family. After receiving his education upon the continent, and becoming rector of the Jesuits' English College at Rome, he came to England as a missionary. In 1592 he was apprehended on a charge of conspiring against the government of Queen Elizabeth; but, although he was put to the torture ten times, nothing could be elicited from him, further than that he had come to England for the purpose of making converts to the Roman Catholic faith. In 1595 he was tried in the court of King's Bench, found guilty, and hanged at Tyburn. He wrote a number of works, both in prose and verse, upon theological matters.

Born 1560; died 1595.

SOUVESTRE, EMILE, soo'-vestr, a modern French writer, who studied the law, and attempted to set up as an advocate at Rennes; but, not obtaining a practice, he went to Paris, and afterwards became assistant to a bookseller at Nantes. In 1830 he commenced writing for the provincial newspapers. In 1836 he produced a work upon the manners, customs, and literature of Brittany, "The Wales of France," the materials for which he had been collecting during several years. The work was eminently successful, and in 1836 Souvestre again repaired to Paris; but on this occasion under favourable auspices. During the subsequent eighteen years, he occupied a high position. All his books exhibit the workings of a pure and thoughtful mind; they are written in a charming style, and are unexceptionable in point of morality.

Born at Morlaix, 1806; died at Paris, 1854.

SOUWAROFF. (See SUWAROW.)

SOZOMENUS, HERMIUS, so-zo-mé'-nus, an ecclesiastical historian. He was a native of Palestine, whence he passed to Constantinople, where he practised as an advocate. He wrote an Ecclesiastical History from 323 to 439.

Lived in the 5th century.

SPA, or SPAA, spa, or spaw, a town of Belgium, province of Liege, 17 miles from Liege. It is famous for medicinal springs and baths. These waters were known to the Romans, and are mentioned by Pliny. They are all chalybeates, and their effect is diuretic and exhilarating. Pop. 5,000, exclusive of visitors to the baths, about 16,000 annually.

SPACCAFORNO, spak-ka-for'-no, a town of Sicily, 29 miles W. of Syracuse, on a hill near the south coast. Pop. 7,400.

SPAGNOLETTO, José, span'-yo-let'-to, a Spanish painter, a pupil of Caravaggio, whose style he copied, settled at Naples, where he was employed by the viceroy and other distinguished persons. His subjects were mostly tragical scenes, which he painted with uncommon force and expression.

Born near Valence, 1588; died at Naples, 1656.

SPAIN, spain (Sp. ESPANA, es-pan'-ya), a kingdom in the south-west of Europe, bounded by the Atlantic, the Mediterranean, Portugal, and France. It occupies the greater part of the Iberian peninsula, and is separated from France by the Pyrenees. From Cape Peñas on the north to Tarifa point on the south is about 540 miles, and from Cape Creus on the east to Cape Finisterre on the west, 630 miles. The coast line is about 1,370 miles in length, 600 miles belonging to the Bay of Biscay and the Atlantic, and 770 to the Mediterranean. The Biscayan and Atlantic coast to the Portuguese frontier is rocky, and on the south-west, between the mouths of the Guadiana and Guadalquivir, generally low, sandy, and swampy, but then rises gradually as far as the Bay of Algesiras, where the lofty rock of Gibraltar rises abruptly. The east, or Mediterranean coast, is varied, with many salt lagoons. Indentations of the coast line are not frequent; the most important are the strait and bay of Gibraltar, the bay of Cadiz, and the gulf of Almeria on the south, and the bay of Rosas and gulf of Ampolla on the east. The best harbours are those of Ferrol and Vigo on the north-west and west; Cadiz on the south-west; and Barcelona and Rosas on the north-east. The most prominent capes are Ortegal, Peñas, and Machichaco, on the north coast; Finisterre, on the west; Cape St. Vincent, Trafalgar, and Gata on the south-west and south; and Palos, St. Martin, St. Sebastian, and Creus on the east coast. No country in Europe, except Switzerland, possesses an equal extent of mountainous surface. The Pyrenees form its north-eastern barrier (see PYRENEES), and there are four other ranges or mountain belts traversing the peninsula from east to west, in the Sierra de Guadarrama (with its continuations, the Sierras de Gredos and de Gata), dividing the waters of the Douro and Tagus, rising to a height of about 8,000 feet, and broken on the east into irregular ranges, known as the Iberian mountains; the mountains of Toledo, between the Tagus and the Guadiana; the Sierra Morena ("dark coloured,") terminating on the west, in Cape St. Vincent; and the Sierra Nevada on the south, which has for its highest summit Mulhacen, which is the loftiest summit in Spain, and has an elevation of 11,660 feet above the level of the sea. The interior forms an elevated table-land, containing several towns at a height above the level of the sea not usual in the rest of Europe. This table-land may be regarded as comprising several plains, as it is intersected by the various ranges of mountains. The climate varies greatly in different parts; in the north it is temperate, with moist springs and cold winters; in the central districts, where are vast exposed plateaux and little water, the temperature is subject to extremes, the summer being burning and the winter cold; farther south the hot African winds are felt, but the plateaux are less elevated, and there are abundant streams, and although the heat is tropical in summer, the temperature is delightful in spring and autumn, and the winter is mild and wet. There are few forests. The agricultural products are wheat, maize, rice, barley, and oats. The Spanish hemp and flax are both of the best quality. In Granada, coffee, cotton, sugar, and cocoa, are raised to an extent limited only by the want of capital. Vines are cultivated in every province; in the south-west, near Xeres, are made the well-known sherry and tent wines; in the south and east, the Malaga and Alicant wines. The fruits are olives, oranges, lemons, almonds, and in the warmest provinces, the pomegranate and the palm. Mules are in general use for travelling; and the horses maintain their high reputation. The breed of sheep called Merino has the wool finer and more valuable than any other. Among the wild animals are the bull, wolf, bear, lynx, boar, and Barbary ape.

Rivers.—In each of the valleys formed by these mountains, flows one of the great rivers of Spain, to which the smaller streams are tributary. The DOURO, the TAGUS, the GUADIANA, the GUADALQUIVIR, and the Minho, flow into the Atlantic; the EBRO, Juca, and Segura into the Mediterranean. Altogether there are 230 rivers, but by far the greater number are unnavigable.

Islands.—The most important islands belonging to Spain, in Europe, are the BALEARIC group (MAJORCA, MINORCA, and smaller islands), and Iviza and Formentera, in the Mediterranean.

Minerals.—Iron, copper, lead, silver, mercury, salt, and coal. In the north-east are famous mines of rock-salt, and there are important beds of coal in the north. Silver is now only obtained in the province of Seville.

Area.—182,758 square miles.

Pop.—16,958,178; including colonies, 24,456,468.

Divisions.—There are, exclusive of the islands, 48 modern provinces, formed out of the 12 old divisions. As the names of the old divisions are still preserved in popular histories and many maps, we give them, with the modern provinces into which they are now divided:—

NEW CASTILE—Madrid, Guadalaxara, Toledo, Cuenca, Ciudad Real.
OLD CASTILE—Burgos, Logrono, Santander, Oviedo, Soria, Segovia, Avila, Leon, Palencia, Valladolid, Salamanca, Zamora.
GALICIA—Coruuna, Lugo, Orense, Pontevedra.
ESTREMADURA—Badajos, Caceres.
ANDALUSIA—Seville, Huelva, Cadiz, Jaen, Cordova.
GRENADA—Grenada, Almeria, Malaga.
VALENCIA—Valencia, Alicant, Castellon-de-la-Plana, Murcia, Albacete.
CATALONIA—Barcelona, Tarragona, Lerida, Gerona.
ARAGON—Zaragoza, Huesca, Teruel.
NAVARRE—Navarre.
GUIPUSCOA—Alva, Biscay, Guipuscoa.

Chief Towns.—MADRID, the capital; BARCELONA, CADIZ, GRANADA, MALAGA, MURCIA, SEVILLE, VALENCIA, VALLADOLID, ZARAGOZA.

Colonies.—The colonial possessions of Spain are reduced at present to CUBA, PORTO RICO, and PHILIPPINE Islands, with scattered settlements in the Atlantic and Indian Archipelago, and a small strip of territory in Northern Africa. The total area of these possessions is 115,773 square miles, and the population 6,420,000.—Spain is the only European state which still permits the existence of slavery in its colonies. In the Asiatic possessions the slaves form, as in Cuba, about one-fourth of the population.

Constitution and Government.—The present constitution was proclaimed in June 1876. The government is a constitutional monarchy, the legislative powers resting in the Cortes, composed of a Senate and Congress. There are three classes of senators, those in their own right, including members of the royal family, grandees, and certain high officials; 100 life senators nominated by the crown; and 230 elected members. The Congress is composed of deputies, in proportion of one to every 50,000 of the population.

Religion and Education.—The national church is the Roman Catholic, and the whole population of the kingdom, with the exception of about 60,000 persons, adhere to the same faith. The upper hierarchy comprises 43 bishops, and 9 archbishops, the latter of Toledo, Burgos, Granada, Santiago di Compostella, Zaragoza, Seville, Tarragona, Valencia, and Valladolid. At the head of the Church stands the archbishop of Toledo, primate of Spain. Middle-class education is afforded by 58 public colleges. About 1,260,000 pupils attend private and public schools. Nearly 5,000,000 men and 7,000,000 women can neither read nor write, altogether nearly three-fourths of the entire population. There are 10 universities—Madrid, Barcelona, Granada, Oviedo, Salamanca, Seville, Santiago, Valencia, Valladolid, and Zaragoza.

History.—Spain was first known to the Phœnicians, subsequently to the Carthaginians, and, in the 3rd century before the birth of Christ, to the Romans. It was completely subdued under Augustus, after which it enjoyed tranquillity for nearly 400 years. This state of peace was disturbed by the eruption of the northern barbarians,—the Suevi, the Vandals, and the Alani. Christianity was introduced about the end of the 6th century; the invasion of the Moors took place in the beginning of the 8th, and they overran the whole country except the Asturias. They were finally expelled in the year 1492. Under Charles V., Spain made a great figure in the general affairs of Europe. Charles II., the last prince of the Austrian branch, reigned from 1668 to 1700; after which began the well-known war for the succession to the Spanish dominions, in which the claim of Austria was supported by the grand alliance against Louis XIV. Philip V., the first king of the French line, had a long and turbulent reign. Charles IV. succeeded to the crown in 1788, became soon after a party to the coalition against republican France; but was, after Prussia, the first of the great powers to conclude a treaty of peace, in 1795. The abdication of the royal family of Spain took place at Bayonne, in May, 1808. It was followed by the general resistance of the inhabitants, by the invasion of their country by Napoleon I., and by the subsequent expulsion of the French by the troops of Great Britain, combined with those of Portugal and Spain. The dissatisfaction and indignation excited by the tyrannical proceedings of Ferdinand, led, in the beginning of 1820, to a revolution of great importance, by which the constitution of the Cortes, as established in 1812, was restored, and such salutary restraints established on the power of the crown, as seemed best calculated for securing the rights of the people. In 1823 Spain was again invaded by French troops, under the Duke d'Angoulême, whose object was to put down the new government, and to restore Ferdinand to absolute power. They penetrated the country without resistance: and having laid siege to Cadiz, the king was given up to them, and afterwards the town. Since that period, there have been repeated insurrections and civil wars. In 1833, on the death of Ferdinand VII., the queen-mother, Christina, was appointed queen-regent during the minority of his daughter Isabella, to whom, by his will, he bequeathed his throne. On this, Don Carlos, the late king's brother, laid claim to the crown, when a civil war, which lasted till 1840, ensued. In that year the partisans of Don Carlos were finally defeated. In 1854 various insurrectionary movements took place, on account of the arbitrary measures of the Spanish government; but, in the same year, the constitutional government was re-established, and the queen-mother banished from the kingdom. There was a Carlist insurrection, soon suppressed, in 1860; in 1868, Queen Isabella fled to France; a provisional government was formed, and at the end of 1870, the crown was conferred on Prince Amadeus of Italy, but he abdicated early in 1873. Another Carlist war broke out, and in June, 1873, a republic was proclaimed; but in 1875, Alfonso, son of Queen Isabella, was chosen king, and soon afterwards the Carlist insurrection was suppressed. (See ALFONSO.)

SPALATRO, spa-la'-tro, a seaport of the Austrian empire, in Dalmatia, on a bay of the Adriatic, 110 miles from Ragusa. It stands on a peninsula in the form of a semicircle, connected with the mainland by a narrow isthmus, and has a spacious and deep harbour with piers and quays. The cathedral was anciently a temple of Jupiter. Manf. Woollens, silk, and leather. The fishery on the Adriatic is considerable, as well as the shipping business, and the town contains several splendid Roman edifices. Pop. 16,000. Lat. 43° 30′ N. Lon. 16° 26′ E.

SPALDING, spawl'-ding, a market-town of Lincolnshire, on the left bank of the Welland, 34 miles S.E. of Lincoln. It has an old church with a handsome spire, several chapels, a theatre, a free grammar-school, and a town-hall or court-house. A considerable traffic in coal, corn, timber, and wool is carried on. Pop. 9,200.

SPALDING, a county of Georgia, United States. Area, 190 square miles. Pop. 12,585, nearly half being coloured. The capital is Griffin.

SPALLANZI, LAZARUS, spal-lan-dza'-ne, an Italian naturalist, who became successively professor at Reggio, Modena and at Pavia, where he was distinguished by his experiments in physiology. In 1785 he went to Turkey, and made many observations on geology and extinct volcanoes. He also visited Germany, and received particular marks of attention from the emperor Joseph II.

Born near Reggio, 1729; died at Pavia, 1790.

SPANDAU, span'-dou, a fortified town of Prussia, province of Brandenburg, at the confluence of the Havel and the Spree, 7 miles W. of Berlin. The citadel stands outside the town, on an island in the Havel. In it Baron Trenck was confined, and it is the deposit of the treasury of the German empire. Pop. 29,311.—This place was taken by the Swedes in 1631, and by the French in 1806.

SPARKS, JARED, sparks, American historian and biographical writer, who was educated for the service of the Unitarian ministry: upon the occasion of whose ordination, in 1819, Dr. Channing preached his famous sermon on "Unitarian Christianity." His earliest publications were chiefly upon theological and controversial subjects; but since then he has written extensively on the history of the American revolution, and the biographies of Franklin and other eminent Americans. In 1839 he was appointed professor of ancient and modern history in Harvard University, of which he was afterwards president.

Born at Wellington, Connecticut, 1789; died at Cambridge, Massachusetts, 1866.

SPARTACUS, spar'-ta-kus, a Thracian shepherd, famous for his victories over the Romans. He was one of the gladiators of Lentulus; but, escaping with a number of others, he placed himself at the head of an army of nearly 70,000, with which he defeated the Romans in several battles. At length Crassus was sent against him, and after a bloody contest Spartacus was slain, and 6,000 of his followers were crucified in the Appian Way, near Rome, B.C. 71.

SPARTANBURG, spar'-tan-berg, a county of South Carolina, United States. Area, 9,000 square miles. Pop. 40,409, nearly one-third being coloured. The capital is Spartanburg Court House.

SPEED, JOHN, spede, an English historian and antiquary. He was brought up to the trade of a tailor, which occupation he is supposed to have followed till late in life. Through the liberality of Sir Fulke Greville, he was enabled to publish his large works, the materials for which he had amassed through a long series of years. He was author of the "Theatre of Great Britain," the "History of Great Britain," and "Tables of Scripture Genealogies," formerly bound up with the Bible.

Born at Farrington, Cheshire, 1542; died in London, 1629.

SPEKE, JOHN HANNING, speke, African explorer. He served as a captain in the army in India under lord Gough, and afterwards made scientific explorations in the Himalayas. In 1854 he made explorations in the Somali country, eastern Africa, where he was wounded by the natives. In the Crimean war he served for a short time in the Turkish army. In 1856, in conjunction with captain Beulen, he discovered Lake Tanganyika, in Africa; in 1858, discovered Lake Victoria Nyanza, and, in 1862, with captain Grant, explored the northern and western coasts, establishing the fact that the Nile issued from that lake. After his return to England, he was accidentally killed by the discharge of his gun. He wrote a "Journal of the Discovery of the Source of the Nile."

Born 1827; died near Bath, 1864.

SPELMAN, SIR HENRY, spel'-man, English antiquary, who was educated at Cambridge, and knighted by James I. His principal works were, a book against sacrilege, or the alienating the church lands, under the title of "De non Temerandis Ecclesiis;" "Glossarium Archæologicum;" and an edition of the English Councils.

Born near Lynn, Norfolk, 1562; died in London, 1641.

SPENCE, JOSEPH, spence, an English divine and writer, who was, in 1742, appointed professor of modern history in the university of Oxford, and in 1754 prebendary of Durham. He wrote an "Essay on Pope's Odyssey," a work entitled "Polymetis," and a compilation entitled "Anecdotes of Men and Books." He was accidentally drowned at Byfleet, Surrey.

Born at Kingselere, Hampshire, 1699; died 1768.

SPENCE, WILLIAM, an English entomologist, who assisted Kirby in producing the celebrated "Introduction to Entomology." He also produced, amongst other smaller treatises, one entitled "Observations relative to the Circulation of Blood in Insects." He was a member of the Royal and Entomological societies, and for some time a member of parliament.

Born 1783; died 1860.

SPENCER, HERBERT, spen'-ser, modern philosophical writer, son of a teacher at Derby. In early youth he exhibited a great taste for natural history and mathematics, and at the age of 16 contributed a paper on geometry to the "Civil Engineers' and Architects' Journal." For four years he studied civil engineering; but relinquished that pursuit for literature, and has since attained a great reputation both in England and America as a philosophical thinker of the highest class, especially in the department of "sociology," or the science of human society from the point of view of evolution; and biology. Scarcely any modern writer has exercised a greater influence on the philosophical literature of the present age. He has been a copious contributor to the newspaper press and to the quarterly Reviews.

Born at Derby, 1820.

SPENCER, a county of Indiana, United States. Area, 390 square miles. Pop. 22,122. The capital is Rockfort.

SPENCER, a county of Kentucky, United States. Area, 280 square miles. Pop. 6,000, about 1,500 being coloured. The capital is Taylorsville.

SPENER, PHILIPP JAKOB, spai'-ner, a Lutheran divine, who studied at Strasburg, and, in 1666, became chief of the clergy at Frankfort, and afterwards counsellor in ecclesiastical affairs to the elector of Brandenburg, but who is rendered remarkable as being the founder of the Pietists, which sect held that the word of God cannot be understood without the illumination of the Holy Ghost.

Born in Alsace, 1635; died at Berlin, 1705.

SPENSER, EDMUND, an English poet, who was educated at Pembroke Hall, Cambridge, where he took his degrees in arts; but, not obtaining a fellowship, he quitted the university. His earliest poem was the "Shepherd's Calendar," first published in 1579, which he dedicated to Sir Philip Sydney, who became his patron, and introduced him at court. In 1580 he was appointed by the Earl of Leicester secretary to Lord Grey, viceroy of Ireland, and obtained a grant of lands at Kilcolman, in the county Cork, where he built a house, and finished his celebrated poem entitled the "Faerie Queen." In the rebellion begun by the Earl of Tyrone, he lost his estate and was plundered; upon which he retired to London. He was buried near Chaucer, in Westminster Abbey.

Born in London, 1553; died in London, 1598.

SPERANSKI, MIKHAIL, spe-ran'-ske, a Russian statesman, who was professor of mathematics at St. Petersburg, and became secretary of the imperial council under Alexander, in which capacity he remodelled the system of taxation, introduced an improved penal code, a new system of finance, and an enlarged plan of national education. In 1812 he lost favour and was banished, but was recalled in 1816, and appointed governor of Penza, and in 1819, of Siberia. On the accession of the emperor Nicholas, in 1825, he was appointed president of the chancery.

Born 1772; died at St. Petersburg, 1839.

SPEUSIPPUS, spu-sip'-pus, the nephew, disciple, and successor of Plato. He is considered as the founder of the Academic school of philosophy, and among his disciples were a number of females. He wrote upon plants, and natural objects; but of his works only a few fragments remain.

Born at Athens, 380 B.C.; died there, 339 B.C.

SPEY, spai, a large and rapid river of Scotland, in Inverness-shire, rising from Loch Spey, and, after a course of upwards of 100 miles, falling into the sea, about 8 miles E. of Elgin.

SPEZZIA, LA, or SPECCIA, spet'-ze-a, a town of northern Italy, at the north-western extremity of the gulf of Spezia, 50 miles S.E. of Genoa. It is the principal naval arsenal of Italy, has a very fine harbour, and is an important station for foreign steamers. Pop. 30,379.

SPEZIA, spet'-ze-a, a small island of Greece, at the eastern entrance of the Gulf of Nauplia. It is about 5 miles long and 3 broad. The chief town, of the same name, on the eastern shore, has a good harbour. Pop. 8,500.

SPHINX, sfinks, in Greek mythology, a monster which had the head and breasts of a woman, the body of a dog, the tail of a serpent, the wings of a bird, the paws of a lion, and a human voice. The Egyptian sphinx (of which there is an enormous statue near the great pyramids), had the head of a man.

SPINAZZOLO, spe-natz-zo'-lo, a town of Italy, province of Bari, 43 miles S.W. of Bari. Pop. 10,000.

SPINDLER, KARL, spin'-dler, a modern German novelist, who made his first appearance as an author in 1824. His collected works comprise 100 volumes. Many of his best novels have been translated into English; such as "The Natural Son;" "The Jew;" "The Jesuit, a picture of Manners and Character;" and "The Enthusiast."

Born at Breslau, 1796; died at Freiersbach, 1855.

SPINK, a new county of Dakota territory, United States. Area, 800 square miles. Pop. 477.

SPINOLA, AMBROSIO, Marquis, spe-no'-la, an Italian general, son of a wealthy Genoese merchant and a prince of Salerno. He entered the service of Philip III. of Spain early in life, and, after distinguishing himself against the Dutch, was appointed general-in-chief in the Netherlands. In 1604, he took Ostend, after a desperate defence of three years. This feat greatly enhanced his reputation, which he continued to maintain, although opposed to the brave and skilful Maurice, prince of Nassau. In 1625 he captured Breda, after a siege of ten months. He afterwards signalised himself in Italy.

Born at Genoa, 1569; died 1630.

SPINOZA, BARUCH, or BENEDICT, spe-no'-za, was the son of a Portuguese Jew, resident at Amsterdam. He studied under the chief rabbin, and afterwards applied himself to theology, and became familiar with the Latin, German, Flemish, Italian, Spanish, and Portuguese languages: but, having avowed some sceptical opinions respecting the Mosaic law, he was excommunicated; on which he was baptized and professed the Christian religion. An attempt being made to assassinate him, he deemed it prudent to retire from Amsterdam, and afterwards to the neighbourhood of Leyden, where he employed himself in making microscopes and telescopes. About 1664 he took up his residence at the Hague, where he spent the remainder of his life. Spinoza invented a species of metaphysics called by his name, the basis of which is, that matter is eternal, and that the universe is God. This he published in a work entitled "Tractatus Theologico-Politicus;" and the same is refined upon in a mathematical form in his posthumous works. In 1673 he was offered the professorship of philosophy at Heidelberg, but the condition being made that he should teach nothing opposed to the established religion, he declined it. A memorial statue was inaugurated at the Hague, in 1880.

Born at Amsterdam, 1632; died at the Hague, 1677.

SPIRES, speer, an ancient town of Bavaria, at the confluence of the Speyerbach and the Rhine, 16 miles N.E. of Landau. The cathedral is a vast building in the Romanesque style, and contains the tombs of eight emperors and many fine monuments. Manf. Tobacco, vinegar; and there are sugar-refineries. Pop. 13,500.—In this city forty-nine diets were held; and at one, in 1529, the protest to the emperor was made, which gave rise to the religious designation of Protestants. On one occasion it was the winter quarters of Julius Cæsar, and in the Middle Ages the residence of several German emperors.

SPITALFIELDS, spit'-al-feelds. (See LONDON.)

SPITHEAD, spit-hed'. (See PORTSMOUTH.)

SPITZBERGEN, spitz-ber'-gen, a group of islands in the Arctic Ocean, nearly midway between Greenland on the west and Nova Zembla on the east. The principal islands are Spitzbergen (the largest), North-east land, Prince Charles, Edge, and Barentz. The coasts are rugged and indented, and mountains rise to an elevation of more than 2,000 feet, but scarcely anything is known of the interior. Area, 30,000 square miles. This country has been long the common resort of the whale-fishing ships of different nations. Lat. 76° 30′—80° 30′ N. Lon. 10° 28′ E.

SPLUGEN PASS, sploo'-gen. (See ALPS.)

SPOHR, LUDWIG, spor, a German musician, who was at first a violin player in the private band of the Duke of Brunswick. His reputation commenced with the year 1804, upon the occasion of his travelling over Germany and giving concerts. In 1805 he was appointed chapel master at Gotha. After a course of travel in Italy, he was, in 1817, appointed director of the music at the theatre at Frankfort-on-the-Maine. About this time he commenced writing those operas which made his name famous throughout Europe. The most popular of these works are, "Azor," "Faust," "Zemira," and "Jessonda." On leaving Frankfort he was appointed chapel-master to the Duke of Hesse-Cassel. His oratorios and orchestral pieces are frequently performed in England. For the Norwich musical festival he expressly composed his oratorio, "The Fall of Babylon," which, together with "The Last Judgment" and "The Crucifixion," are classed among the finest works of their order. He also produced songs, ballads, cantatas, and orchestral pieces, which are highly esteemed in Germany.

Born at Seesen, Brunswick, 1783; died at Cassel, 1859.

SPOLETO, spo-lai'-to, a city of central Italy, near the small river Maroggia, 24 miles from Rieti. The chief buildings are the cathedral, the castle, the former presenting a front of five Gothic arches supported by Grecian pillars, and an arch known as the gate of Hannibal, who was repulsed here 217 B.C. Pop. 21,000.

SPONTINI, GASPARO LUIGI PACIFICO, Italian musical composer, for some time a teacher at the Conservatory of La Pieta, at Naples. He produced many operas, which were so successful that in 1810 he was appointed director of the Italian Opera at Paris. In 1820 he accepted the post of director-general of music at the Court of Prussia; but retired to Paris in 1842. The Pope gave him the title of Count of Sant' Andrew; he was created doctor of philosophy and arts by the university of Halbe, and was a member of the French Institute.

Born near Ancona, 1774; died 1851.

SPOTLAND, spot'-land, a township of Lancashire, in the parish of Rochdale, of which town it forms a suburb. Pop. 19,296.

SPOTSWOOD, JOHN, spots'-wood, a Scotch prelate, who graduated at Glasgow, and succeeded his father as minister of Calderkirk. In 1603, upon the accession of James to the throne of England, he was one of the Scotch clergy appointed to attend the king, and in the same year was advanced to the archbishopric of Glasgow, and made one of the privy council in Scotland. In 1615 he was translated to the see of St. Andrews. He was afterwards the favourite of Charles I., who, in 1635, made him lord high chancellor of Scotland; but the general dissatisfaction caused by his introduction of a new liturgy and book of canons obliged him to leave that country; he retired to London. At the request of James I. he wrote his "History of the Church of Scotland, from the year 203 to the end of the reign of James VI."

Born in the county of Edinburgh, 1565; died in London, 1639.

SPOTTSYLVANIA, spot-sil-va'-ne-a, a county of Virginia, United States. Area, 450 square miles. Pop. 14,828, about 5,000 being coloured. The capital is Spottsylvania Court House.

SPRAGGE, Sir Edward, sprag, a distinguished English admiral, was a captain in the first engagement with the Dutch, in 1665, when, for his gallant conduct, he was knighted by the king on board the Royal Charles. In 1667 he burnt a number of Dutch fire-ships when they came up the Thames, which threw their whole fleet into confusion, and caused them to retreat. In 1671 he destroyed, in the Mediterranean, seven Algerine men-of-war. He was sunk in his boat in an engagement with Van Tromp in 1673, as he was going from his disabled ship to another. His remains were recovered and interred in Westminster Abbey.

Died 1673.

SPRANGER, Bartholomew, sprań'-ger, an eminent Dutch painter, who, after studying under various masters, went to Italy, where he was patronized by Cardinal Farnese and Pope Pius V. On his return to Germany he became chief painter to the emperor Maximilian II., whose successor, Rudolph, gave him a patent of nobility and a pension.

Born at Antwerp, 1546; died at Prague, about 1625.

SPRAT, Thomas, sprat, an English bishop. He was educated at Oxford, and after the restoration entered upon holy orders, and was one of the first members of the Royal Society, of which he wrote the history. He became chaplain to the king, dean of Westminster, and bishop of Rochester. He was also dean of the chapel royal, and was one of the commissioners for ecclesiastical affairs in the reign of James II. He, however, complied with the accession of William III. He wrote, "The Plague of Athens," a poem; a poem on the death of Cromwell; "The Life of Cowley;" "History of the Rye-House Plot;" "Relation of the wicked Conspiracy of Stephen Blackhead and Robert Young;" and Sermons.

Born at Tallaton, Devonshire, 1636; died at Bromley, Kent, 1713.

SPREE, spre, a river of Germany, rising in the kingdom of Saxony, passing into Prussia, and, after a course of 200 miles, joining the Havel at Spandau. It is connected with the Oder by Frederick-William's Canal.

SPREMBERG, sprem'-bairg, a town of Prussia, province of Brandenburg island in the Spree, 55 miles S. of Frankfort. Tobacco is largely grown in the vicinity. Pop. 11,338.

SPRENGEL, Kurt, a German botanist, physician, and writer upon botany, medicine, and medical history. At the age of 14 he produced a work on botany, in a series of letters entitled "Botany for Ladies." He proceeded to the university of Halle in 1784, and, three years afterwards, took his degree in medicine. In 1789 he was appointed professor extraordinary of medicine at Halle. In 1797 he published at Halle his "Manual of Pathology," and soon afterwards succeeded to the chair of botany. He was an honorary member of more than seventy learned societies.

Born at Boldekow, Pomerania, 1766; died at Halle, 1833.

SPRENGEL, Matthew Christian, sprenǵ'-el, a German historian, who became professor of philosophy at Gottingen, and, at a subsequent date, of his history of Halle. He produced, among other important works, "History of the Principal Discoveries in Geography from the earliest times to that of Japan, in 1542;" "History of the Revolution in India, from 1756 till 1783;" "History of the Mahrattas;" "Manual of the Statistics of the Chief States of Europe."

Born at Rostock, 1746; died 1803.

SPRINGFIELD, spring'-feeld, capital of Hampden, county of Massachusetts, United States, on the east bank of the Connecticut, 80 miles S.W. of Boston. There are several very handsome churches; a fine city hall, in the Romanesque style; a court-house, city library, and a large music hall. Hampton Park, on the bank of the river, contains about 60 acres, and there is a beautifully laid-out cemetery of 50 acres. The United States arsenal is on a commanding situation, and surrounded by a park of 72 acres. The city is an important railroad centre. Manf. Steam-engines and boilers, railway stock and paper. Pop. 33,350.

SPRINGFIELD, capital of Clark county, Ohio, United States, on the Mad river, 70 miles N.E. of Cincinnati. It is the heart of a rich agricultural district, and six lines of railway intersect here. There are Wittenberg college, a high school, and other educational institutions. Manf. Agricultural implements, machinery, linseed oil, and paper. Pop. 20,730.

SPRINGFIELD, capital of the State of Illinois, and of Sangamon county, United States, near the Sangamon river, 171 miles S.W. of Chicago. It is handsomely laid out, and the beauty of its surroundings is known as the "flower city." The new State capitol, near the centre of the city, is a noble building, with a fine portico and lofty dome. Other fine buildings are the court house, post office, and State arsenal, and there are several handsome churches. About two miles to the north is Oak Ridge Cemetery, a picturesquely laid out ground of 72 acres, containing a monument to President Lincoln, who is buried there. Several lines of railway meet here, and there are coal mines in the vicinity. Manf. Machinery, joinery, woollens, and watches. Pop. 19,743, of whom about 5,000 are foreigners.

SPURGEON, Charles Haddon, spur'-jon a popular Baptist preacher, son of an Independent minister of Kelvedon, Essex. At the age of 18 he became pastor of a small congregation at Waterbeach, Cambridgeshire, and in the following year of Park Street Chapel, Southwark. Here his preaching excited so much attention, and his congregation became so large, that it was compelled to remove to Exeter Hall, and afterwards to the large music hall in the Surrey Gardens. In 1861 the Metropolitan Tabernacle, which will hold about 6,000 persons, was built for him. He is possessed of great energy, having established nearly forty chapels in London, supplied by ministers trained in a college founded by himself; and is gifted with a vigorous and very effective eloquence.

Born at Kelvedon, 1834.

SPURZHEIM, Johann Gaspar, spurts'-hime, who studied at Treves and Vienna, where he attended the lectures of Gall, whose chief follower he became. (See Gall.) With Gall he travelled through Germany, France, and Denmark, lecturing in the principal towns on their system. In 1813 he withdrew from his chief, and repaired to England, where, during three years, he lectured and wrote upon the system. In the interval, 1817-25, he resided at Paris; but, in the latter year, he returned to England, where he found his theories had become popular. With a view of disseminating his doctrines, he sailed for the United States in 1838, but died soon after his arrival there. He wrote extensively upon phrenology, and made some important discoveries relative to the anatomy of the brain.

Born at Longwich, near Treves, 1776; died at Boston, 1832.

SQUARCIONE, Francisco, squar'-che-o'-nai, an eminent Italian painter, who travelled in Greece to make designs after the remains of antiquity, and on his return to Italy gained so great a reputation, and founded so large a school (he had 137 pupils), as to be called the father of painters.

Born at Padua, 1394; died there, 1444.

STAAL, Marguerite Jeanne Cordier de Launay, Baroness de, stal, a French authoress, who became servant to the duchess of Maine; and, being noticed by Fontenelle for her accomplishments, she acquired the friendship of many persons of distinction; but becoming implicated with the duchess du Maine (whose attendant she was) in a conspiracy against the duke of Orleans, she was imprisoned in the Bastille for two years. She married the Baron de Staal, captain in the Swiss Guards. Her memoirs and letters, which are very curious, were published after her death.

Born near Paris, about 1690; died 1750.

STADE, stad'-ai, a town of Prussia, province of Hanover, on the Schwinge, near its confluence with the Elbe. It is surrounded by a wall. Pop. of district, 322,249; of town, 9,700.

STAËL, Anne Louise Germaine de, sta'-el, a French authoress, daughter of Necker, minister of finance under Louis XVI. After receiving a most careful education, she applied herself to literary composition, and produced several plays and tales; but the first of her works which attracted notice was her "Letters upon the Writings and Character of Rousseau." This appeared in 1788, previously to which she had become the wife of the Baron de Staël-Holstein, the Swedish ambassador, a nobleman very much older than herself. Her sympathies were at the outset entirely with the revolution. The sufferings of the royal family, however, awoke in her breast a horror of the abuses which were being perpetrated under the name of liberty. She went to London, where she published a defence of Marie Antoinette, under the title of "Reflections upon the Trial of the Queen." Upon the establishment of the Directory, she returned to Paris. Enjoying a large share of influence in political circles, she, from the first, divined and denounced the ambitious projects of Bonaparte. Accordingly, when the successful general became first consul, one of his first edicts was the banishment of Madame de Staël from Paris, declaring that he left the whole world open to the eloquent and ambitious lady, but reserved the French capital for himself. She went to Germany, and at Weimar became acquainted with Goethe, Schiller, and other famous writers, and set out upon a course of travel in Switzerland and Italy, the results of which were expressed in her novels of "Delphine" and "Corinne." In 1810 appeared at Paris, although she herself was debarred therefrom, her celebrated work entitled "De l'Allemagne." In this production, she portrayed the habits, literature, and political tendencies of the German people. Immediately after publication, 10,000 copies of the book were seized by Napoleon's minister of police. Madame de Staël, from her retreat at Coppet, on the banks of the Lake of Geneva, protested against this act. Resolved to escape the galling system of espionage to which she was now subjected by the French police, she set out for Russia, afterwards repairing to England. Her next work, an impassioned denunciation of Napoleon and his arbitrary rule, was named "Ten Years of Exile." She returned to Paris upon the abdication of Napoleon, in 1814, and was allowed to remain, even after the emperor's return from Elba. At the restoration of the Bourbons, she retired to Switzerland, and never again interfered with politics. Subsequently to the death of the Baron de Staël, she privately married M. Rocca. In her retirement she occupied herself with the composition of her famous work, entitled "Considérations sur la Révolution Française." She also produced essays on the Influence of the Passions, on Suicide, and on Fiction. Altogether, she was one of the most remarkable personages of a remarkable age.

Born at Paris, 1768; died in Switzerland, 1817.

STAFFA, staf'-fa, a small uninhabited island of the Hebrides, celebrated for its basaltic pillars, and for its remarkable natural caverns, about eight miles W. of the island of Mull, and nine from Icolmkill. The island is oval in shape, and about 1½ mile in circumference.

STAFFORD, staf'-ford, a borough, capital of Staffordshire, on the left bank of the Sow, about three miles from its junction with the Trent. St. Mary's is a handsome and spacious church. There are four other churches, a Roman Catholic and other chapels, and a modern castellated building on the site of the old Norman castle. Manf. Boots and shoes, leather and cutlery. Pop. 19,900.—A station on the London and North-Western, and North Staffordshire railways.

STAFFORD, a county of Virginia, United States. Area, 335 square miles. Pop. 6,500, about 1,500 being coloured. The capital is Stafford Court House.

STAFFORD, William Howard, Viscount, an English nobleman, the last victim to the Titus Oates plot. Oates denounced him in 1678 to the House of Commons, as one who had been nominated by the general of the order of Jesuits to the office of paymaster of the forces. Two days afterwards Stafford surrendered himself, and several months later he was tried, and found guilty, by a majority of the House of Lords, of having, among other crimes, offered rewards to several persons to kill the king. He protested his innocence both at his trial and on the scaffold, the spectators crying out "We believe you, my lord."

Born 1612; died 1680.

STAFFORDSHIRE, an inland county of England, bounded N. by Cheshire and part of Derbyshire, E. by Derbyshire and Warwickshire, and between these, for a short way, by Leicestershire, S. by Worcestershire, and W. by Shropshire and Cheshire. The surface is diversified; a range of hills runs along the north-western border, spreading out towards the north, over the whole breadth of the county. The other parts of the county are generally level, or only interspersed with gentle eminences.

Rivers.—The Trent, with its tributaries, the Dove, the Manifold, and the Hamps or Hanse, the Churnet, the Blythe, the Teyn, the Sow, the Penk, and the Tame. The Stour and Smestal run southwards into the Severn.

Minerals.—Abundant; comprising coal, iron, limestone, copper, and lead. In some places the limestone approaches to, and passes into, marble. Alabaster occurs in great abundance. Freestone of very good quality is found in this county, and there are extensive quarries of it in different places. Clays of every description are abundant, and form the principal material of its potteries.

Manf.—Various and extensive, especially earthenware, of which the county is the chief seat in England, an extensive district being known as the Potteries; iron, and glass. The breweries of Burton-upon-Trent are famous throughout the world.

Area.—1,138 square miles.

Pop.—981,385.

Chief Towns.—STAFFORD (the capital), BILSTON, BURSLEM, BURTON-UPON-TRENT, DUDLEY, HANLEY, LICHFIELD, LONGTON, NEWCASTLE-UNDER-LYME, STOKE-UPON-TRENT, TAMWORTH, UTTOXETER, WALSALL, and WOLVERHAMPTON.

Parliamentary Representation.—The county has three divisions returning 6 members; 2 for Stafford, 2 for Wolverhampton, 2 for Stoke-upon-Trent, 2 for Newcastle-under-Lyme, 2 for Tamworth, 1 for Lichfield, and 1 for Walsall.

STAGNELIUS, ERIC, stag-ne'-li-us, a Swedish poet. He evinced a genius for poetry, even from his earliest years, and shortly after the termination of his career at college, he produced his first work, "Vladimir the Great," an epic poem, the subject of which was the conversion of the Russians to Christianity. He held an appointment in the department of Ecclesiastical Affairs of Sweden, and, throughout his life, continued to produce poems, which are held to surpass all other productions of the same kind in the Swedish language.

Born 1793; died 1823.

STAHL, GEORGE ERNST, stal, a German chemist. He was educated at Jena, where he took his doctor's degree in 1683; but, upon the establishment of the university of Halle, in 1694, he was appointed professor of anatomy and chemistry there. Acquiring great reputation in this office, he was, in 1716, invited to Berlin, and made counsellor of the court and physician to the king. He announced many important discoveries, the chief being his theory of phlogiston, which, although erroneous in itself, led to the discovery of great truths in chemistry. He maintained the existence of an immaterial principle in the body, creating its organization and preserving its life, composed a number of learned works in Latin, upon medical science, and upon chemistry.

Born at Anspach, 1660; died at Berlin, 1734.

STAHL, FRIEDRICH JULIUS, German jurist, member of a Jewish family named Schlesinger, but he adopted Christianity and changed his name at the age of 17. He was professor of law successively at Erlangen, Wurzburg, and Berlin. He was vice-president of the German church diet (which he assisted and formed), from 1848 until 1859, and was a leader of the high Lutheran party. In 1849 he was elected a member of the Prussian chamber of deputies, and in 1854 became a member of the upper house of the legislature. In his writings he maintained the theory of extending Christianity by the strength of the secular power.

Born at Munich, 1802; died near Kissengen, 1861.

STAIR, JAMES DALRYMPLE, Viscount, stare, a Scotch lawyer, appointed president of the court of session in 1671, and created Viscount Stair in 1681. He published "Institutes of the Laws of Scotland."

Born 1619; died 1695.

STAIR, JOHN DALRYMPLE, Earl of, son of the preceding. He was lord advocate of Scotland from 1687 to 1690, and appointed secretary of state in the latter year. He was the chief instigator of the massacre of Glencoe, and was in consequence compelled to resign in 1695. He was created Earl of Stair in 1703.

Died 1707.

STAIR, JAMES DALRYMPLE, Earl of, a Scottish general and statesman, who exerted himself in arousing his countrymen against James II. William III., soon after his accession, created Dalrymple a colonel. He served under Marlborough in 1702; represented the English nation at the court of Poland during the interval 1709-13, and in France during the regency. He induced the regent D'Orleans to expel the Pretender from French territory, and in the reign of George II. he became grand-admiral of Scotland, and was created a field-marshal. He was nominated to the command of the English forces in Germany, and gained over Marshal the Duke de Noailles the battle of Dettingen, in 1743. He also frustrated the attempt made upon English territory, in 1745-6, by the Pretender, Charles Edward.

Born at Edinburgh, 1673; died 1747.

STALYBRIDGE, stal'-le-bridj, a market-town and municipal and parliamentary borough of Lancashire and Cheshire, 7 miles E. of Manchester, on both banks of the Thame. There are five churches, several chapels, a town-hall, and mechanics' institute. Manf. Cotton goods and yarn. There are collieries near. Pop. 22,784.—A station on the London and North-Western; Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincoln; Lancashire and Yorkshire, and Midland railways.

STAMFORD, stam'-ford, an ancient market town and parliamentary borough of Lincolnshire, on the Welland, at the south-western angle of the county, 10 miles N. of Peterborough. One of its parishes is in Northamptonshire, but the greater part of the town is built on the slope of a hill on the Lincoln side of the river. Its principal buildings are, All Saints, St. Mary's, and St. John's churches, all old; several chapels, and a town-hall. There are some remains of Carmelite and Franciscan priories. A large malting business is carried on. Pop. 8,995. A station on the Great Northern, London and North-Western, and Midland railways.

STAMFORD, a town of Connecticut, United States, 34 miles N.E. of New York. There are four adjacent villages, on a series of eminences, and the beauty of the situation makes it a favourite locality for the residence of New York merchants. There is a small harbour accessible to steamboats. Pop. 11,000.

STANDISH, MILES, stand'-ish, an English soldier, who, having served in the Netherlands, accompanied the pilgrim fathers to America, and was chosen their captain, in which capacity he led several successful expeditions against the savages, and rendered important service to the settlers. In 1625 he visited England as agent for the Plymouth colony, and on his return was magistrate at Duxbury, where a monument has recently been erected to his memory. He is the subject of a fine poem by Longfellow, "The Courtship of Miles Standish."

Born in Lancashire, 1584; died at Duxbury, Massachusetts, 1656.

STANFIELD, CLARKSON, stan'-feeld, a modern English painter, who first studied marine effects, in depicting which he subsequently became so skilful, from the forecastle of an English man-of war. Abandoning the navy, he became a scene-painter, and becoming eminent, was engaged for Drury Lane theatre. During many years he worked hard for the stage, but found time to paint small pictures of coast scenery and shipping, and in the latter walk he achieved so high a reputation that, in 1832, he was elected an associate of the Royal Academy. Three years later he became R.A. From this period he was one of the most brilliant and popular contributors to the yearly exhibitions of the Royal Academy, a thorough master of the technicalities of his art, one of the great ornaments of the English school of painters, especially of sea-pieces.

Born at Sunderland, about 1798; died at Hampstead, 1867.

STANHOPE, JAMES, first earl of, stan'-hope, an English nobleman, and nephew of the Earl of Chesterfield. He early entered upon a military career, and distinguished himself so much at the siege of Namur, in 1695, that William III. gave him a company in the Guards, and the rank of lieutenant-colonel. In 1705 he served as a brigadier-general under the earl of Peterborough at the siege of Barcelona. He was afterwards created major-general and commander-in-chief of the British forces in Spain, by Queen Anne. In 1708 he captured Fort Mahon, and obtained possession of the island of Minorca; subsequently gaining the victories of Almanza and Saragossa; but, being entrusted with the defence of Bribuega, he was obliged to surrender it, after a gallant resistance, to the duke de Vendôme. George I. appointed him secretary of state, and in 1714 sent him as ambassador to Vienna. In 1717 he was appointed first lord of the Treasury and chancellor of the Exchequer; but relinquished these offices on being created Baron Stanhope. In 1718 he again took office as secretary of state, was raised to the rank of earl, and afterwards engaged in several important missions. His death was caused by bursting a blood-vessel in the excitement of parliamentary debate.

Born 1673; died 1721.

STANHOPE, CHARLES, third earl of, grandson of the preceding, chiefly celebrated for his mechanical inventions, the most important of which was the printing-press which is named after him. He also designed improvements in the construction of canal locks, invented calculating machines, and made some researches into the action of the electric fluid. He opposed the ministry of his time, and considered the French revolution as a great step towards social improvement. He wrote a few works, the most remarkable of which were his "Reply to Mr. Burke's Reflections upon the French Revolution," and a refutation of Dr. Price's "Plan for a Sinking Fund."

Born 1752; died 1816.

STANHOPE, PHILIP HENRY, fifth earl of, an English historian and statesman, who, after completing his education at Oxford, entered the House of Commons as the representative of Wotton-Basset, in 1832. He was afterwards member for Hertford during the interval 1835-52. He held office as under-secretary of state for Foreign Affairs in the short ministry of the duke of Wellington, 1834-5; and again as secretary to the Board of Control, in the administration of Peel in 1845-6. As an historical writer, his reputation was founded upon his "History of the War of Succession in Spain," and "History of England from the Peace of Utrecht to the Peace of Versailles, 1713—1783. He also produced several less important works, such as the "Life of Louis, Prince of Condé;" the "Life of Joan of Arc," &c. A collection of his essays contributed to the "Edinburgh Review" was published in 1849. The Copyright, or Lord Mahon's Act, was carried by him; and to his exertions is chiefly due the governmental scheme of forming a national portrait-gallery. In 1855 he succeeded to the earldom of Stanhope, before which period he had been styled Lord Mahon.

Born at Walmer, Kent, 1805; died at Bournemouth, 1875.

STANHOPE, HESTER LUCY, Lady, eldest daughter of the third earl Stanhope, and granddaughter of Pitt, earl of Chatham. She acted as private secretary to her uncle, William Pitt, until his death in 1806, and being recommended by him to the care of the nation, received a pension of £1,200. In 1810 she visited Syria, and in 1813 took up her residence in a deserted convent in the Lebanon mountains, about eight miles from Sidon, adopted a masculine Arab dress, and surrounded herself with a number of refugees, who formed an armed guard. She exercised a great influence in the country, practised astrology, and, becoming partially insane, believed that she was appointed to ride into Jerusalem with the Messiah at his next coming, and kept two beautiful mares ready for the occasion. She fell into debt, which made her latter years wretched. When she died no European was near, and her native servants robbed the house, and buried her in the garden. Her "Memoirs" and "Travels" were published after her death.

Born in London, 1776; died 1839.

STANHOPE, PHILIP DORMER. (See CHESTERFIELD, EARL OF.)

STANISLAUS I., LECZINSKI, stan'-is-laws, king of Poland, was the son of the grand treasurer of that kingdom. In 1704 he was deputed by the assembly at Warsaw to Charles XII. of Sweden, who had just conquered Poland. That monarch caused him to be crowned king at Warsaw in 1705; but when Charles was defeated, in 1709, Stanislaus was obliged to leave his kingdom. On the death of Augustus, in 1733, he returned, in hopes of being acknowledged; but the power of the emperor of Germany and the empress of Russia prevailed against him, and he was again obliged to fly. In 1735 he resigned his claims to the throne of Poland, but retained his royal title, recovered his estates, and received a pension of 2,000,000 francs (£80,000) for relinquishing the revenues of the duchies of Lorraine and Bar. He maintained a brilliant court at Luneville and Nancy; and died at an advanced age, in consequence of his night-gown taking fire. He was the author of some productions in French and Polish, which were printed under the title of "The Works of a Liberal Philosopher."

Born 1677; died 1766.

STANISLAUS AUGUSTUS PONIATOWSKI, king of Poland, was the son of a Lithuanian nobleman. The elegance of his person and his accomplishments recommended him to the favour of the grand-duchess, afterwards Catherine II., by whose influence he was elected king of Poland, to the great discontent of a large party of the nobility of that kingdom. In 1794 he was forced to resign his crown, and the third partition of Poland took place. The unfortunate monarch retired first to Grodno, whence he was called to St. Petersburg, where he remained until his death.

Born at Wolczyn, Lithuania, 1732; died at St. Petersburg, 1798.

STANLEY, a seaport of Tasmania, on the north coast, 142 miles N.W. of Launceston. There is a considerable trade with Victoria, especially in potatoes. Pop. 1,000.

STANLEY, EDWARD, an eminent English prelate and ornithologist, who after studying at the university of Cambridge, was, in 1805, presented by his father, Sir John Stanley, to the living of Alderley, Cheshire, the duties of which he fulfilled for thirty-two years. In 1837 he was promoted to the see of Norwich. He was an accomplished ornithologist, geologist, entomologist, and botanist.

Born in London, 1779; died 1849.

STANLEY, ARTHUR PENRHYN, Rev., dean of Westminster, son of the preceding. He was sent at an early age to Rugby, where he earned the esteem and friendship of Dr. Arnold. In 1834 he proceeded to Oxford, and subsequently became fellow and tutor of University College, there. In 1851 he was nominated a canon of Canterbury, and subsequently became chaplain to prince Albert, as well as to the bishop of London. In 1856 he was chosen to fill the chair of Ecclesiastical History in the university of Oxford, and in 1864 appointed to the deanery of Westminster.

Born at Alderley, Cheshire, 1813; died 1881.

STANLEY, HENRY MORTON, African explorer. His real name is JOHN ROWLANDS, and he was born in great poverty near Denbigh, Wales. From the age of 3 to 13 he was brought up in the poorhouse at St. Asaph, where he received a fair education, which enabled him, after leaving the poorhouse, to act for a year as a teacher at Mold. He then went as a cabin-boy to New Orleans, where he attracted the attention of a merchant named Stanley, who adopted him; but as he died intestate, the youth received nothing from him but his name, which he had assumed. He then served in the Confederate army, but, being taken prisoner, volunteered into the United States navy, and became a petty officer of the ironclad Ticonderoga. After the close of the war, he travelled in Turkey and Asia Minor, and on his way back, went to St. Asaph for the purpose of giving a dinner to the children in the poorhouse where he had once been a pauper child. On reaching America he became connected with the newspaper press, and, as correspondent of the New York Herald, accompanied the British expedition to Abyssinia. In 1869 he was acting as correspondent at Madrid, when the proprietor of the newspaper sent for him to Paris, and asked if he would undertake to discover Dr. Livingstone, respecting whose fate there was great anxiety. Stanley at once accepted the task; went to Bombay by way of Palestine and the valley of the Euphrates, and embarked at Bombay for Zanzibar. He collected about 190 followers, with provisions and stores, in May, 1871, and after a toilsome and dangerous march through almost unknown regions, succeeded in obtaining authentic information respecting the lost traveller, and at last met with him at Ujiji, on Lake Tanganyika, in November. He accompanied Livingstone on explorations around the northern portion of the lake, and returned in 1872. He arrived in England, and related his adventures at the meeting of the British Association at Brighton; the queen presented him with a gold snuff-box set with diamonds, and he received the gold medal of the Royal Geographical Society. In 1874 he was commissioned by the proprietors of the New York Herald and London Daily Telegraph to continue the work of Livingstone and explore the lake country of equatorial Africa. He left the east coast in November, at the head of 300 men; and the difficulties he had to encounter may be estimated by the fact that in three months he had lost 192 men by death or desertion. He succeeded in making most important discoveries respecting Lake Victoria Nyanza and the adjacent country, and was then unheard of for nearly two years. About the end of August, 1877, he appeared on the west coast, at the mouth of the Congo, or Zaire, having succeeded, after terrible sufferings, and almost continued fighting with the natives, in tracing that great river from its hitherto unknown head waters to its mouth. Continued explorations induced him to project complete investigation of the whole district of the Congo. Being aided by the King of the Belgians to the extent of 40,000 francs, by the Government of France with 10,000 francs, and by further amounts from the French branch of the International Association, he commenced new operations on October 18, 1882, and eventually penetrated 700 miles above the mouth of the Congo river. Returning to England on July 28, 1884, he lectured on numerous occasions throughout the country at intervals, until the latter end of 1886, when he undertook an expedition for the rescue of Emin Pasha, who was supposed to be detained at some place in the African interior. Before starting, in January, 1887, the freedom of the City of London was presented to him. On the 27th he arrived at Cairo, made his way from thence to Zanzibar, going on by sea to the mouth of the Congo, which he reached on March 18. Fitful news of his progress arrived at intervals during that year, but throughout 1888 nothing reliable was heard from him, several successive reports of his murder being the only rumours that reached this country. Early in 1889, however, there was something like reliable information. The encouraging news that arrived in January and April was eventually confirmed in November and December, terminating with the certain intelligence that Mr. Stanley, in company with Emin, had arrived at Zanzibar, thus triumphantly completing one of the most daring, perilous, arduous and successful enterprises on record.

Born near Denbigh, Wales, 1840.

STANSTEAD, a county of Quebec province, dominion of Canada. Area, 407 square miles. Pop. 15,556 about one-fourth being of French descent. The capital is Stanstead.

STARTER, JAN JANSSEN, star'-ter, Dutch dramatist and poet, the son of English parents, who belonged to the sect of Brownists, and, when he was 13 years of age, were compelled by persecution to leave England and settle in Amsterdam. At the age of 18 he was admitted a member of the Academy, and two years afterwards went into business as a bookseller at Leeuwarden. He soon began to write dramas for the Dutch stage, and among them was "Timbre de Cardone and Fenicie of Messine," which in plot resembles the "Much Ado about Nothing" of Shakspeare. Many of his lyrics and pastorals are very tender and charming.
Born in London, 1594.

STASSFURT, stas'-foort, a town of Prussia, province of Saxony, on the Bode, 20 miles S.W. of Magdeburg. Manf. Chemicals. One of the largest salt mines in the world is in the vicinity. Pop. 12,194.

STAUNTON, SIR GEORGE LEONARD, stawn'-ton, an eminent Irish physician and diplomatist. He studied medicine at Montpellier, where he took his doctor's degree; after which he settled in London. About 1762 he went to Granada, where he practised as a physician, became secretary to Lord Macartney, governor of the island; and, having studied the law, he discharged the office of attorney-general. On the capture of Granada by the French, he was made prisoner, and, with Lord Macartney, sent to France: but after some time returned to England. When Lord Macartney was appointed governor of Madras, he accompanied him as confidential secretary, in which capacity he displayed great abilities in the treaty with Tippoo Sultan in 1784. On his return to England he received a pension from the East-India Company, and was created a baronet. In 1792 Lord Macartney went out as ambassador to China, and was accompanied by Sir George as secretary of legation. Of this voyage he published an elaborate and highly interesting account. He was interred in Westminster Abbey, where there is a fine monument to his memory by Chantry.
Born at Cargin, Galway, Ireland, 1737; died in London, 1801.

STAUNTON, SIR GEORGE THOMAS, son of the preceding, whom he accompanied to China in 1792. On his return to England, he was entered of the university of Cambridge, where he pursued his studies in a distinguished manner. On leaving the university, he went out to China as secretary of the English factory at Canton, of which trading community he subsequently became president. In 1816 he was attached to the embassy of Lord Amherst, in which capacity his knowledge of the Chinese character and language enabled him to render great services. In 1817 he quitted the East, and thenceforth devoted himself to politics, employing his leisure in the composition of a number of valuable works, including "The Penal Code of the Chinese Empire;" "Narrative of the Chinese Embassy to the Tartars in 1712-15;" "Journal of the Embassy of Lord Amherst;" "Memoirs of the Life and Family of the late Sir George Leonard Staunton;" and a translation from the Spanish of Mendoza, of a work entitled "History of the Great and Mighty Kingdom of China." With a few short interruptions, Sir George sat in the House of Commons from 1818 until 1852. He was among the most distinguished of Chinese scholars.
Born at Salisbury, 1781; died 1859.

STEARNS, steerns, a county of Minnesota, United States. Area, 1,579 square miles. Pop. 21,956. The capital is St. Cloud.

STEELE, SIR RICHARD, steel, an English dramatist and essayist. His father, who was a barrister, acted in the capacity of private secretary to the duke of Ormond. He received his education at the Charter-house, in London, and at Merton College, Oxford, after which he enlisted as a soldier, and rose to the rank of captain, an appointment due to Lord Cutts, to whom he had dedicated a work entitled "The Christian Hero." In 1701 he commenced his career as a dramatic writer, with the production of his comedy of "The Funeral, or Grief à la Mode," which had great success. This play was followed by the "Tender Husband" and the "Lying Lovers;" but his best work was the "Conscious Lovers," acted in 1722. In 1706 he was appointed Gazetteer, and gentleman usher to Prince George of Denmark. In 1704 he married a West Indian lady, who brought him some money, but died soon afterwards; and in 1707 he married Miss Mary Scurlock, a Welsh lady, the "Dear Prue" of his voluminous correspondence. In 1709 he began "The Tatler," a periodical paper, in which he had the assistance of Addison, as he also had in the "Spectator" and "Guardian;" the first commenced in 1711 and the last in 1713. His reputation as a writer procured him the place of commissioner of the stamp-office, which he resigned on being chosen member for Stockbridge. For writing two pamphlets, called the "Englishman" and the "Crisis," he was soon afterwards expelled the House of Commons. After the accession of George I., in 1715, he received the honour of knighthood, was appointed surveyor of the stables at Hampton Court, and governor of the royal company of comedians. He was also returned to parliament for Boroughbridge, in Yorkshire, and made one of the commissioners of the forfeited estates in Scotland. He was an improvident man, continually in difficulties; but kind-hearted generous, and affectionate. His last years were spent in retirement in Wales, suffering from paralysis.

Born at Dublin, 1671; died at Llangunnor, near Caermarthen, 1729.

STEELE, a county of Minnesota, United States. Area, 432 square miles. Pop. 12,460.—The capital is Owatonna.

STEEN, JAN, stain, a Dutch painter. "In spirit, humour, and invention," says Dr. Waagen, "Steen excels all other Dutch painters in the same line."

Born at Leyden, 1636; died 1689.

STEEVENS, GEORGE, stē'-vens, one of the editors of Shakspeare. In 1766 he published twenty of the plays of Shakspeare, with notes. This work produced an intimacy between Steevens and Dr. Johnson, the result of which was a union of their labours as editors and commentators of Shakspeare. Their edition appeared in 1773. Twenty years afterwards, Steevens published a still more accurate edition of the great English dramatist, in 15 vols. He also revised the proofs of Boydell's edition of Shakspeare.

Born at Stepney, 1736; died at Hampstead, 1800.

STEFFANI, AGOSTINO, stef-fa'-ne, an Italian composer, who was at first a chorister at St. Mark's, Venice, where he attracted the notice of a German nobleman, by the beauty of his voice. This patron provided him with the means of obtaining a learned and musical education. He entered into holy orders, but chiefly devoted himself to musical composition. The duke of Brunswick, father of George I., offered him the posts of director of his chamber-music, and of the opera, which Steffani accepted. He composed several operas, and a large number of madrigals, motets, duets, &c. Caroline, consort of George II., edited a hundred of his duets. He subsequently became bishop of Spiga, having, in 1708, resigned his posts under the elector of Hanover to Handel.

Born about 1650; died at Frankfort, 1729.

STEFFENS, HEINRICH, stef'-fens, a Norwegian philosopher, who studied at the university of Copenhagen, where he so highly distinguished himself as to gain, in 1794, a travelling prize. In 1796 he was engaged as a lecturer upon natural history, and also as private tutor at Hamburg: in 1800 he was appointed to make a revision of Schelling's works upon natural philosophy; at a later period he was appointed assistant to the professor of philosophy in the university of Jena. After spending a short time in Denmark, he, in 1804, became professor in the university at Halle. In 1809 he joined the Prussian volunteers, with whom he fought till they entered Paris in 1813. Afterwards he held the professorship of physics and natural history at Breslau, and from the year 1831 until his death, at the university of Berlin. The most important works of this learned writer were,—his Autobiography; "On the False Theology and the True Faith;" "Polemical Leaves for the Advancement of Speculative Physics;" some novels; and the "Fundamental Features of Philosophical Natural Science."

Born at Stavanger, Norway, 1773; died at Berlin, 1845.

STEIBELT, DANIEL, stī'-belt, a German composer, who having been fortunate enough to attract the notice of William III. of Prussia, was educated at the charge of that king. He resided for a long time in London, where he produced a large number of compositions for the pianoforte, upon which instrument he was a most brilliant performer. In Paris he was the first to introduce Haydn's "Creation." He subsequently became chapel-master to the emperor of Russia; and while a resident at St. Petersburg, he produced there several operas.

Born at Berlin, 1775; died at St. Petersburg, 1823.

STEIN, HEINRICH FRIEDRICH KARL, Baron von, stine, a Prussian statesman, who studied at Göttingen, commenced his public life in 1779 as director of mines. After fulfilling the duties of various official appointments during the lifetime of Frederick the Great, he, in 1786, paid a visit to England, where he made a study of the constitution of Great Britain. Under Frederick-William III. he was the prime mover of those measures by which Prussia, although shorn of more than half her territory, was enabled to re-establish herself as a great kingdom, and afterwards to contribute to the downfall of Napoleon I. He introduced into Prussia a municipal system, reformed the civil service, trained the youth of the kingdom in the use of arms, and reorganized the army. Napoleon having learned what "one Stein" was doing, obliged him, in 1808, to relinquish his post, and to take refuge first in Austria, and afterwards in Russia, where he became counsellor to Alexander I. After the fall of Napoleon, Stein, finding his views too liberal for Prussia, retired into private life.

Born at Nassau, 1757; died 1831.

STEIN, CHARLOTTE ALBERTINE ERNESTINE, Baroness Von, daughter of a marshal of the grand ducal court of Weimar, chiefly famous for her friendship with Goethe, and the influence she exercised over him, and as the authoress of a tragedy, "Dido," founded on that friendship.

Born at Weimar, 1742; died there, 1827.

STEINAMANGER, stine-a-man'-ger, a town of Hungary, on an affluent of the Raab, 68 miles S.E. of Vienna. The modern cathedral is considered to be the finest church in Hungary. There are a bishop's palace and an ancient castle. Remains of the old Roman town of Savaria are in the vicinity. Pop. 6,000.

STELBENBOSCH, stel'-ben-bosh, a division of the Western Province, Cape Colony. Area, 400 square miles. Pop. 9,000.

STELBENBOSCH, a town of the above division, well laid out with wide shaded streets. Pop. 4,000, chiefly of Dutch descent. This is one of the oldest towns in the colony, having been founded in 1684.

STENDAL, sten'-dal, a town of Prussia, province of Saxony, on the Altmark, 35 miles N. of Magdeberg. It is surrounded by walls, has a Roman Catholic church, a Protestant cathedral, founded in 1188, and five other churches. Manf. Woollen goods. Pop. 14,393.

STENIMACH, or STANIMAK, stan'-i-mak, a town of Turkey in Europe, in Roumelia, on the northern slope of Mount Rhodofe, 80 miles N.W. of Adrianople. It is an ancient place, with many remains of former greatness. A trade in wine and silk is carried on. Pop. 10,000.

STENO, NICOLAS, stai'-no, a Danish anatomist, who studied at Copenhagen and Leyden, and became principal physician to Ferdinand II., grand-duke of Tuscany. He was also appointed tutor to the young prince Cosmo, and, embracing the ecclesiastical state, was made a bishop by the pope, who sent him, with the title of vicar-apostolic, to Germany.

Born at Copenhagen, 1638; died at Schwerin, 1686.

STENTOR, sten'-tor, in Greek legend, one of the warriors who went to the siege of Troy. He was famed for the power of his voice, which was said to be as loud as that of fifty men combined.

STEPHEN, ST., ste'-fen, the first martyr of Christianity, was one of the seven deacons, and had been the disciple of Gamaliel. He was stoned to death by the Jews, on a pretended charge of blasphemy.

Died in 33.

STEPHEN OF BYZANTIUM, a Greek grammarian and lexicographer, who wrote a geographical dictionary, probably the first ever produced, of which there remains an abridgment, made by Hermolaus, in the reign of Justinian.

Lived in the 6th century.

STEPHEN, king of England. He was the third son of Stephen, earl of Blois, by Adela, daughter of William the Conqueror, and was crowned at Westminster in 1135. Matilda, daughter of Henry I., and wife of Henry IV., emperor of Germany, was the legitimate heir to the throne; but Stephen, taking advantage of her absence, obtained possession of it. In 1139 Matilda landed in England, and in 1141 took Stephen prisoner at the battle of Lincoln; but he was exchanged the same year for Robert, earl of Gloucester, illegitimate brother to the empress. Matilda, after many unsuccessful engagements, quitted the kingdom in 1147, and two years subsequently, her son Henry, by Geoffrey Plantagenet, earl of Anjou, claimed the crown; but, in 1153, a peace was concluded between the rivals, by which it was settled that Stephen should enjoy the crown for life, and that Henry should be his successor.

Born 1105; died 1154.

STEPHEN, the name of five kings of Hungary, succeeding to the throne in 997, 1114, 1161, 1165, and 1270.

STEPHEN I., ST., pope, ascended the pontifical chair after Lucius, in 253.

Died 257.

STEPHEN II., was a native of Rome, and elected pope in 752. Astolphus, king of the Lombards, having menaced the city of Rome, Pepin, king of the Franks, marched into Italy, and deprived Astolphus of the exarchate of Ravenna and several cities, which he gave to the pope; thus laying the foundation of the temporal sovereignty of the church of Rome.

Died 757.

STEPHEN III., succeeded Paul I. in 768. Throughout his career he was at variance with the Lombards.

Died 772.

STEPHEN IV., succeeded Leo III., but died in the same year.

Died 816.

STEPHEN V., elected in 885. He was a learned pontiff, and greatly contributed to relieve the people of Rome from the effects of a terrible famine which had desolated the country shortly before his accession.

Died 891.

STEPHEN VI. became pope in 896. He caused the body of pope Formosus to be disinterred and cast into an ordinary grave, on the plea that that pope had been excommunicated by John VIII. anterior to his elevation to the tiara. The partisans of Formosus burst into an insurrection, and having seized Stephen, strangled him.

Died 897.

STEPHEN VII. was elevated to the papacy in 929.

Died 931.

STEPHEN VIII. succeeded in 939. The records of the papacy are extremely untrustworthy; but it is stated by one authority that Stephen VIII. was, during a revolt of the Roman populace, rendered a cripple for life.

Died 942.

STEPHEN IX. (Frederick of Lorraine), brother to the Duke of Tuscany, was elected to the papacy in 1057. He had previously fulfilled the office of papal legate at the court of Constantinople. After his elevation, he despatched legates to Milan, to enforce celibacy among the clergy of that church, the disputes upon which decree lasted during a quarter of a century. According to one of the bulls issued by him, the clergy were exempted from the jurisdiction of lay courts, as also from the payment of tribute to laymen. He was a learned and energetic pontiff, and a zealous reformer of many abuses.

Born 1000; died 1058.

STEPHEN, JAMES, Sir, an English lawyer, government official, and historian. He was educated at Cambridge for the legal profession, and soon after entering upon practice, was chosen as counsel of the Colonial department. Having retired from the bar, he became assistant under-secretary for the colonies. At a later period he was promoted to the permanent under-secretaryship of the same department; but after spending thirty-five years in the civil service, he, in 1847, retired from it. His distinguished services were rewarded with a knighthood. In 1849 he was chosen regius professor of modern history in the university of Cambridge. His contributions to English literature are highly esteemed; the most important of them being, "Essays in Ecclesiastical Biography," and "Lectures on the History of France."

Born in London, 1789; died at Coblentz, 1859.

STEPHENSON, GEORGE, ste'-ven-son, a distinguished English mechanician, inventor of the locomotive, and father of the railway system. He was the son of a fireman at a colliery, and while still a child was employed to herd cows. In his 14th year he was appointed assistant fireman to his father, and soon rose to a better position. At a night-school at Walbottle, he learnt to read and write, and, in 1799, he paid fourpence per week to a Scotchman, at Newburn, to teach him arithmetic. In his 20th year he married, and was appointed brakesman to an engine used in lifting the ballast brought by the collier ships on their return voyage to Newcastle. At this time he added to his income by devoting his leisure to boot-mending, cutting out the pitmen's clothes, and clock-cleaning; but, with all this, he found time for his experiments in mechanics. In 1804 he proceeded to Montrose, having been appointed to superintend one of Messrs. Boulton and Watt's engines there. He remained in Scotland about a year; upon which he returned to his former employment at Killingworth. In 1812 he was appointed engineer of the colliery, at a salary of £100 per annum. The construction of a locomotive engine had long been a favourite problem with engineers connected with colliery labour. Several travelling engines had, indeed, been constructed, but they were, at best, only clumsy and inefficient pieces of machinery. He inspected all the locomotives within his reach, and, at length, informed one of his employers, Lord Ravensworth, that he could make a better engine for the colliery tramways than any yet seen. He was provided with the means of executing his design, and in less than a year he completed a travelling engine which drew along the colliery tramway eight loaded carriages, weighing thirty tons, at a rate of four miles an hour. This successful trial took place in 1814. In the following year he constructed another engine, which was a vast improvement upon its predecessor. He next invented a safety-lamp, which, upon completion, proved to be in principle similar with that produced at the same period by Sir Humphrey Davy. In 1820, Mr. Pease, of Darlington, obtained an act of parliament for the construction of a railway to be worked "with men and horses or otherwise." Meanwhile, Stephenson had converted the tramroad of the Hetton Colliery into a railway eight miles in extent. This fact recommended him to the notice of Mr. Pease, who caused him to be engaged as the engineer of the new undertaking, which, under the name of the Stockton and Darlington Railway, was finished in 1825. About the same time, Stephenson was engaged to make a survey for a proposed railway or tramroad between Manchester and Liverpool. The difficulties of the undertaking were immense, and the public and private opposition he encountered are historical. Some years antecedent to the completion of the Manchester and Liverpool line of railway, he had with great foresight set up a factory for the construction of locomotives; and when the demand for those engines was created, it was found that from his establishment alone could anything like a perfect machine be obtained. The company had offered a prize of £500 for a locomotive engine to be used on the new line. By the specified time, several engines were put forward; but all broke down upon their first trial, except the "Rocket," which had been turned out from Stephenson's factory. On September 15th, 1830, the Liverpool and Manchester line was opened; and from that moment George Stephenson was acknowledged as one of the most distinguished men of his time. Lines of railway were projected throughout the kingdom, and Stephenson was appointed chief engineer of some of the most important. For a long time he enjoyed the monopoly of locomotive-making; and it was not until skilled workman, trained in his factory, had been called away to form or superintend other establishments, that a good engine could be obtained in any other quarter. He was also engaged upon some foreign lines, principally in Belgium. He went to Spain to make the survey of a proposed line between Madrid and the Pyrenees; but the scheme was subsequently abandoned. In 1845 he relinquished nearly all his engagements with railway companies, and devoted his attention to the collieries and lime-works of which he had become the proprietor.

Born at Wylam, Northumberland, 1781; died near Chesterfield, 1848.

STEPHENSON, ROBERT, a civil engineer, the son and only child of the preceding. Robert, in his 11th year, was sent to school at Newcastle; and, having very early evinced a predilection for mechanics and science generally, he joined the Newcastle Literary and Philosophical Institution, and when he came home for his Saturday half-holiday, he was always provided with a book from the library. In 1818 his father was in a position to apprentice him to Mr. Nicholas Wood, as a coal-viewer. Under that gentleman, Robert obtained a complete knowledge of the machinery used in a colliery; in 1820 he repaired for a session to the university of Edinburgh, where he attended the lectures of Sir John Leslie and Professor Jamieson upon natural philosophy, geology, and mineralogy. During his stay there he gained a mathematical prize; and, after returning home, was apprenticed to his father, who had just commenced his locomotive factory at Newcastle. In consequence of his health having become frail, he, in 1824, went out to South America upon a commission to examine the gold and silver mines of that country. George Stephenson, on being appointed engineer of the Liverpool and Manchester Railway, recalled his son, who reached England at the close of 1827. He then became one of the chief assistants to his father, and, after rendering him material services, he, upon the completion of the Liverpool line, was engaged to form a branch of the same, near Warrington. He next made the survey for the Leicester and Swannington Railway, and afterwards of the London and Birmingham line, of which he was subsequently appointed engineer. The High Level Bridge over the Tyne, at Newcastle; the Viaduct over the valley of the Tweed, at Berwick: the Britannia Bridge, over the Menai Strait; and the Victoria Bridge, over the St. Lawrence, at Montreal, are magnificent proofs of the boldness and originality of his genius for triumphing over material obstacles. He assisted his father in the laying-out of the lines in Belgium; constructed a railway between Alexandria and Cairo, and designed an immense bridge to cross the Nile. In 1847 he was elected member of parliament for Whitby, in Yorkshire, which place he represented during many years. He was a fellow of the Royal Society, president of the Institution of Civil Engineers, and a member of many learned and scientific bodies, both English and continental. He was the author of two valuable works, entitled, respectively, "The Locomotive Steam-engine," and "The Atmospheric Railway System." His death was hastened by a cold caught while assisting Brunel to launch the Great Eastern. He was buried in Westminster Abbey, and there is a statue to his memory in front of the London and North-Western terminus in Euston Square, London.

Born at Willington, 1803; died in London, 1859.

STEPHENSON, a county of Illinois, United States. Area, 550 square miles. Pop. 31,000. The capital is Freeport.

STEPNEY. (See LONDON.)

STEPNEY, GEORGE, step'-ne, an English poet, who came of an ancient Pembrokeshire family, and was educated at Trinity College, Cambridge. On leaving the university, he found a patron in the earl of Dorset, who obtained for him several public employments. He was successively engaged as envoy to the elector of Brandenburg, the emperor of Germany, the elector of Saxony, and to the States-general. In 1697 he was appointed one of the commissioners of trade. He assisted Dryden in making the translation of Juvenal.

Born in London, 1663; died 1707.

STERLING, JOHN, ster'-ling, a modern English essayist, who was the son of Edward Sterling, editor of the Times newspaper. After spending some time at the university of Glasgow, he was, in 1824, sent to Trinity College, Cambridge, where he had Dr., afterwards Archdeacon Hare, for his tutor, and became acquainted with a knot of brilliant young men, numbering amongst others, Frederick Maurice, Richard Trench, Monckton Milnes, and Charles Buller. After leaving Cambridge, he purchased the Athenæum newspaper of its projector, Mr. Silk Buckingham; but, the speculation not proving successful, the print was disposed of to Mr. Dilke. In 1834 he entered upon holy orders, and became curate of Hurstmonceaux, in Sussex, under his friend Archdeacon Hare. The delicate state of his health compelled him to vacate this office in less than a year afterwards; and henceforth his life was spent in migrations between England and other countries enjoying a warmer climate.

Born 1806; died 1844.

STERNBERG, stern'-bairg, a town of the Austrian empire, in Moravia, 10 miles N. of Olmütz. There are an old palace and a military school. Manf. Cotton goods (large), woollen, linen, canvas, hosiery, and liqueurs. Pop. 13,500.

STERNE, LAURENCE, stern, English novelist, who received his education at Halifax, Yorkshire; whence he was sent to Jesus College, Cambridge, and, having taken his degrees, entered into orders. His uncle, Dr. Jacques Sterne, prebendary of Durham, procured him the living of Sutton, and, about 1741, a prebend in York Cathedral. He afterwards obtained the rectory of Stillington, in the same county. He published the two first volumes of "Tristram Shandy" at York in 1759. On the republication of these in London, the year following, Sterne, from obscurity, rose to the height of literary fame. In 1760 he received the additional living of Coxwold, Yorkshire. During the subsequent 28 years, he produced the conclusion of his first novel, a "Sentimental Journey in France," some sermons under the name of "Yorick," and "Letters." He added the characters of Uncle Toby, Corporal Trim, and Mr. Shandy to our literature; but was a coarse-minded, licentious man, with very little of the "reverend" in his composition, but with a command of sentimental language with which he endeavoured to cover his moral delinquencies.

Born at Clonmel, Ireland, 1713; died in London, 1768.

STERNHOLD, THOMAS, stern'-hold, an English writer, who became successively groom of the robes to Henry VIII. and Edward VI. He produced a metrical version of fifty-one of David's Psalms; the remainder were done by Hopkins, Norton, and others. He also wrote "Certain Chapters of the Proverbs of Solomon drawn into Metre." The first complete version of the Psalms of Sternhold and Hopkins was published in 1562.

Born in Hampshire, about 1500; died 1549.

STESICHORUS, ste-sik'-o-rus, a Greek lyric poet. His name, according to Suidas, was originally Tysias, which he changed to Stesichorus (chorus leader), on account of his being the first who taught the chorus to dance to the lyre. He was a man of the first rank among his fellow-citizens, and was distinguished as a statesman. He died at an advanced age, at Catania, in Sicily.

Born at Himera, Sicily, 632 B.C.; died about 555.

STETTIN, stet-tin', a fortified town of Prussia, capital of Pomerania, on the left bank of the Oder, 76 miles N.E. of Berlin. The ancient castle contains a collection of northern antiquities, and there are a school of navigation and observatory, several fine squares and statues of Frederick the Great and Frederick William III. The river is crossed by two bridges. Manf. Woollens, linens, cotton, leather, soap, and tobacco; but, above all, ships' anchors, of which, as of ships and boats built here, there is an extensive export. It has a large annual fair, and, after Dantzic, is the principal port of the Prussian dominions. Pop. 91,756.—Stettin belonged to Sweden from 1648 to 1720.

STEUBEN, stu'-ben, a county of Indiana, United States. Area, 340 square miles. Pop. 13,000. The capital is Angola.

STEUBEN, a county of New York, United States. Area, 1,425 square miles. Pop. 75,000. There are two capitals, Bath and Corning.

STEUBEN, FRIEDRICH WILHELM AUGUST, Baron, served with great distinction under Frederick the Great, and in 1777 went to America, and became an eminent commander under Washington, especially valuable in organising the army. Congress voted him an annuity, and large tracts of land were granted him.

Born at Magdeburg, 1730; died near Utica, New York, 1794.

STEUBENVILLE, stu'-ben-vil, capital of Jefferson county, Ohio, United States, on the Ohio, 32 miles W. of Pittsburg. There is a very fine court-house. Manf. Woollen goods, cottons, paper, iron, and machinery. Abundance of coal is found in the vicinity. Pop. 12,000.

STEVENSON, ROBERT, ste'-ven-son, a Scottish engineer, who was placed as assistant with Mr. Thomas Smith, of Edinburgh, engineer to the Northern Lighthouse Commissioners; in which appointment he succeeded his tutor in 1797. In 1807 he commenced the construction of the celebrated Bell-Rock lighthouse, off Arbroath, in Forfarshire. Besides erecting twenty-three lighthouses, he was engaged in designing many improvements in harbours, and in the construction of several bridges, chiefly in Scotland.

Born at Glasgow, 1772; died 1850.

STEWART, stu'-art, a county of Georgia, United States. Area, 500 square miles. Pop. 14,500, about two-thirds being coloured. The capital is Lumpkin.

STEWART, a county of Tennessee, United States. Area, 425 square miles. Pop. 12,500, nearly 3,000 being coloured. The capital is Dover.

STEWART, MATTHEW, a Scotch mathematician. He studied divinity at Glasgow, and afterwards mathematics at Edinburgh under Maclaurin, whom, in 1747, he succeeded in his professorship; on which occasion he published his "General Theorems." In 1761 appeared his tracts, physical and mathematical, in which he proposed to deduce a theory of the moon, and to determine the sun's distance from the earth. He was also the author of other works, chiefly mathematical.

Born at Rothsay, Isle of Bute, 1717; died 1785.

STEWART, DUGALD, a Scotch metaphysician, son of the preceding, educated at the High School of Edinburgh and Glasgow university. His attainments as a speculator in metaphysical inquiry were evinced as early as his 19th year, when he produced an essay on "Dreaming." His mathematical attainments also were so great, that, on reaching his 21st year, he was selected to fulfil the functions of assistant mathematical professor to his father in the university of Edinburgh. After officiating for some time as the deputy of Dr. Ferguson, he was, in 1785, appointed to succeed that learned professor in the chair of moral philosophy. In this position his name became famous throughout Great Britain, and his classes were attended by the most brilliant and promising young men of the time. In 1792 he produced the first volume of his "Elements of the Philosophy of the Human Mind;" and, in the succeeding year, his "Outlines of Moral Philosophy." During the nine or ten subsequent years, he put forth a "Life of Dr. Robertson;" a "Life of Dr. Reid;" lectures on political economy; and the "Life of Adam Smith." The first volume of his celebrated "Philosophical Essays" appeared in 1810. His last works were,—"View of the Active and Moral Powers," and the celebrated "General View of the Progress of Metaphysical, Ethical, and Political Science since the Revival of Letters," which appeared in 1815, as the "Preliminary Dissertation to the Supplement of the Encyclopædia Britannica."

Born at Edinburgh, 1753; died there, 1828.

STEWART. (See STUART.)

STEYER, or STEYR, stire, a town of the Austrian empire, province of Upper Austria, at the confluence of the rivers Steyer and Enns, 19 miles S.E. of Linz. There are two suburbs, Ennsdorf and Steyerdorf, with which the town is united by bridges. Manf. Hardware and cutlery. Pop. 16,919.

STIGAND, stig'-and, a Saxon prelate, a favourite with Edward the Confessor, who created him bishop of the East Angles. In 1052 he became archbishop of Canterbury. Subsequently William the Conqueror refused to be crowned by him, and, finally, degraded him from his high offices and threw him into prison, where he is said to have been starved to death.

Died 1070.

STIGLMAYER, JOHANN BAPTIST, stigl'-mi-er, an eminent Bavarian sculptor, and director of the bronze-foundry of Munich. He was the son of a blacksmith, but in early life evinced so great an aptitude for design, that he found patrons, who had him regularly educated for the sculptor's art. At a subsequent period he directed his attention to metal-founding, and, after increasing his knowledge by sojourning at Naples and Berlin, he returned to Munich, and there undertook the casting of those celebrated bronze statues, after the models of Thorwaldsen, Schwanthaler, Rauch, and himself, which adorn the city of Munich and its environs. He was succeeded in the directorship of the royal foundry by Ferdinand Miller, his nephew.

Born at Munich, 1791; died 1844.

STILICHO, FLAVIUS, stil'-i-ko, general and favourite of the emperor Theodosius, whose niece and adopted daughter he espoused. After discharging, among other high offices, that of ambassador, and master-general of all the forces of the Western empire, he, upon the death of Theodosius, in 395, became guardian of his son Honorius, who had been left the empire of the West, as his elder brother Arcadius had received that of the East. Stilicho appears to have aspired to the command of both the Eastern and Western armies; but in this design he was thwarted by Rufinus, tutor to Arcadius, who reigned at Constantinople. Stilicho, however, caused Rufinus to be slain, and afterwards married his daughter to Honorius. A general of the highest ability and bravery, he on several occasions prevented the empire from being devastated by Alaric and his barbarians. In 408 Honorius was induced to believe that Stilicho intended to depose him, and place his own son, Eucherius, upon the throne. Honorius accordingly ordered him to be beheaded, which was done by Count Heraclian, at Ravenna.

Died 408.

STILL, JOHN, stil, an English prelate, who, in 1592, was elevated to the bishopric of Bath and Wells. He is stated to have written, while a young man, a play called "Gammer Gurton's Needle," one of the earliest comedies extant in the English language.

Born 1543; died 1607.

STILLINGFLEET, EDWARD, stil'-ing-fleet, an English prelate, who was educated at St. John's College, Cambridge, of which he was chosen fellow in 1653. In 1657 he was presented to the rectory of Sutton, by his friend Sir Roger Burgoyne, to whom he dedicated, in 1662, his great work, entitled "Origines Sacræ, or a Rational Account of the Grounds of Natural and Revealed Religion." In 1670 he was made canon-residentiary, and, in 1678, dean of St. Paul's. He wrote and preached with great ability against popery and the Nonconformists, during the reign of James II., and, in 1689, was made bishop of Worcester. He was a man of profound learning, a close and energetic writer, and an excellent divine. He engaged in a metaphysical controversy with John Locke.

Born at Cranbourn, Dorset, 1635; died in London, 1699.

STILPO, stil'-po, a distinguished philosopher of the Megarian school. Ptolemy Soter invited him to his court, but Stilpo refused. When Megara, the native place of the philosopher, was taken by Demetrius Poliorcetes, the conqueror ordered the house of Stilpo, "the wisest of all living Greeks," to be spared. He taught that perfect wisdom consisted in the complete mastery of the passions. None of his writings have survived.

Lived in the 3rd century B.C.

STIRLING, stir'-ling, an ancient town, royal, municipal, and parliamentary borough and riverport of Scotland, capital of Stirlingshire, and irregularly built on the sloping ridge of a rock, 220 feet high, the precipitous end of which, towards the west, is occupied by the castle, at the head of the navigation of the Forth, 31 miles N.W. of Edinburgh. There is an old bridge of four arches over the Forth. There are two churches formed out of the old church, called, from their situations, the East and West kirks. There are two old royal palaces, an ancient town-house, and the old residence of the Earl of Mar, several hospitals, a gaol, a hall for the circuit and sheriff courts, and the Athenæum, with a spire 120 feet high, for a reading-room and a public library. There are also a grammar-school and other endowed schools, public libraries, reading-rooms, a mechanics' institute, corn exchange, and several ancient ecclesiastical buildings. Manf. Cotton and woollen goods, ropes, malt, leather, and soap; timber and coal are imported. Pop. 13,480. —A station on the North British and Caledonian railways.—Stirling is a place of great antiquity. The most ancient of the town's charters was granted by King Alexander I., and is dated at Kincardine, the 18th of August, in the 12th year of his reign (i. e. A.D. 1120). It was several times taken and retaken by the English and Scots; in the former of whose hands it was kept for ten years, until retaken by Robert Bruce after the Battle of Bannockburn. It was for a short time in the possession of the English in 1333, and lastly taken by Monk in 1651. Prince Charles's army besieged it in 1746.

STIRLING, JAMES, an English mathematician, who was educated at the university of Oxford, and became a fellow of the Royal Society. He produced some able expositions of the Newtonian philosophy. Although highly esteemed by his contemporaries, scarcely anything is known respecting his life.

Born towards the close of the 17th century; died subsequently to 1764.

STIRLING, WILLIAM ALEXANDER, Earl of, Scotch poet and dramatist. He was appointed secretary of state in 1626, and keeper of the signet in the following year, and in 1633 was created earl. He was the author of "Monarchieke Tragedies," "Doomsday," and "Recreations with the Muses."

Born 1580; died 1640.

STIRLING-MAXWELL, WILLIAM, Sir, a modern Scotch author and politician, who produced a number of valuable works upon the art, history, and literature of Spain. He resided during some time in the Peninsula, in order to make researches upon these subjects. He published "Annals of the Artists of Spain;" "The Cloister Life of the Emperor Charles V.;" "Velasquez and his Works." In politics he was a moderate Conservative, and represented the county of Perth during many years. He was elected rector of the university of St. Andrew's in 1863, and of that of Edinburgh in 1872. In 1877 he married the Hon. Mrs. Norton, the poetess, who died shortly afterwards.

Born at Kenmure, near Glasgow, 1818; died 1878.

STIRLINGSHIRE, a county of Scotland, bounded N. by Perth and Clackmannan shires, E. by the Firth of Forth and Linlithgowshire, and S. and W. by the shires of Lanark and Dumbarton. Diversified with mountains, hills, and plains, and shaded with natural woods and plantations. An extensive plain stretches from the Water of Avon towards the north-west, and is terminated by the mountain of Ben-Lomond. It is intersected by the Forth, and includes the carses or valleys of Stirling and Falkirk, and produces the most luxuriant crops. The central and southern districts are partly mountainous and partly level and fertile.

Rivers and Lakes.—The principal are the Forth, the Carron, the Bannockburn, which falls into the Forth, the Endrick, the Blane, and the Kelvin. The chief lakes are Loche Coulter and Elrigg, and a part of Loch Lomond is within the county.

Minerals.—The abundance of coal and iron in particular have given rise to many important branches of manufactures. There are also ironstone, freestone, and limestone, silver, copper, cobalt, and lead.

Area.—466 square miles.

Pop.—112,437.

Parliamentary Representation and Chief Towns.—The county returns 2 members, and the Falkirk and Stirling districts 1 each. The chief towns are STIRLING (the capital), Bannockburn, Denny, and FALKIRK.

STOCKENSTROEM (KAT RIVER SETTLEMENT), a division of Cape Colony. It is fertile and well wooded. Area, 260 square miles. Pop. 6,000, of whom only 1,400 are Europeans, the remainder being Hottentots. (See KAT RIVER.)

STOCKHOLM, stok'-holme, ("island on piles,") the capital city of Sweden, at the junction of the Lake Malar with an inlet of the Baltic, built partly on islands, and intersected by many canals. Its form is an irregular oblong, extending from north to south, while the waters cross it in two channels from east to west. The town was originally built on three islands, which have been enlarged by embankments built on piles. The central of these islands is known as Stad, "the city;" the others are suburbs, Norrmalm, the fashionable quarter, and Södermalm, chiefly occupied by the working-classes. The former is connected with the Stad by a fine granite bridge, and the latter by several drawbridges. Of the public edifices the principal is the royal palace on the central island, a large quadrangular structure in the Italian style, with a square or court in the middle, and containing a picture gallery, and the royal library. In the Norrmalm are the principal government offices and mercantile establishments, and the new national museum, a splendid building facing the royal palace, 260 feet long, 170 broad, and 90 feet high. Other fine building are the Ridderhaus (or house of the nobles, or Diet), the Ridderholm (formerly a church, and now used for collections illustrative of Swedish history), the governor's palace, exchange, mint, art-union, and exhibition buildings, and the royal theatre where Gustavus III. was assassinated. Of the churches, nearly 20 in number, the most remarkable are the ancient Solna; St. Nicholas, in which the Swedish kings are crowned; and St. Clara, notable for its fine interior. There are a military college and various educational establishments. The Djurgard, or deer park, about 3 miles in circumference, contains the Rosendal palace, and Haga, Carlberg, Humlegard, and Berzelius parks are beautiful and favourite resorts. There are statues of Birger Jarl, the reputed founder of the city, Gustavus III., and Charles XII. In the vicinity of the city are many beautiful palaces and villas. Stockholm is the chief emporium of Sweden, and few harbours have greater depth or capacity. A thousand sail of shipping may lie in it in safety, and the largest of them may come close to the quays. The chief exports are iron, steel, copper, pitch, tar, and timber. Manf. Comprise iron goods, machinery, glass, porcelain, sugar, tobacco, leather, cotton, hats, stockings, silk, watches, clocks, mathematical instruments, and articles of gold and silver. Pop. City, 205,129; Rural district, 147,486.—Stockholm appears to have been founded in the 13th century by Birger Jarl, father of Waldemar, who became king, and to have owed its gradual increase to the commercial advantages of its situation. In 1520, the city endured a siege by the Danes, followed by a terrible massacre of the inhabitants. In the 17th century it superseded Upsal as the Swedish capital.

STOCKMAR, CHRISTIAN FRIEDRICH, Baron von, a German physician, who became private secretary and comptroller of the household to Prince Leopold of Saxe-Coburg, and after his accession to the throne of Belgium was engaged by him in many confidential transactions, and was the trusted friend of Queen Victoria and Prince Albert, exercising considerable influence over the domestic relations of the royal family, especially in negociating the marriage of the Crown Prince of Prussia with the Princess Royal of England, the latter of whom designed a monument to his memory at Coburg. His memoirs have been published.

Born in Coburg, 1817; died there, 1863.

STOCKPORT, stok'-port, a market-town and parliamentary borough of Cheshire, at the junction of the Mersey and the Thame, 5 miles S.E. of Manchester. There are several suburbs, the most extensive being Edgeley, Heaton-Norris, and Portwood, and the Mersey is crossed by five bridges. The central part stands on the top of a hill, which has a very steep descent towards the river, and towards the north the hill becomes perpendicular for a height equal to that of the houses, a row of which encircles the base. The parish church of St. Mary is a modern structure in the Early English style, with an ancient chancel; St. Thomas's is an elegant building in the Grecian style; and there are several other churches and numerous chapels. A splendid railway viaduct of 26 arches spans a part of the town as well as the river Mersey. Manf. Cotton-weaving and spinning. Pop. 59,550. —A station on the London and North-Western, Great Western, Midland, and other lines of railways.

STOCKTON, stok'-ton, capital of San Joaquin county, California, United States, at the head of a large arm of the San Joaquin river, 63 miles E. of San Francisco. There is a good harbour, and constant steamboat communication is maintained with San Francisco. Wheat, wool, and other agricultural produce from the San Joaquin valley are shipped. Manf. Agricultural implements, joinery, paper, and saddlery. Pop. 10,000.

STOCKTON-ON-TEES, a market-town and parliamentary borough of Durham, on the left bank of the Tees, with a suburb, South Stockton, on the opposite side of the river, and 10 miles from its mouth. The public buildings are a town-hall, four churches, a handsome Roman Catholic church, various chapels, a custom-house, theatre, and mechanics' institute. The river is crossed by a fine bridge, and vessels of considerable size can come up to the quays. Manf. Sailcloth, linen, worsted yarns, and iron and brass work. There are shipbuilding yards and breweries. Pop. 41,040.—A station on the North-Eastern railway.

STODDARD, stod'-dard, a county of Missouri, United States. Area, 800 square miles. Pop. 13,431. The capital is Bloomfield.

STOKE-UPON-TRENT, a town and parliamentary borough of Staffordshire, the centre of the "Potteries." There are a large parish church, St. Peter's, rebuilt about 1830, a large town-hall, statues of Josiah Wedgwood and Herbert Minton, and an infirmary. Manf. China, porcelain, statuettes, and encaustic tiles. Pop. 19,263.—A station on the North Staffordshire railway.

STOKES, stokes, a county of North Carolina, United States. Area, 550 square miles. Pop. 15,353. nearly one-fourth being coloured. The capital is Danbury.

STOKES, GEORGE GABRIEL, an eminent modern mathematician, who was educated at Pembroke College, Cambridge, in which university he succeeded to the Lucasian professorship of mathematics in 1849. In 1854, he was elected secretary of the Royal Society. He produced a number of valuable papers upon mathematical physics, chiefly contributed to the "Transactions of the Cambridge Philosophical Society." He has also lectured upon physics, elementary and practical, at the School of Mining and Arts, in the Museum of Practical Geology, and has made some highly important discoveries relative to the refrangibility of light. He was president of the British Association in 1869.

Born about 1818.

STOLBERG, FRIEDRICH LEOPOLD, Count von, a Danish poet, who studied at Halle and Göttingen, travelled in Italy and Switzerland with Goethe and Lavater, and, later in life, represented Denmark as minister, at the courts of Russia and Prussia. Partly through the influence of the Russian princess Amelia Galitzin, he became a member of the Church of Rome. His principal works were—translations of the "Iliad," of Ossian, and of Æschylus; an account of his travels in Italy, Switzerland, and Germany; and some religious treatises.

Born at Bramstedt, Holstein, 1750; died near Osnabrück, 1819.

STOLLBERG, a town of Prussia, Rhine province, 7 miles E. of Aix-la-Chapelle. Manf. Brass wire and other articles in brass, cutlery, needles and pins, woollen cloth, and flannel. Pop. 10,911.

STOLLBERG, a town of Saxony, circle of Zwickau, 9 miles S.W. of Chemnitz. Manf. Woollens, linen, and cotton. There are slate quarries, and a silver mine in the vicinity. Pop. 6,000.

STOLP, stol'-pe, a walled town of Prussia, province Pomerania, on the Stolpe, 10 miles from its mouth in the Baltic. Manf. Woollen and linen fabrics, amber, copper, hats, starch, tobacco, and leather. Pop. 21,591.

STONE, stone, the name of 3 counties of the United States:—

ARKANSAS.—A new county. Population enumerated, 5,089.

DAKOTA.—Area, 700 square miles. Pop. Unascertained.

MISSOURI.—Area, 500 square miles. Pop. 3,500. The capital is Galena.

STONEHENGE. (See WILTSHIRE.)

STONEHOUSE, or EAST STONEHOUSE, stone'-house, a market-town of Devonshire, between Devonport and Plymouth, of which it forms a suburb (see PLYMOUTH), separated from Devonport by the Port, an arm of the harbour. St. George's Hall is a fine building in the Italian style. There are a royal naval hospital, occupying 24 acres; marine barracks and the Royal William victualling yard, an immense establishment; extensive quays, and a battery and several forts commanding the entrance of the Hamoaze. Pop. 2,400.—A station on the London and South Western railway.

STONINGTON, ston'-ing-tun, a town and port of New London county, Connecticut, United States, on Long Island Sound. It has a good harbour, protected by two breakwaters, and a maritime trade. It is a favourite place for summer resort. Manf. Woollen and cotton goods and machinery. Pop. 6,500.

STORACE, STEPHEN, stor'-ace, an English musician and composer for the English theatre. He was the son of a Neapolitan musician long settled in England. During his short but brilliant career he produced—the music for the "Haunted Tower," "Siege of Belgrade," "No Song, no Supper," as well as several pieces composed for the Italian opera, all of which exhibit an undoubted genius for music. His sister Anna was a celebrated vocalist.

Born in London, 1763; died in the same city, 1796.

STOREY, stor'-e, a county of Nevada, United States. Area, 420 square miles. Pop. 16,115. The capital is Virginia.

STORMONT, stor'-mont, a county of Ontario province, dominion of Canada. Area, 409 square miles. Pop. 13,294. The capital is Cornwall.

STORNOWAY, storn'-o-wai, a town and parish of the Hebrides, Scotland, Ross-shire, at the head of Loch Stornoway, upon a point jutting into it. The harbour is excellent. The town is the largest in the Western Islands, and has a church, town-house, news-room, public library, and custom-house. Manf. Ropes, and it has a wool-carding factory, corn and malt mills, and a distillery. Pop. of parish, 10,389; of town, 2,500. Lat. 58° 11′ 28″ N. Lon. 6° 22′ 10″ W.

STORY, JOSEPH, stor'-e, an American judge and writer upon jurisprudence. He graduated at Harvard College, and commenced practice in 1801, and soon became one of the most distinguished lawyers of the United States. From 1805 to 1808 he was a member of the lower house of the legislature of Massachusetts, and in 1811 was nominated associate judge of the Supreme Court, and at a subsequent period he accepted the Dana professorship of law at Harvard University. His legal works enjoy a European reputation, and are highly esteemed even in England, where the legal literature of other countries is less regarded than elsewhere. His principal works were—"Commentaries on the Conflicts of Laws;" "Commentaries on the Constitution of the United States;" treatises upon Equity Jurisprudence, the law of Bailments, of Bills of Exchange, of Promissory Notes, and of Partnership.

Born at Marblehead, Massachusetts, U.S., 1779; died at Cambridge, near Boston, 1845.

STORY, a county of Iowa, United States. Area, 550 square miles. Pop. 16,906. The capital is Nevada.

STOTHARD, THOMAS, stot'-hard, an English painter, who was apprenticed to the business of a pattern-designer for brocaded silks, which pursuit he relinquished on obtaining some success as a draughtsman for the "Town and Country Magazine." He was next employed to make designs for Bell's "British Poets" and the "Novelist's Magazine." In consequence of the reputation he acquired while engaged upon these works, his services were sought by almost every publisher of his time requiring for his productions the aid of an artist's pencil. Meanwhile he diligently pursued a course of study at the Royal Academy; and, after exhibiting some pictures, was, in 1785, elected an associate of that body. He became a full academician in 1794. In 1812 he was appointed librarian to the Academy. He is stated to have made more than five thousand designs.

Born in London, 1755; died there, 1834.

STOUR, stoor, the name of several rivers in England.—1. In Somerset, falling into the English Channel at Christ-Church, in Hampshire.—2. In Shropshire, and falling into the Severn at Stourport.—3. In Dorsetshire, running into the Avon.—4. In Oxfordshire, also running into the Avon.—5. Rising on the borders of Cambridgeshire, and joining the Orwell from Ipswich. Their united streams form the noble harbour of Harwich, whence they discharge themselves into the German Ocean.

STOURBRIDGE, stoor'-bridj, a market-town of Worcestershire, on the Stour, 18 miles N. of Worcester. Manf. Glass, earthenware, iron, cloth, and fire-bricks. Pop. 9,760.—Stat. on Gt. West. Ry.

STOW, JOHN, an eminent English antiquary and historian, who is supposed to have been brought up to the trade of a tailor. From an early age he devoted his leisure to the study of the national antiquities. According to Strype, Stow's historical works were—his "Chronicle," his "Summary of Chronicles," and his "Annals; or, a General Chronicle of England." His celebrated "Survey of London" was first published in 1598. Stow himself also states that he continued Holinshed's "Chronicles," from 1576 to 1586, and likewise corrected divers written copies from which the text of Chaucer was printed in 1569. In his old age he was reduced to beg his bread; James I. having granted him letters patent to collect alms.

Born in London, 1525; died 1605.

STOWE, HARRIET ELIZABETH BEECHER, Mrs., a modern American authoress, one of the twelve children of the Rev. Lyman Beecher, a Presbyterian preacher of the United States. In 1832, she married her father's colleague, the Rev. Professor Calvin E. Stowe. Her first efforts in literature took the shape of tales and essays, written for a charitable purpose and inserted in the magazines and newspapers of her native country. Both her husband and father had enrolled themselves among the most energetic members of the Abolition Convention. Their hearty denunciations of slavery proved so distasteful to the people of Cincinnati, that both the reverend gentlemen were at length compelled to resign their appointments there. In 1850 Professor Stowe accepted the chair of Biblical Literature in the Theological College of Andover, Massachusetts; and it was while a resident there that Mrs. Stowe wrote her famous tale of "Uncle Tom's Cabin," which first appeared in the "Washington National Era." The work was translated into every language, and literally went the round of the globe. Its statements naturally evoked much hostile criticism in the United States, and in answer to her opponents Mrs. Stowe published, in 1853, a "Key to Uncle Tom's Cabin," in which she gave many facts and documents as the basis of her representations. Accompanied by her husband and brother, she visited England in 1853, and, after a sojourn in several places in Great Britain, as well as upon the continent, she, after her return to her native country, produced her travelling impressions, in a work entitled "Sunny Memories of Foreign Lands." In 1856 she published "Dred, a Tale of the Great Dismal Swamp;" in 1859, "The Minister's Wooing," and "Agnes of Sorrento," which appeared simultaneously in the pages of the "Cornhill Magazine" and the "Atlantic Monthly," in 1861. In addition to the works already quoted, she wrote—the "Mayflower; or, Sketches of Scenes and Characters among the Descendants of the Pilgrims;" "Temperance Tales;" the "Coral Ring;" and a number of smaller effusions. In 1869 she published in an American magazine, "The True Story of Lord Byron's Life," in which she made a charge of a peculiarly atrocious character against Lord Byron, which excited a great amount of controversy.

Born at Lichfield, Connecticut, 1814.

STOWELL, WILLIAM SCOTT, Lord, sto'-el, an English lawyer, elder brother of Lord Chancellor Eldon. He studied at the university of Oxford, after which he entered at the Middle Temple as a student of the law. In 1780 he was called to the bar, and was admitted of the Faculty of Advocates at Doctors' Commons. He became, in rapid succession, registrar of the Court of Faculties, judge of the Consistory Court, vicar-general to the archbishop of Canterbury, and, in 1798, he was appointed judge of the High Court of Admiralty. In 1801 he was chosen as the parliamentary representative of the university of Oxford, and held his seat in the House of Commons until 1821, at which period he was created Baron Stowell, of Stowell Park. In ecclesiastical law and the law of nations, he is the greatest English authority.

Born at Heworth, near Newcastle, 1745; died in Berkshire, 1836.

STRABANE, stra-bane', a town of Ireland, in Tyrone, on the right bank of the Morne, 13 miles

S.W. of Londonderry. There is a fine cruciform church in the Grecian style. It is a place of considerable trade, and has a salmon fishery. Pop. 4,600.—A station on the Great Northern of Ireland railway.

STRABO, strai'-bo, a Greek geographer. He studied rhetoric, grammar, and the philosophy of the Peripatetics. Of all his works, only his Geography is extant; and from passages in the work it is shown that he travelled in Egypt, Syria, Palestine, Greece, &c.

Born in Pontus, Asia Minor, 54 B.C.; died 24 A.D.

STRADA, or STRADANUS, JOHN, stra'-da, a Flemish painter, who went, at an early age, to Italy, where he was employed by Cosmo I., duke of Florence. He afterwards visited Naples and other Italian cities; but he chiefly resided at Florence, where many of his fine works are still preserved. He excelled, not only in sacred subjects, but painted animals, battles, and hunting-parties admirably.

Born 1536; died about 1604.

STRADELLA, ALESSANDRO, stra-dail'-la, an Italian singer, violinist, and composer. Whilst at Venice he was engaged by a nobleman to teach music to his mistress, a highly-born lady. The lady conceived a fresh passion for the musician, with whom she fled to Rome, where the pair were married. The Venetian noble hired two bravos to assassinate Stradella and his newly-wedded bride; but, as the assassins were about to strike the blow, they heard the musician sing, and were so overcome by the beauty of his voice, that they not only refrained from executing their murderous commission, but confessed to Stradella the plot in which they had been engaged. The implacable Venetian, however, found a pair of less susceptible murderers at a later period; and both Stradella and his wife were stabbed to death at Genoa by the agents of their enemy. His compositions are said to have formed the model of Purcell, Steffani, Pergolesi, and other celebrated musicians.

Born at Naples, 1645; died 1678.

STRADIVARIUS, ANTONIO, strad-i-vair'-i-us, a violin maker, who was the pupil of Amati. He himself taught the eminent Joseph Guarcerius. The violins made by him are considered the finest ever produced, and command very large prices when brought to sale.

Born at Cremona, 1674; died there, 1737.

STRAFFORD, straf'-ford, a county of New Hampshire, United States. Area, 675 square miles. Pop. 35,500. The capital is Dover.

STRAFFORD, THOMAS WENTWORTH, Earl of, an English statesman, who was educated at Cambridge, and in 1614 elected to parliament for Yorkshire. He was at first one of the principal leaders of the popular party in the House of Commons against the unconstitutional measures of Charles I.; but was gained over to the court, created Baron and Viscount Wentworth, and appointed president of the council of the North and lord-lieutenant of Ireland. Strafford displayed some talents for government in Ireland, where he encouraged agriculture, and laboured with zeal to promote the Protestant interest. Whilst Charles governed without a parliament, Strafford was his willing instrument in illegally imposing taxes upon the kingdom. In 1640 he was created Earl of Strafford, and appointed to the command of the army against the Scotch. At the opening of the Long Parliament, his enemies in the Commons, with Pym at their head, impeached him at the bar of the Lords, and he was ordered into custody. His trial lasted eighteen days, and was carried on with unusual virulence. A bill of attainder was passed in both houses of parliament, and Charles I. was weak enough to give his assent to it. The king afterwards made some slight and fruitless attempts to save his life. On the day of execution on Tower Hill, Strafford went forth to the block with the manner of "a general marching at the head of an army to breathe victory, rather than that of a condemned man, to undergo the sentence of death." The attainder was reversed in the reign of Charles II., and the earldom restored to his son.

Born in London, 1593; died 1641.

STRAITS SETTLEMENTS, a British crown colony in Asia, including MALACCA, PENANG, and SINGAPORE. Pop. 423,384.

STRALSUND, stral'-soond, a strongly-fortified seaport of Prussia, province of Pomerania, on the strait which separates the island of Rugen from the mainland, 85 miles N.W. of Stettin. The town can only be approached by bridges, which connect it with three suburbs. The harbour is capacious and safe. The churches of St. Nicholas and St. Mary are fine specimens of the Pointed style. Manf. Woollens, linen, tobacco, soap, glass, starch, and leather. Pop. 29,481.—Stralsund was built about the year 1209, and became a member of the Hanseatic league. In 1628 it was besieged without success by Wallenstein, but taken in 1678, 1713, and 1807. Since 1815, when it was surrendered by the Danes, it has been made one of the strongest towns belonging to Prussia.

STRANGE, SIR ROBERT, strainj, an engraver, who was apprenticed at Edinburgh, but fought under the Pretender, and, after experiencing many privations subsequently to the battle of Culloden, he went to Edinburgh, and, at a later period, improved himself in France. In 1751 he went to London, where he applied himself to historical engraving, in which he arrived at great excellence. In 1760 he went to Italy, where he was chosen a member of the academies of Rome, Florence, and Bologna, and appointed professor of the Royal Academy at Parma; and at Paris he was made a member of the Royal Academy of Painting. In 1787 he received the honour of knighthood.

Born at Pomona, one of the Orkney Isles, 1721; died in London, 1792.

STRANRAER, stran-rar, a royal, municipal, and parliamentary borough of Scotland, in Wigtonshire, at the head of Loch Ryan. The harbour is good. Pop. 3,528.—A station on the Glasgow and South-Western railway.

STRAPAROLA, GIOVAN FRANCESCO, stra-pa-ro'-la, Italian writer, famous as a collector of stories, under the title "Piacevoli Notti," which contains the germs of many of the stories most popular among children, and of some of the Countess D'Aulnay's famous tales.

Born at Caravaggia, near the end of the 15th century.

STRASBURG, stras'-boorg, a strongly-fortified city of Germany, capital of Alsace-Lorraine, at the influx of the Brusche into the Ill, and only a mile from the Rhine, over which is a wooden bridge, 72 miles from Basle. Its form approaches to the semi-circular, and it is traversed by the Ill, over which there are a number of bridges. The fortifications are extensive. The citadel, built by Vauban, is a regular pentagon, composed of five bastions and as many half-moons, and with outworks extending almost to the Rhine. Of its public buildings, the principal is the cathedral of Notre Dame, commenced in 1015, and finished in 1439, which is justly classed among the most distinguished specimens of Gothic architecture that exist. Its tower, of 466 feet in height, is a masterpiece of architecture, being built of hewn stone, cut with such nicety as to give it at a distance some resemblance to lace, and combining the most elegant symmetry of parts with the most perfect solidity. The clock, constructed in 1570, is a masterpiece of mechanism, being of an astronomical character. Besides the cathedral, there are the churches of St. Stephen, St. Thomas, the Temple Neuf, and St. Pierre le Jeune, a handsome synagogue, a town-hall, an episcopal mansion, a theatre, several hospitals, tribunal of commerce, public library, destroyed in the war of 1870, but since restored, university school, and a monument to General Dessaix. Manf. Woollen, linen, and cotton goods, sailcloth, blankets, carpets, hardware, leather, cotton, lace, snuff, jewellery, buttons, cutlery, clocks, chemicals, mathematical, musical, and other instruments. Pop. 112,091.—Strasburg is a place of great antiquity, having existed prior to the Christian era. It was a free city of the empire in the middle ages, and a Protestant city until seized by Louis XIV., in 1681. In 1870 it capitulated to the Germans after a bombardment of several weeks, and was afterwards incorporated in the German empire. (See GERMANY.)

STRATFORD DE REDCLIFFE, STRATFORD CANNING, Viscount, de red'-klif, a modern English diplomatist, who, after leaving the university of Cambridge, was, in 1807, appointed to a subordinate post in the Foreign Office. In 1808 he was named secretary to Sir Robert Adair, who had been sent upon a special mission to Constantinople. He was appointed secretary of legation in 1809, and, upon the recall of his chief, he became minister plenipotentiary to the Porte. In 1814 he was despatched to Switzerland upon a diplomatic mission, and was, in 1820, appointed envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to the United States, in 1823 upon a diplomatic mission to St. Petersburg, and next to the court of the emperor of Austria. He resumed his post at Constantinople in 1825, and nobly exerted himself in behalf of the Greeks. For his services he was, in 1829, created a civil knight grand cross of the Bath. About the same time he took his seat in the House of Commons as the representative of the borough of Old Sarum, and afterwards sat for the now extinct borough of Stockbridge, Hants. Returning to the Ottoman Porte in 1831, he was enabled to settle the future boundaries of the Greek kingdom. Upon this settlement, Prince Otho of Bavaria ascended the throne of Greece. He was next despatched upon a mission to the court of Madrid, and, in 1834, he again took his seat in parliament as member for King's Lynn, in Norfolk. After twice refusing the governor-generalship of Canada, he, at the close of the year 1841, returned to his old post at Constantinople, retaining it until 1858. In the year 1852 he was raised to the peerage with the title of Viscount Stratford de Redcliffe, a title chosen by himself, on account of his descent from William Cannynge, the pious founder of the church of St. Mary Redcliffe, at Bristol. In 1845, when Mr. Layard could not find a government or scientific body, or public, to second his aspirations for the discovery of ancient Nineveh, Lord Stratford authorized and enabled him, at his own risk and expense, to proceed upon his researches. He was a diplomatist of remarkable vigour of character, and no English ambassador ever exercised such influence on the Turkish government. He has recently published "Why am I a Christian?" and a drama, "Alfred the Great in Athelney."

Born in London, 1788; died 1879.

STRATFORD-UPON-AVON, a market-town of Warwickshire, on the right bank of the Avon, over which is a bridge of fourteen arches. The church is a spacious and venerable structure, containing numerous monuments and inscriptions. The most remarkable is the monument and bust of Shakspeare. The chapel of the Holy Cross is a handsome structure, and attached to it are a hall for the brethren of the guild, an almshouse, and a free grammar-school. The town-hall, rebuilt in 1767, has portraits of Shakspeare and Garrick. Stratford contains the house in which it is said Shakspeare was born, but that in which he died was rased to the ground by the proprietor. (See SHAKSPEARE.) Pop. 8,050.—A station on the London and North-Western and Great Western railways.

STRATHMORE. (See SCOTLAND.)

STRAUBING, strow'-bing, a walled town of Bavaria, province of Lower Bavaria, on the right bank of the Danube, 25 miles S.E. of Ratisbon. It is a very old town, and there are a Gothic church with fine pictures, an ancient town-hall, and a ducal palace. Manf. Beer and leather. Pop. 12,625.

STRAUSS, DAVID FRIEDRICH, strouss, a German theological writer, who, in 1832, became assistant-teacher at Tübingen, and lecturer on philosophy in the university there. In 1835 he produced an extraordinary work, entitled "The Life of Jesus critically treated," which "attempted to prove that the whole of the evangelical history was a series of myths, founded, to a considerable extent, on the Old Testament prophecies of the Messiah, concocted in the first and second centuries of the Christian era, and, by degrees, adopted by the Christian community." He was dismissed from his appointments at Tübingen, and, in the following year, became a private tutor at Stuttgart. He replied to his critics, in 1837, in two "Friendly Addresses;" nevertheless, the feeling against him was so strong, that when, in 1839, he was appointed professor of divinity and church history at the university of Zurich, he was not only compelled instantly to resign, but the administration under which he had received the post was overthrown. He subsequently produced a biography of Schubart, the German poet, and "The Doctrine of the Christian Faith." In 1848 he was for a short time a member of the diet at Stuttgart. His latest work on the old and new faiths produced a great sensation.

Born at Ludwigsburg, Wurtemberg, 1808; died at Berlin, 1874.

STRELITZ. (See NEU STRELITZ.)

STRICKLAND, AGNES, Miss, strick'-land, a modern English historical writer, who commenced her literary labours at an early age. Having published some lyric poems and historic tales, in 1842 she took a higher flight, and gave to the public the "Letters of Mary Queen of Scots," published from the originals, with historical introductions and notes. In 1840 appeared the first volume of her "Lives of the Queens of England, from the Norman Conquest, now first published, from Official Records and other Authentic Documents, private as well as public." The work at once became popular. The "Lives of the Queens of Scotland, and English Princesses connected with the Regal Succession of Great Britain," was first put forth in 1850. In these works, historical knowledge is laid before the general reader in a very attractive guise.

Born near Southwold, Suffolk, 1806; died in London, 1874.

STRICKLAND, HUGH EDWIN, an eminent English naturalist, who was at first a pupil of the celebrated Dr. Arnold, while the latter was residing at Laleham. He subsequently studied at the university of Oxford; after which he devoted himself to the science of geology, and wrote several valuable papers thereon, which were inserted in the Proceedings of the Geological Society. In 1835 he, accompanied by Mr. Hamilton, made a tour in Asia Minor, and, after his return, produced several papers upon the geology of the districts through which he had passed. Upon the resignation of the readership in geology at Oxford by Dr. Buckland, Mr. Strickland succeeded to the post, and retained it until his death. In 1848 he produced a work upon the dodo, a bird which has become extinct within a comparatively recent period. Of the Royal Society he was one of the founders. His death took place in consequence of his being run over by a train, while engaged in making notes upon the geology of a cutting on the Gainsborough and Retford Railway. He was the author of 86 publications upon natural science.

Born at Righton, Yorkshire, 1811; died 1853.

STRIEGAU, stre'-gou, a walled town of Prussia, province of Silesia, 32 miles S.W. of Breslau. Manf. Woollen and linen goods, wax, and leather. Pop. 11,470. In its neighbourhood the Austrians were defeated by the Prussians in 1745.

STROMBOLI, strom'-bo-le. (See LIPARI ISLANDS.)

STROMNESS, strom'-ness, a seaport and burgh of barony, Orkney Islands, at the head of the bay of Mainland. The harbour is good. Pop. 1,700. Lat. 58° 57′ N. Lon. 3° 17′ W.

STROMOE, strom-o'-e, the largest of the Faroe Islands, 27 miles long and 7 wide, mountainous, rising on the peak of Skjällingfield to 2,430 feet. The coast is generally precipitous. The port of Thorshavn is on the south coast. Pop. 2,000.

STROOD, a village of Kent, on the Medway, opposite Rochester. (See ROCHESTER.) Pop. 4,000, chiefly employed in fishery.—A station on the South Eastern railway.

STROPHIUS, stro'-fi-us, in Greek legend, a son of Crisus, king of Phocis. He married a sister of Agamemnon, called Anaxibia, by whom he had Pylades, celebrated for his friendship with Orestes. After the murder of Agamemnon by Clytemnestra and Ægysthus, the king of Phocis educated, with the greatest care, his nephew, whom Electra had secretly removed from the dagger of his mother and Ægysthus. Orestes was enabled, by means of Strophius, to avenge the death of his father.

STROUD, stroud, a market-town and parliamentary borough of Gloucestershire, near the confluence of the river Frome and the Stroud-water, 9 miles S.E. of Gloucester. There are a large church with a lofty spire, a district church, and several chapels. The town has recently been considerably improved. Manf. Woollens, giving employment to a large number of persons in the town and adjacent villages. The water of the Stroud is of great value for dyeing purposes, especially for scarlet work. Two annual fairs, chiefly for cattle, are held. Pop. 7,533.—A station on the Great Western railway.

STROZZI, PALLA, strot'-se, member of a distinguished Florentine family, who was at first the colleague of Cosmo de' Medici, at the congress of Ferrara, in 1432, when a treaty of peace was signed between Florence and Venice on the one side, and the duke of Milan on the other. He subsequently joined the Albizzi against the Medici family. This league was successful at the outset; but, when the Medici regained their former influence at Florence, Palla retired to Padua, where he spent the remainder of his life in studious retirement. He translated the works of John Chrysostomus from the Greek into the Latin.

Died at Padua, 1462.

STROZZI, FILIPPO, was a prominent actor in the events which took place at the fall of the Florentine republic. Possessed of considerable wealth, he was allied to the great Medici family, having espoused Clarice, daughter of Piero, and niece of Leo X. Duke Alessandro, an illegitimate member of the Medici family, was murdered in 1537; but Charles V. caused Cosmo, another member of the Medici, to be elected duke of Florence. The Florentine emigrant nobles now resolved to make a desperate attempt to sweep away this new ruler. At the head of 4,000 French and Italian mercenaries, Filippo and other leaders invaded Florentine territory, and made themselves masters of the castle of Montemurlo. They were, however, soon afterwards defeated, Filippo was taken prisoner, and, after being kept in confinement during a year, and subjected to the torture, he was about to be delivered by his Spanish captors to the tender mercies of Cosmo, when he found means to cut his own throat with a sword. He was a learned and accomplished nobleman. After his death, the emperor Charles V. confiscated all the funds which he had lodged in banking-houses in Italy, Germany, and Spain; nevertheless, he left to his children, principally in the banks of France, an income of 50,000 crowns.

Died 1538.

STRUENSEE, JOHANN FRIEDRICH, Count, stroo'-en-se, a German physician, who by his abilities and address gained the favour of the king of Denmark, and was ennobled and made minister of state. The young queen, Caroline Matilda, sister of George III., is believed to have fallen a victim to the insinuating arts of Struensee, who, acquiring at the same time an overpowering hold upon the weak and debased king, became the virtual ruler of Denmark, which, under his government, sank into a state of the greatest destitution. At length the queen-mother formed a party against him. He was arrested with his friend Brandt, and beheaded at Copenhagen. The queen was confined in a prison till demanded by the English court; on which she was delivered up and removed to Zell, in Hanover, where she died. (See CAROLINE.)

Born at Halle, in Saxony, 1737; died 1772.

STRUTT, JOSEPH, strut, an English antiquary, who was an apprentice of the unfortunate engraver Ryland (see RYLAND), and afterwards studied drawing in the Royal Academy. In 1771 he commenced his researches in English antiquities, and continued to labour in that path, with great distinction to himself, until his death. He compiled a "Dictionary of Engravers," and produced an "Historical Treatise on the Manners, Customs, Arms, Habits, &c., of the Inhabitants of England," and others upon the "Sports and Pastimes of the People of England," and the "Dress and Habits of the English People." He left an unfinished romance, "Queen Hoo Hall," which Sir Walter Scott edited.

Born at Springfield, Essex, 1742; died in London, 1802.

STRUVE, FRIEDRICH GEORG WILHELM VON, stroov, Russian astronomer, who was educated and became a professor at Dorpat. In 1839 he was made director of the observatory of Pulkova, and not long afterwards, councillor of state. His principal labours were directed to the observation of double stars and measuring degrees of latitude and arcs of the meridian.

Born at Altona, 1793; died at St. Petersburg, 1864.

STRY-STREE, stri'-stre, a town of the Austrian empire, in Galicia, on the left bank of the Stry, 44 miles S. of Lemberg. Pop. 9,200.

STRYPE, JOHN, stripe, an English historian and antiquary, who, upon the completion of his education at St. Paul's school and the university of Cambridge, entered into holy orders, and was appointed to a perpetual curacy at Low Leyton, in Essex, the duties of which office he fulfilled until within a few years of his death. His principal works are—"Ecclesiastical Memorials of England under Henry VIII., Edward VI., and Queen Mary;" "Memorials of Thomas Cranmer;" "Lives of Archbishops Parker and Whitgift;" an edition, with large additions, of Stow's "Survey of London;" and "Annals of the Reformation."

Born in London, 1643; died 1737.

STUART, or STEWART, stu'-art, a royal house which gave sovereigns to Scotland and England. Walter, the grandson of Flahald, a Norman who accompanied the Conqueror to England, and obtained the lands and castle of Oswestry, in Shropshire, went to Scotland, and became steward to Malcolm III. The office was made hereditary, and from it the surname was derived. His descendant was Robert II., who was declared king in 1371. His descendants reigned in Scotland until 1603, when James VI. succeeding to the English throne, upon the death of Elizabeth, the crowns of the two kingdoms were united, and he ruled over both countries, as James I. of Great Britain. The last king of this line was James II., who, at the revolution of 1688, fled from England, and died in France. (See ROBERT II., III. of Scotland, JAMES I. II. III. IV. V. of Scotland, JAMES I., CHARLES I. II., JAMES II. of England, and CHARLES EDWARD, the Pretender.)

STUART, ARABELLA, or ARBELLA, usually styled the Lady Arabella, was the daughter of Charles Stuart, duke of Lennox, younger brother of Henry, Lord Darnley, husband of Mary, queen of Scots, and father of James I. Her mother was the daughter of Sir William Cavendish, of Chatsworth, Derbyshire, father of the first earl of Devonshire. As great-grandchild of Henry VIII.'s sister Margaret, she stood in the same relationship to queen Elizabeth as did James Stuart of Scotland, afterwards James I. This affinity to the English throne was the cause of all her misfortunes. In 1603 it was alleged that a plot had been formed to place the crown upon her head, under the protection of Spain, for which Sir Walter Raleigh was tried. There is no proof that such a design was ever entertained, and certainly none that the Lady Arabella knew of it. James I. was strongly opposed to her marriage with any personage, royal, noble, or otherwise. In 1610, however, it was discovered that she was married to William Seymour, grandson of the earl of Hertford. Seymour was at once committed to the Tower, whence, after a confinement of a year, he effected his escape. The lady Arabella also eluded the vigilance of her keepers, and fled towards France; but was taken in Calais roads, and imprisoned in the Tower, where, in 1615, she died, her sufferings having previously deprived her of reason.

Born 1575; died 1615.

STUART, GILBERT, a Scotch historical writer, who received his education at the university of Edinburgh, where his father was professor. His first work of any importance was "A Dissertation concerning the Antiquity of the British Constitution," published in 1767, for which he was created LL.D. of the university of Edinburgh. He next published "A View of Society in Europe." Disappointed of the professorship of law at Edinburgh, he removed to London, and became a writer in the "Monthly Review." In 1774 he returned to Edinburgh, and began a magazine and review, which failed; after which he again repaired to London. He produced, in addition to the works already quoted, "Observations concerning the Public Law and Constitutional History of Scotland;" "The History of the Reformation in Scotland;" "The History of Scotland from the Reformation to the Death of Queen Mary," whom he defends with ability against Dr. Robertson and others.

Born at Edinburgh, either 1742 or 1746; died 1786.

STUART, GILBERT CHARLES, sometimes styled American Stuart, the best portrait-painter that America has produced. He crossed the Atlantic, and for some time resided at Edinburgh, whence he worked his passage home, and practised as a portrait-painter at Newport (Rhode Island), Boston, and New York. In 1777 he became the pupil, in London (where he endured great privations, partly owing to his own improvidence), of his countryman, Benjamin West, and, having made great progress, he set up in practice as a portrait-painter, with considerable success. He subsequently went to Dublin and Paris, where he had many distinguished sitters. He retired to his native country in 1793, and while a resident at Philadelphia, painted a portrait of Washington, which is the best likeness extant of the patriot.

Born at Narraganset, Rhode Island, 1755; died at Boston, 1828.

STUART, JAMES, a celebrated English architect, commonly called Athenian Stuart. His mother was left a widow in poor circumstances, with four children, of whom James was the eldest, who, when very young, maintained the rest of the family by painting fans. He subsequently proceeded to Italy, and, forming an intimacy with Mr. Revett, the architect, they went to Athens, where they made a number of drawings of the remains of ancient architecture. In 1762 the first volume appeared of "The Antiquities of Athens," to which two volumes more were added after the death of Stuart. He built the chapel at Greenwich Hospital, and some mansions in London.

Born in London, 1713; died 1804.

STUDLEY, JOHN, stud'-le, an English poet in the reign of queen Elizabeth, who received his education first at Westminster school, and afterwards at Trinity College, Cambridge. He held a command under Prince Maurice, and was killed at the siege of Breda. He translated into English several of the tragedies of Seneca.

Died 1587.

STUHL-WEISSENBURG, stool-vise'-enboorg, a town of Hungary, on the left bank of the Csorgo, 38 miles S.W. of Buda. It has the Marienkirche, in which fourteen of the kings of Hungary were buried, and many crowned; a gymnasium, and a military academy. Manf. Woollen and linen goods, and hardware. Pop. 23,000.

STUKELEY, WILLIAM, stuke'-le, English antiquary. After taking his doctor's degree, he settled at Boston, in Lincolnshire, whence he removed to London, and was chosen member of the Royal Society, and also of the Society of Antiquaries on its revival. In 1730 he entered into orders, and in 1747 was presented to the rectory of St. George, Queen-square, London. His principal works are, "Itinerarium Curiosum; or, an Account of the Antiquities and Curiosities in Great Britain;" "An Account of Stonehenge and Abury;" "Palæographia Sacra; or Discourses on the Monuments of Antiquity that relate to Sacred History;" "History of Carausius;" "Dissertation on the Spleen." He was called, on account of his knowledge of British antiquities, the "Arch Druid."

Born at Holbeach, Lincolnshire, 1687; died in London, 1765.

STURMIUS, JAMES, stoor'-me-oos, a German statesman, who was sent as ambassador to several foreign countries, and was deputy to the diets of the empire. He contributed to the reformation of religion at Strasburg, to the erecting of a college, and assisted Sleidan in his "History of the Reformation."

Born at Strasburg, 1489; died at the same city, 1553.

STURT, CHARLES, Sir, sturt, Australian explorer. He entered the army, and, in 1825, was stationed at Sydney, and was attached to a party formed to explore the interior. He made ten journeys, attended with discoveries of great interest, between 1828 and 1831, and in 1844 reached the centre of the continent. He was at different periods surveyor-general, registrar-general, and colonial secretary of South Australia; but becoming blind, a result of the hardships he had endured, he returned to England, and was knighted a few days before his death.

Died at Cheltenham, 1869.

STUTSMAN, stoots'-man, a new county of Dakota territory, United States. Area, 2,100 square miles. Pop. 1,607.

STUTTGART, stoot'-gart, capital of Würtemberg, 97 miles S.S. of Frankfort, situated in a beautiful valley, surrounded by vine-clad hills. A fine street, the Königstrasse, runs from north to south through the town. In the principal square are the old Gothic church, containing many ancient sculptures and monuments of the princes of Würtemberg; the royal palace, a large building of free-stone, richly decorated; the old palace, now occupied by government officials, and Thorwaldsen's monument to Schiller. The other principal buildings are the Gothic hospital church, the ancient Gothic Stiftskirche, the Ständeshaus (where the states hold their sittings), the old townhall, royal library, museum, a fine art gallery, gymnasium, conservatory of music, and other educational institutions, and a very fine railway station. There are several parks and gardens, among them the public garden, and the gardens of the king's summer palace at Rosenstein, and the Wilhelmina palace. Manf. Woollen, silk, and leather goods, jewellery, musical and philosophical instruments, paper, and printing-type. The book-trade is extensive. Pop. 125,510.—The town was made the capital of Würtemberg in 1482, and was greatly improved about the middle of the 18th century.

STUYVESANT, PETRUS, stivé'-sant, the last Dutch governor of New York. He served in the West Indies, where he lost a leg, and in 1645 the Dutch West India Company appointed him director-general of New Netherlands (New York). He conciliated the savages who were hostile to the settlers, and opposed the incursions of Swedish settlers. In 1664, Charles II. of England having granted to his brother, the duke of York, the territory from the Connecticut to the shores of the Delaware, an English fleet appeared off New York and demanded the surrender of the city, and the municipality, much against the will of the director, decided to yield. Stuyvesant went to report to his superiors in Holland, but returned and passed the remainder of his life at his farm, or bouwerij (whence the name of the great street of New York, the Bowery), then outside the limits of the city. He figures conspicuously in Washington Irving's famous burlesque, "Knickerbocker's History of New York."

Born in Holland, 1602; died at New York, 1682.

STYRIA, stir'-i-a (Germ. STEIERMARK, sti'-er-mark), a province of the Austrian empire, situate between Austria proper and Illyria. The north-western part is known as Upper Styria and the south-eastern as Lower Styria. The surface is generally mountainous, except in the south-east, comprising mostly branches of the Noric Alps. The soil in the valleys is moderately fertile. Wheat, barley, oats, rye, and, in the warmer situations, maize and tobacco. Fruit, hemp, and flax are also raised. Much of the country, however, is devoted to pastoral purposes.

Rivers.—The Drave, Enns, Mur, Raab, and Save. There are many small lakes.

Minerals.—Lead, silver, gold, copper, iron, coal, zinc, marble, and building-stone. Salt is abundant, and cobalt and arsenic are also found.

Area.—8,671 square miles.

Pop.—1,213,597, about two-thirds being Germans.

Administrative Divisions and Chief Town.—There are three circles, Gratz, Marburg, and Bruck. The chief town is GRATZ (the capital).

SUABIA. (See GERMANY.)

SUCHET, LOUIS GABRIEL, soo'-shai, a French general and marshal of France. He distinguished himself at the siege of Toulon in 1793, and again in 1795, at Loano, Italy, where he captured three Austrian standards, and, under Massena, he was created a chef de brigade. Having exhibited great ability as a tactician while acting as chief of General Joubert's staff in Italy, he attracted the favourable notice of General Bonaparte, who promoted him to be Massena's second in command. He gave eminent proofs of his ability soon afterwards. After the battle of Marengo, at which he was present, he was intrusted with the government of Genoa. He next commanded the centre of the army of Italy. In 1805 he was placed in command of a division under Marshal Lannes, and it was to his skilful dispositions that the memorable victory at Austerlitz was due. His reputation was now so high, that Napoleon gave him the command of the fifth division of the Army of Spain, advanced him to the highest grade of the Legion of Honour, granted him a pension of 20,000 francs, and created him a count of the empire. His Spanish campaign forms the most brilliant era in his career. He was created a marshal of the empire in 1811, and duke of Albufera in 1812. In 1814 he gave his adhesion to the new order of things. While Louis XVIII. remained upon the throne, he held the command of the tenth corps; but, after the return of Napoleon from Elba, he again took service under his old chief. In 1819 he was reinstated in all his honours, civil and military. The remaining years of his life were spent in composing his memoirs, which were published in 1826. Suchet deservedly takes rank among the best of Napoleon's generals.

Born at Lyons, 1770; died at Marseilles, 1826.

SUCKLING, SIR JOHN, suk'-ling, an English poet. He was educated at Cambridge, and inherited a large fortune from his father, who was comptroller of the royal household. He went abroad, and made a campaign under Gustavus Adolphus. On his return to England, he became famous at court for his ready, sparkling wit. He raised a troop of horse for the king's service; but his men behaved so ill in the engagement with the Scotch, in 1639, on the English borders, as to bring upon him much ridicule. He was then a member of the Long Parliament, but, having joined in a plot to rescue Strafford from the Tower, he was compelled to fly to France. His works consist of poems and letters, "An Account of Religion by Reason," and four plays. Several of his songs are very fine.

Born at Whitton, Middlesex, 1609; died in France, about 1642.

SUCRE. (See CHUQUISACA.)

SUDBURY, sud'-ber-re, a market-town and borough of Suffolk, on the left bank of the Stour, 17 miles W. of Ipswich. A suburb, Ballingdon, on the Essex side of the river, connected by a bridge, is included in the borough. There are two ancient churches. Manf. Silk, velvet, crape, and bunting. There is a considerable trade in coal and agricultural produce. Pop. 6,580.—A station on the Great Eastern railway.

SUE, MARIA JOSEPH EUGÈNE, soo, a French romancist, who was educated for the profession of medicine, and was attached, as a surgeon, to the army sent to Spain under the duke of Angoulême. In 1825 he entered the navy in the same capacity, and was present at the battle of Navarino. At the death of his father, who had been one of the household physicians to Napoleon I., he inherited an estate of £1,600 per annum; whereupon he quitted his profession, and soon afterwards turned his attention to literature. He became a popular writer in a very few years; but when he put forth his "Mysteries of Paris" and "Wandering Jew," he rose to an almost unexampled height of success. He produced other works of fiction. In 1850 he was elected member of the Constituent Assembly, but took no part in politics. The coup d'état banished him from France, and he went to Annecy.

Born at Paris, 1804; died 1857.

SUECA, soo-ai'-ka, a town of Spain, province of Valencia, on the left bank of the Jucar, near its mouth in the Mediterranean Sea. Pop. 13,386.

SUETONIUS, CAIUS TRANQUILLUS, swe-to'-ni-us, a Roman historian, who was the intimate friend of Pliny the younger, by whose means he was made tribune. Suetonius was afterwards secretary to the emperor Adrian. Of his works, his "Lives of the First Twelve Emperors," two treatises concerning illustrious grammarians and rhetoricians, and several lives of poets, have been preserved.

Lived in the 1st and 2nd centuries.

SUEUR, LE. (See LESUEUR.)

SUEZ, soo'-ez, a city of Egypt, on the borders of Arabia, at the head of the Red Sea, 76 miles E. of Cairo. The old town is walled on the three landward sides, but open to the sea. There are quays and docks about two miles south of the town, with which they are connected by railway. The Peninsular and Oriental steamship company, and other companies, have large storehouses. At the south terminus of the Suez Canal the town has, within the last few years, risen into great importance. Pop. 10,913. There is railway communication with Cairo.

SUEZ, GULF OF, the north-western arm of the Red Sea, between Egypt and the Sinaitic peninsula, about 180 miles long, with an average breadth of 20 miles. It was known to the ancient geographers as the Heroöpolite Gulf.

SUEZ, ISTHMUS OF, separating the Red and Mediterranean Seas, and connecting Asia and Africa. The distance between the most northerly part of the Gulf of Suez and the Gulf of Pelusium in the Mediterranean, is 72 miles. It is generally a sandy desert, with a general elevation of about 7 feet above the adjoining seas, and with some depressions, lakes, and salt marshes. The Suez Canal, which traverses the isthmus, was opened in November, 1869, and now forms the great maritime highway between Europe and the East.

SUFFOLK, suf'-fok, a maritime county of England, bounded on the north by the county of Norfolk, west by Cambridge, south by Essex, and east by the German Ocean. It is generally undulating, without any considerable eminences, and some marshy parts, and the coast line, about 50 miles, is low and marshy. The soil is generally rich. The raising of crops is the principal object of the Suffolk husbandry, although the management of the dairy is also much attended to, as well as the rearing of sheep. The Suffolk cows have long been celebrated for their abundance of milk; and the county is no less noted for its breed of horses and hogs. Poultry is kept in abundance, especially turkeys. Large numbers of pigeons are reared in the open field; and there are many rabbit-warrens.

Rivers.—The Stour divides the county from Essex, the Little Ouse and Waveney from Norfolk, and the Great Ouse and one of its branches from Cambridgeshire. The Orwell and Lark are other rivers, and there are several small lakes.

Area.—1,481 square miles.

Pop.—356,870.

Parliamentary Representation and Chief Towns.—The two divisions of the county return 4 members, 2 are returned for Ipswich, and 2 for Bury St. Edmunds. The chief towns are IPSWICH and BURY ST. EDMUNDS (both county towns), ALDBOROUGH, EYE, OXFORD, and SUDBURY.

SUFFOLK, a county of Massachusetts, United States. Area, 44 square miles. Pop. 389,927. The capital is Boston.

SUFFOLK, a county of New York, United States, comprising the eastern part of Long Island. Area, 1,200 square miles. Pop. 53,888. The capital is Riverhead.

SUFFOLK, WILLIAM POLE, Earl, and afterwards Marquis of, an English general, and grandson of Michael de Pole, first earl of Suffolk. He served under Henry V. in the wars with France, distinguished himself at Rouen in 1419, and was, in 1429, nominated by the duke of Bedford, commander-in-chief of the troops before Orleans, but was forced to raise the siege by Joan of Arc. After enjoying great favour, he was charged with treason and beheaded.

Died 1451.

SUFFOLK, CHARLES BRANDON, duke of, was the friend of Henry VIII. from the youth of the latter. He fought at Flodden, when Lord Lisle was created duke of Suffolk, in 1513. Charged to conduct to England, Mary, sister of the English king, and widow of Louis XII. of France, he gained her affections and married her in 1515.

Died 1545.

SUGDEN. (See ST. LEONARD'S.)

SUHL, sool, a town of Prussia, province of Saxony, 32 miles S.W. of Erfurt, on the Lauter. Manf. Firearms and fustian. Pop. 9,000.

SUHM, PETER FRIDERIK, soom, a Danish historian, member of an old noble family. He graduated at Copenhagen University, and then studied history and philology in Norway. He wrote numerous works on the early mythical and political history of Denmark, and bequeathed a valuable library of 100,000 volumes to the royal library of Copenhagen.

Born at Copenhagen, 1728; died 1798.

SUJUK-KALE, soo'-jook-ka'-le, is a Russian port on the coast of the Black Sea, 18 miles from Anapa. It was formerly an important Russian post, taken by the Russians in 1791.

SULIMAN MOUNTAINS, soo-li-man'. (See AFGHANISTAN.)

SULINA, soo-lé-na, one of the mouths of the Danube. (See DANUBE.)

SULLA. (See SYLLA.)

SULLIVAN, sul'-li-van, the name of 6 counties of the United States:—

INDIANA.—Area, 430 square miles. Pop. 20,336. The capital is Sullivan.

MISSOURI.—Area, 648 square miles. Pop. 16,569. The capital is Milan.

NEW HAMPSHIRE.—Area, 820 square miles. Pop. 18,500. The capital is Newport.

NEW YORK.—Area, 880 square miles. Pop. 32,000.

PENNSYLVANIA.—Area, 450 square miles. Pop. 6,200. The capital is Laporte.

TENNESSEE.—Area, 300 square miles. Pop. 18,321. The capital is Blountsville.

SULLY, MAXIMILIEN DE BÉTHUNE, sool'-le, Duke of, and Baron de Rosny, French statesman, a Protestant, who, at an early age, became the companion of Henry of Navarre, afterwards Henry IV., of France, whom he accompanied to Paris, where he fortunately escaped death during the massacre of St. Bartholomew, by the assistance of the principal of the College of Burgundy, who concealed him for three days. He subsequently escaped with Henry of Navarre from Paris; and in the civil war which broke out, he held a command under Henry and the Prince de Condé. He displayed great valour on many occasions, particularly at the siege of Marmande, and the battles of Coutras, Arques, and Ivry. After the accession of Henry to the French throne, Sully was appointed minister of finance; in which capacity he displayed the most brilliant ability. He was sent on a secret mission to Elizabeth of England, obtained the highest offices in the state, and, upon the accession of James I., was sent to England as the ambassador of France. After the murder of the king, Sully, from the strictness of his principles, became obnoxious to Marie de' Medici, and retired from court. In 1634 Cardinal Richelieu made him marshal of France. He left Memoirs written by himself.

Born at Rosny, 1560; died at Villebon, 1641.

SULLY, sul'-le, a new county of Dakota Territory, United States. Area, 1,300 square miles. Pop. 296, SULMONA, sool-mo'-na, a town of Italy, province of Aquila, 24 miles S.W. of Chieti. It is fortified, has a splendid cathedral, 15 other churches, monasteries and nunneries, and a beautiful town-hall. Manf. Paper, shell-work, and confectionery. Pop. 3,886.

SULU ISLANDS. (See SOOLOO.)

SUMAROKOF, ALEXANDER PETROVITCH, soo-ma'-ro-kof, a Russian dramatic author, educated at St. Petersburg, and placed by the empress Elizabeth in the school of cadets. In 1756 he founded the first national theatre of St. Petersburg, and his tragedies being performed with applause before the empress, animated him to proceed in the dramatic career, which he did with great success, and was appointed to the rank of brigadier, and director of the theatre. He also received a pension, and was nominated councillor of state. He wrote several poems, satires, and some historical works.

Born at Moscow, 1718; died there, 1777.

SUMATRA, soo-ma'-tra, a large island of the Indian Archipelago, lying S.W. of the Malay peninsula, immediately under the equator. The length is about 1,500 miles, and the greatest breadth 250. The coast, about 2,500 miles in circuit, is low on the north-eastern side, and bordered by dangerous banks of sand and mud. The west coast has several excellent harbours, especially that of Tapanuli. The north coast is high and bold. A large volcanic range traverses the island from north-west to south-east, generally parallel to the west coast at a distance of from 20 to 30 miles, and forming four ridges with elevated plateaux between them. Mounts Berapi (an active volcano), Opher (or Passaman), and Indrupura, are 12,000 feet high; Abong-Acheen is 11,000; and there are six peaks over 5,000 feet in elevation. To the eastward of this range is a vast alluvial plain, with extensive forests. The climate is warm and moist, and the soil remarkable for fertility, yielding large crops of rice, coffee, pepper, tobacco, and cotton. The tropical vegetation is abundant. Tigers, elephants, rhinoceroses, the orang-outang, and other apes are numerous, and crocodiles and pythons are among the dangerous reptiles.

Rivers.—The largest rivers flow towards the eastern coast; those on the other side of the island are short and rapid. The most important are the Rakan, Siak, Kamper, Tambi, and the Musi, or Palembang.

Minerals.—Gold, iron, copper, tin, sulphur, coal, petroleum, limestone, marble, and granite.

Area.—160,000 square miles.

Pop.—1,277,837, of the Malay race, and generally professing Mahometanism.

Divisions.—There are four Dutch colonial establishments, occupying about three-fourths of the island—WEST COAST, BENCOOLEN, LAMPONG, and PALEMBANG. The chief native states are ACHEEN, Siak, and Tambi. A cannibal tribe, the Bataks, with lighter complexions and stunted bodies, occupy a portion of the interior.

Chief Towns.—ACHEEN, BENCOOLEN, PADANG, and PALEMBANG.

Lat. 5° 40′ N.—5° 55′ S. Lon. 95° 20′—106° 5′ E.

History.—Sumatra is mentioned by Arabian writers of the 9th century. Between 1509 and 1641 the Portuguese vainly endeavoured to gain a footing; but in 1649 the Dutch formed a settlement at Padang. In 1795 the British obtained possession and held it until 1815, when the settlements (with the exception of Bencoolen, which was retained until 1824) were restored to the Dutch.

SUMBAWA, soom-baw'-wa, a large island in the Indian Archipelago, separated from the island of Lombok by the Strait of Allas. It is 170 miles long, with a breadth varying from 20 to 50. Nearly divided into two portions by a bay, the soil is very fertile. On its E. side is the volcano of Tomboro, 8,940 feet high. It is divided into six native states, each governed by a rajah, who acknowledges the supremacy of the Dutch. Sumbawa, Tomboro, Bima, Dompo, Sangar, and Papakat. The chief town is BIMA. Area, 6,000 square miles. Pop. 30,000. Lat. between 8° and 9° S. Lon. between 116° 50′ and 119° 10′ E.—The island has been in possession of the Dutch since 1676.

SUMBHULPORE, soom'-bool-por, a town of British India, on the left bank of the Mahanuddy river, 167 miles N.W. of Cuttack. There are a large fort and many temples. Pop. 30,000.

SUMMERS, sum'-mers, a new county of West Virginia. Area and Pop. 9,033.

SUMMIT, sum'-mit, the name of three counties of the United States:—

COLORADO.—Area, 8,500 square miles. Pop. 5,459.
OHIO.—Area, 400 square miles. Pop. 43,788. The capital is Akron.
UTAH.—Area, 1,250 square miles. Pop. 4,921. The capital is Coalville.

SUMNER, CHARLES, sum'-ner, American statesman, educated at Harvard College, practised at the bar with great reputation, and became lecturer to the law students. In 1837 he travelled in Europe, and resided for about a year in England, where he was introduced to the best literary and professional society, and was warmly received by the most eminent persons of the day. On his return to America he distinguished himself by his opposition to warlike measures, especially in an oration, "The True Grandeur of Nations," delivered at Boston in 1845. In 1851 he was elected to the senate, and his first important speech was against the Fugitive Slave Law. A vigorous speech against slavery irritated the members of Congress for South Carolina, of whom Mr. P. S. Brooks assaulted Mr. Sumner in the senate-house, inflicting serious injuries, from which he did not entirely recover for nearly four years; and until after another trip to Europe for the benefit of medical treatment. He afterwards delivered a great speech, "The Barbarism of Slavery," and supported Lincoln in the presidential contest, and in March, 1861, was appointed chairman of the committee of the senate on foreign relations, an office he retained until 1870, when he was brought into collision with the administration of President Grant. He again visited Europe for the benefit of his health, and after his return was censured by the legislature of Massachusetts, for introducing a resolution to the effect that the names of battles won over fellow-citizens in the civil war should be removed from the regimental colours of the army and from the army list. The censure was rescinded a short time before the death of Mr. Sumner, which took place suddenly from angina pectoris.
Born at Boston, 1811; died at Washington, 1874.

SUMNER, the name of three counties of the United States:—

KANSAS.—Area, 1,152 square miles. Pop. 20,812. The capital is Sumner.
MISSISSIPPI.—Area, 408 square miles. Pop. 9,534. The capital is Mount Tabor.
TENNESSEE.—Area, 500 square miles. Pop. 23,625, about 8,000 being coloured. The capital is Gallatin.

SUMTER, sum'-ter, the name of four counties of the United States:—

ALABAMA.—Area, 800 square miles. Pop. 28,728, about three-fourths being coloured. The capital is Livingston.
FLORIDA.—Area, 1,370 square miles. Pop. 4,686, nearly one-third being coloured. The capital is Leesburg.
GEORGIA.—Area, 600 square miles. Pop. 18,239, about two-thirds being coloured. The capital is Americus.
SOUTH CAROLINA.—Area, 900 square miles. Pop. 37,937, about two-thirds being coloured. The capital is Sumter Court House.

SUMY, soo'-me, a town of Russia, government of Kharkov, on the Psiol, 80 miles from Kharkov. It contains several charitable institutions, and public depôts and warehouses. Pop. 13,000.

SUNBURY, sun'-bee-re, a county of New Brunswick, Dominion of Canada. Area, 1,200 square miles. Pop. 7,000. The capital is Oromocto.

SUNDA, STRAITS OF, sun'-da, the arm of the sea which separates the large islands of Sumatra and Java leading to the Indian Ocean. Its breadth varies from 20 to 70 miles.

SUNDA ISLES, in the Asiatic Archipelago, comprise Sumatra, Java, Lombok, Bali, Flores, Rottee or Rotti, and several others.

SUNDERBUNDS, soon'-der-boonds, an extensive marshy district of Bengal, British India, situate in the delta of the Ganges, and intersected by innumerable rivers or creeks, all of which are salt, and through the whole tract nothing but brackish water is to be found. The district (which is nearly uninhabited) has been formed by the depositions of the earth washed down by the Ganges during its periodical inundations, and are very unhealthy. It abounds with wild beasts, and is surrounded by alligators in the various channels of the Ganges. Area, 7,000 square miles.

SUNDERLAND, sun'-der-land, a seaport, municipal, and parliamentary borough of Durham, near the mouth of the Wear, in the North Sea, 12 miles N.E. of Durham. It is joined to the town of Monkwearmouth, on the opposite side, by an iron bridge of one arch, 236 feet in span, and 100 feet above the Wear at low water. This bridge was greatly improved at a large cost in 1859. The public park was enlarged in 1866, and contains a statue of Sir Henry Havelock, a native of the town. There are a large workmen's hall, an infirmary, and a sailors' home. The harbour is formed by two piers, is defended by batteries, and has a light-house on the north pier. A new deep water channel, 480 feet long and 95 feet wide, was opened in October, 1880. The docks are on the south side of the river. There are the South Docks (including three deep-water docks, and tidal and half-tidal basins), and Monkwearmouth Dock, the property of the North-Eastern railway company. Coal is the staple article of export. Manf. Glass, earthenware, copperas, coal, tar, patent ropes, and chemicals. Shipbuilding is carried on to a great extent. Pop. 116,262.—A station on the North-eastern railway.

SUNDERLAND, HENRY SPENCER, first earl of. Before he had attained his majority, he married the beautiful Dorothy Sidney, sister of Algernon Sidney, and the Saccharissa of the poet Waller. At the outburst of the civil war he joined the king's standard. He, however, had no real sympathy with the royal cause, and he declared, in a letter to his wife, "If there could be an expedient found to salve the punctilio of honour, I would not remain here an hour." In 1643 he was created earl of Sunderland by Charles I., in reward, it is asserted, of having helped that monarch with a loan of £15,000. He fell in the first battle of Newbury.
Born 1620; killed 1643.

SUNDERLAND, ROBERT SPENCER, second earl of, an English statesman, who was the son of the preceding. He commenced his public career in 1671, on being appointed ambassador to Spain. He subsequently fulfilled the same functions at the court of France, and afterwards became secretary of state for foreign affairs. Under the reign of James II. he rose to the height of power as president of the council and premier minister, and, in order to retain the king's favour, became a Roman Catholic, or, at least, put on the semblance of it. Accordingly, he became so unpopular with the nation, that James was compelled to dismiss him. On the accession of William III., Sunderland retired to Holland, where he remained during two years; but, to the general surprise, he was recalled at the end of that period, and taken into favour by the new monarch. He was not intrusted with office for several years; but it was well known that he acted as chief adviser to William. In 1697 he was appointed lord chamberlain, and one of the lords justices, and remained at the head of the government during two years; after which he retired into private life. The secret of this statesman's success —of his being employed by James II. and his supplanter William III. was, undoubtedly, his great talents for the conduct of public affairs.

Born 1642; died at Althorpe, 1702.

SUNFLOWER, a county of Mississippi, United States. Area and Pop. 4,661.

SUPERIOR, LAKE, su-peer'-i-or, a lake of North America, and the largest body of fresh water which has yet been discovered. (See AMERICA, NORTH.)

SURA, soo'-ra, a river of Russia, principally in the governments of Simbirsk, Kasan, and Nijni-Novgorod. After a course of 400 miles, it joins the Volga at Vasil.

SURABAYA, soo-ra-bay'-a, a seaport of Java, on one of the mouths of the Kedirie, near the strait of Madura. On the opposite bank of the river is the European town, connected by five bridges. Pop. 89,000. Lat. 7° 4' S. Lon. 112° 40' E.

SURA KARTA, soo'-ra kar'-ta, capital of a native state of Java, on the left bank of the Solo. There are several fine palaces, especially that of the emperor, really a town in itself, 10,000 people being within the walls. The European town, the seat of a British residency, is to the north-east. The town is connected by railway with Samarang. Pop. 100,000.

SURAT, soo'-rat, a city of British India, in the Bombay presidency, on the left bank of the Taptee, about 20 miles from its mouth, and 150 miles N. of Bombay. It is fortified, and contains several fine mosques and temples, an English church, and the Banian hospital for sick animals. It is a great cotton mart. Pop. 109,844; of the district, 614,198. Hindoos greatly predominate.

SURIGAO, soo-ri-ga'-o, a seaport at the northern extremity of Mindanao, one of the Philippine Islands. There are a harbour and shipbuilding yards. Considerable trade is carried on. Pop. 7,100.

SURINAM, su-ri-nam'. (See GUIANA, DUTCH.)

SURREY, county of England, bounded S. by Sussex, E. by Kent, W. by Berkshire and Hampshire, and separated on the N. from Middlesex and a small part of Buckinghamshire by the river Thames. It is diversified with hill and dale; the hills in some parts rising to a considerable height, and presenting very bold and commanding views. The scenery generally is very beautiful, and the soil extremely fertile. It is traversed by a range of chalk hills from east to west.

Rivers.—The principal are the Wey, the Mole, and the Wandle. The Thames washes its northern border. The river Loddon skirts Surrey on its west side.

Minerals.—Iron ore, fullers' earth; also extensive quarries of stone. There are large quarries of excellent limestone near Dorking; and chalk is abundant.

Area.—748 square miles.

Pop.—1,435,850.

Parliamentary Representation and Chief Towns.—The Metropolitan boroughs of Southwark and Lambeth are within the limits of the county. (See LONDON.) Excluding them, 6 members are returned for the three divisions of the county, and 1 for Guildford. The principal towns are GUILDFORD (the capital), CROYDON, DORKING, EPSOM, FARNHAM, KINGSTON, and REIGATE.

SURREY, THOMAS HOWARD, earl of, was made high-admiral of England, and effectually cleared the Channel of the French cruisers. The victory of Flodden-field, in which the king of Scotland was slain, was chiefly owing to his bravery. For these services his father was restored to the title of duke of Norfolk, and himself created earl of Surrey. On the breaking out of the disturbances in Ireland, he was appointed lieutenant of that kingdom, where he suppressed the rebellion. After serving there two years, he returned, and had the command of the fleet against France. Notwithstanding his great services, Henry, at the close of life, caused the duke to be sent to the Tower on a charge of treason, and his son to be beheaded in his presence. The death of the king only saved the duke's life.

Died 1554.

SURREY, HENRY HOWARD, Earl of, an accomplished English nobleman and poet, was the eldest son of Thomas, duke of Norfolk. He was at first, while his friend the duke of Richmond, natural son of Henry VIII., was alive, a favourite at court; but after serving his country with great valour in France, he fell a victim to the jealousy of Henry VIII., who pretended to suspect him of treasonable designs against himself on the ground that he quartered the royal arms with his own, which Surrey proved he had a right to do. He and his father were sent to the Tower, and the son beheaded on Tower-hill. He wrote some excellent poems, and made a beautiful translation of a portion of the "Æneid." He was the first English writer of blank verse and sonnets.

Born 1516; died 1547.

SURRY, a county of North Carolina, United States. Area, 500 square miles. Pop. 15,302. nearly 2,000 being coloured. The capital is Dobson.

SURRY, a county of Virginia, United States. Area, 340 square miles. Pop. 7,391. more than half being coloured. The capital is Surry Court House.

SUS, sooss, a province of Morocco, comprising a portion of the Atlantic coast of that country. It is the most fertile part of the empire, and is traversed by the river Messa, which falls into the Atlantic. The chief city is Tarudant. Area, 11,500 square miles. Pop. 750,000. Lat. between 28° 30' and 30° 30' N. Lon. between 10° and 14° W.

SUSARION, su-sair'-i-on, the most ancient of the Greek tragic poets. He took his subjects from history, and flourished about 589 B.C.

SUSQUEHANNA, sus-que-han'-na, a county of Pennsylvania, United States. Area, 800 square miles. Pop. 40,354. The capital is Montrose.

SUSQUEHANNA, a river of the United States, rising in Otsego lake, New York, traversing Pennsylvania, and, after a course of 400 miles, entering Chesapeake Bay, near the N.E. corner of Maryland. The principal affluents are the West branch (more than 200 miles long), the Tioga and Juanita.

SUSSEX, sus'-sex, one of the southern counties of England, bounded W. by Hampshire, N. by Surrey, E. and N.E. by Kent, and S. by the British Channel. It is diversified with downs and intervening valleys, through which many little streams pursue their respective courses to the sea. The wooded scenery and the pasture-land give to the county in general a rural and a rich diversity of appearance. The wastes are very considerable, and chiefly occupy the northern side of the county. The coast line is not much broken, the principal headland being Beachy Head, 564 feet high. A range of chalk hills, the North Downs, crosses the north-eastern part of the county; and the South Downs, from 4 to 6 miles in breadth, and 500 feet in average height, run through the entire length, nearly parallel to the coast, the highest point being Ditchelling Beacon, 858 feet. From the remotest antiquity, Sussex has been celebrated for its timber, principally oak, which is the reigning feature of the Weald. The county is distinguished for its breed of cattle and sheep, the black-faced Southdown being in high repute.

Rivers.—The Arun, Rother, Ouse, and Adur, all small streams falling into the English Channel.

Minerals.—In the easternmost parts of the Weald is found every sort of limestone. The Sussex marble is cut into slabs for ornamental chimney-pieces, and is highly esteemed. Ironstone abounds, and chalk is plentiful. Fullers' earth and red ochre are also found.

Area.—1,464 square miles.

Pop.—490,320.

Parliamentary Representation and Chief Towns.—The two divisions of the county return each 2 members; Brighton returns 2; Hastings, 2; New Shoreham, 2; Chichester, 1; Medhurst, 1; Rye, 1; and Lewes, 1. The chief towns are CHICHESTER (the capital), BRIGHTON, HASTINGS, LEWES, WORTHING, ARUNDEL, NEW SHOREHAM, NEWHAVEN, RYE, EASTBOURNE, and BOGNOR.

SUSSEX, the name of three counties of the United States:—

DELAWARE.—Area, 1,000 square miles. Pop. 36,000, nearly one-sixth being coloured. The capital is Georgetown.

NEW JERSEY.—Area, 600 square miles. Pop. 23,500. The capital is Newton.

VIRGINIA.—Area, 400 square miles. Pop. 8,000, about 5,000 being coloured. The capital is Sussex Court House.

SUTHERLANDSHIRE, suth'-er-land-sheer, one of the most northerly counties of Scotland, extending the whole breadth of the island, from the German to the Atlantic oceans, and including many small islands, chiefly on the northern and western sides, where the coast is lofty and precipitous, and indented by numerous lochs. The east coast is generally flat and sandy. It is very mountainous in the interior, rising to 3,230 feet, with moorland plateaux and beautiful valleys, in some of which are lakes. There are extensive deer forests, and game is abundant. Owing to the vicinity of the Atlantic Ocean, from which the west wind brings heavy clouds, there is no part of Scotland more subject to rain than the western district. On the coasts of the numerous bays there are many rugged and partially arable fields; but the climate, from the constant rains and mists, does not second the favourable properties of the soil. The chief town is Dornoch.

Rivers and Lakes.—The principal rivers are the Oickel, or Firth of Dornoch; the water of Fleet, or Strathfleet; the water of Brora, and the water of Helmsdale. On the northern and western coasts are the water of Halladale, the water of Strathie, the river Naver, the waters of Dionard, Hope, and Eribol. The chief lake is Loch Shin, which stretches 18 miles from north west to south-east, and is about 1 mile broad, and abounds with salmon and trout.

Minerals.—Rock crystals and pebbles are found in many parts; also beautiful garnets and specimens of native gold.

Area.—1,754 square miles.

Pop.—23,366.

Parliamentary Representation.—One member is returned for the county.

SUTLEJ, soot'-lej, the most easterly of the five rivers of the Punjab, British India. It rises in Tibet, north of the Himalayas, and, after a course of 800 miles, joins the Indus. In the upper part of its course it is an impetuous torrent.

SUTTER, a county of California, United States. Area, 576 square miles. Pop. 5,500. The capital is Yuba city.

SUTTON, THOMAS, the founder of the Charter-house. He was educated at Eton College, and studied the law in Lincoln's Inn, but never followed that profession. Having purchased some estates in the county of Durham, he discovered coal-mines there, which produced him immense property. He also gained a large fortune by commerce and marriage. On the death of his wife, in 1602, he led a retired life; and, having no issue, he purchased the Charter-house, which he erected into an hospital and seminary of learning.

Born in Lincolnshire, 1532; died in London, 1611.

SUVA, the official capital and most flourishing place of the Fiji Islands, is on the south coast of the island of Viti Levu. The harbour is remarkably land-locked and excellent. Victoria Parade, the principal thoroughfare, is wide and about a mile long. There are hotels, stores and warehouses; regularly constituted post-offices, government and judicial buildings, amongst which is the governor's residence; institute, library, public school and churches of the various denominations.

SUVAROFF, SUVOROF, or SUWARROW, ALEXANDER VASILIEVITCH, su-va'-ro, a Russian general. He entered the army at the age of 13, and after passing through the subordinate grades, became a colonel in 1762. He displayed the greatest bravery and also great severity when serving under Romanzoff against the Turks. In 1787 he defeated the Turks at Ocsakow, which place was taken by storm. In 1789 he defeated the Mussulmans with a very inferior force, and so saved the prince of Saxe-Coburg and the imperial army. In the following year he stormed Ismail, 30,000 Turks being either killed or wounded, and 10,000 taken prisoners. In 1794 he took Praga, where 30,000 Poles fell. This was followed by the fall of Warsaw and the partition of Poland. He was made field-marshal, and obtained a large estate. In 1799 Suwarrow had the command of the army, with which he marched into Italy, and for his services in this campaign he was created a prince by the title of Italisky. He was, however, treated by Paul with great ingratitude.

Born 1730; died 1800.

SUWALKI, soo-val'-ke, a government of European Russia, kingdom of Poland, bordering on Prussia, and west and south of the Niemen. It is level and well wooded. The chief towns are SUWALKI, Augustowa, and Kalvarya. Area, 4,846 square miles. Pop. 603,174.

SUWALKI, capital of the above government, 150 miles N.E. of Warsaw. There are periodical horse and cattle fairs, and a considerable trade is carried on, especially in brandy. Pop. 17,000, including about 6,000 Jews.

SUWANNEE, a county of Florida, United States. Area, 790 square miles. Pop. 7,161, nearly half being coloured. The capital is Houston.

SVEABORG, sve'-borg, a seaport and fortress of Russia, on the Gulf of Finland, 3 miles S.E. of Helsingfors. The harbour is capable of containing seventy men of war, and is defended by batteries which sweep the channel forming the only entrance for large ships. It is formed by seven small islands, of which the principal, called Vargö, contains the arsenal, docks, basins, and magazines, for fitting out or repairing men of war. Pop. 4,000.

In 1809 it was ceded by Sweden to Russia; and in 1855 it was unsuccessfully bombarded by the allied British and French fleets.

SVENDBORG, svend'-borg, a town and seaport of Denmark, on the island of Funen. It has shipbuilding docks, a harbour, and an export trade. Pop. 6,000.

SWABIA, or SUABIA. (See GERMANY.)

SWAIN, swane, a new county of North Carolina, United States. Area, 500 square miles. Pop. 3,784. The capital is Charlestown.

SWAN RIVER. (See WEST AUSTRALIA.)

SWANSEA, swan-se, a market-town, seaport, and parliamentary borough of South Wales, in Glamorganshire, on the west bank of the Tawy, where it falls into the Bristol Channel, in the midst of a district abounding in anthracitic coal and iron, 28 miles from Merthyr-Tydfil. By means of its harbour, and of the Tawe, it commands a ready outlet for these productions of the interior. It is much resorted to during the summer for sea-bathing; and, to accommodate strangers, numerous elegant lodging-houses have been erected. Of the public buildings, there are the parish church, a handsome modern edifice, with a large square tower at one end, five other churches, various chapels, a synagogue, a town-hall, guildhall, assembly-rooms, and Royal Institution of South Wales. A public park, 45 acres in extent, was opened in 1878. A market-place was opened in 1830, and a fish-market in 1847. There are extensive docks. Manf. There are immense establishments for working in iron, brass, spelter, and tin, and the most important copper-smelting works in the kingdom; shipbuilding is carried on, and there are very large exports of coal. Pop. 63,740.—A station on the Great Western, Midland, and London and North-Western railways.

SWATOW, swat'-to, a port of China, province of Kwang-tun, at the mouth of the Han river. A very large foreign trade is carried on; the exports, chiefly of sugar, porcelain, indigo, paper, grass-cloth, and tobacco, are of the value of about £1,250,000 annually. Pop. 30,000.

SWEABORG. (See SVEABORG.)

SWEDEN, swe'-den, the most northern country of Europe, forming the E. and larger portion of the Scandinavian peninsula, and one of the kingdoms composing the monarchy of Sweden and Norway. It is bounded N. and W. by Norway; S.W. by the Skager-rack, Cattegat, and the Sound; S. and E. by the Baltic and the Gulf of Bothnia, and N.E. by Finland. The coast line is about 1,400 miles in extent, deeply indented with bays or fiords, and studded with numerous low sandy islets. The western shore, along the Skager-rack and Cattegat is rocky, but only of moderate elevation; farther south it is low and sandy, but rising into cliffs and bold headlands, on the Baltic shore, as far as the mouth of the Dal. In the upper part of the Gulf of Bothnia are low sandy beaches. The elevated parts of the country belong to the mountain system of Norway (see NORWAY). The southern part of Sweden is level, the great plain of Scania, occupying the greater portion of the southern extremity of the Scandinavian peninsula, is extremely fertile. The great forest region lies near the centre, and farther north there are bleak hills, swamps, and lakes, with a stunted vegetation. The forests afford abundance of pine, fir, ash, linden, willow, maple, and birch, and on the south the oak attains great size and beauty, and the beech and elm are common. The climate is generally milder than that of other countries in the same latitudes.

Rivers and Lakes.—With the exception of the Klav and a few smaller streams on the west coast and the coast of the Baltic, nearly all the rivers have their sources in the main mountain range, and flow in a south-easterly direction into the Gulf of Bothnia. The largest is the Dal, which enters the gulf near Gefle, and near its mouth forms a beautiful cascade. Farther north are the Ljusne, Indals, Angerman, Umea, Skellefiea, Pitea, Lulea, Ranea, Kalex, and Tornea, the last, with its branch the Muonio, forming the boundary between Sweden and Russia. Nearly all these rivers have cataracts and rapids, and are unnavigable. The lakes are numerous, occupying more than one-eighth of the entire surface. The largest are WENNER, WETTER, and Mælar. Other lakes, mostly in the north, are Hjelmar, Siljan, Stor, Stor Uman, Horn Afran, Stora Lulea, and Tornea.

Minerals.—Iron (in large quantities and of the finest quality), copper, lead, zinc, nickel, cobalt, manganese, some silver and gold, coal, and sulphur.

Area.—171,750 square miles.

Pop.—4,643,128.

Administrative Divisions.—The three great divisions of Sweden are Gottland (in the south), Svealand, and Norrland (north-land), subdivided into 24 läns, or governments:—

GOTTLAND — Ostergötland, Jönköping, Kronoberg, Kalmar, Gottland, Blekinge, Christianstad, Malmöhus, Halland, Götteborg and Bohus, Elfsborg, Skaraborg.

SVEALAND—Stockholm, Upsala, Södermanland, Vermland, Örebro, Vestmanland, Kopparberg.

NORRLAND — Gefleborg, Vesternorrland, Jemtland, Vasterbotten, Norrbotten.

Chief Towns.—STOCKHOLM, the capital; GOTHENBURG, NORRKÖPING, MALMÖ, CARLS KRONA, GEFLE, UPSALA, LUND, JONKÖPING, CALMAR, ORERRO.

Constitution and Government.—Sweden and Norway are united in one constitutional monarchy, hereditary in the male line, but with separate governments, constitutions, and laws. (See NORWAY.) The Swedish diet, or parliament, consists of two chambers, both elected by the people. The first chamber consists at present of 129 members, or one deputy for every 30,000 of the population. The election of the members takes place by the "landstings," or provincial representations, 25 in number, and the municipal corporations of the towns, not already represented in the "landstings," Stockholm, Göteborg, Norrköping, and Malmö. Members are elected for the term of nine years, and obtain no payment for their services. The second chamber consists at present of 196 members, of whom 58 are elected by the towns and 138 by the rural districts, one representative being returned for every 10,000 of the population of towns, one for every "domsaga," or rural district, of under 40,000 inhabitants, and two for rural districts of over 40,000 inhabitants. The election is for the term of three years, and the members obtain salaries for their services. The executive is in the hands of the king, who acts under the advice of a council of state of 10 members, 7 of whom are ministerial heads of departments.

Religion and Education.—The Lutheran is the established church, but all sects are tolerated. The head of the church is the archbishop of Upsal, and there are 11 other bishops. The vast majority of the population belong to the established church, the enumeration of 1872 showing but 2,409 dissenters, including 573 Roman Catholics, and 1,836 Jews. Public instruction is gratuitous and compulsory, and children not attending schools under the supervision of the government must furnish proofs of having been privately educated.

Railways and Telegraphs.—About 3,000 miles of railway are open for traffic, of which 1,000 belong to the state. There are nearly 5,300 miles of telegraph lines.

Commerce.—The annual value of exports is about £13,000,000; of imports, £18,000,000. The chief articles of export are timber, bar and pig iron, and oats. About 2,000 vessels are engaged in the foreign trade.

History.—The two kingdoms, Gothland and Svealand, of which Sweden once consisted, were united in the 13th century by the failure of the royal line in the former. In 1397, by the treaty of Calmar, Sweden became subject to Margaret of Denmark, who has been styled the Semiramis of the North, and who joined the three kingdoms in one. Gustavus Vasa asserted the independence of Sweden, and ascended the throne in 1521. He bequeathed the crown to his posterity, who continued to reign, and in general with distinction; but most of them, in particular Gustavus Adolphus, his daughter Christina, Charles XII., and Gustavus III., discovered a romantic spirit, approaching, in the case of Charles XII., to a degree of infatuation. This dynasty ended in a prince (Gustavus IV.) who was deposed in 1809; and next year marshal Bernadotte of France was elected crown prince, and, in 1818, as Charles-John XIV., ascended the throne. In 1814 Norway was annexed to Sweden by the treaty of Kiel. (See NORWAY).

SWEDENBORG, EMANUEL, swé'-den-borg, a Swedish mystic, and founder of a sect, whose father was a bishop of the Lutheran persuasion, and president of the Swedish churches. The family name was Swedberg, changed to Swedenborg, when the family was ennobled in 1719. He was educated at Upsal; and in 1710 he set out upon a course of travel, which embraced England, France, and Holland; and at his return to Sweden was appointed assessor of the College of Mines, which office he held till 1747. His scientific pursuits were highly honourable to him, and he published several excellent works, the principal of which was the "Regnum Minerale," printed at Leipsic in 1734. He also wrote a treatise on the "Position and Course of the Planets," and another on the tides. Between 1729 and 1741 he was elected successively a member of the Academy of Sciences at Upsal, corresponding member of the Imperial Academy of Sciences at St. Petersburg, and member of the Academy of Sciences at Stockholm. At length he abstracted himself from those studies, and resigned his official appointment, imagining "that he belonged to the Society of Angels, in which things spiritual and heavenly are the only subjects of discourse and entertainment." Filled with this notion, he put forth a number of mystical books, and he professed to have continual spiritual intercourse. He maintained the truth of his marvellous statements until the last moment of his life, and took the sacrament at the hands of a Swedish clergyman just before his death, for he professed that he fully believed in the divinity of Christ. His opinions obtained little notice in his lifetime, but since his death they have produced a sect; and several conventicles have been established in London and elsewhere, called New-Jerusalem Temples, in which the memory of Swedenborg is respected as that of a prophet. His works are most voluminous.

Born at Stockholm, 1688; died in London, 1772.

SWEETWATER, a county of Wyoming Territory, United States. Area, 35,000 square miles. Pop. 2,000. The capital is South Pass City.

SWIFT, JONATHAN, swift, a satirist and political writer, born in Ireland, but of English descent. His father, who held the appointment of steward of the King's Inns, Dublin, died a few months before the birth of Jonathan, leaving his widow in narrow circumstances. He was educated at Trinity College, Dublin, and, in 1688, he went to England, where he was hospitably entertained by Sir William Temple, who had married a relation of his mother's. During his residence with Sir William, who employed him as his private secretary, he formed the resolution of embracing the ecclesiastical life, and, having taken his M.A. degree, he was ordained, and obtained the prebend of Kilroot, in the diocese of Connor, worth about £100 a year. Disappointed of preferment in England, he accompanied the earl of Berkeley, one of the lords justices of Ireland, as his chaplain and private secretary: but he was again disappointed, and dismissed with the livings of Laracor and Rathbeggan, and the rectory of Augher, instead of the deanery of Derry, which had been promised him. In 1701 he took his doctor's degree. At the accession of Queen Anne, Swift embarked in politics, went to London, and became associated with the leaders of the Whig party, and Addison, Steele, Arbuthnot, and other eminent writers. He published a series of powerful and amusing satires, among them the "Tale of a Tub," "Argument to Prove the Inconvenience of Abolishing Christianity," and other masterpieces of irony. Failing to obtain the preferment he required, he went over to the Tories, endeavoured unsuccessfully to get the see of Hereford, and in 1713 was promoted to the deanery of St. Patrick's, Dublin. The death of Queen Anne closed all his prospects, and completely embittered his temper. He was for some time very unpopular in Dublin, but came at last to be revered as an oracle. One Wood projected a coinage of £108,000 of Irish farthings and halfpence, for which he obtained a patent. Swift immediately addressed a series of letters to the people, under the signature of "A Drapier," urging them not to receive this base coin; and so successful was he, that the patent was withdrawn. After the publication of his best known work, that wonderful "Travels of Captain Lemuel Gulliver," in 1726, he led a very retired life, and wasted much of his time in literary trifles, which were unworthy of his pen. In 1736 he was attacked with a dangerous illness, and was afterwards subject to attacks of insanity, ending in speechless imbecility. He bequeathed £10,000 to found a hospital for insane persons. Swift, notwithstanding his coarse and sometimes fierce manner, appears to have possessed a remarkable power of gaining the affections of women of beauty and culture. When he was secretary to Sir William Temple, there was residing in the house a young girl named Esther Johnson, daughter of the attendant on Lady Gifford, Temple's sister. Over this girl Swift appears to have exercised an extraordinary fascination. When he went to reside in Ireland, he invited her to come and live near him, and she did so, accompanied by an elderly female friend. After he left Ireland he carried on a regular correspondence with her, informing her of the news of the day in politics, literature, and social gossip. These "Letters to Stella," by which name he designated her, have been published. Evidently greatly attached to her, and leading her to expect marriage, he evaded it for some inscrutable reason, until she pressed him so on the subject, representing the injury she sustained in reputation, that he consented to a private marriage, under the stipulation of perpetual secresy. In 1716 they were married in the garden of the deanery at Dublin, but never lived together. Before this he had become acquainted with Hester Vanhomrigh, a charming and accomplished girl, daughter of a Dutch merchant. He playfully named her Vanessa, and she conceived an irresistible passion for him, going so far as to propose marriage, which he declined. She then followed him to Ireland, where she lived near him for three years, and then returned to England, afterwards writing to Esther Johnson, inquiring the real nature of her connection with the Dean. This letter came into Swift's hands, and he rode directly to Celbridge Abbey, where Miss Vanhomrigh lived, threw the letter on the table, with a frown upon his face that made her silent with terror, and instantly departed. The unhappy girl lived only a few weeks after this occurrence, so terrible was the shock she had received. After her death appeared his poem "Cadenus and Vanessa," describing the manner in which Swift (Cadenus, an anagram of Decanus, dean) had received her advances. Five years afterwards Stella died, without any public recognition of her marriage. Earlier in life he had offered marriage to Miss Jane Waring, sister of a college friend, but she declined on account of her own ill health and insufficient income. The poetical pieces of Swift are mostly of a humorous order, but some of them are extremely coarse, he appearing to delight in dirtiness of illustration and suggestion. His prose style is remarkably clear and forcible. His principal works are—a satirical romance, called "Gulliver's Travels;" the allegory of "A Tale of a Tub," in which he ridicules Popery and Puritanism; and "Political Tracts against the Whigs." Talents of the highest order he unquestionably possessed, and as a witty satirist of terrible power, he stands alone in English literature. His humour was ungenial, and his temper morbid; he was a "good hater," and cared little what weapons he used when engaged in political or literary contests. He was hampered by a profession for which he knew himself to be unfitted.

Born at Dublin, 1667; died 1745.

SWIFT, a new county of Minnesota, United States. Area, 750 square miles. Pop. 7,473. The capital is Benson.

SWINBURNE, ALGERNON CHARLES, swin'-burn, English poet, son of Admiral Swinburne. He studied in France and at Baliol College, Oxford. He rose into great reputation by the publication, in 1864, of "Atalanta in Calydon," a tragedy in the Greek form, and has since published "Chasteland" and "Bothwell," tragedies, and many political poems of the advanced order. He possesses a splendid imagination, and an almost unrivalled rhythmic flow, and a vehemence of expression. A volume of "Poems and Ballads" was suppressed by the publisher, so intense was the erotic spirit. He has contributed many critical essays and biographies to the periodical literature of the day; is a leader among the intellectual republicans, and a scathing denouncer of political tyranny. His views in theological matters are as independent and bold as on other subjects.

Born in London, 1837.

SWINDON, swin'-don, a market-town of Wilts, 40 miles N. of Salisbury. There is a handsome Gothic church. The Great Western railway workshops have called into existence a large town, New Swindon. The principal buildings are the church of St. Mark and the Mechanics' Institute. Pop. 22,365, including both towns.—An important junction station on the Great Western railway.

SWINEMÜNDE, swine-me(r)n'-de, a maritime and fortified town of Prussia, province of Pomerania, on the island of Usedom. It is connected as a port with Stettin, and is a favourite bathing-place. Pop. 7,000.

SWITHIN, ST., swith'-in, an English ecclesiastic, chancellor to King Ethelwulf, and bishop of Winchester. He was an active administrator, and built several churches. He was buried in the churchyard at Winchester, and a century after his death was canonised, and the monks then undertook to remove his remains to the cathedral, but were hindered by heavy rains, which fell for forty days. Hence the popular belief as to St. Swithin's day.

Died 862.

SWITZERLAND, swit'-zer-land (Germ. SCHWEIZ, shvites; Fr. LA SUISSE, sweese), a federal republic of Central Europe, bounded W. by France, S. by Italy and France, E. by Austria and Liechtenstein, and N. by Germany. The most mountainous country in Europe, having the Alps not only along the whole of its southern and eastern frontiers, but throughout the chief part of its interior (see ALPS); the only extensive tract of level ground, or rather of vales, with mountains of more moderate height, is to the westward, in the cantons of Basel, Zurich, and part of Berne. Even there however, the extreme frontier is formed by mountains, the Jura ridge extending in a long line from north to south. (See JURA.) Of the valleys the most remarkable is that of the Rhône, which is at once the widest, and surrounded by the highest mountains. About two-thirds of the surface consists of lakes, glaciers, naked rocks, and uninhabitable heights. Some portions of the country are very fertile, rich corn-fields or luxuriant pastures extending along the lower part of many of the mountains. The vine is cultivated on the slopes of the Jura, and in the valleys of the Rhine, Rhône, Reuss, Limmat, and Thur, and in some places ripens at 2,000 feet above the sea. Agriculture is followed principally in the valleys, where wheat, barley, oats, maize, flax, hemp, and tobacco, are produced. The fruits of most frequent occurrence are grapes, chestnuts, prunes, peaches, walnuts, and cherries; in the colder situations, apples and pears; and in the southern valleys, the almond and fig; the latter, however, in small quantities. Cheese, butter, tallow, and hides, form the chief articles of export from the pastoral districts. After large cattle, of which there are several famous breeds, the animals chiefly raised are goats, sheep, and hogs. Forests, yielding good timber, cover about one-sixth of the productive surface. The climate is very variable. On the lofty summits snow and ice are perpetual, and on the lower mountains and elevated tablelands more snow falls than in any other country of the same latitude in Europe. In the south-western canton of Valais, the fig and grape ripen at the foot of ice-clad mountains, and rhododendrons and the lichen grow at the limit of the snow line. In the Italian canton of Ticino the climate resembles that of Italy, excepting that it is more changeable.

Rivers and Lakes.—The principal are the RHÔNE, the TICINO, the AAR, the RHINE, with its tributaries, the Thur, the Limmat, and the Reuss. There are many waterfalls, including the falls of the Rhine, near Schaffhausen; the Tourtemagne, in Valais; the Reichenberg, in Berne; the Pissemache, near Martigny; the Giesbach, on the lake of Brienz; the Staubbach, in the Bernese Oberland; and the falls of the Aar, in Berne. The lakes are numerous and beautiful. The principal are those of Geneva, or Leman, Constance, Neufchatel, Bienne, Zurich, Lucerne, Thun, and Brienz. Many of these have a blue appearance, owing to their great depth, whilst the scenery by which they are surrounded is distinguished for its great beauty.

Minerals.—There are mines of silver, copper, iron, and lead, in different parts, some anthracite coal of inferior quality, also quarries of rock salt. Marble, porphyry, alabaster, crystal, and sulphur, are occasionally found in the mountains, and rock salt near Basel, and at Bex, in the valley of the Rhône. There are, besides, many mineral springs, some of which are much resorted to.

Zoology.—The summits of the Alps are frequented by the chamois, the wild goat, white and red foxes, and a kind of hare which, in summer, resembles the hare of Britain, but in winter becomes as white as snow. The bear, wolf, wild boar, roebuck, and marmot, are also found. Of birds, the eagle and the vulture appear, and the lakes abound with fish.

Area.—15,990 square miles.

Pop.—2,006,752, including 95,262 Germans, 53,653 French and 41,645 Italians. In the northern, north-eastern, and central cantons, a dialect of German is generally spoken; French prevails in Geneva, Neufchâtel, and Vaud, and in parts of Berne, Fribourg, and Valais; Italian in Ticino; and Italian and Romansh (a corrupted dialect of Latin) in Grisons. About 220,000 of the people are engaged in important manufactures, mentioned under the separate headings of the cantons and principal towns.

Divisions.—There are 22 cantons, three of which (Appenzell, Basel, and Unterwalden) are divided into independent half-cantons, making in all 25 states:—Aargau, Appenzell, Basel, Bern, Fribourg, Geneva, Glarus, Grisons, Lucerne, Neufchâtel, St. Gall, Schaffhausen, Schwytz, Solothurn, Thurgau, Ticino, Unterwalden, Uri, Valais, Vaud, Zug, Zurich.

Chief Towns.—BERN (the political capital), BASEL, FRIBOURG, GENEVA, GLARUS, LAUSANNE, NEUFCHÂTEL, and ZURICH.

Railways and Telegraphs.—About 1,480 miles of railway are open, and 4,330 miles of telegraph lines.

Constitution and Government.—Switzerland, formerly a league of semi-independent states, has been a united confederacy, or Bundesstaat, since 1848. The present constitution came into force in May, 1874. The supreme legislative and executive authority is vested in a parliament of two chambers, a Ständerath, or state council, and a Nationalrath, or national council. The first is composed of 44 members, chosen by the 22 cantons of the confederation, two for each canton. The Nationalrath consists of 135 representatives of the people, chosen in direct election, at the rate of one deputy for every 20,000 souls. The representatives are elected for three years, every adult citizen being entitled to vote. Both chambers united are called the Bundes-Versammlung, or federal assembly, and as such represent the supreme government of the republic. The chief executive authority is deputed to a Bundesrath, or federal council, consisting of seven members, elected for three years by the federal assembly.

Religion and Education.—There is liberty of conscience and creed, the order of Jesuits being alone excluded. About 58 per cent. of the total inhabitants are Protestants, and 40 per cent. Roman Catholics, and there are about 7,000 Jews. The government of the Protestant churches is under the supervision of the magistrates of the various cantons. There are five Roman Catholic bishops and about 6,000 regular and secular clergy. The Roman Catholics are most numerous in the cantons Appenzell, Fribourg, Geneva, Lucerne, St. Gall, Schwytz, Solothurn, Ticino, Unterwalden, Uri, Valais, and Zug. There are three universities, at Basel, Bern, and Zurich, in each of which are faculties of theology (Protestant), jurisprudence, philosophy, and medicine. The Zurich Polytechnic School, and a military academy at Thun, are maintained by the Federal government. Parents are by law compelled to have their children educated, and there are primary and secondary schools, in which rich and poor are educated together, the latter gratuitously.

History.—The western part of Switzerland was called Helvetia by the Romans, and the eastern, Rhætia. The confederation was first founded in 1308, by the three cantons Schwyz, Uri, and Unterwalden. In 1353 it increased to eight, and in 1513 it was composed of 13. This number was further increased, and existed till 1798, when the French Directory, occupying Lombardy on the one side and the Rhenish provinces on the other, determined to add Switzerland to their acquisitions. Accordingly, they invaded it with a force which it was impossible even for the mountaineers to resist, and the Helvetic republic was formed, which lasted four years. The treaty of Amiens provided for the evacuation of Switzerland by the French. It was invaded by Napoleon I., and reduced under his authority, and organised into a confederation of 18 cantons; but was emancipated by the victories of the allies in 1814, and the number of cantons increased to 22.

SWITZERLAND, a county of Indiana, United States. Area, 220 square miles. Pop. 13,200. The capital is Vevay.

SYDENHAM, THOMAS, an English physician, who, in 1642, was educated at Oxford, but left that seat of learning when it became a garrison for Charles I. He subsequently returned to the university, and, after taking his doctor's degree, settled in Westminster, and became the first physician of his time.

Born in Dorsetshire, 1624; died in London, 1689.

SYDNEY, sid'-ne, capital of the colony of New South Wales, Australia, on the southern side of Port Jackson, situated partly on a promontory, with Darling Harbour on the western side, partly in a narrow valley to the east, and partly on undulating ground extending south and still farther east. At the northern end of the promontory is Dawes Point, forming the eastern side of Sydney Cove, beyond which on the east are two small promontories forming Farm Cove, and still farther east is Wooloomooloo Bay. In the older part of the town, near Sydney Cove, where the first settlement was made, some of the streets are narrow, but they are gradually making way for improved thoroughfares, and the main lines of streets are regularly planned, in the direction of the cardinal points of the compass, and intersecting at right angles. The principal lines from north to south are George, Pitt, Elizabeth, and Macquarie streets; and from east to west, Market, Key, Hunter, Parramatta, Goulburn, Liverpool, and Park streets. Wooloomooloo, Darlinghurst, and Paddington are suburbs on the eastern side; Redfera on the south, and Pyrmont, beyond Darling harbour. There are altogether about 120 miles of streets, and the city is nearly 3½ miles long from north to south, and 3 miles broad from east to west. The chief public buildings are a Protestant (St. Andrew's) and a Roman Catholic (St. Patrick's) cathedral, and about 120 other churches and chapels; the Parliament buildings; the Post-office, opened in 1874; the large and handsome town-hall; the exchange, with columns of the Corinthian order; the museum, with a bold Grecian front; the treasury; and the Government house, in the Tudor style, overlooking the harbour, and surrounded by ornamental grounds. The new railway-station at Redfera is a handsome structure. Among the educational institutions are Sydney University, a fine building in collegiate Gothic, and colleges for Anglicans, Roman Catholics, Presbyterians, and Wesleyans. The banks (chiefly in George and Pitt streets) and most of the warehouses are constructed of freestone, in the modern style of Italian composite. The insurance offices and hotels are also generally fine buildings. The fashionable quarter is the east end of the city, and the suburban localities stretching beyond along the shore. Here are most of the splendid mansions, many of them erected at enormous cost. There are an opera-house and two other theatres, and large markets, especially for fruit, in George Street. Hyde Park is a beautiful plateau of forty acres, nearly in the centre of the city. The Domain, a charming expanse of park land of 138 acres, is on the north-eastern side of Sydney, surrounding the pretty inlet called Farm Cove. Near the main entrance is a bronze statue of Sir Richard Bourke, by Westmacott. The Botanical Gardens embrace thirty-eight acres, and are considered as among the finest in the colonies; as in addition to the immense collection of exotics from every clime, the locality is one of great beauty, encircling the waters of Farm Cove. More recently-formed preserves are Prince Alfred Park and Belmore Park in the south, and a tract of 500 acres on the south-east side, named Moore Park. Adjoining the latter ground is the Metropolitan racecourse. The Circular Quay at the head of Sydney Cove has a length of 1,300 feet available for the largest vessels. Wooloomooloo Wharf, to the east, is 1,200 feet long, and was constructed at a cost of £26,000, a large tract of valuable land being reclaimed. The eastern shore of Darling Harbour, which skirts the western side of the city, has its frontage entirely occupied with wharves and quays. Here all the intercolonial steam companies have their stations, and the gas company its large works. The north shore is well occupied with commercial premises, together with a powerful Armstrong battery. Port Jackson is distinguished at its entrance by an electric light, 344 feet above the level of the sea, amongst the most powerful in the world, visible within a radius of 30 miles. The harbour has a mouth a mile wide, and is land-locked and capable of accommodating the largest ships. There are extensive docks and ship-building yards. The Fitzroy dry dock at Cockatoo Island, a few miles to the west of the city, is a government establishment, and originally intended for the repair and overhauling of vessels of the royal navy. The Australian Steam Navigation Company have very extensive works. Batteries carrying Armstrong guns of large calibre protect the city and harbour. The trade is considerable, and gives employment to a large fleet of steamers as well as coasting vessels, and vessels of the largest tonnage sail regularly for the home ports. The water supply of the city is obtained from the Botany and Lachlan swamps, and the city is well lighted by gas. Steam ferry-boats afford communication with the suburbs to the west of the harbour, which is also crossed by Pyrmont bridge. Pop., including suburbs, 260,000.—Sydney was founded in 1788, and named in honour of Viscount Sydney, the secretary of state for the colonies. It was incorporated in 1842. It is under municipal government, and divided into eight wards. Lat. 33° 52′ S. Lon. 151° 12′ E.

SYDNEY, a port and capital of Cape Breton county, Nova Scotia, Dominion of Canada, in the east part of the island, 195 miles N.E. of Halifax. There is a very fine harbour, and near the town are rich mines of bituminous coal. There are ship yards. Pop. 3,700. Lat. 46° 18′ N. Lon. 60° 9′ W.

SYLLA, or SULLA, LUCIUS CORNELIUS FELIX, sil'-la, a famous Roman general, who was of patrician birth. He joined the army under Marius, and accompanied him to Numidia as quæstor; but his military talents exciting the jealousy of that general, he left him, and entered the army of Lutatius Catulus. Being chosen prætor in B.C. 93 (it is said, by the influence of bribery), he was appointed to place Ariobarzanes on the throne of Cappadocia, which he effected. He afterwards terminated the war with the Marsi, for which he was rewarded with the consular dignity. He now aspired to the title of perpetual dictator; but met with a powerful opponent in Marius. However, after putting an end to the war with Mithridates, and conquering Greece, he returned to Rome, then threatened by the Prænestines and Samnites, whom he defeated with immense slaughter, and was elected to the dictatorship, putting to death all whom he considered as inimical to his ambitious views. After reigning tyrannically, and altering the laws according to his own humour, Sylla, in 79 B.C., voluntarily resigned the dictatorship, and retired to his estate at Puteoli, where he spent the remainder of his days in debauchery. He wrote the Memoirs of his own life, which are lost. They are supposed, however, to have been made use of by Plutarch.

Born 138 B.C.; died 78 B.C.

SYLVESTER I., ST., sil-ves'-ter, pope, known in history as having concurred with the Emperor Constantine in convening the Council of Nice. He succeeded to the papal chair in 314.

Born at Rome, 270; died 335.

SYLVESTER II. (GEOBERT) was a Benedictine monk of Auvergne, and became famous as a teacher at the university of Rheims. He possessed great mechanical talent, and is said to have introduced the use of the Arabic figures in arithmetic, and to have invented the first wheel and weight clock. He was elected archbishop of Rheims, but was deposed by Pope John XVI., and fled to the court of Otho III., who made him archbishop of Ravenna, and procured his election as pope in 999. He was zealous and severe in the discharge of his duties; but his great range of knowledge caused him to be regarded by the common people as a magician.

Born at Aurillac, in Auvergne, 920; died 1003.

SYMMACHUS, CŒLIUS, ST., sim-ma'-kus, pope, whose election in 498 was strongly opposed, and an opposition, favoured by the Greek emperor, Anastasius II., accused him of peculation and adultery, and other crimes, of which charges he was acquitted by councils of the Italian bishops.

Born in Sardinia, 440; died at Rome, 514.

SYNCELLUS, GEORGE, sin-sel'-lus, a monk of Constantinople, who wrote a history of the world from the Creation down to the reign of Dioeletian, which he entitled "Chronography." It is valuable as furnishing a knowledge of the dynasties of Egypt.

Died 800.

SYNESIUS, si-né'-se-us, bishop of Ptolemais. He studied at Alexandria and Athens, and having married a Christian wife renounced Paganism. In 410 he was appointed bishop, and wrote several epistles and treatises, in which the influence of his studies on the Neo-Platonic philosophy are apparent in his mode of treating Christian doctrines.

Born at Cyrene, 379; died 430.

SYPHAX, si'-fax, king of the Massyljans, in Numidia, who entered into an alliance with the Romans against the Carthaginians at the beginning of the second Punic war; but having espoused the daughter of Hasdrubal, he joined Carthage. He was defeated by Masinissa and Lælius, and conducted in triumph to Rome, where he died.

Born 250 B.C.; died 201 B.C.

SYRA, or SYROS, sy'-ra, an island of the Grecian Archipelago, in the midst of the Cyclades, near Delos. It is mountainous and fertile. Corn, silk, wine, figs, and cotton are produced. Area, 45 square miles. Pop. 26,500.

SYRA, capital of the island, and of the Greek monarchy or province of Cyclades, at the head of a bay on the east coast, near the site of the ancient city of Hermopolis. It is the principal commercial port of Greece, and an important station for steamers. Pop. 21,000.

SYRACUSE, or SIRACUSA, si'-ra-kuse, a province of Italy, on the east coast of Sicily. It is very mountainous, but the valleys and districts along the coasts are very fertile, producing grain, olives, vines, fruit, flax, and hemp. The capital is Syracuse.

Rivers.—The Anapo, Abisso, and Ragusa.
Minerals.—Marble, agates, bitumen, and stalactites.
Area.—1,428 square miles.
Pop.—358,208.

SYRACUSE, a city of Sicily, capital of the above province, 30 miles S.E. of Catania. It is insulated, walled, and entered by drawbridges. The streets are regular, but narrow; the houses tolerably built. The cathedral, or principal church, contains portions of the ancient temple of Minerva. There are remains of the ancient amphitheatre, of an oval form, above 300 feet in length and 200 in width, and there are many other remains of antiquity. The harbour is capable of receiving vessels of the greatest burthen, and of containing a very numerous fleet, but is at present greatly neglected. There are a citadel, Royal Academy, museum of antiquities, a public library, and numerous churches. Pop. 22,500.—The ancient Syracuse, consisting of five towns, adjoining each other, but separated by walls, a very large and splendid palace, and at one time had nearly a million inhabitants. It was founded about 734 B.C., was taken by the Romans 214 B.C., and by the Saracens in 878. In 1639 an earthquake nearly destroyed it.

SYRACUSE, a city of New York, United States, capital of Onondaga county, at the head of Onondaga Lake, 147 miles N. of Albany. It is partly built on two ridges about 200 feet in height, and partly on the banks of a creek. There are good public buildings, including a court-house, state armoury, Syracuse university, several fine churches, and the state asylum for idiots, an elegant structure in the Italian style. There is a beautifully laid out cemetery of 150 acres, with many interesting monuments at Oakwood, on the south-eastern part of the city. Several important lines of railway converge here, and the Erie and Oswego canal affords great facilities for traffic. Manf. Salt (very extensive), iron and steel, machinery, agricultural implements, and musical instruments. Pop. 52,000, of which about 15,000 are foreigners.

SYRENS, si'-rens, in Greek mythology, sea nymphs, who charmed so much by their melodious voice, that all who heard them forgot every other employment, and listened in rapt admiration till they perished of hunger. They were three in number,—Parthenope, Ligeia, and Leucosia, and they usually lived on a small island near Cape Pelorus, in Sicily.

SYRIA, sir'-e-a, a large district of Asiatic Turkey, lying along the coast of the Mediterranean, which bounds it on the west; while on the north Mount Taurus and its branches divide it from Asia Minor; and on the east is a vast and trackless desert, stretching northwards from Arabia. On the south is Palestine. It includes PALESTINE, under which heading the more important physical features are described. ALEPPO and DAMASCUS are the principal cities, not included in Palestine, and the chief ports are SAIDE, SCANDEROON, and TRIPOLI. Area, 50,000 square miles. Pop. 2,750,000, consisting mostly of Greeks, Arabs, and Turks, Druses, Maronites, and other mountaineers; and nomad tribes,—as Turcomans in the north, Kurds on the banks of the Euphrates, and Bedouins in the Syrian desert.

SYZRAN, sis-ran', a town of European Russia, government of Simbirsk, at the junction of the Syzran and Krymza with the Volga, 78 miles S. of Simbirsk. Manf. Soap and leather. There is a trade in corn and cattle. Pop. 24,500.

SZABADKA. (See MARIA-THERESIOPEL.)

SZARVAS, zar'-vas, a town of Hungary, on the Koros, 29 miles N.W. of Beker. There is a large trade in corn and cattle. Pop. 19,000.

SZATHMAR NEMETHI, zat-mar' nem'-et-e, a town of Hungary, partly on the north bank of the Szamos, and partly on an island in the river, 60 miles from Debreczin. It has a cathedral, Roman Catholic college, and several churches. There is a large trade in wine and woollen and linen fabrics. Pop. 18,500.

SZEGEDIN, or SZEGED, zeg'-den, a city of Hungary, on the right bank of the Theiss, opposite the mouth of the Maros, 96 miles S.E. of Pesth. The river is crossed by a bridge of boats, and the town is defended by an old fortress built by the Turks. It has a large market-place, six Roman Catholic and one Greek church. The town was nearly destroyed by inundation in March, 1879. Manf. Woollens, leather, tobacco, soda, and soap. Pop. 73,675.

SZEKSZARD, or SZEXARD, zek'-zard, a town of Hungary, on the Sarvitz, near the Danube, 81 miles S.W. of Pesth. Manf. Silks. Pop. 10,500.

SZE-MA-KWANG, ze-ma-kwang', an eminent Chinese historian, who became public censor and historiographer to the emperor Jin-Tsung. He wrote a history of China upon the model of that of his great ancestor Sze-ma-tseen. (See the following.) His great ability was recognised by his sovereign, and he rose to be prime-minister. In 1267, his name, inscribed as the "Prince of Literature," was put up in the temple of Confucius.

Born about 1018; died 1086.

SZE-MA-TSEEN, ze-ma-tseen', a Chinese historian, who composed a valuable and well-written work entitled "Sze-ke," which embraced the annals of China from 2697 B.C. until about 100 B.C.

Born about 145 B.C.; died about 80 B.C.

TABRIZ, TEBRIZ, or TAURIS, ta-breez', a city of Persia, province of Azerbijan. It stands in a plain, near the river Aji, amongst forests, enclosed by a wall, and is about 3½ miles in circumference. It has fine gardens, a citadel, the palace of the heir apparent of the Turkish throne, the remains of a mosque, numerous bazaars, and caravanserais. It is an extensive entrepôt of trade between Persia, India, Russia, and Constantinople. Manf. Silk and cotton goods. Pop. 165,000.

TACITUS, CAIUS CORNELIUS, tas'-i-tus, a Roman historian, of whose family or early life nothing is known. He was first promoted to a high post by Vespasian. Under Domitian he fulfilled the office of prætor, and that of consul under Nerva, A.D. 97. He displayed great eloquence at the bar, and is spoken of by Pliny the younger as the greatest orator of his time. It is, however, as an historian that he has acquired immortality. Of his histories, which originally comprised the period from the accession of Galba to the death of Domitian, only a part remains. His Annals were the most important of his works; but of these we have unfortunately lost a valuable portion. The treatise on the Manners of the Germans, and the life of his father-in-law Agricola, are perfect, and cannot be too highly admired; but his history of the reign of Tiberius may be considered as his master-piece. His Latin is remarkable for its purity and elegance; and his greatest strength lay in portraying character. His friendship with Pliny is proverbial.

Born about 55; died it is supposed about 130.

TACITUS, MARCUS CLAUDIUS, a Roman emperor, who claimed to be a descendant of the historian. Having been consul and held other important offices, he was elected emperor by the senate after the death of Aurelian, in 275. He displayed great wisdom in the administration of justice and the government of the state, repelled the Gothic barbarians who had invaded the Roman territories, and he was preparing for a war against Persia, when he died of a violent disorder, though, according to some, he was assassinated.

Born at Intermani (now Terni), 200; died in Cappadocia, 276.

TACNA, tak'-na, a province of Peru, occupied by the Chilian government, by treaty of 1882–3, for a term of 10 years. Area, 20,464 sq. m. Pop. 28,300.

TACUNGA, ta-koon'-ga, a town of Ecuador South America, 50 miles S. of Quito. Pop. 16,000.

TADCASTER, tad'-kas-ter, an ancient market-town of the West Riding of Yorkshire, on the Wharf, 9 miles S. of York. Besides the ancient church, which has a fine tower, and some parts of which date from the 13th century (restored in 1877), here are also an hospital for twelve persons, and a free-school. Pop. 4,310.—A station on the North-Eastern railway.

TADMOR. (See PALMYRA.)

TAFFI, ANDREW, taf'-fe, an Italian painter, who first introduced into his native country the art of painting in mosaic. This knowledge he acquired from some Greek artists who were engaged in executing mosaics at the church of St. Mark, Venice.

Born at Florence, 1213; died at the same city, 1294.

TAFILET, taf'-i-let', a province of Morocco, lying to the south-east of the Atlas Mountains, and consisting of a fertile plain, watered by two rivers, both of which are lost in the sands of the desert. Dates are the most important product. There are mines of lead and antimony. The most important towns are Abuam and Rissani. Pop. Estimated at 100,000.

TAFT, a town of Persia, province of Fars. Manf. Carpets, considered the finest in Turkey. There is a lead mine in the vicinity. Pop. 6,000.

TAGANROG, tag'-an-rog', a city in the south of European Russia, government of Ekaterinoslav, near the north-west extremity of the Sea of Azov, of which it is the chief port. It has a cathedral, admiralty, exchange, palace, Greek monastery, harbour, and fortress. There is a monument to the emperor Alexander I., who died here in 1825. The exports of wheat are very large. Pop. 63,025, including many Armenians and Greeks.

TAGES, tai'-jees, in Roman mythology a grandson of Jupiter, was the first who taught the twelve nations of the Etruscans the arts of augury and divination.

TAGILSK. (See NIJNI-TAGILSK.)

TAGLIAMENTO, tal'-ya-men'-to, a river of northern Italy, rising in Mont Maure, and, after a course of 100 miles, entering the Adriatic Sea.

TAGUS, tai-gus (Sp. TAJO, ta'-ho: Port. TEJO, tai'-zho), the largest river of Spain and Portugal, rising in the Sierra de Cuença, province of Teruel. Pursuing its course in a westward direction, a little inclined to the south, it passes Toledo, Talavera, Alcantara, in Spain, and, in Portugal, Abrantes and Lisbon, and flows into the Atlantic 2 miles below Lisbon. The total length is 540 miles.

TAHITI, or OTAHEITE, ta-he'-te, the most important of the Society Islands, 32 miles long from north-west to south-east, and narrow, nearly divided into two portions, the smaller of which is named Tairaboo. The coast is generally low, the interior rising to mountains of considerable elevation, the loftiest peak having an altitude of 7,340 feet, and another being scarcely inferior in height. The valleys, of small extent, and the plains at the foot of the mountains are very fertile, tropical vegetation being very abundant. The chief port is Papcete, on the north-east coast. Pop. 10,640.—The island was discovered by the Spanish navigator, Quiros, in 1606. It was formally annexed to France in September, 1880. Lat. 17° 29′ S. Lon. 149° 29′ W.

TAI-TONG, ti-tong', a city of China, province of Shan-se, 180 miles W. of Pekin. It is well fortified and has a large garrison. A large trade is carried on in prepared skins, and medicinal plants, marble, porphyry, lapis-lazuli, and jasper are obtained in the vicinity. Pop. Large, but unascertained.

TAI-WAN, or TAI-OUAN, ti-wan', the capital of the island of Formosa, in the China Sea. It has two famous temples; but has decayed. The harbour only admits small vessels. Lat. 23° 5′ N. Lon. 120° 22′ E. Pop. 135,000.

TAI-YUEN, or TAI-YUEN-FOO, ti-yu'-en, a city of China, capital of the province Shan-se. It was once a place of great splendour, and has remains of royal palaces. 270 miles S.W. of Pekin. Manf. Felt carpets and iron.

TALAVERA DE LA REYNA, ta-la-vé'-ra, or ta-la-vai'-ra dai la rai'-e-na, an ancient city of Spain, province of Toledo, on the Tagus, over which there is a fine but dilapidated bridge of 35 arches, 36 miles from Toledo. Parts of the old ramparts are still in preservation. It contains several well-built churches, a handsome town house, numerous convents, hospitals, and has two public walks. Manf. Silk, soap, hats, and earthenware. Pop. 10,000.—This is a place of great antiquity, the ancient Talabriga, and contains many Roman monuments. It is noted for a battle fought in July, 1809, between the French army, commanded by marshals Jourdain, Victor, and Sebastiano, and the allied force of British and Spaniards, under the duke of Wellington. The French were repulsed.

TALBERT, FRANCIS XAVIER, tal'-bair, a French writer, who was educated for the law, which he renounced for the ecclesiastical state, and obtained a canonry. His works are "Discourse on the Inequality among Men" (this was crowned by the academy of Dijon, in 1755), "Panegyric on St.

Louis," elegies upon Bonnet, Montaigne, Cardinal d'Amboise, Chancellor del'Hôpital, Philip, regent of France, and Boileau. He also wrote some poems.

Born at Besançon, 1728; died at Lemberg, 1803.

TALBOT, JOHN, tal'-bot, earl of Shrewsbury. He displayed great valour in the reduction of Ireland, where he was sent in 1414, as commander-in-chief, by Henry V. Subsequently he went to France, and served under the duke of Bedford. In conjunction with the earl of Salisbury, he conducted the siege of Orleans, which he was, however, compelled to raise in 1429, by Joan of Arc. At the battle of Patay he was made prisoner; but recovered his liberty not long afterwards. He was for some time again in Ireland, and, on his return to France, he gained several victories, and took some strong places; so that his name became a terror to the French. He was slain at the siege of Châtillon.

Born at Bletchmore, Shropshire, 1373; died 1453.

TALBOT, ROBERT, an English antiquary and poet of the 16th century.

TALBOT, WILLIAM HENRY FOX, a modern English writer, and the discoverer, in 1840, of the process of obtaining pictures upon paper by the action of light, called at first the Talbotype, but which was afterwards, together with other inventions, merged in the general term of photography. He was educated at Harrow and Cambridge, and sat in the House of Commons for Chippenham in 1832 till 1834. In 1842 he received the gold medal of the Royal Society for his discoveries in photography. Mr. Talbot afterwards paid great attention to deciphering Assyrian cuneiform inscriptions. He was the author, among other works, of—"Hermes or Classical and Antiquarian Researches;" "The Antiquity of the Book of Genesis illustrated by some New Arguments;" "English Etymologies;" and a volume of "Legendary Tales."

Born at Chippenham, 1800; died 1877.

TALCA, capital of the above province, 140 miles S.W. of Santiago. The cathedral is yet unfinished. Manf. Woollen cloths, ponchos, and blankets. Pop. 19,000.

TALFOURD, SIR THOMAS NOON, tal'-ford, English judge and writer. He was educated at the grammar-school of Reading, in which town his father carried on the business of a brewer. He was called to the bar at the Middle Temple in 1821, and became a serjeant-at-law and recorder of Banbury. He was returned to parliament by the borough of Reading in 1835, and retained his seat until 1841. He was returned by the same constituency in 1847; but resigned his seat in 1849, upon being appointed justice in the court of Common Pleas. While in parliament he introduced two important measures,—the Custody of Infants Act and the Copyright Act. He was a contributor to the "New Monthly Magazine," "the "Edinburgh" and "Quarterly" reviews, and the "Law Magazine." In 1836 his tragedy of "Ion" was acted at Covent Garden Theatre. At a later period he produced "The Athenian Captive," "Glencoe; or the Fate of the Macdonalds;" and "The Castilian" tragedies, the last of which was not placed upon the stage. Among other evidences of his great literary industry may be quoted his edition of "The Letters of Charles Lamb, with a Sketch of his Life;" "Final Memorials of Charles Lamb;" "Vacation Rambles and Thoughts, comprising the Recollections of Three Continental Tours;" and a "Supplement to the Vacation Rambles." In 1844 he was nominated D. C. L. of the university of Oxford. He died suddenly, while charging the grand jury at the opening of the Stafford assizes.

Born near Stafford, 1795; died 1854.

TALLARD, CAMILLE D' HOSTUN, Duc de, tal'-lard, marshal of France. He served under Louis XIV. in Holland, in 1672. In 1693 was made lieutenant-general, and in 1698 was sent as ambassador to England, to negotiate as to the succession to the crown of Spain. Upon the war of the Spanish succession breaking out, Tallard was placed in command of the army of the Rhine, in 1702, and the year following was made marshal of France. In the same year he gained a great victory over the elector of Hesse, near Spires. In 1704 he was signally defeated at Blenheim, by the duke of Marlborough, taken prisoner, and conveyed to England, where he remained during seven years. On his return to France, in 1712, he was created a duke, and, in 1726, was nominated secretary of state.

Born in Dauphiny, 1652: died 1728.

TALLEYRAND-PERIGORD, CHARLES MAURICE, Prince de, a French diplomatist. When only a year old, he was rendered lame for life, in consequence of a fall. Thus precluded from following a military career, he was educated for the priesthood at the college of Harcourt, and afterwards at the Sorbonne, where he graduated with much distinction, and was introduced as the Abbé de Perigord at the coronation festivities of Louis XVI., in 1774, and afterwards received several livings. In his 26th year he was appointed general agent—the minister of state—of the Gallic church. In this important office he remained during eight years, being then preferred to the bishopric of Autun. This occurred in 1788, and with it commenced his political career. He acted as a member of the States-General, convoked in the following year. At this period he adopted almost entirely those revolutionary principles which were so rife in his native country; and in 1790 officiated as bishop, wearing the national colours over his robes, at the celebration on the Champ de Mars. He supported Mirabeau, advocated the sale of the church lands and the secularisation of education; finally he was excommunicated by the pope, and cast away for ever the ecclesiastical character which he had so much against his own inclination been driven to assume. The constitutional monarchy party desiring to maintain peace with England, selected Talleyrand as the only man fitted to execute the delicate commission of opening negotiations with the court of St. James's. He was sent to London in 1791, as the colleague of Chauvelin, the nominal ambassador; but finding himself unable to effect anything towards creating an understanding between the English court and the French peace party, he shortly afterwards returned to Paris. Upon the fall of the French monarchy, he, with some difficulty, quitted Paris, and, repairing to London, supported himself there by the proceeds derived from the sale of his library. Strongly disliked by the English government, he was, in a short time, ordered to leave the country. He sailed for the United States, where he realised a fortune by judicious speculations, and remained there till 1796, when he was recalled to France, through the influence of Madame de Staël. Under the Directory he was appointed minister for foreign affairs. After Napoleon's return from Egypt, Talleyrand attached himself to the fortunes of the future emperor, at whose request he was released by the pope from excommunication. The concordat with the pope, which paved the way for the empire; the treaties of Luneville, Amiens, of Presburg, and of Tilsit, were principally the work of the ex-bishop of Autun. In reward of these services, Napoleon created his minister, prince of Benevento, and vice-grand-elector of the empire. Nevertheless, the two ambitious men were fast being estranged from each other. Talleyrand advocated an alliance with England, and unable to gain his point resigned the portfolio of foreign affairs in 1807. In 1809 the ex-minister expressed himself so unreservedly in condemnation of the expedition to Spain, that Napoleon commanded him to resign the office of chamberlain. From that time Talleyrand kept aloof from the court, predicted, and, it is said, assisted materially to hasten the fall of the empire. At the capitulation of Paris in 1814, Talleyrand again appeared as a public man. The emperor Alexander took up his residence in his house, and Talleyrand used the opportunity to acquire over the Russian potentate a strong degree of influence. He was appointed minister of foreign affairs by Louis XVIII., made a peer of France, and was chosen as the representative of his native country at the congress of Vienna. On the return of Napoleon he was exempted from the amnesty, and went to Ghent with the king, who, after the flight of Napoleon, reappointed him minister of foreign affairs, but soon resigned, receiving the title of grand chamberlain of France, with a large salary. During the interval between the peace of Paris and the revolution of 1830, he occupied the position of leader of the liberal and constitutional party, and indeed was regarded as an opponent to the elder branch of the Bourbons. When, in 1830, France became a constitutional monarchy under Louis Philippe, Talleyrand was nominated ambassador extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to the court of St James's, which post he retained until 1835. During this interval, he sought, by every possible means, to bring about that alliance between England and France, as constitutional governments, which had been the wish of his life. He likewise signed the quadruple alliance of England, France, Spain, and Portugal, and assisted in the establishment of the kingdom of Belgium. On relinquishing his ambassadorial functions, he retired into private life. Talleyrand was unquestionably one of the greatest men of his time; to a great talent for business, he added that perfect command over himself which is so advantageous to a diplomatist. His wit was caustic, ready, and penetrating, rivalling that of Voltaire; his conversational powers were exceptionally brilliant, and he preserved all the qualities of his great mind until the close of his life. He wrote the memoirs of his life, which have not yet been permitted to be made public.

Born at Paris, 1754; died 1838.

TALLIEN, JEAN LAMBERT, tal'-le-a, a French revolutionary leader, who produced the overthrow of Robespierre. He was the son of the steward of the marquis de Bercy, and was corrector of the press in the printing-office of the Moniteur when the States-General were convoked; and, having brought out a small newspaper called the Citizens' Friend, in which the court and monarchy were violently denounced, he came to be regarded as a patriot by the excited populace. Becoming a member of the Jacobin Club, he soon rose to great influence. He supported Danton in all his sanguinary measures, and was one of the most violent persecutors of Louis XVI., for whose death he voted. In 1793 he was sent by the Convention to Bordeaux, where, during several months, he committed hundreds to the scaffold. In 1794 he was recalled to Paris, and narrowly escaped the fate of his patron, Danton. Contriving, however, to ingratiate himself into favour with Robespierre, he was created president of the Convention. In this position he worked secretly for the overthrow of the dictator; but Robespierre, detecting his schemes, denounced him in the Convention, but Tallien was supported by the greater number of the revolutionists, and was in a position to denounce Robespierre, who, with his colleagues, perished. He subsequently became a member of the Committee of Public Safety, and in 1795 was sent as commissioner to the army under Hoche, and ordered all prisoners to be shot. He went to Egypt in 1798;

but was, in 1801, dismissed, and sent back to France. He then fell into great distress, which was relieved by Fouché's appointing him consul at Alicante, and he afterwards received a small pension from Napoleon. He died miserably poor.

Born in Paris, 1769; died there, 1820.

TALLIS, THOMAS, tal'-lis, an eminent English musician. He was gentleman of the chapel to Edward VI. and queen Mary, and his salary is said to have been sevenpence-halfpenny a day. In the reign of Elizabeth he was appointed organist, in conjunction with his former pupil Bird, with whom he published a collection of hymns for church service.

Born about 1529; died 1585.

TALMA, FRANÇOIS JOSEPH, tal'-ma, a French tragedian, who received a collegiate education, and for a time practised as a dentist; but, taking to the stage advanced rapidly, until he was acknowledged the best tragic actor in France. He carried out a total reform in stage costume. The emperor Napoleon I., and subsequently Louis XVIII., presented him with many flattering marks of their esteem; and, during his last illness, the audiences at the Théâtre Français required each evening to be informed of his condition before the performance was allowed to begin.

Born at Paris, 1763; died there, 1826.

TANANARIVO. (See ANTANANRIVO.)

TANCRED, tan'-kred, a Sicilian prince, of Norman extraction, who accompanied Bohemond, prince of Tarentum, to the Holy Land, and formed an intimate friendship with Godfrey of Bouillon. He greatly distinguished himself and received the title of Prince of Tiberias. He defended Antioch, and compelled the sultan of Egypt to evacuate Syria. His exploits, true or fabulous, have been immortalized by Tasso in the "Jerusalem Delivered," and are the subject of a partly rhymed chronicle by Raoul de Caen.

Born 1078; died at Antioch, 1112.

TANCRED DE HAUTEVILLE, a Norman baron, who fought under Richard the Good, duke of Normandy. His twelve sons were famous for their strength, beauty of person, and valour. Serlon, the eldest, accompanied William of Normandy to the conquest of England; William, another son, who was surnamed "Strong of Arm," became count of Apulia; a third member of the same family, Robert "Wiskard," or the "wise," won the dukedom of Calabria, and, after his brother's death, that of Apulia. This latter was the founder of the Norman dynasty of Sicily.

Lived in the 11th century.

TANCRED, king of Sicily, ascended the throne in 1189, after the death of William II. He was soon afterwards attacked by the emperor Henry VI. of Germany, who, having married Constance, the aunt of William II., set up, in consequence, a claim to the throne of Sicily. Tancred defeated the German army, and retained his crown until his death, which occurred in the year 1194. The emperor subsequently became master of Sicily, and took prisoners, William, the infant son of Tancred, and his mother, Queen Sibylla, who had been appointed regent. The child was mutilated and deprived of sight, and Sibylla imprisoned in a convent. Thus ended the Norman dynasty of Sicily, which had reigned there for upwards of a hundred years.

Died 1194.

TANEY, tai'-ne, a county of Missouri, United States. Area, 700 square miles. Pop. 5,000. The capital is Forsyth.

TANGANYIKA, tan-gan-yi'-ka, a lake of Central Africa, south of the lakes Victoria and Albert Nyanza, and 2,711 feet above the sea level, between lat. 3° and 9° S., and lon. 29° and 32°. It was discovered by Burton and Speke in 1858. (See AFRICA.) The name means "the meeting of waters."

TANGIER, tan'-jeer, a fortified seaport of Africa, in Morocco, near the western entrance of the Straits of Gibraltar. The harbour, once good, is now so filled up with sand that large vessels cannot enter. The trade consists principally in supplying provisions to Gibraltar, Cadiz, and Lisbon. Pop. 12,000. Lat. 35° 7′ N. Lon. 5° 48′ W. The ancient Tingis, supposed to have been founded by the Carthaginians, stood here, and under the Romans it became an important city. In 1471 it fell into the hands of the Portuguese, and in 1662 was ceded to England as part of the dowry of Catharine of Braganza, the queen of Charles II. In 1684 it was abandoned by the English.

TANGIPAHOA, tah'-gi-pa-ho'-a, a county of Lousiana, United States. Area, 720 square miles. Pop. 7,200, nearly half being coloured. The capital is Amite City.

TANJORE, tan-jor', a maritime district of the south of British India, in the province of Madras, having on its E. and S.E. the Bay of Bengal, and on its other sides Madura and Trichinopoly. It is exceedingly fertile, especially in the delta of the Cauvery. An intricate and wide system of irrigation is here carried on, by means of the facilities which the Cauvery and its branches afford. Pop. 2,130383, nearly all Hindoos.

TANJORE, a town and fortress and capital of the above district, on a branch of the Cauvery, 180 miles S.W. of Madras. Including the suburbs, it is nearly six miles in circumference. There are two forts, one of which comprehends the rajah's palace, the other containing one of the handsomest pagodas in the south of India, and a college, formerly a celebrated place of Hindoo learning. Pop. 54,750.

TANNA, an island in the South Pacific Ocean, belonging to the group of the New Hebrides, discovered by Captain Cook, in 1774. It is about 22 miles in length and 10 in breadth, mountainous and volcanic, but generally well cultivated. Lat. 19° 3′ S. Lon. 169° 28′ E.

TANNAHILL, ROBERT, tan'-na-hill, Scotch poet, a working weaver, whose lyrics are exquisitely graceful and pathetic. He became despondent and drowned himself.

Born at Paisley, 1774; died 1810.

TANTALUS, tan'-ta-lus, in Greek mythology, a king of Lydia, son of Zeus, and father of Niobe and Pelops. He is represented by the poets as punished in Hades with an insatiable thirst, and placed up to the chin in the midst of a pool of water, which flowed away as soon as he attempted to taste it. There hung also above his head a bough, richly loaded with delicious fruit, which, as soon as he attempted to seize it, was carried away from his reach by a sudden blast of wind. The word "tantalise" is derived from this legend.

TAOS, ta'-ose, a county of New Mexico, United States. Area, 7,500 square miles. Pop. 12,200. The capital is Fernandez de Taos.

TARA, ta'-ra, a town of Asiatic Russia, government of Tobolsk, near the confluence of the Argaka and Irtish. Manf. Leather, hats, and vitriol. There is a large trade with Bokhara and China, and several annual fairs are held. Pop. 5,800.

TARAI, a sub-division of Bengal.

TARANAKI, ta-ra-na'-ke, a province in the North Island of New Zealand. Area, 3,578 square miles. No longer officially recognised.

TARANTO, ta'-ran-to, or ta-ran'-to, a town of Italy, province of Lecce, 44 miles W. of Brindisi, built on a small island at the north end of the Gulf of Taranto. It has a castle, harbour, and a cathedral, dedicated to St. Cataldus, an Irishman, who was the first bishop of Tarentum, in the 2nd century. There are two portions, but the inner one is useless, and the outer much exposed. Manf. Linen and cotton fabrics, and velvets. It has also a trade in olive-oil, fruits, and shell-fish. Pop. 33,593. This is the Tarentum of antiquity, reputed to have been founded 708 B.C. by colonists from Sparta. It was long a wealthy seat of commerce; and being reduced by the Romans in 209 B.C., was considered the chief town of southern Italy under the empire.

TARANTO, GULF OF. (See ITALY.)

TARAPACA, ta-ra-pa'-ka, a province of Peru, annexed to Chili in 1882-3. Its mountains rise abruptly from the sea in some places to the height of 6,000 feet. Eastward of the mountains is the great plain of Tamarugal, 30 miles wide, with an average elevation of 3,000 feet, and extending to the base of the Andes. Minerals. Silver (abundant), copper, and nitrate of soda. Pop. 47,551. The capital is Tarapaca, 12 miles from the Pacific.

TARARE, tar'-are, a town of France, department Rhone, on the Tardine, 21 miles N.W. of Lyons. Manf. Extensive, including muslins, cloth, silk, merino, and embroidery. Pop. 14,000.

TARASCON, ta'-ras'-kawng', a town of France, department Bouches-du-Rhône, 10 miles N. of Arles. A very fine suspension bridge connects it with Beaucaire, on the opposite side of the river. There are an old castle, built in the 15th century, on the site of a temple of Jupiter, and now used as a prison, and the Gothic church of St. Martha, begun in the 15th century, and having some interesting tombs. Manf. Woollen, silk, and cotton goods. It also exports wine, brandy, olive-oil, &c. Pop. 7,600.

TARBES, tarb, a town of France, capital of the department Haute-Pyrénées, on the left bank of the Adour, 23 miles E. of Pau. It is surrounded by a wall, and defended by an old castle. There is a modern cathedral, built on the site of an old castle. Manf. Leather and paper. There is a large trade in wine, iron, cattle, and agricultural produce. Pop. 23,000.—This is the Bigorra of the Romans, and a place of great importance. It was in the possession of the English for about 300 years, and the Black Prince held his court there.

TARIFA, ta-ré-fa, a town of Spain, province of Cadiz, on the southernmost point of the kingdom, 25 miles S.E. of Cape Trafalgar. It is surrounded by old walls and towers, and has a strong fortress. A Moorish castle is used as a prison. The inhabitants are mostly engaged in the tunny and anchovy fisheries. Pop. 12,000.—This place was named from Tarif-ibn-Malek, a Saracen chief, who landed here from Africa, in 710.

TARIJA, a province of the republic of Bolivia, South America. Area, 114,489 square miles. Pop. 140,000. The capital is San Bernardo de Tarija.

TARKI, tar'-ke, a town of Asiatic Russia, in Transcaucasia, on the west coast of the Caspian. There is a large trade with Persia, and silkworms are extensively reared. Pop. 10,000.

TARLTON, RICHARD, tarl'-ton, a celebrated English actor and jester of the queen's players in 1583. He was the author of a drama called "The Seven Deadly Sins," of which Gabriel Hervey speaks of as a "most deadly, but most lively play."
Died at London, 1588.

TARLETON, BANNASTRE, Sir, tarl'-ton, an English soldier, who served in the American war, and raised a British legion, which was very successful in the south, but was notorious for cruelty. After his return to England he represented Liverpool in parliament, being returned, on account of his popularity, free of expense in 1790. In 1817 he was raised to the rank of major-general and created a baronet in 1818. He published a "History of the Campaigns of 1780 and 1781 in the Southern Provinces of North America."
Born at Liverpool, 1754; died 1833.

TARN, a department of the south of France. It is mountainous in the south-east, being traversed by branches of the Cevennes; in the other parts exhibiting a succession of undulating hills, interspersed with beautiful plains. The vine is cultivated, and brandy is made. Cattle and sheep are extensively reared.

Rivers.—The Agoût, Aveyron, and Tarn.
Minerals.—Iron, lead, copper, coal, gypsum, and potters' clay.
Area.—2,217 square miles.
Pop.—359,223.
Administrative Divisions and Chief Towns.—There are 4 arrondissements and 317 communes. The chief towns are ALBI (the capital), CASTRES, GAILLAC, and LAVAUR.

TARN-ET-GARONNE, a department in the south of France. The surface is generally undulating, and the soil is fertile. The mulberry, for rearing silkworms, is extensively cultivated. There are many vineyards, and mules and poultry are bred.

Rivers.—The Garonne, Tarn, and Aveyron.
Minerals.—Iron, coal, and marble.
Area.—1,436 square miles.
Pop.—217,056.
Administrative Divisions and Chief Towns.—There are 3 arrondissements and 194 communes. The chief towns are MONTAUBAN (the capital), CASTEL-SARRASIN, and MOISSAC.

TARNOPOL, tar'-no-pol, a town of the Austrian empire, in Galicia, on the left bank of the Sereth, 70 miles S.E. of Lemberg. It has both Greek and Catholic churches. Pop. 17,500.

TARPEIA, tar-pé'-a, in Roman legend, the daughter of Tarpeius, governor of the Capitol under Romulus. She betrayed that place to Tatius, the general of the Sabines, on condition of receiving what himself and his soldiers wore on their left arms, meaning their bracelets of gold. When Tatius entered the place, he threw his shield (worn on the left arm) on Tarpeia, in which he was imitated by all his followers; so that she perished under the weight. She was buried on the mount which was afterwards called by her name, and from which persons convicted of treason were precipitated.

TARQUIN, LUCIUS TARQUINIUS PRISCUS, tar'-kwin, known as Tarquin the Elder, according to early Roman history, the fifth king of Rome, was the son of Greek parents, and born in the town of Tarquinii, in Etruria. His original name was Lucumon, which he changed to Tarquinius on going to Rome. He so endeared himself to the Romans by the liberality of his manners, that the king, Ancus Martius, nominated him guardian of his children. The people, on the death of that monarch, placed, in 616 B.C., the crown on the head of Tarquin, who reigned with great moderation and popularity. He defeated the Latins and Sabines, and conquered Etruria. He increased the number of the senate, repaired the Capitol, which he ornamented with several elegant buildings, formed aqueducts and the great subterraneous sewers, which still remain, and began to build a wall round the city. He also introduced several reforms into the constitution of the state. He was killed by assassins, set on by the sons of his predecessor.
Died 578 B.C.

TARQUIN, LUCIUS TARQUINIUS SUPERBUS, "the Proud," was grandson of the preceding, and seventh and last king of Rome. He married Tullia, daughter of Servius Tullius, and at her instigation murdered his father-in-law, and seized the kingdom. His reign was tyrannical and extravagant, so that his subjects were about to revolt, when, to divert their attention, he engaged in a foreign war; but, while he was at the siege of Ardea, the infamous conduct of his son Sextus proved the ruin of his family. (See LUCRETIA and BRUTUS.) The Romans rose and shut the gates against Tarquin, who retired to Etruria. Tarquin subsequently found protection under Lars Porsenna, of Clusium. Several attempts were made by Tarquin to regain his kingdom; but, after the battle of the lake Regillus, in 496, when Aruns, his only surviving son, was slain, the old king abandoned the contest in despair, and, retiring to Cumæ, died there. Niebuhr declares that the greater portion of the history of the Tarquins is fabulous.
Died 495 B.C.

TARRAGONA, tar'-ra-go'-na, a north-eastern province of Spain, bordering on the Mediterranean. It is traversed by mountain ranges, the offsets of which extend to the coast, with fertile valleys intervening. The hills are covered with forests of pine, oak, and cork, and there are extensive vineyards. The only river of importance is the Ebro.

Minerals.—Lead, copper, manganese, and silver.
Area.—2,451 square miles.
Pop.—337,668.

TARRAGONA, a seaport city of Spain, capital of the above province, near the mouth of the Francoli, in the Mediterranean, 52 miles from Barcelona. It is built on a hill, and surrounded by walls with turrets. The cathedral is built in the Gothic style, and there are an archbishop's palace and various educational institutions. Manf. Soap, spirits, coarse cloth, hats, and barrels. There is an export trade in Barcelona nuts, wine, brandy, and almonds. Pop. 23,000.—Under the Romans this was a place of great importance, and there are remains of an amphitheatre and aqueduct. The town was captured by the Goths and destroyed by the Moors, after which it was uninhabited for four centuries. In the middle ages several church councils were held here, and in 1811 it was taken by storm by the French under Marshal Suchet.

TARRANT, tar'-rant, a county of Texas, United States. Area, 900 square miles. Pop. 24,671. The capital is Fort Worth.

TARSUS, or TARSOUS, tar'-sus, a city of Asia Minor, on the right bank of the Cydnus, 20 miles S.W. of Adana. There are an ancient church, a number of mosques, and several handsome caravanserais. The port is 10 miles distant from the town. Grain, cotton, copper, and gall-nuts are exported. Pop. 8,000.—This is a very ancient town. It was taken by Alexander, and under the Romans was one of the most splendid cities of the East.

TARTAGLIA, NICCOLO, tar-tal'-ya, an Italian mathematician, who was the son of a porter, and was left an orphan in his sixth year. His surname is unknown; that by which he is called, signifying "stammerer," being a derisive epithet bestowed upon him in his youth, because of an impediment in his speech, which arose from his having been wounded in the mouth by a French soldier at the taking of Brescia, in 1512. He became professor of mathematics at Brescia, which place he quitted for Venice, where he held a like appointment. He composed a number of learned works upon natural philosophy, algebra, and military engineering.

Born at Brescia, about 1500; died at Venice, 1559.

TARTARY, or TATARY, tar'-ta-re, the name vaguely given to a most extensive region of Asia, occupying nearly the whole central part of that continent, interposed between Asiatic Russia on the north, and Persia, India, and China on the south. The designation is now generally limited to Turkistan. Pop. of Chinese Tartary, 580,000.

TARTARY, CRIM. (See CRIMEA.)

TARTINI, GIUSEPPE, tar-te'-ne, an Italian musician, who first studied law and theology, but afterwards music, especially the violin. He eloped with one of his pupils, and was in concealment for two years, but was then forgiven, and being the finest violinist in Europe, was appointed master of the band in the church of St. Anthony, at Padua. His works are Sonatas, and a treatise on music. His most famous composition is the "Devil's Sonata," otherwise known as "Tartini's Dream."

Born at Pirano, 1692; died at Padua, 1770.

TARUDANT, or TERODANT, ta'-ru-dant, chief city of the province of Sus, Morocco, 44 miles from the Atlantic coast. Manf. Leather, dyes, and copper pots and kettles. Pop. 35,000.

TASHKEND, tash'-kend, a city of Turkestan, Asia, formerly belonging to Khokan, but now under Russian rule, 150 miles N.W. of the city of Khokan. It is walled, and surrounded by extensive orchards, and most of the houses are surrounded by gardens and vineyards. There are a large fortified palace, more than 300 mosques, and many colleges and old temples. It is a very important commercial city, the chief line of communication with northern Asia and India concentrating therein. Pop. 100,000, mostly Mahometans. Lat. 43° N. Lon. 68° 40' E. —The city was captured by the Russians in 1865.

TASMAN, ABEL JANSSEN, tas'-man, a Dutch navigator, who, having distinguished himself in the service of the Dutch East-India Company, was commissioned by Anthony Van Diemen, the governor, to explore the coast of the Australian continent. Tasman sailed from Batavia in 1642. He first discovered a land which he named Van Diemen (now Tasmania), and afterwards New Zealand and the archipelagos of the Fiji and Friendly Islands. In 1644 he set sail upon a second voyage, the results of which were not made known, and in the course of which he died.

Born at Hoorn, about 1600; died about 1644.

TASMANIA, or VAN DIEMEN'S LAND, tas-mai'-ne-a, a British colony, opposite the southern extremity of the Australian mainland, from which it is divided by Bass's Straits, about 120 miles wide. The island is 240 miles long and 200 miles in extreme breadth, beautiful, well watered, and rich in harbours and inlets, traversed by high mountain chains, full of crags, glens, and ravines of commanding appearance, the basaltic cliffs of some being several hundred feet in perpendicular height. Everywhere there are good anchorages, and many excellent harbours. The principal are, on the west coast, Port Davy (much frequented by whaling vessels) and Macquarie Harbour; on the north coast, Stanley at Circular Head, Emu Bay, Port Frederick at the mouth of the Mersey, Port Dalrymple at the mouth of the Tamar, and Waterhouse Roads, between Anderson and Ringarooma Bays; on the east coast, George's Bay, Oyster Bay, Spring Bay, and Fortesque Bay, and on the south-east, Port Arthur, Storm Bay, Norfolk Bay, D'Entrecasteaux Channel, Port Esperance, Southport, and Recherche Bay. There are two mountain chains, separated by the central district, through which is the communication between the north and the south of the island. That to the east, or the dividing range, winding in its course through the island, has an average height of 3,750 feet, and an average distance of 40 miles from the sea. It runs nearly north and south parallel with the east coast, and among the peaks are Row Tor, 3,895 feet: Mount Barrow, 4,644 feet; Mount Victoria, 3,964 feet; Ben Nevis, 3,910 feet: Ben Lomond, 5,010 feet; Mount Nicholas, 2,812 feet; and Brown Mountain, 2,598 feet. The western chain consists of an elevated table-land, averaging 3,000 feet in height, in the centre of the island, which contains all the large lakes, and from which diverge numerous ranges in all directions except to the eastward. The table-land has the following peaks:—Table Mountain, 3,596 feet; Miller's Bluff, 3,977 feet; Dry's Bluff, 4,257 feet: Quamby Bluff; Ironstone Mountain, 4,736 feet; Cradle Mountain, 5,069 feet (the highest in the colony); the Du Cane Range; Mount Olympus; Mount Humboldt, 4,520 feet; Mount Hugel; Mount William, 4,360 feet; and Mount Hobhouse, 4,031 feet. Among the other diverging ranges and peaks are, to the north, Mount Roland, 4,047 feet; Black Bluff, 4,381 feet: Valentine's Peak, 3,637 feet, to the west, Mount Dundas; Mount Murchison: the Eldon Range, 4,789 feet; the Frenchman's Cap, 4,756 feet; to the south are Wyld's Crag, 4,399 feet; Mount Field, 4,721 feet; Mount Anne; the Arthur Range, 3,668 feet; Mount Picton, 4,340 feet; Mount Wellington, 4,166 feet; Adamson's, Peak 4,017 feet; and Mount La Perouse, 3,800 feet. In appearance the colony of Tasmania is more English than its neighbours. The surface of the island is uneven, and presents every variety of scenery, including large tracts of agricultural country, studded with homesteads, and made pleasant to the English eye by the subdivision into fields and highly-cultivated gardens, fenced by hedges such as adorn the landscapes of Britain. The climate is remarkable for its extreme mildness, being, by its geographical position, removed from the extremes of heat or cold. The summers are not unpleasantly hot, and the winters are never so cold, even in the more elevated table-lands, as to put a stop to the operations of the agriculturist. The north-west hot winds of the Australian continent occasionally reach Tasmania, but are greatly subdued in temperature by their passage over Bass's Straits. The climate is decidedly breezy and invigorating, and exercises almost miraculous restorative powers on the enfeebled constitutions of visitors from hotter countries. Generally speaking, throughout the summer months there are alternate land and sea breezes every twenty-four hours, which tend to cool the atmosphere in the hottest days. The prevailing winds are from the north-west and the south-east. September, October, and November are spring months, at which time the weather is bright and clear. December, January, and February are summer months, during which there is little rain. March, April, and May are autumn months, generally the pleasantest season of the year. June, July, and August are winter months. The soil is very fertile, producing abundantly all the cereals, vegetables and fruits of temperate climates. Extensive forests afford valuable timber. Cattle, sheep, pigs, and horses are extensively reared.

Islands.—The principal islands belonging to Tasmania are 55 in number. The chief are the Furneaux group, at the east end of Bass's Straits, including Flinder's Island, Cape Barren Island, Clarke Island, Chappell Island, and Kent's group. These islands are inhabited by persons who procure a living by seal-fishing and preserving mutton-birds. Many of them are half-castes, the offspring of marriages between the sealers and aboriginal women. At the west end of Bass's Straits are King's Island (this island has acquired an evil reputation from the numerous fatal wrecks that have taken place on its shores); Robbin's Island, and Hunter's Islands. Other islands of importance are, Waterhouse Island, Swan Island, Schouten Island, Maria Island, Bruni Island, Slopen, Franklin, and Huon Islands.

Rivers and Lakes.—The principal rivers are, the Derwent (on the estuary of which is Hobart Town) which issues from Lake St. Clair, receiving in its course the Nive, Dee, Ouse, Clyde, and Jordan, from the north, and the Florentine, Russell, Styx, and Plenty, from the south; the Huon, which receives the Cracroft and Picton, and falls into D'Entrecasteaux Channel; the Coal River, rising in the eastern chain of mountains, and running south into Pittwater. The mouths of these three rivers are to the south-east of Tasmania. To the south-west and west are, the Davey River, the Gordon, receiving in its course the Wedge, Denison, Serpentine, and Franklin rivers, falls into Macquarie Harbour; King's River also falls into Macquarie Harbour; the Pieman River, consisting of the rivers Mackintosh, Murchison, Huskisson, and Donaldson; the Arthur River, which receives the Hellyer. On the north, flowing into Bass's Straits, are the Inglis, the Emu, the Leven, the Forth, the Mersey, the Tamar—a tidal river formed by the confluence of the North and South Esk at Launceston. The North Esk receives the St. Patrick's River about 15 miles up, and the South Esk receives as tributaries the Meander, Lake River, Macquarie River, and St. Paul's River. Another large river falling into Bass's Straits is the Ringarooma. On the east coast the only river of importance is George's River, running into George's Bay. There are several lakes, the largest being the Great Lake, covering an area of 28,000 acres; Lake Sorell, 17,000 acres; and Lake St. Clair, 10,000 acres; and Arthur's Lake and Lake Echo, occupying 8,000 to 12,000 acres.

Zoology.—The larger animals indigenous to the colony are the kangaroo, wallaby, native hyæna, Tasmanian wolf, or "devil" (the largest carnivorous animal in Australasia), wombat, otter, platipus, opossum, and tiger-cat; smaller ones are the kangaroo-rat, bandicoot, and native cat. Among reptiles are several species of snake, lizard, and iguanas, also tortoises, scorpions, centipedes, and tarantulas. Insect life of all kinds is almost as prevalent as in the other colonies. The feathered tribes are abundantly represented both in land and aquatic birds.

Minerals.—Abundant, including iron, tin, copper, gold, lead, bismuth, coal, limestone, and white freestone.

Area.—26,215 square miles.

Pop.—131,000. The last Tasmanian aborigine was a woman, the widow of the last native chief. She died in May, 1876.

Divisions and Chief Towns.—The colony is divided into 18 counties—Arthur, Buckingham, Cornwall, Cumberland, Devon, Dorset, Franklin, Glamergan, Kent, Lincoln, Monmouth, Montagu, Montgomery, Pembroke, Russell, Somerset, Wellington, and Westmoreland. The most important towns are HOBART TOWN (the capital) and LAUNCESTON.

Railways and Telegraphs.—The Tasmanian railways are generally the property of companies, aided by government guarantees; about 400 miles in all. The post-office is in full operation, and the telegraphs include a cable to Victoria.

Government.—The government is subject to a Parliament of two elective houses, under a governor.

Religion and Education.—Religious organisations are all upon the voluntary principle, most of the sects being well represented. Primary and higher education is under an elaborate system specially adopted by this colony.

History.—The island was discovered by Tasman in 1642. (See TASMAN.) An English penal settlement was established in 1803; in 1804 Port Dalrymple was settled from Sydney, and in the following year Launceston. In 1825 it became an independent colony, and the name given by Tasman, Van Diemen's Land, was officially changed to Tasmania in 1856. The constitution was settled by act of parliament in 1855.

TASSISUDON, tas-sis-su-don, the capital of Bootan, India, 380 miles N.E. of Calcutta. There is a very strong citadel.

TASSO, TORQUATO, tas'-so, an Italian poet. His father, Bernardo Tasso, also a poet, was secretary to Ferrante Sanseverino, prince of Salerno, who, being charged to represent to Charles V. the injustice of Don Pedro de Toledo, Spanish viceroy of Naples, was obliged to fly to France, and was accompanied by Bernardo Tasso and his son, who, though he was but nine years old, wrote verses on their misfortune, in which he compared himself to young Ascanius escaping with Æneas. Young Tasso was sent to Padua to study the law, and while there he wrote his poem of "Rinaldo," at the age of 18. In 1565 he was taken into the service of cardinal d'Este, brother of the duke of Ferrara, with whose sister, the princess Eleanora, he fell in love. This fatal passion proved the source of that melancholy humour of which he was the prey during twenty years. He had a great friendship, too, for Lucrezia, afterwards duchess of Urbino, Eleanora's sister. The duke of Ferrara, however, was unaware of this poetical passion, and made Tasso his especial favourite. Quitting Ferrara, he went to his sister, at Sorrento, but his love for the princess becoming stronger by absence, he returned to the court of Ferrara, where, in the presence of the duke, he had the imprudence to throw a knife at one of the domestics of his patron, who ordered Tasso to be taken to a convent, and there confined, as a man deprived of his reason. Effecting his escape from this place shortly afterwards, he repaired to Naples, where for some time he enjoyed repose. After wandering over Italy in an erratic manner, Tasso, in 1579, returned to Ferrara, when, being refused admittance to the duke's presence, he uttered some contemptuous words as to the family of Este; whereupon he was arrested, and during seven years confined in the hospital of Santa Anna as a lunatic. At length he obtained his liberty, through the intercession of Vincenzo Gonzaga, son of the duke of Mantua. In 1592 pope Clement VIII., who was a great admirer of his talents, called him to Rome, where he was received with honourable marks of distinction; and great preparations were made for solemnly crowning him in the Capitol as the prince of poets, when he fell sick, and died on the evening before the intended ceremony. The work which has immortalized his name is the epic poem of "Jerusalem Delivered."

Born at Sorrento, 1544; died at Rome, 1595.

TASSONI, ALEXANDER, tas-so'-ne, an Italian poet. His "Secchia Rapita," or "Rape of the Bucket," a mock-heroic poem, was written on the occasion of the war between Modena and Bologna. Besides this, he wrote "Observations on Petrarch," and an abridgment of the Ecclesiastical Annals of Baronius.

Born at Modena, 1565; died there, 1635.

TATCHIO, tat'-cho-o, capital of Tsusim, an island between Japan and Corea. It is the residence of an independent prince. Pop. 10,000.

TATE, NAHUM, tait, an Irish poet, who was appointed laureate in 1692. Tate wrote "Panacea," a poem on tea; ten dramatic pieces, a number of poems on various subjects, an adaptation of Shakspeare's "King Lear," which long held the stage, and, in conjunction with Brady, he translated the Psalms into metre. He died in poverty in the Mint, Southwark, then a sanctuary for debtors.

Born at Dublin, 1652; died 1715.

TATIANUS of Syria, tai'-shi-ai'-nus, a Platonic philosopher, who became a convert to Christianity, and a disciple of Justin Martyr. He still, however, retained the Platonic ideas, and fell into errors, particularly that of Marcian, respecting the two supreme principles of good and evil. He rejected some of St. Paul's epistles, and formed a sect called the Encratites, or Tatianists, who abstained from marriage and animal food and wine, and required worldly goods to be given up as an evidence of Christian sanctity. He was the author of a "Discourse to the Greeks."

Lived in the 2nd century.

TATIUS, tai'-shi-us, in the legendary history of Rome, king of the Sabines, who, to revenge the rape of the Sabine women, made war upon the Romans, and by treachery, obtained possession of the Capitol. (See TARPEIA.) The mediation of the Sabine women effected a reconciliation, and Tatius brought his subjects to reside at Rome, where he shared the government with Romulus, who is, however, supposed to have caused him to be murdered at Lavinium.

Died 742 B.C.

TATNALL, tat'-nal, a county of Georgia, United States. Area, 1,200 square miles. Pop. 5,000, nearly one-third being coloured. The capital is Reedsville.

TATSEEN-LOO, tat'-seen-loo, a town of China, province of Sze-chuen, a military frontier, and strongly fortified. Important annual fairs are held. Pop. 50,000.

TATTA, tat'-ta, a town of British India, in Sinde, near the banks of the Indus, 48 miles S.W. of Hyderabad. Its principal edifice is a brick mosque, erected by Shah-Jehan. The cemetery is ancient. Pop. About 10,000.—This place is supposed to be the Patala of the historians of Alexander the Great.

TATTA, a town of Morocco, on the borders of the Desert, 215 miles S.E. of the city of Morocco. It is a great caravan station, and a large annual fair is held. Pop. 10,000.

TAUBMANN, FRIEDRICH, toub'-man, a German writer and poet, who became professor of poetry and eloquence at the university of Wittenberg, and was also appointed court-poet. He greatly contributed to revive the study of the Latin language, by producing a dissertation upon that subject, which was published a year after his death. He also edited the works of Plautus and Virgil, and enjoyed the reputation of being one of the wittiest men of his age. His poems were composed in Latin.

Born at Wontees, near Baireuth, 1565; died at Wittenberg, 1613.

TAULER, JOHANN, tou'-ler, a German theologian and mystic, who, at the age of 18, became a Dominican, studied at Paris, and afterwards became a leading member of the brotherhood of priests and laymen, who styled themselves the "friends of God." In 1348 the Emperor Charles IV. having summoned him at Strasburg to give an account of his life and faith, he left the city, but returned shortly before his death. He wrote a treatise "On Following the Lowly Life of Christ," and denounced ecclesiastical abuses.

Born 1290; died at Strasburg, 1361.

TAUNTON, tawn'-ton, a market-town and municipal and parliamentary borough and capital of Somersetshire, on the Tone, 10 miles from Bridgewater. The chief public buildings are the St. Mary Magdalene and St. James's churches, the former a splendid building, in the Gothic style of architecture. The tower was rebuilt in 1862. There are a new church, St. John the Evangelist, and a new Roman Catholic church and convent. Part of the castle still remains, but is now converted to various uses. Outside the town, at Fairwater, is a Congregationalist college, established in 1868. A very fine shire-hall, in the Elizabethan style, was erected in 1859. Manf. Gloves. Pop. 16,620.—A station on the Great Western railway. Taunton is a place of great antiquity, and numerous Roman coins have been found in its neighbourhood. It was a chief residence of the West-Saxon kings, especially of Ina. In 1645 it was held by Blake for the parliament, and sustained a long siege by the Royalist army.

TAUNTON, a city and one of the shire towns of Bristol county, Massachusetts, United States, on the Taunton river, 32 miles S. of Boston. There are 19 churches, a fine state hospital for the insane, a public library, and several public schools. Manf. Iron, copper, silver-plate, locomotives, linen, and bricks. Pop. 21,000.—The town was settled in 1638 by a company from Taunton, England. It became a city in 1864.

TAURELLIUS. (See TORRELLI.)

TAURIDA, or KRIM, tawr'-re-da, a government in the south of European Russia, comprising the peninsula of the Crimea, which comprises about one-third of the area (see CRIMEA), a considerable tract to the north of the peninsula between the Dnieper and the Berda, the island of Taman, and the land of the Tschernomorski, or Black-Sea Cossacks, lying to the east of the Crimea. It is diversified with mountains, plains, and salt lakes. On the mainland it is nearly a desert steppe, entirely destitute of trees, but there are some fertile valleys. Vast herds of sheep are reared by the Tartars, who live chiefly on millet and the produce of their herds. The capital is SIMFEROPOL.

Minerals.—Salt, saltpetre, naphtha, and marble.
Area.—24,537 square miles.
Pop.—964,329, a large proportion being Tartars.

TAURUS, taw'-rus, a range of mountains of Asia Minor. (See ASIA MINOR.)

TAUSAN, TAUSSEN, or TAGESEN, JAN, taus'-sen, a Danish divine, who, meeting accidentally with some of the writings of Luther, was so impressed by them as to proceed to Wittenberg, to study under the Reformer. Returning to Denmark in 1521, he preached sermons upon the new doctrines, and with so much effect, that Protestantism began to take root throughout the kingdom. In 1541 he was appointed Protestant bishop of Ripen. He was the author of a large number of controversial works.

Born at Birkinde, in the island of Funen, 1494; died 1561.

TAVANNES, GASPARD DE SAULX, Lord of, ta-van', a French general, who, while a page to Francis I., was, with that monarch, taken prisoner at Pavia. He subsequently distinguished himself by his bravery at La Rochelle, in 1543, and at the battle of Cerisoles in the following year. Appointed to the command of the army, he took Metz in 1552, and, two years later, went to the succour of the pope in Italy. He had a principal share in the education of the young duke of Anjou, afterwards Henry III. of France, and, in 1560, participated in the victories of Jarnac and Moncontour over the Protestants. For these services he was created a marshal of France. Always vehemently opposed to the doctrines of the Reformers, he has been charged with being one of the chief promoters of the massacre of St. Bartholomew.

Born at Dijon, 1509; died 1573.

TAVASTEHUUS, ta-vast'-hoos, a government of European Russia, in Finland. It is mountainous, and there are many lakes. The capital is Tavastehuus, 85 miles N.E. of Abo. Area, 8,324 square miles. Pop. 230,438, all Lutherans.

TAVIRA, ta-vee'-ra, a seaport-town of Portugal, province of Algarve, at the mouth of the river Seca. There is a considerable coasting trade, and the fisheries are important. Pop. 11,000.

TAVISTOCK, tav'-is-tok, a market-town, municipal and parliamentary borough of Devonshire, on the Tavy, 11 miles N. of Plymouth. The church is an ancient and spacious building, and the abbey was, at one time, a very magnificent building. Various fragments of it are still in existence, though mostly incorporated with other buildings. A new church, at the west end of the town, was built in 1867. There is a bronze statue of the duke of Bedford, erected in 1864. Manf. Serges, woollens, and iron. There are large copper mines in the vicinity. Pop. 13,449.—A station on the Great Western and London and South-Western railways.

TAVOY, or TAVAI, ta-voi', one of the Tenasserim districts of Lower Burma, with a hilly surface intersected by fine valleys. It produces rice, cotton, indigo, fruits and tobacco, and is rich in tin and iron. The chief town is of the same name. Pop. of district, 84,988.

TAY, tai, a river of Scotland, rising on the frontiers of Lorn, in Argyleshire, and passing through Loch Dochart and Loch Tay. After being increased by various tributary streams, it runs to Perth; a little below which it turns to the east, and receiving the waters of the Ern, and passing through the Carse of Gowrie, it enlarges itself to about 3 miles broad; but contracts to 2 miles at Dundee, about 8 miles below which it opens into the German Ocean. The total length of the course is about 120 miles. At Dundee the estuary is crossed by the longest railway bridge in the world, completed and opened in September, 1877. It is two miles long, with 85 spans, varying in length from 67 feet to 245 feet, with a clear height of 88 feet above high water mark. This splendid bridge connects the North British and Caledonian railways.

TAYLOR, BAYARD, an American author and traveller, who was apprenticed to a printer, and in 1844 left his native country upon a course of travel in England, Switzerland, France, Germany, and Italy, an account of which he published after his return to the United States, in a work entitled, "Views Afoot, or Europe seen with the Knapsack and Staff." Attracting a large amount of attention, this work gave the young writer a position among the literary circles of his country. In 1846 he became one of the editors of the New York Tribune, in which journal he inserted a series of sketches of life in California. In 1851 he returned to Europe, and after travelling along the shores of the Mediterranean, went eastward and visited India, China, and Japan. He also sojourned in Syria, Asia Minor, Sicily, and Egypt; and in 1874 visited Iceland, on occasion of the millennial celebration. He has published a great number of works of travel, poems, novels, biographies, and translations.

Born in Pennsylvania, 1825; died 1878.

TAYLOR, BROOK, an English mathematician. In 1701 he entered of St. John's College, Cambridge, and in 1708 wrote his "Treatise on the centre of Oscillation." In 1709 he took the degree of bachelor of laws. He was chosen secretary to the Royal Society in 1714, and in the same year took his degree of doctor of laws. He published several elaborate works on mathematical subjects.

Born at Edmonton, 1685; died 1731.

TAYLOR, HENRY, Sir, a modern English poet, who was engaged in the department of the Colonial Office, where he rose to a senior clerkship. His leisure was devoted to literature, and he produced several dramatic works in prose and verse, and a number of essays, which exhibited qualities of a very high order. The principal of these were —"Isaac Comnenus," a play in verse, and in five acts; "Philip van Artevelde," a dramatic romance; "The Statesman," a work in prose; "Edwin the Fair," an historical drama; the "Eve of the Conquest," and other poems; the "Virgin Widow," and "Notes from Life," and "Notes from Books." He was knighted in 1869.

Born 1800.

TAYLOR, HENRY, an English divine, who wrote several learned works, as—"An Essay on the Beauty of the Divine Economy;" "Ben Mordecai's Apology for embracing Christianity;" "Thoughts on the Nature of the Grand Apostasy of the Christian Churches."

Died 1785.

TAYLOR, ISAAC, an English writer, who was originally a line-engraver, but subsequently became minister of an Independent congregation at Colchester, in Essex. He gave his children, several of whom were distinguished in literature, a careful training under his own superintendence. He was the author of several works for the young. His family were all remarkable for literary ability.

Died 1829.

TAYLOR, ISAAC, theological, historical, and philosophical writer. He was the son of the preceding, under whose superintendence he received a careful private education. He studied art, and invented two engraving-machines. At an early age he made a translation of Herodotus, and afterwards devoted himself to the composition of works which display deeply reflective habits and profound religious feeling as the characteristics of their author. His principal works were—"History of the Transmission of Ancient Books to Modern Times;" the "Physical Theory of Another Life;" "Spiritual Christianity;" "The Natural History of Enthusiasm;" "The Natural History of Fanaticism;" "Loyola and Jesuitism;" "Wesley and Methodism;" and the "Restoration of Belief." He likewise contributed many articles to the reviews. In 1862 he received a civil service pension of £100.

Born at Lavenham, Suffolk, 1787: died at Stanford Rivers, Essex, 1865.

TAYLOR, ANN, sister of the preceding. In conjunction with her sister, Jane, she published a number of works for juvenile reading of great merit. A small volume of verses for children, with the modest title, "Original Poems," achieved an almost unexampled success, and is still in considerable demand. In 1813 she married the Rev. Joseph Gilbert, a Congregational minister of Nottingham.

Born 1783; died 1866.

TAYLOR, JANE, sister of the above, authoress of a tale, "Display," a constant contributor to religious periodicals, and a writer of charming poetry for children.

Born 1783; died 1824.

TAYLOR, ISIDORE SEVERIN JUSTIN, Baron, a modern French antiquary and traveller, who was descended of an Irish family naturalised in France. He served in the army, from which he retired for the purpose of pursuing literary and artistic studies. In 1824 he was appointed royal commissioner of the Théâtre Français. The government of Charles X. sent him to Egypt to obtain the obelisk of Luxor and other rare objects of antiquity. After the revolution of 1830, Louis Philippe appointed him inspector of the fine arts; in which capacity he visited Italy, Sicily, Spain, Greece, Turkey, Asia Minor, Egypt, and Africa, bringing home from these countries a valuable collection of archæological treasures, which have found a place in the Louvre and other French museums. His most important productions were—"Picturesque and Romantic Travels in Old France," and a series of artistic works upon Spain, Portugal, the coast of Africa, Egypt, Switzerland, and Italy. He was a member of the Academy of Fine Arts, and a commander of the Legion of Honour, and in 1869 was made a senator.

Born at Brussels, 1789.

TAYLOR, JEREMY, an English prelate, who was the son of a barber at Cambridge, where he received his education at Caius College, after which he entered into orders, and became so eminent a preacher, that Archbishop Laud procured him a fellowship of All Souls College, Oxford. He was also appointed chaplain to that prelate, and rector of Uppingham, in Rutlandshire. In 1642 he received the degree of doctor of divinity from Charles I., whose chaplain he was, and to whose cause he adhered. After the defeat of the royalists, he retired to Caermarthenshire, where he taught a school for a livelihood. He afterwards went with Lord Conway to Ireland, where he wrote his "Cases of Conscience." He afterward suffered imprisonment for his royalist sympathies. Charles II., at his restoration, preferred Taylor to the bishopric of Down and Connor. In the same year he became privy councillor and vice-chancellor of Trinity College, Dublin. Bishop Taylor wrote, among other eloquent works, "The Great Exemplar, or the Life and Death of Jesus Christ;" "Holy Living and Dying;" and several sermons and controversial and pious treatises. His second wife was a natural daughter of Charles I.

Born at Cambridge, 1613; died at Lisburn, Ireland, 1667.

TAYLOR, JOHN, commonly called "the water-poet." He was educated at the free school, Gloucester, and afterwards bound apprentice to a London waterman. Notwithstanding the laboriousness of this employment, he wrote a number of poetical pieces, for which he took the appellation of the king's water-poet. He served for a short time in the fleet, and was present at the siege of Cadiz. An enthusiastic royalist, he, at the outbreak of the Revolution, went to Oxford, where he kept a tavern, which was much resorted to by the students. Taylor aided the royal cause by his satires and songs. When Oxford surrendered, he returned to London, and opened a public-house, setting up the sign of the "Mourning Crown." This, however, he was obliged to remove. He composed upwards of eighty pieces in prose and verse, which exhibit the workings of a vigorous but uneducated mind. These effusions contain many curious pictures of the time in which their author lived.

Born at Gloucester, 1580; died in London, 1654.

TAYLOR, SIR ROBERT, an English sculptor and architect, who was very fortunate in his profession, and obtained the appointments of surveyor to the Admiralty, Bank of England, Greenwich Hospital, and the Foundling Hospital. While holding the office of sheriff of London, in 1783, he was created a knight. He bequeathed a sum of money to the university of Oxford, wherewith to found an institute for the study of modern languages. With these funds were erected the Taylor Buildings, at Oxford. At the time of his death he had realised a fortune of £180,000, though he was known to say that he began life with hardly eighteen pence.

Born in London, 1714; died there, 1788.

TAYLOR, ROWLAND, an English divine and martyr, who is claimed as ancestor of Bishop Jeremy Taylor, by Heber. Archbishop Cranmer, whose chaplain Taylor was, appointed him to a living in Suffolk. Under the reign of Mary he was summoned to London, to answer the charges brought against him of having married, and refusing to celebrate mass in his church. He was condemned to be burnt at the stake; which sentence was carried out on Aldham Common, near Hadleigh, Suffolk.

Died 1555.

TAYLOR, WILLIAM, an English writer, who was designed for a commercial career. When about 20, he commenced making translations from the German, in which department he afterwards acquired considerable distinction. His first publication of importance was an English reproduction of Bürger's "Lenore." To Taylor is unquestionably due the honour of first making the English reader acquainted with the literary treasures of Germany.

Born at Norwich, 1765; died there, 1836.

TAYLOR, ZACHARY, twelfth president of the United States of North America. He was the son of Colonel Taylor, an officer of the revolutionary war, and served in the war of 1812, and, for his defence of Fort Harrison, on the Wabash river, was raised to the rank of major; in 1819 he became lieutenant-colonel, having previously distinguished himself as commander at Green Bay, on Lake Michigan. In the Black-Hawk war, and in the Seminole war, he evinced as much tact as bravery in the execution of several harassing employments. In 1840 he was appointed to the chief command of the south-western division of the United States army. After the annexation of Texas, he was ordered to protect the new state from a threatened invasion from Mexico; but after remaining upon the defensive for several months, he proceeded westward, and having encountered the Mexican army under Santa Anna, numbering 20,000 men, he inflicted a signal defeat upon it at Buenavista, although his own force was not greater than 6,000. This decisive engagement led to the peace of 1848, after which he retired to his estate in Louisiana. In the same year, however, he was put in nomination and elected to the presidentship of the United States. He strongly opposed the action of the secession party.

Born in Virginia, 1784; died at Washington, 1850.

TELEMACHUS, te-lem'-a-kus, in Greek legend a son of Ulysses and Penelope. His story, as related in Homer's "Odyssey," was used as the subject of a celebrated moral romance by Fénélon.

TELEMANN, GEORG PHILIP, tel'-e-man, a German musician, who, as composer to the Lyric Theatre at Hamburg, produced 30 operas, and composed 600 overtures. He was the companion of the great Handel during the student days of the young men.

Born at Magdeburg, 1681; died 1767.

TELEPHUS, tel'-e-fus, in Greek legend a king of Mysia, son of Hercules and Auge. He was exposed as soon as born on Mount Parthenius; but his life was preserved by a goat, and by some shepherds. He married one of the daughters of Priam, king of Troy, whom he assisted against the Greeks.

TELFAIR, tel'-fair, a county of Georgia, United States. Area, 925 square miles. Pop. 3,300, about one-third being coloured.—The capital is Jacksonville.

TELFORD, THOMAS, tel-ford, a civil engineer, who was the son of a shepherd in Dumfriesshire, and, after receiving some little education in the parish school of Westerkirk, was, in his 14th year, apprenticed to a stonemason. He continued to work at this business in the rural districts of Scotland and at Edinburgh, until about the year 1782, when he repaired to London, and found employment there, and afterwards at Plymouth on works of magnitude. After being engaged to erect more than forty bridges, he was, about 1793, appointed civil engineer to the Ellesmere Canal Company, to connect the Severn, the Dee, and the Mersey, by a number of navigations. The Caledonian Canal, the Glasgow, Paisley, and Ardrossan, the Macclesfield, the Birmingham and Liverpool Junction, the Weaver Navigation in Cheshire, were, at a subsequent period, either entirely or partially constructed by him. The Gotha Canal, in Sweden, was also his work. In 1802 he was appointed engineer to the Commissioners of Highland Roads and Bridges, and executed considerable works. The improved road from London to Holyhead, the Menai suspension-bridge, St. Katharine's docks, London, and the harbour works at Aberdeen and Dundee, are held to be his greatest triumphs as an engineer. He left an account of all his undertakings. In early life he wrote some poetical pieces in imitation of Ramsay and Fergusson, which were inserted, under the signature of Eskdale Tam, in Ruddiman's "Weekly Magazine." In later years he wrote articles on Architecture, Civil Architecture, and Inland Navigation, for Brewster's "Edinburgh Encyclopædia." He was never married, and, until his 70th year, had never known any serious illness. He left £2,000 to be awarded in annual premiums by the Institution of Civil Engineers, and £1,000 to the minister of his native parish, for the establishment and continual supply of books to a library there. He was a fellow of the Royal Societies of Edinburgh and England.

Born in the district of Eskdale, Dumfriesshire, 1757; died in London, 1834.

TELL, a district in the north-west of Africa. (See AFRICA.)

TELL, WILLIAM, tel, a legendary hero of Switzerland, whose adventures, shooting an arrow at an apple placed on the head of his own son, killing the Austrian governor Gessler, and effecting the liberation of the country in 1307, have formed the subject of many poems and dramas. Modern investigators consider the legend to be fabulous. In 1307, Gessler, the Austrian governor for the emperor Albert, placed the ducal hat of his master upon a pole, which was set up in the market-place at Altorf, and all who passed were required to make obeisance to it. This was refused by Tell, who was sentenced to shoot an arrow at an apple placed on the head of his own son. He fortunately succeeded in cleaving the apple without injuring the child.

TELLEZ, GABRIEL, tel'-laith, a Spanish dramatist, who takes rank immediately after Calderon and Lope de Vega. He is said to have written more than three hundred plays, the greater number of which were destroyed at the order of the Inquisition. He always wrote under an assumed name, "Tirso de Molina," being of the clerical profession, and his comedies being marked by considerable license both in words and morals.

Born at Madrid, probably in 1585; died 1675.

TELLICHERRY, tel'-li-cher'-re, a fortified seaport of British India, province of Madras, 90 miles S.E. of Mangalore. It was formerly the chief settlement on the Malabar coast, but has much declined, although still inhabited by a number of rich native merchants, and the principal mart for sandal-wood and cardamums. The town is protected by a fort, and the harbour has a natural breakwater. Pop. as enumerated, 26,410. Lat. 11° 45′ N. Lon. 75° 33′ E.

TELLIER, FRANCOIS MICHAEL LE. (See LOUVOIS, Marquis de.)

TEMANZA, TOMMASA, tai-man'-dza, an Italian architect and writer upon architecture, who constructed the church of La Maddalena at Venice, the Rotunda at Piazzolo, &c. He was the author of "Lives of the most eminent Venetian Architects and Sculptors;" "Civil Architecture;" the "Antiquities of Rimini;" and a number of dissertations upon various branches of architecture. He became chief of the Commission of Inquirers at Venice.

Born at Venice, 1705; died at the same city, 1789.

TEMES, or TEMESCH, tem-esh', a river of Hungary, rising in the eastern Carpathian Mountains, and, after a course of 300 miles, joining the Danube, on the left bank, a little above Pancsova.

TEMESVAR, tem-esh-var', a fortified city of Hungary, capital of a county of the same name, and one of the strongest fortresses of the country, 74 miles S.W. of Belgrade, at the junction of the river Temes and the Bega canal. It consists of the town proper and four suburbs. Of its public buildings, the chief are the cathedral, a Greek and a Catholic church, monasteries, hospitals, a synagogue, and extensive barracks for the garrison. Manf. Silk, iron goods, woollens, and leather. Pop. 33,694, chiefly Germans. The city was held by the Turks, despite a number of sieges, from 1552 to 1716, when it was taken by the Austrians, who made it the capital of the Banat. In 1849 it was besieged by the Hungarians, who were signally defeated by Haynau. A monument commemorates the siege.

TEMISCOUATA, tai'-mis-koo'-a-ta, a county of Quebec province, dominion of Canada, to the north-west of New Brunswick. Area, 1,771 square miles. Pop. 25,484, nearly all of French origin. The capital is Isle Verte.

TEMPE, tem'-pe, a valley of Turkey in Europe, in the north-east of Thessaly, between Mounts Olympus and Ossa, famous in antiquity for its beauty.

TEMPLE, WILLIAM, Sir, tem'-pel, an English statesman and diplomatist, the son of the Master of the Rolls in Ireland. He was educated at Cambridge, and afterwards resided for some time in Ireland. At the Restoration he became a member of the Irish Convention; but in 1633 he repaired to England. He rendered important services as ambassador to the United Provinces, particularly in effecting the league between England, Holland, and Sweden in 1668, known as the Triple Alliance, and in bringing about the marriage of the prince of Orange (afterwards William III.) with Mary, daughter of the duke of York. In 1680 he retired from public affairs, and divided his time between his books and his gardens; but he was often consulted by the ministers, and by king William in person. His works consist of Memoirs, Letters, Miscellanies, and "Observations on the United Provinces of the Netherlands." Macaulay designates him chief of the "Trimmers;" Swift was his secretary for ten years. (See SWIFT.)

Born in London, 1628; died 1699.

TENASSERIM PROVINCES, ten-as'-se-rim, a division of British Burmah, consist of a long and narrow strip of territory in Farther India, on the eastern side of the Bay of Bengal. The sea coast is about 500 miles long, flat and indented with bays and creeks in the northern part, but bold and rocky further south. A large number of islands skirt the coast. On the eastern boundary is a range of wooded mountains, and on the north another range, covered with bamboo jungles. There are extensive plains and valleys of great fertility. Cotton, grain, sugar-cane, indigo, tobacco, spices, and dye-stuffs, are raised, and the country is rich in timber. The climate is very healthful.

Rivers.—The chief are the Tenasserim, Attarar, Salwen, and Tavoy.

Minerals.—Gold, iron, tin, and antimony.

Area.—46,730 square miles.

Pop.—825,741, of a very mixed character.

Divisions and Chief Towns.—There are five districts, and the chief towns are Amherst (the capital), MOULMEIN (the seat of government), MARTABAN, MERGUI, Tavoy, and Tenasserim (formerly the capital, but now in a ruinous condition).

TENBY, ten'-be, a market-town, seaport, watering-place, and borough of Wales, in Pembrokeshire, on the west side of Carmarthen Bay, at the mouth of the Bristol Channel, 11 miles from Pembroke. The town stands on a rocky promontory of considerable elevation, inclosed by the sea on every side except the north, where a narrow isthmus connects it with the mainland. It was once surrounded by a strong and lofty wall, which in some places is yet nearly entire. The church extends 140 feet in length, and has a large square tower, surmounted by a spire 152 feet high. The sands are extensive, and the scenery beautiful. A large shipping trade, chiefly in fish, is carried on. Pop. 4,790.—A station on the Great Western and London and North-Western railways.

TENCE, tance, a town of France, department Haute-Loire, on the right bank of the Lignon, 9 miles E. of Yssengeaux. Pop. 5,700.

TENCIN, CLAUDINE ALEXANDRIA GUERIN DE, tan-sa, a Frenchwoman, was the sister of cardinal de Tencin, and took the veil in the monastery of Montfleury; but even at that time conducted herself licentiously, and, with the consent of the pope, threw off the religious habit, and entered the gay world at Paris, where she led the fashion for some time, and was celebrated for her intrigues, for which she was once confined in the Chatelet, and afterwards in the Bastille. She was the mistress of cardinal Dubois and the regal duke of Orleans, and, by the poet Destoucher, mother of the philosopher D'Alembert, whom she abandoned in his infancy. Her "receptions" were attended by Fontenelle, Montesquieu, and other leading men of literature. "The Siege of Calais, or the Misfortunes of Love," and some other romances were written by her.

Born 1681; died 1749.

TENEDOS, te-ne'-dos, a small island of the Greek Archipelago, belonging to Turkey, 4 miles W. of the coast of the Troad. It is about 10 miles in circumference, and fertile, producing corn, cotton, fruits, and wine. The small town of the same name, on the east coast, has a good and well-defended harbour. Pop. 7,000, about two-thirds being Greeks.

TENERIFFE, ten'-e-rif (Sp. TENERIFA, tai-nai-re'-fa, one of the largest islands of the Canary group. (See CANARIES.) The coasts are steep and broken with fissures. The only accessible port is at Santa Cruz. A lofty ridge of volcanic mountains traverses the island, rising on the western side near the famous Peak of Teneriffe, 12,182 feet high, with an extinct crater about a mile in diameter. The next highest mountains are Chahora, 9,885 feet, and Azulejos, 9,400 feet. The most fertile district is the plain of Laguna, at the eastern end of the island. Cochineal, nuts, wine, and fruits are the chief articles of commerce. The most important towns are SANTA CRUZ (the capital) and Laguna. Area, 800 square miles. Pop. 95,000.

TENIERS, DAVID, ten'-e-ers, called the Elder, a Flemish painter, who studied under Rubens, after which he went to Rome, returning to Antwerp after ten years' absence. His subjects are alchemists, country fairs, alehouses, and merry meetings, all of them painted in an admirable style.

Born at Antwerp, 1582; died there, 1649.

TENIERS, DAVID, called the Younger, the most popular of all Flemish painters, the son of the preceding, whom he surpassed. He painted night-scenes, feasts, the "Temptation of St. Anthony," &c. He produced more than a thousand pictures, some of large size, and all very valuable.

Born at Antwerp, 1610; died at Brussels, 1685.

TENIMBER ISLANDS, ten'-im-ber, a group in the Indian Archipelago, chiefly of coral formation, and surrounded by reefs. They are generally fertile. The largest island is Timor-laut. Others are Moelo, Maro, Roetang, Panjang, Meiji, and Teen. Lat. 6° 40'—8° 25' S. Lon. 130° 40'—132° E.

TENISON, THOMAS, ten'-i-son, an English prelate, who was educated at the free-school of Norwich; whence he removed to Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, where he took his degrees. In 1080 he was presented to the rectory of St. Martin-in-the-Fields, and in 1689 to the archdeaconry of London. He was so strenuous an advocate for the Protestant cause in the reign of James II., that king William advanced him to the bishopric of Lincoln in 1691, and to the see of Canterbury in 1694. He wrote some sermons, tracts against popery, and published the "Remains of Lord Chancellor Bacon." He founded a library and school in St. Martin's parish.

Born at Cottenham, Cambridgeshire, 1636; died in London, 1715.

TENNANT, SMITHSON, ten'-nant, an English chemist, who, after studying under Dr. Black at Edinburgh, and at the university of Cambridge, set out upon a course of European travel, which embraced France, Holland, Denmark, and Sweden. After taking a degree as bachelor of physic at Cambridge in 1788, he went to London; but, as he enjoyed an independent fortune, he did not practise. In 1813 he was appointed professor of chemistry in the university of Cambridge, but, in the following year, while visiting a small fort near Boulogne, with baron Bulow, he and his companion were thrown into the ditch, and his skull was so severely fractured, that he died within an hour after the accident. His most important contributions were furnished to the "Philosophical Transactions."

Born at Selby, Yorkshire, 1761; died 1815.

TENNANT, WILLIAM, a Scotch poet, who studied for a short time at the university of St. Andrews. He was so unfortunate as to lose the use of his feet while still young. Unaided he taught himself German, Portuguese, Hebrew, Syriac, Chaldaic, and other languages. After spending many years as a schoolmaster and classical teacher, he, in 1835, received the appointment of professor of Oriental languages in the university of St. Andrews. He wrote three dramas, exhibiting considerable poetical power; the well-known poems of "Anster Fair," "The Life of Allan Ramsay," and other works.

Born at Easter-Anstruther, Fife, 1785; died 1848.

TENNESSEE, ten'-nes-see', one of the United States, included amongst the southern states. It is bounded N. by Kentucky and Virginia, S. by Georgia, Alabama, and Mississippi, and W. by the Mississippi. On the eastern borders are part of the Appalachian chain, including the Unaka, Smoky, Bald, and other mountains, with an average elevation of 5,000 feet. To the west of this range is the valley of East Tennessee, an undulating district, about 1,000 feet above the sea level, and beyond that an elevated district known as the Cumberland plateau, about 1,000 feet higher, the eastern side presenting an abrupt rocky rampart. The western edge is irregular and jagged, with gaps and valleys. Between the plateau and the Tennessee river is an elevated plain with ravines, and traversed by several streams. In the centre of the plain is an immense elliptical depression, with a depth of 300 feet, and nearly 5,500 square miles in extent, apparently the bed of a drained lake. The valley of the Tennessee is about 12 miles wide, with an irregular and broken surface. Beyond this, to the west, is West Tennessee, a gently undulating plain, sloping to the Mississippi, and presenting a series of bluffs to the alluvial plain, with forests, lakes, and morasses, which borders the great river. Popularly the state is divided into East, Middle, and West Tennessee. The soil is generally very fertile. In the central division large crops of cereals, potatoes, hemp, flax, cotton, and tobacco are raised, and the western division is even more prolific. There are large tracts of swamp in the northern part of the state, and nearly half of the centre surface is covered with forests of valuable timber, including red cedar, pine, chestnut, black walnut, oak, beech, hickory, and cypress. Fruit trees yield luxuriantly, many growing wild. There is excellent pasturage on the hills and mountain slopes, and much attention is given to wool-growing. The climate is generally mild and salubrious, except in the swampy districts, and low grounds near the Mississippi. In the eastern division the mountain air is noted for its purity. There are remarkable caves in the Cumberland hills, some of great size, and containing fossils.

Rivers.—The Mississippi forms the western boundary, and the Tennessee and Cumberland, with their tributaries, drain three-fourths of the state. The Forked Deer, Big Hatchie, and Wolf, fall into the Mississippi.

Minerals.—Coal (extensive, the great Alleghany coal field crossing the state), iron (limonite, magnetite, and hematite ore, and ore containing oxide of manganese), copper, lead, zinc, marble, slate, limestone, granite, lithographic stone, potters' clay, alum, saltpetre, and petroleum. There are sulphur and chalybeate springs.

Area.—45,600 square miles.

Pop.—1,542,360. Being amongst the middle states where slavery formerly prevailed, the proportion of population descended from the negro race is very considerable.

Divisions and Chief Towns.—There are 94 counties. The chief towns are NASHVILLE (the capital), Brownsville, Chattanooga, Clarksville, Columbia, Gallatin, Jackson, Knoxville, Lebanon, Memphis, Murfresboro, and Pulaski.

History.—The country, which formed a part of Carolina, according to the second charter of Charles II., was inhabited by the Cherokee Indians, by whom the first colonists, consisting of above sixty families, in the year 1754, were nearly destroyed. Their settlements were not permanently established till 1774. In 1789 the country was ceded by Carolina to the United States, and, in 1796, was received into the federal union.

TENNESSEE, a river of the United States, formed by the junction of the Clench and Holston, which unite in Tennessee, and, after a course of 1,200 miles, joining the Ohio at Paduca. The area drained is about 41,000 square miles.

TENNYSON, ALFRED, ten'-ni-son, English poet, the third of twelve children, of the rector of Somersby, Lincolnshire. While at the university of Cambridge, he wrote a poem entitled "Timbuctoo," which, in 1829, gained the chancellor's medal. He had previously produced, in conjunction with his brother Charles, a small volume of poems. His first effort of any consequence was in 1830, when he put forth a collection of poems, chiefly lyrical, which contained, among other pieces, "Mariana," "Lilian," "The Mermaid," "Recollections of the Arabian Nights," "The Dying Swan," "All Things will Die," "Hero to Leander," "The Ballad of Oriana," and "The Sea Fairies." "Poems by Alfred Tennyson" appeared in 1833, and contained, in addition to several of his former productions improved and altered, "The Miller's Daughter," "The Lotus-Eaters," "Locksley Hall," "Lady Clara Vere de Vere," "The Talking Oak," &c. This volume greatly raised his reputation, and prepared the way for his recognition as a great poet. "The Princess" was given to the public in 1847; "In Memoriam" followed,—a glorious tribute to the memory of Arthur Hallam, the son of the historian, and generally considered to exhibit the finest qualities of the author's mind. Shortly after the appearance of this grand elegy, or rather series of elegies, Mr. Tennyson was appointed poet-laureate, to the trifling salary attached to which post was added a pension of £200 per annum. The "Ode on the Death of the Duke of Wellington," appeared in 1852; "The Charge of the Light Brigade" in 1855; "Maud" in 1855, and "The Idylls of the King" in 1859. In 1864 appeared "Enoch Arden" and other poems, several of which have gained a foremost place in public estimation. In 1875 he produced "Queen Mary," an historical drama, and in 1877 "Harold," another drama. "The Falcon," and "The Cup," dramas, were produced in 1880 and 1881. In 1856 he was created D.C.L. of the university of Oxford. Tennyson is undoubtedly a poet of the highest rank, unsurpassed for tenderness, profound insight into moral truth, occasionally charming melodiousness and lyric beauty. In 1884, in consideration of his long and brilliant eminence as a poet, he was elevated to the House of Lords by the title of Baron Tennyson.

Born at Somersby, Lincolnshire, 1810.

TENTERDEN, ten'-ter-den, a market-town and municipal borough of Kent, near the river Rother, 24 miles S.W. of Canterbury. The church is a large and handsome fabric, and has a steeple conspicuous as a landmark. Pop. about 3,670.

TENTERDEN, CHARLES ABBOTT, Lord, an English judge. He was the son of a barber at Canterbury. In 1781 was elected to Corpus Christi College, Oxford, of which he became fellow and tutor. In 1788 he entered himself of the Inner Temple; he quickly rose to great eminence; was appointed counsel to the Treasury, the Bank, and several large mercantile companies. In 1816 he accepted a judgeship in the court of Common Pleas, having previously refused a like mark of distinction, his income as a counsel being far beyond the salary of a judge. He was knighted in 1818, and in the same year succeeded Lord Ellenborough as chief justice of the court of King's Bench, where he distinguished himself as one of the ablest of English judges. In 1827 he was created a peer, with the title of Baron Tenterden. As a speaker in the House of Lords, he opposed the repeal of the Corporation and Test Acts, and the Roman Catholic Relief Bill.

Born at Canterbury, 1762; died 1832.

TEPIC, tai-peek', a town of Mexico, state of Guadalaxara, 110 miles N.W. of the town of that name. It is a large town, in a beautiful and healthy situation, and has many elegant residences of wealthy merchants. Pop. 10,000.

TEPLITZ. (See TÖPLITZ.)

TERAMO, tai-ra'-mo, or ABRUZZO ULTERIORE, a province of Italy. Pop. 265,448.

TERAMO, a town of Italy, capital of the above province, 85 miles N.E. of Rome. There is a modernized Gothic cathedral. Manf. Hats and cream of tartar. Pop. 19,000.

TERBURGH, GERARD, ter'-berg, a Dutch painter. He was employed at the court of Spain, where he gained great wealth, and was made a knight. On his return to his own country he settled at Deventer, and was chosen burgomaster. He painted portraits, conversations, and humorous scenes.

Born at Zwolle, Holland, 1608; died at Deventer, 1681.

TERCEIRA, ter-sai'-e-ra, an island near the coast of Africa, forming one of the group of the Azores, 20 miles long and 12 miles broad. The coast is bold and precipitous, and the interior mountainous, but highly fertile. Pro. Wheat, maize, fruits, and wine. Pop. 50,000. Lat. 38° 40′ N. Lon. 27° W.

TERCERO, ter-sai'-ro, a river of the Argentine Confederation, South America. After a course of 300 miles, it falls into the Parana.

TEREK, te-rek', a government in Asiatic Russia, being part of the district of Caucasia. It contains a river of the same name, which runs into the Caspian Sea. Pop. of the government, 615,660.

TERENCE, PUBLIUS TERENTIUS AFER, ter'-ence, Roman dramatic and comic poet. He was a slave to Terentius Lucanus, a Roman senator, who gave him his liberty on account of his genius. His "Andria" was acted in 166, and the author was at once admitted to the most intellectual society of Rome. He afterwards went to Greece, and studied Greek with such assiduity as to adapt the best comedies from that language into the Latin; of which, however, only six remain. According to one account, he is said to have died of grief, on hearing that 108 plays of Menander, which he had translated while in Greece, and had dispatched to Rome, were lost at sea; while others state that he expired whilst on a voyage from Asia. His best known plays (some still acted at some of the public schools) are "Eunuchus," "Phormio," and "Adelphi." The wit and humour of these productions are extraordinary, and the Latinity is remarkably pure and elegant.

Born at Carthage, about 195 B.C.; died about 159 B.C.

TERESA. (See THERESA.)

TERLIZZI, tair-lit'-se, a town of Italy, province of Bari, 7 miles from the Adriatic. It has a palace and several churches, one of them with fine pictures. Pop. 20,442.

TERMINE, IMERESE, tair'-me-ne e-mai-rai'-zai, a seaport-town of the island of Sicily, in the Val di Mazzara, near the mouth of the San Lionardo, 20 miles S.E. of Palermo. There are several fine churches, and a good harbour. The fisheries are productive. Manf. Macaroni. Pop. 22,733.

TERMONDE. (See DENDERMONDE.)

TERNATE, tair-nat', the northernmost of a chain of islands on the west coast of Gilolo, and formerly the seat of sovereignty over all the adjacent Molucca islands. It is only about 10 miles in diameter, but high, and it contains a lofty peak, a volcano, sometimes dangerously active. Pop. Unascertained. Lat. 0° 48′ N. Lon. 127° 18′ E.—It was taken from the Dutch in the course of the revolutionary war, but was restored at the peace of Amiens. It was again taken in August, 1810, and was restored to the Dutch in 1814.

TERNI, tair'-ne, a town of Italy, province of Perugia, between two branches of the river Nera, 49 miles N.E. of Rome. It has a cathedral and several churches, and there are many Roman remains, but no other public building of consequence. The cascades of the Velino, 800 feet high, about 4 miles from Terni, are considered among the finest in the world. Pop. 15,000.—The town is on the site of the ancient Interamnor.

TERPANDER, ter-pan'-der, a lyric poet and musician of Lesbos. It is said that he appeased a tumult at Sparta by the melody and sweetness of his notes. He added three strings to the lyre, which, before his time, had only four.

Lived in the 7th century B.C.

TERPSICHORE, terp-sik'-o-re, in Greek mythology one of the Muses, daughter of Jupiter and Mnemosyne. She presided over dancing.

TERRA, or TELLUS, in Roman mythology a goddess in whose form the earth was personified and worshipped TERRACINA, ter-ra-che'-na, a town of Italy, province of Roma, on a gulf of the same name in the Mediterranean, 26 miles S.W. of Frosinone. The cathedral is supposed to occupy the site of an ancient temple of Jupiter, and there are many interesting remains. Near the shore is a palace built by pope Pius IV. Pop. 5,000.

TERRA, or TIERRA DEL FUEGO, del fwai'-go, "the land of fire," the most southern region of South America, consisting of three large islands, separated from Patagonia by the Strait of Magellan. There are also numerous smaller islands embraced in the term. The largest island is about 300 miles long from east to west. All the islands are mountainous, rising in Mount Sarmiento to nearly 7,000 feet. The inhabitants are amongst the lowest in the scale of human beings, and subsist mostly by fishing and hunting. Lat. 52° 40′—56° S. Lon. 63° 40′—75° W.—The island was discovered in 1520 by Magalhaens, and received its name from the numerous fires seen during the night along the shore

TERRA DI LAVORO, or CASERTA, di la-vo'-ro, a province of Italy, having on its S.E. the Mediterranean, and on its other sides the provinces Naples, Molise, Principato Ultra, and the Abruzzi. It is mountainous, being covered in the E. with branches of the Apennines; but fertile in its other parts. Its plains are the richest in the Italian peninsula. Area, 2,307 square miles. Pop. 737,110.

TERRANOVA, ter-ra-no'-va, a town of Sicily, at the mouth of a river of the same name, 30 miles S.E. of Caltanisetta. It is defended by a strong castle, and contains several handsome churches and eight convents. There is a trade in corn, wine, fruit, sulphur, and soda. Pop. 17,164.

TERREBONNE, tair-bon', a county of Louisiana, United States. Area, 1,640 square miles. Pop. 17,957, more than one-half being coloured. The capital is Houma.

TERREBONNE, a county of Quebec province, dominion of Canada, north of the St. Lawrence. Area, 541 square miles. Pop. 21,892, nearly all of French descent. The capital is St. Jerome.

TERRE HAUTE, holt, capital of Vigo county, Indiana, United States, on the east bank of the Wabash, 70 miles S.W. of Indianopolis. The river is spanned by three bridges. The city is pleasantly situated in an elevated position in the midst of a populous region abounding in coal and iron, and is an important railway centre. The public buildings are handsome. Manf. Iron, glass, nails, and machinery. Pop. 26,000.

TERRELL, ter'-rel, a county of Georgia, United States. Area, 300 square miles. Pop. 9,200, more than half being coloured. The capital is Dansen.

TERTULLIAN, QUINTUS SEPTIMIUS FLORENS, ter-tul'-li-an, one of the fathers of the church, the son of a Roman centurion. He became an eminent rhetorician, and was at first a pagan; but the constancy of the martyrs converted him to Christianity, which he defended with great zeal and eloquence. From Carthage he went to Rome, and in the persecution under Severus, he drew up a famous apology for the Christians. In the latter part of his life he adopted the ascetic doctrines of Montanism. His works are very numerous, and prudent in character.

Born at Carthage, 160; died 240.

TERUEL, tai'-roo-el, a north-eastern province of Spain. It is very mountainous, being traversed by the Albarracin Mountains, which are covered with forests, and abound in game. There are extensive fertile plains, and cattle, sheep, and pigs are extensively reared.

Rivers.—The Guadalupe and Jiloca, affluents of the Ebro; the Guadalavier and numerous smaller streams.
Area.—5,494 square miles.
Pop.—248,395.

TERUEL, capital of the above province, on the left bank of the Guadalavier, 136 miles E. of Madrid. It is surrounded by old walls, and gates and towers, and contains a cathedral, episcopal palace, and a bull-ring capable of holding 9,000 spectators. There are 14 squares, the principal one having beautiful arcades and an old fountain in the centre. Pop. 9,486.

TESCHEN, tesh'-en, a town of the Austrian empire in Silesia, on the right bank of the Olsa, 38 miles S.E. of Troppau. Manf. Yarns. Pop. 9,800.—At this place, in 1779, a treaty was concluded between Frederick the Great and Maria Theresa of Austria.

TESHOR-LOOMBOO. (See CHASHE-LOOMBOO.)

TESSIN. (See TICINO.)

TESTI, FULVIO, tes'-te, an Italian poet, and accounted the Horace of modern Italy. He became minister of state to the Duke of Modena; but, being accused of treason, was imprisoned.
Born at Ferrara, 1593; died 1646.

TETUAN, tet-oo-an', a seaport of Morocco, in the province of Fez, on the Mediterranean, immediately within the Straits of Gibraltar, 22 miles S.W. of Ceuta. The town, about 6 miles from the coast, is fortified, and situated on high ground, and contains some fine buildings, including 40 mosques. The harbour is only fit for small vessels. The environs are carefully planted with vineyards and gardens; the grapes are exquisite, and the oranges reckoned, by some, superior to any in the world. Manf. Leather and arms. There is a large inland trade, and provisions are supplied to Gibraltar. Pop. 20,000. Lat. 35° 37′ N. Lon. 5° 18′ W.—Tetuan was captured by the Spaniards in 1860.

TETZEL, JOHANN, tet'-zel, a German monk, whose proper name was Diez, or Diezel. He studied at Leipsic, and entered the order of Dominicans, and having gained reputation as an effective preacher, was employed to preach indulgences granted by the pope for the purpose of raising money. According to biographies most favourable to him, he offered these indulgences in a style fitter for a mountebank than a priest, and Protestant writers charge him with gross immorality. In 1517 Luther made his famous protest against indulgences at Wittenburg, and a fierce controversy between the two champions ensued.
Born at Leipsic, 1460; died 1519.

TEWKESBURY, tukes'-ber-re, a market-town and borough of Gloucestershire, on the Avon, near its confluence with the Severn, 10 miles from Gloucester. Of the public buildings, the principal is the Abbey church, splendidly restored, and re-opened in September, 1879, which is almost the only remains of the monastery. It is of early Norman architecture, combined with specimens of other kinds, is built in the cathedral form, and contains many interesting monuments. Manf. Stockings, lace, and nails. Pop. 5,100—A station on the Midland railway. Here, in 1471, Edward IV. gained a decisive victory over the Lancastrians

TEXAS, tex'-as, one of the south-western states of the United States, bounded N. and W. by New Mexico and the Red River; E. by Arkansas and Louisiana; and S. by Mexico (from which it is divided by the Rio Grande) and the Gulf of Mexico. The coast line along the Gulf of Mexico is about 400 miles long, with bays and lagoons, and bordered by a chain of low sand islands. The most important bays, beginning from the north-east, are Galveston, Matargorda, Espiritu Santo, Aransas, and Corpus Christi; and the largest lagoon is the Laguna del Madre. The south and south-eastern part of the state, or the coast district, is level and low; farther north, the surface is undulating; there is an elevated table-land in the north and north-west; and in the western part are mountain ranges, including the Guadalupe, Sierra Hueca, Eagle, Sierra Blanca, and Apache mountains, with an average elevation of nearly 6,000 feet. Eastern Texas, between the Sabine and Trinity rivers, is the great timber region, having extensive pine forests, besides other valuable woods. The central and western regions are nearly all prairie, but the river banks are wooded. The soil is generally very fertile, and the river bottoms are unsurpassed for richness; but there is a large and comparatively barren tract in the western part, known as the Llano Estacado, or "staked plain," which affords pasturage for large herds of cattle and flocks of sheep, the grasses being very nutritious and abundant at all seasons. The climate is very mild, and European as well as semi-tropical and tropical fruits are extensively grown. The chief crops are cotton, Indian corn, and wheat, the latter being principally raised in the northern districts. Near the coast sugar-cane and rice are cultivated. In the north-west are buffalo and deer, and wild horses, or mustangs, are in the western prairies.

Rivers.—Rio Grande and its tributary, Rio Pecos; Nueces, discharging into Corpus Christi bay; San Antonio and Guadalupe into Espiritu Santo bay; Lavaca and Colorado into Matagorda bay; Brazos, into the Gulf of Mexico; San Jacinto and Trinity into Galveston bay; and Neches and Sabine into the Gulf of Mexico.
Minerals.—Iron, copper, silver, lead, coal, marble, gypsum, and salt.
Area.—274,356 square miles, or about three times the area of Great Britain.
Pop.—1,598,600, about 265,000 being coloured. In respect of population Texas ranks amongst the lowest in proportion to size.
Divisions and Chief Towns.—There are 174 counties, of which 26 are as yet unorganised. The principal cities are Austin (the state capital), GALVESTON, SAN ANTONIO, HOUSTON, Brownville, and Jefferson.
History.—A small French settlement was made near Matagorda Bay, in 1685, but the settlers were driven out by the Spanish, and in 1691 a Spanish governor was appointed. After a long struggle between Mexico and the United States, in the course of which Texas was the scene of much desperate fighting and cruel massacres, the independence of Texas was acknowledged in 1837, and a president was appointed, and in 1845 it was annexed to the United States.

TEXAS, a county of Missouri, United States. Area, 1,256 square miles. Pop. 12,000. The capital is Houston.

TEXEL, tex'-el, an island of the Netherlands, province of North Holland, separated from the mainland by the narrow channel called the Marsdiep. It is 14 miles long, with a breadth of 6. Low and fertile, affording good pasturage. It is secured from the sea by strong dykes. Pop. 6,200, mostly engaged in fishing.

THACKERAY, WILLIAM MAKEPEACE, thak'-e-rai, a distinguished English novelist, who came of an old Yorkshire family, and was the son of a gentleman in the civil service of the East India Company. Born in the East, the future novelist was sent at an early age to England, and received his first education at the Charterhouse school, afterwards passing to the university of Cambridge, which he quitted without a degree, and in the enjoyment of a respectable fortune, he formed the resolution of studying pictorial art as a profession. With this view he repaired to the continent, and spent some time at Weimar, where he made the acquaintance of Göethe. His artist life was continued until between his 25th and 30th years, when he relinquished the crayon for the pen. From the commencement of his literary career he appears to have exhibited high qualities as a writer. His progress to popularity was nevertheless slow. He is understood to have been employed upon the Times newspaper, while under the editorship of Barnes; but it was in consequence of his success as a contributor to "Fraser's Magazine" that he became recognised as a witty, elegant, and original writer. His articles in this publication were signed "Michael Angelo Titmarsh;" and, under the same pseudonym, he produced a number of intensely humorous and satirical books. He wrote in "Punch" the famous "Snob Papers;" but his general recognition as a great English writer may be said to date from the time of his publishing his first serial novel, "Vanity Fair, or a Novel without a Hero," and his reputation was fully maintained by his subsequent works. "The History of Pendennis," "The History of Henry Esmond," "The Newcomes," and "The Virginians," rapidly followed. A series of lectures on the English humourists met with great success in England and America, and were followed by lectures upon the "Four Georges." In 1860 he established the "Cornhill Magazine." In 1857 he presented himself as a candidate for the city of Oxford in parliament; but was rejected by that constituency in favour of Mr. Cardwell. Among his lighter works, brimful of satire, may be mentioned "Jeames's Diary," suggested by the railway mania of 1845, and "Rebecca and Rowena," a supplement to Scott's "Ivanhoe," conceived in the highest spirit of burlesque, united with an honest indignation at sham sentiment. His ballads, semi-humorous, and sometimes extremely graceful, are admirable. As a novelist, satirist, and humourist—frequently moving to tears by natural pathos, and then exciting laughter by exquisite humour and consummate power of depicting character,—he stands among the very foremost of English writers. He died suddenly.

Born at Calcutta, 1811; died at Kensington, 1863.

THAIS, thā'-is, an Athenian courtesan. She accompanied Alexander, who, during an orgy, was persuaded by her to destroy the city of Persepolis. After the death of the Macedonian conqueror, she became the wife of Ptolemy Soter, king of Egypt.

THALBERG, SIGISMOND, tal'-bairg, pianist and musical composer. He was the natural son of Prince Dietrichstein, and was educated under Hummel. In his 15th year he appeared with success as a performer, and, in his 16th, published some excellent musical compositions. In Paris, London, and Vienna, he achieved the highest success as a pianist. He married a daughter of Lablache, the famous vocalist.

Born at Geneva, 1812; died 1871.

THALES, thai'-lees, a philosopher of Greece. After travelling many years, particularly in Egypt, where he studied mathematics, he returned to his native place, and founded a school of philosophy, generally styled the Ionian school. Among his disciples were Anaximander, Anaximenes, and Pythagoras, and he was often visited by Solon and Thrasybulus. He is generally allowed to have been the father of the Greek philosophy. He made some inventions in geometry, and first observed the apparent diameter of the sun, fixed the length of the year at 365 days, and observed the nature and course of eclipses.

Born at Miletus, 636 B.C.; died about 545 B.C.

THALIA, thai-lī'-a, in Greek mythology, one of the nine Muses, who presided over festivals, pastoral and comic poetry.

THAMES, temz, the largest and most important river of Great Britain. It rises from a spring known as Thames Head, in the Cotswold Hills, 3 miles S.W. of Cirencester, in Gloucestershire, and 376 feet above the sea level. Near Lechlade, 138 miles from London, it becomes navigable for barges. It is in this part known as the Isis, and, after receiving the Windrush, it reaches Oxford, turning round the city towards the north-east. It is here joined by the Charwell, after which it proceeds to Abingdon, and thence to Dorchester, where it receives the Thames. Continuing its course south-east by Wallingford to Reading, and forming a boundary to the counties of Berks, Bucks, Surrey, Middlesex, Essex, and Kent, it makes its way past London to the sea, into which it discharges by an estuary, 18 miles wide at the mouth. The total length of the course is about 220 miles. The chief affluents are, on the right bank, below Oxford, the Loddon, Mole, Wandle, Ravensbourne, and Darent, all small streams, and the MEDWAY. On the left bank are the Colne, Brent, Lea, and Roding, small streams. The tide is perceptible as high as Teddington, in Middlesex, 72 miles from the mouth.

THAMES. (See CONNECTICUT, LONDON (Ontario), and NEW ZEALAND.)

THANA, thā'-nar, a town and district in the northern division of the Indian province of Bombay. Pop. of town, 12,000; of district, 908,548.

THAYER, a county of Nebraska, United States. Area, 576 square miles. Pop. 6,200.

THEBES, theebs, the No Ammon of the Hebrews, and the Diospolis the Great of the Greeks and Romans, formerly the capital of Upper Egypt. The magnificent and extensive remains are at Luxor and Karnak, on the eastern bank of the Nile, and Gurno and Medinet-Abu, on the western. (See EGYPT.)

THEBES, the modern Thiva, the chief city of Bœotia, and one of the most famous places of ancient Greece. The present town is a small and poor place, 30 miles N.W. of Athens. Pop. 5,000.

THEMIS, thē'-mis, in Greek mythology, the daughter of Uranus, and Gæa, and the goddess of law and justice. She was the first to whom the inhabitants of the earth raised temples. Her oracle was famous in Attica.

THEMISTOCLES, the-mis'-to-klees, an Athenian general and political leader. He signalised himself by his courage and address in early life, and fought bravely at Marathon, under Miltiades. When Xerxes invaded Greece, in 480 B.C., Themistocles was at the head of the Athenian republic, and in this capacity the fleet was entrusted to his command, and he commanded at the great naval battle of Salamis (480 B.C.), which was so fatal to the Persians. Upon his return, Themistocles was received with the greatest honours, and, by his prudent administration, Athens was soon fortified with strong walls, the Piræus was rebuilt, and her harbours were filled with a numerous and powerful navy, which rendered her the mistress of Greece. Yet, in the midst of this glory, the conqueror of Xerxes incurred the displeasure of his countrymen. He was banished from the city, and obliged to seek the protection of a monarch whose fleets he had defeated, and whose father he had ruined. Artaxerxes received the illustrious Athenian with kindness, made him one of his greatest favourites, and, according to oriental custom, bestowed three rich cities upon him, to provide him with bread, wine, and meat. But Themistocles still remembered that Athens gave him birth, and, according to some writers, the wish of not injuring his country, and, therefore, his inability of carrying on war against Greece, at the request of Artaxerxes, obliged him to destroy himself by poison, or drinking bull's blood. The manner of his death, however, is uncertain. His remains were conveyed to Attica, and honoured with a magnificent tomb by the Athenians, who too late repented of their injustice to him.

Born about 514 B.C.; died about 449 B.C.

THEOCRITUS, the-ok'-ri-tus, a Greek bucolic poet, of whom little is known beyond the fact that his friend and patron was Ptolemy Philadelphus. He is said to have been strangled by order of Hiero, king of Syracuse, for having written a satire against him. Of his various works, we have only the "Idylls," which are remarkable for their pleasing simplicity and sweetness; twenty-two epigrams, and a fragment of a poem entitled "Berenice."

Lived in the 3rd century B.C.

THEODORE, the-o-dóre, "King of Corsica." (See NEUHOF.)

THEODORE, or KASSAI, king of Abyssinia, nephew of a frontier chief of Amhara. His father died young, and his mother being reduced to great poverty, lived in obscurity in Gondar, selling kousso, a specific against tapeworm. The boy was admitted to a monastery, where he lived several years, and then joined the army of his uncle, who was fighting against the Turks, and distinguished himself by courage and ability. After the death of his uncle, he was engaged at the head of a band of soldiers, in a long contest with Birru Goshu, chief of Godjam, and at length defeated and killed him with his own hand. Oubié, chief of Tigre, was next attacked and defeated, and then Kassai, who had by this time announced himself as a descendant of Solomon and the Queen of Sheba, and assumed the name of Theodore, in conformity with an old tradition that a king was to reign in Abyssinia and restore the ancient glory of Ethiopia, was crowned by the abuna, or chief ecclesiastic of the Coptic church. His next step was to attack Shoa, the third great province of the old Abyssinian empire, which speedily submitted. He banished the Roman Catholic missionaries, and encouraged the settlement of German and other Protestant missionaries. He was greatly irritated by the refusal of the British government to assist him against the Egyptians, who were marching against him, and a letter he wrote to the queen was allowed to remain unnoticed at the Foreign Office for nearly two years. In his rage he punished and imprisoned the missionaries and their servants, some of whom died from the effects of the blows they had received. He then imprisoned Captain Cameron, the British consul, and from that time acted like a madman, torturing and massacring thousands of the people of the country. As he positively refused to liberate his prisoners, a British expedition was sent from Bombay, under General Napier (see NAPIER, Lord), and marched to Magdala, the stronghold of Theodore, which was captured, Theodore himself being killed.

Born 1820; died 1868.

THEODORIC, the-od'-o-rik (German, Dietrich), surnamed the Great, king of the Ostrogoths in Italy, was the natural son of Theodomir, and given as a hostage to the Byzantine emperor Leo Magnus in 461. He rendered great services to the emperor Zeno, who honoured him with the consulate in 484. He afterwards defeated and put to death Odoacer, and made himself master of all Italy. In 509 he espoused a sister of Clovis, king of the Franks. Theodoric displayed the qualities of a great prince. He regulated the administration of justice, allayed religious disputes, revised the laws, and encouraged commerce.

Born 455; died 526.

THEODOSIA, a town of the Crimea.

THEODOSIUS I., the-o-do'-si-us, a Roman emperor, surnamed the Great. His father, Theodosius, distinguished himself in Britain and Africa, but was beheaded by order of Valens in 376. The son was called to court by Gratian, associated with himself in the empire, and appointed governor of Thrace and these provinces which Valentinian had possessed in the East. He defeated the Goths in several actions, and compelled them to sue for peace. His fame spread into Persia, and Sapor III. solicited his alliance. In 385 a conspiracy was formed against him, but it was discovered, and Theodosius displayed the magnanimity of his disposition by pardoning the criminals. But in 390 he tarnished his fame in causing the inhabitants of Thessalonica to be put to the sword, on account of an insurrection which had taken place in that city. St. Ambrose was so struck with horror by this transaction, that he refused to admit Theodosius into the church till he had performed penance during eight months. The emperor, having defeated Maximus, marched to Rome, where he received the honours of a triumph; after which he returned to Constantinople and defeated the barbarians, who had ravaged Macedonia and Thrace. He then turned his arms against the usurper Eugenius, who had been placed on the throne after the murder of Valentinian. Having defeated him at Aquileia, he caused him to be beheaded in 394. He thus became emperor of the whole Roman world, and was preparing to reform the administration of his dominions by wise edicts, when his health gave way. Before his death he nominated his son Arcadius to the empire of the East, while that of the West was given to Honorius.

Born 345; died at Milan, 395.

THEOPHANIA, empress of the East, the-of'-an-i-a, who was a woman of obscure birth. Having become the wife of Romanus II., she evinced a treacherous and intriguing disposition. She poisoned her husband in 963, and placed upon the throne her paramour Nicephorus Phocas, whom she married, but caused to be assassinated, in order that she might espouse John Zimisces. The latter, however, banished Theophania, shortly after being proclaimed emperor. She was recalled to Constantinople by her son, Basil II., in 983.

Lived in the 10th century.

THERAPIA. (See CONSTANTINOPLE.)

THERESA, or TERESA, ST., tai-raï'-sa, a Carmelite nun and visionary. At the age of 20 she entered a convent in her native town Avila, and remained there 27 years. She then founded a reformed branch of the Carmelite order, sometimes called after her Theressians, and during her life 29 convents of the new order were established. She wrote many treatises and letters, describing in admirable language her spiritual struggles and the visions she enjoyed of the Divine glory. She was canonised in 1622.

Born at Avila, 1515; died 1582.

THERMIA, or CYRTHOS, ther'-mi-a, an island of European Turkey, in the Greek Archipelago, belonging to the Cyclades. It is about 13 miles long and 5 miles wide, and very fertile, producing wheat, barley, wine, figs, honey, and some silk. It derives its name from the hot springs which are on its eastern side. Pop. 6,000.

THERMOPYLÆ, or PYLÆ, ther-mop'-i-le ("hotgate"), a pass in the north-east of Greece, in Livadia, at the base of Mount Œta, famous for the fate of Leonidas and his 300 Spartans, who here devoted themselves to their country, 480 B.C. It consists of a narrow passage, between high cliffs on one side, and on the other the sea, or an impassable marsh, formed by alluvial deposits, 9 miles from Lamia. The hot springs, from which the place derives its name, are in the vicinity.

THESEUS, the'-se-us, legendary king of Athens, and the national hero. He was the son of Ægeus by Æthra, the daughter of Pittheus, and was educated at Trœzene, in the house of his father-in-law. Among the exploits attributed to him by popular legend, was killing the Minotaur, the monster of Crete, by the help of Ariadne, daughter of Minos, the king; the defeat of the Amazons and capture of their queen Antiope; and combats with the Centaurs. He carried off Helen, the young daughter of Leda; but the resentment of Castor and Pollux soon obliged him to restore her to them. Being disappointed in his endeavours to arouse the spirit of the Athenians, he retired with great mortification to the court of Lycomedes, king of the island of Scyros, who carried him to a high rock, on pretence of showing him the extent of his dominions, and threw him down a deep precipice. His body was taken to Athens, the splendid Theseum built over his remains, and festivals were instituted in his honour.

THESPIS, thes'-pis, a Greek poet of Attica, who, according to the ancient tradition, was the inventor of tragedy. He went from town to town in a waggon, on which was erected a temporary stage, where two actors, with faces daubed with the lees of wine, entertained the audience with choral songs and speeches. He is said to have written tragedies, which are lost.

Lived in the 6th century B.C.

THESSALY, thes'-sa-ly, anciently the largest political division of Greece. The principal portion was formerly under the dominion of Turkey, but was definitively transferred to Greece by a treaty dated May 24, 1881, and signed July 2 of that year. Capital LARISSA. Area of Thessaly, 5,170 square miles. Pop. 299,678.

THETFORD, thet'-ford, a market-town and borough, partly in Suffolk, but chiefly in Norfolk, on both sides of the Ouse, at its confluence with the Thet, 29 miles from Norwich. The river is crossed by a handsome iron bridge. Manf. Iron, paper, and agricultural implements. Malting and brewing are carried on. Pop. 4,040.—A station on the Great Eastern railway. This place is supposed to occupy the site of the ancient Sitomagus, and was for a short time the capital of the kingdom of East Anglia. In the 7th century it was the see of the bishopric of Norfolk and Suffolk.

THETIS, the'-tis, in Greek mythology, one of the sea deities, and mother of Achilles.

THIBAUT I., tib'-o, king of Navarre, and fifth count of Champagne. He succeeded to the crown of Navarre at the death of Sancho the Infirm, in 1234, and, in 1239, set out upon a crusade in the Holy Land; but, after experiencing defeat at Cæsarea, and at Ascalon, he abandoned his army to its fate, and returned to his kingdom. Sixty-six poems are said to have been written by him, many addressed under an assumed name to Blanche of Castile, queen of Louis VIII., on account of which he takes high rank among the Troubadours.

Born 1201; died at Pamplona, 1253.

THIBET. (See TIBET.)

THIELT, teelt, a town of Belgium, province of West Flanders, 14 miles S.E. of Bruges. The town hall has a fine Gothic tower. Manf. Linen (extensive) and lace, soap, leather, cords, and hats. Pop. 9,591.

THIERRY, AMÉDÉE SIMON DOMINIQUE, tee'-er-re, a French historian, who was educated at Blois, was for a short time professor of history at Besançon. In 1838 he entered the council of state, and in 1860 was made a senator. He assisted his brother Augustin in several of the great works produced by the latter, and himself wrote,—"History of Gaul under the Roman Dominion;" "History of Attila;" and "History of the Gauls, from the most remote period until the conquest of Gaul."

Born at Blois, 1797; died at Paris, 1873.

THIERRY, JACQUES NICOLAS AUGUSTIN, elder brother of the above, a French historian, who was educated at the college of Blois and in Paris, and was for three years associated with Saint-Simon. In a few years he attracted attention by his contributions to the liberal journals of that metropolis. In 1820 he was engaged to write a series of letters upon French history for the Courrier Français; but his opinions having been attacked, he quitted that journal, and resolved to entirely devote himself to historical inquiry. After four years of assiduous study, he produced his "History of the Conquest of England by the Normans," a work which has become celebrated, not alone in France, but also in England and Germany. He was reduced to a condition of total blindness; but he received material assistance from his brother, the preceedingly named, and his wife. Consistent in his principles, refusing political employment, he remained a devoted follower of historical research, finding in that course of life something, as he himself expressed it, "better than property—better than health." His other works were,—"Ten Years of Historical Study;" "Letters on the History of France," "Collections of Documents relative to the History of France;" and the "Times of the Merovingians." He was a member of the Legion of Honour, and of the Academy of Inscriptions and Belles-Lettres.

Born at Blois, 1795; died at Paris, 1856.

THIERS, LOUIS ADOLPHE, tee'-er, French statesman, president of the Republic, and historian, was the son of a dock porter at Marseilles, a man of careless and improvident habits, whose father had been a cloth merchant, and who was descended from a family of position and influence in the town. His mother was of Greek origin, and a relative of André Chenier, the poet, who was one of the revolutionary victims. Adolphe was a weakly infant, and it was supposed to be impossible that he could live, but his maternal grandmother, a woman of an affectionate and enthusiastic temper, carefully reared him, and, relating to him, as a little child, the traditions or her family, inspired him with an intense dislike to the violent mob of the revolutionary period, and an admiration of a republic of the cultured Athenian type. He soon showed that he was a remarkably clever boy, but with a diminutive body, large head, grotesque features, and a shrill voice. At the age of nine he received a nomination to the newly established Lyceum at Marseilles, and soon obtained the character of being the most brilliant, but most mischievous boy in the school, was nicknamed Polchinello—appropriate enough, so grotesque was his personal appearance, and so unfailing his merriment and trickery—and was nearly expelled. This fact, added to great family troubles, made him exert his great abilities, and he soon achieved the highest position. At the age of 18 he left the Lyceum, with a great reputation, and, after some hesitation, decided on adopting the law as a profession, in opposition to his friends, who wished him to enter on a mercantile career. He studied at Aix, was admitted an advocate, and for two years endeavoured unsuccessfully to practise. Confident of his own powers, and ambitious of distinguishing himself in politics, he looked towards Paris as the proper scene for his exertions, but was unable, on account of poverty, to go thither. The Academy of Aix had offered a small prize for an essay, and Thiers carried it off, defeating the opposition of some of the academicians, whose enmity he had excited by the talent he had exhibited in the advocacy of his political opinions, by sending in two essays, one signed with his own name, and rejected, the other anonymous and accepted, to the great annoyance of his opponents when the name of the author was announced. His friends hailed his success with acclamations, he received a public ovation, and some wealthy liberals advanced him the money necessary to enable him to proceed to Paris. In company with his friend Mignet (afterwards the famous historian), who was as poor as himself, he started for the metropolis, literally walking barefoot along the country roads to save shoe leather. When they reached Paris, the two young men shared a wretched garret, in a poor quarter, endeavouring to gain an opening to the periodical press, and studying hard in the public libraries, where Thiers began to collect materials for the great history which he afterwards produced. A sudden patriotic outburst on the occasion of the illegal arrest of Manuel, a deputy, in the chambers, attracted attention to the impetuous young man, who exhibited such remarkable eloquence and courage, that he obtained an engagement on the Constitutionnel, the leading organ of constitutional liberalism. His career was now open; he was welcomed to the salons of the leading politicians of his party, became an intimate friend of Lafitte, Talleyrand, and other eminent men, and in a short time, his literary and political ability, and his remarkable wit and conversational powers, placed him in the first rank of political notabilities. Between 1823 and 1827 he published his "History of the French Revolution." In January, 1830, with Mignet and Armand Carrel, he established the Nationel, in the cause of constitutional liberty, opposing the claim of royal prerogative urged by Charles X. and his ministers, giving currency to the famous phrase, "Le roi règne, et ne gouverne pas" (the king reigns, but does not govern), which became the watchword of his party. His vigorous opposition helped to precipitate the revolution of 1830, but he strongly opposed the extreme republican party, and it was by his influence that Louis Philippe, Duke of Orleans, was invited to accept the throne vacated by the abdication of Charles. Thiers went to Neuilly, where the duke resided, overcame his objections, and took him back with him to Paris in a hackney-coach. He was then elected a member of the chamber of deputies, and was appointed to an official position in the treasury. He was offered the ministry of finance, but recommended the financier Laffitte for the office, though the duties were virtually performed by himself. In 1832 he was appointed minister of the interior in the cabinet of Marshal Soult, and in that capacity, by the arrest of the Duchess de Berri, he put an end to the troubles in La Vendée. He only retained office for a few weeks, but shortly afterwards accepted the appointment of minister of commerce and agriculture, and in 1834 again became minister of the interior, and put down the insurrectionary outbreaks at Lyons and Paris. In the same year he was chosen member of the Academy. He resigned with the other ministers in January, 1836, on the rejection of financial projects; but in the following month became president of the council and minister of foreign affairs, retiring in August in consequence of disagreement with the king in respect to Spanish affairs. In 1838 he was offered and declined the embassy to Russia, and in 1840 again became first minister and minister of foreign affairs. He nearly involved France in war by his opposition to British policy in respect to the conflict between Turkey and Egypt, in Syria, and in preparation for hostilities completed the great fortifications of Paris. (See PARIS.) As the king refused to support his policy, he resigned, being succeeded by Guizot. He then gave himself assiduously to the production of his great "History of the Consulate and Empire," the first volume of which appeared in 1845. He did not retire from politics, but acted as leader of the opposition in the Chamber, advocating a liberal domestic policy, and denouncing what he considered the weakness of the government in foreign affairs, and its subserviency to English views, especially in respect to the United States, which he maintained France ought to support in the question of the annexation of Texas, opposed by the British government. When the revolution of 1848 broke out, he gave his adhesion to the republic, and was elected to the constituent assembly, and afterwards to the National Assembly for the department of the Seine. He supported the candidature of Prince Napoleon for the presidency, and even fought a duel with Bixio, who had stated that he had expressed opposite opinions; but he strongly opposed the prince's imperial views. He was one of the victims of the famous coup d'état, being arrested, imprisoned, and then banished from France. A few months afterwards he was permitted to return, and for several years occupied himself chiefly with literary work and the study of art, for which he had great taste. In 1863 he was returned to the Chamber of Deputies as one of the representatives of Paris, and again became the leader of the opposition, and vigorously denounced the Italian war, the Mexican expedition, the immense expenditure by M. Haussmann on the improvement of Paris, and the acquiescence of the emperor in the aggrandisement of Prussia by the war with Austria. In 1870 he opposed with great energy the declaration of war with Prussia, maintaining that France was unprepared for the combat, an opinion only too fatally verified by subsequent events. He urged the strengthening of the defences of Paris, and visited several foreign courts, endeavouring to secure their influence in obtaining an armistice. After the catastrophe of Sedan he was recognised as the only man fitted to exercise supreme power in the terrible exigency in which France was then placed, and was in February, 1871, appointed chief of the executive power, having previously been elected to the assembly by 26 departments, selecting to represent that of Seine-

Inférieure. He defended Paris as long as there was probability of success, then negotiated the preliminaries of a treaty of peace; with unflinching firmness suppressed the terrible outbreak of the Communists, and in August was appointed president of the republic for a term of five years. In this eminent but most difficult position he displayed extraordinary ability as a statesman and financier, developing the resources of the country, which had been so terribly depressed, and paying off in two years the enormous war indemnity of £200,000,000, imposed by the victorious Germans, and so liberating his country from the invader. In May, 1873, finding that the majority in the Chamber was opposed to his policy, he resigned, and was succeeded by Marshal MacMahon. In January, 1876, he was elected to the new senate for Belfort, and in the following month to the Assembly, for Paris. He continued to support republican views, his great influence restraining the more ardent spirits of the party. The antagonism between the new President and the Assembly increased, and when the breach was widened, in May 1877, by the summary act of Marshal MacMahon in dismissing his ministry without reference to the wishes of the Assembly, it was looked upon as probable that Thiers would speedily again become President of the Republic, an expectation sadly disappointed by his sudden death. He had not long before celebrated his 80th birthday, was in full possession of his great powers, and appeared to be in excellent health; but a fit of apoplexy terminated his existence in a few hours. The government arranged for a public funeral, which was declined by his widow; but the funeral procession to the cemetery of Père Lachaise, was made a public demonstration of respect to the great statesman and author. Thiers married a lady much younger than himself, the daughter of Madame Dosne, member of a wealthy family, connected with financial operations, and by that marriage he acquired considerable wealth. His historical works rank with the greatest productions of modern French literature, and his knowledge of literature and art would alone have raised him to eminence, had it not been overshadowed by his commanding political talents and position. He left no children, bequeathing his wealth, including some rare treasures of art, to his widow and her sister, who resided with her, and was his most confidential friend.

Born at Marseilles, 1797; died at St. Germain, 1877.

THIERS, a town of France, department Puy-de-Dôme, on the Durolle, 22 miles N.E. of Clermont. There are two interesting churches. Manf. Cutlery, paper, playing cards, ribbon, thread, and candles. Pop. 16,600.

THIRLWALL, CONNOP, Dr., thurl'-wall, an English prelate and historian, who at a very early age displayed astonishing precocity of intellect, was educated at Cambridge, where he gained high honours, and at first studied for the legal profession, and was called to the bar; but subsequently entered into holy orders, and became bishop of St. David's in 1840. He was the author of a "History of Greece," and also assisted in making a translation of Niebuhr's "History of Rome."

Born at Stepney, 1797; died 1875.

THIRSK, thursk, a market-town and parliamentary borough of the North Riding of Yorkshire, on the Codbeck, over which are two small but substantial stone bridges, 23 miles N.W. of York. In the centre of the town is the market-place, and the church of St. Mary Magdalen (restored in 1877) is a handsome Gothic building. Manf. Coarse linens and saddlery. Pop. 6,310.—A station on the North-Eastern railway.

THISBE. (See PYRAMUS.)

THOLUCK, FRIEDRICH AUGUST GOTTREN, tol'-uk, a celebrated modern German theologian, who for some time worked at his father's trade as goldsmith, but studied oriental languages and theology, and in 1826 became professor of theology at Halle. He was considered to be the first Persian scholar in Europe. His most important works, several of which were translated into English, are,—"Translation and Exposition of the Psalms;" "Authenticity of the Evangelical History" (an answer to the "Life of Jesus" of Strauss); "Sermons on the Chief Phases of the Christian Faith and Life;" and "Hours of Devotion."

Born at Breslau, 1799; died 1877.

THOMAS, tom'-as, a county of Georgia, United States. Area, 920 square miles. Pop. 20,597, nearly two-thirds being coloured. The capital is Thomasville.

THOMAS, a new county of Kansas, United States. Area, 1,000 square miles. Pop. as enumerated, 161.

THOMAS, St., or DIDYMUS, one of the twelve apostles of Jesus Christ. He is supposed to have suffered martyrdom in Coromandel, where there are still Christian churches which are called by his name.

THOMAS, ST. (See ST. THOMAS.)

THOMAS À BECKET. (See BECKET, Thomas à.)

THOMAS À KEMPIS. (See KEMPIS, Thomas à.)

THOMAS AQUINAS. (See AQUINAS, Thomas.)

THOMPSON, SIR BENJAMIN. (See RUMFORD, Count.)

THOMPSON, tomp'-sun, the name of numerous townships in the United States, none of them with a population above 5,000.

THOMPSON, THOMAS PERRONET, Major-General, English politician and author, who was educated at Queens' College, Cambridge, where, in 1802, he took the B.A. degree. After serving for a time in the royal navy, he entered upon a military career, was at the attack upon Buenos Ayres in 1807, and subsequently participated in the battles of Nivelle, Nive, Orthes, and Toulouse. In 1819 he was appointed secretary and Arabic interpreter to Sir William Grant Keir, the commander of the expedition despatched to the Persian Gulf. Subsequently to his return to England in 1821, he was associated with Jeremy Bentham and Dr., afterwards Sir John, Bowring, in the proprietorship of the "Westminster Review." In 1827 he produced his "Corn-Law Catechism," which may be said to have formed the basis of the Anti-Corn Law League which afterwards sprang into existence. Free trade and parliamentary reform were subjects to which his pen was constantly devoted. In 1854 he was promoted to the grade of major-general. He was the author, among other works, of—"Catechism on the Currency;" an "Enharmonic Theory of Music;" and "Geometry without Axioms."

Born at Hull, Yorkshire, 1783; died 1869.

THOMPSON, a new county of Dakota Territory, United States. Area, 925 square miles. Pop. Unascertained.

THOMSON, JAMES, poet. The son of a Scottish clergyman, he was educated at Jedburgh, and afterwards at Edinburgh, with a view to the ministry in the church of Scotland, which profession he declined. Having written his poem of "Winter," he repaired to London, and, after experiencing many of the sharp stings of poverty, he obtained a publisher for his "Winter," which, however, lay unnoticed for a considerable time. Afterwards, its great merit becoming appreciated, Thomson was brought into notice and popularity. He next produced his "Summer," "Spring," and "Autumn," and a "Poem sacred to the Memory of Sir Isaac Newton." Thomson accompanied the Hon. Mr. Talbot, son of the lord chancellor, on his travels; and, on his return, settled at Richmond, in narrow circumstances, which he did not greatly exert himself to improve, being one of the most indolent of men. He had held for a short time the office of secretary of briefs in the court of Chancery, and afterwards had a pension of £100 a-year from the Prince of Wales. He produced some dramatic pieces of considerable merit, among them "Sophonisba," "Tancred and Sigismunda;" "Liberty," a poem; and "The Castle of Indolence," in the manner of Spenser. But his fame rests upon the poems of "The Seasons." About two years before his death he obtained the place of surveyor-general of the Leeward Islands; an office he paid a deputy to fulfil, but which, nevertheless, yielded the poet about £300 per annum.

Born at Ednam, Roxburghshire, 1700; died 1748.

THOMSON, THOMAS, a Scotch chemist, who studied under Dr. Black, at Edinburgh. He commenced as a lecturer upon chemistry, in 1802, and continued to perform the same functions during the fifty subsequent years. For the "Encyclopædia Britannica" he wrote articles upon chemistry, mineralogy, &c., and also acted as one of the editors of that work. The employment of symbols in chemistry was first suggested by him, and he also distinguished himself by his elucidations of the atomic theory of Dalton. In 1818 he was elected professor of chemistry in the university of Glasgow.

Born at Crieff, Perthshire, 1773; died 1852.

THOMSON, WILLIAM, Sir, mathematician and natural philosopher. He studied at Glasgow and Cambridge, and in 1846, when only 22 years of age, became professor of natural philosophy in Glasgow university. He has made many important contributions to the science of magnetism, constructed many beautiful instruments for the investigation of electrical phenomena, and studied the laws of heat. In 1866 he received the honour of knighthood. He was president of the British Association for the Advancement of Science in 1875.

Born at Belfast in 1824.

THOR, or ASA-THOR, thor, one of the principal deities of the Scandinavian mythology, was the eldest son of Odin and Friga. He reigned over all the aërial regions, directed the meteors, winds, and storms. His favourite weapon was a prodigious hammer. The fifth day of the week, which still bears his name (Thor's-day), was dedicated to him.

THORDA, or THORENBURG, tor'-da, a market-town of the Austrian empire, in Transylvania, on the left bank of the Aranyos, 16 miles from Klausenburg, near the Aranjos. It has an extensive trade in salt, there being rich mines in the neighbourhood. Pop. 8,200.

THORN, torn, a strongly-fortified town of the province of Prussia, on the right bank of the Vistula, 52 miles S.W. of Marienwerder. There are three Protestant and three Roman Catholic churches, and in the market-place is a statue of Copernicus, who was born here. Manf. Woollens, linen, leather, gloves, and gingerbread. There is a large trade in corn and timber. Pop. 20,617.—The town was founded in the 13th century by the Teutonic knights.

THORNHILL, JAMES, Sir, an English painter. The dome of St. Paul's, the hospital at Greenwich, and Hampton Court Palace, exhibit specimens of his talents as a painter. He was appointed principal painter to Queen Anne; George I. conferred on him the honour of knighthood. He acquired considerable wealth by his profession, and became a member of the House of Commons for Weymouth. Hogarth married his daughter.

Born at Weymouth, 1676; died there, 1734.

THORWALDSEN, BERTEL, or BARTHOLOMÆUS, torr-vauld'-sen, a Danish sculptor, who was the son of an Icelandic carver in wood, in humble circumstances. Until his 11th year he worked at the same business; but being sent, about this time, to the school of the Academy of Arts at Copenhagen, he made such progress, that, in two years, he became a better carver than his father, and began to be employed upon the figure-heads of ships. At 17 he gained a silver medal for a bas-relief of Cupid reposing, and in his 22nd year he won the gold medal of the Fine Arts Academy, to which was added a travelling studentship for three years, his expenses to be defrayed by the government. In 1796 he set out for Italy, and proceeded to Rome, where he studied and worked under the auspices of his countryman, Zoëga. Having found patrons at Rome, he resolved to settle there. A number of beautiful works ensured his reputation as one of the finest sculptors of the day, and well-paid commissions poured in on him. In 1819 he returned to Copenhagen, where he was received with enthusiasm; but, in a year, he again set out for Italy, passing through Germany on his route. In 1838 his native government sent a frigate to convey him and his sculptures to Copenhagen, where he remained until 1841, in which year the delicate state of his health caused him to return to Italy. In 1842 he returned to Denmark once more, and continued to reside there until his death. Thorwaldsen bequeathed almost the whole of his personal estate to the founding of a museum, which was to contain all his works, either originals or in casts, and to bear his name. This museum is one of the finest buildings in Copenhagen, and forms one of the chief attractions of the city.

Born 1770; died at Copenhagen, 1844.

THOUVENEL, ÉDOUARD ANTOINE, toove'-nel, French statesman. Having filled several diplomatic offices, he was in 1849 appointed minister to Greece, and took an active part in the Pacifico dispute. He was afterwards minister at Munich, and in 1852 was appointed Minister of Foreign Affairs. Two years afterwards he took part in the Vienna conference, and in 1855 went as ambassador to Constantinople. He was raised to the Senate in 1859, and in 1860 received the grand cross of the legion of honour, about the same time resuming office as foreign minister. In 1862 he was president of the Suez Canal commission.

Born at Verdun, 1818; died 1866.

THOUROUT, too-roo', a town of Belgium, province of West Flanders, 11 miles S.W. of Bruges. Manf. Linen, leather, cordage, earthenware, soap, tobacco, and glue. Pop. 8,300.

THRACE, thrace, in ancient geography, a district of south-eastern Europe, lying between the Danube, the Black Sea, the Sea of Marmora, and the Grecian Archipelago, nearly identical with the modern Turkey in Europe.

THREE RIVERS, a city and port of entry of Quebec, province of Canada, on the north bank of the St. Lawrence, at the mouth of the St. Maurice, 60 miles S.W. of Quebec. The chief trade is in lumber. Pop. 9,296.

THROCKMORTON, throk-mor'-ton, a county of Texas, United States. Area, 900 square miles. Pop. 711.

THROCMORTON, NICHOLAS, Sir, an English statesman, who, in early life, became page to the duke of Richmond, natural son of Henry VIII. He subsequently served under the protector Somerset in the Scottish campaign. He was in favour under Edward VI., who appointed him undertreasurer of the Mint, and bestowed upon him some valuable estates. After the death of Edward VI., he was charged with being implicated in the conspiracy of Sir William Wyatt, and imprisoned in the Tower; but, on being brought to trial, he so ably defended himself, as to gain an acquittal from the jury, despite the threats of the chief justice. He then retired to France, in order to avoid the persecutions to which, as a Protestant, he might be subjected under the reign of Mary. Queen Elizabeth, upon her accession, created Throcmorton chief butler of England and chamberlain of the exchequer; but, in 1569, he was arrested on the charge of being concerned in negotiating a marriage between Mary queen of Scots and the duke of Norfolk, and, after a short confinement in the Tower, was released, but lost his places under the crown.

Born about 1513; died 1571.

THUCYDIDES, thu-sid'-i-dees, a Greek historian. He was of noble birth, and, on arriving at maturity, took part in the Peloponnesian war; but failing in an expedition with which he had been entrusted, he was banished, and, in his exile, collected materials for his "History of the Peloponnesian War," which he produced after his return from banishment.

Born 471 B.C.; died about 400 B.C.

THURGAU, or THURGOVIA, toor'-gow, a canton of Switzerland, to the south and southwest of the Lake of Constance. Undulating and fertile. Rivers. The Thur, Sitter, and Murg. Area, 382 square miles. Pop. 99,552. nearly all German.

THURINGIA, thoo-rin'-je-a, (in Germ. too'-ring-en). (See GERMANY.)

THURLES, therlz, a market-town of Ireland, county of Tipperary, on the right bank of the Suir, 20 miles N.E. of Tipperary. There are large barracks. Pop. 4,850.—A station on the Great Southern and Western of Ireland railway.

THURLOW, EDWARD, Lord, an English lawyer, who was educated at Cambridge, called to the bar in 1754, and in the course of a few years rose to a high reputation in his profession. In 1768 he entered parliament, and supported Lord North's administration, particularly with respect to the policy pursued towards the Americans. This conduct caused him to gain the favour of George III., who during twenty years evinced considerable personal regard for him. He was appointed solicitor-general in 1770, attorney-general in the following year, and in 1778 he became lord chancellor, being at the same time created Baron Thurlow. On the death of the marquis of Rockingham, Fox assisted Lord North to form a coalition ministry, and Thurlow was compelled to resign. When Pitt became minister, in 1783, Lord Thurlow was again appointed lord chancellor, and retained the office during the nine succeeding years.

Born near Ashfield, Suffolk, 1732; died at Brighton, 1806.

THURSTON, thurs'-ton, a county of Washington Territory, United States. Area, 672 square miles. Pop. 2,246. The capital is OLYMPIA.

TIBER, ti'-ber, a river of Italy, rising in the Apennines, passing Perugia and Rome, and, after a course of 230 miles, discharging into the Mediterranean near Ostia, by two mouths enclosing the Insula Sacra of the ancients. In the lower part of the course the water has a yellowish tinge, the result of the yellow clay through which it passes. The Italian government has recently, urged by Garibaldi, commenced works for the improvement of the channel. The chief affluents are the Chiascio, Nera, and Teverone, on the left, and the Paglia on the right.

TIBERIAS, SEA OF, or SEA OF GALILEE, or GENNESARET, a large lake in the northern part of Judæa. (See TABARIA.)

TIBERIUS, CLAUDIUS NERO, ti-be'-ri-us, a Roman emperor, who succeeded Augustus A.D. 14, and was descended from the family of the Claudii. His mother was divorced from her husband, in order that she might marry Augustus, who adopted Tiberius, and made him divorce his young wife, and marry the dissolute Julia, the emperor's daughter. In his early years he commanded popularity by entertaining the people with magnificent shows and fights of gladiators. After distinguishing himself as a general in various parts, he was rewarded with four successive triumphs. At the height of his fame he suddenly retired to the island of Rhodes, where he remained during eight years. Returning to Rome, A.D. 2, he was invested with the command of the Roman armies in Illyricum, Pannonia, and Dalmatia, and seemed to divide the sovereign power with Augustus; at whose death Tiberius assumed the reigns of government. The beginning of his reign seemed to promise tranquillity to the empire. Tiberius, however, soon appeared in his real character. His ingratitude to his mother Livia, and his tyrannical oppression and murder of many noble senators, rendered him odious to the people. Not only his relations and friends, but the great and opulent, were sacrificed to his ambition, cruelty, and avarice; and there was in Rome scarcely a single family that did not reproach Tiberius with the loss of a brother, a father, or a husband. He at length retired to the island of Capreæ, on the coast of Campania, where he gave himself up to infamous pleasures. The care of the empire was intrusted to his favourite Sejanus. Tiberius, on being made acquainted with the tyrannical measures of Sejanus, ordered him to be put to death. (See SEJANUS.) Shortly afterwards he fell into a lethargy, which was mistaken for death, and Caligula, his favourite and the son of Germanicus, was proclaimed emperor. Tiberius, however, recovered; but Macro, the commander of the Prætorian guard, caused him to be suffocated. Like the rest of the emperors, he received divine honours after death, and even during his life. He was a patron of literature and the arts, and was the author of some Greek poems.

Born at Rome, 42 B.C.; died near Misenum, 37.

TIBET, or THIBET, tib'-et, an extensive region of Central Asia, bounded N. by Eastern Turkestan and China; S. by Burmah, Bootan, Nepaul, and British India; E. and S.E. by China, and W. by Cashmere. It forms the south-eastern portion of the great central plateau of Asia (see ASIA), lying between the Himalaya range on the south and the Kuen-lun range on the north, with transverse chains connecting the western extremities. Between these ranges, and parallel with them, is a third range, lofty and snow-capped, the chief peak being about 25,000 feet high, of which little is known, and to which various names, as Tania and Nian-tsin-tangla, have been given. Between this range and the Himalaya is Great Tibet, with an average elevation of about 15,000 feet. Western Tibet, or Asi, comprises Ladakh and the mountain region about the sources of the Ganges and Sutlej; and Eastern Tibet is an almost unknown region, including the deep valley through which several of the great rivers flowing into China, Indo-China, and Burmah, take their rise. North of the central range are a series of lofty plateaux, uncultivated, and occupied by wandering tribes. In Great Tibet are vast steppes affording good pasturage; some districts are cultivated, and the chief towns and settled villages are in that part of the country. The vegetation is scanty, and there is little timber except in some of the mountainous districts, where cedar and birch are found. In the warmer valleys the apple, fig, pomegranate, peach, and the vine thrive. Roses thrive 13,000 feet above the sea level, and corn is grown at an altitude of 17,000 feet. The climate in the higher regions is cold and almost rainless; and the plains are exposed to violent winds and storms of dust in winter, when the cold is intense. The lofty Himalayas (see HIMALAYAS) form a barrier between the country and British India, to surmount which (in consequence of the opposition of Chinese influences to the extension of British commerce in that region) few efforts have been made. It is now known that there are three or four available passes, varying in height from 15,000 to 17,000 feet, among them the Kirong pass in Nepaul; the Jeylub, giving access from the Chumbli valley; the Perigong, Donkin, and Sikhim, and probably many others available at certain seasons.

Rivers and Lakes.—The Indus and Brahmapootra rise in the western mountains, and the great Chinese river, the Hoang-ho, has its origin in Eastern Tibet. The lake system is remarkable. North of the great central range of mountains, on the slopes of which are numerous glaciers, the drainage is wholly interior, the streams being received by the salt lakes which occupy the principal depression. The largest of these is known as Namcho, or "sky-lake," from its great elevation (15,200 feet) above the sea level. It is 50 miles long, from 16 to 25 miles wide, and receives two considerable rivers and several minor streams, but has no apparent exit. Nearer the Himalayas are lakes Rhawan-chad and Manasarowar, out of which the Sutlej issues. About 35 miles S.W. of Lassa is Lake Palta, ring-shaped; and in Eastern Tibet is Lake Koko-nor.

Minerals.—Gold, silver, iron, lead, cinnabar, salt (obtained by evaporation from the salt lakes), borax, and several kinds of precious stones.

Zoology.—The wild animals include the tiger, bear, buffalo, wild goat, wolf, ounce, lynx, musk-deer, and yak. The most valuable of the domestic animals is the shawl-goat, famous for the softness and beauty of its hair. Large numbers of cattle and sheep are reared, and feathered game is abundant.

Area.—About 700,000 square miles.

Pop.—About 6,000,000, mostly professing Lamaism; but in Western Tibet are some Mahometans and Roman Catholics.

Government.—Tibet is nominally tributary to the empire of China, but practically the government is in the hands of the priestly rulers, the Dalai Lama and the Teshu Lama, each of whom govern a province, the respective capitals being LASSA and Shigatze. The former is the sacred capital of all Buddhistic countries, and ranks as the capital of all Tibet.

History.—The old kingdom of Tibet dates from early in the 14th century. It became tributary to China about 1720.

TICINO, or TESSIN, te-ché'-no, a canton in the south of Switzerland, situate between the central cantons and the frontier of Italy. The northern part is alpine, including the central mass of the St. Gothard range, and a considerable portion belongs to the glacier region. The face of the country has a general slope to the south, and lofty mountain ranges traverse it in that direction. In the elevated parts is good pasturage, and on the mountain slopes of the south are chestnut forests, with vineyards and orchards in the valleys.

Rivers and Lakes.—The Ticino, rising in Mount St. Gothard, flows through Lake Maggiore (partly within the canton) to the Po. The chief lakes are Lugano, Muzzano, and Origlio.

Area.—1,095 square miles.

Pop.—130,777, nearly all Roman Catholics, and speaking the Italian language.

TICKNOR, GEORGE, tick'-nor, an American writer and philologist, who, after completing his education at Dartmouth College, New Hampshire, devoted himself to the study of the law, which, however, he subsequently relinquished to follow a literary career. In order to perfect himself in the modern languages, he spent some years in the cities of Paris, Rome, Madrid, Lisbon, London, and Edinburgh. In 1819 he accepted the professorship of modern languages at Harvard University, the duties of which office he fulfilled during fifteen years. In 1849 he produced his "History of Spanish Literature." Later in life, he published a biography of Prescott.

Born at Boston, 1791; died there, 1871.

TICONDEROGA, tik-on'-de-ro'-ga, a town of the United States, Essex county, New York, 86 miles from Albany. It was nearly destroyed by fire in 1875. Pop. 2,600.—This town is famous for the siege it sustained during the war between the English and French, and in the great Revolutionary war.

TIDOR, ti'-dor, one of the Ternate Islands, in the Indian Archipelago. It is about 21 miles in circumference, and of volcanic formation, but well wooded. Pop. Unascertained, all Mahometans. The sultan is tributary to the Dutch.

TIECK, CHRISTIAN FREDERICK, teek, a German sculptor, who studied under Schadow, and subsequently under David, at Paris. In 1819 he established himself at Berlin, became a member of the academy there, and was engaged to execute many of the most important public works in that city, and many memorial statues.

Born at Berlin, 1776; died there, 1851.

TIECK, LUDWIG, a celebrated German writer, and elder brother of the preceding. He distinguished himself in early life at the universities of Halle, Göttingen, and Erlangen, and in his 19th year, made his first effort in literature, by producing "Almansur," a prose idyll. He is best known in this country by his fantastic tales, some of which have been translated by Carlyle; but he is entitled to a far higher rank as the author of "The Life and Death of Genoveva," and other fine dramas. In 1820, by invitation of the king of Prussia, he went to Berlin, where he exercised a great influence in literature and the drama.

Born at Berlin, 1773; died 1853.

TIEN-SIO-DAI-TSIN, teen'-syo-dai-tsin', in Japanese mythology, the patron divinity, who is held to have created the world, and to have reigned during 25,000 years. From him descend all the dynasties which have reigned in Japan. In a celebrated temple erected in his honour, this god is worshipped under the emblem of a mirror.

TIEN-TSIN, teen-tsin', a city of China, in the province of Chih-le, and the port of Pekin, from which it is nearly 65 miles on the Peiho river. It is surrounded by a wall, and there are extensive suburbs on the opposite sides of the river. It is a great entrepôt for salt. In 1858 a treaty favourable to British interests was signed here by Lord Elgin and the Chinese commissioners. Pop. recorded, 950,000. (See CHINA and ELGIN.)

TIETJENS, or TITIENS, THERESE JOANNA CAROLINE, teet'-yens, vocalist, whose beauty of voice early attracted attention, and she was carefully trained for the operatic stage, on which she appeared at the age of 15, at Frankfort, and speedily obtained the highest distinction as an impersonator of characters requiring dignity and tragic force. As a vocalist in sacred and ballad music she also held the highest position. She made successful tours in the United States, but adopted England as her home.

Born at Hamburg, 1831; died in London, 1877.

TIFFIN, tif'-fon, capital of Seneca county, Ohio, United States, on the Sandusky, 77 miles N.W. of Columbus. It is an important railway centre; and the seat of Heidelberg college, belonging to the German Reformed Church. Manf. Steam engines, agricultural implements, and joinery. Pop. 7,879.

TIFLIS, tif-lis', a government of Russia in Asia, in Transcaucasia, comprising the central part of the former kingdom of Georgia. (See GEORGIA). Area, 15,614 square miles. Pop. 726,685.

TIFLIS, or TEFLES, capital of the above government, on both sides of the Kur. The northern portion is well laid out and built in the European style; the old part is Asiatic in character, with narrow streets and alleys, and bazaars, where the chief trade is carried on. There are mineral baths much resorted to. A railway connects the town with Poti, on the Black Sea. Manf. Carpets and shawls. Pop. 104,024, of various nationalities.—The town was founded in the 5th century, and was for centuries the capital of Georgia. Aga Mohamed Khan, shah of Persia, nearly destroyed it in 1795, and reduced most of the inhabitants to slavery.

TIGRANES, ti-grai'-nees, king of Armenia, who became the ally of Mithridates the Great, whose daughter Cleopatra he married, and whom he assisted in maintaining a war against the Romans, but was defeated by Lucullus and Pompey. By a bribe of 60,000 talents, he was allowed to keep possession of his throne.

Died about 55.

TIGRÉ, tee'-grai, a province of Abyssinia. (See ABYSSINIA.)

TIGRIS, ti'-gris, a river of Western Asia, rising in the north-west of Kurdistan, about 10 miles from the eastern branch of the Euphrates, which it joins at Korna, and the united stream falls into the Persian Gulf. (See EUPHRATES.) Its total course is estimated at 1,150 miles. The principal affluents are the Biltis-chai, or eastern Tigris, the Upper and Lower Zab, the Adhem and the Dryalah. This is the Digloth of antiquity and the Hiddekel of the Hebrews.

TILBURG, til'-boorg, a town of the Netherlands, province of North Brabant, on the Ley, 14 miles S.E. of Breda. Manf. Woollen goods, for which it is the principal place in the Netherlands. Pop. 30,904.

TILLAMOOK, til'-la-mook, a county of Oregon, United States. Area, 1,400 square miles. Pop. 500. The chief place is Tillamook.

TILLOTSON, JOHN, til'-lot-son, an English prelate, who was the son of a clothier, and received his education at Clare Hall, Cambridge, where he was chosen fellow in 1651. Though bred among the Puritans, he conformed, at the Restoration, to the church of England, and became curate of Cheshunt, in Hertfordshire. In 1664 he was chosen preacher to the society of Lincoln's Inn, and in the following year, lecturer of St. Lawrence's church, Jewry. In 1666 he took his degree of D.D.; in 1670 he was made prebendary, and two years afterwards dean of Canterbury. He was very zealous against popery in the reign of James II., and immediately after the Revolution, he became the confidential friend of William III., who bestowed upon him the archbishopric of Canterbury, after the deprivation of Dr. Sancroft. This drew upon him the hatred of the nonjurors, who put forth many severe animadversions upon him. His sermons, published after his death, are distinguished by their perspicuity and closeness of reasoning. He married a niece of Oliver Cromwell.

Born at Sowerby, Yorkshire, 1630; died 1694.

TILLY, JOHANN TSERCLAS, count, til'-le, a German general. He was educated at a college of the Jesuits, but preferred to adopt a military life. He displayed great courage and talents in Hungary against the Turks, and, in 1620, held the command of the troops under duke Maximilian, at the battle of Prague. He displayed superior abilities in numerous actions in the German wars, and defeated Christian IV. of Denmark, at Lutter, in 1626. He was at last defeated by Gustavus Adolphus of Sweden, and received a mortal wound in defending the passage of the Lech.

Born in South Brabant, 1559; died at Ingoldstadt, 1632.

TILSIT, til'-sit, a town of Prussia, province of Prussia, at the junction of the Tilse and the Niemen (the latter being crossed by a long bridge), 60 miles N.E. of Königsberg. Manf. Machinery, iron, paper, leather, and sugar. There is a large trade in grain. Pop. 21,500. The famous treaty of Tilsit, between Napoleon and the emperor of Russia, was arranged here, on a raft on the river, in 1807.

TIMBUCTOO, or TIMBUKTU, tim-buk-too', an important trading town of central Africa, on the south-western border of the great desert, and near the Niger, where there is a port, Kabara. The town, triangular in form, is laid out in streets and winding lanes, and the houses are generally built of clay. There are three mosques. The trade is considerable, the principal native products being gold, the kola nut and salt from the adjacent mines of Taodenni, European manufactures are imported by way of Morocco, and reach Timbuctoo in caravans, crossing the desert. In November and December as many as 10,000 traders sometimes visit the town. Pop. About 13,000, chiefly Mahometans. Lon. 3° 5′ W., lat. 17° 57′ N. Timbuctoo was built about 1214. It was formerly considered a dependency of Morocco, but has been practically independent since 1727. The first European traveller who reached it was major Laing, in 1826.

TIMIMOUN, ti-mi-moon', a town of northern Africa, an oasis of the Sahara, and a centre of trade. There are three mosques, and the town is defended by a wall and fortress. It was formerly a dependency of Morocco, but has recently declared itself independent. Pop. Large, but unascertained. Lat. 27° 50′ N.; lon. 1° 40′ E.

TIMOR, ti'-mor, an island of the Indian archipelago, between Flores and Timor-Laut. Mountainous in the interior, an elevation of 6,000 feet being attained at the northern end. The coasts are only slightly indented, but there are good harbours at Kupang and Dilli. The vegetation is poor. Area, 11,500 square miles. Pop. 300,000, of the Papuan type. Lat. 9°30′—11° 40′ N.; lon. 123° 20′—127° 10′ E. The Dutch have a settlement at Kupang, and the chiefs of the southern and western coasts admit their supremacy; but the eastern and northern districts are tributary to the Portuguese.

TIMOR-LAUT, lau, an island of the Indian archipelago, 65 miles long and 30 broad. Lat. 8° 27′ S.; lon. 131° 7′ E.

TIMOTHEUS, ti-mo'-the-us, a poet and musician of Miletus. He was the friend of Euripides, and received an immense sum from the Ephesians for a poem in honour of Diana. Only a few fragments of his works have been preserved.

Died 357 B.C.

TIMOTHEUS, an Athenian general, who was the son of Conon and a pupil of Isocrates. Placed in command of the Athenian fleet in 375 B.C., he, in order to avert an invasion of Thebes by the Lacedæmonians, took Corcyra, Cephalonia, and Acarnania. He was a second time made admiral of a fleet of sixty ships; but his enemies having been able to produce a strong feeling against him at Athens, he was recalled. He was brought to trial; and although his innocence of the charges urged against him was well established, he was only liberated through the interference of Alcetas the Molossian, and Jason of Pheræ. For a short time he retired to Persia, but in 361 B.C. he again held a naval command, and proceeding to the Hellespont, he captured several towns. A reconciliation took place between him and his rival Iphicrates, in 357 B.C. The two commanders sailed to reduce Samos and the other rebellious allies of Athens; but the expedition proving unsuccessful, the Athenians were compelled to conclude a peace, which brought to a termination the Social War. Timotheus and his colleagues were subsequently accused of having taken bribes from the Chians and Rhodians. He was fined 100 talents, which sum being unable to pay, he retired to Chalcis, in Eubœa, where he died. His countrymen afterwards acknowledged the injustice with which they had acted towards him, and nine-tenths of the penalty was remitted.

Died 354 B.C.

TIMOTHY, tim'-o-the, the disciple of St. Paul, was a native of Lystra, in Asia Minor. His father was a pagan, but his mother a Jewess. He became bishop of Ephesus, where, it is believed, he was stoned to death.

Died 97.

TIMOUR or TAMERLANE, ti'-moor, a Tartarian conqueror, who was of Mongol origin, and was a descendant of Genghis Khan. He became a soldier in his twelfth year, and, at that early age, evinced unusual courage and an enterprising disposition. Having become chief of the tribe of the Berlas in 1361, he made himself master of Balk, the capital of Khorasan, after which he made an easy conquest of the province of Candahar. In this war he was wounded in the thigh, and became lame for life, being called, in consequence, Timur-lenk, "lame Timur," which term has been corrupted by the Europeans into Tamerlane. Persia was then subdued, and the Christian princes of Georgia became "his tributaries." He then invaded Russia, threatened Moscow, and marched to the south and sacked and burned Azov. In 1398, he marched into India, where he took Delhi, the capital, and thus gained possession of immense treasures. But while he was engaged in this expedition, Bagdad revolted; on which he hastened back, delivered the city up to pillage, and put to death 90,000 persons. He also invaded Syria, and took Damascus. During this splendid career the Greek emperor and some inferior princes implored his assistance against Bajazet, emperor of the Turks. Tamerlane sent to him to withdraw from before Constantinople, and to replace the princes whom he had deposed. Bajazet returned a fierce answer; on which Tamerlane marched against him, and, after a battle of three days, the Turkish emperor was defeated and taken prisoner. Tamerlane fixed the seat of his vast empire at Samarcand, where he received the homage of numerous sovereigns. Having resolved to make the conquest of China, he set out with his army; but died on the march.

Born at Sebz, near Samarcand, 1336; died at Otrar, on the Jaxartes, 1405.

TINDAL, MATTHEW, tin'-dal, an English deistical writer, who was educated at Oxford, where he became fellow of All-Souls College, and took his degree of doctor of laws. He embraced the Roman Catholic faith in the reign of James II., but professed himself a Protestant, and took the oaths at the Revolution. His works are—"The Rights of the Christian Church;" the design of which work was to show the inutility of the clergy; "Christianity as Old as the Creation," in which he endeavoured to undermine revelation.

Born at Beer-Ferris, Devonshire, about 1657; died in London, 1733.

TINEO (SAN PEDRO), a town of Spain, province of Oviedo, near the left bank of the Narcea, 33 miles S. W. of Oviedo. Manf. Woollen and linen goods. Pop. 21,500.

TING-HAE, ting'-hai, the capital of the island of Chusan, off the east coast of China. Pop. 33,000. Lat. 30° N.; lon. 122° 6′. It was taken by the British in 1840.

TINNEVELLY, tin-ne-vel'-ly, a maritime district of British India, occupying the south-east extremity of the peninsula, and separated from Ceylon by the Gulf of Manaar. Pop. 1,699,747, mostly Hindoos.

TINNEVELLY, the capital of the above, 50 miles N.E. of Cape Cormorin, is surrounded by extensive rice-fields, and, on the west, by rocky ground. It is unhealthy for Europeans. Pop. 23,221.

TINOS, te'-nos, an island of the Grecian archipelago, one of the Cyclades, S. E. of Andros, from which it is separated by a narrow channel. It is 18 miles long and 5 wide. Well watered and fertile; producing silk, barley, fruits, honey, and wine. Pop. 22,000.

TINTORETTO, (GIACOMO ROBUSTI,) tin'-to-ret'-to, an Italian painter, and pupil of Titian, who, fearing that he would become a powerful rival, dismissed him. He was remarkable for the bold manner of his painting and the rapidity of his production, but he was very unequal. The surname Tintoretto was given him because he was the son of a dyer.

Born at Venice, 1512; died there, 1594.

TIOGA, te-o'-ga, a county of New York, United States. Area, 480 square miles. Pop. 32,000. The capital is Owego.

TIOGA, a county of Pennsylvania, United States. Area, 1,100 square miles. Pop. 45,814. The capital is Wellsborough.

TIPPAH, tip'-pa, a county of Mississippi, United States. Area, 500 square miles. Pop. 12,867, about one-fourth being coloured. The capital is Ripley.

TIPPECANOE, tip-ka-noo', a county of Indiana, United States. Area, 500 square miles. Pop. 35,966. The capital is LAFAYETTE.

TIPPERARY, tip-pe-rai'-re, a county of Ireland, province of Munster, extending in a very irregular form between the King's and Queen's counties N., the latter county and that of Kilkenny E., the counties of Waterford and Cork S., and those of Limerick, Clare, and Galway W. From the two latter counties the river Shannon forms a natural boundary, as the river Suir does from Waterword for about 15 miles on the south. The lands of Tipperary have been always ranked amongst the most productive in Ireland. There is excellent grazing land, and the dairy products are valuable; but there are also extensive tracts of bog and mountain. To the south of a range of bog, and situate between the town of Killenaule and the county of Kilkenny, is the coal district. On the borders of the county of Waterford are the Knockmeledown mountains. Nearly parallel to these, and north of them, are the Galtees, which attain an elevation of 3,000 feet, but the greatest extent of mountain crosses the county from south-west to north-east. The hills adjoining Limerick are called, from the highest of them, the Keeper mountains, which, with the Devil's Bit mountain, extend across the northern part of the county.

Rivers.—The Shannon, and the Suir and its tributaries.
Minerals.—Copper, lead, coal, and slate.
Area.—1,659 square miles.
Pop.—193,004.
Parliamentary Representation and Chief Towns.—The county returns 2 members, and Clonmel 1. The chief towns are TIPPERARY (the capital), CARRICK-ON-SUIR, CASHEL, CLONMEL, NENAGH, ROSCREA, and THURLES.

TIPPERARY, a market-town, capital of the above county, near the small river Arra, 98 miles S.W. of Dublin. It is beautifully situate in a fertile tract, and there is a handsome parish church. The chief trade is in butter. Pop. 7,274.—A station on the Waterford and Limerick railway.

TIPPOO-SAIB, tip'-poo-sa'-eeb, sultan of Mysore, was the son of Hyder Ali, whom he succeeded in the government of his kingdom. He was first known as Feth Ali Khan, distinguished himself against the English, and after his accession to the throne, in 1782, he concluded a peace on advantageous terms. He then subdued Malabar, forcing 100,000 Hindoos to profess Mahometanism. In 1790 he engaged in another war with the English, having invaded the territory of their ally, the rajah of Travancore, and was defeated in a number of actions. In 1792 Lord Cornwallis obliged him to sue for peace, when Tippoo delivered his two sons as hostages. The war was resumed in 1799, and terminated with the entire conquest of Mysore and the death of Tippoo, who fell bravely fighting on the ramparts of Seringapatam, his capital, when it was stormed by General Baird.

TIPTON, tip'-ton, a town of Staffordshire, 8 miles N.W. of Birmingham. It is in the "black country," and there are numerous iron and coal works in the vicinity. There are four churches, and several chapels. Pop. 30,000.—A station on the Great Western and London and North Western railways.

TIPTON, a county of Indiana, United States. Area, 280 square miles. Pop. 14,407. The capital is Tipton.

TIPTON, a county of Tennessee, United States. Area, 370 square miles. Pop. 21,033. nearly half being coloured. The capital is Covington.

TIREE, an island of the Hebrides, the scene, in 1886, of the crofters' resistance to legal proceedings for rent, in which they were successful until the arrival of three vessels of the Royal Navy. Pop. 2,730.

TIRLEMONT, teerl'-mawn(g), a town of Belgium, province of Brabant, on the Geete, 25 miles E. of Brussels. It is surrounded by walls, with six gates. The Gothic church of Nôtre Dame, built in the 15th century, and the new town-house, are the most conspicuous public buildings. There are a college, various other educational institutions, and large cavalry barracks. Manf. Woollens, hosiery, oil, beetroot-sugar, leather, soap, and paper. Seven annual fairs are held. Pop. 13,500.

TIRNOVA, tir-no'-va, a town of European Turkey, in Bulgaria, on the Jantra, 76 miles S.W. of Shumla. It is enclosed by a wall, and has numerous mosques, Greek churches, and synagogues. Pop. 11,247.

TISCHENDORF, LOBEGOTT FRIEDRICH CONSTANTIN VON, teesh'-en-dorf, German Biblical critic and editor, famous for the discovery and publication of numerous codices of great antiquity. He studied theology and philology at Leipsic. He afterwards published a small volume of poetry and "The Young Mystic," a novel, the latter under the pseudonym of Dr. Fritz. In 1841 he produced an edition of the Greek Testament, and then spent several years in examining the great libraries of Europe. In 1844, 1853, and 1859, he made journeys in the East, visiting the libraries and monasteries of Asia Minor, Palestine, the Siniatic peninsula, and Egypt. In the first two of these journeys he was aided with funds from the government of Saxony, and in the last from the Emperor of Russia. The result was the collection and publication of a large number of ancient texts, among them the famous "Codex Sinaiticus," found in the convent of St. Catharine, near Mount Sinai. It is impossible within our limits to enumerate all his labours, including several critical editions of the Greek Testament, and the editing of a vast number of manuscripts with annotations. In 1859 he was appointed professor of theology and Biblical palæography at Leipsic, the chair having been established expressly for him. He was also a count of the Russian empire, a D.C.L. of Oxford, and LL.D. of Cambridge.

Born at Lengenfeld, Saxony, 1815; died at Leipsic, 1874.

TISHOMINGO, tish'-o-min'-go, a county of Mississippi, United States. Area, 550 square miles. Pop. 7,500. The capital is Iuka.

TITAN, or TITANUS, ti'-tan, in Greek mythology, a son of Cœlus and Terra, brother to Saturn and Hyperion. He was the eldest of the 45 gigantic sons of Cœlus and Terra; but he gave Saturn the kingdom of the world, provided he begot no male children. When the birth of Jupiter was concealed, Titan made war against Saturn, and imprisoned him till he was replaced on his throne by his son Jupiter.

TITIAN, TEZIANO VECELLIO, tish'-yan, one of the greatest of Italian painters, whose first master was Giovanni Bellini, in his time the greatest painter of Venice. Titian adopted his style; but, on becoming acquainted with the works of Gior, gione, he altered his manner, and contracted an intimacy with that great artist. The reputation of Titian rose rapidly, and the Emperor Charles V. conferred on him the honour of knighthood and a pension. He died of the plague.

Born in Friuli, 1477; died at Venice, 1576.

TITUS, tī'-tus, a disciple of St. Paul, was a Greek and a Gentile; but, on his conversion, he became amanuensis to the apostle, who consecrated him bishop of Crete, where, according to an ancient tradition, he died at an advanced age.

Lived in the 1st century.

TITUS LIVIUS, ancient Roman historian.

TITUS, FLAVIUS SABINUS VESPASIANUS, a Roman emperor, was the son of the emperor Vespasian. He served under his father, and distinguished himself at the siege of Jerusalem. He obtained the imperial dignity in 79. In his youth he was somewhat dissipated and extravagant, which gave room to fear that he would prove another Tiberius or Nero, but his subsequent excellent conduct showed that these apprehensions were groundless, and he was so much beloved by his subjects as to be named by them "the delight of the human race."

Born 40; died 81.

TITUS, a county of Texas, United States. Area, 940 square miles. Pop. 5,959, about one-fourth being coloured. The capital is Mount Pleasant.

TITUSVILLE, a city of Pennsylvania, United States, in Crawford county, 85 miles N.E. of Pittsburg, in the midst of a fine dairy region, and with many petroleum wells in the vicinity, to the discovery of which it owes its rapid prosperity, and there are several extensive oil refineries. Manf. Machinery and chemicals. Pop. 10,500.

TIUMEN, or TOUMEN, te-oo'-men, a town of Asiatic Russia, in Siberia, at the confluence of the Tyumenka with the Tura, 100 miles S.W. of Tobolsk. It has regular streets, and numerous churches and schools. Manf. Russian leather, of which there are upwards of 100 factories, woollen fabrics, and soap. It is a depôt for the commerce between Russia and China. Pop. 10,000, mostly Tartars.

TIVERTON, tiv'-er-ton, a market-town and municipal and parliamentary borough of Devonshire, at the confluence of the Exe and Loman, 12 miles N. of Exeter. On the opposite side of the Exe, which is crossed by a handsome stone bridge, is a large suburb, Wester. The principal public buildings are St. Peter's church, a very handsome structure, with a lofty tower, two other churches, several chapels, guildhall, and assembly-rooms. The market-place is spacious, and six fairs are held annually. Manf. Bobinet. Pop. 10,470.—A station on the Great Western Railway.

TIVOLI, tiv'-o-le, a town of Italy, province of Roma, and 16 miles N.E. of Rome. It is delightfully situate on an eminence covered with olives and fruit trees, on the left bank of the Teverone, and there is a handsome modern cathedral; but its greatest attraction now, as in former ages, consists in the falls of the Teverone (the ancient Anio), which glides gently through the town, till reaching the brink of a rock, over which it precipitates itself nearly 80 feet. On the summit of the steep bank stands a beautiful temple of the Corinthian order, built in the Augustan age. Near it are the remains of another ancient temple. Pop. 7,000.

TLEMCEN, or TREMECEN, tlem'-sen, a fortified town of Algeria, province of Oran, and 68 miles S.W. of the city of that name. There are about 30 mosques, the finest being that of Sid Ibrahim. Pop. 19,000, including 3,000 French. The town occupies the site of the ancient Jiddah, for several centuries the capital of an independent kingdom.

TOBAGO, to-bā'-go, one of the British West Indian Islands, belonging to the Windward group. It is very rocky, rising to about 900 feet on the north side, and descending towards the south-west. The valleys are well watered and productive. There are several good harbours, especially on the north side. Scarborough, on the south coast, is the chief town. Pop. 17,200. Lat. 11° 25′ N.; lon. 60° 32′ W.

TOBOLSK, to-bolsk', a government of the Russian empire, in Western Siberia, embracing all its width, from the Arctic Ocean to the Kirghiz territory, bounded W. by the Ural Mountains and E. by a varying line dividing it from Irkutsk. From the banks of the Frozen Ocean as far as lat. 58° N., the surface presents an aspect of the most dismal sterility. A great portion of the most southerly districts consists of steppes covered with saline lakes and marshes, but in some parts there are extensive forests. The steppe of Barabinski, on the contrary, which, in the eastern part, occupies the middle between these two districts, is covered with the most luxuriant pasturage.

Rivers.—The Obi, Irtish and tributaries; and there are extensive lakes.

Minerals.—The Urals, through a great part of their line, produce iron and copper most abundantly; and in other parts there is an inexhaustible supply of various minerals, including gold and silver.

Area.—532,960 square miles.

Pop.—1,283,168.

TOBOLSK, capital of the above government, on the right bank of the Irtish. It is composed of two parts, the high and the low town. The former is built on an elevated ridge, running parallel to the Irtish, at a little distance; while the latter fills the level space between it and the river. There are a cathedral and many other churches, several mosques, an episcopal palace, and a citadel, in which many exiles are confined. Pop. 20,132.

TOBOOAI-MANU, to-boo'-yai ma-noo', one of the Society Islands, in the Pacific Ocean.

TOCANTINS, to-kan-teens', a river of Brazil, which rises, by many heads, in lat. 14° S., lon. 49° 50′ W., and, after a course of upwards of 1,000 miles, falls into Rio Pará. The chief affluents are the Araguay, Great Somno, Tucahunas, and Theresa.

TOCAT. (See TOKAT.)

TOCQUEVILLE, ALEXIS CHARLES HENRI CLÉVEL DE, tok'-veel, a French historical writer, who, after completing his education, adopted the profession of the law, was a judge at Versailles from 1826 to 1830, and was, in 1831, despatched with M. de Beaumont to the United States of America for the purpose of making researches upon the working of democratic institutions. The results of this mission appeared in his valuable work, entitled "De la Démocratie en Amérique," produced in 1835. Four years later he became a member of the chamber of deputies. After the revolution of 1848 he was nominated vice-president of the assembly, and in the following year was appointed minister of foreign affairs, under the presidentship of Louis Napoleon. He was one of those who were divested of power by the coup d'état, devoting the remaining years of his life to philosophical researches into history, he produced—"Philosophical History of the Reign of Louis XV.;" "A Glance at the Reign of Louis XVI.;" and "L'Ancien Régime et la Révolution," which was translated into English under the title of "On the State of Society in France before the Revolution of 1788, and on the Causes which led to that Event." He was a member of the French Academy.

Born in Paris, 1805; died at Cannes, 1859.

TODD, the name of 3 counties of the United States:—

DAKOTA.—Area, 550 square miles. Pop. 500. The chief place is Fort Randall.
KENTUCKY—Area, 300 square miles. Pop. 16,000, about 5,000 being coloured. The capital is Elkton.
MINNESOTA.—Area, 960 square miles. Pop. 5,500. The capital is Long Praire.

TODMORDEN, tod-mor'-den, a market-town, partly in Lancashire and partly in the West Riding of Yorkshire, 19 miles N.E. of Manchester. There are a handsome modern church, an ancient church, St. Mary's, recently restored, and a splendid Unitarian church, erected by Messrs. Fielden, at a cost of nearly £35,000. Manf. Cotton goods. Pop. 23,860.—A station on the Lancashire and Yorkshire railway.

TOKAT, or TOCAT, to-kat', a town of Asiatic Turkey, in the vilayet or province of Sivas, on the Yeshel-Irmak. There are a large Armenian church and several mosques. Manf. Hardware (especially copper articles), woollen, linen, silk, and cotton goods, and carpets. Pop. Probably 50,000.

TOKAY, to-kai', a town in the north-east of Hungary, at the confluence of the rivers Bodrog and Theiss, 42 miles from Debreczin. There are well-frequented yearly fairs. This town, though small, has attained great celebrity for the wine produced in the vicinity. Pop. 5,000.

TOKIO. (See YEDO.)

TOLAND, JOHN, to'-land, a Deistical writer, who was educated in Ireland, in the Roman Catholic faith, but, at the age of 15, became Protestant, and afterwards went to the university of Glasgow, whence he removed to Edinburgh. After visiting Leyden and Oxford, he returned to Ireland, which country he was obliged to leave to avoid the persecutions to which he was subjected for writing a work called "Christianity not Mysterious," a work which was publicly burned by the hangman. In 1698 he published the "Life of Milton," which was followed by a Deistical work, entitled "Nazarenus," and several other books of a like tendency. He afterwards professed to be a good churchman, but shortly afterwards announced himself to be a Pantheist. He was employed by Harley, Earl of Oxford, as a political spy in Germany and Holland. His posthumous works were printed in 1726.

Born near Londonderry, about 1670; died at Putney, 1722.

TOLEDO, to-lai'-do, a province in the central part of Spain. It is generally mountainous, and near the centre are elevated plains. The soil is poor, especially in the northern part. Very few cattle, sheep, or horses are reared.

Rivers.—The Tagus, the Tiguela and its affluents.
Minerals.—Iron, lead, copper, quicksilver, tin, gold, silver, bismuth, coal, and graphite.
Area.—5,586 square miles.
Pop.—346,627.

TOLEDO, an ancient city, capital of the preceding province, on the Tagus, 42 miles S.W. of Madrid. It is situate on the sides of a steep hill, around the base of which the river winds, crossed by two stone bridges (one of Moorish construction), 100 feet high. The streets are narrow and crooked, and most of the houses are in the Moorish style. The principal attraction in Toledo are its public edifices. The Alcazar, or palace, is a large, but dilapidated structure at the top of a hill. The cathedral is of great antiquity, and is the metropolitan church of Spain. It is in the pure Gothic style, with a lofty spire, and was founded in 1258. The church of Nostra Señora del Transito is a fine building in the Saracenic style, with a Gothic grand altar. Besides these there are an episcopal palace, a good provincial library, and a large number of churches, hospitals, monasteries, and convents. The hospital of St. Cruz is an elegant building of the 15th century; that of St. John, built in the 16th, is equally rich, and in a better situation. Of Roman monuments there are here only the remains of a circus, an aqueduct, and a road. The town is surrounded by a double wall, originally Roman, but extended by Goths, Moors, and Spaniards, and entered by nine gates. Outside the walls is a royal foundry. Manf. Woollens, linen, silks, oil, and leather; and the Toledo swords so noted throughout Spain. Pop. 21,297.—Toledo is a place of great antiquity, and was successively the seat of government under the Goths, the Moors, and the kings of Castile. Between the 5th and 9th centuries it was the seat of several general ecclesiastical councils.

TOLEDO, a city and port of entry, capital of Lucas county, Ohio, United States, on the Maumee river, 5 miles from its mouth, and 8 miles from the western extremity of Lake Erie. There is a fine harbour. The public buildings, including 45 churches, are handsome, and the city is a very important railway centre. TOOKE, JOHN HORNE, an English politician and philologer. He was the son of a poulterer, but received his education at Westminster and Eton, and afterwards at St. John's College, Cambridge. In compliance with the wishes of his father, he entered into holy orders, although he himself strongly disliked the ecclesiastical profession, but in 1773 relinquished his clerical engagements, and commenced the study of the law. He had already taken an active part in political discussion. While a student of the law, he gave great assistance to Mr. William Tooke upon the question of an inclosure bill; in gratitude for which service the latter gentleman made him his heir. This was the origin of his adding to his original name of John Horne, that of Tooke. Upon the outbreak of the American war, he attacked the English ministry, and made a proposal for a subscription for the widows and orphans of those Americans who had been "murdered by the king's troops at Lexington and Concord." For this proceeding, he was brought to trial upon a charge of libel, found guilty, and sentenced to pay a fine of £200, and to be imprisoned for twelve months. After regaining his liberty, he applied to be admitted to practise at the bar; but was rejected, on the ground of his having previously taken holy orders. Retiring into Huntingdonshire, he, for a time, occupied himself with literary studies, and composed a short work in favour of parliamentary reform. In 1786 he produced the first volume of his celebrated "Diversions of Purley," an analysis of the English language, and a book of considerable value. In 1794 he was arrested upon a charge of high treason with Hardy, Thelwall, and others, mainly on account of his connection with the famous Constitutional Society, and after a trial of six days, during which he displayed considerable intrepidity, he was acquitted. Having twice previously sought the suffrages of the citizens of Westminster with almost entire success, he became a member for the borough of Old Sarum, in 1801. He retained his seat less than a year; for, after the dissolution in 1802, he could not regain it, in consequence of the passing of an act which disqualified any one holding priest's orders from representing a constituency in the House of Commons. Thereupon he retired into private life. He is one of the many to whom, upon very slight grounds, the authorship of the famous "Junius" letters has been attributed.

Born in London, 1736; died at Wimbledon, 1812.

TOPHANEH, to-fa'-ne, an arsenal, a suburb of Constantinople. (See CONSTANTINOPLE.)

TOPEKA, to-pe'-ka, capital of Kansas, United States, and county seat of Shawnee county, on both banks of the Kansas river (crossed by an iron bridge), 45 miles S.W. of Leavenworth. There are a very fine state-house, and a large asylum for the insane. The trade of the town is rapidly increasing. There is excellent railway communication, and the river furnishes good water-power. Manf. Machinery, carriages, and saddlery. Pop. 15,452.

TOPLITZ, or TEPLITZ, tep'-litz, a watering-place of Bohemia, 45 miles N.W. of Prague. There are 11 alkali-saline springs, of value in the treatment of gout and rheumatism. In the season as many as 30,000 invalids and tourists visit the place. Pop. 15,000.—A treaty of alliance between Russia, Prussia, and Austria, against France, was signed here in 1813.

TORDENSKIOLD, tor'-dens-kyold, a Danish admiral, who was at first a barber's apprentice; but entered the navy, and so greatly distinguished himself that he was ennobled under the name of Tordenskiold (shield against thunder), his original name having been Peter Wessel. He was killed in a duel at Hamburg, by a Swedish gambler named De Stahl.

Born at Trondheim, Norway, 1691; killed 1720.

TORELLI, GUISEPPE, to-rail'-le, an Italian mathematician, who produced an edition, in Greek and Latin, of the whole of the works of Archimedes.

Born at Verona, 1721; died 1781.

TORGAU, tor'-gow, a town of Prussia, province of Saxony, on the left bank of the Elbe, 26 miles S.E. of Wittemberg. The strong fortifications were built by Napoleon. The chief buildings are the Hartenfels palace, and a church consecrated by Luther. Manf. Linens and woollens, and brass castings. Pop. 11,000.—In 1814 the town surrendered to the Germans, after a siege of several months, during which more than 25,000 French soldiers died of typhus fever.

TORJOK. (See TORSCHOK.)

TORO, a city of Spain, in the province of Zamora, on the Douro, over which it has a bridge of 22 arches, 21 miles E. of Zamora. It is an old and decaying place, surrounded by walls of earth. There are an unfinished town-house, a fine clock tower, 16 churches, monasteries, and numerous fountains. Pop. 8,400.—This was formerly a place of great importance, and especially connected with the history of Ferdinand and Isabella.

TORONTO, tor-on'-to, a city, port of entry, capital of Ontario province, dominion of Canada, and county seat of York county, on the northern shore of Lake Ontario, 36 miles N.E. of Hamilton. The city rises gradually from the shore, and is connected on the north with the villages of Yorkville and Seaton, and on the east with Lesslieville. Among the public buildings are the university, erected in 1839; the government-house, custom-house, city-hall, legislative buildings, several colleges, and other educational institutions, Osgoode hall, the seat of the principal law courts of the province. St. James's cathedral has a spire 316 feet high, and there are a Roman Catholic cathedral and more than 70 other places of worship. There are two opera-houses, and in the centre of the city is the Queen's park, of 35 acres, and a tract of 300 acres near the lake is being laid out as a park. Among the public institutions are a large asylum for the insane, and a city hospital. Pop. 86,415—Toronto was incorporated as a city in 1834, previously to which it was named York. From 1849 to 1858 it was alternately with Quebec the seat of the government of Canada.

TORQUATUS, TITUS MANLIUS IMPERIOSUS, tor-kwa'-tus, a Roman hero, who, in the Gothic invasion of 361, slew in single combat a gigantic warrior, and took the chain (torques) from his neck, from which he gained the surname Torquatus. He was three times consul, and twice dictator. It is related that he caused his own son to be beheaded, for performing a remarkable act of valour contrary to orders.

Lived in the 4th century B.C.

TORQUAY, tor-kee', a watering-place of Devonshire, beautifully situated on a succession of terraces, on the north-eastern side of Torbay. It is a favourite resort for wealthy persons affected with pulmonary weakness. There are several fine churches, a town hall, theatre, assembly rooms, and other places of resort. In the vicinity are the ruins of Torquay Abbey, founded in 1196, and Kent's Hole, a remarkable cave, in which are bones of the elephant, rhinoceros, and other large animals now extinct in England. Pop. 24,770.—A station on the Great Western railway.

TORQUEMADA, JUAN DE (Latin TURRECREMATA), tor-kai-ma'-da, Spanish ecclesiastic, a Dominican, who was in high favour with pope Eugenius, and contributed to the solemn condemnation of the doctrines of Wycliffe and Huss, took part in several conferences, was made cardinal in 1439, bishop of Palestine in 1455, and of Sabina in 1464. The pope gave him the title of "defender of the faith." He was the author of numerous theological treatises.

Born at Valladolid, 1388; died at Rome, 1468.

TORQUEMADA, TOMA DE, a Dominican, who, in 1483, was made inquisitor-general of Spain, being the first who held the office. His zeal and ferocity were so great, that Pope Alexander VI. gave him four colleagues as a check.

Born at Torquemada, 1420; died at Avila, 1498.

TORRE DELL' ANNUNZIATA, tor-del'-a-noon'-che-a'-ta, a town of Italy, on the east coast of the Gulf of Naples, in a plain at the foot of Mount Vesuvius. It is strongly fortified. Manf. Paper, pastry, firearms and gunpowder. Pop. 20,060; Torre del Greco, 27,424.

TORRENO, DON JOSÉ, Count de, tor-rai'-no, a Spanish statesman and writer, who, in 1808, was sent to England to request assistance against Napoleon I. After residing for a short time in England, he returned to Madrid, and took his seat in the Cortes, where he became a prominent advocate for the constitution of 1812. His political views gave umbrage to the despotic Ferdinand; and he was twice exiled. Allowed to return to his native country, in consequence of the amnesty of 1832 and 1834, was appointed minister of finance by Queen Christina. In the following year he was driven to resign, and, in the course of the following eight years, he was twice sent into exile. His "History of the Insurrection, War, and Revolution of Spain," was composed in Paris and London, and is considered the best work upon the subject in the Spanish language.

Born at Oviedo, 1746; died at Paris, 1843.

TORRES STRAIT. (See AUSTRALIA.)

TORRES VEDRAS, ve'-dras, a very old town of Portugal, in Estremadura, on the left bank of the Sizandro, 28 miles from Lisbon. Pop. 2,300.—It is celebrated for the lines of defence established by the duke of Wellington in 1810, to repel the approach of the French.

TORRICELLI, EVANGELISTA, tor'-re-chel'-le, an Italian mathematician and philosopher, who received his education at the Jesuits' school at Faenza and at Rome. He wrote two small works upon mechanics, which being read by Galileo, an intimate friendship ensued, and Torricelli succeeded Galileo in the professorship of mathematics at the academy at Florence. He is celebrated as the discoverer of the barometer, and for his improvements in microscopes and telescopes.

Born at Faenza, 1608; died at Florence, 1647.

TORRIGIANO, PIETRO, tor-id-je-a'-no, an Italian sculptor, who, while pursuing his studies with Michael Angelo at Florence, becoming jealous of his great rival, struck him so violent a blow upon the nose as to disfigure it for ever. For this disgraceful act he was compelled to leave Florence. He afterwards visited England, where he was employed by Henry VIII., who gave him the commission to execute the tomb of Henry VII. in Westminster Abbey, for which he received £1,000. In 1519 he went to Spain, where he was employed in carving statues for convents. Of one of these, a Virgin and Child, he was requested to make a copy for the duke of Arcos, in reward of which task he received a heap of maravedis, but on discovering these to be worth no more than thirty ducats, he was so enraged at the smallness of the sum, that he broke the figure into fragments. For this he was arrested by the Inquisition as a sacrilegious heretic and was condemned. In order to avoid death at the hands of that sanguinary tribunal, he refused to take food, and so perished.

Born about 1474; died 1522.

TORSCHOK, or TORJOK, tor-shok', a town of European Russia, government of Tver, on the right bank of the Tvertza, 40 miles N.W. of Tver. It has a cathedral, 22 other churches, two convents, a government school, and orphan asylum. Manf. Embroidered silk and Russian leather. Pop. 12,200.

TORSTENSOHN, LEONARD, tor'-sten-sone, Count of Ortola, a Swedish general, who achieved the most brilliant reputation as commander of the Swedish forces in Germany, in the Thirty Years' War. He nearly destroyed the Hapsburg power, but after four years of brilliant achievement was recalled.

Born at Torstena, 1603; died at Stockholm, 1651.

TORTOLA, tor-to'-la, one of the Virgin Islands, in the West Indies, belonging to Great Britain. It is 12 miles long, with a breadth of 4. Hilly and unhealthy to Europeans. Tortola, the chief town, with a good harbour, is on the north side of the island. Pop. 4,000. Lat. 18° 24′ N. Lon. 64° 32′ W.—This island came into the possession of the British in 1666.

TORTONA, tor-to'-na, a town of northern Italy, province of Alessandria, on the right bank of the Scrivia, 12 miles E. of Alessandria. The fortifications were destroyed by the French after the battle of Marengo. Manf. Silk and other fabrics. Pop. 14,161.

TORTOSA, tor-to'-sa, a walled city of Spain, province of Tarragona, on the left bank of the Ebro, 42 miles S.W. of Tarragona. It has a Gothic cathedral. In the vicinity are quarries of valuable marble, known as Tortosa jasper. Manf. Cotton and linen goods, glass, earthenware, wax candles, leather, soap, starch, and brandy. Pop. 25,000.

TORTUGAS, tor-tu'-gas, a group of 10 coral islets, belonging to the United States, at the entrance of the Gulf of Mexico.

TOTANA, to-ta'-na, a town of Spain, province of Murcia, 27 miles S.W. of the town of Murcia. Manf. Linen and earthenware. Pop. 8,700.

TOTILA, or BADUILA, to'-te-la, king of the Ostrogoths, who conquered the kingdom of Italy from Justinian. In 545-47 he was defeated in several engagements by Belisarius, but after the departure of that general he regained possession of all the countries he had formerly taken. In 552 he was defeated by Marses, and killed at Tagina.

Died 552.

TOTNES, tot'-nes, a market town of Devonshire, on the Dart, 22 miles from Exeter. It has a handsome church, town hall, assembly rooms, old castle, and schools. Pop. 4,100.—A station on the Great Western railway.

TOUAT, or TWAT, twat, an oasis of Sahara Africa, nearly 200 miles long, and divided into five independent districts.

TOUL, tool, a town of France, department Meurthe-et-Moselle, on the Moselle, 14 miles W. of Nancy. It has a Gothic cathedral, the fine church of St. Genoult, and an episcopal palace, now used as a town hall. Manf. Glass and hosiery. Pop. 6,600.

TOULON, too'-lawng, a seaport of France, department of Var, on a bay of the Mediterranean, 30 miles S.E. of Marseilles. It stands at the foot of a ridge of mountains, which shelter it from the north; and is defended by a citadel and a number of forts and batteries, distributed over the neighbouring eminences, and on a tongue of land which stretches across the bay. The modern quarter is in the northern part, and has broad streets, promenades, and fountains. The most interesting public buildings are the cathedral, the churches of Notre Dame and St. Louis, and the town-hall, a fine edifice, facing the harbour. There are a museum and other educational institutions. The port consists of two divisions, and is separated from the roadstead by strongly fortified moles. The military port is the largest in the Mediterranean, extending over 240 acres, and surrounded by vast buildings, with arsenal and floating dock, connected with other arsenals at Castigneau and Mourellon, and a large bagnio, or convict prison. The commercial port, adjoining on the east, has a fine quay and good buildings, and is the busiest part of the city. Ship-building is extensively carried on. There are two annual fairs. Pop. 70,000.—Toulon was the Telo Martius of the Romans, and suffered much from the Saracens in the Middle Ages. In 1793 the English obtained possession, but were besieged and forced to surrender by Napoleon Bonaparte, who then first established his military reputation.

After the siege there was a terrible massacre of the inhabitants.

TOULOUSE, too'-loose', a city of France, capital of the department Haute-Garonne, 130 miles S.E. of Bordeaux, on the right bank of the Garonne and an island in the channel. On the opposite side of the river, connected by a handsome bridge, is the suburb of St. Cyprian, inhabited previously to the disastrous flood of 1875, which nearly destroyed it, by a large industrial population. The older part of the town has narrow streets and old houses, but considerable improvements have recently been made, two wide and handsome thoroughfares having been constructed. The chief open places are the Place du Capitol (on one side of which is the fine capitol, or town-hall), the busiest part of the city, and in which the famous floral games are annually held; and the Place Lafayette, a circus, with good houses, and opening into a fine promenade. The cathedral, built in the 13th century, has been repaired and altered; the finest and most interesting church is that of St. Sernin, built of brick and stone, in the Romanesque style, with a lofty octagonal tower, and recently restored. The church of St. Taur is another interesting building; and the church of the Jacobins is now used as barracks. There are a fine museum, picture gallery, and the palace of justice, in which the parliament of Toulouse used to hold its sittings, but which has been greatly modernised. The canals du Midi and Brienne afford water communication, and the city is situated on the great trunk line of railway connecting the Mediterranean coast with that of the Bay of Biscay. Manf. Woollen cloth, silk cotton goods, vermicelli, starch, cutlery, stoneware and porcelain, leather, tobacco, and gunpowder. Pop. 140,289.—Toulouse (the ancient Tolosa) was the capital of the Visigoths in the 5th century, and subsequently of the duchy of Aquitaine. Philippe II. annexed it to France. In 1814 Wellington defeated Soult near the town. In the great inundation of 1875, thousands of lives were lost.

TOURAINE, too-rain', an old province of France. (See FRANCE.)

TOURCOING, toor-ko-ing', a manufacturing town of France, department Nord, near the Belgian frontier. Manf. Extensive, including woollen, cotton, and linen goods, and carpets. Pop. 51,895. A pyramid commemorates a victory gained by Pichegru over the English, in 1794.

TOURGUENEFF, IVAN, toor'-ge-nef, a Russian novelist and essayist. He entered the university of Moscow at an early age, and soon attracted attention by his democratic tendencies. He afterwards studied at Berlin, returning to Russia in 1841. In 1846 he published "Memoirs of a Sportsman," which contained some striking pictures of serf life, and the reading of which, it is believed, induced the emperor Alexander, at a later period, to carry out his great scheme of emancipation. The author, however, was banished by the emperor Nicholas, a sentence partially remitted by his successor. His reputation as a novelist is very great, especially in Germany.

Born at Orel, 1818.

TOURNAY, or TOURNAI, toor'-nai, a fortified town of Belgium, province of Hainault (Flemish Doornick), on both banks of the Scheldt, 45 miles S.W. of Brussels. It is traversed by the Scheldt, on each side of which are broad and handsome quays, and which is crossed by several fine bridges. The public buildings are, a cathedral with five towers, the church of St. Brice, containing the tomb of Childeric, the abbey of St. Martin, and an hospital; an academy of the fine arts, an episcopal seminary, exchange, a public library, and museum of natural history. In the market-place is an ancient and lofty belfry. Manf. Carpets and hosiery, woollen and cotton stuffs. Pop. 33,773.—In the 5th and 6th centuries the town was a residence of the kings of the Merovingian dynasty. It sustained several sieges, and was fortified by Vauban, but the fortifications have been recently demolished.

TOURNEUR, CYRIL, toor'-neur, English dramatist, of whose life little is known. His first play, "The Revenger's Tragedy," was performed in 1607, and was followed by "The Atheist's Tragedy," and "The Nobleman." His style sometimes approached the burlesque in extravagance, but in some parts there are flashes of great power.

Lived in the 16th and 17th centuries.

TOURS, toors, a city of France, the capital of the department Indre-Loire, on a tongue of land between the Loire and the Cher, 125 miles S.W. of Paris, the former river being crossed by a very fine bridge. Great part of the town is new, and handsomely laid out. The cathedral is a splendid Gothic edifice, with a west window of remarkable size, and two domed towers 205 feet high, and contains very interesting historical monuments. The clock tower of St. Martin and the tower of Charlemagne are striking objects, and the only remains of the magnificent cathedral of St. Martin of Tours, destroyed in the revolutionary outbreak. The churches of St. Julian and St. Clement are now used for secular purposes. The remains of the castle built by Henry II. of England, the public library and the town house are among the public buildings. A statue of Rabelais was inaugurated in 1880. Manf. Silk, stuffs, woollens, hosiery, carpets, ribbons, starch, wax candles, and leather. Pop. 52,209.—Several important councils have been held here, and in the 15th and 16th centuries the States General of France frequently assembled here. The silk industry of the country had its origin in this town. During the siege of Paris in 1870, Gambetta and other members of the government of National Defence collected here.

TOURVILLE, ANNE-HILARION DE CONTENTIN, Count de, toor'-veel, a French naval commander, who in 1692 was totally defeated by the English fleet at La Hogue.

Born in Normandy, 1642; died 1701.

TOWNSVILLE, a town of Queensland, Australia, on Cleveland Bay, 870 miles N.W. of Brisbane. A considerable shipping trade is carried on. Pop. 3,032.

TRAFALGAR, tra-fal'-gar or tra-fal-gar'. (See SPAIN.)

TRAJAN, ULPIUS MARCUS, trai'-jun, a Roman emperor. In early life he served under Vespasian and Titus against the Jews; filled the office of prætor and consul, and in 97 was adopted by Nerva, and named as his successor in the empire. He became sovereign of the Roman empire in the following year. His reign was popular, and he gained splendid victories over the Dacians, Parthians, and other powers, and by his directions many great public works were executed. His brilliant reign was disgraced by persecutions of the Christians, but modern writers hold him to have been less personally responsible for these acts than was previously supposed. By his directions, Apollodorus, the architect, erected the famous pillar at Rome still called by his name.

Born near Seville, Spain, about 52; died at Selinus, in Cilicia, 117.

TRALEE, tra-lé', a market town, seaport, municipal and parliamentary borough of Ireland, in the county of Kerry, near a small river which discharges itself into the Bay of Tralee. There is a trade in agricultural produce. Pop. 9,910.—A station on the Great Southern and Western of Ireland railway.

TRANI, tra'-ne, a town of Italy, on the Adriatic, province of Bari, and 25 miles from the city of that name. The principal public edifice is the cathedral, a building adorned with marble pillars, a magnificent tower, and a variety of paintings. The harbour is only accessible to small vessels. Pop. 25,000.—A station on the Great Northern of Italy railway.

TRANMERE, tran'-meer, a township of Cheshire, on the Mersey, adjoining Birkenhead. There are many handsome residences of Liverpool merchants. The Bay of Tranmere affords excellent anchorage. Pop. 30,623.

TRANQUEBAR, tran-que-bar', a fortified seaport town of British India, between the mouths of the Cauvery, on the Coromandel coast. There are Portuguese churches and schools. Pop. 25,000, including adjacent district.

TRANSCAUCASIA, trans'-kaw-kai'-se-a, a country of Asiatic Russia, S. of the Caucasus, bounded on the E. and W. by the Caspian and Black seas, and on the S. by Turkish and Persian Armenia. It includes the governments of Baku, Daghestan, Elizabethpol, Erivan, Kutaie, Sukhum, Tchernoremore, Tiflis, and Sakhalalie. Area, 85,761 square miles. Pop. 4,173,378.

TRANSVAAL, trans-vá'-al, a district of Cape Colony, South Africa, a republic of Dutch boers. It was annexed by the British in 1877, but restored in 1881. It comprises a large territory north of the Vaal river. Pop. 50,000 whites; 700,000 blacks.

TRANSYLVANIA, or SIEBENBIERGEN, tran-sil-vai'-ni-a, a province of Hungary, bounded N. and W. by Hungary proper, and E. and S. by Roumania. The Carpathian mountains surround it on the east, the south, and partly on the north; and, as lateral chains branching off from this range cross the country in every direction, the greatest part of it consists of alternate mountains and valleys, with few extensive plains. The range forming the north-western boundary is known as the Transylvanian ore mountains. In the south are the Transylvanian Alps, Mounts Negoi and Bucsecs having an elevation of about 8,000 feet. In this range are the Tömös, Red Tower, and Vulcan passes. The climate varies according to elevation, the heat in the valleys, in summer, being very great, but in the mountain districts the winters are very severe. The banks of the rivers are densely wooded; and from this circumstance the province derives its name, which signifies a forest region. Wheat, oats, barley, buckwheat, rye, pulse, potatoes, fruits, tobacco, flax, hemp, and saffron, are among the chief products, and the vine is extensively cultivated. The rearing of horses and live stock occupies a large share of attention, and buffaloes are employed for field labour. In the woods great numbers of swine are fed, and game is abundant.

Rivers.—The chief rivers are the Alutai and Maros. Of the latter the Great and Little Rokel, Bishitz, Körös, and Szamos are tributaries.

Minerals.—In the mountains are found marble, jasper, porphyry, slate, limestone, coal, sulphur, and petroleum. Rock-salt is found in many parts. There are, besides, mines of iron, copper, lead, silver, and even gold. In the mountains are also dug up precious stones; such as topazes, chrysolites, garnets, opals, &c. Mineral springs are abundant.

Area.—21,215 square miles.

Pop.—2,084,048. More than one-half are Roumans, the remainder are Magyars, Szeklers, Saxons (descendants of European settlers of the 12th century), Armenians, Greeks, Bulgarians, and Gipsies (nearly 90,000).

History.—From the 10th to the 16th centuries Transylvania was united with Hungary. It then became an independent principality, until it was annexed to Austria in 1713.

TRANSYLVANIA, a county of North Carolina, United States. Area, 475 square miles. Pop. 5,340. The capital is Brevard.

TRAPANI, tra-pa'-ne, a province of Italy, in Sicily, comprising the western extremity of the island. The coast line is irregular, and there are several bays, the largest being the Gulf of Castellamare. The surface is mountainous, but the soil is generally fertile. Area, 1,214 square miles. Pop. 300,117.

TRAPANI, capital of the above province, a fortified town of Sicily, on a tongue of land projecting into the sea, 45 miles S.W. of Palermo. The streets are regular; its numerous churches, convents, and other public buildings, are in a style of considerable elegance, and there is an archæological museum, founded in 1875. The harbour is small, and protected by a fort. Pop. 38,000.—The city occupies the site of the ancient Drepanum.

TRAS-OS-MONTES, tras-os-monte'-tais, a province of Portugal, having Spain on its N. and E., on its W. the province of Minho, and on its S. Beira. It is very mountainous, but fertile in the valleys. Cattle-rearing is an important branch of industry. The capital is BRAGANÇA.

Rivers.—The Douro forms the southern and south-eastern boundary, and its affluents within the province are the Sabor, Tua, and Tamegor.

Area.—4,290 square miles.

Pop.—393,279.

TRAVANCORE, or TRAVANKUR, trav-an-kor', a state governed by a native rajah, tributary to the British, situate at the south-west extremity of India, and bounded on its S. and W. sides by the Indian Ocean, to which the surface slopes from the Western Ghauts, which, in the north-eastern part of the state, have an altitude of more than 8,000 feet. The country is generally hilly, elevated, and well wooded, except near the coast, which is in some parts low and sandy, but in the east is bold and rocky. The climate is hot, but not unhealthful, and the soil is very rich and productive. Coffee is cultivated on the hills, and the forests furnish large quantities of valuable timber.

Rivers.—The most important is the Perryaur, in the north, known as the Alwye near the sea.

Area.—6,653 square miles.

Pop.—2,401,158.

Chief Towns.—Trivandrum (the capital), Aleppi, Anjergo, Kolachul, and Quillon.—Travancore, the ancient capital, is in a decayed condition.

TRAVERS, tra-vers', an almost uninhabited county of Minnesota, United States. Area, 575 square miles.

TRAVIS, tra'-vis, a county of Texas, United States. Area, 1,000 square miles. Pop. 27,000, about one-third being coloured. The capital is Austin.

TRAVNIK, trav-nik, a town of European Turkey, the capital of Bosnia, in a narrow valley enclosed by mountains, and on the right bank of the Laschva, 615 miles N.W. of Constantinople. Pop. 12,000.

TREBIZOND, treb'-i-zond, a vilayet or government of Asiatic Turkey, extending along the southern coast of the Black Sea for about 360 miles, with a breadth varying from 12 to 80 miles. Ranges of mountains, with an elevation of from 5,000 to 8,000 feet, and much loftier single peaks, rise immediately from the sea, and are well wooded, and there are numerous fertile valleys and well cultivated tracts. The climate is temperate, but variable, being subject to cold winds from the Black Sea, bringing rain and fog.

Rivers.—The Tchorak, the Yeshel Irmak, and the Kizel Irmak.

Area.—15,000 square miles.

Pop.—428,000, including 56,000 Greek and Armenian Christians.

Chief Towns.—TREBIZOND, BATOUM, Rerezun, Rizeh, and SAMSOUN.

TREBIZOND, or TARABOZAN, capital of the above vilayet, on the southern shore of the Black Sea, 560 miles E. of Constantinople. There are an old and a new town, the former surrounded by walls and towers, enclosing a citadel on the summit of a lofty rock; and the latter outside the walls on the eastern side. The city is generally well paved and drained. There are 40 mosques, 16 churches, and 18 Mahometan schools. Trebizond is the chief Turkish commercial port of the Black Sea; there is an excellent harbour, and a very large trade is carried on with the inland provinces and Persia. Pop. 45,000. Lat. 41° 1' N. Lon. 39° 45' E.—This is the ancient Trapezus.

TREDEGAR, tred'-e-gar, a market-town of Monmouthshire, 12 miles S.W. of Abergavenny. There are large mines of coal and ironstone, and large ironworks in the vicinity. Pop. 17,951.—A station on the London and North-Western railway.

TREDIAKOVSKY, VASSILI KIRILOWITCH, tred'-i-a-kov'-ske, a Russian poet, who visited France and England, and, upon his return to St. Petersburg, was created secretary of the Academy of Sciences and professor of eloquence. He composed tragedies, fables, and epics, and produced a paraphrase of Fénelon's "Telemachus," and a translation of Rollin's "Ancient History."

Born 1703; died 1769.

TREGO, tré-go, a county of Kansas, United States. Area, 900 square miles. Pop. 2,535.

TREMPEALEAU, trem'-pe-lo, a county of Wisconsin, United States. Area, 684 square miles. Pop. 17,000. The capital is Dalesville.

TRENCH, REV. RICHARD CHENEVIX, trench, a modern English philologer, educated at Cambridge. After obtaining some preferment in the church, he became, in 1846, a select preacher at the University of Cambridge, and, in the following year, theological professor and examiner at King's College, London. After the death of Dr. Buckland, he was created dean of Westminster, and in 1864 became archbishop of Dublin. He is the author of some poems, but his most important works are,—"Notes on the Miracles," "Lessons in Proverbs," "Synonyms of the New Testament," and "The Study of Words."

Born in Dublin, 1807.

TRENCK, BARON FRANZ VON DER, trenk, was the son of a general in the service of Austria, by whose side he fought at the battle of Melazio, when only in his eleventh year. Of great physical strength and violence of temper, he murdered a farmer, for which he was sent to Russia, where he displayed great courage in war, but also the most brutal ferocity. He afterwards entered the service of Maria Theresa of Austria, and was engaged against the troops of Frederick the Great. His insubordinate conduct, however, caused his being brought to trial by court-martial. He attempted to throw one of the judges out of a window, and was sentenced to imprisonment for life in the castle of Spielberg, at Brunn, where, it is supposed, he poisoned himself.

Born at Reggio, Calabria, 1711; died 1749.

TRENCK, FRIEDRICH, BARON VON DER, a Prussian officer, and cousin of the preceding. He rose high in favour with Frederick the Great, but fell into disgrace and was imprisoned at Glatz. He contrived to effect his escape, and went to Vienna, and then to Russia. In 1754, having ventured within the Prussian territory, he was arrested, and imprisoned at Magdeburg, where he endured great hardships. He at last effected his escape, engaged in trade, produced several literary works, especially a poem, which became popular. After the death of Frederick he was permitted to return to his native country. He was in France at the time of the Revolution, where he was arrested on the charge of being a Prussian spy, and condemned to the guillotine by the revolutionary tribunal. He wrote his own memoirs, which are not particularly trustworthy.

Born at Königsberg, 1726; died 1794.

TRENT, trent, a river of England, rising in Staffordshire from three springs to the west of Leek, and flowing past Trentham, to which it gives name, and thence to Burton, in Derbyshire, where it first becomes navigable. It winds round the town of Nottingham, and, after a course of about 150 miles, joins the Ouse, to form the estuary of the Humber. It is connected by canals with all the rivers of central England.

TRENT, or TRIENT, a city of the Austrian empire, in Tyrol, on the left bank of the Adige. It stands in a small but delightful valley among the Alps, and is inclosed by high walls. Its public buildings are, the palace of the prince-bishop, and the cathedral, a structure in the Byzantine style. The church of Santa Maria Maggiore, built of red marble, contains portraits of the members of the famous Council of Trent, held in the building. Manf. Silks, leather, glass, and tobacco. Considerable quantities of wine are made, and there is a large transit trade. Pop. 17,500. The great feature in the history of Trent is the assemblage of Catholic prelates from all parts of Europe which took place in 1545.

TRENTON, tren'-ton, a city and the capital of New Jersey, United States, on the left bank of the Delaware, 28 miles N.E. of Philadelphia. The city is divided into Trenton and South Trenton, by the Assunpink Creek. The more important public buildings are the capitol; a fine structure containing the post-office and United States courts and offices; city hall; state lunatic asylum, school, and penitentiary; county courthouse, 34 churches, state library and numerous schools. There are two bridges over the Delaware, respectively 1,100 and 1,300 feet long. The city is an important railway centre, and is in water communication, by means of the Delaware and Raritan canal, with New York and Philadelphia. Manf. Pottery (very extensive), iron, paper, machinery, India rubber, and tools. Pop. 29,910.—The town was named, in 1720, after Colonel Trent, speaker of the House of Assembly, was selected as the capital of New Jersey in 1790, and incorporated as a city in 1792.

TREVES, or TRIER, trair, the most ancient, and one of the most celebrated cities in Germany, in Prussia, Rhine province, in the centre of a large valley lying along the right bank of the Moselle, 57 miles W. of Coblentz. The streets are tolerably wide. The chief buildings are Liebfrauenkirche (or "Church of Our Lady"), built about the year 1240, and affording a fine specimen of Gothic architecture; the cathedral, in the Romanesque style, is remarkable for its altars, its marble gallery, and relics, including the famous "holy coat;" the gymnasium, containing a large city library; and the old ducal palace, now used as barracks. A very handsome fountain is in the market-place. There are many Roman remains; among them, an amphitheatre, baths, a large quadrangle known as the Porta Nigra, and part of the bridge over the Moselle. Manf. Woollens, cottons, and leather. There is also a trade in wine, timber, stores, and fruit. Pop. of the district, 651,548; of the town, 24,200. After the 10th century it became, with its territory, the second German electorate, and from 1580 until 1794, when it was occupied by the French, it was invested with sovereign rights. In 1814 it was annexed to Prussia.

TREVIGLIO, trai-veel'-yo, a town of Italy, government of Milan, 13 miles S.W. of Bergamo. There are two handsome churches. Manf. Silk and leather. Pop. 12,992.

TREVISO, trai-vee'-so, a north-eastern province of Italy, bordering on the Gulf of Venice. It is level, except on the north, and is extremely fertile, producing hemp, flax, grain, wine, and timber. The chief river is the Piave. Area, 941 square miles. Pop. 392,014.

TREVISO, capital of the above province, on the Silo, 15 miles N.W. of Venice, is strongly fortified; the streets are wide and well paved, and most of the houses have colonnades or piazzas in front. The cathedral, unfinished, contains many valuable paintings, and there are a large gothic church, palace of justice, and several large educational institutions. Manf. Silk and cotton stuffs; also cutlery. Pop. 29,000.—This city occupies the site of the ancient Tarvisium. Under Napoleon I. it was the capital of the department Tagliamento.

TREVISO, ÉDOUARD ADOLPH MORTIER, duke of, marshal of France. He entered the army of the French republic as a volunteer in 1791, was created marshal of the empire in 1814, greatly distinguished himself in Spain and Russia, and in 1814 was the coadjutor of Marmont in the command of Paris. At the first restoration he became an adherent of the Bourbons, and was created a peer of France; but after the return of Napoleon from Elba he rejoined his standard. In 1815 he refused to sit in judgment upon Marshal Ney, and was, in consequence, degraded from his rank as a peer. He was a member of the Chamber of Deputies during the interval 1816-19, and was restored to his titles at the latter date. In 1834 he was appointed minister of war, and held office until his death, in the following year. He was killed by the explosion of Fieschi's infernal machine.

Born at Cateau, 1768; died in Paris, 1835.

TRICHINOPOLY, or TRICHINAPALLI, trich'-i-nop'-o-le, a city and fortress of the south of India, capital of a district on the right bank of the Cauvery, opposite the island of Seringam, famous for its magnificent Hindoo temples. The citadel is built on a rock about 350 feet high, and beyond the walls is a large native town. Manf. Cotton cloths, hardware, harness, indigo, tobacco and jewellery. Pop. 84,450; of district of same name, 1,215,033. Lat. 10° 47′ N. Lon. 78° 43′ E.

TRICOUPIS, SPIRIDION, tre-koop'-is, a Greek historian and statesman, who was three times ambassador from Greece to England. He produced, in 1824, a celebrated oration upon the death of Lord Byron. His greatest literary effort was, "The History of the Greek Insurrection."

Born at Missolonghi, 1791; died at Athens, 1873.

TRIENT. (See TRENT.)

TRIER. (See TREVES.)

TRIESCH, treesh, a town of Moravia, 6 miles from Iglau. Manf. Woollen and linen fabrics. Pop. 5,200.

TRIESTE, tre-est' or tre-es'-tai, a seaport of the Austrian empire, and the capital of a district near the north-western extremity of the Adriatic Sea, and 70 miles N.E. of Venice. It consists of an old town standing on a hill, with a castle on the top, and the new or Theresa town on level ground, intersected by the Maria Theresa canal, and built with neatness and regularity. There are a cathedral, a fine new Protestant church, and the chamber of commerce, formerly the exchange, is the finest building in the city. The educational and scientific institutions include a theological seminary, a commercial and naval academy, observatory, museum, and public library. There are statues of the Emperors Charles VI. and Leopold I., and of Winckelmann. The Tergesteum is the building of the Austrian Lloyd's, the great steam-navigation company. Trieste is the principal seaport city of the Austrian empire, is a free port, and the great emporium for the trade of the Austrian empire by the Adriatic, and shipbuilding is carried on with activity. Manf. White lead, soap, leather, paper, wax, and earthenware. Pop. 144,500, including suburbs. Lat. 45° 38′ N. Lon. 13° 46′ 5″ E.—Trieste is built on or near the site of the Roman colony of Tergeste; and there are some remains of the aqueduct which brought water to it from a distance of six miles. In 1797, and in 1805, it was taken by the French.

TRIGG, trig, a county of Kentucky, United States. Area, 530 square miles. Pop. 14,000, about one-fourth being coloured. The capital is Cadiz.

TRIKKALA, or TRICALA, trik-a'-la, a district of Thessaly, forming part of modern Greece. Pop. of the district, 117,109.

TRIMBLE, trim'-bel, a county of Kentucky, United States. Area, 150 square miles. Pop. 5,600. The capital is Bedford.

TRINCOMALEE, trin-co-ma-le', a strongly fortified town of Ceylon, on the northern side of the entrance to a large and secure harbour, accessible to all descriptions of ships during both monsoons. Precious stones are found in the neighbourhood. Pop. 20,000. Lat. 8° 34′ N. Lon. 81° 12′ E. The first settlers of this place were the Portuguese. It was taken from them by the Dutch, with whom it remained till 1782, when it was captured by the British; but was recaptured by the French, and restored to the Dutch. In 1795 it was taken by the British, and has ever since remained in their possession.

TRINGANU, trin'-ga-nu', a Malay rajahship, on the east coast of the Malacca peninsula, tributary to Siam. Pop. 30,000.—A crown colony of Great Britain.

TRINIDAD, trin'-i-dad, the most southern of the British West India islands, opposite the northern mouth of the Orinoco, South America, and within 7 miles of the continent. Of an irregular square form, having two points stretching to the west from its north and south corners. Its north side is a continued ridge of mountains, from which abundance of the purest and clearest streams issue on both sides. Another ridge runs along a portion of the eastern side, and, continuing in a south-western direction, receives the name of the Monserrat Hills. The soil is extremely fertile, and the elevated parts are covered with dense forests. There is a large asphalt lake near the western coast, in a volcanic district. The climate is temperate. Cacao is the principal crop; but sugar, cotton, coffee, spices, and indigo are produced.

Minerals.—Sulphate of copper, graphite, sulphur, arsenic, alum, and quartz.
Area.—1,755 square miles.
Pop.—153,130.
History.—In 1797 the island, then belonging to Spain, capitulated, without resistance, to a British force under the command of Sir Ralph Abercrombie.

TRINITY, a county of California, United States. Area, 1,800 square miles. Pop. 5,000. The capital is Weaverville.

TRINITY, a county of Texas, United States. Area, 945 square miles. Pop. 4,200, about one-fourth being coloured. The capital is Sumter.

TRINO, tre'-no, a town of Sardinia, on the Po, 30 miles from Turin. The only buildings worthy of notice are its churches. Pop. 8,300. The trade of this place mostly consists of cattle.

TRIPOLI, or TARUBUL, trip'-o-le, a dependency of Turkey, on the northern coast of Africa, the most easterly of the Barbary states. Its interior boundaries are, E., the desert of Barca; S., Fezzan and the Libyan desert; W., Tunis, and part of the Beled el Jereed, or country of dates. The coast of Tripoli is about 600 miles long, extending from the east side of the Gulf of Cabes to the Gulf of Milhr. There is only one good harbour, that of Tripoli. The western part of the coast is low and sandy; the eastern is higher, and in some parts rocky, and has a large indentation, the Gulf of Sidra, or Syrtis, on the south-western shore of which are extensive marshy tracts. The north-eastern part of the state has patches of the desert character, but in the south are fertile districts descending in terraces from the Black mountains. In the western part two mountain ranges, offshoots of the Atlas, run nearly parallel with the coast, the northern range (of volcanic origin, and with an average elevation of 2,000 feet) being about 20 miles inland, and the southern range about 50 miles. Between these ranges are fertile tracts of table-land. The most productive district, about 15 miles long, and 5 miles broad, stretches along the coast near the capital, producing, in the utmost luxuriance, every article peculiar to the finest tropical climates. Corn is grown in great abundance, with cotton, silk, tobacco, saffron, castor-oil, and madder. The date-tree forms the staple of all the interior and sandy tracts. In the same districts are found the lotus and the cassob, both of which are indigenous. Almonds, figs, apples, pears, plums, peaches, nectarines, grapes, and melons, are abundant, and of exquisite flavour; whilst the vegetables are very fine, and similar to those of Europe. In the southern part of the state there is very little productive land, and water is obtained only by digging deep wells, and is bitter and brackish. The climate is very variable; in the summer the heat is very great, especially when the sirocco, or hot wind, blows; rain falls abundantly between November and March, but is almost unknown at any other time. The rivers are unimportant, and mostly flow only in the rainy season. Salt and sulphur are the only minerals obtained.

Area.—125,000 square miles.
Pop.—1,200,000. Arabs form the greater part of the population in the country districts; the towns are occupied chiefly by Moors, Turks, and Jews, the latter being the leading merchants. There are many negro slaves.
Chief Towns.—TRIPOLI (the capital), Lebda, and Mesurata, or Misratah.
Government.—The Bey, a despotic ruler, is generally selected by the Sultan of Turkey. The dominant religion is Mahometan, but in a relaxed form, the strict rules, especially in regard to abstinence from wine, being neglected. The people generally are uneducated.
History.—This country formed the eastern boundary of the Carthaginian dominions, and under the last Ptolemy, surnamed Apion, was changed into a Roman province; but was early subjected to the power of the Saracens, and shared the vicissitudes experienced by their dynasties on the Barbary coast. It was governed by the Turks till 1713, when it was erected into an independent state; but the Turkish government regained authority in 1832.

TRIPOLI, a fortified city, capital of the above state, built on a rocky neck of land projecting a short distance into the sea, 600 miles S.E. of Algiers. It is of great extent, though a large portion of the space inclosed within its walls is unoccupied. There are six handsome mosques, an extensive palace for the Bey, Christian places of worship, and a synagogue. The public baths and the caravanserais are both spacious and convenient. The chief monument of antiquity is a superb triumphal arch, built of fine marble, and ornamented with several bas-reliefs, inscriptions, and other designs. It was erected in 164, in honour of Aurelius Antoninus and Verres. The harbour is formed by a reef of rocks, running in an eastern direction from the northern extremity of the town. Manf. Woollen goods, especially carpets, leather, and potash. A large foreign trade is carried on with the European ports of the Mediterranean and with the Levant, and a land trade, by means of caravans, with Morocco, Timbuctoo, and other inland places. Pop. 30,000. Lat. 32° 54′ N. Lon. 13° 11′ E.

TRIPOLI, or TARABLUS, a seaport of Syria, on the Mediterranean, at the foot of an offset of Mount Lebanon, 40 miles N.E. of Beyrout. The town is divided into two parts by the Kadisha, a small stream. The harbour, small and shallow, is El Mina, more than a mile to the north-west. The only fortification consists of the citadel, an old Saracen building, in a wretched state. There are several fine mosques, most of them formerly Christian churches. The town is one of the neatest in the East, and is surrounded by gardens and orchards. Silk, wool, cotton, sponges (extensive), wax, oil, and soap are exported. Lat. 34° 26′ N. Lon. 35° 49′ E. Pop. about 16,000, one-half members of the Greek church.—Tripoli was an important maritime town of Phœnicia, and the name was derived from its commercial connexion with the three cities, Tyre, Sidon, and Aradus. In the beginning of the 12th century it was taken by the Crusaders.

TRIPOLITZA, or TRIPOLIS, trip'-o-lit'-za, a town of Greece, in the Morea, capital of the monarchy of Arcadia, 22 miles S.W. of Argos, in a plain 2,000 feet above the sea level. Pop. 11,000.—In 1821 the Greeks captured it from the Turks, and massacred the inhabitants; and, in revenge, Ibrahim Pasha destroyed every house in the place, and it has been only partially rebuilt.

TRIPP, a new county of Dakota Territory, United States. Area, 1,500 square miles.

TRIPTOLEMUS, trip-tol'-e-mus, in Greek mythology the son of Celeus, king of Attica, by Neæra. He instructed mankind how to sow corn and make bread.

TRISMEGISTUS. (See HERMES.)

TRISTAN DA CUNHA, tris-tan' da koon'-ya, the largest of three volcanic islands in the South Atlantic Ocean, about 1,500 miles from any land either to the west or north. It has a circuit of 15 miles and is mountainous, one peak attaining an elevation of 8,326 feet above the level of the sea, the summit being a crater, full of water. Pop. 60, mostly descendants of an English corporal who was one of a British garrison. These islands are claimed by Great Britain. Lat. 37° S. Lon. 15° 40' W.

TRITON, trī'-ton, in Greek mythology a sea deity, son of Poseidon, or Neptune, by Amphitrite, who could calm the sea and abate storms at pleasure.

TROAD, trō'-ad, the plain around ancient Troy.

TROITZKOI-MONASTYR, troits'-koi mon'-as-teer', a fortified town of European Russia, government of Moscow, 45 miles N.E. of Moscow. There is a very large monastery, founded in 1328 by St. Sargier, and there are nine churches and an imperial palace. Pop. 7,000.

TROLLOPE, FRANCES, Mrs., trol'-lup, an English novelist, whose maiden name was Milton. She visited the United States, resided there during three years, and commenced her career as an authoress by producing a work entitled "Domestic Life of the Americans," which appeared in 1832. This work excited an extraordinary amount of criticism upon both sides of the Atlantic. She afterwards published a large number of novels, of which "The Vicar of Wrexhill" and "The Widow Barnaby" are the best known. She is a humorous and rather coarse writer. Her son, Thomas Adolphus, is well known as an author, and another son, Anthony, is one of the most popular novelists of the day.

Born at Heckfield, Hampshire, 1780; died at Florence, 1863.

TROMP, MAARTEN HARPERTZOON VAN, tromp, a Dutch admiral, who rose from the lowest station to the supreme command, wholly by merit. In 1639 he defeated a numerous Spanish fleet, and afterwards gained several other victories, principally over an English fleet under Blake, in 1652; after which he cruised in the Channel with a broom at the masthead of his ship. In the following year, the Dutch and English fleets, under Van Tromp and Blake, fought a desperate battle in the Channel, without either side gaining the advantage. Blake falling ill, the command of the English vessels devolved upon Monk, who encountered Van Tromp off the Dutch coast. After a stubborn fight, the English claimed the victory, and in the engagement Van Tromp was killed. He was buried at Delft with great ceremony.

Born at Briel, 1597; died 1653.

TROMP, CORNELIS VAN, a Dutch admiral, and second son of the preceding. He greatly distinguished himself in engagements with the English, but after the war, visited England, and was honourably received, Charles II. creating him a baronet in 1675. He next served against the Swedes, as the ally of the king of Denmark, who, to reward his services, raised him to the rank of count. At the death of De Ruyter, he was created admiral-general of the United Provinces, and, after distinguishing himself under the prince of Orange in the expedition against Saint Omer, he retired into private life.

Born at Rotterdam, 1629; died at Amsterdam, 1691.

TROWBRIDGE, trou'-brij, a market town of Wiltshire, 10 miles E. of Bath. The parish church is a spacious structure, consisting of a nave, chancel, and two side aisles, with chapels attached. There are, besides, a modern church and several chapels. Manf. Broadcloths and kerseymeres. Pop. 11,040.—A station on the Great Western railway.

TROWBRIDGE, SIR THOMAS, an English admiral, who, returning from an expedition to the China seas, was captured by the French, but while being conveyed to France in the Sanspareil, that ship was taken by Lord Howe in the victory of 1794. Trowbridge was afterwards second in command under Nelson. In 1799 he was created a baronet, and subsequently became an admiral, and was dispatched to the East Indies; on his return from which station, in a leaky vessel, he and his crew were lost at sea.

Born in London, about 1750; died 1807.

TROY, or ILIUM, troi, a famous ancient city in the north-western part of Asia Minor, the scene of the great events which form the subject of Homer's Iliad. (See ASIA MINOR.) There is still some doubt about the exact site, although very careful explorations have been undertaken.

TROY, a city of the United States, capital of county of Rensselaer, New York, on the east bank of the Hudson, 6 miles N. of Albany. The river, which forms a series of cascades near the town, affording valuable water-power, is crossed by two bridges, one of them 1,600 feet long, with two carriage ways, a railway and a walk for foot passengers. The other is a new iron bridge, erected at a cost of about £50,000. On the opposite side of the river is a manufacturing suburb, Green Island. The most important public buildings are, the city hall, the savings bank building, and the union railway depôt, one of the largest in the United States, and affording communication with New York, Albany, Boston, and other important places. There are 50 churches, and many charitable and educational institutions. Manf. Iron and steel, shirts, paper and linen collars, and mathematical instruments; all very extensive, and employing many thousands of hands, carriages, railway stock, cotton, stoneware, hosiery, and boots and shoes. The lumber trade is important. Pop. 56,750, including about 17,000 foreigners.

TROYES, trwaw, a city of France, capital of the department Aube, and formerly of Champagne, on the left bank of the Seine, 90 miles S.E. of Paris. The cathedral, begun about 1200, finished in the 16th century and recently restored, is noticeable for its fine choir, stained windows, and five chapels. Other fine churches are those of St. Urban, St. Nizier, St. John, and the Madeleine. There are a lyceum and a museum. Manf. Hosiery, cotton and woollen stuffs. Pop. 46,067. In 1420, a treaty conferring the crown of France on the king of England, was concluded here. In 1814 it was the scene of hard contests between the allies and the French.

There are a cathedral, with a fine tower, a large government manufactory of firearms, fine quays and promenades. Manf. Firearms, paper, playing-cards, nails, leather, and coarse woollens.

TULLIUS HOSTILIUS, tul'-li-us, the third king of the Romans, who, according to Livy, succeeded Numa Pompilius. He destroyed the town of Alba, and carried the inhabitants to Rome; he was also successful against the Latins. Legend avers that he was destroyed by Jupiter for presumption.

Born 640 B.C.

TULTCHA, toolt'-sha, a town of European Turkey, in Bulgaria, on the right bank of the Danube, 12 miles S.W. of Ismael. It is a port of considerable commercial importance. Pop. 15,000.

TUNBRIDGE, or TONBRIDGE, tun'-brij, a market-town of Kent, on the river Tun, near the entrance into the Medway, 11 miles S.W. of Maidstone. There are six churches, and some remains of a castle built in the 11th century. Manf. Fancy wooden articles, toys, and gunpowder. Pop. 9,340. A station on the South-Eastern Railway.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS, a market-town of Kent, and partly in Sussex, deriving its origin and importance from the mineral waters in the vicinity. The Pantiles is the name given to the fashionable parade. The beauty and salubrity of the situation has made it a favourite place of residence. There are six modern churches. Pop. 24,310. A station on the South-Eastern Railway.

TUNICA, too-ne'-ka, a county of Mississippi, United States. Area, 750 square miles. Pop. 8,500, about four-fifths being coloured. The capital is Austin.

TUNIS, tu'-nis, a state of Northern Africa, having Algeria on the W. and the Mediterranean on the N. and E., on the S. the Greater Atlas and Tripoli. It consists chiefly of a large peninsula, stretching into the Mediterranean in a north-easterly direction, and coming within less than 100 miles of the coast of Sicily. The coast line is irregular, and is indented by the large gulfs of Tunis, Hammamet, and Cabes. There are several large lagoons. The cultivated part reaches from 200 to 250 miles into the interior, till it terminates with the chain of Atlas. In the north-western portion are mountains nearly 5,000 feet high, and well timbered with olive-plantations on the lower slopes. There are few countries more highly favoured as to natural beauty and fertility. The tracts to the south called Beled el Jereed, or the country of dates, though not presenting the same rich and verdant aspect as those on the seacoast, yield in plenty, not only the date, but grain of different kinds, and contain a number of large villages. The climate is very healthful, the rainy season extends from November to April, drought prevailing during the remainder of the year.

Rivers.—The only considerable stream is the Merjeda, falling into the Gulf of Tunis, after an eastern course of 200 miles.

Minerals.—Silver, lead, and copper.

Area.—45,000 square miles.

Pop.—2,000,000; Turks, Moors, Jews, and Christians in the towns and near the coast, and Arabs and Kabyles in the interior.

Chief Towns.—Tunis, the capital; Biserta, Hammamet, Kairwan, Kef, Sfax, and Susa.

Government.—The administration is nominally invested in the Bey, but in 1881 the French invaded the state, and a treaty was concluded which virtually places it under the protectorate of France.

History.—Tunis was anciently the seat of Carthage. It then fell under the Roman power, was conquered by the Vandals, and, afterwards, by the Saracens. In 1574, being occupied by the troops of the emperor Charles V., it was again annexed to the Turkish empire. It was governed for some time by its viceroys, called beys, who paid tribute to Turkey; but the payment was remitted in 1871, and early in 1881, as a result of some alleged danger to the Algerian frontier, the French invaded Tunis, and the nominal supremacy of Turkey was disavowed.

TUNIS, a fortified city of Africa, capital of the above state, on the western side of a lagoon near the mouth of the Merjeda, 400 miles E. of Algiers. It is surrounded by a double wall, is defended by a strong castle and several forts, and contains a palace, many handsome mosques, a Moorish school and college, a Roman Catholic and a Greek church. Manf. Woollens, embroidery, leather and perfumery. The export trade is considerable. The harbour is shallow. Pop. 125,000. Tunis is an old town, and is not far from the site of the ancient Carthage.

TUNSTALL, or TONSTALL, CUTHBERT, tun'-stall, an English prelate, who studied at Oxford and Cambridge, and at Padua. In 1516 he was sent as commissioner to Brussels and arranged two treaties with Charles of Spain, afterwards the emperor Charles V. In 1521 he was appointed dean of Salisbury, in the following year bishop of London, and afterwards lord privy seal, and in time ambassador to Spain and France. In 1530 he was translated to the bishopric of Durham. In 1552 he was deprived of his bishopric and sent to the Tower, but liberated and reinstated by Queen Mary. As he refused to take the oath of supremacy on the accession of Elizabeth, he was again deposed in 1559. He wrote some theological works, a treatise on arithmetic, and an abridgment of Aristotle's "Ethics."

Born at Hatchford, Yorkshire, 1474; died at Lambeth, 1559.

TUOLUMNE, too-o-lum'-ne, a county of California, United States. Area, 1,944 square miles. Pop. 8,200, about 1,500 being Chinese. The capital is SONORA.

TUPPER, MARTIN FARQUHAR, tup'-per, a modern English writer, who, after studying at the Charterhouse and Christ Church, Oxford, entered upon the study of the law. In 1839 he produced the well known work entitled "Proverbial Philosophy," which has passed through a very large number of editions, and he has published some poems, translations, and other works.

Born in London, 1810.

TURBUT, or TARBUT, toor-but', a city of Khorassan, in Persia, 50 miles from Meshed. Pop. 18,000.

TURENNE, HENRI DE LA TOUR D'AUVERGNE, Viscount de, toor-ren', a celebrated French marshal, the second son of the Duc de Bouillon and Elizabeth of Nassau, daughter of William I. of Nassau, prince of Orange. At the age of 23 he became field-marshal, and in 1643 was appointed marshal of France, and greatly distinguished himself against the duke of Bavaria; in the civil war against the prince of Condé in the Netherlands, and in Franche-Compté. He afterwards defeated the Imperialists at Mulhausen, and again at Turckheim. Montecuculi was then sent against him; and while the two armies were in view of each other, and preparing for battle, Turenne was killed by a cannon-ball, at Sasbach, his army crying out,

"Our father is dead!" He left his memoirs, which were published in 1782.

Born at Sedan, 1611; died 1675.

TURGOT, ANNE-ROBERT JACQUES, toor'-go, a French statesman and political economist, who was educated for the ecclesiastical state in the college of the Sorbonne, after which he applied himself to the study of the law, wrote extensively upon financial, agricultural and commercial subjects, and was, in 1761, appointed intendant of Limoges. He was next created comptroller-general of the finances, in which office he evinced great talents, by endeavouring to effect a reform in the public expenditure, and by introducing several important regulations for the revival and encouragement of trade. He made enemies in the aristocratic and court party, who procured his dismissal. He was at the head of the society called Economists, after the death of Quesnay. He was the author of a number of works upon politics, political economy, metaphysics, and literature, as well as some articles for the "Encyclopædia."

Born at Paris, 1727; died 1781.

TURIN, or TORINO, tu-rin', a province of northern Italy, bounded W. by France. The northern and western parts are traversed by lofty branches of the Pennine, Graian, and Cottian Alps: the eastern and southern districts are level, or moderately hilly.

Rivers.—The Po and various tributaries.
Area.—4,068 square miles.
Pop.—1,043,942.

TURIN, a city, capital of the above province, in a fertile plain, and occupying the angle formed by the confluence of the Dora with the Po, the former being on the north side of the city, the latter on the east. The Dora is crossed by a magnificent bridge of a single arch, the latter by two bridges. Of the ancient walls and gates only the Porta Palatina (a beautiful gate with two towers) and some fragments remain. The citadel, to the east of the city, is an immense and very strong structure, with an open Piazza d'Armi and military hospital adjacent. The old lines of fortifications have been replaced by finely-planted promenades, lined with magnificent houses; that on the north side, the Piazza Emanuele Filiberto, being nearly three-quarters of a mile long, with a circus at each end, from which other fine promenades diverge. The more modern part of the city is regularly laid out with wide streets, crossing at right angles. Near the centre is a large square, the Piazza Castello, surrounded by public buildings, with the royal palace and gardens on the north side, and the Madama palace in the centre. From the eastern side a broad avenue leads to the Piazza Vittorio Emanuele, opening to the bridge. Other open places are the Piazza de San Carlo, with Marochetti's statue of Emanuele Filiberto in the centre; the Piazza Carlino, Piazza dell' Erbe, and Piazza Susina. A grand monumental group, emblematic of the opening of the Mont Cenis tunnel, was inaugurated by the king, in October, 1879. The cathedral, completed in the 16th century is highly ornamented. The church of San Felippo Neri is the finest in the city, and there are other churches of interest. A church for the Waldenses, in the old Lombard style, built in 1853, is a great ornament of the city. The university, founded early in the 15th century, is a fine building, and contains a noble library. The old palace of Carignano, near the Piazza Castello, is now occupied by government offices. The palace of the archives, town-house, and the royal academy (with several museums), are all fine buildings; and there are many literary, scientific, and charitable institutions. Manf. Silk goods, jewellery, musical and philosophical instruments, stained paper, leather, glass, and carriages. Pop. 243,000.—The foundation of Turin is of very remote date, Hannibal having found on its site a town, which he sacked. It was successively occupied during the last war by the French and Austrians, and remained in possession of Napoleon I. till 1814. Under his empire it was the capital of the department of the Po. It was restored to Savoy in 1814, was the capital of the kingdom of Sardinia till 1860, and of the new kingdom of Italy till 1865.

TURKESTAN, or TURKISTAN, toor-kis-tan', a region of Central Asia, bounded N. by Russia in Asia, and S. by Persia, Afghanistan, India, and Tibet. It is geographically divided by the Pamir table-land into East and West Turkestan, the latter sometimes described as Independent Turkestan, including BOKHARA, KHIVA, and KHOKAN; East Turkestan is Chinese Tartary. Western Turkestan is a gov. of Russia, resulting from operations on the borders of Afghanistan. Pop. 3,177,584.

TURKEY, tur'-ke, or the OTTOMAN EMPIRE, an extensive empire in the south-east of Europe, and including ASIA MINOR, KURDISTAN; the partially dependent states of EGYPT, and TRIPOLI, in Africa; the island of Crete and some islands in the Greek archipelago. (See separate headings for area, population, administrative divisions, chief towns, and geographical features.)

Government and Constitution.—The Sultan is an absolute, but not an hereditary monarch; for, by the law of succession, on the death of the reigning sultan the sovereignty devolves on the senior male descendant of the house of Othman, the founder of the empire. The legislative and executive authority is exercised, under the supreme direction of the sultan, by the grand vizier, the head of the temporal government (consisting of a divan, or ministerial council of eight departments), and the sheik-ul-islam, the head of the Mahometan church. Both are appointed by the sovereign, the latter with the nominal concurrence of the ulema, a body comprising the clergy and chief functionaries of the law. The fundamental laws are based on the precepts of the Koran. In 1856 a charter permitting full liberty of worship and equality of classes was granted, but is practically in abeyance; and in December, 1876, a new constitution was granted, providing two legislative bodies—a senate, nominated by the sultan, and a chamber of deputies, elected by ballot for four years, but the Parliament only met once, and has never been heard of since.

Religion and Education.—Mahometanism is the religion of the state, and is professed by about 17,000,000 of the people. There are about 11,000,000 members of the Greek and Armenian churches, 900,000 Catholics, and 150,000 Jews. There are Mahometan "medresses," or colleges, and public schools in most of the chief towns, and in 1869 a new law of public instruction was announced, but has not been put into operation.

Railways and Telegraphs.—About 1,200 miles of railway are in operation, of which nearly 1,000 are in European Turkey. There are 17,700 miles of telegraph lines.

History.—The earliest notice of the Turks or Turkmans, in history, is about the year 800, when, issuing from an obscure retreat, they obtained possession of a part of Armenia, called from them Turcomania. They afterwards extended their conquests over the adjacent parts of Asia, Africa, and Europe, occupying Syria, Egypt, and eventually the territory that remained to the Greek emperors. In 1453 Constantinople was taken by Mahomet II. The Morea and the islands were afterwards overrun, with parts of Hungary, the Crimea, and the shores of the Black Sea. They next took the whole of the countries now forming Turkey in Asia, the Hejaz in Egypt, and the regencies of Tripoli, Tunis, and Algiers. In the 17th century their power declined. The Austrians expelled them from Hungary, and Russia stripped them of much of their territory. The Greeks formed an independent state; the French have taken Algiers, and the Danubian principalities (Roumania) have declared themselves independent. In 1854 and 1855, Turkey, supported by England, France, and Italy, was engaged in war with Russia, and in 1877 Russia again declared war, and invaded Bulgaria and Armenia, a war of almost unprecedented ferocity being the result. The treaty of Berlin, signed July 13, 1878, secured peace, but greatly reduced the area and population of the empire, especially in Europe. The semi-independent states of Bulgaria and Eastern Roumelia were created, Bosnia and the Herzogovina were given to Austria-Hungary, and additional territory was awarded to Roumania, Servia and Montenegro.

TURKEY IN EUROPE is bounded N. by the Balkan range, S. by Greece and the Sea of Marmora, E. by the Black Sea, and W. by Austria, Servia, Montenegro, and the Adriatic. The coast line is of great extent, indented by numerous gulfs and bays. The climate is healthy, and the soil generally fertile. Chestnuts, apples, and pears, are found only in the northern provinces; but the southern produce oranges, raisins, olives, figs, and almonds. The grape succeeds in almost every part of the empire; the promegranate and the sugarcane only in its southern and warmest districts. Wheat, maize, rice, cotton, silk, and tobacco, are all indigenous to the country. There are large pine forests in Bosnia, and in the basin of the Danube, pine, beech, oak, and ash. Cattle and horses are extensively reared.

Rivers.—The Drin, Narenta, Voyutza, and several small mountain streams, the tributaries of which fall into the Adriatic and Ionian Seas; and the Kara-su, Maritza, Salembria, Struma, and Varda, into the Archipelago.

Minerals.—Iron, copper, argentiferous galena, sulphur, salt, and alum.

Area.—62,028 square miles.

Pop.—About 8,880,000, according to the most reliable estimates. So far as can be gathered, the Mahometans number about one-half of the entire population.

Administrative Divisions.—There are 4 villayets or provinces, not including the district of Constantinople, which forms a district of itself—ADRIANOPLE (Edereneh), SALONICA (Selanik), JANINA (Thessaly and Albania), and CRETE (Kirid).

Chief Towns.—CONSTANTINOPLE (the capital), ADRIANOPLE, and SALONICA.

TURKEY IN ASIA. This portion of the Turkish empire includes ASIA MINOR, SYRIA, the western coast of ARABIA, on the Red Sea, ARMENIA, KURDISTAN, MESOPOTAMIA, the island of CYPRUS, and a number of islands in the Greek Archipelago, the most important of which are Kos, Lemnos, MITYLENE, RHODES, SAMOS, SCARPANTE, Scio, and Phasos.

Area.—710,320 square miles.

Pop.—16,200,000, including about 8,700,000 Turks, 2,000,000 Armenians, 1,000,000 Greeks, 1,000,000 Arabs, 200 Syrians and Chaldeans, 100,000 Turcomans, 80,000 Druses, 80,000 Jews, and 20,000 Tartars.

Administrative Divisions.—There are 15 eyalets or provinces:—Adana, Aidin, Angora, Broussa, Kastamuni, Konieh, Sivas, and Trebizond, in Asia Minor; Diarbekir and Erzeroum, in Kurdistan and Armenia; Bagdad, in Mesopotamia; Aleppo and Syria, in Syria; Hedjiz and Yemen, in Arabia.

Chief Towns.—ALEPPO, BAGDAD, BUSSORA, BATOUM, DAMASCUS, DIARBEKIR, ERZEROUM, JERUSALEM, KARS, MECCA, RHODES, SINOPE, and SMYRNA.

TURK'S, or TURQUES' ISLANDS, a group at the south-eastern extremity of the Bahama Archipelago, 90 miles N. of Hayti. They are completely barren, and all kinds of supplies are imported. Grand Key is the principal. The islands are under the legislative control of Jamaica. Pop. 2,500.

TURNER, JOSEPH MALLORD WILLIAM, an English landscape painter, who was the son of a barber in Maiden Lane, Covent Garden. In early youth he evinced the strongest inclination for pictorial art, and so successfully did he labour in his vocation, especially in the department of water-colours, that, even in his 30th year, he was acknowledged as the first of living English landscape painters. He exhibited his first picture at the Royal Academy in 1787, in his 12th year; and from this period until his death, he sent, besides others to the British Institution, 259 pictures to the same place. Many of these works were of the most ambitious character; and included in the list were some reproductions of nature of marvellous skill and beauty. In 1799 he was elected associate, and, three years afterwards, academician. In 1807 he was appointed professor of perspective. He visited Italy in 1819, in 1829, and again in 1840, and after each visit he adopted a new style, particularly studying the effects of brilliant light. His later works exhibit remarkable eccentricities of style. As a book illustrator he has scarcely a rival for imagination and brilliancy, and his "Liber Studiorum," a collection of pictures of landscape produced in avowed rivalry to the "Liber Veritatis" of Claude, is one of the choice treasures of English art. He was of solitary and eccentric habits, realising an immense fortune, and his last days were passed under an assumed name in an obscure lodging at Chelsea. He left more than 100 paintings and 19,000 drawings, studies, and sketches to the nation, and £20,000 to the Royal Academy. He was buried in St. Paul's cathedral, where there is a statue to his memory.

Born in London, 1775; died 1851.

TURNER, SHARON, an English historical writer, who practised as an attorney in London; but, from an early period of his life, devoted his leisure to historical researches. In 1799 he produced the first volume of his "History of the Anglo-Saxons." He retired from business in 1829, and in his retreat wrote "Sacred History of the World, as displayed in the Creation and subsequent Events to the Deluge;" "Sacred Meditations of a Layman;" "Richard III.," a poem and several articles for the "Quarterly Review."

Born in London, 1768; died in the same city, 1847.

TVER, or TWER, twair, a central government of European Russia, lying between those of Moscow and Novgorod. It has a more elevated surface than most parts of Russia, but its soil is generally poor.

Rivers and Lakes.—The Volga and the Duna are the chief rivers, and there are several lakes, Lake Seliger being the largest.

Area.—25,223 square miles.

Pop.—1,617,685.

TVER, the capital of the above government, at the confluence of the Tvertza and the Volga, 98 miles N.W. of Moscow. These rivers divide the town into four parts, united by three bridges, and beyond the Volga is a suburb. Tver having, in 1763, been consumed by fire, was rebuilt on a regular plan. The chief public buildings are the cathedral, which is old, and in the Gothic style; 30 other churches, and several palaces. An extensive trade is carried on.

TWEED, tweed, a river of Scotland and England, rising in Peebleshire, and draining almost all the eastern portion of the Scottish lowlands. After a course of 95 miles, it enters the North Sea at Berwick. The principal affluents are, from the north, the Addar, Biggar, Gala, and Leader; and, from the south, the Yarrow, Ettrick, Teviot, and Tell.

TWEEDDALE, twee'-dale, the popular name of Peebleshire.

TWIGGS, a county of Georgia, United States. Area, 400 square miles. Pop. 8,600, about three-fourths being coloured. The capital is Marion.

TWO SICILIES, KINGDOM OF THE. (See ITALY.)

TWO MOUNTAINS, a county of Quebec province, dominion of Canada, north of the Ottawa river. Area, 258 square miles. Pop. 16,000, the greater number of French descent. The capital is Sainte Scholastique.

TYLER, ti'-ler, a county of Texas, United States. Area, 1,130 square miles. Pop. 5,200, about one-fourth being coloured. The capital is Woodville.

TYLER, a county of West Virginia, United States. Area, 390 square miles. Pop. 11,073. The capital is Middlebourne.

TYNDALE, or TINDALE, WILLIAM, tin'-dal, an eminent English divine, who was educated at Magdalen Hall, Oxford. Having embraced the doctrines of the Reformers, he went to Antwerp, where he printed a translation of the Scriptures in English. This being sent over to London, all the copies were bought up; on which Tyndale revised his work, and printed a larger impression. The work exciting the hatred of the Romish clergy, he was apprehended as a heretic, strangled, and burnt near Antwerp, in 1536.

TYNDALL, JOHN, English natural philosopher. He was employed in the ordnance survey from 1839 to 1844, and was afterwards for three years a railway engineer. He then studied magnetism and other branches of physical science in Germany, and was afterwards elected a fellow of the Royal Society, and in 1852 appointed one of the secretaries of the British Association for the Advancement of Science. For many years he made annual visits to the Alps, and has distinguished himself by his researches into the nature of glaciers. He has been president of the British Association, is one of the most popular and eloquent lecturers at the Royal Institution, and has lectured in America. His discoveries in relation to light, heat, electricity, and magnetism have placed him in the very foremost rank of modern philosophers.

Born in Carlow county, Ireland, 1820.

TYNE. (See NORTHUMBERLAND and NEWCASTLE.)

TYNEMOUTH, tine'-muth, a town of Northumberland, at the mouth of the river Tyne, about a mile below North Shields, with which it is united. There is a good harbour. The ruins of Tynemouth priory are near the town. An aquarium and winter-garden, constructed at a cost of £100,000, was opened in August, 1878. Pop. 43,870. A station on the North-Eastern railway.

TYROL and VORARLBERG, tir'-rol, a province of the Austrian empire, bounded by Bavaria, Salzburg, Carinthia, Austrian Italy, and Switzerland, of which last it forms a continuation in the east. Of all the countries of Europe, Tyrol is the most exclusively mountainous, being traversed in the north by the Tyrolese, in the centre by the Rhætian, and on the south by the Trent Alps. (See ALPS.) The name of Vorarlberg (the most western portion) is derived from a branch of the Alps known as the Arlberg. About one-third of the whole surface is covered by perpetual snow, glaciers, and barren rocks, another third by forests, the remainder consists of arable and pasture land.

Rivers.—The Rhine forms the boundary between Vorarlberg and Switzerland; the Inn and Adige are the other most important rivers.

Minerals.—Gold, iron, copper, lead, and coal. Mineral springs abound.

Area.—11,325 square miles.

Pop.—912,549, nearly two-thirds of German, and the remainder of Italian descent, and all Roman Catholics.

Administrative Divisions.—There are four circles, Bregenz, Brixen, Innspruck, and Trent. The chief towns are INNSPRUCK (the capital), BREGENZ (or Vorarlberg), BRIXEN, BOTZEN, and TRENT.

Government.—There is a local diet of 68 members, elected for six years, except the prince archbishop of Tyrol, the two prince bishops of Trent and Brixen, and the rector of the university. The president is nominated by the Emperor. Vorarlberg has a separate state, but is under the jurisdiction of the governor of Tyrol.

History.—This country passed to the House of Hapsburg in the 13th century. By the treaty of Presburg, in 1806, Tyrol was conveyed to Bavaria, which gave rise to an insurrection (see HOFER), but in 1814 was restored to Austria.

TYRONE, tir-one', a county of Ireland, province of Ulster, bounded on the N.E. by Londonderry, E. by Lough Neagh, S.E. by Armagh, S. by Monaghan, S.W. by Fermanagh, and W. by Donegal. It is rough and mountainous in the north and south, but there are many rich and fertile valleys.

Rivers.—The Blackwater, the Foyle (known also by the names of the Camoan and the Mourne), Mounterlouny and Drimna, Fentona, Owenreagh, Longfield, Derg, Fin, Farran, and Cookestown.

Area.—1,260 square miles.

Pop.—197,233.

Parliamentary Representation and Chief Towns.—Two members are returned for the county, and one for Dungannon. The chief towns are OMAGH (the capital), DUNGANNON, and STRABANE.

TYTLER, PATRICK FRASER, a Scotch historical writer, son of Lord Woodhouselee, a Scotch judge and miscellaneous writer. After studying at the university of Edinburgh, and becoming a member of the Faculty of Advocates, he, in 1813, relinquished the law for literature. In 1819 he put forth his first separate work, under the title of "Life of James Crichton of Cluny, commonly called Admirable Crichton." "The Life of John Wicklyff," and other works, followed, and he, about 1826, commenced his most important work, "The History of Scotland." From a large number of other works, we may mention of his, "The Lives of the Scottish Worthies;" "Life of Henry VIII.;" "England under the Reigns of Edward VI. and Mary;" "Historical View of the Progress of Discovery on the more Northern Coasts of America;" and "Life of Sir Walter Raleigh." For some years before his death, he was in receipt of a pension of £200 per annum from the Government.

Born at Edinburgh, 1791; died at Malvern, 1849.

TZANA. (See DEMBIA.)

TZARSKOYE-SELO, tsar'-skoi-se'-lo, a town of European Russia, and summer residence of the imperial family, 15 miles S. of St. Petersburg. There are an extensive and a splendid palace, a Gothic castle, and many churches. Pop. 12,000.

UBEDA, oo-ba'-da, a city of Spain, province of Jaen, on the right bank of the Guadalquivir, 26 miles N.E. of Jaen. It has several churches, the most interesting being St. Michael's, once a mosque, and St. Salvador's, a fine building, in the Corinthian style. Manf. Agricultural implements, linen, and earthenware. Pop. 18,500.—This was a Moorish town, and some of the old fortifications remain.

UDALL, NICHOLAS, u'-dal, an English author, educated at Oxford, and master successively of Eton and Westminster schools, and canon of Windsor. He was the author of several translations, and the first writer of regular English comedies, of which only one, "Ralph Roister Doister," is extant.

Born in Hampshire, 1506; died 1564.

UDINE, oo-de'-nai, a north-eastern province of Italy, bordering on Austria and the Adriatic. The northern part is traversed by spurs of the Alps, and there are marshes on the southern part. The level, fertile districts are well cultivated, and the finest silk in Italy is produced. The most important river is the Tagliamento.

Minerals.—Marble and sulphur.
Area.—2,515 square miles.
Pop.—590,173.

UDINE, capital of the above province, on an extensive plain 38 miles N.W. of Trieste. It is walled and fortified, and there are a fine cathedral, a monumental pillar, commemorating the peace of 1797, concluded at Campo Formio, in the vicinity, and a large cemetery. Pop. 31,000.

UFA, oo'-fa, a government of European Russia, in Eastern Russia, previously to 1865 a portion of the government of Orenburg. The east frontier is formed by the Ural mountains; the remainder of the surface is undulating or level, and in parts very fertile.

Rivers.—The Bielaya, Ufa, and various tributary streams.
Area.—47,630 square miles.
Pop.—1,771,988.

UFA, capital of the above province, at the confluence of the Bielaya and Ufa, 200 miles N.E. of Orenburg. There are 12 Greek churches and a mosque. A large annual fair is held. Pop. 25,186.

UGANDA, u-gan'-da, a fertile territory of East Africa, on the north-western shore of Lake Victoria Nyanza. It is governed by a native chief, and the inhabitants are somewhat more civilized than those in the adjacent regions.

UGOLINO. (See GHERARDESCA.)

UHLAND, JOHANN LUDWIG, oo'-land, a German poet who studied law at Tübingen, and for a short time practised at Stuttgart. In 1819 he became a member of the Würtemberg assembly, was professor of German languages and literature at Tübingen in 1830, but resigned the chair in 1833 for the purpose of taking a more active part as a liberal leader in the diet. In 1848 he was a member of the Frankfort parliament. His first patriotic poems were published during the war against Napoleon, and he has written dramas and learned works on German and Norse literature and mythology. He ranks as the first lyric poet of his time in Germany, and some of his poems have been translated by Longfellow.

Born at Tübingen, 1787; died 1862.

UINTAH, u-in'-ta, a county of Wyoming territory, United States. Area, 13,500 square miles. Pop. 1,000. The capital is Evanston.

UIST, NORTH and SOUTH, wist, islands of the Hebrides. Pop. 10,342.

UITENHAGE, oi'-ten-hag, a division of the Eastern Province of Cape Colony, South Africa, well watered by the Gamtoos and Zwartkops rivers. In some parts it is fertile, producing wheat, barley, rye, and oats; in others, barren, and presenting lofty mountains; the Winterbroek range rising to 7,000 feet. Area, 5,580 square miles. Pop. 18,200. The capital, of the same name, is 18 miles N. of Port Elizabeth, and has an active trade with both it and Graham's Town. Pop. 3,350.

UJIJI, u-je'-je, a very fertile district of Central Africa, on the eastern shore of Lake Tanganyika. The inhabitants are the Wajiji, a powerful and warlike race. The town of Ujiji, or Kawele (lat. 4° 58′ S., lon. 30° 4′ E.), is a collection of mud huts on the shore of the lake, with a bazaar resorted to by trading Arabs. It is here that Livingstone was discovered by Stanley. (See LIVINGSTONE.)

UNITED KINGDOM OF GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND. (See BRITISH EMPIRE, GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND.)

Constitution and Government.—A limited monarchy. The supreme legislative power is vested in parliament, which is divided into two houses of legislature, the lords and the commons. The upper house consists of peers who hold their seats—1, by virtue of hereditary right; 2, by creation of the sovereign; 3, by virtue of office—English bishops; 4, by election for life—Irish peers (28); 5, by election for duration of parliament—Scottish peers (16). The lower house, or house of commons, was increased to 670 members by the Representation of the People and Redistribution of Seats Acts, 1884–5. The members allotted to the respective parts of the kingdom were—to England, 495; Scotland, 72; Ireland, 103. The Redistribution of Seats Act recognised for the first time in English history the principle of population as regulating the proportions of representation. An approximation was arrived at by retaining to all boroughs of over 15,000 inhabitants one member; 50,000 and under 100,000, two members; all other boroughs and counties sub-divided into districts, each returning only one member.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, a federal republic of North America, comprising the central portion of the continent, and the territory of ALASKA (formerly Russian America), separated from the rest by British Columbia; bounded N. by British America, E. by New Brunswick and the Atlantic, S. by the Gulf and republic of Mexico, and W. by the Pacific. The main portion lies between lat. 24° 30′ and 49° N., and lon. 66° 50′ and 124° 45′ W. The British American boundary line measures 3,540 miles; the Mexican, 1,550 miles. The greatest length, from Cape Cod, on the Atlantic, to the Pacific, near lat. 42° N., is nearly 2,800 miles, and the greatest breadth, from the north-western extremity of Minnesota to the most southern point of Texas, about 1,200 miles. The Atlantic coast line, much indented, measures 2,350 miles; on the Gulf of Mexico, 1,556 miles; and on the Pacific, 1,810 miles. The shore line of the great lakes measures 3,450 miles. (For details of physical geography, &c., see AMERICA, NORTH, and the various states under proper headings.)

Area.—3,501,404 square miles.

Pop.—50,602,670, including 6,580,793 negroes or coloured people; 339,098 Indians; 105,613 Chinese; there being in all 6,679,943 foreign-born. It is also recorded that of the white population upwards of nine millions descended from Irish parents, eight millions from German, and a little under five millions from English or Scotch parents, the comparative fewness of the last-named being very notable.

STATES.—Alabama, Arkansas, California, Colorado, Connecticut, Delaware, Florida, Georgia, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maine, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Mississippi, Missouri, Nebraska, Nevada, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, North Carolina, Ohio, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, Vermont, Virginia, West Virginia, Wisconsin.

FEDERAL DISTRICT.—Columbia.

TERRITORIES.—Organised—Arizona, Dakota, Idaho, New Mexico, Montana, Utah, Washington, Wyoming. Unorganised—Alaska, Indian Territory.

(See separate headings.)

Constitution and Government.—The several states of the Union are, as far as their internal affairs are concerned, supreme and independent, having their own governors and legislatures; but with a central government for federal purposes. The federal government consists of three branches, the executive, legislative, and judicial. The executive power is vested in a president, elected for four years by a body, or college, of electors, each state returning as many electors as it is entitled to have senators and representatives in congress. The president must be a natural born citizen of the United States; not less than 35 years of age, and been 14 years a resident in the States. He is commander-in-chief of the army and navy, and of the militia. A vice-president is also elected, who is ex-officio president of the senate, and in case of the death or resignation of the president, succeeds to the office for the remainder of the term. The administrative business of the nation is conducted by a cabinet of seven ministers. The whole legislative power is vested by the constitution in a Congress, consisting of a senate and house of representatives. The senate, or upper house, consists of two members from each state, chosen by the state legislatures for six years. Besides its legislative capacity, the senate is invested with certain judicial functions, and its members constitute a high court of impeachment. The house of representatives, or lower house, is composed of members elected every second year by the vote of all male citizens over the age of 21 of the several states of the Union. The number of members to which each state is entitled is determined by the census taken every ten years. By laws passed in 1872, after the results of the ninth census of the United States, taken June 1870, had been ascertained, it was provided that the house of representatives should be composed of 292 members. In addition to the representatives from the states, the house admits a delegate from each organised territory, who has the right to debate on subjects in which his territory is interested, but is not entitled to vote. The delegates are elected, like the representatives, by the vote of all male citizens over 21, with this difference, that in one territory, Wyoming, the franchise is also accorded to women.

Religion and Education.—The constitution of the United States grants perfect equality to all creeds and religions. Nearly one-third of the total population are Methodists; the next in respect of numbers are Baptists, Presbyterians, Congregationalists, Roman Catholics, and Protestant Episcopalians. There is no national system of education, and the general government exercises no control over public schools, the regulation of all matters pertaining to education being left to the states, in each of which free common schools are provided by law.

Railways and Electric Telegraphs.—About 74,000 miles of railway are open, and 80,000 miles of telegraph lines.

History.—The United States were recognised by Great Britain as a free, sovereign, and independent power in 1783, and the constitution was established in 1787, there being then 13 states—Connecticut, Delaware, Georgia, Maryland, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, North Carolina, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, South Carolina, and Virginia (the dates of admission to the Union of the other states and the territories are given under the separate headings). The constitution has been amended in 1787, 1791, 1798, 1804, 1865, and 1870. Slavery was abolished by the amendment of 1865. The United States continued to flourish until 1812, when they were involved in the war which raged between Great Britain and France. At last they took up arms for the vindication of their rights as a neutral power. This war was terminated in 1814, after the general peace which had taken place among the European powers. At the beginning of 1861 a series of secessions took place, on account of the long-vexed question of slavery, between the northern and southern states. The Carolinas were the first to secede from the Union; and these were followed by others adverse to the abolition of an institution which, certainly, reflects the greatest disgrace upon a government proclaiming itself free. A Southern Congress was formed, in opposition to that of the Federal Union held at Washington, and in May it passed acts "recognising the existence of war with the Washington government, and authorising the issue of letters of marque." This War of Secession terminated, in 1865, by the total defeat of the Confederate or Southern forces, followed by proclamations of amnesty.

UNST, unst, the most northern of the Shetland Isles, Scotland.

UNTERWALDEN, oon'-ter-val'-den, a canton almost in the centre of Switzerland, bounded N. and W. by Lucerne, S. by Bern, and E. by Uri. It consists of four valleys, covered with meadows and pasture lands, and surrounded by the Alps, which rise to various heights of from 3,000 to 10,000 feet. There are extensive forests. Pasture is the chief occupation.

Area.—395 square miles.
Pop.—27,348, all Roman Catholics.
Divisions and Chief Towns.—The canton is divided into Upper and Lower Unterwalden. The capital of the former is Sarnen, of the latter, Stanz.

UNYAMWESI, oon-yam-we'-se, a country of East Africa, to the south of lake Victoria Nyanzi. The inhabitants are active and industrious, and are much employed as porters. There are a number of independent chiefs.

UNYANYEMBE, oon'-yan-yem-be, the central and principal province of the above country. It is a great meeting-place for Arab merchants, and the chief is the most powerful chief of the country.

UNYORO, oon-yo'-ro, a territory of East Africa, on the east side of Albert Nyanza. The northern part is known as Chopi.

UPSAL, or UPSALA, oop-sa'-la, a province of Middle Sweden, bounded by the Gulf of Bothnia, the Baltic, the Lake Mälar, and Westmannland. It consists of an extensive plain, little elevated above the level of the sea, and in general fertile. Its centre is traversed by the river Sala, and cattle-rearing is the principal branch of rural industry. In this province are the mines of Dannemora and several important smelting works. Area, 2,015 square miles. Pop. 114,591.

UPSAL, an ancient city of Sweden, capital of the above province, on the Sala, near its junction with the Skol, 40 miles N.W. of Stockholm. The Gothic cathedral, in which the Swedish kings used to be crowned, was built between the 13th and 15th centuries. Trinity church is a much older building. The university was founded in 1477. The other objects worthy of attention are the observatory, the botanical garden, the cabinets of natural history and mineralogy, the royal castle and gardens, and the residence of the archbishop. Pop. 18,762.

UPSHUR, up'-shur, a county of West Virginia, United States. Area, 500 square miles. Pop. 10,249. The capital is Gilmer.

UPSON, up'-son, a county of Georgia, United States. Area, 384 square miles. Pop. 12,400, about half being coloured. The capital is Thomaston.

URAL, or OORAL MOUNTAINS, oo'-ral, a chain of mountains forming the north-eastern boundary of Europe. The course of the range is nearly due north and south from the Gulf of Kara, in the Arctic Ocean, to the Kirghiz Steppes, on the right bank of the Ural river, extending over about 19 degrees of latitude, with a general breadth of about 40 miles. The average elevation is about 2,000 feet, and the highest summit is about 5,540 feet. The greater part of the range blends gradually into the plains at the sides, and has little of the mountain character, being covered by easy roads. It is only in the extreme north that snow remains all the year round; in general, the chain is clothed with pine forests. There are important mines of iron and copper, considerable quantities of gold, platinum, and diamonds, emeralds, and other precious stones are found.

URALSK, oo-ralsk', a town of Asiatic Russia, province of Urale, on the right bank of the Ural, 150 miles S.W. of Orenberg. Pop. 20,677, mostly Cossacks, of whose chief it is the residence.

URANIA, u-ra'-ne-a, in Greek mythology one of the nine Muses, presiding over astronomy.

URANUS, or CŒLUS, u-ra'-nus, in Greek and Roman mythology the predecessor of Chronos (or Salum) on the throne of heaven.

URBAN, ur'-ban, the name of six popes, the most remarkable of whom were:—

URBAN II. (Othon de Lagny), succeeded Victor III. in 1088. He caused Guibert, who had been supported as anti-pope under the title of Clement III., to be driven out of Rome; preached the first crusade in 1095, and convoked the councils of Bari, Clermont, and Rome.

Born at Chatellon-sur-Marne, France, 1042; died 1099.

URBAN IV. (Jacques Pantaleon), became pope in succession to Alexander IV. in 1261. He excommunicated Manfred, king of Naples, and offered the crown to Charles, count of Provence and Anjou, and brother to Louis IX. of France, which led to the subsequent wars of the Anjous for the possession of Sicily and Naples.

Died 1265.

URBAN V. (Guillaume de Grimoard), had previously been abbot of St. Victor at Marseilles. At the death of Innocent VI., in 1362, he was elected to the papacy. He restored the papal seat from Avignon to Rome, founded many churches, and reformed numerous abuses.

Born at Grisac, Languedoc, 1319; died at Avignon, 1370.

URBAN VI. (Bartolommeo Prignano), succeeded Gregory XI. in 1378. The cardinals afterwards chose Robert of Geneva, who took the name of Clement VII., and took up his residence at Avignon. Thus was originated the famous "Western Schism," which endured for nearly fifty years.

Died at Rome, 1389.

URBAN VIII. (Maffeo Barberini), succeeded Gregory XV. in 1623. He founded the college of the Propaganda, added considerably to the territories of the church, opposed the Jansenists, and suppressed the order of the Jesuitesses. He patronized art and learning, and was himself a graceful poet.

Born 1568; died 1644.

URBINO, oor-bé'-no, a walled city of Italy, capital of the province of Pesaro Urbino, 20 miles S.W. of Pesaro. It has a ducal palace, a superb specimen of the cinque cento style, and a college cathedral. Manf. Pins principally. Pop. 16,500.

URI, oó'-re, a canton in the central part of Switzerland, bounded N. by Schnytz, and S. by Ticino, from which it is separated by the St. Gothard mountains. Mountainous, and containing some of the principal heights of the Alps. The beautiful Urseren valley is 9 miles long, and 5,000 above the sea. Cattle-rearing is the chief occupation of its inhabitants. The capital is ALTORF. Area, 415 square miles. Pop. 23,694, Roman Catholics, and speaking German.

URSULA, ST., ur'-su-la, according to legend, the daughter of a Christian prince of Britain. Attended by 1,000 Virgins, she made a pilgrimage to Rome, but on their return were massacred at Cologne by the Huns. A collection of bones is still shown as relics of the unfortunate maidens. The date of the martyrdom is variously fixed in the 3rd, 4th, and 5th centuries.

URUGUAY, or BANDA ORIENTAL, ú'-roo-gwai, a republic of South America, bounded N. and E. by Brazil, S. by the mouth of the Plata, and S. and S.W. by the Argentine Confederation. It is divided by the river of its name into east and west. Level along the coast, and mountainous in its central parts. There are ravines, with heights clothed with forests, abounding with wild animals; but the vast pampas, or grassy plains, are the principal features of the country.

Rivers.—The Uruguay and its affluents, of which the principal is the Rio Negro.
Minerals.—Gold, silver, lead, iron, copper, marble, granite, limestone, jasper, and chalcedon.
Area.—73,500 square miles.
Pop.—700,000, more than half mixed races, and 12,000 negroes. The aborigines have disappeared.
Capital, MONTEVIDEO.
Constitution and Government.—The republic, formerly a Brazilian province, declared its independence, August 25, 1825, which was recognised by the Treaty of Montevideo, signed August 27, 1828. The legislative power is in a parliament composed of two houses, the Senate and the Chamber of Representatives. The executive is given to the president of the republic, who is elected for the term of four years, and cannot be re-elected till after the lapse of four years. A Vice-President, also elected for four years, is at the head of the senate, but has no other political power. The president is assisted in his executive functions by a council of ministers divided into four departments.

URUGUAY, a large and navigable river of Brazil, and one of the principal tributaries of the Plata. It rises in lat. 26° 30′ S., and, after a course estimated at 800 miles, it enters the Plata, 35 miles from Buenos Ayres, being joined by the immense tributary stream of the Parana, which serves, also, to swell the Plata.

URUMIAH, or OROOMIAH, oo-roo-mé'-a, a town of Persia, province of Azerbijan, 65 miles S.W. of Tabriz. Pop. 45,000, chiefly Mahomedans, but including several thousand Jews and Nesterians.

URUMTSI, u-rum'-tse, a city of the Chinese empire, situate in a volcanic district immediately N. of the Thian-Shan mountains. It is a large place, with several temples, and the seat of a considerable trade. Pop. Unascertained. Lat. 43° 45′ N. Lon. 88° 50′ E.

USHANT (French, OUESSANT), ush'-ant, an island on the north-west coast of France, department Finisterre, 11 miles from the nearest coast of France, 25 miles from Brest. It has a circumference of about 10 miles. The coast is rocky, and the landing-places few. Pop. 2,400.

USHER, JAMES, ush'-er, an Irish prelate, whose uncle, Henry Usher, archbishop of Armagh, the founder of Trinity College, Dublin, placed him in that seminary. At the age of 16 he commenced a "Chronology of the Bible," in Latin, which was the origin of his great work, afterwards published under the title of "Annals of the Old and New Testament." In 1607 he was appointed professor of divinity at Dublin, and chancellor of St. Patrick's Cathedral. He was promoted to the bishopric of Meath in 1620, whence he was translated to the archbishopric of Armagh, in 1626. On the breaking out of the Irish rebellion, he retired to England, and was promoted to the see of Carlisle, from which he received no advantage, owing to the civil wars and the abolition of episcopacy. In 1647 he was appointed preacher to Lincoln's Inn. Besides his "Annals," he published a "Body of Divinity;" the writings of Godeschalc in support of predestination; "Antiquitates Ecclesiarum Britannicarum;" an edition of the epistles of Ignatius, Barnabas, and Polycarp, with notes; sermons and other learned works. His remains were interred in Westminster Abbey.

Born at Dublin, 1580; died at Reigate, Surrey, 1656.

USTIUG VELIKI, oos'-te-oog, a city of European Russia, government of Vologda, at the confluence of the Suchona and the Jug, which unite here and form the Dwina. It has three cathedrals, and a number of churches or chapels; but most of its houses are of wood. It is a mart of the trade between the frozen regions of the north, and the more temperate provinces in the south. Its principal traffic is in corn and furs; also in fish, and in the silks and tea of China. Manf. Woollen and linen cloth, tallow, soap, leather, hosiery, ironmongery, tiles, jewellery, and silver goods. Pop. 13,000.

UTAH, u'-tah, a territory of the United States, bounded N. by Idaho and Wyoming, S. by Arizona, E. by Wyoming and Colorado, and W. by Nevada. The Wahsatch mountains cross it from east to west, attaining an elevation of 13,000 feet, and the valleys are from 4,000 to 6,000 feet above the sea level. Other mountain ranges are the Uintah, extending east from the Wahsatch, and the Roan, extending into Colorado. In the eastern portion of the territory are extensive undulating plateaux. The soil is fertile near the rivers and lakes, but the plains are barren, and frequently covered with a saline incrustation. In the mountain regions are extensive forests of pine, ash, cedar, and spruce. There are large grazing districts.

Rivers and Lakes.—The Colorado, Green, Grand, and Rio Virgen, with numerous tributaries; the Jordan, Bear, and Sevier. There are many lakes, the largest being GREAT SALT LAKE.

Minerals.—Silver, lead, gold, copper, and iron. There are numerous hot springs.

Area.—84,476 square miles.

Pop.—144,000. In respect of population, this ranks as the third of the Territories.

Divisions and Chief Towns.—There are 20 counties. The chief towns are SALT LAKE CITY, the capital; Ogden, and Provo.

History.—Utah is part of the territory acquired from Mexico in 1848. It was settled in 1847 by Mormons, and known as the "State of Deseret." The territory of Utah was organised in 1850.

UTAH, a county of the above territory. Area, 1,000 square miles. Pop. 17,973. The capital is Provo.

UTICA, u-ti'-ka, a city and one of the county seats of Oneida county, New York, United States, on the south bank of the Mohawk, 83 miles N.W. of Albany. The city is regularly laid out, and rises from the river bank to a height, at the end of Genessee-street (the principal thoroughfare), of 150 feet. There are 34 churches, several charitable institutions, and a city hall. Manf. Machinery, iron, carpets, oilcloth, carriages, stoneware, and agricultural implements. Pop. 33,000, about 10,000 being foreigners.

UTRECHT, u'-trekt (Dutch, oo-treht'), a province of the Netherlands, bounded W. by South Holland, N. by North Holland and the Zuyder Zee, and E. by Gelderland. Level, with the exception of the south quarter. Its pasturage is excellent. Rivers. The Leck or Rhine forms its boundary. Its other rivers are the Eem and Vechte. Area, 534 square miles. Pop. 206,702.

UTRECHT, a city and capital of the preceding province, on the Old Rhine, 20 miles S.E. of Amsterdam. It is surrounded by forts, but the old ramparts are used as boulevards. Of the public edifices, the most remarkable is the Gothic cathedral, St. Martin, a considerable part of which is now in ruins; but the tower, 388 feet high, still remains entire. There are two other cathedrals and 20 churches. The government offices, the pope's house (built by pope Adrian VI., who was born here), the Mint, the renovated town-hall, and the palace of arts and sciences are notable buildings. The public walk called the Mall, is upwards of a mile in length, and bordered with a triple row of trees. The university of Utrecht was founded in 1630. Manf. Plush (Utrecht velvet), silk, linen and cotton goods, carpets and cigars. The bookselling trade is extensive. Pop. 75,900, about one-third being Catholic.—This is the oldest of all the Batavian cities. In 1579 the union of the provinces was concluded in the Stadhuis; and in the same building, in 1713, the treaty of peace between the allies and the French was completed.

UTRERA, oo-trai'-ra, a town of Spain, province of Seville, on the Carbonel, 18 miles S.E. of Seville. There are a fine Gothic church and a Moorish castle. Manf. Soap, leather, and starch. Near it are also salt springs. Pop. 15,103.

UTTOXETER, ut-tox'-e-ter, or oox'-e-ter, a market-town of Staffordshire, near the river Dove, 14 miles N.E. of Stafford. The church is an ancient edifice, with a tower and spire 180 feet high. There is a trade in cheese, wool, bricks, and malt. Pop. 7,957.—A station on the North Staffordshire railway.

UVALDE, u-val'-de, a county of Texas, United States. Area, 1,000 square miles. Pop. 1,000. The capital is Uvalde.

UXBRIDGE, ux'-bridj, a market-town of Middlesex, on the Colne, 15 miles N.W. of London. In the neighbourhood are many corn-mills, giving a great supply of flour to the metropolis, and brick-making is carried on extensively. The corn-market is important. Pop. 7,700.—A station on the Great Western railway.

V.

VAAL. (See ORANGE RIVER.)

VALAIS, val'-ai, a canton in the south-west of Switzerland, bounded N. by Vaud and Berne, S. by Piedmont, E. by Uri and Ticino, and S. by Savoy. It is one of the most picturesque cantons, and occupies the largest valley in Switzerland, watered in its whole extent by the Rhone, and bordered on the north, as on the south, by the loftiest mountains in Europe. There are more than 100 glaciers, some of immense extent. Cattle-rearing is the principal branch of industry. Area, 2,026 square miles. Pop. 100,216. nearly all Roman Catholics. The capital is Sion, or Sittera.

VAL DE PENAS, val-dai-pain'-yas, a town of Spain, province of Ciudad Reale, on the Jabalon, 110 miles S. of Madrid. It is celebrated for its wines. Pop. 13,867.

VALDIVIA, val-div'-i-a, the most southern province of Chili, on the sea-coast, on both sides of the great river Valdivia. There are several good harbours. The soil is fertile, and there are extensive forests. Area, 10,700 square miles. Pop. 38,500, about two-thirds being Araucanian Indians.

VALDIVIA, capital of the above province, on the south side of the river of its name, 9 miles from the sea. The harbour is situate in a beautiful bay, formed by the river, with the island of Manzera at the entrance. Large quantities of timber are exported to Valparaiso. Pop. 4,100. Lat. 39° 49′ S. Lon. 73° 15′ W.

VALENCE, va'-lance', a town of France, capital of department Drôme, on the left bank of the Rhone, 56 miles S. of Lyon. The cathedral is an ancient building, with a tower rebuilt in 1862. The Rhone is crossed by a very fine suspension bridge. Manf. Silk and cotton goods, gloves and glassware. Pop. 24,502.

VALENCIA, va-len'-she-a (Sp. va-len'-the-a), an old kingdom in the east of Spain). It now forms the provinces of Alicante, Valencia, and Castellon-de-la-Plana.

VALENCIA, a province of Spain, bordering on the Mediterranean. There are fine forests in the mountainous parts, and oranges are extensively cultivated. Sheep, goats, and silkworms, are reared. There are large marble quarries.

Rivers.—The Guadalaviar and Jucar.
Area.—4,352 square miles.
Pop.—699,438.

VALENCIA, a city of Spain, capital of the above province, on the Guadalaviar, 2 miles from the sea, and 190 miles S.E. of Madrid. It is surrounded by an old wall, pierced by eight gateways. Of the different public walks, the chief is that which extends along the banks of the river, which is crossed by five bridges. The cathedral is a large but irregular Gothic building, begun in 1262, and enlarged in 1482, with a tower 162 feet high. There are many other churches, an episcopal palace, and several charitable institutions. The university was founded in 1209, and is on an extensive scale. The harbour, with two very large moles, and an inner port, is defended by two batteries. Manf. Silk, linen, and woollen fabrics, hats, leather, Valencia tiles for flooring, glass, artificial flowers, paper, soap, and pottery. Pop. about 143,861.—A Roman town, Valentia, occupied the site of the present city. The Moors held it from 713 till 1238. It was besieged by the French in 1808 and 1812.

VALENCIA, a city of Venezuela, and capital of the province of Carabobo, 70 miles S.W. of Caracas, and 18 miles from Puerto Cabello, its seaport. Pop. 36,145.

VALENCIA, a county of New Mexico, United States. Area, 10,500 square miles. Pop. 13,095. The capital is Valencia.

VALENCIENNES, va-lan'-se-en, a fortified town of France, department Le Nord, on the Scheldt, 28 miles S.E. of Lille. Manf. Lace of great fineness, linen, gold and silver tissues, beet-root sugar, toys, earthenware, and leather. Pop. 28,000. This was a residence of the Merovingian kings. It was captured by the French in 1677.

VALENS, FLAVIUS, vai'-lens, emperor of the East, was the son of Gratian, and became the colleague, in the government of the Roman empire, of his brother Valentinian, in 364. A zealous Arian, he violently persecuted the orthodox bishops. He forced the Goths to make peace, but imprudently suffered them to settle in Thrace, where they were joined by great numbers of barbarians, and the war being renewed, he marched against them, but was totally defeated near Adrianople. His soldiers carried him to his tent, which the barbarians set on fire, the emperor perishing in the flames.

Died 378.

VALENTINE, BASIL, val'-en-tine, a German alchemist, who wrote many works on transmutation, in high repute with seekers for the philosopher's stone.

Lived in the 14th century.

VALENTINE, ST., a Christian martyr, who was beheaded at Rome, in the reign of the emperor Claudius, and was early canonized.

Died 270.

VALENZA, va-lent-za, a city of northern Italy, on the right bank of the Po, 8 miles N. of Alessandria. Manf. Silk, flax, and hemp. Pop. 9,801.

VALERIUS, PUBLIUS, va-lee'-ri-us, a Roman, surnamed Publicola, for his popularity. He assisted Brutus to expel the Tarquins, and was the first to take an oath to support the liberty and independence of his country. Publicola became four times consul, and, after his death, received the thanks which a people redeemed from slavery usually pay to their deliverers. He was so poor that his body was buried at the public expense. The Roman matrons mourned his death a whole year.

Lived in the 6th century B.C.

VALETTA, or LA VALETTA, va-let'-ta, a seaport and capital of Malta, on the north-east coast of the island. It occupies an elevated peninsula, about a mile and three quarters long, and more than half a mile wide, between two harbours, the eastern, or Great Harbour, extending inland 2 miles, and the western, Marsa Musceit, or quarantine harbour, both of irregular shape, with projecting tongues of land. On the eastern side of the Great Harbour are suburbs, La Sanglea, Citta Vittoriosa, Burmola, and the Cottonera, all strongly fortified. In the western harbour is an island on which is Fort Manuel. The entrance to the harbour is guarded by Fort St. Elmo, a very strong citadel of granite, at the extremity of the peninsula on which the town is situated; Fort Ricasola, on the eastern side of the entrance to the Great Harbour, and Fort Tigne, on Point Dragut, at the entrance to the western harbour. The town is surrounded by lines of fortifications, and protected on the inland side by strong lines, mounting 1,000 guns. The site on which the town stands is so uneven, that communication between the streets is maintained by flights of steps, the Strada St. Giovanni being a remarkable avenue of that character. The principal street, the Strada Reale, stretches along the crest of the hill; other wide streets run in a parallel direction of lower levels, and there are several large squares. Adjoining the town on the south-west, and inclosed within the fortifications, is a handsome suburb, Floriana, containing a palace and botanical garden. The cathedral, built in 1580, is the most interesting of the 20 churches. It contains many monuments of the Knights of Malta, historical relics, and pictures. The old palace of the grand master is now the governor's residence, and contains portraits of the knights, an armoury, library, and museum. The university was founded in 1838; the military hospital is a fine edifice erected by the knights, and there are military, naval, and civil hospitals. The dockyard will admit the largest ships of war, and in the creek of Sanglea, in the eastern harbour, are private ship-building yards. The town is supplied with water by an aqueduct from Citta Vecchia, 8 miles distant. Pop. 60,000. Lat. 35° 54′ N. Lon. 14° 31′ E.

VALETTE, JEAN PARISOT DE LA, va-let', grand master of the Knights of St. John, who, in 1565, defended Malta against an immense Turkish force, and, after four months' siege, compelled the enemy, who had about 20,000 men, to withdraw.

Born 1494; died 1568.

VALLADOLID, val'-la-do-lid', a north-western province of Spain. The surface, though elevated, is generally level, and the soil is sandy. There are excellent pastures, and numerous horses, cattle, and mules are reared.

Rivers.—The Douro and its affluents, the Duraton, Eresma, and Pisuerga.

Area.—3,043 square miles.

Pop.—250,535.

VALLADOLID, an ancient city and capital of the above province, on the left bank of the Pisuerga, 100 miles N.W. of Madrid. There are two squares, one of which, the Plaza Mayor, contains some good buildings. The cathedral, begun by Philip II., has never been finished. The churches of Santa Maria la Antigua, San Martin, and San Benito, are fine specimens of architecture. There are several other churches, and convents, and a university, founded in 1346. Manf. Silk, cotton, and woollen stuffs, perfumery, jewellery, hats, paper, earthenware, and leather. There is also a trade in corn, white wines, madder, and olives, raised in the neighbourhood. Pop. 52,206.—This was the Belad-Waled of the Moors; and the capital of Castile and of Spain till 1560.

VALLADOLID. (See MORELIA.)

VALLADOLID. (See COMAYAGUA.)

VALLADOLID, a city of Mexico, state of Yucatan, 90 miles E. of Merida. Pop. 15,000.

VALLS, vals, a town of Spain, province of Tarragona, 12 miles N.W. of the city of Tarragona. Manf. Cotton and woollen fabrics, silk, pottery, paper, tiles, leather, and soap. Pop. 13,200.—Here the French defeated the Spaniards in 1809, but they, in their turn, were defeated in 1811.

VALPARAISO, val-pa-ri'-so, a province of Chili, South America, bounded N. by Aconcagua, S. and E. by Santiago, and W. by the Pacific. The surface is mountainous, but the valleys are fertile, producing excellent crops. Agriculture is the principal industry, but mines of silver and copper are worked. The name of the province means the Valley of Paradise.

Area.—670 square miles.

Pop.—183,056.

Administrative Divisions and Chief Towns.—There are four departments, named after chief towns, VALPARAISO, QUILLOTTA, CASABIANCA, and LIMACHE.

VALPARAISO, a city, capital of the above province, on a fine bay of the same name, 70 miles N. of Santiago. The city rises from the shore to a chain of hills, which give names to various suburbs. The old part along the shore is known as the Port; the most thickly populated trading part is the Almendral, and the finest residences of the wealthy merchants are in the suburbs Alegre and Concepcion. In the newer parts the streets are wide and regular, and there are six plazas, or squares. Among the chief buildings are the government palace, custom house, exchange, post office, and city hall. The Franciscan church is a fine Gothic building, and there are three Protestant churches. The bay is defended by 15 strong forts. This is the chief port of the South Pacific, and the head quarters of foreign men-of-war. The commercial business is very extensive. Pop. 95,000, including 25,000 foreigners. Lat. 33° 2' S. Lon. 71° 45' W.—Valparaiso was founded in 1544. It was taken by Drake, and afterwards by Hawkins, sacked by a Dutch corsair in 1600, nearly destroyed by earthquakes in 1730 and 1822, and bombarded by a Spanish squadron in 1866.

VAN, van, a fortified city of the Turkish empire, in Armenia, vilayet of Erzeroum, situate on a lake of the same name, 145 miles S.E. of Erzeroum. It is surrounded by a good wall and a deep ditch, and has four gates. To the north, on a high and perpendicular rock, stands the ruined citadel, and it has Armenian churches, mosques, baths, caravanserais, besides some large caves, with inscriptions, attributed to Semiramis. Orchards and gardens surround the city. Pop. 30,000.—This is a very ancient city, and takes its name from Van, an Armenian king of the 4th century B.C., and it was for many centuries the capital of the Armenian kingdom.

VANBRUGH, SIR JOHN, van'-bro, a celebrated English dramatic writer and architect, who was descended from a family which had taken refuge in England during Alva's tyrannical rule in the Netherlands. After acquiring some celebrity as an architect, he commenced writing for the stage about 1695, producing "The Relapse," "The Provoked Wife," "The Confederacy," and "The Relapse; or Virtue in Danger," comedies which still hold their place on the stage. He was for some time Clarencieux king-of-arms, was knighted, and in 1716 was appointed surveyor of Greenwich Hospital. He was also comptroller-general of works, and surveyor of the royal gardens. Sir John built several superb edifices, the principal of which is Blenheim, the seat of the duke of Marlborough.

Born 1670; died in London, 1726.

VAN BUREN, MARTIN, bu'-ren, eighth president of the United States. He practised as a lawyer, was elected to the senate in 1821, governor of New York in 1828, and secretary of state in 1829. In 1837 he became president, and was again proposed in 1844, but rejected on account of his opposition to the annexation of Texas, and a third time in 1848, as an anti-slavery candidate, but rejected in favour of General Taylor.

Born at Kinderhook, New York, 1782; died there, 1862.

VAN BUREN, the name of four counties of the United States:—

ARKANSAS.—Area, 1,260 square miles. Pop. 9,565. The capital is Clinton.

IOWA.—Area, 468 square miles. Pop. 18,000. The capital is Keosauqua.

MICHIGAN.—Area, 633 square miles. Pop. 30,000. The capital is Pawpaw.

TENNESSEE.—Area, 350 square miles. Pop. 2,800. The capital is Spencer.

VANCOUVER ISLAND, van-koo'-ver, an island in the North Pacific Ocean, off the north-western coast of British North America, forming part of British Columbia, from which it is separated on the north-east by the Gulf of Georgia, Johnstone Strait and Queen Charlotte Sound. The Strait of Fuca divides it from Washington Territory, in the United States. It is 275 miles long, and 85 miles in its greatest breadth. The coast is much indented, the principal inlets being Nootka and Barclay Sounds on the western side, Victoria Harbour at the south-eastern extremity of the island, and Esquimalt and Narraimo Harbours. The surface is mountainous; a bare and rocky range, with an average elevation of 2,000 feet, extending through the centre of the island from north to south. Between this ridge and the coast, which is abrupt and rocky, are rounded and fir-covered hills. There are extensive valleys and prairies. The only streams are short water-courses, and between the mountain ridges are numerous lakes, some connected in a continuous chain. The climate is equable and healthful, and wheat, potatoes, and other vegetables are successfully cultivated. The capital is VICTORIA.

Minerals.—Coals, large quantities of which are exported to San Francisco, and limestone. There are salt springs.

Area.—15,000 square miles.

Pop.—9,991, exclusive of Indians, many of whom live in the coast districts.

History.—The island was taken possession of for the British by Vancouver in 1792; in 1843 the Hudson's Bay Company established a trading-port at Fort Victoria; in 1859 it was made a colony, and in 1866 consolidated with British Columbia.

VANCOUVER, GEORGE, an English navigator, who entered the royal navy at the age of 13, and rose to the rank of captain. He accompanied Cook on his second and third voyages round the world. He was subsequently employed in exploring the north-west coast of America, the Sandwich Islands, and the coast of South America. He was the author of a "Voyage of Discovery to the North Pacific Ocean, and Round the World, in the years 1790-95."

Born 1758; died 1798.

VANDERBURGH, van'-der-berg, a county of Indiana, United States. Area, 216 square miles. Pop. 42,193. The capital is Evansville.

VANDERVELDE, or VANDEVELDE, WILLEM, a Dutch painter, son of a landscape painter of considerable talent. In consequence of the successful manner in which he depicted the naval engagements between the English and Dutch, he was invited to England by Charles II., in 1675, and obtained a pension from the crown. His son Willem was also a successful painter of sea pieces.

Born at Leyden, 1610; died in England, 1693.

VAN DIEMEN'S LAND. (See TASMANIA.)

VANDYCK, or VANDYKE, ANTHONY, Sir, van'-dike, a Dutch painter, who was educated under Rubens. He resided some time at Rome, and then removed to Genoa, and afterwards England, where he had previously been, and was employed by Charles I., who conferred on him the honour of knighthood. His greatest works, chiefly in portraiture and historical subjects, were executed in England, where he married a daughter of the earl of Gowry. His remains were interred in St. Paul's cathedral.

Born at Antwerp, 1599; died in London, 1641.

VANE, HENRY, Sir, vain, an English patriot, was eldest son of Sir Henry Vane, secretary of state to Charles I. After studying at Oxford, he went to Geneva, where he imbibed a hatred of the principles upon which his native country was then governed; on which account he quarrelled with his father, and made a voyage to New England, where he was elected governor of Massachusetts, but gave offence by his advocacy of religious liberty. He returned in 1637, and upon the breaking out of the Civil War took an active part against the king. He, however, opposed the usurpation of Cromwell, who caused him to be imprisoned. After the Restoration, he was one of the twenty excepted out of the act of general pardon, and was sent to the Tower. In 1662 he was brought to trial for high treason, found guilty, and beheaded on Tower Hill. He wrote political and theological works.

Born 1612; died 1648.

VANNES, van, a town of France, on the coast of Brittany, capital of department Morbihan, at the bottom of a bay interspersed with islets, about 2½ miles from the sea. The cathedral is a massive structive. Manf. Woollens, linens, cottons, lace, and leather. A brisk coasting trade is carried on. Pop. 19,700.

VAN TROMP. (See TROMP, VAN.)

VAN WERT, a county of Ohio, United States. Area, 390 square miles. Pop. 23,028. The capital is Van Wert.

VAN ZANDT, a county of Texas, United States. Area, 875 square miles. Pop. 12,619. The capital is Canton.

VAR, a south-eastern department of France, bordering on the Mediterranean. Mountainous; and, in general, rugged and uneven, the only extensive levels being along the coast, and the soil is not naturally fertile.

Rivers.—The Var, Varden, and Argens, with a number of smaller streams.

Minerals.—Coal, iron, and lead.

Area.—2,350 square miles.

Pop.—288,577.

Administrative Divisions and Chief Towns.—There are 3 arrondissements, and 145 communes. The chief towns are DRAGUIGNAN (the capital), BRIGNOLES, and TOULOUSE.

VARNA, var'-na, a seaport of European Turkey, in Bulgaria, at the bottom of a bay of the Black Sea, at the mouth of the river Varna, 160 miles N. of Constantinople. It is surrounded by walls, entered by six gates, and defended by an old castle, with massive towers; and has eight mosques, also some Greek churches. Its harbour is large and commodious. Pop. 24,555. Lat. 43° 12′ N. Lon. 27° 56′ E.—Here, in 1444, the Turks defeated the Hungarians; and, in 1828, the Russians took the town after a siege of three months. In 1854 the allied British and French armies, which had been here encamped, sailed hence for the Crimea.

VARRO, var'-ro, a Roman author, esteemed the most learned man of his age. He wrote nearly 500 works, on almost every department of knowledge, but only fragments of two remain. They afford considerable information respecting the civil and religious customs of the ancient Romans.

Born 116 B.C.; died 28 B.C.

VASA. (See GUSTAVUS I.)

VASARHELY, va-sar'-hel-le, a market town of Hungary, on the east bank of the Thiess, 14 miles N.E. of Szegedin. Pop. 50,966, mostly Protestants.

VASARHELY. (See MAROS-VASARHELY.)

VASARI, GIORGIO, va-sa'-re, an Italian painter, architect, and biographer, who studied under Del Sarto and Michael Angelo, and copied the remains of ancient sculpture; but he was deficient in colouring. He wrote the "Lives of celebrated Painters, Sculptors, and Architects."

Born at Arezzo, 1512; died at Florence, 1574.

VASTO, or VASTO D'AMMONE, vas'-to, a town of Italy, province of Chieti, on the coast of the Adriatic, 30 miles S.E. of Chieti. It is walled, and has a large square, with a fountain. The sturgeon fishery is productive. Pop. 13,751.

VATTEL, EMMERIC DE, vat'-tel, a Swiss writer on jurisprudence, who studied at Basel and Geneva, and entered the service of the king of Poland, whose minister to the republic at Berne he became. In 1753 he published his "Treatise on the Law of Nations; or, the Principles of Natural Law applied to the Conduct of States and Sovereigns."

Born at Couvet, Neufchâtel, 1714, died 1767.

VAUBAN, SÉBASTIEN LE PRESTRE, Marquis de, vo'-ba, a French military engineer. He entered the army in his 17th year, and in a short time evinced an extraordinary genius for the science of fortification and military tactics. After serving during some time under the Prince of Condé, in the Spanish army, he was taken prisoner by the royalists, and was urged by Mazarin to enter the service of the king. Some of the strongest fortifications in France and Flanders were constructed by him. For his eminent services he was created a marshal of France, and received many marks of his sovereign's esteem. He wrote several treatises on fortification.

Born at Vezelay, Yonne, 1633; died 1707.

VAUCLUSE, vo'-kloose, a south-eastern department of France, bounded on the S. by the department Bouches-du-Rhone. Hilly and mountainous in the north-east, where it is traversed by branches of the Alps, but other parts are undulating, with plains, and the soil is not generally fertile.

Rivers.—The Rhone, with its affluents, the Durance, and Eygues.
Area.—1,370 square miles.
Pop.—244,149.
Administrative Divisions and Chief Towns.—There are 4 arrondissements, and 150 communes. The chief towns are AVIGNON (the capital), Apt, Carpentras, and Orange.

VAUD, vo, a canton in the south-west of Switzerland, bounded on the W. by France, on the S. by the Lake of Geneva, N. by Neufchâtel, and E. by Fribourg. It is in general less mountainous than other parts of Switzerland, consisting of beautiful valleys and plains, intersected by small cultivated hills. In the N.W. it is covered with branches of the Jura, and on the S.E. with those of the Alps. The valleys and plains are appropriated to the culture of corn; the eminences and hills to that of the vine.

Rivers and Lakes.—The Upper Rhone, the Orbe, the Venoge, and the Broyes; the lakes of Joux, and parts of Morat and Neufchâtel are in the canton.
Minerals.—Marble, coal, sulphur, with a few metals. Salt is produced from the springs of Bex.
Area.—1,244 square miles.
Pop.—238,730, the great majority Protestants, and speaking French.
Chief Towns.—LAUSANNE (the capital), BEX, and VEVAY.

VAUDREUIL, vode-rweeh', a county of Quebec province, dominion of Canada. Area, 128 square miles. Pop. 11,100, about 9,400 being of French descent. The capital is Vaudreuil.

VAUGIRARD, vo-zhe-rar', a town of France on the Seine, now forming a suburb of Paris, within its fortifications.

VEERUMGAUM, ve'-room-gawm', a town of British India, 35 miles from Ahmedabad, in the presidency of Bombay. Pop. 17,000.

VEGA, LA, vai'-ga, an ancient city and bishopric of St. Domingo, in the N.E. part of the island of Hayti, near the head of Yuna river, which empties into the Bay of Samana. It occupies the site of a city of the same name, ruined by an earthquake in 1564.

VEGA, LOPE FELIX DE VEGA CARPIO, a Spanish poet and dramatist. He exhibited remarkable talents when young, studied at the royal college at Madrid, and became secretary to the duke of Alva, and after the death of his first wife, to whom he was much attached, he served as a soldier in the "invincible armada." On losing his second wife, he took holy orders. Pope Urban VII. created him doctor of divinity, sent him the cross of the order of Malta, and gave him a place in the apostolic exchequer. Throughout the whole of this varied career he continued to exercise his fertile pen. His principal performances are comedies, which were acted with such success at Madrid as to produce the author a considerable fortune. Without taking into account the works which have been lost, or those which remain in manuscript, there exist of his writings 497 plays, and 21 religious poems, besides burlesque poems, epics, novels, and allegories.

Born at Madrid, 1562; died at the same city, 1635.

VEGLIA, vail'-ya, an island in the Adriatic, at the N.W. corner of the Gulf of Quarnero, in the kingdom of Illyria, now belonging to Austria, and included in the government of Trieste, and having S.W. the island of Cherso. It is 23 miles long, by 12 broad, mountainous and sterile in the east and north, but in its other parts generally fertile. Veglia, the capital, stands on its south-west side, and has a small harbour, defended by a castle. Pop. 13,000.

VELASQUEZ, DIEGO RODRIGUEZ DE SILVA Y, ve-las'-kai, a Spanish painter, of Portuguese family. Philip IV. appointed him his first painter, conferred on him the order of knighthood, and granted him a liberal pension. He made two visits to Italy for the purposes of study and collecting works of art for the king, and in 1652 was appointed chief chamberlain. He was equally great as a painter of portraits, historical subjects, and landscapes.

Born at Seville, 1599; died 1660.

VELEZ MALAGA, a city of Spain, province of Malaga, on the Velez, 16 miles E. of Malaga. It stands on the slope of a high hill, amidst vineyards and plantations. There are several churches, and an elegant town-house. Manf. Oil, sugar, soap, cordage, liqueurs, and leather. Pop. 24,332.

VELEZ RUBIO, a town of Spain, province of Almeria, 54 miles N.E. of the city of Almeria. It is walled, and has a fine modern church, a college, and a large foundling-hospital. An annual fair is held. Manf. Woollen goods. Pop. 9,407.

VELLETRI, vel-lai'-tre, a town of Italy, province of Roma, 20 miles S.E. of Rome. There are a fine cathedral, and several palaces. Pop. 3,976.

VELLORE, vel-lor', a town and fortress of British India, in the province of Madras, 79 miles S.W. of Madras. In the public square there is a very fine pagoda. Pop. 37,491. Lat. 12° 55' N. Lon. 79° 11' E.

VENANGO, ve-nan'-go, a county of Pennsylvania, United States. Area, 850 square miles. Pop. 43,670. The capital is Franklin.

VENDÉE, van'-dai, a maritime department in the W. of France, bounded E. by department Deux Sèvres, and W. by the Atlantic. Its surface is almost entirely level, and there are marshes near the coast.

Rivers.—The two Sèvres, Vendée and Autise; Lay, and Vie.
Area.—2,588 square miles.
Pop.—421,642.
Administrative Divisions and Chief Towns.—There are 3 arrondissements and 298 communes. The chief towns are NAPOLEON-VENDÉE, the capital; FONTENAY-LE-COMTE, and SABLES-D'OLONNE.
History.—The Vendean chiefs vigorously resisted the republican armies from 1793 to 1800, when Cadoudal submitted to Napoleon. During the war many cruelties were perpetrated.

VENDÔME, van'-dome, a town of France, department Loir-et-Cher, on the Loir, 18 miles

N.W. of Blois. Manf. Coarse cotton fabrics, hosiery, gloves, and leather. Pop. 10,000.

VENDÔME, LOUIS JOSEPH, Duke de, a French general, who was the son of Alexander, duke de Vendôme, one of the illegitimate sons of Henry IV. At an early age he entered the army as a volunteer under Louis XIV. in Holland, became a general, and was sent to Spain, where he took Barcelona, in 1697. Louis XIV. named him, in 1702, commander-in-chief in Italy, where he gained several victories over the imperialists. In 1705 he defeated Prince Eugene at Cassano, and was on the point of taking Turin, when he was recalled to take the command in Flanders, where he was signally defeated, at Oudenarde, by the Duke of Marlborough. He then went to Spain, restored Philip V. to his capital, and took 4,000 men, under Lord Stanhope, prisoners.

Born 1654; died at Tignaroz, Spain, 1712.

VENEZIA, or VENETIA, ve-ne'-she-a, a compartment of the province of Venice, once part of Lombardo-Venetian kingdom of the Austrian empire (see ITALY), bordering on the Adriatic. Lagoons occupy about one-half of the surface, but between them and the sea are fertile spots.

Rivers.—Adige, Brenta, and Piave.
Area.—850 square miles.
Pop.—365,990.
Chief Town.—VENICE.

VENEZUELA (United States), ven-ez-we'-la, a republic of South America, bounded N. by the Caribbean Sea, S. by Brazil, E. by the Atlantic and British Guiana, and W. by Columbia. The greatest length from east to west is about 900 miles, and breadth from north to south, 770 miles. The coast-line, nearly 2,000 miles long, has many deep indentations, the chief of which are, from west to east, the Gulf of Maracaybo, or Venezuela, between the peninsula of Goajira and Paraguaná, and 6,500 square miles in extent, with a large eastern branch, the Gulf of Coro, forming a large and safe haven; the Gulf of Triste; the Gulf of Cariaco, a narrow inlet, nearly 50 miles long; the Gulf of Paria, 100 miles long and 47 miles wide, to the east of the Isle of Trinidad; and the great estuary of the Orinoco, 65 miles wide at the entrance. The coast is generally rocky, with spurs of the mountain ranges in some parts forming bold headlands, but there are long tracts of low and sandy coast, with mangrove marshes. Off the coast are 71 islands, the largest being Margarita, Chimana, Caraca, Borracha, Tortuga, Orchila, the Roques, Aves, and Blanca. About one-fourth of the surface of the republic is covered with mountains, forming two systems, one belonging to the Colombian Andes, running north and north-east, and attaining an elevation of 5,000 feet; and including the Venezuelan coast-chain, which rises in the Picacho to 9,100 feet, and the Merida range, on which are 31 summits over 10,000 feet in height. The other system, on the south and south-east, is known as the Parima mountains, which reach nearly 8,000 feet, and there are several isolated peaks, especially the Duida, near the upper waters of the Orinoco, 8,285 feet high. The climate is intensely hot and unhealthy in the low coast regions, but temperate, and even cold, in the more elevated districts. The dry season extends from November to April. Earthquakes are frequent and often very disastrous. The soil, except in the sandy regions of the coast, is very fertile; the lower districts abounding in palms. There are immense forests, especially of cinchona, in the elevated parts. All tropical produce is abundant. There are many wild animals, including the panther and jaguar; monkeys, venomous snakes, enormous spiders and centipedes, and blood-sucking bats, of great size, abound.

Rivers and Lakes.—The ORINOCO, flowing through the centre of the country; Rio Negro, Cassiaquiare, Tuy, Tocuyo, and Unare are the largest, but there are altogether more than 1,000 streams. There are over 200 lakes and lagoons, the principal lake being that of Valencia, or Tacarigua, 1,600 feet above the sea level, containing a large number of islands. The chief lagoons are Maracaybo, nearly 100 miles long and 75 wide; Unare, Encantada, Gacasonica, Lagunillas, Palmananita, and Taiguaiguai.

Minerals.—Gold, silver, copper, tin, zinc, lead, iron, quicksilver, antimony, marble, gypsum, alum, saltpetre, sulphur, and petroleum.

Area.—403,260 square miles.

Pop.—2,075,000, about 18,000 being whites, 10,000 foreigners, 52,000 pure blooded Indians, and the remainder half breeds and hybrids.

Administrative Divisions.—There are 20 states, 1 federal district, and 1 territory:—Apure, Barcelona, Barquisimeto, Bolivar, Carabobo, Cojedes, Coro, Cumaná, Guárico, Guayana, Guzman Blanco, Maturin, Mérida, Nueva Esparta, Portuguesa, Táchera, Trujillo, Yaracui, Zamora, and Zulia; the federal district and the territory of Amazonas.

Chief Towns.—CARACAS, the capital; BARQUISIMETO, MATURIN, MARACAYBO, and VALENCIA.

Constitution and Government.—Each state has its own legislature and executive. At the head of the central executive government stands a president, elected for the term of two years, with a vice-president, and exercising his functions through six ministers. The legislation for the whole republic is vested in a congress of two houses, called the senate and the house of representatives, both composed of members deputed by the same bodies in the individual states. The president, vice-president, and congresses of states are elected by universal suffrage.

Religion and Education.—The religion of the people is Roman Catholic; but all religions are tolerated, and the clergy are strictly subordinate to the civil power. Primary education is gratuitous and compulsory, and there are about 540 primary schools, and a university at Caracas.

History.—From 1819 to 1830, Venezuela was a portion of the republic of Colombia. A new constitution was then proclaimed. The republic was harassed by civil wars, and struggles of political rivals for power, till 1869, when Guzman Blanco established himself as president, and since then the republic has been peaceful and prosperous.

VENICE (Ital. VENEZIA), ven'-is, a city and seaport of Italy, capital of the province of the same name, on the western side of the Gulf of Venice, 155 miles E. of Milan. No city in the world occupies so remarkable a situation, and, Rome excepted, no city of Italy is so famous. It is built on about 80 small islands in a lagoon formed by the retreating of the sea. A strip of land, known as the Lido, extends northwards, at a distance of about four miles from the mainland, enclosing the lagoon and islands; and has a number of openings, giving access to the sea. Communication between Venice and the mainland is afforded by a viaduct, with a railway two miles long, with more than 200 arches. On the south side of the city is a broad canal, Della Giudecca, opening out the canal Di San Marco, and so communicating with the sea, and dividing the city proper from the suburb of Giudecca (a long narrow island) and the smaller island of San Giorgio. The north-western limit of the city is marked by the canal Della Fondamente. The city proper is nearly triangular in shape, more than 2½ miles long and 1½ mile wide, protected at the eastern extremity by the Castle of San Pietro, on a small island formed by the canal Di Castello. The approaches to the city are guarded by strong fortifications. The Grand Canal, or Canallazzo, has a serpentine course, and divides the city into two portions. The breadth varies from 100 to 180 feet, and both sides are lined by magnificent buildings, close to the water's edge, giving easy access to the gondolas, which are the chief means of conveyance.

The canal is spanned, near the centre of the city, by the famous Rialto (rivo alto, "deep stream"), built about 1590, with a single arch, 90 feet in span; by two iron bridges, built in 1854 and 1858. There are more than 100 smaller canals, crossed by about 400 bridges, generally steep, so as to allow of the passage of gondolas, and ascended by flights of steps. There are a number of narrow alleys, few being 6 feet wide, to which most of the large houses have back entrances. The only thoroughfare available for vehicles is the Merceria, near the centre of the city, and which has good shops and commercial establishments; and the largest open spaces are the Piazza of San Marco, or Place of St. Mark, 570 feet long, and 185 to 270 feet wide, from which the piazzetta of the same name opens to the principal molo, or quay, on the canal Di San Marco, where are two fine granite columns, one surmounted by a bronze figure of the winged lion of St. Mark, and the other by a statue of St. Theodore. The piazza is bordered by arcades, with handsome shops, and contains some of the finest buildings in the city, mentioned below. The larger houses are generally of a square form, with an interior court, in which is a cistern for rain water, which forms the main supply of the city, and, in addition to private, is collected by 160 public cisterns.

Public Buildings.—Palaces—The Palazzo di San Marco, or doge's palace, forms the eastern side of the Piazzetta, with a frontage to the quay near the entrance of the Grand Canal. It was rebuilt on the site of an older edifice, by Marino Faliери, about the middle of the 14th century, and has been considerably added to and altered at later periods. The general style of the architecture is Venetian Gothic, and in the interior are a number of beautiful halls, some now used as government offices, and the hall of the great council, 175 feet long and 85 wide, adorned with paintings, and now used as a museum and library. The cells in the basement and at the top of the palace, "under the leads," where so many political prisoners suffered, still remain; and the famous "bridge of sighs," over a narrow canal, connects the palace with the public prison built by Da Ponte, in 1589. The Palazza Reale, or "royal palace" of Eugene Beauharnais, formerly the palace of the great judicial dignitaries of the republic, standing on 50 arches, occupies the north side of the Piazza San Marco. The Palazzo de' Camerlenghi (now the tribunal of appeal) is near the Rialto bridge. The Palazzo Grimani is now the post office, and the Casa d'Oro, Foscari, Pisani, Manfrini, and Trevisano, are other fine palaces. Churches—The most important church is San Marco, formerly the ducal chapel, and raised to the dignity of a cathedral in 1817, but now superseded by the cathedral of San Pietro de Castello, on the island of Castello. The foundations of San Marco were laid in 977, and pillars and marble were brought from the East. It is in the Byzantine style, in the form of a Greek cross, with the addition of large porticos. It has five domes, the central one 90 and the others 80 feet high, and the principal front, 170 feet wide, has 500 columns. Over the central portal are the famous bronze horses brought from Constantinople. The nave is 245 feet and the transept 201 feet in length. The interior decorations, with mosaics and tesselated marbles, are very rich. Other churches, interesting from their beauty of architecture, and the valuable paintings by Titian and other great artists, are Santi Giovanni e Paolo, containing the monuments of many doges; Santa Maria Gloriosa de' Frari, La Madonna dell' Orto, Santa Maria della Salute, San Salvatore, San Francisco della Vigna, and Il Santissimo Redentore (Palladio's masterpiece). There are altogether about 100 churches and several synagogues. At the south-western angle of the Piazza San Marco is the Campanile, or bell-tower of San Marco, built of brick, with a pyramidal apex, and 323 feet high. Among the other interesting buildings are the Dogana (custom-house), the Zecca (mint), the academy of painting (Convento della Carita), and public library; San Marco, San Rocce, and other charitable institutions; 6 theatres, the largest of which, La Venice, will accommodate 3,000 persons; museum, lyceum, and several gymnasiums. The large arsenal and dockyard, surrounded by a lofty wall, are at the east end of the city.

Manf.—Brocaded tapestry, imitations of antique furniture, machinery, iron and bronze work, gold and silver ware, optical instruments, mosaics, coloured glass, mirrors, velvet, silk hosiery, and jewellery.

Pop.—127,355.

Lat. 45° 26′ N. Lon. 12° 20′ E.

History.—The foundation of Venice was laid in 421, as a place of refuge during the invasion of Italy by Attila. The government was at first a democracy; but, towards the middle of the 13th century (about 1247), it became a settled aristocracy. From the 9th till the 16th century, it was the greatest and most splendid commercial city of Europe, and enjoyed many privileges. Venice was overturned in 1797. It remained subject to Austria till 1805, when, after the battle of Austerlitz, it was annexed to the French kingdom of Italy. In 1814, however, it returned under the power of Austria. In 1866 it was annexed to the kingdom of Italy.

VENUS, vé-nus, in Roman mythology, the goddess of beauty and love. Her worship was very general. (See APHRODITE.)

VERA CRUZ, vaï-ra kroos, a state of the republic of Mexico, bounded N. and N.W. by Tamaulipas, and San Luis Potosi, W. by Puebla and Hidalgo, and E. by the Gulf of Mexico, Tabasco, and Chiapas. It is traversed by the Sierra Madre, and is generally mountainous, except a sandy strip of coast, about 30 miles wide. There are several very lofty volcanoes, the highest being the snow-capped Orizaba, or "stor mountain," 17,176 feet high, on the borders of Puebla; on the coast are several large lagoons. In the interior the soil is very fertile; but the climate varies greatly according to elevation, and the vegetation ranges from tropical to almost arctic productions; coffee, sugar, cotton, and tobacco, are successfully cultivated. Yellow fever prevails on the coast from May to November.

Rivers.—The Panuco, Alvarado, and Coatzacoalcos, the mouths of all of which are obstructed by sand bars.

Minerals.—Gold, copper, lead, and iron.

Area.—27,423 square miles.

Pop.—582,441.

Divisions and Chief Towns.—There are 18 departments. The chief towns are JALAPA (the capital), and Vera Cruz.

VERA CRUZ, the chief seaport of Mexico, in the above state. It fronts the sea in a semicircle, is enclosed with a low wall, and is defended by two redoubts. Opposite the town is an islet, on which stands the castle of St. Juan d'Ulloa, strongly fortified, and having a lighthouse 79 feet above the level of the sea. The city is regularly built, and the public buildings are good. The harbour is merely an open roadstead, but a mole was built in 1875. Cochineal, sugar, bullion, indigo, drugs, provisions, vanilla, logwood, caoutchouc, and pimento. Pop. about 24,000. Lat. 19° 12′ N. Lon. 96° 8′ W.—Vera Cruz was raised to the dignity of a city by Philip III. of Spain in 1615. It was bombarded and taken by the army of the United States in 1847, surrendered to the allied British, French, and Spanish squadrons in 1861, and was restored to Mexico in 1867.

VERAGUA, ve-rag'-wa, a province of Colombia, Central America. Area and Pop. Unascertained.

VERA PAZ, a province of Guatemala, Central America. Area, 3,600 square miles. Pop. 66,000. The capital is Vera Paz. (See COBAN.)

VERCELLI, ver-chel'-le, a town of northern Italy, at the confluence of the rivers Cervo and Sesia, 14 miles from Casale. It is enclosed by boulevards, which have replaced its old fortifications. The cathedral, in the Italian style, built in the 16th century, is one of the best in Piedmont, and there are several other fine churches and a palace. Manf. Silk and woollen fabrics. Pop. 28,252.

VERCHÈRES, vair-shair', a county of Quebec province, dominion of Canada. Area, 195 square miles. Pop. 13,000, nearly all of French descent. The capital is Verchères.

VERDI, GIUSEPPE, vair'-de, an Italian musical composer, who studied his art at Milan, and in 1839 produced his first work. It was not, however, until he gave to the public his "Nabuco" in 1842, that he acquired a name as a musical writer. He has produced a large number of popular works; his operas of "Rigoletto," "Trovatore," "Traviata," &c., being constantly played.

Born at Busseto, Parma, 1814.

VERDUN, vair'-du(r), a town of France, department Meuse, 130 miles N.E. of Paris, on the Meuse. It is strongly fortified, and has a cathedral, a bishop's palace, a military hospital, a communal college, and public library. Manf. Woollen and linen goods, leather and wooden wares. It also has distilleries and breweries. Pop. 16,000.—This place was, in 1792, taken by the Prussians, but restored to the French after the battle of Valmy. In 1870, it surrendered to the Germans after a month's siege.

VERGIL, POLYDORE, ver'-jil, an English historian of Italian birth. In 1501 he was sent by pope Alexander VI. to England as collector of Peter's pence. Henry VIII. was so pleased with his wit and address, that he gave him the archdeaconry of Wells. He was subsequently prebendary of Hereford, Lincoln, and London; remaining in England nearly 50 years, after which he returned to Italy. His principal works are, "De Inventoribus Rerum," "Treatise on Prodigies," "Adagia, or Proverbs," and a history of England, in Latin, which, however, is more elegant than faithful.

Born at Urbino, about 1470; died there, 1555.

VERGNIAUD, PIERRE VICTURNIEN, vairn'-ye-o, a French revolutionist, who practised successfully at the bar at Bordeaux, and was elected to the legislative assembly in 1791, of which he became president, and in that capacity pronounced sentence on the king. He was afterwards the most eloquent leader of the Girondists, and energetically opposed Robespierre and the ultra-revolutionists, who procured his death by the guillotine.

Born at Limoges, 1759; died 1793.

VERIA, or VERRIA, vair'-e-a, a town of European Turkey, in Macedonia, a few miles from the coast of the Gulf of Salonica. Manf. Cotton goods, thread, and dyeing. Pop. 10,000, mostly Greeks.—This is the ancient Berœa.

VERMIGLI, PIETRO MARTIRE, vair-meel'-ye, commonly known as "Peter Martyr," an Italian reformer. At an early age he entered the Augustan order, and became prior of Lucca; but having adopted the Protestant doctrines, was compelled to fly to Switzerland, and was soon afterwards appointed professor of divinity at Strasburg. In 1547 he accepted an invitation from Cranmer to visit England, and was appointed lecturer at Oxford; but on the accession of Mary he returned to Strasburg, and in 1556 became professor of theology at Zurich. He was one of the most learned men of the Reformed Church, and the author of many theological works.

Born at Florence, 1500; died 1562.

VERMILION, ver-mil'-i-on, the name of three counties of the United States:—

ILLINOIS.—Area, 1,200 square miles. Pop. 41,588. The capital is Danville.

INDIANA.—Area, 290 square miles. Pop. 12,000. The capital is Newport.

LOUISIANA.—Area, 1,400 square miles. Pop. 8,795, nearly one-fourth being coloured. The capital is Abbeville.

VERMONT, ver-mont', one of the United States, situate in the north part of the Union, having Canada on the N., Massachusetts on the S., New York and Lake Champlain on the W., and New Hampshire on the E. (several islands in Lake Champlain belong to the state). The Green Mountains, which give name to the state, from 10 to 15 miles in breadth, traverse its whole length, beginning in Canada, thence extending through the states of Vermont, Massachusetts, and Connecticut, and terminating within a few miles of the sea-coast. They have rounded grassy summits, and are intersected by numerous valleys, the soil of which is deep, rich, and loamy. Adjoining the rivers are fine plains and meadows; and between the banks of Lake Champlain and the mountains is a valuable tract of arable land, extending 100 miles in length and 30 in breadth. The state abounds in beautiful waterfalls and caves, and there is a remarkable natural bridge. The climate is healthy, but subject to great extremes of heat and cold. The snow lies from the middle of December to the middle of March; during which period it is customary to travel in sledges. The weather during this season is generally fair and constant, and rain seldom falls, though hail is not unfrequent.

Rivers and Lakes.—The Connecticut forms the boundary between Vermont and New Hampshire, and its chief affluents in the eastern part of Vermont are the Passumpsic, Wells, White, Black, West, and Deerfield. The rivers on the west side of the state mostly discharge into Lake Champlain, the principal being Otter creek, Winooski (or Onion), Lamoille, and Missisquoi. There are numerous small lakes.

Minerals.—Iron, argentiferous lead, copper, marble of very beautiful quality, slate, and potters' clay.

Area.—10,212 square miles.

Pop.—332,500, about 1,000 being coloured. In respect of population, this ranks low by comparison.

Divisions and Chief Towns.—There are 14 counties. The state capital is MONTPELIER, and other important towns are Bennington, Brandon, Battleboro, Castleton, Colchester, Fairhaven, Middlebury, Northfield, Rockingham, Rutland, St. Albans, Springfield, Windsor, and Woodstock.

History.—The first settlement was made in 1724. As population increased the territory was claimed by the state of New Hampshire, and a long contest ensued between that state and New York, suspended by the outbreak of the great war of the revolution. In 1791, Vermont was admitted into the Union.

VERNET, HORACE, a French painter, and son of Carlo Vernet, a painter of eminence. In his early youth Paris was in a state of revolution, and, art finding few patrons, his father's circumstances were so straitened that Horace had, while still a child, to assist in eking out the family income by making small drawings for tradesmen's invoices, fashion-books, &c. After serving for a short time in the ranks of the French army, he entered upon the task of representing on canvas incidents of military life, and he went on increasing in skill and popularity until 1819, when he produced his "Massacre of the Mamelukes," which placed him at the head of his particular walk in the artistic profession. Charles X. nominated him an officer of the legion of honour, and, after the revolution of 1830, he became a favourite painter with Louis Philippe, who commissioned him to adorn the Constantine Gallery and the Gallery of French History at Versailles, with a number of battle-pieces, illustrative of the Algerine campaigns, and of the other triumphs of the French army. In 1842 he was created a commander of the legion of honour, having previously refused to be elevated to the rank of a baron.

Born at Paris, 1789; died there, 1863.

VERNON, ver'-non, the name of three counties of the United States:—

LOUISIANA.—Area, 1,450 square miles. Pop. 5,160, about 420 being coloured. The capital is Leesville.

MISSOURI.—Area, 700 square miles. Pop. 10,369. The capital is Nevada.

WISCONSIN.—Area, 800 square miles. Pop. 23,235. The capital is Viroqua.

VERNON, EDWARD, an English admiral, who in 1739 captured Porto Bello, and in 1741 attacked Cartagena with a large force, but was unsuccessful. He was elected to Parliament for Penrhyn in 1727, and made himself prominent by his opposition to miuisters, which gained him great popularity, and in 1741 he was simultaneously returned for Penrhyn, Rochester, and Ipswich, electing to sit for the latter, for which he was twice afterwards elected.

Born at Westminster, 1684; died in Suffolk, 1757.

VERNON, vair-nawn(g)', a town of France, department Eure, on the right bank of the Seine, 15 miles N.E. of Evreux. There are a handsome and ancient Gothic church, a tall tower of great historical interest, and many ancient timber-framed houses. Pop. 7,800.

VERONA, ve-ro'-na, a north-eastern province of Italy, bordering on Tyrol, and separated from Brescia by the Mincio and the Lake of Garda. The northern part is mountainous, the other parts level or undulating. There are marshes in the south, but the soil is generally fertile, and there is rich pasturage.

Rivers.—The Adige, flowing through the centre of the province.

Area.—1,061 square miles.

Pop.—407,388.

Chief Towns.—VERONA (the capital), LEGNAGO, and VILLAFRANCA.

VERONA, a city of Italy, capital of the above province, at the foot of the Tyrolese Alps, on both sides of the Adige, 62 miles W. of Venice, beautifully situated. It is surrounded by lofty walls with towers and bastions, and is entered by five gates, two of which, the Porta del Palio and the Porta Nuova, are remains of the older fortifications, partially destroyed by the French after the peace of Luneville in 1801. The river,—crossed by four fine bridges (the Ponte de Castel Vecchio, Ponte della Pietra, Ponte Nuovo, and Ponte della Navi), and below the town by a railway bridge,—winds through the town, forming a peninsula, nearly triangular in form, on which the larger portion of the town is built. Some of the principal streets, especially the Corso, are noble avenues, lined by splendid mansions with marble decorations, and there are several fine squares, the chief being the Piazza dei Signori, the Piazza Bra, the Piazza del Erbe, and the Mercato Vecchio (old market). Of the 48 churches, the most conspicuous is the cathedral of Santa Maria Matriculare, a magnificent specimen of the Lombardo-Romanesque style, at the northern end of the city, on the bank of the river. It was rebuilt in the 12th century, and has several beautiful chapels and monuments, an important library, and Titian's famous picture, "the Assumption." Other fine churches are Santa Anastasia, in the Gothic style; San Zenone, with a magnificent portal and lofty bell tower; San Fermo Maggiore, built in the 8th century and having interesting monuments; San Sebastiano, San Giovanni in Valle, and San Giorgio, beyond the river, opposite the cathedral. There are several noble palaces, and the Palazzo del Consiglio, in the Piazza dei Signori, has busts of distinguished natives of the town. In the same square is the palace of the Scala family (supreme in Verona in the 13th and 14th centuries), now occupied by the local authorities; and near it are the tombs of the family. The bishop's palace was restored in the 14th century. A striking edifice is the old Roman amphitheatre in the Piazza Bra. It is in a remarkable state of preservation, with an arena 248 feet long, and capable of accommodating 22,000 spectators. The interior is now used as a circus, and the arcades are occupied by shops. Among other Roman remains are fragments of a theatre and a triumphal arch. The Castello Vecchio is a massive structure, on the left bank of the river. Among the artistic and educational establishments are a museum, a fine picture gallery, academy of painting and sculpture, theatre, opera-house, lyceum, and ecclesiastical seminary. In the Piazza dei Signori are a statue of Dante, created in 1865, and a noble bell tower, 300 feet high. Verona is associated with the poetry of Dante, Petrarch, and Shakspeare, and a tomb is shown in the garden of the foundling hospital, in the southern part of the city, as that of Juliet, but the original was destroyed long since. A large area, the Piazza d'Armi, used for military purposes, is in the southern part of that portion of the city, on the left bank of the river, and near it is a large and picturesque cemetery. Manf. Silk, woollen, linen, and other goods. A large general trade is carried on. Pop. 66,000.—The date of the foundation of Verona is not known; but Julius Cæsar established a colony here. On the decline of the empire, it experienced the fate of the other towns in the north of Italy. In 1814, on the overthrow of Napoleon I., it fell into the hands of Austria, and in 1822, a congress was held in it. In 1866 it was incorporated with the kingdom of Italy.

VERONESE, PAUL CAGLIARI, surnamed ver-o-nai'-sai, Italian painter, who was the son of a sculptor. His genius for the art in which he subsequently excelled was manifested at an early age. He took Titian and Tintoretto as his models, emulating the fine design and composition of the first, with the gorgeous colouring of the latter. Finding himself unappreciated at Verona, he took up his residence at Venice, which city he embellished with a series of master-pieces.

Born at Verona, 1532; died 1588.

VERRES, ver'-res, a Roman governor of Sicily, who desolated the province by his rapacity, and was prosecuted by Cicero, who made one of his most famous orations. Before the trial was over, Verres fled to Massilia, where he remained in exile for 27 years. He was put to death by the proscription of Antony.

Died 43 B.C.

VERRIO, ANTONIO, vair'-re-o, an Italian painter, who was invited to England by Charles II., and employed upon the decorations of Windsor Castle. Nearly all the ceilings, and a side of St. George's Hall, were executed by him; but most of his designs have been removed. He subsequently painted for James II. and William III.

Born about 1639; died at Hampton Court, 1707.

VERSAILLES, vair-saye', a city of France, capital of the department Seine-et-Oise, and the seat of the French senate and assembly, 10 miles S.W. of Paris. The streets are regularly planned, and the main thoroughfares are the avenues of Paris, St. Cloud, and Sceaux,—the Place d'Armes, and the boulevard de la Reine. In 1666 Versailles was little more than a village, with a hunting-lodge for the royal family, when Louis XIV., pleased with the situation, and desirous of residing out of Paris, erected a splendid palace, which, from 1672 to 1790, was the residence of the kings of France. It was restored during the reign of Louis Philippe. The splendid galleries contain a series of paintings and statues arranged in chronological order, and the marble court is 105 feet long and 79 feet high. It is approached by three great avenues, each lined with a double row of trees. In connection with it are an orangery, flower gardens, and a park, in which are a beautiful series of fountains, and at the extremity of the park are two palaces, called the Great and Little Trianon. The old town contains the principal church and the greater proportion of elegant buildings. The principal structures are the churches of Notre Dame and St. Louis, and there is an English chapel. There are, besides, a lyceum, military hospital, and large barracks. Manf. Firearms, clocks, and watches. Spinning and weaving of cotton, as well as the bleaching of linen, are pursued on a small scale. Pop. 28,324.—This city has been the scene of many treaties; among them the one which, in 1783, recognised the independence of America. Here, also, the famous oath termed the Jeu de Paume was taken, in 1789, by the members of the National Assembly. During the Franco-German war of 1870, Versailles was the head-quarters of the Germans, and after the preliminary treaty of peace, the National Assembly and seat of government were transferred hither from Bordeaux. The constitutional provisions of February, 1875, made it the legal capital of France.

VERSETZ, or VERSECZ, ver-sets', a fortified town of Hungary, 40 miles S. of Temesvar. It has an elegant Greek church. Wine, rice, and silk are cultivated in the environs. Manf. Silk. Pop. 19,000.

VERVICK, or WERICQ, vair'-vik, a frontier town of Belgium, in W. Flanders, on the Lys, 9 miles from Ypres. Pop. 6,000.

VERVIERS, ver'-ve-a, a town of Belgium, province of Liege, and 14 miles S.E. of the city of that name, on the Vesdre, near the Prussian frontier. There are three fine churches, and a town-hall. Manf. Cloth, very extensive. Pop. 44,667.

VESALIUS, ANDREAS, ve-sai'-li-us, a Flemish physician, who studied at Paris, and was successively professor of anatomy at Pavia, Bologna, and Pisa. The emperors Charles V. and Philip II. of Spain appointed him their chief physician; but, about 1564, for some reason not satisfactorily explained, he suddenly went on a pilgrimage to the Holy Land. On his return, his ship was lost on the island of Zante, where he perished either of starvation or fatigue. His great works upon medicine inaugurated a new era in the healing art.

Born at Brussels, 1514; died 1564.

VESOUL, ve-zool', a town of France, department Haute-Saône, at the junction of the Colombine and the Durgeon, 190 miles S.E. of Paris. There are a modern church, a museum, lyceum, and public library. In the vicinity are iron-works, and a mineral spring. Manf. Cotton and silk goods and turned-ware. Pop. 7,500.

VESPASIAN, TITUS FLAVIUS SABINUS, ves-pai'-si-an, a Roman emperor. He rose entirely by his merit; and, having distinguished himself in Germany, as proconsul in Africa, and in Britain under Claudius, was rewarded with the consular dignity for his public services. Nero appointed him commander of three legions, with which he in two years subdued the revolted Jews. On the death of Vitellius in 69, he was proclaimed emperor by his army, and the choice was approved by the senate and the people. He reformed the abuses which prevailed in all departments of the state, introduced excellent regulations for the correction of public morals, embellished Rome with many fine structures,—among others, that of the amphitheatre, since known as the Coliseum, and fortified the cities of the empire. He was also a patron of men of learning, and discountenanced vice and immorality.

Born near Reate, in the Sabine country, 9; died 79.

VESPUCCI, AMERIGO, ves-poo'-che, an Italian navigator, who, according to an account first published in Lorraine in 1507, went upon four voyages; two at the command of the king of Castile, and two at that of the Portuguese monarch. This narrative, which was produced without his concurrence, declared that, in his first voyage, made in 1497, he discovered the northern shores of South America; but Humboldt proves this date to be a mistake for 1499; also, that, as Columbus had reached the mouth of the Orinoco in 1498, he was in reality the discoverer. (See AMERICA.) He subsequently became pilot-major of the Spanish navy, and remained the friend of Columbus until the death of that great navigator.

Born at Florence, 1451; died at Seville, 1512.

VESTA, ves'-ta, in Roman mythology, the goddess of fire, the protectress of the State, and the patroness of the vestal virgins.

VESTRIS, GAETANO APOLLINO BALTHAZAR, ves'-tris, a celebrated Italian dancer, who became the greatest performer of his day, and was surnamed "the god of dancing." His vanity was even greater than his reputation. He was in the habit of saying, "There are only three great men in Europe: myself, Voltaire, and the king of Prussia" (Frederick II.). His natural son, Marie Augustin Vestris, also became celebrated as a dancer. The English actress, Madame Vestris, was connected with this family by marriage.

Born at Florence, 1729; died 1808.

VESUVIUS, MOUNT, ve-su'-vi-us, a volcanic mountain of Italy, about 8 miles S.E. of Naples, famous for its eruptions. It rises in a gentle swell from the Bay of Naples, to an elevation of nearly 3,950 feet, but varying after eruptions. The summit is in the form of a cone, and consists of masses of burned earth, ashes, and sand, thrown out in the course of ages by the volcano. The crater is nearly a mile and a half in circumference, but has not above 350 feet of depth or of descent from the ridge. The most distinguished eruptions of Vesuvius occurred in 79, when the old Roman towns, Pompeii and Herculaneum, were destroyed; 472, 1779, 1794, 1822, 1834, 1855, 1860, 1868, and 1872.

VESZPRIM, vess'-prim, a town of Hungary, on the Sed, 60 miles S.W. of Buda. It has a fine cathedral and episcopal palace. A good trade is carried on. Pop. 12,000.

VEVAY, vev-ai', a town of Switzerland, canton Vaud, on the north-east shore of the Lake of Geneva, 10 miles S.E. of Lausanne. In the church of St. Martin are the tombs of the English regicides Broughton and Ludlow, who died here in exile. The other principal church is St. Clara's, and there is an English chapel. A marble bridge spans the gorge of the Veveyse. An active transit trade is carried on. Pop. 8,000, principally Protestants.

VIADANA, ve-a-da'-na, a town of Lombardy, on the Po, 22 miles from Mantua. Pop. 16,000.

VIANA, ve-a'-na, a town of Portugal, in the province of Minho, on the Lima, 37 miles from Oporto. It is inclosed by walls surmounted by turrets, and its harbour is defended by batteries. Pop. 8,200, engaged in trade and fishing.—This place surrendered to Admiral Sir Charles Napier in the revolution which deprived Don Miguel of the throne.

VIARDOT, LOUIS, ve-ar'-do, a modern French littérateur, who was educated for the legal profession, but relinquished it for literature. In 1838 he was appointed a director at the Italian Opera-house of Paris. He married the eminent vocalist, Pauline Garcia, sister of Malibran, and accompanied her in her professional visits to Spain, Germany, and England. His principal works were "Studies in the History, Administration, and Literature of Spain;" "The Museums of Spain, England, and Belgium;" and "History of the Moors in Spain." He also translated some of the works of the Russian authors, Nicholas Gogol and Alexander Pushkin, into French.

Born at Dijon, 1800.

VIAREGGIO, ve-a-red'-jo, a seaport of Italy, 12 miles N.W. of Pisa. One of the churches is very handsome and large. It has an export trade in statuary marble. The town is much frequented as a bathing place. Pop. 12,000.

VIATKA, ve-at'-ka, a government of European Russia in Eastern Russia. In the east it is covered by branches of the Ural Mountains; in its other parts it is mostly undulating and level. There are extensive forests. The climate is severe.

Rivers.—The Kama, an affluent of the Vosga, and its tributaries, the Viatka, Kilmez, and Tcheptza.
Minerals.—Iron and copper.
Area.—59,114 square miles.
Pop.—2,740,953, including Tartar tribes and about 50,000 Mahometans.

VIATKA, the capital of the above government, is situate on the Viatka, 105 miles N.E. of Kazan. There are a fine cathedral, and many other churches. Manf. Woollens, and silver and copper articles. Pop. 20,000.

VIAZMA, or WIASMA, ve-az'-ma, a town of Russia, government of Smolensk, 97 miles E. of the city of Smolensk. It is surrounded by walls, has 32 churches, and is built almost entirely of wood. Manf. Leather and gingerbread. Pop. 11,000.

VIBORG, vi'-borg, an ancient city and important military position of Denmark, province of North Jutland. There is a large cathedral, begun in the 12th century. Pop. 5,000.

VIBORG, a town of European Russia, in Finland, on a deep inlet of the Gulf of Finland. Pop. of the gov., 313,465; of the town, 10,000.

VICENZA, ve-chen'-za, a north-east province of Italy, bordering on Tyrol. In the north it is traversed by branches of the Alps, but is level or undulating in the south. There are extensive forests, furnishing valuable timber, and chestnuts, largely used for food. Several coal-mines are worked.

Rivers.—The most important are the Bacchiglione and Brenta.
Area.—1,016 square miles.
Pop.—413,371.
Chief Towns.—VICENZA (the capital), and BASSANO.

VICENZA, a city of Italy, capital of the above province, beautifully situated in a hilly region, at the junction of the Bacchiglione and Retrone, 37 miles N.W. of Venice. The river is crossed by eight bridges, the finest of which was built by Palladio, a native of the town, and who erected many of the finest public and private edifices, among them the town-hall and the prefecture. The finest square is the Piazza dei Signori, in which are two handsome columns. In the market-place is a remarkable belfry, 270 feet high. The city is still partially surrounded by dilapidated walls, but the old moats are now drained, and under cultivation. The cathedral, originally Gothic, but injured by modern alterations; the Dominican church, and the churches of San Pietro and Santa-Corona, are among the finest of the ecclesiastical edifices, and there are 16 other churches. Other noticeable edifices are the Palazzo-della-Rigione, an ancient Gothic building; the Palazzo-Prefetizzio, in the Corinthian style; and the Teatro-Olimpico, begun by Palladio, and completed by his son. There are also a museum, picture-gallery, lyceum, college, episcopal palace, and several educational institutions. The railway-station is in the Campo Marzio, which contains a triumphal arch. Palladio's villa, considered to be one of the finest buildings of the style in existence, is a little beyond the walls, near the Lupia gate. Manf. Silk, woollen, and linen goods; leather, articles in gold and silver, and earthenware. Pop. 38,000.—Vicenza was a Roman station, and suffered greatly on the irruption of the northern tribes. It was successively pillaged by Alaric, Attila, the Lombards, and the emperor Frederick II. In the early part of the 15th century it came into the possession of the Venetians, who held it until 1796, when it became the scene of sanguinary conflicts between the French and Austrians. In 1815 it was annexed to Austria. A splendid memorial, with statue of King Victor Emmanuel, was inaugurated in November, 1880.

VICH, veek, a city of Spain, province of Barcelona, 36 miles from Barcelona. It has a cathedral built in the 11th century, and some curious specimens of the architecture of the Middle Ages, and was the metropolitan see of Catalonia. Manf. Linens, coarse woollen fabrics, and printed cottons. Pop. 12,478.

VICHY, veesh'-e, a town and watering-place of France, department Allier, on the right bank of the Allier, crossed by a suspension-bridge, 30 miles S. of Moulins. It consists of an old and a new town, Vichy-la-Ville and Vichy-les-Bains. The buildings are commodious and elegant, and there are a casino and two parks. There are eight principal alkaline springs, and in the season, between May and October, there are as many as 15,000 visitors. Pop. 6,100.

VICKSBURG, vicks'-burg, a city and port of entry of Mississippi, United States, and state capital, on the east bank of the Mississippi, 45 miles W. of Jackson, in the centre of a rich, cotton-growing region. The site rises in terraces from the river, and the streets are narrow, but irregularly laid out. The court-house is a magnificent building. Manf. Cotton-seed, oil, machinery, railway rolling-stock, carriages, saddlery, and harness. Pop. 11,814. 7,000 being coloured and 1,500 foreigners.—The city figured conspicuously in the war of separation, being held by the Confederates, and besieged by General Grant for more than six months, surrendering in July, 1863.

VICTOR I., ST., vik'-tor, Pope, a native of Africa, elected 185. During his pontificate the date of Easter was settled. He was martyred in the persecution under Severus.

Died 197.

VICTOR II. (GEBHARD), Bishop of Eichstadt, succeeded Leo IX. in 1055. He was an active reformer of abuses in the church, and convoked five councils.

Died 1057.

VICTOR III. (DIDIER), elected in 1086; but was compelled to leave Rome, the emperor Henry IV. supporting the anti-pope Guibert, and retired to Monte Casino, where he died.

Born 1027; died 1087.

VICTOR IV., an anti-pope, whose usurpation was supported by Frederick I. and some of the cardinals. This gave rise to a schism in the Romish church.

Died 1164.

VICTOR, CLAUDE PERRIN, Duke of Belluno, and marshal of France. He enlisted as a private soldier in 1781, and having risen to the rank of general of brigade, he was sent to the army of the Eastern Pyrenees. Attracting the notice of Bonaparte he was appointed second in command to Lannes in the campaign in the Papal States. His next important command was in La Vendée, which country he succeeded in restoring to tranquillity. Recalled to the army of Italy, he gained fresh renown by his conduct while covering the retreat of the French army of Naples at Marengo and at Bassano. At the peace of Amiens he was appointed by Napoleon ambassador to the court of Denmark; but upon the commencement of the war with Prussia, in 1806, he was recalled to his military duties. At Jena he particularly distinguished himself, as also at Pultusk; while at the battle of Friedland his valour was so conspicuous, that Napoleon created him, upon the spot, marshal of France. In 1807 he held the governorship of Berlin. In the following year he was sent to Spain in command of the first corps of the French army, and, after twice defeating the Spaniards, was sent to co-operate with Soult in Portugal. He, however, suffered a defeat at Talavera, and, in 1812, was recalled from the Peninsula to take a command in the grand army about to invade Russia. In that terrible campaign his valour and ability were conspicuous. During the campaign of 1813 he evinced his accustomed bravery and skill in checking, as far as possible, the advance of the allies into France; but having failed to dislodge the enemy at Montereau, he incurred the displeasure of the emperor, who took from him his command. This act of injustice deeply moved the brave marshal, who declared that he would not quit the army, and, as he had already served as a private soldier, he would again take his place in the ranks. Napoleon, appreciating his fidelity, gave him the command of a portion of the guard, with which he fought, with the most stubborn courage, at the battle of Craonne, and was carried off the field severely wounded. After the abdication of the emperor, he gave his adherence to the Bourbons, and was appointed to a command, and after the return from Elba, retired, with Louis XVIII., to Ghent. In 1821 he became minister of war, and, in 1823, acted as second in command in the Spanish campaign. After the revolution of 1830 he became one of the leaders of the legitimist party; but took little part in public affairs.

Born 1764; died 1841.

VICTOR-AMADEUS I., am-a-de'-us, Duke of Savoy, succeeded his father in the dukedom of Savoy in 1830, and in the following year obtained Montferrato and Alba. His wife was the daughter of Henry IV. of France. He built the university of Turin, and provided it with several distinguished professors.

Born at Turin, 1587; died at Vercelli, 1637.

VICTOR-AMADEUS II., the first king of Sardinia, succeeded his father as duke of Savoy in 1675. In 1713 he was acknowledged king of Sardinia. In 1730 he abdicated the throne to his son; but, repenting of what he had done, he endeavoured to recover the crown. In this, however, he failed, and, after remaining during some time under arrest, was compelled to retire to his private residence at Moncalieri. He was famous both as a general and statesman; he gave an impulse to trade and manufactures in his dominions; encouraged the cultivation of the mulberry tree and the breeding of silk-worms; thus laying the foundation of that branch of commerce in Piedmont. By his marriage with Anne-Maria of Orleans, daughter of Henrietta-Maria, wife of Philip, duke of Orleans, and granddaughter of Charles I., the house of Savoy became connected with the royal family of England.

Born 1666; died 1732.

VICTOR-AMADEUS III., succeeded his father Carlo-Emmanuel III., in 1733. During the wars of the French revolution he lost Savoy and Nice, and was compelled by Napoleon to become the vassal of France.

Born 1720; died 1796.

VICTOR AURELIUS. (See AURELIUS, VICTOR.)

VICTOR-EMMANUEL I., em-man'-u-el, king of Sardinia. As duke of Aosta he energetically resisted the French revolutionary armies. When his brother, Carlo-Emmanuel IV., abdicated, in 1802, he succeeded to the crown. He persistently refused to grant a constitution to his subjects, and in 1821 a revolution burst forth, in consequence of which he was compelled to abdicate, and was succeeded by his brother, Carlo-Felix.

Born 1759; died at Moncalieri, 1824.

VICTOR-EMMANUEL II., king of Italy, and formerly king of Sardinia, was the son of Carlo-Alberto, and, while heir-apparent, fought in the campaign against the Austrians, which, terminating in the disastrous battle of Novara, caused his father to abdicate. He became king of Sardinia in 1849, and in 1861 assumed the title of king of Italy, conferred on him by the Italian parliament. (See ITALY.)

VICTORIA ALEXANDRINA, vik-to'-ri-a, Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and Empress of India, is the daughter and only child of Edward, duke of Kent, fourth son of George III., by his wife Maria Louisa Victoria, of Saxe-Coburg Saalfeld. At the death of her father, in 1820, the duchess of Kent, whose first husband had been the prince of Leiningen, and who was the sister of Leopold, king of the Belgians, devoted herself to superintending the education of the future queen, who was carefully prepared for the illustrious station she was destined to fulfil. On June 20, 1837, she ascended the throne of the United Kingdom, and was crowned June 28, 1838. On February 10, 1840, the queen became the wife of Prince Albert-Franz-August-Karl-Emmanuel, second son of the duke of Saxe-Coburg Gotha, by whom she had nine children. The prince died in December, 1861, and since then the queen has lived very much in retirement. In 1867 she directed the composition of "The Early Days of His Royal Highness the Prince Consort;" in 1868 authorized the publication of a portion of her diary, relating to her domestic life in Scotland, abounding in interesting details, and has since supplied materials for the "Life of the Prince Consort," by Mr. Theodore Martin.

Born at Kensington Palace, May 24, 1819.

VICTORIA, a British colony in the south-east of Australia, bounded N. and N.E. by New South Wales, from which it is separated by the river Murray, W. by South Australia, from which it is divided by meridian of longitude 141° E., and S. by the South Pacific Ocean. The coast line is more than 600 miles long, low in the western part, but rising to 500 and 1,000 feet in some parts, between Cape Otway and Wilson's Promontory, and a granite headland, 3,000 feet high, connected with the mainland by a sandy isthmus. Thence to Cape Howe, the most easterly point of the colony, the coast is sandy, with many lagoons, the chief being Lakes Reeves, Wellington, Victoria and King. The principal harbours, from west to east, are Portland Bay, Port Fairy, Warnambool (or Lady) Bay, Port Philip Bay, Western Port and Corner Inlet. A range of mountains traverses the entire length of the colony, dividing it into two unequal parts. It runs in an eastern and western direction, generally at a distance of 60 or 70 miles from the coast. It is part of the Australian Cordorilla, and is called the Dividing Range; its eastern part is known as the Australian Alps. It varies in height from 1,000 to 7,000 feet. The range dividing the Wimmera district from the county of Ripon is termed the Pyrenees. The Grampians form the west termination of the Great Dividing Range. The climate is mild; January, or the early part of February, is the hottest period of the Victorian year, the thermometer frequently standing at noon in the shade at 100° to 108°; the mean temperature being 66°. The coldest month is July, the lowest reading of the thermometer during a period of six years being 29°, but it rarely falls below freezing point, and the mean temperature is 48°. For the whole year, as ascertained by a series of observations, the mean temperature is 58°. With the exception of the hot north winds, the climate is not uncongenial to the European constitution, while in cases of pulmonary disease it has been found highly beneficial in prolonging life. About three-fourths of the soil is available for agricultural and pastoral purposes. Nearly everything grown in England flourishes in Victoria, and very many other things thrive in the colony. The timber is valuable, especially the red and blue gums. The species known as the peppermint tree is of enormous size, specimens over 450 feet high being known to exist. The she-oak (Casuarina), honeysuckle (Banksia), native cherry tree, and several varieties of the acacia are also abundant. Some other woods are well adapted for fine cabinet work.

Rivers and Lakes.—The names of rivers, in the order of length, are:—The Murray, Goulburn, Glenelg, Loddon, Wimmera, Avoca, Hopkins, Wannon, Ovens and Yarra-Yarra. In winter the rivers are frequently swollen by the heavy rains into angry torrents, which devastate the country. In the summer many of the streams dry up. There are numerous salt and fresh water lakes, many of them being dry during summer, and all shallow; the largest of these is Lake Corangamite, covering 48,640 acres. This lake, with a number of small ones in its neighbourhood, has no outlet, and is extremely saline. In the summer the lake falls, by evaporation, considerably below its winter level, leaving on the banks large quantities of native salt in crystals.

Minerals.—The colony is almost unparalleled for the wealth, extent and variety of its mineral resources. Rich copper ore is found at St. Arnaud, Specimen Gully, Castlemaine, and on the River Thompson: in Gipps Land, where native copper is found associated with other ores of copper in the form of carbonates and pyrites; it also occurs in small quantities at Steiglitz, Castlemaine, the Blue Mountains, Bendigo, &c. At St. Arnaud there are extensive mines of silver. Steam tin (oxide of tin), zinc, iron, antimony, cobalt, bismuth, manganese and coal also exist, and diamonds and sapphires have been found. But the colony is chiefly remarkable for its gold, to which it owes its extraordinarily rapid progression. It occurs in quartz and the alluvium; the latter was, of course, the first worked, surface mining being comparatively easy; this was, however, quickly exhausted, and some of the sinkings are now carried on at considerable depths. Quartz reefing is extensively followed, employing much machinery and a large amount of capital. Since the discovery of gold in 1852, the yield has been of the value of nearly £250,000,000.

Area.—86,820 square miles.

Government.—The whole of Victoria, previously to 1851, was merely part of the territory of New South Wales, but a long and somewhat angry movement succeeded in that year in accomplishing the entire separation by Act of the Home Parliament, passed on the 1st of July. By the same Act the government of Victoria devolved upon a governor appointed by the British Government, an executive council, and a legislative Parliament consisting of two representative houses. The governor and the ministry in office exercise the executive power. The electoral franchise and membership are subject to a very moderate property qualification for the upper house, but the franchise and membership of the lower house are open to all adult male subjects of twelve months' residence, or naturalised males of three years' standing. An Act of 1870 awarded to each member a salary of £300 per annum. The distinctive character of the government thus constituted is emphatically protectionist, every effort to maintain or revive Free Trade having been signally defeated.

Railways, &c.—Under the operation of the democratic government previously glanced at, all the railways of the colony are public property, extending to a length of about 2,000 miles, in addition to numerous tramways. Wherever the railways do not extend, coaches are very general. The post-office is vigorously administered, and the telegraphic branch is second to none.

Religion and Education.—Organisations for religious purposes are carried on with exceptional energy. Protestant Episcopalian, Roman Catholic and Dissenting bodies vie with each other, the voluntary principle being universal. Public primary schools throughout the colony are vested in the Minister of Education. Attendance is compulsory from the age of six to fourteen, strictly secular, and free except for special branches, which are not compulsory. Schools of art, design and technical knowledge are numerous. Sunday schools abound for religious teaching, which is very generally resorted to. University education, including all branches of advanced knowledge, is expressly provided for by an Act of 1853. The subjects are strictly limited to those of a secular character, but religious denominations are entitled to affiliate their colleges with the University. Industrial and reformatory schools are amply provided, and the condition of the people is further ameliorated by hospitals and other public establishments, aided by friendly societies and charitable institutions. Public libraries are well established and increasing in number, and the post-office savings banks are in full operation.

Justice, Defence, &c.—Legal proceedings are provided for by a Supreme Court and minor ramifications throughout the colony. Vigorous efforts are proceeding for defence by batteries at various points, and for the formation of a colonial army and navy, in both of which remarkable progress is making. Coinage is under the control of the government mint.

Public Debt.—The borrowing powers of the government of Victoria have been exercised with profuse freedom, the colonial debt being about £30,000,000, or something like £30 per head of the population, as compared with about £22 per head of the population of Great Britain. It has to be borne in mind, however, that most of the Victorian loans have been for reproductive purposes, no less than £22,000,000 having been expended upon railways alone, and the reduction of the debt proceeds at the rate of considerably more than 10 per cent. per annum.

Pop.—Upwards of 1,000,000.

VICTORIA, a city and port, and capital of British Columbia, North America, at the south-eastern extremity of Vancouver Island, on the strait of Fuca. Pop. 5,925. Lat. 48° 27′ N. Lon. 123° 25′ W.

VICTORIA, EAST, a division of Cape Colony, South Africa. The principal town is Alice. Area, 300 square miles. Pop. 8,300, including many Fingoes.

VICTORIA, WEST, a division of the Eastern Province, Cape Colony. The principal place is of the same name, 410 miles from Cape Town. Area 9,000 square miles. Pop. 8,700.

VICTORIA, the capital of Hong-Kong, China, extending for nearly 3 miles along the shore of the bay of Victoria, on the northern side of the island. It was built by the British settlers, and has many good houses, public offices, and merchants' residences. Pop. 5,000 Europeans, and 90,000 Chinese and others. (See HONG-KONG.)

VICTORIA, a county of New Brunswick, Canada. Area, 1,900 square miles. Pop. 15,686, more than half of French origin. The capital is Grand Falls.

VICTORIA, a county of Nova Scotia, Canada, on Cape Breton Island. Area, 1,198 square miles. Pop. 12,470, more than two-thirds of Scotch descent. The capital is Baddeck.

VICTORIA, a county of Ontario province, Canada. Area, 1,305 square miles. Pop. 34,612, nearly half of Irish descent. The capital is Lindsay.

VICTORIA, a county of Texas, United States. Area, 925 square miles. Pop. 6,289, nearly 2,000 being coloured.

VICTORIA LAND, the name given to the supposed Antarctic continent, discovered in 1841, by Sir James Ross. Two mountains have been observed, named Erebus and Terror, after the ships of the expedition. The former is 12,400 feet high and a volcano, the only one known in the frigid zone; the latter is 10,000 feet high.

VIENNA, ve-en'-na (Germ. WIEN, veen), a capital of the Austrian empire, and of the province of Lower Austria, on the Danube, in a fertile plain bordered by the Wiener-Wald, consisting of spurs of the Styrian Alps. About 5 miles north-west of the city, the Danube divides into two branches, uniting again a few miles below. The southern and smaller of these arms, the Donau Kanal, or Viennese Danube, is between the old part of the city and the suburban district of Leopoldstadt, and receives a small stream, the Wien (from which the city is named), which flows from the south-west, and two small creeks, the Alser and Ottakringer. The northern branch of the Danube formerly flowed through many channels; but a new broad channel nearer to the city was completed in 1875, and protects the lower parts from the inundations previously frequent. Before 1858 Vienna consisted of the old town, or Vienna proper, occupying an elevated site about three quarters of a mile in diameter, on the angle formed by the Donau Kanal, on the northern, and the Wien, on the eastern side, strongly fortified, with a broad glacis, beyond which and the river were thirty-six suburbs. The fortifications, with the exception of some small portions, have been removed, the glacis laid out as noble boulevards, with palaces and other noble buildings, and the city now consists of the Innere Stadt (the old town), and eight other districts—Landstrasse, Wieden, Margaahen, Mariahilf Neuban, Josephstadt, Alsergrund, and Leopoldstadt, beyond the Donau Kanal, on the north-east. The area thus included has a circumference of 16 miles, and contains about 11,000 houses. The Donau Kanal is crossed by five bridges; the Wien by fourteen, and the new channel of the Danube by five (three of them railway bridges), one of them, the Franz Joseph, having cost £200,000. The Ringstrasse, or boulevards, surrounding the old part of the city, on the glacis, is more than 2½ miles long, and 186 feet wide, and is continued along the Donau Kanal by the fine Franz Joseph quay. Beyond the Ringstrasse is the Lastenstrasse, for heavy traffic, and an outer circle runs along the low ramparts which mark the limit of the municipal jurisdiction, and to which broad lines of thoroughfare, separating the districts, radiate from the new boulevards. In the old town the streets are narrow and irregular; but the new districts are laid out with wide and well-paved thoroughfares. The most important square is the Stephans Platz, near the centre of the old city, and the largest is the Burg-platz, or palace square, in the south-western part, and there are about 20 other open places, most of them containing monuments and fountains. The elevation of the city near its centre is about 500 feet above the sea level; the climate is changeable, and unhealthy in spring and autumn. The supply of water is obtained from the Schneeburg, 40 miles distant, by an aqueduct, completed in 1873, the most important modern work of the kind in Europe. Tram lines cross the city in every direction; several important lines of railway meet there, and there is communication by steamboat with Linz and Pesth.

Churches.—The cathedral of St. Stephen, or Dom Kirche, in the Stephens Platz, is one of the most magnificent Gothic structures in Europe. The greater portion was built in the 14th century, but the great southern tower, 470 feet high, was erected early in the 15th century, and renovated 1861-4. It contains a bell weighing nearly 18 tons, taken from the Turks in 1711. The cathedral is cruciform, 350 feet long, 230 feet wide, and the nave is 90 feet high. The west façade 210 feet high, adorned with sculpture and rich tracery, and flanked by two octagonal towers. In the interior are 38 marble altars, a richly sculptured chancel, and numerous monuments, especially that of the Emperor Frederick III., and more than 200 figures. Beneath the cathedral are vast catacombs. Other fine churches are that of Maria Steigen, in the Gothic style, completed early in the 15th century; the Augustinian church, founded in 1330; St. Peters; the university church, and the Votiv Kirche, a splendid new edifice in the Gothic style, erected to commemorate the escape of the emperor from assassination in 1853. A Greek church, and a new synagogue in the Moorish style, are other striking edifices. Altogether there are about 60 Catholic churches and chapels, three Protestant and three Greek churches, and several synagogues.

Palaces.—The Imperial Palace, or Kaiserliche-Burg, in the south-western part of the old city, is an old and irregular structure, consisting of four wings, enclosing the Burg-platz and two other quadrangles in the eastern wing, or Schwezerhof, was built in the 13th century; the western (Amalienhof), in the 16th; the southern, containing the largest apartments, in 1670, and the northern in 1728. The summer palace of the imperial family is at SCHONBRUNN. Adjoining the imperial palace is the palace of the Archduke Charles. The Belvedere Palace, in the south-eastern suburb, built by Prince Eugene, has a fine garden, and on the Ringstrasse are the palaces of the Archdukes Wilhelm and Ludwig-Victor. There are other fine palatial residences.

Public Buildings.—The parliament buildings (a magnificent pile recently completed), a Gothic town-hall, the Franz-Joseph barracks, arsenal, imperial riding-school (the finest in Europe), and the magnificent station of the Northern railway. A large market-hall, 385 feet long and 312 wide, was completed in 1867.

Educational Institutions, Museums, and Art Collections.—The University, founded in 1365, famous for the medical school; the Theresianum, a school of high character, formerly limited to the aristocracy, but now open to all classes; an Oriental academy, an agricultural college, 17 gymnasiums, and about 100 elementary schools. The imperial library, adjoining the imperial palace, is one of the largest and finest in Europe; and the university and other public libraries are extensive and valuable. There are a museum of natural history, and cabinets of antiquities, coins, and jewels, in the imperial palace. The imperial picture-gallery is in the Belvedere, and there are several fine private collections.

Charitable Institutions.—A very large general hospital, containing 2,000 beds, a foundling hospital, and asylums for lunatics, the blind, deaf and dumb, and for orphans.

Public Monuments.—A colossal equestrian statue of Joseph II. is in the Josephsplatz, near the imperial palace; in the Burgplatz are equestrian statues of Prince

Eugene and the Archduke Charles, and there are in other parts of the city statues of Marshal Schwarzenberg and of Schiller (recently erected).

Places of Amusement, Parks, and Gardens.—The new opera house, near the Ringstrasse, is one of the finest theatres in Europe, and there are eight other theatres. The Prater is a beautifully laid-out pleasure-ground, on the island formed by the branches of the Danube; there are six principal avenues, and it is the fashionable promenade. The Volksgarten, the Stadt park on the Ringstrasse, the gardens of the Belvedere palace, and the gardens of Schonbrunn, are favourite resorts. There is a large Kursaal, in the Eastern style, in the Stadt park.

Manf.—Shawls, silks, velvets, jewellery, kid gloves, fancy leather, musical and optical instruments, and mother-of-pearl and other buttons. The imperial printing-office is celebrated for its beautiful productions.

Pop.—1,103,857, inclusive of the Vororte, or communes included in the palace district, but not in the municipal jurisdiction. There are about 25,000 Protestants and 45,000 Jews.

Lat. 48° 13′ N. Lon. 16° 23′ E.

History.—Vienna was, under the name of Vindobona, long the head-quarters of a Roman legion, and afterwards fell successively into the hands of the Goths and Huns. In 791 Charlemagne attached it to his dominions. It was often threatened in the wars with the Hungarians and the Turks, who, in 1529, destroyed the suburbs. In 1683 an attack by the Turkish army was repulsed. In 1741, though pressed by the Bavarians on the west and the French and Prussians on the north, Vienna was preserved. In 1797 it was threatened by Napoleon I., and occupied by him in 1805 and 1809. On both occasions proper discipline was observed by the invaders, and little injury was done. In 1814 and 1815, the congress of Vienna was here held. During the revolution of 1848, it was held for a short time in October, but surrendered to the imperial troops on the 30th of the same month, having been greatly reduced by bombardment.

VIENNE, ve-an', a western department of France. It is level, except in the south, and about one-eighth of the surface is covered with forests, and nearly one-half is waste. The vine is extensively cultivated, but only an inferior wine is produced. Chestnuts are grown and much used for food.

Rivers.—The Vienne, Charente, Gartempe, and Creuse.
Minerals.—Iron, lithographic and mill-stones.
Area.—2,691 square miles.
Pop.—340,295.
Divisions and Chief Towns.—There are 5 arrondissements and 300 communes. The chief towns are POITIERS (the capital), CHATELLERAULT, Civray, Loudun, and Montmorillon.

VIENNE, HAUTE, a department of France, S. of department Vienne. The surface is mountainous, highest on the east, and sloping gradually to the west. The highest peak is Mont Jargean, 3,116 feet. There are extensive chestnut and other forests. Only about half the department is arable, and one-sixth is waste. Horses, mules, and pigs are reared on the mountain pastures.

Rivers.—The Vienne, Gartempe, Briance, and Taurion.
Minerals.—Iron, copper, tin, lead, coal, and china clay.
Area.—2,130 square miles.
Pop.—349,332.
Divisions and Chief Town.—There are 4 arrondissements and 202 communes. LIMOGES is the capital.

VIENNE, a town of France, department Isère, on the left bank of the Rhone, at the mouth of the Gère, 49 miles W. of Grenoble. It has a fine Gothic cathedral, erected on an eminence, and other churches. But the pride of Vienne is in its antiquities; among which are the remains of a theatre and amphitheatre; several traces of aqueducts, arcades supposed to have belonged to a triumphal arch, and a temple dedicated to Augustus and Livia. Manf. Woollens, silk, and paper. In its vicinity are lead and silver mines, and near it the celebrated wine called Côte-Rotie is made. Pop. 26,000.—This was the ancient capital of Burgundy. A council was here held in 1311, which abolished the order of the Templars.

VIERSEN, feer'-sen, a town of Prussia, Rhine Province, 10 miles S.W. of Crefeld. Manf. Cotton, flax, woollen, silk, and velvet goods, and ribbons, all extensive. Pop. 21,000.

VIERZON, veer'-zawng, a town of France, department Cher, at the confluence of the Cher and Yèvre, 20 miles N.W. of Bourges. Manf. Woollens and silk stuffs, hosiery, leather, and porcelain. Pop. 6,800.

VIGEVANO, ve-jai-va'-no, a walled town of Italy, province of Novara, 58 miles N.E. of Turin. There is a fine cathedral. Manf. Silks, hats, and macaroni. Pop. 20,000.

VIGILIUS, vijil'-i-us, pope, proclaimed in 537, but considered as anti-pope till the death of Sylverius in 540.

Died at Syracuse, 555.

VIGNOLA, GIACOMO BAROZZI DA, veen-yo'-la, an Italian architect, who studied at Rome, and afterwards visited France, whence, after a two years' residence, he returned to Rome. He wrote a celebrated treatise on the Five Orders of Architecture.

Born at Vignola, Modena, 1507; died at Rome, 1573.

VIGNY, ALFRED VECLA, Count de, veen'-ye, a modern French poet and novelist, who, at the Restoration, entered upon a military career, and, in 1823, was quartered in the Pyrenees, but did not take any active part in the Spanish campaign of that date. Shortly after his marriage with Miss Bunbury, an English lady, in 1825, he retired from the army, and henceforth devoted himself to literature, producing a number of graceful poetical works, and a novel, "Cinq Mars," of great merit. He also made translations of "Othello," and the "Merchant of Venice," of Shakspeare.

Born at Loches, 1799; died at Paris, 1863.

VIGO, ve-go, a fortified seaport-town of Spain, province of Pontevedra, on the Atlantic, 76 miles from Corunna. It has an active pilchard fishery. Pop. 13,416. This place was attacked by the English under Drake, in 1585 and 1589. In 1719 it was also attacked by Lord Cobham.

VIGO, a county of Indiana, United States. Area, 400 square miles. Pop. 45,658. The capital is Terre Haute.

VILLA BOA. (See GOYAZ.)

VILLA FRANCA, a town of Northern Italy, province of Verona, on the left bank of the Tartaro, 9 miles S.W. of Verona. Pop. 7,500.—Here, in 1859, were signed the preliminaries of the treaty which closed the war between France and Sardinia, on the one side, and Austria on the other.

VILLA JOYOSA, ho-yo'-sa, a seaport of Spain, province of Alicante, 20 miles N.E. of Alicante. It has extensive fisheries, and a coasting trade. Pop. 8,100.

VILLARS, CLAUDE LOUIS HECTOR DE, vil'-lars, a French general, who became marshal of France, and grandee of Spain. While serving under Louis XIV., he attracted the favourable notice of that monarch, and, in his 19th year, was appointed to command a troop of cavalry. After distinguishing himself on various occasions in the army, he was made maréchal-de-camp in 1690, and was sent to the Cevennes, where, by his humane and lenient measures, he succeeded in restoring tranquillity. He next served against Marlborough, by whom he was defeated at Ramilies, and again at Malplaquet, where he was dangerously wounded. He was appointed plenipotentiary for concluding a peace at Radstadt, in 1714. In 1733 he was sent into Italy, where he took Pizzighetone, but soon afterwards asked and was permitted to return to France.

Born at Moulins, 1653; died at Turin, 1734.

VILLE-FRANCHE (SUR SAONE), veel-fransh', a town of France, department Rhône, on the Morgom, 15 miles N. of Lyons. Manf. Linen and cotton goods. Considerable trade is carried on. Pop. 12,500.

VILLE-FRANCHE (DE ROUENGUE), a town of France, department Aveyron, at the confluence of the Alzon with the Aveyron, 25 miles W. of Rodez. It is an old town, and there is a fine Gothic church with a lofty tower. Manf. Linen, leather, paper, iron, and copper wares. Pop. 9,800.

VILLEHARDOUIN, GEOFFROY DE, veel-har-doo-d(n), a French historian, who was maréchal of Champagne under Thibaut V., count of Champagne and Brie. He distinguished himself in 1199, in the fourth crusade; was present at the taking of Constantinople in 1204; and was created maréchal of Romania by the emperor Baldwin I. The emperor Henry gave him the city of Messinopolis, and his descendants, during two centuries, ruled over principalities in Greece. He wrote the "History of the Taking of Constantinople by the French and Venetians," a narrative as curious as it is ancient.

Born near Arcis-sur-Aube, 1167; died in Thessaly, about 1213.

VILLEMAIN, ABEL FRANÇOIS, veel-ma(n)', a modern French historical writer and statesman, who so early distinguished himself as a scholar, as to gain the appointment of professor of rhetoric at the Collége Charlemagne in his 19th year. In 1816 he became assistant professor of modern history in the university of Paris, and in 1821 was elected to the French Academy. In 1832 he was created a peer of France, and, in the Guizot ministry, acted as minister of public instruction. In 1834 he was nominated perpetual secretary of the Academy. He retired into private life after the revolution of 1848. His principal works were—a translation of Pindar into French; "Lascaris; or, the Greeks of the Fifteenth Century;" "Course of French Literature;" "History of Cromwell;" an addition of the "Provincial Letters" of Pascal; a translation of "The School for Scandal," into French; "Historical and Literary Miscellanies," and a "Discourse on the Advantages and Inconveniences of Criticism."

Born at Paris, 1791.

VILLENEUVE, PIERRE-CHARLES-JEAN-BAPTISTE, veel'-nu(r)ve, a French admiral, who held a command at the battle of the Nile, where the vessels of his nation were totally defeated by Nelson. In 1805 he was appointed to the command of a French fleet, with which he encountered the English fleet under Nelson, by whom his squadron, and that of the Spanish under Gravina, were annihilated at Trafalgar. He was taken prisoner, and, after being detained in England until the following year, returned to France, where, expecting to be disgraced by the Emperor Napoleon I., he killed himself.

Died 1806.

VILLENEUVE D'AGEN, a town of France, department Lot-et-Garonne, 15 miles N. of Agen, on both sides of the Lot. Manf. Paper, cloth, linen, and copper ware. There is a large trade in cattle, wine, and iron.

VILLOISON, JEAN BAPTISTE GASPARD D'AUSSE DE, veel'-woi-sawng, a French scholar, who evinced an extraordinary aptitude for the acquisition of knowledge; and before his 22nd year produced an edition of Apollonius's Lexicon of the "Iliad" and "Odyssey." In 1778 he was sent, at the expense of the French government, to make searches in the library of St. Mark at Venice, where he discovered an old manuscript of the "Iliad" of Homer. During the revolutionary period, he lost all his property; but was afterwards nominated professor of ancient and modern Greek in the Collége de France by Napoleon I. He left in manuscript a work upon Greece, in 15 volumes; also remarks upon Tournefort's "Travels in Greece," and upon Montfaucon.

Born 1750; died at Paris, 1805.

VILLON, FRANÇOIS, veel-lawn(g)', a French poet. His family name was Montcorbier, and he was a chaplain of St. Benoit, Paris. He studied theology, but having killed a priest in a disreputable quarrel, he fled at the age of 24, and led a profligate life, and associated with thieves. He was condemned to death by the court of the Bishop of Paris; but the sentence was commuted to banishment. He wrote a number of ballads, very licentious, but exhibiting great lyrical power. He is quoted by Rabelais and other writers, and is the hero of many scandalous legends.

Born 1456.

VILNA. (See WILNA.)

VINAROZ, ve-na'-roth, a seaport of Spain, province of Castellon-de-la-Plana, on the Mediterranean, 22 miles S. of Tortosa. It is partly enclosed by walls, and has an active coasting-trade. Pop. 9,400.

VINCENNES, van-sen', a town of France, department Seine, near the confluence of the Seine and Marne, about a mile E. of Paris. It is remarkable for its castle, built in the 14th century, and used as a seat of royalty till the time of Louis XV. It contains an arsenal, barracks, and a massive tower, used as a prison. Here the duc d'Enghien was shot on 21st March, 1804; and here Condé, Diderot, and other eminent individuals were confined. The town is strongly fortified. Adjoining to the castle is a fine park, recently greatly enlarged, with promenades and a large lake, which is a favourite holiday resort of the Parisians. Pop. 20,530.

VINCENT, JOHN JERVIS, Earl St., an English admiral who commenced his career afloat in his 10th year. In 1795 he was created admiral of the blue, and placed in command of the Mediterranean fleet, with which he defeated the combined French and Spanish fleets, off Cape St. Vincent. For this service he was raised to the peerage, with the title of earl St. Vincent. He subsequently took the command of the Channel fleet, and was, during the Pitt administration, first lord of the Admiralty, in which office he distinguished himself as a reformer of abuses in the naval administration. At the coronation of George IV., in 1821, he was created admiral of the fleet. There is a monument to his memory in St. Paul's cathedral.

Born in Staffordshire, 1734; died 1823.

VINCENT DE PAUL, ST. (See PAUL.)

VINCENT, ST. (See ST. VINCENT.)

VINCI, LEONARDO DA, veen'-che, a celebrated Italian painter, sculptor, architect, and engineer, remarkable for his handsome presence, and aptitude for almost every branch of science and art. He founded his celebrated school of painting at Milan. He was also an excellent architect, and constructed the famous aqueduct which supplies Milan with water. From Milan he went to Florence, where he laboured with Michael Angelo in ornamenting the grand council chamber. At the invitation of Francis I. he visited the French court. He wrote a "Treatise on Painting," in Italian, folio, and some other works, of which Hallam thus speaker —"The discoveries which made Galileo, and Kepler: and other names illustrious, the system of Copernicus, the very theories of recent geologers, are anticipated by Da Vinci within the compass of a very few pages. He first laid down the grand principle of Bacon, —that experiment and observation must be the guide to just theory."

Born near Florence, 1452; died at Fontainebleau, 1519.

VINER, CHARLES, vi'-ner, an English lawyer, the compiler of the great work entitled "A General and Complete Abridgment of Law and Equity," in 24 folio volumes. This work occupied him during half a century, and was printed at his own house. He bequeathed about £12,000 to the university of Oxford, to found professorships and fellowships of common law there.

Born 1680; died 1756.

VINTON, vin'-ton, a county of Ohio, United States. Area, 414 square miles. Pop. 17,223. The capital is M'Arthur.

VIRCHOW, RUDOLF, veer'-shov, a German physiologist, who took his medical degree in 1843, and was lecturer on anatomy at Berlin, but was removed in consequence of his political opinions. In 1849 he became professor at Wurzburg, and in 1856 was recalled to Berlin. In 1862 he was elected member of the Prussian house of representatives. He may be considered as the founder of the science of cellular pathology, and has also highly distinguished himself in anthropological and archæological studies.

Born at Schivelbein, Pomerania, 1821.

VIRGIL, PUBLIUS VIRGILIUS MARO, vir'-jil, a Roman poet. His earliest years were spent at Cremona; whence he removed to Rome, when his estates were partitioned out among the soldiers after the battle of Philippi. There, by means of his friend Mæcenas, he was introduced to Augustus, who restored to him his property. On this occasion he wrote his first Eclogue; and, on completing the Bucolics, he undertook the Georgics. After these, he commenced the Æneid, at the request of the emperor Augustus. This great poem is composed upon the model of the Iliad, and relates the adventures of Æneas after the destruction of Troy. The poet was engaged during eleven years upon this immortal work, but died without revising it.

Born near Mantua, 70 B.C.; died at Brundisium, 19 B.C.

VIRGIN ISLANDS, vir'-jin, a group of about 100 islands, in the West Indies, E. of Porto Rico, but only about one-fourth are inhabited. Fifty of the islands (see LEEWARD ISLANDS), belong to Great Britain, and the others to Denmark and Spain. Area, 250 square miles. Pop. 45,000.

VIRGINIA, vir-jin'-i-a, one of the United States, bounded on the N. by West Virginia and Maryland, S. by N. Carolina and Tennessee; E. by Maryland and the Atlantic Ocean; and W. by Kentucky and West Virginia. This state may be classed under six separate divisions, essentially differing from one another, extending across the state from north-east to south-west, and occupying different levels, rising in a series of terraces to the west. They are known, beginning from the east, as the Tidewater, Middle, Piedmont, Blue Ridge, Valley, and Appalachian sections. The Tidewater country comprises the eastern and south-eastern part of the state, bordering for about 110 miles on the Atlantic, and penetrated by the tidal waters of Chesapeake Bay and its tributaries, giving nearly 1,500 miles of tidal shore line and having nine long and narrow peninsulas, from 50 to 100 miles long, with in some parts sandbars and islands. The Middle district is an undulating plain, extending west to the low broken range of hills known as the coast range, branches of the Appalachian system. Between this range and the Blue Ridge Mountains is the Piedmont division, extending from the Potomac and Maryland to the border of North Carolina, having many valleys, plains, and much picturesque scenery, and rising at the foot of the Blue Ridge Mountains to an elevation of more than 1,000 feet above the sea level. The Blue Ridge district stretches across the state in a south-western direction. The range has a very irregular outline, rising from 2,000 to nearly 4,000 feet, with numerous spurs extending in various directions. The peaks of Otter and Mount Marshall are the loftiest summits. The valley section is a portion of the great Appalachian valley, extending from Canada on the north to Alabama in the south. It is a broad belt of undulating country diversified by hills and valleys, extending westwards to the Kittatinny and other hills. The western elevation of the district is nearly 1,000 feet higher than the eastern. The Appalachian section is a mountainous region, traversed by the Alloghanies, with long, narrow, parallel valleys, running from north-east to south-west. The highest peak in the state is Balsam Mountain (5,700 feet) in the Iron Mountains, between the Blue Ridge and the Alleghanies, on the border of North Carolina. Virginia abounds in natural curiosities, the most remarkable being the natural bridge, the great stalactite cave known as Weyer's; Matteson's Cave, also with stalactites, and the Blowing Cave, which emits a current of cold air during the hot weather. In many parts of the state the scenery is very fine. In general, the climate is mild, dry, and healthful, except in the coast districts, where the swamps (among them the famous Dismal Swamp), produce miasma in the hot season. The valleys are fertile, and there are extensive forests of pine, oak, cypress, cedar, hickory, walnut, sycamore, and other valuable timber. Every part of the state is well adapted for the growth of fruit, large quantities of which, especially strawberries, are shipped to New York, Philadelphia, and other great towns. Cotton, hemp, and flax are cultivated, and the tobacco of Virginia is famous throughout the world. Dairy-farming and stock-raising are important industries. The fisheries and oyster-beds are very productive.

Rivers.—About six-sevenths of the state is watered by streams flowing into the Atlantic, and the remainder by rivers which ultimately reach the Ohio. The POTOMAC, Pianketank, York, and JAMES, with their numerous tributary streams, flow into Chesapeake Bay; the ROANOKE, with its many affluents, discharges into Albemarle Sound. The GREAT KANAWHA branch of the Halston and Clinch, with many tributary streams, join the Tennessee, and so reach the Ohio. Most of these rivers supply valuable water power.

Minerals.—Gold, iron, copper, lead, zinc, plumbago, manganese, coal, granite, marble, limestone, and other building stones; glass sand, gypsum, and salt. There are many mineral springs.

Area.—45,000 square miles.

Pop.—1,512,500, including about 632,000 coloured persons. In respect of population, this ranks about the average of the Union.

Divisions and Chief Towns.—The state is divided into 99 counties. The chief cities are RICHMOND (the capital), ALEXANDRIA, FREDERICKSBURG, LYNCHBURG, NORFOLK, PETERSBURG, PORTSMOUTH, STAUNTON, and WINCHESTER.

History.—This state was named in honour of Queen Elizabeth, and the first settlements were made in it by Sir Walter Raleigh in 1587. In 1606 a company of adventurers, having obtained a patent from James I., sent two vessels under the command of Captain Newport, with a number of men, who laid the foundation of Jamestown, on the peninsula which advances into the river of the same name. By famine and other privations they were so reduced, that they were on the point of quitting the country for Newfoundland, when the arrival of Lord Delaware, with three vessels, containing provisions and stores, induced them to remain. Virginia showed great opposition to the arbitrary measures of the British government in 1676, when there was a rebellion, led by Nathaniel Bacon. It was one of the 13 original states of the Union; and was the scene of the first movements of the great war of secession in 1861. In 1863 a portion of the territory was erected into a separate state. (See WEST VIRGINIA.)

VIRGINIA CITY, the chief city of Nevada Territory, United States, 180 miles N.E. of San Francisco, situated about 6,000 feet above the sea level, in the centre of an active mining district. Pop. 10,917.

VIRGINIA, in historical legend, daughter of the centurion Virginius, was a Roman virgin of great beauty, who was killed by her father, Virginius, to save her from Appius Claudius, the decemvir. This affecting story has furnished the theme of a lay by Macaulay, and has been employed as the foundation of one of the best plays of Sheridan Knowles. Alfieri, Lessing, and others, have also made use of the romantic episode.

Lived in the 5th century B.C.

VISCONTI, GIOVANNI GALEAZZO, vis-kon'-te, the most famous of the great Italian family of Visconti, who ruled in Milan from the end of the 13th till the middle of the 15th century, and who distinguished themselves as opponents of the papal power, and supplanters of the emperors in the long contest of the Guelphs and Ghibellines. He expelled the Scalas from Verona and Vicenza, and the Carraras from Padua. In 1395 he purchased from the Emperor Wenceslas the title of Duke of Milan, founded the cathedral of Milan, and was a munificent patron of art. His death was caused by the plague. His eldest son, a weak and cruel ruler, was assassinated, and the other leaving no heirs, the duchy passed to the Sforzas in 1447.

Died 1402.

VISCONTI, ENNIO QUIRINO, Italian archæologist, descended from the above family. He was for some time honorary chamberlain to the Pope, and sub-librarian at the Vatican, but on refusing to take orders was deprived of those offices. In 1785 he became director of the Capitol museum. In 1789 he was minister of the interior under the French provisional government, and was afterwards one of the five consuls of the new republic, and founded the institute at Rome. In 1799 he was compelled to take refuge in Paris, where he became director of the collections in the Louvre, and in 1803 was elected a member of the Institute. He was the author of many valuable works on art and archæology.

Born at Rome, 1751; died at Paris, 1818.

VISHNI-VOLOTCHEK, vish'-ni-vo-lot-chek', a town of European Russia, government of Tver, on the Tzna, 230 miles S.E. of St. Petersburg. A great transit trade is carried on, especially in corn. Pop. 15,200.

VISHNU, vish-noo, in Hindoo mythology, the second god of the triad.

VISTULA, vis'-tu-la (Germ. WEICHSEL, vike'-sel), a river of Central Europe, rising at the foot of the Carpathians, in the south-eastern corner of Austrian Silesia, traversing Galicia, Russian Poland, and Prussia, and falling into the Baltic by three mouths. In Silesia it has a fall of nearly 200 feet. The total length is 650 miles. The chief affluents are the Dunajec, San, Wieprz, Bug, and Drewenz on the right, and the Pilica, Bzura, and Brahe on the left. It is connected by canal with the Dnieper, Oder, and Niemen.

VITEBSK, ve-tepsk', a government of European Russia, in West Russia. It is generally level, with marshes and sandy tracts. The principal river is the Dwina. Area, 17,438 square miles. Pop. 1,170,987.

VITEBSK, capital of the above government, on both sides of the Dwina, at the influx of the Viteba, which divides it into two parts. It is surrounded by old fortifications, has 15 Greek and Catholic churches, convents and synagogues. Pop. 52,592.

VITELLIUS, AULUS, vi-tel'-li-us, a Roman emperor, who was born of an illustrious family, and insinuated himself into the favour of Tiberius by administering to his pleasures. He also gained the patronage of Caligula, Claudius and Nero, through flattering their passions. The army he won over by rich gifts and unbounded promises. He possessed himself of the highest offices of state, and was proclaimed in 69 by the army in Germany, at the same time that Otho was invested with the purple. Three battles were fought between the rival emperors, which Vitellius lost; but in a fourth he was victorious, and Otho killed himself. His conduct was so licentious and extravagant, that the people revolted, and placed Vespasian on the throne. Vitellius, after suffering all manner of indignities from the populace, was put to death, and his body thrown into the Tiber.

Died 69.

VITERBO, ve-tair'-bo, a town of Italy, province of Roma, and 41 miles N.W. of Rome. In the neighbourhood are sulphur springs. Pop. 21,000.—This city was one of the principal in the Etruscan league, and, in the 11th century, the capital of the patrimony of St. Peter. The present town dates from the 8th century.

VLAARDINGEN, vlar'-ding-en, a town of the Netherlands, province of South Holland, on the left bank of the New Maas, 6 miles W. of Rotterdam. It has a good harbour, and extensive fisheries. Pop. 10,000.

VLADIMIR, vlad'-i-meer', a government of European Russia, to the E. of that of Moscow. Area. 18,862 square miles. Pop. 1,352,140.

VLADIMIR, capital of the above government, on the Kliasma, 120 miles N.E. of Moscow. The cathedral and church of Maria are fine buildings, and there are about 25 other churches. An important transit trade is carried on. Manf. Iron ware, cotton, woollen, and silk goods, hosiery, leather, and glass. Pop. 16,000.—From the 12th to the 14th century the city was the residence of the grand dukes.

VLADIMIR, surnamed the Great, grand-duke of Russia, was the illegitimate son of Sviatoslav, who appointed him governor of Novgorod, from which, however, he was driven by Yaropolk, his brother. In 979 he returned to Novgorod, with a large body of Scandinavian adventurers, took prisoner and put to death Yaropolk, and established himself at Kiev as grand-duke of Russia. In 988 he established Christianity, according to the forms of the Greek Church, in his dominions, and, encouraged by the court of Constantinople, he spent the remainder of his life in introducing civilisation among his subjects.

Died near Kiev, 1015.

VLADIMIR, MONOMACHOS, grand-duke of Kiev, was the great-grandson of the preceding, and succeeded Sviatopolk, in the year 1114. He proved a wise and beneficent ruler, and introduced many of the arts of civilisation among his barbarous subjects. His first wife was Gyda, daughter of Harold, king of England. The czars of Russia are crowned with a golden cap called after his second name, which is supposed to have descended from the Greek emperors through Vladimir, who acquired it from the father of his second wife, Constantine IX., emperor of the East.

Born 1052; died 1125.

VOLTAIRE, FRANÇOIS MARIE-AROUET, vol-tair', a French historian, poet, and dramatist. His family name was Arouet, but early in life he adopted the surname of Voltaire. His first teacher was his godfather, an abbé, who made no disguise of his scepticism, with which he indoctrinated the boy. He then went to the college of Louis le Grand, and, even in his earliest years, evinced proofs of a lively genius. He was intended for the law, which he renounced for poetry. His irresistible turn for satire led to his being taken for the author of some lampoons upon the recently-deceased king, Louis XIV., for which he was sent to the Bastile, where he continued during a year, after which he obtained his release from the regent Orleans. In 1718 appeared his tragedy of "Œdipus," which met with great success. Having produced some other plays, he was, in 1726, again imprisoned in the Bastile, having challenged the Chevalier de Rohan, who had employed some of his servants to publicly beat Voltaire. After a confinement of six months, he recovered his liberty; on which he went to England, where he published his "Henriade" by subscription. After spending three years in England, he returned to Paris, and divided his time between literature and commercial speculation, in both of which he met with success. In 1730 appeared his tragedy of "Brutus," esteemed as the best of his dramatic compositions. This was followed by several others, the principal of which were "Zara," "Merope," "Alzira," and "Mahomet." His "Philosophical Letters" were burnt by a decree of parliament, and the author, apprehensive of the consequences, withdrew from Paris. Subsequently, however, he gained the favour and protection of the court, was appointed historiographer of France, and, in 1746, was admitted a member of the French Academy, through the interest of Madame de Pompadour. In 1750 he accepted the invitation of Frederick the Great to reside at Potsdam; but, after a residence of three years in Prussia, some differences arising between the king and the poet, Voltaire quitted Prussia, carrying with him a copy of the poetical works of the king, who caused him to be arrested on the road, till the fugitive manuscript was restored. Voltaire went to reside at Colmar, whence he removed to Geneva, and afterwards settled at Ferney, a village in the Pays de Gex, which he improved, causing to settle there many ingenious artisans, whose works he sent to Russia, Germany, Spain, Italy, and Holland. At the beginning of the year 1778 he went to reside in Paris, where he was received with many flattering marks of distinction. His remains were interred in the abbey of the Bernardins, near Troyes, but removed in 1791, by an order of the National Assembly, and laid in the Pantheon, at Paris. Besides his poetical works, he wrote "Essay on General History," "The Age of Louis XIV.," "Life of Charles XII. of Sweden," and "History of the Czar Peter the Great;" the romances of "Candide," "Zadig," and some others. All his works have been published in 70 volumes. He was unquestionably the most brilliant French writer of the age, possessed of discriptive power, wit, and humorous sarcasm, which in his serious moods, and he was sometimes almost terribly in earnest, gave him immense literary power. He was a deist, and delighted in ridiculing established modes of thought, but his exposure of political and clerical abuses raised enemies who hesitated at no means of vilifying him.

Born at Paris, 1694; died there, 1778.

VOLTRI, vol'-tre, a town of northern Italy, province of Genova, on the Gulf of Genoa, 9 miles W. of the city of that name. Sulphurous springs and baths are in the vicinity. Manf. Paper. Pop. 13,427.

VONDEL, JOOST VAN DEN, von'-del, Joste, Dutch poet, who was in trade as a hosier at Amsterdam. He wrote several powerful tragedies; a poem, "Lucifer," which bears a considerable resemblance to Milton's "Paradise Lost," which was not published till 13 years afterwards; many political satires, sea-songs, and odes, and translations from the Greek and Roman writers. Becoming impoverished, he accepted a municipal office, and 10 years afterwards retired on a pension. He died at the age of 91, and was borne to the grave by 14 poets.

Born at Cologne, 1587; died at Amsterdam, 1679.

VORARLBERG. (See TYROL.)

WALES, wails, a principality of the British empire, nearly a peninsula, in the western portion of Great Britain, bounded N. and W. by the Irish Sea, S. and S.E. by the Bristol Channel, and E. by the counties of Monmouth, Hereford, Shropshire and Chester. The length from north to south is 136 miles, and the greatest breadth 90 miles. The coast line, excluding minor indentations, is about 360 miles long. At the north-eastern extremity of the principality is the estuary of the Dee; then comes Beaumaris Bay, formed by the island of Anglesea, with Carnarvon Bay on the south side. Cardigan Bay forms a large curve on the west coast and beyond that are St. Bride's Bay, Milford Haven, Carmarthen and Swansea Bays, on the north side of the Bristol Channel, and the wide estuary of the Severn. The islands belonging to Wales are Anglesey and Holyhead, and the small island of Bardsey off the extremity of Carnarvon peninsula, Mochas in Cardigan Bay, Skomer and Skokham off Pembrokeshire, Aldy in Carmarthen Bay, and Bary in Bristol Channel. The surface of the country is generally mountainous, especially in the north, where continuea ranges, intersected by numerous deep ravines, with extensive valleys, and affording endless views of wild mountain scenery, prevail. The principal range in North Wales is that denominated the Snowdonian chain, from the circumstance of Snowdon mountain occupying its centre, and rising to a height of 3,590 feet above the level of the sea. Commencing at Bardsey island, in the south-west extremity of Caernarvonshire, the line, varied at irregular intervals by conical peaks, extends in a north-easterly direction to the promontory of Penmaenbach, in the Bay of Conway. The intermediate parts consist of the loftiest mountains in Wales. Berwyn chain occupies the eastern part of Merionethshire, and branches out into Denbighshire. Its length is about 16 miles, and the breadth varies from 5 to 10. The highest peak is Cader Idris, 3,000 feet. The Plinlimmon range, attaining an elevation on the mountain which gives the name, of 2,480 feet, is the natural boundary between North and South Wales. In South Wales are the Black Mountains, or Forest Fawr, rising in the Brecknock and Carmarthen Beacons to 2,862 and 2,596 feet. Numerous lakes and small mountain tarns are scattered among these mountains, and the scenery of the mountain districts is more picturesque than in any other part of South Britain. (See separate headings of Welsh counties for further information respecting the physical geography and products of Wales.)

Rivers.—The Dee, Severn, Wye, and Usk flow into England; the Clwyd and several other small streams into the Irish Sea, on the north coast; the Dovey, Aeron, Rheidol, and Teifi into Cardigan Bay; the Towy and Neath into Carmarthen Bay, and the Taff into the Bristol Channel. The only lake of importance is Bala, in Merionethshire.

Minerals.—Scarcely any part of Britain is richer in minerals. The most abundant are copper, iron, lead (mixed with silver), zinc, coal, slate, and limestone. Gold mines were worked by the Romans, and in Merionethshire some of the old mines have recently been profitably worked.

Area.—7,377 square miles.

Pop.—1,359,895 (at the census of 1881). In the rural districts the Welsh language, a modification of the ancient British, is generally spoken.

Divisions.—There are 12 counties:—North Wales—Anglesea, Carnarvon, Denbigh, Flint, Merioneth, and Montgomery. South Wales—Brecknock, Cardigan, Carmarthen, Glamorgan, Pembroke, and Radnor. (See separate headings for principal towns.

History.—In early times Wales was a place of refuge for Britons who fled from the Romans and Saxons, and for about 13 centuries the various independent princes waged war with varying results against England. Llewellyn ap Gryffyth was the last prince who exerted himself for the independence of Wales. In 1282 he was subdued by Edward I., and fell in the field of battle. From that time, Wales has been annexed to the English crown; but the union was not complete till the reign of Henry VIII., when the government and laws were formed agreeably to those of England. It gives the title of Prince of Wales to the heir-apparent of the English throne. (See BRITAIN, GREAT.)

WALES, NEW SOUTH. (See NEW SOUTH WALES.)

WALKER, WILLIAM, an American adventurer, who studied law and medicine, and was for some time a journalist. In 1853 he organised an expedition for the conquest of Sonora, but failed, and was tried at San Francisco for violation of the neutrality laws, and was acquitted. In 1855 he took part in the intestine wars in Nicaragua, and then was successful in a contest with Costa Rica, of which republic he was for a short time president; but his arbitrary conduct provoked an insurrection, and in 1857 he surrendered to the United States. He was bound over to keep the peace, but nevertheless led a small party of followers into Nicaragua, but was again compelled to surrender to the United States navy, and was taken to New York, but the government considered the arrest illegal, and he was liberated. In 1860 he endeavoured to excite a revolution in Honduras, but failed, and was shot.

Born at Nashville, 1824; died at Trujillo, Honduras, 1860.

WALKER, the name of three counties of the United States.

ALABAMA.—Area, 828 square miles. Pop. 9,479. The capital is Jasper.

GEORGIA.—Area, 500 square miles. Pop. 11,056, about 1,600 being coloured. The capital is Lafayette.

TEXAS.—Area, 854 square miles. Pop. 12,024, about 6,000 being coloured. The capital is Huntsville.

WALLACE, WILLIAM, Sir, wal'-lace, a popular Scotch hero. He was of Anglo-Norman descent, and son of Sir Malcolm Wallace. His history is so enveloped in patriotic and poetic legend that very little authentic information can be ascertained respecting him. It is said that, having slain the son and several of the retainers of the English sheriff of Dundee, for an insult offered to him, Wallace fled to the woods and was outlawed. Gathering together a number of followers, he drove the English out of Aberdeen, Forfar, Brechin, and elsewhere, and in 1297 defeated the English army at the battle of Stirling bridge; thus liberating his country for a time. Revered as the saviour of the nation, he was chosen one of the commanders-in-chief of the Scottish army, and afterwards guardian of the kingdom, during the captivity of Baliol. He penetrated into England, and ravaged Durham with fire and sword. Edward I., then in Flanders, immediately hastened home and marched against Wallace, who was defeated. His subsequent history is obscurely narrated; but he appears to have carried on a guerilla warfare against the English during several years, until at length he was basely betrayed and executed with horrible tortures in London.

Born about 1270; died 1305.

WALLACHIA, wol-la'-ke-a, a country of south-eastern Europe, forming, with Moldavia, the principality of Roumania. (See MOLDAVIA and ROUMANIA.) It is bounded N. by Transylvania and Moldavia, S. and E. by the Danube, separating it from Bulgaria, and W. by Hungary, from which and Transylvania it is separated by the Carpathian mountains, large spurs of which traverse the western part, with wide vallevs between. In the southern part the surface is flat, with marshy lakes, and is subject to inundations. Except in the mountainous districts, the soil is extremely fertile, producing abundant grain crops, the vine, and tobacco. The climate is subject to great and sudden changes. There is neither spring nor autumn. A summer of seven months' duration, the heat being intense, is succeeded by a winter of great severity, with almost continual snowfall, lasting five months.

Rivers.—The DANUBE forms nearly the whole of the southern and eastern frontier, and the whole country is drained by its tributaries, the principal of which are the Aluta, Arjish, Buses, Sereth, Shyl, Vede, and Yalomitza.

Minerals.—Copper, iron, lead, gold, silver, mercury, marble, rock salt, alum, and bitumen.

Area.—28,373 square miles.

Pop.—3,000,000, of whom about four-fifths are Wallachs.

Chief Towns.—BUCHAREST (the capital), BRAILA (the chief port), GIURGEVO, KRAYOVA, and Ployeshti.

WALLAROO, wal-la-roo', a seaport of South Australia, near Spencer's Gulf, 92 miles N.W. of Adelaide. The copper mines, discovered in 1860, are very valuable. Pop. 2,000.

WALLA-WALLA, wal'-la, a county of Washington Territory, United States. Pop. 8,716, as enumerated, a large portion of the district having been formed into a new county in 1875. The capital is Walla Walla.

WALLENSTEIN, or WALDSTEIN, ALBRECHT WENZEL EUSEBIUS VON, wal'-len-stine, Count, and Duke of Friedland, Mecklenburg, and Sagan, Austrian general. He was the son of Wilhelm von Waldstein, a Bohemian baron. Although born a Protestant, his uncle and guardian sent him to be educated under the Jesuits at Olmütz, where he was converted to the Roman Catholic faith. Leaving Olmütz, he proceeded to Padua, where he acquired a knowledge of astronomy (or, rather, astrology), the Roman and German law, and was well grounded in the ancient and modern languages. He attained the highest military distinction by his services against the Turks, against King Christian of Denmark, and Gustavus Adolphus of Sweden; but his successes, wealth, and overbearing disposition raised up enemies. In 1633 he was commanded by the emperor to winter in Lower Saxony; but Wallenstein refused to obey. Hereupon, his enemies at the imperial court urged Ferdinand to get rid of his haughty lieutenant. Wallenstein learning that the emperor was preparing to deprive him of his command, announced his intention of resigning; but his officers entreated him to remain at their head, signing the celebrated declaration of Pilsen, by which they bound themselves to remain faithful to his fortunes. This act was represented to the emperor as a conspiracy against his person and power. He therefore signed an edict declaring Wallenstein a rebel, and gave secret orders to Piccolomini and Gallas to take him dead or alive.

Meanwhile, Wallenstein sent two officers to the emperor with his offer of resignation; but his messengers were prevented from obtaining an interview. At the approach of Piccolomini and Gallas, Wallenstein, after requesting an asylum with the Swedes, which was refused, took refuge with a small band of his faithful adherents in the castle of Eger, the commandant of which, Gordon, treacherously put him to death with his most devoted friends.

Born in Bohemia, 1583; killed 1634.

WALLER, a new county of Texas, United States. Area, 350 square miles. Pop. 9,024. The capital is Hempstead.

WALLINGFORD, a parliamentary and municipal borough, in Berkshire, 15 miles N.W. of Reading. Pop. 2,803.—A station on the Gt. West. Rail.

WALPOLE, ROBERT, Sir, and Earl of Orford, an English statesman, educated at Cambridge, and in 1700 commenced his parliamentary career as member for Castle Rising. In 1705 he was appointed secretary at war, and, in 1708, secretary at war and leader of the Whig party, in the House of Commons; but when the Tories, under Harley and St. John, obtained power, Walpole was, with other members of the late Whig administration, voted by the Commons to be guilty of corruption, and ordered to be expelled the house. The Whig party, however, strenuously supported him, and he was re-elected to parliament, though the house declared the election void. At the accession of George I., Walpole was made paymaster-general of the forces, and was afterwards first lord of the Treasury and chancellor of the exchequer. A change of administration taking place in 1717, he remained in opposition during three years; but on accepting office under lord Sunderland in 1720, he was, in the following year, appointed first lord of the Treasury in the room of his late chief, who had been compelled to retire in consequence of the obloquy which his participation in the unfortunate South Sea scheme had brought upon him. After holding office with great firmness during twenty years, he was compelled to resign, and was created earl of Orford, with a pension of £4,000 a-year.

Born at Houghton, Norfolk, 1676; died in London, 1745.

WALPOLE, HORACE, Earl of Orford, an English author, third and youngest son of the preceding, was educated at Eton and at King's College, Cambridge. In 1738 he was appointed inspector of exports and imports, which place he exchanged for that of usher of the exchequer. The year following he travelled with the poet Gray; but a separation took place in Italy, owing to some misunderstanding between the two friends. In 1741 Mr. Walpole was elected to parliament; but, although he retained his seat during twenty-eight years, he distinguished himself in debate upon only two occasions,—once in defence of his father's late administration, and again in favour of the unfortunate Admiral Byng. He retired from parliament in 1768, and led a life of literary ease at his seat at Strawberry Hill, at Twickenham, where he formed a collection of books, manuscripts, pictures, and other works of art or of curiosity, and set up a printing-press, from which proceeded several elegant works, by himself and others. His remarkable and valuable collection was sold by auction in 1842, realising nearly £30,000. On the death of his nephew, in 1791, he succeeded to the title of earl of Orford. He wrote "A Catalogue of Royal and Noble Authors;" "Historic Doubts concerning Richard III.;" "Anecdotes of Painting, enlarged from Vertue;" "The Castle of Otranto," a romance; "An Essay on Modern Gardening;" and "The Mysterious Mother," a tragedy. His best works were his letters, abounding in literary, social, and political gossip, witty, satirical, and wonderfully entertaining. Sir Walter Scott speaks of him as "the best letter-writer in the English language."

Born 1717; died in London, 1797.

WALSALL, wal'-sawl, a market-town, municipal and parliamentary borough of Staffordshire, 7 miles N.W. of Birmingham. The parish church is a handsome modern building, in the Early English style, with a lofty spire. Manf. Leather, harness-furniture, gas-tubes, tools, iron and brass bedsteads, firearms, and locks. Pop. 58,808.—A station on the London and North-Western railway.

WALTHAM, wawl'-tham, a town of Middlesex county, Massachusetts, United States, on the Charles river, 10 miles N.W. of Boston. Manf. Extensive; cotton cloth, hosiery, watches, machinery, paper, and boots and shoes. Pop. 11,712.

WALTHAM ABBEY, a market-town of Essex, on the Lea, 13 miles N. of London. The church is a large Norman structure, formerly belonging to an abbey, and said to have been the place of burial of Harold, after the battle of Hastings. There are gunpowder-mills. Pop. 5,200.—A station on the Great Eastern railway.

WALTON, IZAAK, wawl'-ton, the "father of angling," and a biographical writer. He kept a hosier's shop in Fleet Street, and afterwards in Chancery Lane, Clerkenwell, and elsewhere. His well-known work, "The Complete Angler; or, the Contemplative Man's Recreation," first appeared in 1653, and was afterwards enlarged by his friend and adopted son, Charles Cotton. He was also the author of the Lives of the English ecclesiastics Donne, Wotton, Hooker, Herbert, and Sanderson; a collection of the letters of Sir Henry Wotton, and some poetical pieces.

Born at Stafford, 1593; died at Winchester, 1683.

WALTON, a county of Florida, United States. Area, 1,480 square miles. Pop. 3,160. The capital is Euchee Anna.

WALTON, a county of Georgia, United States. Area, 320 square miles. Pop. 15,622, about 4,200 being colonred. The capital is Monroe.

WALWORTH, a new county of Dakota Territory, United States. Area, 900 square miles.

WALWORTH, a county of Wisconsin, United States. Area, 576 square miles. Pop. 26,500. The capital is Elkhorn.

WANDSWORTH, wonds'-werth, a village in the county of Surrey, on the Wandle, near the Thames, 4 miles S.W. of London. It is a busy manufacturing place, and there are many good residences in the vicinity. Manf. Chemicals, bolting-cloth, paper, vinegar, and linseed-oil. There are, also, calico-printing works, distilleries, iron-works, and flour-mills. Pop. 28,000. — A station on the South-Western railway.

WANTAGE, won'-taj, an ancient market-town of Berkshire, supposed to have been a Roman station in the Vale of the White Horse, so named from a gigantic figure cut on the side of a chalk hill, 26 miles W. of Reading. It is celebrated in history as the birthplace of Alfred the Great. In the time of the Saxons, it was a royal residence; and, after the Conquest, it was made a borough. Pop. 3,900. In 1849 a festival, commemorating the 1,000th year since the birth of Alfred, was held here, and in 1877 a statue of Alfred was inaugurated by the Prince and Princess of Wales.

WAPELLO, wa-pel'-lo, a county of Iowa, United States. Area, 432 square miles. Pop. 25,285. The capital is Ottumwa.

WARBECK, PERKIN, wawr'-bek, a pretender to the throne of England, said to have been the son of a Jew at Tournay, but by some writers supposed to have been an illegitimate son of Edward IV., to whom he bore a remarkable resemblance. Margaret, dowager duchess of Burgundy and Charles VIII. of France, encouraged him to represent himself as the duke of York, supposed to have been murdered in the Tower. In 1495 he went with a small following to England, but was compelled to retire into Scotland, where his assumed title was acknowledged by James IV., and where he married Lady Catherine Gordon, daughter of the earl of Huntley. He then appeared in Cornwall, where he was joined by 3,000 men, and marched to Exeter, which he besieged, announcing himself as Richard IV., king of England. He was defeated and taken prisoner, but his life was spared on his making a confession; but, having escaped and been retaken, he was put in the stocks and then confined in the Tower. He was hanged at Tyburn. Died 1499 WARSAW, wawr'-saw, a government of European Russia, in Poland, adjoining the Prussian province of Posen. It is a level and fertile country.

Rivers.—The Vistula, and its tributaries, the Bzura and Pilica.
Area.—5,622 square miles.
Pop.—940,998.

WARSAW, a capital of the government of the same name, and formerly capital of the kingdom of Poland, on the left bank of the Vistula, 320 miles E. of Berlin. It is surrounded by walls and ditches, has eight gates, and is commanded by a very strong citadel erected by the emperor Nicholas. A very fine iron bridge, built in 1865, connects the city with the fortified suburb of Praga, on the opposite side of the river. The city is generally well-built, and a large number of new structures have recently been erected. There are many good squares and open places. Saxon square has an obelisk in memory of the Poles, who remained faithful to Russia after the insurrection of 1830; Sigismund Square has a statue of Sigismund III. on a lofty column, and another fine open space, known as the Marievelle Bazaar, has an arcade with handsome shops. There are several noble avenues, planted with trees. The Roman Catholic cathedral dates from 1360, and there are about 20 other Catholic churches, a Greek cathedral, a noble Lutheran church, and several synagogues. The royal palace, built by Sigismund III., in the latter part of the 16th century, is a noble building on high ground overlooking the river. The Saxon palace was the residence of several kings of that line, and attached to it are extensive gardens open to the public. There are several other palaces, and the new government offices, the mint, and the theatre, are amongst the most noticeable buildings. The university, re-established in 1869, has an observatory and botanic gardens. There are also several gymnasiums, a school of design, and a conservatory of music, zoological garden and picture gallery. The suburbs of the city are extensively and well laid out. Manf. Woollen cloth, carpet, gold and silver ornaments, paper, hosiery, chemicals, machinery, pianofortes, carriages, and harness. It is the centre of industry, commerce, and literary activity, and the great entrepôt of commerce in Poland. Pop. 280,000, including 164,000 Catholics, 93,000 Jews, 14,000 Protestants, and 8,000 members of the Greek church.—This city is of very old date, but was long an insignificant place. In 1566 it succeeded Cracow as the capital of Poland. In 1793 Kosciusko retreated on Warsaw, and defended it with success against the Prussians during the summer of 1794; but on the arrival of Suwarrow and the Russians, Praga was taken by assault, and delivered to pillage. Since 1815, Warsaw has been the residence of a viceroy representing the emperor of Russia. In 1830 the Russians were driven from it by the Poles; but it was in the following year retaken.

WARTON, JOSEPH, wawr'-ton, a learned English divine and poet, who was educated at Winchester and Oxford, and became head master of Winchester school. He produced a volume of odes, a translation of Virgil, with notes, and an "Essay on the Genius and Writings of Pope." He also edited Pope and Dryden.

Born at Dunford, Surrey, 1722; died 1800.

WARTON, THOMAS, an English divine, poet, and critic, who was brother of the preceding. In 1757 he became professor of poetry in the university of Oxford, and in 1771 was presented to the vicarage of Kidlington, in Oxfordshire. In 1757 he was elected professor of poetry at Oxford, and in 1785 appointed poet laureat, and also Camden professor of modern history at Oxford. He wrote some elegant poems; a "History of English Poetry," the "Lives of Sir Thomas Pope and Dr. Bathurst;" "Notes on Milton's smaller Poems;" "Observations on Spencer's Faerie Queen," &c.

Born at Basingstoke, 1728; died at Oxford, 1790.

WARWICK, wor'-ik, chief town of Warwickshire, a muncipal and parliamentary borough, on the Avon, 20 miles S.E. of Birmingham. It is of great antiquity, and justly celebrated for the grandeur of its castle, one of the noblest baronial residences in England, and containing a magnificent collection of pictures, sculpture, and arms. Guy's tower, 128 feet high, was built in 1394, and Cæsar's tower, still more ancient, is 147 feet high. There are three churches, one of them (St. Mary's) an elegant structure, with a lofty tower; several chapels, a Roman Catholic church, a large county jail, the Earl of Leicester's hospital (an ancient building), and a grammar school. A considerable trade is carried on in cattle, corn, and provisions. Pop. 11,800.—A station on the Great Western railway.

WARWICK, a county of Virginia, United States. Area, 95 square miles. Pop. 1,700, about two-thirds being coloured. The capital is Warwick Courthouse.

WARWICK, a town of Rhode Island, United States, 10 miles S.W. of Providence. It includes several manufacturing villages. Manf. Cotton and woollen goods. Pop. 12,000.

WARWICK, a town of Queensland, Australia, on the Condamine, near the frontier of New South Wales, 100 miles S.W. of Brisbane. It is one of the most attractive towns in the colony, and the principal buildings are good. The surrounding district is a rich wheat-growing country. Pop. 4,000.

WARWICK, HENRY DE BEAUCHAMP, Earl and Duke of, was nominated premier earl of England by Henry VI. in 1444, and was, in the following year, crowned by Henry himself, king of the islands of Wight, Jersey, and Guernsey.

Died in 1445.

WARWICK, RICHARD NEVIL, Earl of, surnamed the "King-maker." While Lord Richard Nevil, he signalized himself in the expedition to the Scottish frontier in 1448. In 1455 he espoused the cause of the duke of York; and to his bravery was chiefly due the gaining of the battle of St. Albans in the same year. He was immediately afterwards created governor of Calais; and, while holding that office, defeated the fleet of the free town of Lübeck, capturing six of the vessels. In 1460 he returned to England. At the battle of Northampton, which was fought in the same year, the Lancastrians were defeated, and Henry VI. fell into the hands of the Yorkists, of which party Warwick was the main support. In 1461 Henry VI. regained his liberty, but Edward, duke of York, entered London with Warwick, and was proclaimed king as Edward IV. After performing a series of brilliant services in the cause of the new king, and conducting Henry VI. to the Tower of London, he was rewarded with the highest honours, and indeed became the ruler of the king and the kingdom. Edward IV., however, growing uneasy under the dominion of the haughty earl, formed connections by marriage, and raised to his favour persons adverse to Warwick, who, in turn, excited revolts in the kingdom, in connection with the duke of Clarence, who had married Warwick's daughter, and, at the battle of Olney, took Edward prisoner. On the after-success of the royalists, Warwick fled to France, where meeting Margaret of Anjou, wife of Henry VI., a reconciliation was effected, which was strengthened by the marriage of the queen's son, Prince Edward, to Anne, the daughter of Warwick. Soon afterwards Warwick invaded England; and Edward IV. having fled to Holland, he proclaimed Henry VI., who had been released from the Tower, king of England. The earl was created chamberlain and lord high admiral of England. But Edward IV., assisted by the duke of Burgundy, landed in Yorkshire, and gathering together an army, met the Lancastrians, under Warwick, at Barnet. The Lancastrians were defeated, Warwick perishing in the fight. His remains were exhibited during three days in St. Paul's, and then buried in Berkshire.

Born about 1420; died 1471.

WARWICKSHIRE, a midland county of England. It is bounded N.E. by Leicestershire, E. by Northamptonshire, S.E. by Oxfordshire, S.W. by Gloucestershire, W. by Worcestershire, and N.W. by Staffordshire. The general aspect is an agreeable alternation of hill and dale, eminently beautiful, and remarkably adapted to the purposes of agriculture. There are extensive pastures, and the principal woodlands are remains of the former great forest of Arden, in the middle, western, and northern districts; but nearly every division is interspersed with valuable and ornamental timber. The county is also noted for its grazing and dairy husbandry.

Rivers.—The Avon, Tame, Leam, Stour, and many small streams.

Minerals.—Coal, stone, lime, and marl. There are mineral springs at Leamington.

Area.—954 square miles.

Pop.—737,200.

Parliamentary Representation and Chief Towns.—Four members are returned for the two divisions of the county; 2 for Birmingham, 2 for Warwick, and 2 for Coventry. The chief towns are WARWICK (the county town), BIRMINGHAM, COVENTRY, LEAMINGTON, RUGBY, and STRATFORD-ON-AVON.

WASCO, was'-ko, a county of Oregon, United States. Area, 12,000 square miles. Pop. 11,120. The capital is the Dalles.

WASECA, wa-se'-ka, a county of Minnesota, United States. Area, 432 square miles. Pop. 12,385. The capital is Waseca.

WASHINGTON, GEORGE, wosh'-ing-ton, first president of the United States. He was descended from a family which had left England to settle in Virginia about 1657. His father, Mr. Augustine Washington, a man of considerable landed property, died when George, who was his eldest son by a second marriage, was in his 11th year. His education, obtained at an ordinary school, comprised little more than reading, writing, and arithmetic; but between his 14th and 16th years he studied geometry and surveying; in which he made considerable progress. He was a tall, athletic youth, bold and skilful in manly exercises. In his 16th year he left school, and devoted his attention to mathematics and practical surveying. In his 19th year he was appointed major in the provincial militia, in which capacity he was sent by General Dinwiddie, in 1753, to the French commander on the Ohio, to complain of the inroads that had been made, in violation of the treaties between the two nations. About this time he came into collision with, and defeated, a small detachment of the French forces, for which he was thanked by the House of Burgesses. In 1755 he served as colonel under general Braddock; on which occasion he exhibited proofs of his military courage and skill, particularly in conducting the retreat of the army, after the disastrous battle of Monongahela. He held the command of the Virginian troops till 1758, when he gave in his resignation on account of ill health. He next served his country as a senator. When the breach between Great Britain and her colonies became widened by mutual animosity beyond all prospect of reconciliation, the eyes of his countrymen were fixed upon Washington; and, accordingly, in June, 1775, he took the command of the army of America, at Cambridge, in New England. The history of Washington, from this period, is the history of the American war; he created the American army; with the assistance of French forces, fought the English generals, Howe, Clinton, Burgoyne, and Cornwallis, with various results; till, finally, he surrounded Cornwallis, in Yorktown, and caused him to capitulate. To his intrepidity, prudence, and moderation, the Americans were almost wholly indebted for the independence which was secured to them by the treaty of peace concluded in 1783. Soon after this event, Washington resigned his commission to Congress. He returned to his seat at Mount Vernon, and set himself to complete those favourite improvements in agriculture which had been suspended. In 1789 he was elected as the first president of the United States. His government was marked by that well-tempered prudence which distinguished all his conduct. Having been re-elected, he held office till 1797, when he again retired to his estate at Mount Vernon.

Born in Westmoreland county, Virginia, 1732; died at Mount Vernon, Virginia, 1799.

WASHINGTON, capital of the United States, in the district of Columbia, on the left bank of the Potomac (here a mile wide), at the angle formed by the junction of the Anacostia, or eastern branch, and separated on the west by Rock Creek from Georgetown, 35 miles S.W. of Baltimore. The town, which has an average height of 40 feet above the river, is laid out with great regularity, the streets (except those known as avenues), crossing at right angles. North, South, East, and West Capitol are main streets meeting at the Capitol, in the centre of the city. The cross streets are either numbered or lettered. There are 21 avenues named after states of the Union, crossing the streets diagonally. Most of these avenues are from 120 to 160 feet wide. Massachusetts avenue is the finest, and Pennsylvania avenue, crossing the city from east to west, is the chief business thoroughfare. Many of the streets and avenues are planted with trees; there are several squares, handsomely laid out, with fountains, shrubberies, and statues; and at the intersection of the principal streets and avenues are small open spaces, mostly ornamentally laid out. The Capitol, where the Senate and Congress sit, is on an elevated site, near the centre of the city. It comprises a central building, completed in 1825, and two wings completed in 1867. The entire length of the building is 751 feet, and the depth 348 feet. The main front, with three noble porticoes, is towards the east; and the great central cast-iron dome, 135 feet in diameter, rises to 287 feet above the basement, and is surmounted by a bronze statue of Liberty, 9 feet high. The Senate Chamber, and the hall of the House of Representatives, are noble chambers. In the semi-circular chamber formerly used as the Hall of Representatives, is a collection of historical statues. The Supreme Court occupies the hall formerly used for the meetings of the Senate. Beneath the dome is the rotunda, a circular hall, 96 feet in diameter, and containing a good collection of historical paintings. A pleasure-ground of 35 acres surrounds the Capitol. The president's house, popularly known as the White House, is in the western part of the city, with 75 acres of pleasure-grounds, extending to the river. The other more important buildings are the Treasury, to the east of the White House, in the Ionic style, 468 feet long, 264 feet wide, and with portico fronts on all the four sides; a new building, to the west of the White House, for the State, War, and Navy departments, in the Roman-Doric style, 471 feet long, and 253 feet wide, with four façades; the Department of the Interior, a fine Doric building, 453 feet long and 331 feet wide; the Post-office, of marble, in the Corinthian style; the Department of Agriculture, with museum and beautiful gardens; the Corcoran Art Building and the Smithsonian Institution. There are 117 churches and chapels. The United States Naval Observatory is in the western part of the city, near the river. There are two theatres, a masonic temple, several very handsome hotels, and five principal markets. There are a naval hospital, a soldier's home, and asylums for the insane and the deaf and dumb; Columbia University and Harvard University are in the outskirts. The Potomac is crossed by the "Long Bridge," for railway and ordinary traffic; the Anacostia by three bridges, and Rock Creek by four. There are two large railway stations, and the city is connected with all the leading lines of railway. Washington is supplied with water from the Potomac Falls, by an aqueduct 12 miles long. The Arsenal is at the extreme south point of the city, with grounds comprising 45 acres; and the Navy Yards, occupying 27 acres; and the Marine Barracks are on the Anacostia. The Washington monument is in the Park, and there are statues of President Lincoln (in Lincoln Park), General Jackson, and General Scott. Pop. 148,000, nearly 40,000 being coloured.—In 1791, the site of the city was selected by Washington, and the government was established here in 1800. The public buildings were partially destroyed by the British in 1814.

WASHINGTON, a western Territory of the United States, bounded N. by the Strait of Fuca (separating it from Vancouver Island) and British Columbia; S. by Oregon, E. by Idaho, and W. by the Pacific Ocean. The Cascade Mountains extend across the territory from Oregon to British Columbia. The highest peaks are Mount Rainer, 14,444 feet; Mount Baker, 11,100 feet; Mount St. Helen's, 9,750 feet, and Mount Adams, 9,570 feet. To the east of this range the surface is generally high and undulating, with an extension of the Blue Mountains on the south-eastern angle. The portion of the territory west of the Cascade range consists of the basins of the Columbia, the Chehalis, and Puget Sound. Near the Pacific are the Coast Mountains, the highest peak of which is Mount Olympus, 8,138 feet. The coast line on the Pacific is about 180 miles in length; on the Strait of Fuca, 80 miles; and on Puget Sound, 80 miles. The chief harbours are in Fuca Strait,—Port Discovery, Washington Harbour, New Dungeness Bay, Port Angeles, Clallam Bay, and Neah Bay. In the western part of the territory the climate is equable, with considerable rainfall near the Pacific coast; in the eastern part are greater extremes, but there is much less rain. The soil is generally fertile, and in some parts very rich. The mountain slopes of eastern Washington are covered with evergreen; in western Washington are large forests of pine, fir, cedar, and spruce. The islands of San Juan, Lopez, and Orcas, and other islands in Washington Sound, are included in the territory.

Rivers.—The chief is the Columbia. Its tributaries are Clarke's Fork, the Colville, Snake, Spokane, and Walla Walla, from the east; from the west, the Chelan, Methow, Nehoialpitkwu, Okinokane, Wenachee, and Yakoma; from the north, the Cathlapootle, Cowlitz, Lewis, and Washougal. Other rivers are the Chehalis, Quilbehute, Quinaiett, and Willopah, discharging into the Pacific; the Des Chutes, Duwamish, Nooksahk, Nisqueily, Pagallup, Skohomist, and Snohomish, falling into Puget Sound.

Minerals.—A small amount of gold, and bituminous coal.

Area.—69,994 square miles.

Pop.—75,500, besides about 13,000 tribal Indians. In respect of population, this number ranks extremely low.

Divisions and Chief Towns.—There are 24 counties. The chief towns are Olympia, the capital; Port Townsend, Tacoma, Kalama, and Vancouver.

History.—The first American settlement was made in 1845; and the district was made a Territory in 1853.

WASHITA, or OUACHITA, wosh'-i-taw', a river of the United States, rising by numerous heads in Arkansas, and, after a course of 550 miles, joining Red River 30 miles from its mouth. The chief affluents are the Saline, Bartholomew, La Fourche, and Tensas on the left bank, and the Little Missouri and Bayou d'Arbonne, on the right. Below its junction with the Tensas, it is called the Black River.

WASHENTAW, wosh'-en-taw, a county of Michigan, United States. Area, 720 square miles. Pop. 41,848. The capital is Ann Harbour.

WASHOE, wosh'-o, a county of Nevada, United States. Area, 2,316 square miles. Pop. 4,000. The capital is Reno.

WATAUGA, wa-taw'-ga, a county of North Carolina, United States. Area, 550 square miles. Pop. 8,160. The capital is Boone.

WATERBURY, waw'-ter-ber'-re, a town of Connecticut, United States, on the Naugatuck River, 75 miles N.E. of New York. The city hall is a fine structure; near the centre of the town is a public park, and on the opposite bank of the river is the Riverside cemetery, of 40 acres. The churches are handsome, and there is a large public library. Manf. Gilt buttons, brass and copper wire, pins, clocks, and elastic webbing. Pop. 17,806.

WATERFORD, waw'-ter-ford, a county of Ireland, province of Munster, bounded on the N. by Kilkenny and Tipperary, E. by Wexford, S. by the sea, and W. by Cork. The coast is generally bold and rocky, but has four good harbours: Waterford at the east, Youghal at the west, and Dungarvan and Tramore between them. The surface is mountainous, being intersected by the Knockmeledown and Cummeragh ranges, which rise in some parts to upwards of 2,500 feet above the level of the sea. Along the banks of the Suir it is fertile, and it is the principal county in Ireland for dairy produce. There are extensive fisheries.

Rivers.—The Suir, Blackwater, and Bride.

Minerals.—Lead, iron, copper, limestone, and marble.

Area.—713 square miles.

Pop.—213,235.

Parliamentary Representation and Chief Towns.—Two members are returned for the county and 2 for Waterford. The chief towns are WATERFORD, Dungarvan, and Youghal.

WATERFORD, a city and seaport of Ireland, capital of the above county, on the right bank of the Suir, which joins the Barrow, and forms Waterford harbour, 62 miles from Cork. Ferrybank, a suburb on the opposite bank of the river, is connected with it by a wooden bridge of thirty-nine arches. There are a Roman Catholic cathedral, parochial churches, besides other places of worship, numerous charitable institutions, a fine court-house, exchange, and custom-house. The quay is nearly a mile long, and the finest in Ireland, and vessels of 2,000 tons can discharge. The harbour is deep and spacious. Manf. White glass, starch, and blue, with breweries and distilleries. The exports, chiefly to England, are beef, butter, hides, tallow, pork, and corn. Ship-building is carried on. Pop. 22,457.

WATERLOO, waw'-ter-loo, a village of Belgium, 8 miles S.E. of Brussels. It is noted for the defeat of the French under Napoleon by the allies under Wellington in the memorable battle of the 18th June, 1815.

WATERLOO, a county of Ontario province, Canada. Area, 530 square miles. Pop. 42,740, of whom 22,000 are of German descent. The capital is Berlin.

WATERTOWN, waw'-ter-town, a city and county seat of Jefferson county, New York, United States, on the Black river, 10 miles above its mouth, on Lake Ontario. It is handsomely laid out, the wide streets planted with maples, and there are many handsome public buildings. The river divides the city into two portions connected by an iron suspension and two other bridges, and the fall of the river affords valuable water-power. The surrounding district is rich in iron and limestone. Manf. Steam-engines, sewing and knitting machines, paper, carriages, and joinery. There are large flour-mills. Pop. 10,000.

WATERTOWN, a city of Wisconsin, United States, on both sides of Rock river, which is spanned by six bridges. The surrounding district is very productive. There are 16 churches, the large north-western (Lutheran) university, and a Roman Catholic college. Pop. 7,883.

WATFORD, wot'-ford, a market-town of Herts, near a ford over the Colne, 18 miles N.W. of London. The church is a spacious building, containing some fine monuments. Manf. Straw-plait and paper; a good malting trade is carried on. Pop. 10,073.—A station on the London and North-Western railway.

WATONWAN, wa'-ton-wan, a county of Minnesota, United States. Area, 432 square miles. Pop. 5,100. The capital is Madelia.

WATT, JAMES, wot, a Scotch mechanician, and the great improver of the steam-engine. It is related of him that he was "no common child;" in his 6th year he solved a geometrical problem: when he had attained his 14th, his mind was continually occupied with the prosecution of experiments in natural philosophy. Having, during many years, earnestly investigated the properties and powers of steam, chiefly with the view of applying it to the moving of wheel carriages, he began his immortal discoveries by improving Newcomen's steam-engine. Having given up his instrument-making business, he resolved to make these avocations his pursuit; accordingly, he was engaged to survey a projected canal between the Forth and the Clyde, another from the Monkland coal-mines to Glasgow, and also to devise improvements in the navigation of the Clyde, the Crinan canal, as well as in the harbours of Port Glasgow, Greenock, and Ayr. Early in the year 1774 he entered into partnership with Matthew Boulton, in whose great factory at Soho, near Birmingham, he found those facilities which were requisite to enable him to perfect and manufacture his improved steam-engines. By the year 1800, at which time he retired from business, the steam-engine was in use throughout the United Kingdom. Among the less-elaborated inventions which emanated from him may be cited the copying-press, a steam drying machine; improvements in bleaching, and a machine for copying sculpture, which last was matured after he had entered his 80th year. He revised and annotated the articles "Steam" and "Steam-engine" for the "Encyclopædia Britannica," and was the author of a valuable mass of correspondence relative to his different inventions. Watt was a member of the Royal Societies of London and Edinburgh, a correspondent of the French Institute, and was enrolled among the associates of the Academy of Sciences at Paris. A statue to his memory was set up in Westminster Abbey in 1824. Statues to his honour have likewise been erected at Manchester, Glasgow, and Greenock.

Born at Greenock, 1736; died at Heathfield, near Soho, 1819.

WATTS, ISAAC, an English dissenting divine, who, in 1696, became tutor to the son of Sir John Hartop, and two years later was chosen assistant minister to the Independent congregation in Mark Lane, London. In 1712 he went to reside in the family of Sir Thomas Abney, a London alderman, at Stoke Newington, and remained there 36 years. His principal works were, "A Treatise on Logic," an "Essay on the Improvement of the Mind," "Introduction to Astronomy and Geography," Hymns, a poetical version of the Psalms, and "Divine Songs for Children," which have maintained great popularity. A statue to his memory has been erected at Southampton.

Born at Southampton, 1674; died 1748.

WAUKESHA, waw-ke-shaw', a county of Wisconsin, United States. Area, 576 square miles. Pop. 30,000. The capital is Waukesha.

WAUPACA, waw-pa-kaw', a county of Wisconsin, United States. Area, 720 square miles. Pop. 20,000. The capital is Waupaca.

WAUSHARA, waw-sha-raw', a county of Wisconsin, United States. Area, 648 square miles. Pop. 12,600. The capital is Wautama.

WAYNE, ANTHONY, wane, an American general, who greatly distinguished himself under Washington, and received the thanks of Congress and a gold medal for the capture of Stony Point in 1779. He afterwards assisted in the capture of Cornwallis, and in 1792 was commander-in-chief in the war against the western Indians, and Indian commissioner. His reckless courage gained him the nickname of "mad Anthony Wayne."

Born in Pennsylvania, 1745; died 1796.

WAYNE, the name of 15 counties of the United States:—

GEORGIA.—Area, 594 square miles. Pop. 5,980. The capital is Jesup.

ILLINOIS.—Area, 720 square miles. Pop. 21,291. The capital is Fairfield.

INDIANA.—Area, 420 square miles. Pop. 38,613. The capital is Richmond.

IOWA.—Area, 510 square miles. Pop. 16,127. The capital is Corydon.

WEST VIRGINIA.—Area, 415 square miles. Pop. 14,739. The capital is Wayne Court House.

WEAKLEY, week'-le, a county of Tennessee, United States. Area, 550 square miles. Pop.

24,538, about one-fifth being coloured. The capital is Dresden.

WEARMOUTH, BISHOP. (See BISHOP-WEARMOUTH.)

WEBB, a county of Texas, United States. Area, 1,200 square miles. Pop. 5,273. The chief place is Laredo.

WEBER, KARL MARIA FRIEDRICH ERNST VON, vā'-bair, a German musical composer, son of an eminent violinist, by whom, at an early age, he was instructed in the science. In his 12th year he published six fughetti; and, after receiving further instruction, he wrote an opera, some songs, and sonatas. A second opera, entitled "The Wood-Girl," by him, was played in 1800. A third followed in 1801; shortly after which he went to Vienna, where he became acquainted with Haydn, and received some instruction from the Abbé Vogler. By the advice of this celebrated teacher, Weber spent two years in the study and analysis of the works of the great masters. He subsequently became music-director at Breslau, and in 1806 was requested by Prince Eugene of Wurtemburg to take up his residence at Carlsruhe. In 1822 he produced at Berlin his finest opera, "Der Freischutz." "Euryanthe," another of his operas, was first played at Vienna in 1823. In 1825 he visited London, and produced at Covent Garden theatre his "Oberon." Stricken with pulmonary disease, his health became so shattered, that he died in a few months after coming to England.

Born at Eutin, near Lubeck, 1786; died in London, 1826.

WEBSTER, DANIEL, web'-ster, American orator, statesman, and lawyer, who, having studied the law, was admitted to practice in 1805. He was, in 1813, elected to Congress, where he sat until 1817. In 1822 he again entered Congress. In 1828 he was elected to the Senate of the United States, and, in 1836, was an unsuccessful candidate for the presidentship. Subsequently to his making a tour through England and France, he was appointed secretary of state under President Harrison. While holding this office, he, in 1842, negotiated with Lord Ashburton the Oregon treaty. He retired from the ministry in the following year, but again took his seat in the Senate in 1845. In 1850 he was once more nominated secretary of state, and retained the post until his death. A sound lawyer and statesman, he was also one of the greatest orators which his country has produced.

Born in New Hampshire, 1782; died at Marshfield, Massachusetts, 1852.

WEBSTER, JOHN, an eminent English dramatic poet, of whose birth and education nothing is known. He at the outset of his career wrote plays with Dekker, Drayton, Heywood, and others, and, in 1612, produced his first unassisted work, called "The White Devil." The "Duchess of Malfi" and "Appius and Virginia" were subsequently written. His fame as a dramatic writer is chiefly founded upon these works.

Lived in the 16th and 17th centuries.

WEBSTER, the name of 7 counties of the United States;—

GEORGIA.—Area, 325 square miles. Pop. 5,237, nearly half being coloured. The capital is Preston.

IOWA.—Area, 1,080 square miles. Pop. 15,951. The capital is Fort Dodge.

KENTUCKY.—Area, 290 square miles. Pop. 14,246, about 1,500 being coloured. The capital is Dixon.

LOUISIANA.—Area, 550 square miles. Pop. 10,005 more than half being coloured. The capital is Minden.

MISSOURI.—Area, 575 square miles. Pop. 12,175. The capital is Marshfield.

NEBRASKA.—Area, 576 square miles. Pop. 7,104. The capital is Red Cloud.

WEST VIRGINIA.—Area, 400 square miles. Pop. 3,207. The capital is Webster Court House.

WEDDERBURNE, ALEXANDER, wed'-der-burn, Baron Loughborough and Earl of Rosslyn, jurist, was admitted to the English bar at the age of 19, and rapidly rose to eminence. He was appointed solicitor-general in 1771, attorney-general in 1778, and chief justice of the Common Pleas in 1780. In 1793 he became Lord Chancellor in the Pitt ministry. On resigning office in 1801 he was created Earl of Rosslyn.

Born at Edinburgh, 1733; died 1805.

WEDGWOOD, JOSIAH, wedj'-wood, English potter, who, in 1759, established himself in a small manufactory at Burslem, and turned his attention to the production of ornamental articles of pottery. Opening an establishment in the metropolis, he became celebrated for his sculptures, vases, and copies of seals and medallions. In 1771 he united his several manufactories into one great establishment, which he had previously formed at Etruria, near Newcastle-under-Lyme. His ware, and the fine-art copies which he produced, soon became famous throughout Europe. He was elected a fellow of the Royal Society, and of the Society of Antiquaries.

Born at Burslem, Staffordshire, 1731; died at Etruria, 1795.

WEDNESBURY, wenz'-ber-e, a market town and parliamentary borough of Staffordshire, near the source of the river Tame, 7 miles N.W. of Birmingham. It is a place of great antiquity, and was known as Wednesbury by the Saxons. There is an elegant church in the pointed style of architecture. Manf. Railway plant, coach ironmongery, edge-tools, locks, screws, gas and water pipes, gun-locks and barrels, and cast-iron work of every description. Pop. 24,564.—A station on the London and North-Western and Great Western railways.

WEIMAR, vi'-mar, a city of Germany, capital of the grand-duchy of Saxe-Weimar, on the Ilm, 53 miles S.W. of Leipsic. The grand ducal residence is situate to the east of the town, with a park extending along the banks of the Ilm, and open to the public. Another ducal residence is situate on a delightful eminence to the south. There are a public library, a museum, and monuments of Goethe, Schiller, Herder, Wieland, and other celebrities connected with the town. Manf. Metallic goods, gloves, woven fabrics, and cards. It has also a trade in corn and wool; but the principal resource of the inhabitants flows from the presence of the court and visitors. Pop. 21,213.

WEISSENFELS, vise'-en-fels, a town of Germany, province of Saxony, on the right bank of the Saale, 19 miles S.W. of Halle. Pop. 19,654.

WELD, a county of Colorado, United States. Area, 11,000 square miles. Pop. 5,646. The capital is Greeley.

WELLAND, wel'-land, a county of Ontario province, Canada. Area, 305 square miles. Pop. 26,000. The capital is Welland.

WELLESLEY, RICHARD COLLEY, Marquis, wells'-le, a British statesman, was the eldest son of the first earl of Mornington. On coming of age, he entered the Irish House of Lords, and continued to sit therein until the Union, before which event he was elected to the British House of Commons. Attracting the notice of George III., he was nominated one of the lords of the Treasury, and was eventually created a baron in the British and marquis in the Irish peerage. In 1797 he was appointed governor-general of India, a position in which he displayed great administrative talent, destroying the power of Tippoo Saib and the Mahratta princes, and greatly improving the internal and financial condition of India. The marquis was permitted to resign the governor-generalship in 1805, and, returning to England, he resumed his parliamentary career, was for a short period ambassador to Spain, and in 1809, at the request of the king, whose friendship for him was very great, undertook the office of secretary of state for foreign affairs, and held it until 1812. For nearly seven years he held the appointment of lord-lieutenant of Ireland, and in 1833, five years after his resignation of it, was reappointed, holding the office, on this second occasion, for about a year. His last public employment was in the second ministry of Lord Melbourne, in which he held the appointment of lord chamberlain.

Born at Dublin, 1760; died in London, 1842.

WELLINGTON, ARTHUR WELLESLEY, Duke of, an illustrious British military commander and eminent statesman. He was the third son of the earl of Mornington, by Anne, daughter of Arthur Viscount Dungannon. The family name was Wesley, which had been assumed by the duke's grandfather, Richard Colley, Esq., on succeeding, by bequest, in 1728, to the estates of Garret Wesley, Esq., of Dangan Castle, in the county of Meath, Ireland. As Arthur Wesley—for so he continued to style himself until 1797, at which time the paternal designation was changed to Wellesley by the first marquis—he received his education at Eton college, afterwards from a private tutor at Brighton, and finally at the military academy of Angers, in France. He obtained his first commission as ensign in the 73rd regiment of foot in 1787. After representing the borough of Trim, in the county of Meath, in the Irish parliament, and afterwards acting as aide-de-camp to the earl of Westmoreland, lord-lieutenant of Ireland, he, in 1794, went upon his first active service as lieutenant-colonel of the 33rd regiment, having been ordered to join the forces of the duke of York in the Netherlands. In 1797, having obtained the rank of colonel, he landed in India. His career may be said to have commenced under the most favourable auspices; for, in 1798, his eldest brother arrived at Calcutta as governor-general of India. In 1799 Wellesley was nominated governor of Seringapatam and of the Mysore; in which position he highly distinguished himself, both in the field and as an administrator. In 1803 he fought and gained the splendid victory of Assaye, where, with 8,000 men, he defeated the forces of Scindia, amounting to 30,000. He next compelled the rajah of Berar to sue for peace. The following year he repaired to Bombay, where an address was presented to him, in which he was styled as equally great in the cabinet and in the field; from the British residents at Calcutta he received a sabre worth £1,000, whilst the army of the Deccan subscribed to present him with a service of plate of the value of 2,000 guineas; and, having received the thanks of both houses of parliament, and been knighted, he, in 1805, set sail for England. Towards the close of the same year, he was appointed to the command of a brigade in the German Expedition under Lord Cathcart; but in a few months the English returned, without having been engaged with the enemy. In 1806 he married Lady Catherine Pakenham, second daughter of the Earl of Longford; in 1807 he became secretary for Ireland, was elected to the House of Commons, and, in the same year, participated in the Copenhagen expedition as brigadier, his division routing the Danes at Kioge, which town fell into his hands. Returning to England shortly afterwards, he resumed his seat in the House of Commons, and his post as secretary for Ireland. In 1808 he was created lieutenant-general, and given the command of the army to be dispatched to the Peninsula. He was afterwards superseded in the chief command by Sir Harry Burrard, and after the convention of Cintra, to which he strongly objected, Sir Arthur Wellesley resigned his command, and returned to England. But when, in 1809, Napoleon, after having burst into Spain, had occupied Madrid, and after Soult had marched against Sir John Moore with an overpowering force, the national enthusiasm demanded that a great blow should be struck on land, and to Sir Arthur Wellesley was given the sole command of the war. On arriving in Portugal, he took the field with a force of about 25,000 men, and immediately proceeded to drive Soult from Oporto, the French marshal being disastrously routed. That was the first of the grand series of brilliant victories by which the Peninsular war was marked. He now entered Spain, formed a junction with Cuesta, the Spanish general, and fought and won the battle of Talavera, with 22,000 Englishmen against 50,000 Frenchmen. For this victory, he was created Baron Douro of Wellesley, and Viscount Wellington of Talavera. But, not being able to count upon the assistance of his Spanish allies, and with four French armies bearing down upon him from all sides, he resolved to withdraw into Portugal, where, soon afterwards, he constructed the famous lines of Torres Vedras, by which he kept Lisbon in security, and dashed back the impetuous onslaught of the French with complete success. A series of brilliant victories followed, Badajoz and Ciudad Rodrigo were taken, and the battle of Salamanca was the most decisive victory the English commander had yet won in Spain. A month later he entered Madrid in triumph, and afterwards received from his sovereign the title of marquis. With several powerful French armies in the field, each of them as numerous as his own, Wellington, having failed to take Burgos, retreated to his old quarters within the frontiers of Portugal, and there spent the winter of 1812—that winter during which Napoleon had lost 350,000 men beneath Russian snows. The campaign of 1813 opened auspiciously. The emperor, owing to his disasters in Russia, had been compelled to recall Soult from Spain, together with 20,000 men. There were thus left to oppose Wellington about 70,000 men; but there were about 100,000 more in different parts of Spain, under Suchet and other commanders. The brilliant victories of Vittoria and the Pyrenees drove the French from the Peninsula, and in November, 1813, Wellington descended into France, pursuing his conquering course to Toulouse, from which, after some desperate fighting, Soult was driven. With this engagement the Peninsular war may be said to have ended. In 1814, after an absence of five years, the great commander, now the duke of Wellington, landed in England, where his reception was unprecedentedly brilliant. His next employments were diplomatic. For a short time ambassador at the restored Bourbon court at Paris, he, at the commencement of the year 1815, attended the general congress of European powers at Vienna. The deliberations of that brilliant assembly were suddenly broken up by the news that Napoleon had quitted the island of Elba, and entered France. The duke of Wellington was nominated commander-in-chief of the army to be concentrated in the Netherlands, and the crowning victory of Waterloo followed, and the great continental war came to a termination, having lasted during twelve years. On his return to England, the duke of Wellington was received with all the honours that a grateful and enthusiastic nation could devise. In addition to the sums he had already received,—about half a million,—a grant of £200,000 was voted for the purchase of the mansion and estate of Strathfieldsaye, in Hampshire. The king of the Netherlands conferred on him the title of Prince of Waterloo. In 1818 he was made field-marshal of Austria, Prussia, and Russia; and in 1819 appointed master-general of ordnance. With the year 1822 the duke entered upon his life as a statesman. In 1827 he succeeded the duke of York as commander-in-chief, was prime minister from January, 1828, to November, 1830, and in 1842 resumed the office of commander-in-chief, retaining it until his death. His opposition to the Reform Bill made him for a time very unpopular, and his residence, Apsley House, was attacked. In 1834 he was installed chancellor of the university of Oxford, and in the same year became secretary of state for foreign affairs. Afterwards as minister without office, he supported the free-trade measures of Sir Robert Peel. He died quietly and unexpectedly at Walmer Castle, where he occasionally resided as Lord Warden of the Cinque Ports, and his remains were interred, with every public honour, in St. Paul's cathedral.

Born in Ireland, 1769; died at Walmer Castle, 1852.

WELLINGTON, wel'-ling-ton, a market-town of Somersetshire, 7 miles S.W. of Taunton. Its church is a handsome Gothic building, 110 feet in length and 51 in breadth; it contains several monuments. Manf. Woollens and earthenware. Pop. 6,360.—A station on the Great Western railway. This town gave the title to the duke of Wellington, and on a hill 3 miles south is an obelisk, which commemorates the battle of Waterloo.

WELLINGTON, a market-town of Shropshire, 10 miles E. of Shrewsbury. There is a large market-hall, with town-house and assembly-rooms. In the neighbourhood are coal and iron-mines, nail and glass-works, and smelting-furnaces. Pop. 6,202.—A station on the Great Western railway.

WELLINGTON, a county of Ontario province, Canada. Area, 1,278 square miles. Pop. 73,535, there being large proportions of both Scotch and Irish. The capital is Guelph.

WELLINGTON, the capital and seat of government of New Zealand, having maintained its position as the first settlement of the New Zealand Company in 1839, since which time it has held the lead with which it thus commenced. In common with other colonial cities, it has vigorously engaged in laying the foundation of permanent prosperity, having the advantage of a secure harbour, with a surface of 36 square miles. Its substantial and commodious buildings include Government House, the Houses of Parliament, the Supreme Court, postal and telegraph offices, hospital, college and high schools. Religious buildings, cathedrals, churches and chapels evince the activity of English Episcopalian, Roman Catholic and dissenting bodies. Institutes, museums, theatres and excellent hotels combine with banks, mercantile and manufacturing establishments to make up a goodly city of much promise. Gas and water are well supplied; tramways contribute their facilities to interior traffic; and railway communication gives ready access to provincial districts. Lat. 41° 16′ S. Lon. 174° 47′ E. Pop. of city, 20,563; including suburbs, 23,000.

WELLS, wels, a city, municipal, and parliamentary borough of Somersetshire, at the southern base of the Mendip Hills, 15 miles S.W. of Bath. It is chiefly noted for its beautiful cathedral, begun in 704 and completed in 1239, chiefly in the Early English style, but with a noble west front in the Gothic style, enriched with 300 statues. Its internal length from east to west is 381 and its breadth 131 feet. In the centre of the transepts rises a large quadrangular tower, 178 feet high. It contains numerous monuments. Pop. 4,520.—A station on the Great Western railway.

WELLS, a county of Indiana, United States. Area, 372 square miles. Pop. 18,442. The capital is Bluffton.

WENTWORTH, a county of Ontario province, Canada. Area, 454 square miles. Pop. 30,991. The capital is Hamilton.

WESEL, vai'-sel, a town of Prussia, Rhine province, on the right bank of the Rhine, near the confluence of the Lippe, 30 miles from Dusseldorf. It is strongly fortified, with a good citadel, commanding the bridge of boats across the river. There are five churches, that of St. Willibrod being a fine Gothic structure, a famous gymnasium, and the Berlin gate has statues of Minerva and Hercules. It has a commodious port, and steamers ply between it and Amsterdam. It formerly belonged to the Hanseatic league. Manf. Sugar, stearine, paper, tobacco, and nails. There is a good shipping and inland trade. Pop. 20,593, half Protestant and half Roman Catholic.

WESLEY, JOHN, an English divine, the founder of Methodism. He was the son of Samuel Wesley, a clergyman of the Church of England, and was educated at the Charterhouse: whence he removed to Christ Church College, Oxford; but, in 1726, was chosen fellow of Lincoln College, where he became an eminent tutor and Greek lecturer. In 1730 he and his brother Charles, with a few others, formed themselves into a small society for the purpose of mutual edification in religious exercises. Among other names bestowed upon the members, that of Methodists was applied to them with such success, as to continue to distinguish all their followers to the present time. With his brother and some others he went to Georgia, in North America, in 1735, with a view of converting the Indians. After a stay there of nearly two years, he returned to England, and, having had his religious opinions strengthened by association with the Moravians, commenced preaching to open-air meetings, and gathered many followers. The churches being shut against him, he built spacious meeting-houses in London, Bristol, and other places. For some time he was united with George Whitefield; but, differences arising on account of the doctrine of election, which was zealously espoused and preached by the latter, they separated, Whitefield becoming the head of the Calvinistic and Wesley of the Arminian Methodists. Wesley was indefatigable in his labours, and was almost continually engaged in travelling over England, Wales, Scotland, and Ireland. For fifty years he laboured zealously and continuously in the cause which he had undertaken, producing wonderful effect by his preaching. Every moment of his life was devoted to the organization of the great sect of Methodists, and he preserved his influence over it to the last. He published hymns, sermons, political tracts, and controversial pieces against the Calvinists and Moravians; and was the author of a large number of works in other departments of literature. His preaching was extemporaneous, but not vehement, and his manners were courteous, and free from austerity. In his 58th year he married a rich widow, but the union was not productive of happiness.

Born at Epworth, Lincolnshire, 1703; died in London, 1791.

WESLEY, CHARLES, an English divine, and younger brother of the preceding. He was one of the first Methodists, and continued a constant preacher among them till his death. He wrote several hymns, which are still favourites, and other pious pieces of great excellence.

Born at Epworth, 1708; died in London, 1788.

WEST BATON ROUGE, a county of Louisiana, United States. Area, 225 square miles. Pop. 8,000, about two-thirds being coloured. The capital is Allain.

WEST BROMWICH, a town of South Staffordshire, 5 miles N. W. of Birmingham. (See BROMWICH, WEST.) It is rapidly increasing in importance, and the public buildings are good. Manf. Glass, ironware, gun-barrels, locks, kettles, saucepans, &c. Pop. 56,299.—A station on the London and North Western and Great Western railways.

WESTBURY, west-ber'-re, a parliamentary borough of Wiltshire, 30 miles N.W. of Salisbury. The church dates from the 13th century. Manf. Woollen cloth. There are iron mines in the vicinity. Pop. 6,000.—A station on the Great Western Railway.

WEST CHESTER, a county of New York, United States. Area, 500 square miles. Pop. 108,988. The capital is White Plains.

WEST CHESTER, capital of Chester county, Pennsylvania, United States, 23 miles W. of Philadelphia. The public buildings are very handsome. Pop. 4,000.

WESTERN AUSTRALIA, a British colony including all that portion of the Australian continent situated to the westward of 129° east longitude, between the parallels of 13° 44′ and 35° south. The greatest length of this territory is 1,280 miles from north to south, and 800 from east to west. This is the largest of the Australian colonies. The occupied portion is about 600 miles in length from north to south, by about 150 miles in average breadth, and lies between Albany (King George's Sound) in the south, and the Murchison, in the north, between the 28th and 35th parallels of south latitude. A settlement, rapidly increasing in population, has been formed in the neighbourhood of Shark's Bay, a large inlet, situated in longitude 114° E.; latitude 26° S. The coast-line extends for a distance of about 3,000 miles, is mostly flat, and is indented by many bays, creeks and rivers, and fringed by numerous islands. A line of coral reefs girds a considerable portion of the coast, and protects it from the Indian Ocean. Between these reefs and the land there is in many places safe anchorage. The chief inlets and headlands are mentioned in the general description of AUSTRALIA. There are three distinct parallel ranges of mountains; the highest has an altitude of 3,000 feet above the sea-level. No volcanoes, active or extinct, exist in any part. The soil consists of vast tracts of sand and scrub, with much land suitable for sheep-grazing purposes, and also for farming operations. This latter applies particularly to the eastern side of the Roe and Darling Ranges. In the north, too, there are extensive grassy downs, capable of depasturing vast numbers of sheep and cattle. The presence of poisonous plants, however, is one of the greatest drawbacks in the country to stock raising. The greater extent of the seaboard is separated from the interior by low ranges of hills, running parallel to it and covered with forests, principally of jarrah. The fertile land exists in patches, and some of it is of a very rich character. Flowers and fruits from all parts of the world flourish luxuriantly. The vegetables of England grow to great perfection, and may be cultivated at almost any season. In the interior are vast tracts of desert. (See AUSTRALIA.) The climate is one of the finest and most salubrious in the world. From the northern to the southern extremity it varies considerably; the southern temperature is somewhat similar to that of England, but higher, but the heat is of a kind which can be borne without much inconvenience; the northern is hot, but not unpleasant, the atmosphere being free from moistness, and tempered with cool breezes; the climate of the central portion of the colony is like that of Southern Italy and parts of Spain. The seasons are divided into wet and dry, the former commencing in April and lasting till September. A greater part of this time of year, however, is bright and clear. The pearl fisheries on the north-western coast are important, pearls and shells of the value of about £70,000 being annually exported. Horses, gum, resin, sandalwood and tortoiseshell are also exported.

Rivers and Lakes.—There are numerous rivers available for useful purposes awaiting development. There are no lakes, but only lagoons.

Minerals.—Gold, found in small quantities; lead, copper, iron and plumbago are abundant, and some silver has been worked.

Area.—978,000 square miles, about eight times the size of the United Kingdom.

Pop.—33,000.

Divisions and Chief Towns.—There are 23 counties. The most important towns are PERTH (the capital), and FREMANTLE.

Constitution and Government.—A governor is appointed by the crown, and is assisted by an executive council consisting of the officer in command of the forces, the colonial secretary, surveyor-general and attorney-general. There is also a legislative council, consisting of the three last-named officials, six nominee members and sixteen elected members.

Railways, &c.—The small population gives very little encouragement to the construction of railways, but the government have ventured upon making a few miles by way of initiative. On the contrary, telegraphic communication is exceptionally extensive.

Religion and Education.—The Church of England embraces more than half the population, Roman Catholics are numerous, and Protestant Dissenters remarkably few. The two former have their bishops and cathedrals; the latter sects are much dispersed. Elementary schools are upon a mixed system, some being under government management, while others are assisted, amongst which the Roman Catholic greatly predominate. For advanced education a High School has been established by Act of Parliament.

History.—The colony was first taken possession of in 1826, and the following year a small settlement was made at Swan River (by which name the colony was at first known) In 1850, by the desire of the settlers, convicts were sent out, and between that time and 1868, when transportation ceased, nearly 10,000 prisoners had been sent out, and chiefly employed by the settlers, to the great advantage of the colony.

WEST FELICIANA, fe-lis'-i-an-a, a county of Louisiana, United States. Area, 350 square miles. Pop. 12,500, more than 10,000 being coloured. The capital is St. Francisville.

WESTMEATH, west'-meeth, a county of Ireland, province of Leinster, bounded on the N. by Cavan, E. by Meath, S. by King's county, N.W. by Longford, and W. by the river Shannon, which, separates it from Roscommon. It is undulating, and interspersed with woods, lakes and bogs.

Much of the soil, however, is fertile, and the scenery agreeable. Oats and potatoes, with some wheat, are cultivated. Flour and meal are made in large quantities; but grazing and dairy farming are the principal occupations.

Rivers.—The Shannon and Boyne.
Area.—678 square miles.
Pop.—71,513.
Parliamentary Representation and Chief Towns.—Two members are returned for the county, and 1 for Athlone. The chief towns are MULLINGAR (the capital), and ATHLONE.

WESTMINSTER. (See LONDON.)

WESTMORELAND, west'-mor-land, a county of England, bounded on the N. by the counties of Durham and Cumberland, W. by Cumberland and Lancashire, S. by Lancashire and Yorkshire, and E. by Yorkshire and Durham. It is a region of lofty mountains and bleak moors, but the valleys in which the rivers run are tolerably fertile, especially on the south-western side, which has a warmer climate than the eastern. These two sides, where the fertility lies, are divided by lofty fells and moors, intersected with pastoral vales. The Pennine chain stretches across the north-eastern part of the county, and then forms the Yorkshire boundary; and the Cumbrian mountains extend a spur through the centre. Helvellyn, on the borders of Cumberland, attains an elevation of upwards of 3,000 feet above the level of the sea. The other lofty mountains are Cross-fell and Bow. The climate is generally humid, owing to its contiguity to the Western Ocean. Turnips, clover, and wheat are the principal crops. In some parts considerable portions of land are covered with coppices, consisting principally of oak, ash, alder, birch, and hazel. Cattle and sheep are numerous, and geese are reared on the mountains in large numbers for exportation.

Rivers and Lakes.—The chief streams are the Kent, Eden, and Lune. The lakes are extensive, and the lake district is celebrated for the beauty of the scenery, which attracts thousands of visitors. The chief lakes are Grasmere, Rydal Water, Ullswater (part of which is in Cumberland), and Windermere.
Area.—783 square miles.
Pop.—64,200.
Parliamentary Representation and Chief Towns.—Two members are returned for the county. APPLEBY is the county town, and other towns of importance are KENDAL and Kirkby-Lonsdale.

WESTON-SUPER-MARE, ma'-re, a seaport and watering-place of Somerset, at the mouth of the Severn, on the Bristol Channel. It is handsomely laid out in crescents and terraces, and the churches and other public buildings are elegant. Pop. 12,882.—A station on the Great Western railway.

WESTPHALIA, west-fai'-le-a, a western province of Prussia, bounded N.W. by Holland, and on the other side by Hanover and the Rhine provinces. It is generally mountainous, having the Weser mountains on the north and north-east, and the district known as Sawerland in the south, where an elevation of 2,750 feet is obtained. Another range, the Teutoburg Forest, also traverses the province. The river valleys are fertile.

Rivers.—The Weser, Ems, Lippe, and Ruhr.
Minerals.—Coal and iron.
Area.—7,800 square miles.
Pop.—2,643,442, including 17,000 Jews.
Divisions and Chief Towns.—The province is divided into 5 districts. The chief towns are MINDEN (the capital), BIELEFELD, DORTMUND, SOEST, and Paderborn.

WEST VIRGINIA, a state of the United States, bounded N. by Pennsylvania and Maryland, S. and E. by Virginia, and W. by Kentucky. A large portion of the state is mountainous and hilly, the hills being fertile to the tops. The Alleghany range, extending along the eastern border, is the most elevated part; and nearly parallel to it, at a distance of from 20 to 40 miles, is another lofty range. The general slope of the country is towards the Ohio. About two-thirds of the surface is covered with forests of oak, pine, poplar, hemlock, walnut, and other valuable timber.

Rivers.—The Potomac (forming a part of the boundary between the state and Maryland), and its tributaries; and the Big Sandy, Great Kanawha, Little Kanawha, Guyandotte, and Monongahela, with numerous affluents.
Minerals.—The great Alleghany coal field underlies nearly three-fourths of the state. Iron ore, petroleum, salt, limestone, fire-clay, and potters' clay, are also abundant, and alum and copperas are found. There are many sulphur springs.
Area.—23,000 square miles.
Pop.—618,500, about 18,000 being coloured. In respect of population this ranks low in proportion.
Divisions and Chief Towns.—There are 54 counties. The chief towns are WHEELING (the capital), Charleston, Clarksburg, Grafton, Martinsburg, Parkersburg, and South Wheeling.
History.—The State was organised from a part of Virginia in 1863.

WETMORE, wet'-more, a new county of Dakota territory, United States. Area, 700 square miles. Pop. Unascertained.

WETZEL, wet'-zel, a county of West Virginia, United States. Area, 360 square miles. Pop. 13,896. The capital is New Martinsville.

WEXFORD, wex'-ford, a maritime county of Ireland, province of Leinster, bounded on the E. by St. George's Channel, S. by Waterford Bay, S.W. by the county of Kilkenny, W. by the county of Carlow, and N. by the county of Wicklow. It is level along the coast, but in the north-west is mountainous. The soil is clayey, and not very fertile. Dairy farming is carried on to a considerable extent.

Rivers.—The Barrow, and the Slaney, with its tributaries, the Derry and Bann.
Area.—896 square miles.
Pop.—123,587.
Parliamentary Representation and Chief Towns.—Two members are returned for the county. The chief towns are WEXFORD, NEW ROSS, ENNISCORTHY, and GOREY.

WEXFORD, a seaport town of Ireland, capital of the above county, at the mouth of the Slaney, with a large and beautiful harbour, in St. George's Channel, 72 miles S.W. of Dublin. The herring, oyster, and salmon fisheries are important. Pop. 12,100.—A station on the Dublin, Wicklow, and Wexford railway.—This town was, in 1649, stormed by Cromwell. A granite column in its neighbourhood commemorates the exploits in Egypt of the army under Sir Ralph Abercrombie.

WEXFORD, a county of Michigan, United States. Area, 625 square miles. Pop. 6,815. The capital is Sherman.

WEYMOUTH with MELCOMBE-REGIS, wai'-mouth, a seaport, watering-place, and municipal and parliamentary borough of Dorsetshire, comprising the town and chapelry of Weymouth and the town and parish of Melcombe, the former on the south and the latter on the north side of the Wey, 8 miles S. of Dorchester. Weymouth is the older part, and it communicates with Melcombe by a handsome bridge. The church of St. John was enlarged in 1868. There are many new and elegant buildings. The fashionable promenade is the Esplanade—a beautiful raised terrace a mile in length. The bay is remarkable for the clearness of the water. Shipbuilding is carried on, and there are roperies and sailmaking establishments. Portland stone, tiles, bricks, and Roman cement are exported. There is regular communication with the Channel Islands. Pop. 13,700.—A station on the London and South Western and Great Western railways.

WEYMOUTH, a town of Massachusetts, United States, on Boston Harbour, 12 miles S.E. of Boston. It includes four villages. Manf. Boots and shoes, fans, nails, chemicals, and isinglass. A large trade is carried on in timber, coal, and grain. Pop. 10,000.

WHEATSTONE, CHARLES, Sir, weet'-stone, an eminent English natural philosopher, who introduced and gave a practical application to the electric telegraph in England. He was brought up to and for a time followed, the business of a manufacturer of musical instruments. At an early age he made some important experiments on sound, the results of which were published in the "Annals of Philosophy" for 1823. In 1834 he obtained the post of professor of experimental philosophy in King's College, London. In 1836 (the year in which he made public the results of his experiments in telegraphing by means of electricity), he was chosen a fellow of the Royal Society, to which body, he, in 1838, made known his beautiful invention of the stereoscope, in a paper entitled "Contributions to the Physiology of Vision." To the "Proceedings" of the Royal Society, and to the "Philosophical Transactions," Professor Wheatstone contributed a number of papers, upon Optics, Electricity, and also upon various improvements in connection with the electric telegraph. At the Paris Universal Exhibition of 1855 he was one of the jurors in the section for heat, light, and electricity. His telegraphic discoveries were made in conjunction with Mr. Cooke, he being at the time unaware of the experiments made by Morse in America. (See MORSE.) He was knighted in 1868.

Born at Gloucester, 1802; died at Paris, 1875.

WHEELING, wee'-ling, a city and port of West Virginia, United States, capital of the state, on the east bank of the Ohio, 92 miles below Pittsburgh. An island in the river is connected with the city by a fine suspension bridge. The public buildings are very handsome. There are extensive deposits of bituminous coal in the vicinity. Manf. Rails, bar and sheet iron, machinery, glass, nails, and agricultural implements. Pop. 31,500.

WHITBY, wit'-by, a seaport, market-town, and parliamentary borough of the North Riding of Yorkshire, at both sides of the mouth of the river Esk, which forms the harbour, and is crossed by a swing-bridge, 42 miles N.E. of York. Two piers, one 1,000 feet long, protect the outer harbour, and there are two inner piers. The church stands on a cliff 350 feet high, and is approached by a flight of nearly 200 steps. There are dry docks, and the town is a favourite watering-place. Manf. Jet ornaments. Pop. 14,600.—A station on the North-Eastern railway.

WHITE, wite, the name of 5 counties in the United States.

ARKANSAS.—Area, 1,044 square miles. Pop. 17,794, about 1,300 being coloured. The capital is Searcy.
GEORGIA.—Area, 250 square miles. Pop. 5,341. The capital is Cleveland.
ILLINOIS.—Area, 480 square miles. Pop. 23,087. The capital is Carmi.
INDIANA.—Area, 504 square miles. Pop. 13,795. The capital is Monticello.
TENNESSEE.—Area, 672 square miles. Pop. 11,176 about 1,100 being coloured. The capital is Sparta.

WHITECHAPEL. (See LONDON.)

WHITEFIELD, GEORGE, whit'-feeld, one of the founders of Methodism. He was the son of an innkeeper, and received his education in the grammar-school of St. Mary-de-Crypt at Gloucester, and afterwards became servitor in Pembroke College, Oxford. In 1736 he was ordained by Dr. Benson, Bishop of Gloucester; after which his zeal prompted him to preach in prisons, private houses, the fields, and open streets. A course so strange and irregular gave offence to his ecclesiastical superiors, and the doors of the churches were everywhere shut against him. His eloquence was particularly fervid, and well adapted to make a great impression upon ordinary minds; in consequence of which he obtained many followers. In 1738 he went to Georgia, in America, whither he had been invited by John Wesley (see WESLEY), where he was well received; and wonderful effects are recorded of the power of his preaching. He built two large conventicles in London, that called the Tabernacle, in the City, and another in Tottenham Court Road. He was also greatly assisted by Selina, countess of Huntingdon, who appointed him her chaplain, and became the patroness of the sect which he founded. He possessed a noble voice, extraordinary eloquence, and a familiar but striking mode of illustrating his arguments, which were wonderfully effective. As a popular religious orator he has probably never been surpassed.

Born at Gloucester, 1714; died at Newburyport, Massachusetts, 1770.

WHITEHAVEN, white-hai'-ven, a seaport and parliamentary borough of Cumberland, on the Irish Sea, 33 miles S.W. of Carlisle. There is a good harbour. The coal works, being near the sea, are very convenient for shipping. Some of these mines are wrought a great distance under the sea, and others beneath the town; owing to which circumstance, some years ago, the ground under several of the houses gave way. Manf. Sailcloth, cordage, iron, and earthenware. The export trade is considerable. Pop. 19,720.—A station on the London and North Western railway.

WHITE PINE, a county of Nevada, United States. Area 6,720 square miles. Pop 2,600. The capital is Hamilton.

WHITE SEA, called by the Russians Bielo More, a great gulf of the Northern Ocean, penetrating into the Russian territory about 360 miles. It extends from lat. 63° 48′ to 68° 40′ N., and the entrance is 100 miles wide. It forms four large gulfs or bays, has many small islands, and the shores are bold and rocky. Area, 40,000 square miles.

WHITESIDE, white'-sides, a county of Illinois, United States. Area, 730 square miles. Pop. 30,885. The capital is Morrison.

WHITFIELD, whit'-feeld, a county of Georgia, United States. Area, 286 square miles. Pop. 11,900, about 1,600 being coloured. The capital is Dalton.

WHITLEY, a county of Indiana, United States. Area, 324 square miles. Pop. 16,941. The capital is Columbia City.

WHITLEY, a county of Kentucky, United States. Area, 450 square miles. Pop. 12,000. The capital is Whitley Court House.

WHITTIER, JOHN GREENLEAF, whit'-ti-er, an American poet, member of the Society of Friends. Having engaged in journalism for a few years, he was appointed secretary to the American Anti-Slavery Society, and by his prose and poetical writings powerfully advanced the cause. As a poet he is in the very first rank of American writers, uniting vigour, grace, tenderness, and imagination. Many of his poems have attained to great popularity in England as in America. In 1876 he wrote a hymn for the opening of the great centennial exhibition at Philadelphia.

Born in Massachusetts, 1807.

WHYDAH, whi'-da, the seaport of Dahomey, West Africa. Pop. 12,000.

WIBURG, or WIBORG. (See VIBURG.)

WICKLOW, wik'-lo, a county of Ireland, province of Leinster, bounded N. by Dublin, E. by the Irish Sea, S. by Wexford, and W. by Kildare and Carlow. It is generally mountainous, with a mixture of rocks and bogs, so as to be ill adapted for cultivation; the highest peak, Lugnaquilla, being 3,039 feet above the sea level, and the coast is rocky.

Rivers.—The principal are the Liffey and Slaney, the Avoca and the Vartrey.

Minerals.—Copper, lead, zinc, manganese, arsenic, antimony, and small quantities of gold and silver.

Area.—782 square miles.

Pop.—73,679.

Parliamentary Representation and Chief Towns.—Two members are returned for the county. WICKLOW (the capital), Arklow, and Bray, are the chief towns.

WIDIN, or WIDDIN, vid'-din, a strongly-fortified town of Turkey, in Bulgaria, on the Danube, 130 miles S.E. of Belgrade. It is a place of great military importance. Pop. 13,714.

WIELAND, CHRISTOPH MARTIN, ve'-land, a German poet, novelist, and scholar, who at an early age distinguished himself by his attainments in languages and in the composition of verse. He commenced in his 17th year the study of the law at the university of Tübingen; but, being resolved to devote himself to a literary career, he went to Zurich, where he composed two tragedies, a comedy, five cantos of an epic, and one of his most popular novels, entitled "Araspes and Panthea." During the interval 1760-66, he translated twenty-eight of the plays of Shakspere into German. He next wrote his finest novel, "Agathon," and some poems, and in 1769 was appointed professor of philosophy in the university of Erfurt. In 1772 he went to reside at Weimar, where he had been engaged to superintend the education of the two sons of the Duchess Amelie. In this city he became acquainted with Goethe, who was indebted to Wieland for his introduction to the court of Weimar. Finally, he devoted himself to the illustration and translation of several of the Greek and Roman classics. He produced, among other works, a German edition of the Epistles and Satires of Horace, the Letters of Cicero, and a commentary upon Lucian. He has been styled the "Voltaire of Germany," on account of the number, variety, and elegant style of his writings, and was at one time stigmatized as licentious and atheistic, and in 1773 his books were publicly burned by the admirers of Klopstoch. His works comprised plays, poems, criticisms, commentaries upon the classics, and philosophical miscellanies.

Born in Suabia, 1733; died at Weimar, 1813.

WIENER-NEUSTADT. (See NEUSTADT.)

WIESBADEN, vees-ba'-den, a city and watering-place of Prussia, province of Hesse Nassau, on the south-eastern slope of the Taunus Mountains, 20 miles S.E. of Frankfort. The Kursaal is a splendid building with extensive pleasare grounds, and there are hotels, and about 30 bathing-establishments, besides water-cure and other medical establishments. There are a fine Protestant and a Roman Catholic church, a royal palace, picture gallery, and museum. The hot springs are much resorted to, and as many as 40,000 visitors visit the place annually. There are some Roman remains. Pop. of the district, 731,425; of the city, 50,238.

WIGAN, wig'-an, a market-town, municipa and parliamentary borough of Lancashire, near the small river Douglas, 16 miles N.W. of Manchester. All Saints' church, recently nearly rebuilt, is a fine edifice, and there are 21 other churches, and about 30 chapels, a town-hall, assembly-rooms, and free library, opened in 1877. Manf. Woollen, linen and cotton goods, ironwork, edge-tools, nails, brass wares, machinery, and agricultural implements. Pop. 48,200.—A station on the London and N-Western, and Lancashire and Yorkshire Ry.—A public park of 27 acres was opened in 1878.

WIGHT, ISLE OF, wite, an island in the English Channel, lying off the coast of Hampshire, from which it is separated by the Solent at Spithead, and in which county it is included. It is about 23 miles long and 14 wide, and through the middle of it, in the longest direction, extends a range of hills. The face of the country is greatly diversified; bold hills of various elevations, intersected by rich and highly-cultivated vales, the swelling promontory and the lowly glen, appear in quick succession, to animate and give interest to the prospects. The land around the coast is in some parts high, particularly on the south, or back of the island, as it is commonly termed, exceeding, at St. Catherine's, 830 feet above the sea. The coast is indented with estuaries and bays, and on the south side are picturesque gaps or "chines," through which small streams fall to the sea. In some parts the rock has given way, forming what is known as the undercliff. No part of England is more beautiful or salubrious, the climate being so mild that delicate plants grow luxuriously in the open air. The soil is generally rich, and there is excellent pasturage on the uplands. The Medina is the only stream of importance.

Area.—160 square miles.

Pop.—64,489.

Parliamentary Representation and Chief Towns.—One member is returned for the island, and 1 for Newport. The chief towns are NEWPORT, COWES, RYDE, and Ventnor.

WIGTONSHIRE, wig'-ton-sheer, a county in the south-west of Scotland, bounded on the E. by Kirkcudbrightshire, S. and W. by the Irish Sea, and N. by Ayrshire. It is of an irregular form, with a bold and rocky coast, and deeply indented with bays. Stranraer, also called the Rynnes, or Rhinnes of Galloway, is a peninsula, extending 29 miles from north to south, with a breadth of from two to six miles, and is nearly separated from the rest of the county by Luce Bay and Loch Ryan. The surface of the county is diversified by numerous hills. The richest lands lie near the coast; also on the banks of the rivers. The northern part is bleak and hilly, extending over three-fourths of the county, and containing only a few detached spots of arable land.

Rivers.—The Cree, the Bladenoch, the Tarff, the Luce, and some other smaller streams.

Minerals.—Slate and marble.

Area.—512 square miles.

Pop.—38,602.

Parliamentary Representation and Chief Town.—One member is returned for the county, and one for the Wigton district. The capital is Wigtown.

WILBERFORCE WILLIAM, wil'-ber-force, an English philanthropist, who was the son of a merchant of Hull. In 1776 he entered St. John's College, Cambridge. Returned to parliament as member for Hull, he joined the opposition to Lord

North's ministry, and, in debate, condemned the American war. In his 28th year he resolved to devote himself to that cause which, even as a schoolboy, had been a subject of his thoughts,—the abolition of negro slavery. During twenty years he continued to advocate the emancipation of the negro. Of a deeply religious nature, he, in 1797, produced a work which met with a remarkable success, entitled, "Practical View of the Prevailing Religious System of Professed Christians in the Higher and Middle Classes of this Country contrasted with Real Christianity." He likewise aided all the benevolent and religious societies of his time, and assisted in the foundation of the English churches in India, and expended more than a fourth of his income in private charity. His remains were honoured with a public funeral, and interred in Westminster Abbey.

Born at Hull, 1759; died in London, 1833.

WILHELMSHAVEN, vil'-helms-ha'-fen, a port of Prussia, province of Hanover, 40 miles N.W. of Bremen, the principal station of the German navy. There are five separate harbours, connected by canals and with granite moles, 4,000 and 9,600 feet long, with several dry docks and shipyards. Pop. 12,592.

WILKES, JOHN, an English politician, who was the son of a rich distiller in London. After receiving a liberal education, he travelled abroad, married a lady of fortune, and became colonel of the Buckinghamshire militia. In 1757 he was elected to parliament for Aylesbury; and, at this time, became a violent opponent of the Bute administration, by publishing a periodical paper called the North Briton, in the forty-fifth number of which he declared the king to have uttered a falsehood in his speech from the throne; whereupon a warrant was issued by the earl of Halifax, secretary of state, to seize his person and papers. This affair made much noise, and brought him into great repute as the patriot of the day. After obtaining his release from the Tower, he entered an action against the earl of Halifax, and obtained a verdict by which general warrants were declared illegal. He was, however, soon afterwards expelled the House of Commons, for having published an obscene publication, called "The Essay on Woman." He was at different times returned for Middlesex; but the election was always declared void, till 1774, when he was permitted to take his seat without further opposition. The same year he served the office of lord mayor. He afterwards obtained the lucrative office of chamberlain of the city of London, and, in 1790, quitted parliament. He rendered eminent service in the riots of 1780, by exerting himself with such promptitude as to save the Bank from the depredators. He was one of the wittiest men of the day.

Born in London, 1727; died 1797.

WILKESBARRE, wilks'-bar, a city of Pennsylvania, on the east bank of the north branch of the Susquehanna, 100 miles N.W. of Philadelphia. Manf. Railway stock, machinery, tools, galvanized iron and pottery. Pop. 23,339.

WILKINSON, a county of Georgia, United States. Area, 430 square miles. Pop. 12,061, about half being coloured. The capital is Irwinton.

WILKINSON, a county of Mississippi, United States. Area, 580 square miles. Pop. 17,815, about 10,000 being coloured. The capital is Woodville.

WILL, a county of Illinois, United States. Area, 828 square miles. Pop. 53,422. The capital is Joliet.

WILLIAM I., wil'-yam, king of England, commonly called the Conqueror, was the natural son of Robert I., duke of Normandy, by Arletta, a tanner's daughter of Falaise. He became duke of Normandy at the death of his father, in 1035, and reigned quietly till the death of Edward the Confessor; when, pretending that the crown of England had been bequeathed to him by that monarch, he fitted out a large expedition, and landed on the coast of Sussex. The battle of Hastings and the conquest of England following, in 1087 he attacked and destroyed the city of Mantes, but died in consequence of an accidental injury he received. A memorial statue was erected at Falaise, in 1875.

Born 1027; died at Rouen, 1087.

WILLIAM III., of Nassau, prince of Orange, and king of England, was the son of William, prince of Orange, and Mary, eldest daughter of Charles I. of England. He became stadtholder of Holland in 1672, and was nominated general of the troops of Holland against Louis XIV., and made a vigorous resistance to the French armies under Luxembourg, whom he defeated in 1674; but was repulsed in his turn by the Prince de Condé. In 1677 he married Mary, daughter of James, duke of York, afterwards James II., and in the following year the arbitrary measures, both against the established religion and the constitution, of James II., induced many nobles and others to invite the prince of Orange to take possession of the English crown. He landed without opposition at Torbay, the same year. James, finding himself unsupported, withdrew to France, and William took possession of his throne, in conjunction with his wife, the daughter of that unfortunate monarch. His coronation as king of England took place in 1689. The year following, William went to Ireland, where he defeated James at the battle of the Boyne. In 1691 he headed the confederated army in the Netherlands, took Namur in 1692, and in 1697 was acknowledged king of England by the treaty of Ryswick. On the death of Mary in 1694, the parliament confirmed to him the royal title. His death was owing to a fall from his horse, by which he broke his collar-bone. He was one of the foremost generals of the age, and an administrator of remarkable ability.

Born at the Hague, 1650; died at Kensington, 1702.

WILLIAM IV., king of England, was the third son of George III. In his 15th year he entered the royal navy, and, in 1780, was with Admiral Rodney when the latter defeated a Spanish squadron off Cadiz, and afterwards proceeded to the relief of Gibraltar. Prince William subsequently held the command of a vessel of war in various parts of the world, but retired from active service in 1790. In 1789 he was created Duke of Clarence. He married the Princess Adelaide of Saxe-Meiningen in 1818, but the offspring died in infancy. By Mrs. Jordan, the actress, he had a large family, the eldest of whom was created Earl of Munster. Upon the death of his brother, George IV., in 1830, he became king of England.

Born in London, 1765; died at Windsor, 1837.

WILLIAM I. (WILHELM FRIEDRICH LUDWIG), king of Prussia and emperor of Germany, was the second son of Frederick William III. He distinguished himself in the army, and in 1857, his brother, Frederick William IV., being disabled by illness, was installed as Regent, and succeeded to the throne in 1861. The leading events of his reign are the war with Austria, in 1866, the great war with France, and the consolidation of the new German empire. He was proclaimed emperor in January, 1871. In 1829 he married the Princess Augusta of Saxe-Weimar-Eisenach, and his son, the Crown Prince, is the husband of the English Princess Royal.

Born 1797.

WILLIAMS, a new county of Dakota Territory, United States. Area, 2,500 square miles. Pop. Unascertained.

WILLIAMS, a county of Ohio, United States. Area, 600 square miles. Pop. 23,821. The capital is Bryan.

WILLIAMSBURGH, a county of South Carolina, United States. Area, 1,200 square miles. Pop. 24,110, two-thirds being coloured. The capital is Kingstree.

WILLIAMSON, the name of three counties of the United States:—

ILLINOIS.—Area, 432 square miles. Pop. 18,900. The capital is Marion.

TENNESSEE.—Area, 476 square miles. Pop. 27,000, about 12,000 being coloured. The capital is Franklin.

TEXAS.—Area, 1,100 square miles. Pop. 15,155. The capital is Georgetown.

WILLIAMSPORT, a city of Pennsylvania, United States, and the capital of Lycoming county, on the north side of the west branch of the Susquehanna, 70 miles N.W. of Harrisburg. It is a great centre of the timber trade, the annual shipments being very large. Manf. Machinery, tools, locks, soap, and candles. Pop. 19,000.

WILMINGTON, wil'-ming-ton, a city, port of entry, and capital of Delaware, United States, at the confluence of Christiana and Brandywine creeks, 28 miles S.W. of Philadelphia. The public buildings, and churches, 45 in number, are generally handsome, and there is a Swedish church, erected in 1698. The Brandywine affords valuable water-power for mills. Manf. Iron, machinery, woollen and linen goods, chemicals, paper, boots and shoes, and leather. Iron-shipbuilding is extensively carried on. Pop. 42,500, including 4,000 coloured, and more than 5,000 foreigners.

WILMINGTON, a city and seaport of North Carolina, on the east bank of the north-eastern branch of Cape Fear river, 20 miles from the sea. There is an extensive coasting and foreign trade, and the city is one of the greatest markets for naval stores in the world. Pop. 17,500, about half being coloured.

WILMOT. (See ROCHESTER, Earl of.)

WILNA, or VILNA, vil'-na, a government of European Russia, bounded W. by Poland. The surface is flat, with many marshes and small lakes. The soil is generally fertile, and the large forests of fir and pine are very valuable.

History.—The Villa and Beresina, affluents of the Niemen, and the Disna, which flows into the Dwina.
Area.—16,416 square miles.
Pop.—1,204,746.

WILNA, or VILNA, capital of the above province, on the Vilia, 473 miles S.E. of St. Petersburg. There are a handsome Roman Catholic cathedral, containing a marble chapel, and the silver coffin of St. Casimir; St. John's, St. Peter's, both splendid buildings, and about 20 other Catholic churches, several Greek churches, places of worship for Lutherans, synagogues, and a mosque. A large trade in timber and corn is carried on. Pop. 93,763, about 25,000 being Jews. The town, founded in the 13th century, was the old capital of Lithuania.

WILSON, JOHN, Professor, an eminent Scotch poet and essayist, who received his education at Glasgow and Oxford, where he was distinguished by his literary attainments, no less than for his skill in every athletic exercise. After taking his degrees in arts, he quitted the university, and resided for several years on an estate he had purchased on Lake Windermere, where he formed the friendship of Wordsworth. After putting forth some minor lyrical attempts, he, in 1812, published "The Isle of Palms," which was well received, and enabled its author to take a position among the "Lake" poets, with whom he was living upon terms of friendship. He was one of the originators of "Blackwood's Magazine." In 1816 Wilson produced "The City of the Plague;" in 1820 he was nominated to the chair of moral philosophy in the university of Edinburgh. He next published "Lights and Shadows of Scottish Life," and the "Trials of Margaret Lyndsey," political articles, and literary criticisms. In 1825 he began in "Blackwood" his celebrated "Noctes Ambrosianæ," under the name of "Christopher North." In the interval, 1836-46, he wrote, as a pendant to the "Noctes," his "Dies Boreales, or Christopher under Canvas," but these met with less success.

Born at Paisley, 1785; died at Edinburgh, 1854.

WILSON, the name of four counties of the United States.

KANSAS.—Area, 576 square miles. Pop. 13,775. The capital is Fredonia.

NORTH CAROLINA.—Area, 530 square miles. Pop. 22,619, more than 16,000 being coloured. The capital is Wilson.

TENNESSEE.—Area, 500 square miles. Pop. 28,747, very nearly one-fourth being coloured. The capital is Lebanon.

TEXAS.—Area, 670 square miles. Pop. 7,118. The capital is Floresville.

WILTON, wil'-ton, a parliamentary borough and market town of Wiltshire, near the confluence of the rivers Nadder and Willy, 3 miles N.W. of Salisbury. Manf. Carpets and woollens. Pop. 1,826.—A station on the Great Western railway.

WILTSHIRE, wilt'-sheer, a southern county of England, bounded on the N. and N.W. by Gloucestershire; S.W. by Dorsetshire; S. and E. by Hampshire; and N.E. by the county of Berks. It may be said to be naturally divided into two portions, by an irregular range of hills, which extends transversely through the greater part of the county, in a direction inclining from the north-east to the south-west. These districts are usually denominated South and North Wiltshire. The south is undulating and elevated, and includes the extensive elevated district, Salisbury Plain; the northern part of the county is level and well-wooded, and with large tracts of pasturage. Sheep farming is extensively carried on, and the dairy produce is important. The county is rich in Druidical and other remains of antiquity, including Stonehenge and Avebury.

Rivers.—The Thames, Upper and Lower Avon, Bourne, Kennet, Nadder, and Willey.
Area.—1,343 square miles.
Pop.—259,000.
Parliamentary Representation and Chief Towns.—The two divisions of the county return 4 members; 2 are returned for Salisbury, 2 for Cricklade, 1 for Chippenham, 1 for Calne, 1 for Devizes, 1 for Malmesbury, 1 for Marlborough, 1 for Westbury, 1 for Wilton. The chief towns are SALISBURY (the capital), BRADFORD, CALNE, CHIPPENHAM, CRICKLADE, DEVIZES, MALMESBURY, MARLBOROUGH, SWINTON, WARMINSTER, WESTBURY, and WILTON.

WINCHESTER, win'-ches-ter, an ancient city of England, and parliamentary borough, on the right bank of the Itchin, 62 miles S.W. of London. The ancient massive west gate with a Norman tower, is still entire. The cathedral is one of the most interesting buildings in England. It is an instructive example of architecture, whether of the Saxon, Norman, or English styles, but particularly of the latter, both in its early and improved state. The original structure, built by the Saxon kings Kinegils and Kenwald, is entirely destroyed; but of that built by Ethelweld, the crypt beneath the high altar is yet remaining. In the 11th century the cathedral was rebuilt, or greatly enlarged and improved, by bishop Walkelyn, whose parts of the structure were completed in 1093. The next improvement was undertaken by William de Edyngton, treasurer to Edward III., and was finished by bishop Wykeham in 1394. The eastern part was rebuilt by bishop Fox at the beginning of the 16th century. The dimensions of the cathedral are 545 feet long, the length of the transept 186 feet, and the height of the tower 150 feet. The interior of this cathedral is magnificent, contains the tomb of William Rufus, and, in a series of carved chests over the choir, the remains of many of the kings of Wessex and of the Saxon kings of England. St. Lawrence's, St. Thomas's, St. Maurice's, St. Michael's, and St. Swithin's are ancient churches. The town hall, the chapel of the old castle, now used as the county hall, and containing the famous "round table," attributed in popular legend to King Arthur, but really of the time of Stephen; large barracks, once a palace belonging to Charles II.; St. John's House, built by the Knights Templars, and now an assembly room, and a large new county hospital, are among the most prominent public buildings. Winchester college, founded by William of Wykeham, in 1387, and one of the great public schools of England, occupies an extensive range of buildings. There is a diocesan training college, in the mediæval style, erected in 1863. Near the south end of the city is the hospital of St. Cross, and in the High street is the city cross, erected in the time of Henry VI., and restored in 1865 by Mr. G. Scott. A large annual sheep fair is held. Pop. 17,470.—A station on the South Western railway. Winchester was the Caer Gwent, or "white city," so named from the chalk hills in the vicinity. The Romans are supposed to have built the walls. In 519 Cerdic the Saxon made it the seat of government, and under the Danes it became the capital of England, and in the reign of Henry II. a parliament was held there.

WINDHAM, wind'-ham, a county of Connecticut, United States. Area, 620 square miles. Pop. 43,856. The capital is Brooklyn.

WINDHAM, a county of Vermont, United States. Area, 780 square miles. Pop. 26,500. The capital is Fayetteville.

WINDSOR, or NEW WINDSOR, wind'-sor, a municipal and parliamentary borough of Berkshire, on the right bank of the Thames, 23 miles W. of London, famous for the castle, the principal royal residence of England. An iron bridge across the Thames connects the town with Eton. Old Windsor is a small village two miles to the east. The castle, with its adjuncts, occupies about 12 acres of ground, and is surrounded by a terrace on all except the western side. It stands on an elevation, and is nearly surrounded by the Little Park, which is connected by a long avenue with the Great Park, comprising about 3,800 acres, beyond which is Windsor Forest, which has a circumference of about 56 miles. The buildings of the castle form three groups—the middle ward, containing the lofty round tower, erected by Edward III., the lower ward, in which are St. George's Chapel and the cloisters, and the upper ward, in which are the Queen's private apartments. William the Conqueror began the erection of the castle (there having been previously a royal palace at Old Windsor); it was largely added to by Edward III., under the direction of William of Wykeham, and between 1824 and 1828 extensive additions and restorations were made on a magnificent scale by Sir Jeffrey Wyatville. St. George's Chapel, in which many of the sovereigns of England and members of the royal family are buried, and where the knights of the garter have stalls, is a beautiful specimen of florid Gothic. It was begun by Henry III., completed by Edward III., nearly rebuilt by Henry VII., and added to by Cardinal Wolsey. Pop. 19,100.—Stations on the Gt. Western and L. and S. Western railways.

WINDWARD ISLANDS, a British group in the West Indies. Pop. 311,413.

WINNIPEG, win'-ne-peg, a city, port, and capital of the province of Manitoba, British North America, at the confluence of the Red River and Assiniboin. It is the head quarters of the government of the north-west territories and of the Hudson's Bay Company. The exports consist chiefly of furs. Pop. 8,000. Lat. 49° 52'. Lon. 96° 58' W.

WIRTEMBERG. (See WURTEMBERG.)

WISBEACH, wis'-beech, a market-town of Cambridgeshire, in the Isle of Ely, on the Nen, 18 miles N.E. of Peterborough. Manf. Rope, twine, and iron goods. There are malthouses, and yards for building ships. A memorial statue of Thomas Clarkson, the abolitionist, a native of the town, was erected in 1880. Pop. 9,362.—A station on the Gt. East. Ry.

WISCONSIN, wis-kon'-sin, one of the United States, having Illinois on the S., the Mississippi and Minnesota on the W., Michigan and Lake Superior on the N., and Lake Michigan on the E. The general character of the surface is that of a plain, with gentle undulations, the highest parts being near the sources of the tributaries of Lake Superior, the land sloping gradually towards the lake. In the south-western part are moderate elevations. There is a range of cliffs, with bold escarpments along the shores of Green Bay and Lake Winnebago, from which the eastern part of the state slopes to Lake Michigan. There are extensive forests of pine and other cone-bearing evergreens in the northern part, and in the south are extensive prairies. The climate is temperate and the soil fertile, producing abundant crops of grain.

Rivers and Lakes.—The Mississippi forms the western boundary for about 250 miles, receiving the Black, Chippewa, Rock, St. Croix, and Wisconsin: the Bad, Bois Brulé, Montreal, and St. Louis, flow into Lake Superior; the Manitowoc, Milwaukee, and Sheboygan, into Lake Michigan; and the Fox, Menomonee, Oconto, Pensaukee, and Peshtigo, into Green Bay. There are numerous smaller streams, some with cascades in their upper course. There are a very large number of lakes, generally with high picturesque banks and deep water. The most important are Winnebago (28 miles long and 10 miles wide), Green, Geneva, Koshkonong, Pepin, Pewaukee, Poygan, and St. Croix.

Minerals.—Lead most important; iron, copper, zinc, limestone, carnelian, and agates.

Area.—53,924 square miles.

Pop.—1,316,000, about 2,200 being coloured. In respect of population this ranks amongst the lowest by comparison with the other states of the Union.

Divisions and Chief Towns.—There are 60 counties. The capital is MADISON, and the largest city, MILWAUKEE, the next most important places being FOND DU LAC, JANESVILLE, LA CROSSE, RACINE, and Walertoun

WISE, a county of Texas, United States. Area, 900 square miles. Pop. 16,601. The capital is Decatur.

WISE, a county of Virginia, United States. Area, 250 square miles. Pop. 7,772. The capital is Wise Court House.

WISMAR, vis'-mar, a fortified seaport of Mecklenburg-Schwerin, on the Baltic, 18 miles N. of Schwerin. Its harbour is safe, and is landlocked by the islands of Wallfisch and Pael. Manf. Tobacco, chicory, and machinery. Pop. 15,518.—This town for some time belonged to the Hanseatic League.

WITEPSK. (See VITEBSK.)

WITT, JAN DE. (See DE WITT.)

WITTEN, vit'-ten, a town of Prussia, province of Westphalia, on the Ruhr, 32 miles N.W. of Arnsberg. It has risen rapidly into importance, owing to the development of manufactures. There are large coal mines in the vicinity. Manf. Iron, steel, and glass. Pop. 21,554.

WITTENBERG, vit'-ten-berg (Germ. vit'-ten-berg), a fortified city of Prussia, province of Saxony, on the Elbe, 53 miles S. of Berlin. The university, founded in 1502, and memorable as the cradle of the Reformation, was united with that of Halle in 1815. Luther and his associate Melancthon are buried in the university church. In 1821, a monumental colossal statue of Luther was erected with great solemnity; and near it is a statue of Melancthon, erected in 1865. The Schlosskirche was rebuilt in 1817, replacing the old building, to the doors of which Luther affixed his famous theses, a copy of which is engraved on the new bronze doors erected in 1858. Manf. Woollen goods. Pop. 13,594.

WOLFE, JAMES, an English military commander, who entered the army at an early age, and served in the war in Germany, which terminated with the peace of Aix-la-Chapelle, in 1748. He was greatly instrumental in the taking of Louisburg, and had scarcely returned thence when he was appointed by Pitt to the chief command of the important expedition against Quebec, in 1759. He was killed at the siege of Quebec in the moment of victory. There is a fine monument to his memory in Westminster Abbey.

Born at Westerham, Kent, 1726; died 1759.

WOLFE, formerly the name of a county in the province of Quebec, Canada; no longer officially recognised and not recorded in authorised returns.

WOLFE, a county of Kentucky, United States. Area, 170 square miles. Pop. 5,638. The capital is Campton.

WOLFENBÜTTEL, vol'-fen-be(r)t'-tel, a city of the duchy of Brunswick, on the Ocker, 8 miles S. of Brunswick. It is divided into the citadel, or fortified part, and two suburbs. It has various schools, a Lutheran convent, and an extensive library, with MSS., and relics of Luther. Manf. Lacquered and japan wares, leather, and tobacco. Pop. 12,131.

WOLGA. (See VOLGA.)

WOLLASTON, WILLIAM HYDE, an English natural philosopher, who was educated for the medical profession, and took his degree at Cambridge as M.D. in 1793; but after practising during a short period, he resolved to devote himself exclusively to scientific investigations. To him science is indebted for the discovery of two metals,—palladium and rhodium; the invention of the reflective goniometer of the camera lucida; and of the periscopic glasses; and likewise for a method of rendering the metal platina malleable. In 1806 he was elected secretary, and in 1820 president, of the Royal Society.

Born 1776; died 1828.

WOLLSTONECRAFT, MARY, wol'-stone-craft, was the daughter of a small farmer in the vicinity of London, for some time kept a school at Islington, and was afterwards a governess in the family of Lord Kingsborough. She possessed an ill-regulated temperament, and fell in love with Fuseli, the artist, a married man, who very properly discouraged her. She then went to America, and married a Mr. Imlay, who soon deserted her, and she then twice attempted to commit suicide. On her return to England, she lived for a time with William Godwin (see GODWIN), whom she afterwards married, and became the mother of a daughter, afterwards Mrs. Shelley (see SHELLEY), dying soon afterwards. She wrote some works on education, but is best known by her "Vindication of the Rights of Women," in which she gave utterance to some startling and extreme opinions respecting marriage.

Born 1759; died 1797.

WOLSEY, THOMAS, wool'-se, an English cardinal, who is supposed to have been the son of a butcher. He received his education at Magdalen College, Oxford, and became tutor to the three sons of Grey, Marquis of Dorset, who gave him the rectory of Lymington, in Somersetshire, where his life was somewhat irregular, and he was actually put into the stocks for drunkenness. He gained the favour of Henry VII., who, about 1507, sent him on an embassy to Flanders, and at his return made him dean of Lincoln. After the accession of Henry VIII., Wolsey rose to still higher favour, was presented to the living of Torrington, in Devon, appointed register of the Garter and canon of Windsor, dean of York; and, attending the king to Tournay, in France, was made bishop of that city. In 1514 he was advanced to the see of Lincoln, and the year following to the archbishopric of York. He was at this time in the zenith of power, and held complete ascendancy over the mind of the king, who made him lord chancellor, and obtained for him a cardinalship. He was also nominated the pope's legate, and was twice a candidate for the papal dignity, but was defeated by the influence of the French cardinals. He was a strong opponent of the doctrines of Luther, and endeavoured to suppress them in England. His influence and income were enormous, and he lived in a princely style, till he lost the esteem of his capricious master. His fall was mainly owing to these causes:—He had counselled the king to divorce Catherine, but not to marry Anne Boleyn; thus making enemies of the new queen and of a powerful party which supported her at court. He also, as a cardinal, represented the power and arrogance of the papacy, which Henry VIII. had resolved to destroy in his dominions. Accordingly, he was first stripped of his dignities and property, and subsequently arrested upon a false charge of treason; the earl of Northumberland being ordered to bring him to London to take his trial. On his way he was seized with dysentery, and was compelled to halt at the monastery of Leicester, where he died three days afterwards. He was a man of unbounded ambition and of great arrogance, but of considerable learning and great policy. He founded Christ Church College, Oxford, and built Hampton-Court Palace, which he presented to the king.

Born at Ipswich, 1471; died at Leicester, 1530.

WOLSELEY, LORD, known with distinction for some years as Sir Garnet Wolseley, eldest son of Major Wolseley, the representative of an ancient family of Staffordshire. He commenced his military career at the age of 19, when he obtained his appointment as ensign in the 80th regiment. Subsequently transferred to the 90th, he first distinguished himself in a storming party in Burma in 1853, when he was wounded with considerable severity. He next became prominent in the Crimean war, when he was again badly wounded in the trenches. Once more recovering, he appeared in the Sepoy war under Sir Hope Grant in 1857–8, and was one of the first to enter Lucknow at the relief of that city. He was head of the topographical department in an expedition to China in 1860, also under Sir Hope Grant, where he saw much of the events of that time, the taking of the Taku forts and the sacking of the Summer Palace at Pekin. In 1861 he proceeded to Canada and filled passive military offices there until 1870, when he was entrusted with the command of the Red River expedition, and his eminent success obtained for him the honour of knighthood and an important position at the Horse Guards. Being appointed to command on the Gold Coast in 1873, he there engaged in operations which subdued the Ashantee people and obtained for him fresh laurels, a grant of £25,000, and a Major-generalship. In 1875 he served for a while as temporary governor of Natal. In 1878, as Lord High Commissioner for the purpose, he took possession of Cyprus on behalf of the Queen, under powers conferred by the Treaty of Berlin. In 1879 he led the operations in Natal and Zululand. In 1882 he was suddenly entrusted with the command of the British forces in Egypt, and, by his masterly strategy, accomplished in a few days the total defeat of Arabi Pasha in the decisive attack upon Tel-el-Kebir. For his eminent services at that time he was elevated to the House of Lords. His next important operations were in the Soudan in 1884, when his projects were rendered abortive by the capture of Khartoum and the murder of Gordon, which latter event removed the only motive for pushing on his arduous expedition, from which he returned to take his place as the highest military authority at home. He was made a Knight of St. Patrick in 1885.

Born 1833.

WOLVERHAMPTON, wool-ver-hamp'-ton, a market-town and municipal and parliamentary borough of Staffordshire, 12 miles N.W. of Birmingham. It has 10 churches, one of which, St. Peter's, is a collegiate church, with a very fine Gothic tower. There are a handsome town-hall, exchange, market-hall, large cattle-market, and a bronze equestrian statue of the Prince Consort in Queen Square. There are numerous coal mines and ironworks adjoining the town. Manf. Locks, brass, japanned iron and papier-mâché goods. Pop. 75,738.—A station on the London and North-Western, Great Western and Midland railways.—Wolverhampton is a place of great antiquity. In 996 Wulfrune, sister of Ethelred II., endowed a church and college here, and the town, previously known as Hampton, was named Wulfrune's Hampton, from which the present name is derived.

WOO-CHANG, woo-tchang', a city of China, capital of Hoo-Pih province. Pop. 800,000.

WOOLWICH, wool'-idj, a market-town of Kent, on the south bank of the Thames, 8 miles E. of London, included in the parliamentary borough of Greenwich. The royal arsenal, the largest in Great Britain, covers more than 100 acres, and is the principal depôt for munitions of war both for the army and navy. There are extensive barracks for the Royal Artillery, and a practising ground nearly 3 miles in range. On the common, south of the town, is the Royal Military Academy, founded in 1719. The Royal Dockyard, which has existed for about 350 years, was closed in 1869. On the opposite side of the river, at North Woolwich, are extensive manufactories, especially of telegraph cables. Pop. 35,560.—A station on the South-Eastern railway.

WOONSOCKET, woon-sok'-et, a town of Rhode Island, United States, on both sides of Blackstone river, 16 miles N.W. of Providence. Manf. Cotton and woollen goods. Pop. 16,000.

WORCESTER, woos'-ter, a city and capital of Worcestershire, on the Severn. The cathedral is in the form of a double cross, with a central tower 193 feet high. It contains the tombs of King John and Arthur, Prince of Wales, son of Henry VII. In 1651 Cromwell obtained a decisive victory near the town. Pop. 33,955.

WORCESTER, a city of Massachusetts, United States, 40 miles S.W. of Boston. Manf. Boots and shoes, implements, tools, machinery, cotton and woollen goods, carpets, jewellery, nails and musical instruments. Pop. 58,291.

WORCESTERSHIRE, a county of England, bounded N. by Warwickshire and Staffordshire, S. by Gloucestershire, W. by Herefordshire and Shropshire, and E. by Warwickshire and Oxfordshire. On the western side are the Malvern Hills, the highest point of which is the Worcestershire Beacon, 1,100 feet high.

Rivers.—Severn, Avon and Teme.
Minerals.—Iron, coal and salt; and there are mineral springs at Malvern, Evesham, Dudley and Kidderminster.
Area.—738 square miles.
Pop.—380,350.

WORDSWORTH, WILLIAM, an English poet, who was the son of an attorney of Cumberland, and became a student of St. John's College, Cambridge, in 1787, where he took his B.A. degree in 1791. At this period he was an enthusiastic republican; and, soon after leaving college, he travelled in France. In 1797 he became acquainted with Coleridge. In 1798 appeared a small volume, entitled "Lyrical Ballads," which was from the pens of the two poets. It contained the "Ancient Mariner," by Coleridge, and twenty-two pieces of verse by Wordsworth. The volume produced no impression upon the public, and the copyright was afterwards presented to the two authors. After making a tour in Germany with Coleridge, in 1798–9, he went to reside at Grasmere, removing to Allan Bank in 1808. There also resided, or visited, Southey, Coleridge, De Quincey and Wilson. In 1813 he settled at Rydal Mount, which continued to be his residence until his death. During 1813–42 he held the office of distributor of stamps for the county of Westmoreland. In the latter year he was granted a pension of £300 per annum; and in 1843 he became the successor of Southey as poet-laureate.

Born at Cockermouth, Cumberland, 1770; died at Rydal Mount, 1850.

WORKSOP, work'-sop, a market-town of Nottinghamshire, 24 miles N. of Nottingham, at the N. extremity of Sherwood Forest. It had formerly a priory, of which the ancient church is still in existence. Pop. 11,625.—A station on the Midland and Manchester, Sheffield and Lincolnshire railways.

WORMS, werms (Germ. vorms), a city of the grand duchy of Hesse, on the left bank of the Rhine, 25 miles from Mayence. Its streets are dark and narrow, and its cathedral is a ponderous building, with dismantled walls, in the Byzantine style, built between the 8th and 12th centuries. The old Liebfrauenkirche is in the Gothic style, and the synagogue dates from the 11th century. A colossal memorial of Luther and other Reformers was inaugurated in 1868. Manf. Tobacco and leather. Pop. 21,942.—This was formerly an imperial city, and is very ancient. It is famous for the many diets which have been held in it, the most celebrated of which are that convoked by Maximilian I., in 1495, and that before which Luther appeared.

WREN, CHRISTOPHER, Sir, an English architect, son of the dean of Windsor. At the age of 14 he was sent to Wadham College, Oxford, and in 1653 was elected fellow of All Souls'. In 1657 he was chosen professor of astronomy at Gresham College, but removed to Oxford in 1660, on being appointed Savilian professor of astronomy. He commenced his career as an architect on being nominated, in 1661, assistant to the surveyor-general, Sir John Denham. The same year he was created doctor of civil law. In 1665 he was appointed architect for rebuilding St. Paul's Cathedral; and, after the fire of London, he drew up the plan of a "New London," which was presented to the king, but was not adopted. In 1668 he became surveyor-general of his majesty's works. Being now very extensively employed as an architect, he resigned his professorship in 1673, and the year following received the honour of knighthood. In 1680 he was chosen president of the Royal Society. He sat several times in parliament. His greatest work is St. Paul's Cathedral, and he designed more than 50 churches in London, replacing those destroyed by the great fire. His other works are, the Sheldonian theatre at Oxford, the Royal Exchange, London, destroyed by fire, Jan. 10, 1838; buildings at Cambridge; Custom House, London; Temple Bar; the Monument, London; Royal Observatory, Greenwich; Chelsea Hospital; additions at Hampton Court and Windsor Castle; Greenwich Hospital; and Marlborough House. His remains were deposited in St. Paul's Cathedral.

Born at East Knoyle, Wiltshire, 1632; died 1723.

WREXHAM, rex'-ham, a market-town, municipal and parliamentary borough of North Wales, in Denbighshire, on an affluent of the Dee, 11 miles S.W. of Chester. The church is a handsome structure in the Perpendicular style, built in the 15th century, and has a tower 135 feet high. Wrexham is a great mart for flannel. There are important markets and fairs, and in the vicinity are several collieries and lead mines. Pop. 10,928. A station on the Great Western railway.

WURTEMBERG, or WIRTEMBERG, wur'-tem-berg, a kingdom of the German empire, bounded N. and N.E. by Bavaria, W. and N.W. by Baden, and S. by Bavaria, and the Lake of Constance, which separates it from Switzerland, Baden, and Prussia. The shape is very irregular, and there are some detached portions. Part of the western frontier is formed by the mountain range of the Black Forest, the loftiest portion being the Hornisgrinde, 3,855 feet. The Suabian Alps, of lower elevation, are in the south, stretching about 80 miles to the north-east, with a breadth varying from 9 to 18 miles, steep on the north-western side, but sinking into undulating hills on the south-east, and dividing the kingdom geographically into the basins of the Neckar and Danube. In the mountain regions are extensive pastures and forests of valuable timber. On the lower lands the soil is fertile, and excellent crops are raised, with abundance of fruit, and there are peat-mosses in the south-east. The scenery, especially near the rivers, is very picturesque.

Rivers and Lakes.—The Neckar, rising near the Baden frontier, and its affluents, the Enz, Kocher, and Jaxt; the DANUBE, with its affluent, the Iller; the Tauber, a tributary of the Maine, and several streams falling into the Lake of Constance. There are several lakes in the southern part, the largest being the Fidersee.

Minerals.—Iron, copper, silver, malachite, rock crystal, salt, granite, fire-clay, and gypsum.

Area.—7,531 square miles.

Pop.—1,971,118, about 1,250,000 being Protestants, and 12,300 Jews.

Administrative Divisions and Chief Towns.—There are 4 kreise, or circles:—Danube (Donau), Black Forest (Schwarzwald), Neckar, and Jaxt. The chief towns are STUTTGART (the capital), CARSTATT, ELLWANGEN, ESSLINGEN, HEILBRONN, LUDWIGSBURG, REUTLINGEN, TÜBINGEN, and ULM.

Religion and Education.—The Protestant is considered, though not formally declared, the religion of the state. The church was formed in 1823 by a union of Lutherans and Calvinists, and the king is the supreme head, and there are 6 general superintendents. The Roman Catholics are most numerous in the eastern part. Education is compulsory, and there are about 2,500 elementary schools. The university of Tübingen is one of the most famous in Germany.

Constitution and Government.—The present constitution bears date September, 1819. The monarchy is hereditary, and the executive is vested in a cabinet of 6 ministers. There is a diet of two houses, the upper chamber composed of members of the royal family, heads of noble families, and some members (not to exceed a third of the whole) nominated by the king for life; the second chamber, or house of deputies, consisting of 13 members of the nobility, elected by the nobility and landed proprietors, 6 deputies of the Protestant clergy, 3 representatives of the Roman Catholics, the chancellor of the university of Tübingen, and 71 deputies of towns and rural districts—members being elected for six years. A high court, the Staats-Gerichtshoff, is guardian of the constitution. It is composed of 12 members, 6 and the president being nominated by the king, and 6 elected by the combined chambers.

Railways and Telegraphs.—There are 775 miles of railway, belonging to the state; and 1,500 miles of telegraph.

History.—The founder of the reigning dynasty was Ulric, count of Wurtemberg, previously included in Suabia, who died in 1265. In 1495 Eberhard V. was raised to the rank of duke. In 1806, Duke Frederick assumed the title of king, in accordance with a decree of the Emperor Napoleon; but after the battle of Leipsic joined the allies, in return for which the Congress of Vienna permitted him to retain the kingly title.

WURZBURG, werts'-boorg (Germ. verts'-boorg), a city of Bavaria, capital of Lower Franconia, on the right bank of the Main (which is crossed by a stone bridge with statues of saints), 140 miles N.W. of Munich. The old fortifications were destroyed in 1876; but Marienberg, on the opposite side of the river, is strongly fortified, and used as barracks. The town is irregularly built, but has fine streets and promenades. The cathedral dates from the 11th century, and the Marienkapelle and the Stifthang, with a noble cupola, are handsome and interesting churches. The splendid episcopal palace was rebuilt between 1720 and 1744. The university, originally founded in 1403, holds a high rank as a school of medicine. Manf. Sparkling wines, leather, tobacco, and railway stock. Pop. 55,036, nearly all Roman Catholics.

WYCLIFFE, WICLIF, or WICKLIFF, JOHN DE, wik'-lif, an English divine, styled the "morning star of the Reformation." He was admitted first of Queen's, but afterwards removed to Merton College, Oxford. In 1361 his great talents procured him the mastership of Balliol College; and four years afterwards he was made warden of Canterbury Hall, then founded by Archbishop Islip, whose successor, Simon Langham, displaced him at the instigation of the monks, who were the sworn foes to Wycliffe, for exposing their corrupt errors and practices. In 1374, the Pope having cited King Edward III. to Avignon for refusing to pay him a yearly tribute, Wycliffe was appointed a member of the legation sent to the conferences held thereupon at Bruges. About this time he was preferred by the king to the rectory of Lutterworth, in Leicestershire. Having now openly preached against the corruptions of the Roman church, Pope Gregory XI., being informed of his conduct, issued several bulls against him, charging him with numerous heresies. An assembly was accordingly held at St. Paul's by Courtenay, bishop of London, to examine Wycliffe, who appeared, supported by John of Gaunt, duke of Lancaster, and Lord Henry Percy. Wycliffe made an able defence of himself, and the council ended without any determination. It would appear that, still continuing to denounce papal corruption, he was, in 1378, summoned before a synod held in the archbishop's palace at Lambeth; but his safety was secured by a message from the king's mother, ordering the proceedings to terminate. The powerful protection of John of Gaunt was supposed to have saved Wycliffe from further persecution, but, 44 years after his death, his bones were taken up and burnt, in obedience to an order of the Council of Constance. He translated the New Testament into English.

Born in Yorkshire, about 1324; died at Lutterworth, 1384.

WYCOMBE, or HIGH WYCOMBE, a parliamentary and municipal borough of Buckinghamshire, 30 miles N.W. of London. Pop. 10,618.

WYKEHAM, WILLIAM OF, wik'-ham, an English prelate and architect, who was appointed by Edward III. surveyor of the royal buildings, and it was upon Wykeham's advice that monarch rebuilt Windsor Castle. In 1359 he was constituted chief warden and surveyor of the royal castles, and, in 1363, warden and justiciary of the king's forests on the south of Trent; keeper of the privy seal in 1364; two years after, secretary to the king; and, in 1367, he succeeded William de Edyngton in the see of Winchester, and the same year was appointed lord high chancellor. He repaired the palaces and houses belonging to his see at a great expense, was zealous in establishing discipline and reforming abuses, founded New College, Oxford, and that at Winchester, and rebuilt Winchester cathedral.

Born at Wykeham, Hampshire, 1324; died at South Waltham, 1404.

WYOMING, wi'-o-ming, a territory of the United States, bounded N. by Montana, S. by Colorado and Utah, E. by Dakota and Nebraska, and W. by Idaho, Montana, and Utah. The surface is mountainous; being traversed by the Rocky Mountains in a north-westerly direction, the Wind River Mountains in the north-west, the Black Hills in the north-east, the Laramie and several other ranges. Fremont's Peak, the loftiest summit of the Wind River range, is 13,570 feet high, and Laramie Peak 10,000, and in other parts an elevation of from 6,000 to 7,000 feet is attained. The Laramie Plains, comprising an area of 7,000 square miles, have an average elevation of 9,000 feet. In the north-west of the territory is a remarkable district, known as Yellowstone National Park, 65 miles long and 55 wide, with an average elevation of 6,000 feet, and valleys enclosed by snow-clad mountains from 10,000 to 12,000 feet high, in which are those wonderful narrow gorges with almost perpendicular sides, known as canons. In no part of the world are there so many hot springs, geysers, and waterfalls in a similar space. Some of the geysers throw columns of water 200 feet high, and there are nearly 10,000, depositing lime and silica of beautiful colour, and the Great Falls are 350 feet in height. Within the limits of the "park," or in the vicinity, are the head-waters of the Missouri, Yellowstone, Snake, Green, and other great rivers. The climate of the territory varies with the altitude, but is generally pure and bracing, and the soil in the valleys is fertile. There are extensive pastures, and in the mountain districts forests of pine, fir, cedar, and hemlock.

Rivers.—The Green, a tributary of the Colorado; the Big Horn, Tongue, and Powder, with tributaries, flow into the Yellowstone; the Little Missouri, and forks of the Cheyenne, flowing into Dakota, and the North Platte, which receives the Laramie and other tributaries, and enters Nebraska, and some streams which flow into the South Platte, in Colorado.

Minerals.—Iron ore, coal, auriferous quartz, copper, silver, lead, plumbago, and petroleum.

Area.—97,883 square miles.

Pop.—21,000, including 1,800 tribal Indians.

Divisions and Chief Towns.—There are 7 counties. The capital is Cheyenne; the other towns are small places.

History.—The territory was organised in 1868 from portions of Dakota, Idaho, and Utah. The first settlements were made in 1867, during the progress of the Union Pacific railroad.

WYOMING VALLEY, a fertile tract on the Susquehanna, in Luzerne county, Pennsylvania, 21 miles long and 3 miles wide, enclosed by ranges of rugged mountains. The valley is memorable for the terrible massacre by the Indians, in 1778, which forms the basis of Campbell's poem, "Gertrude of Wyoming."

X.

XAVIER, FRANCIS, St., za'-ve-ai, a missionary of the Roman Catholic church, who was descended from a noble family in Navarre, and, after entering into holy orders, joined Ignatius Loyola, the founder of the society of Jesuits. In 1541 he set out with some disciples to preach Christianity in the Portuguese colonies in Asia. In the following year he landed at Goa, where, as well as along the coast from Cape Comorin to the Isle of Manaar, he obtained many thousand converts. He subsequently laboured at Malacca, in the island of Ceylon, whose king he converted, and in Japan, where he remained during nearly two years and a half. He was about to prosecute his mission in China, but died before he could find the means of landing secretly in that country. He is said to have baptized more than 1,000,000 persons.

Born in Navarre, 1506; died near Macao, 1552.

XENOPHON, zen'-o-fon, Athenian general, philosopher, and historian, who at an early age became the disciple of Socrates, with whom he was a favourite. In 401 B.C. he joined the Greeks in the pay of Cyrus, and accompanied him in his expedition against his brother Artaxerxes Mnemon, king of Persia. After the battle between the two brothers, at Cunaxa, near Babylon, in which Cyrus was slain, the Greeks found themselves in the heart of the Persian empire, and surrounded by enemies. Clearchus, the general-in-chief, was soon afterwards killed; whereupon the command devolved upon Xenophon, who immortalised himself by successfully conducting the famous retreat of the ten thousand Greeks from Cunaxa to Chrysopolis, opposite Byzantium. He afterwards assisted Seuthes, king of Thrace, to recover his kingdom, and next reconducted the Greeks into Asia, where they joined the Lacedemonian general Thimbron against Tissaphernes and Pharnabazus, and gained a large share of plunder. In 396 B.C. Xenophon attached himself to Agesilaus, king of Sparta, and was with him in his Asiatic expedition. According to Plutarch, he, after 394 B.C. settled at Scillus, near Olympia, where he resided for more than twenty years, and composed several of his works; finally he repaired to Corinth. Among other works of Xenophon which are extant, are the "Cyropædia," or Life of Cyrus the Great; the "Anabasis," containing the history of the expedition of Cyrus the Younger, and of the celebrated retreat of the ten thousand Greeks; the "Hellenica," a History of Greece, beginning where Thucydides ends; and the "Symposium," or Banquet, one of his finest philosophical productions. His writings have been edited and translated by many eminent persons. The style in which the originals are composed is so chaste and elegant that Xenophon has been termed the "Attic bee."

Born in Attica, about 444 B.C.; died probably at Corinth, about 359 B.C.

XERES DE LA FRONTERA, a town in the south-west of Spain, in Andalusia, 14 miles from Cadiz. It is agreeably situate on the banks of the small river Guadalette. Its interior is neater than that of most Spanish towns, and contains a large square and a neat council-house, several churches, and in its neighbourhood there is a fine convent, containing a number of beautiful paintings. Manf. Woollens and leather; but it produces excellent sherry wines, of which large quantities are exported to England annually. Pop. 64,533.—Xeres is a place of great antiquity; it is supposed to be built on the site of the ancient Asta Regia.

XERES, two towns in Spain and one in Mexico.

XERXES I., zer'-xees, the fifth king of Persia, and son and successor of Darius Hystaspes. He reconquered Egypt, and then turned his arms against Greece, with a force, military and naval, amounting it is stated, (possibly with some exaggeration,) to 2,317,610 combatants. He was defeated at Thermopylæ and Salamis, and his immense army was dispersed. Disgusted with the war, Xerxes abandoned himself to luxury, and was slain by Artabanen, the captain of his guards.

Died 465 B.C.

XIMENES, FRANCISCO DE CISNEROS, he-mas'-nais, a Spanish prelate and statesman, who studied at Salamanca, and afterwards at Rome. Cardinal Gonzales made him his grand vicar, and Queen Isabella appointed him her confessor. In 1495 he was preferred to the archbishopric of Toledo, where he reformed abuses and instituted many excellent charities. Julius II. made him a cardinal in 1507, and, at the same time, he became minister of state, in which position he conducted himself with wisdom and integrity. He founded the university of Alcala.

Born in New Castile, 1437; died 1517.

XIMO. (See KIUSHIU.)

Y.

[For places not found under this letter, see I or J.]

Y, i, an arm or inlet of the Zuyder Zee, on the shore of which stands Amsterdam. It has communication with the Leyden canal.

YAKUTSK, ya-kootzk', a province of Russia in Asia, in Eastern Siberia, bounded N. by the Artic Ocean, and S. by the Amoor. On the coast, which is deeply indented, are frozen plains and swamps, abounding in fossil remains of the tusks of mammoths. The interior is an undulating plain, traversed by spurs of the Stanovoi and Tabonnoi mountain ranges, which bound the province on the south and south-east. The climate is severe, and the cold intense; but in the short summer season cereals thrive, and vegetables are raised. The capital is Yakutsk.

Rivers.—The chief is the Lena, and other rivers are the Alazeya, Indigirka, Kolyma, Olem, Olenek, and Yana.

Area.—1,517,077 square miles.

Pop.—243,443.

YARKAND, yar'-kand, a city of East Turkestan, on the left bank of the river Yarkand, 105 miles S.E. of Kashgar. It is surrounded by walls, has two stone citadels, and the streets are intersected by canals. There are many mosques and a Mahometan college. Manf. Silk, cotton, linen, and woollens. There is considerable trade, especially in horses. Pop. 30,000.—This was formerly the capital of the kingdom of Kashgar.

YARMOUTH, or GREAT YARMOUTH, yar'-mouth, a seaport, borough, and watering-place of Norfolk, 18 miles E. of Norwich. It stands on a peninsula, having the sea on the east, and on the west the Yare, over which there is a handsome drawbridge, which affords communication with South Town, or Little Yarmouth, and with Gorlestone. The quay on the river bank is about a mile long. The church of St. Nicholas, erected in 1123, was greatly enlarged in 1250, and has been recently restored. There are about 10 other churches and many chapels, and an assembly room. The Nelson Column is 140 feet high. The harbour is commodious, and is defended by batteries. The port is advantageously situate for commerce, particularly for the north of Europe, and it is the principal seat of the English herring-fishery. A large aquarium and winter garden, in the style of the Italian renaissance, has recently been erected. Manf. Crapes and silk goods. Ship-building is carried on. Pop. 46,211.—A station on the Great Eastern railway.

YEDO, or JEDDO, yed'-do, a seaport of Japan, capital of the island of Niphon, on a bay on the south-east side. It is divided into three parts; Siro, "the castle;" Soto-siro, "outside the castle;" and Midzi, "the town and suburbs." There are many small bridges over moats and canals, one of which is the "Bridge of Japan," considered the central point of the empire. There are about 1,500 showy temples. There are several fine palaces, among them that of Prince Satsuma, said to be the finest in Japan. Pop. 902,850.

YEISK, yeesk, a town of Asiatic Russia, government of Kuban, Cis-Caucasia, at the mouth of the Yega, between the Yeisk estuary and the Sea of Azov. There are large exports of grain, wool, and linseed. Pop. 23,725.

YEMEN, yem'-en. (See ARABIA.)

YENISEISK, yen'-i-seesk, a government of Asiatic Russia, in Eastern Siberia, bounded, N. by the Arctic Ocean, S. by the Chinese Empire, E. by Yakutsk and Irkutsk, and W. by Tomsk, Tobolsk, and the Gulf of Obi. The sea coast terminates in the North-East Cape, the most northern point of Asia. The surface of the country slopes gradually to the north from the Altai Mountains in the south. In the centre of the government is good pasture land, and grain is cultivated in the southern valley.

Rivers.—The Yenisei (about 2,500 miles long, and flowing into the Sea of Kara, lat. 72° 80′ N., lon. 82° E.) and its tributaries; the Taz, Anabara, and Khatanga.

Minerals.—Iron ore and salt; there are rich gold washings near the Yenisei and its tributary, the Angara.

Area.—992,838 square miles.

Pop.—421,010, consisting chiefly of aboriginal tribes and some Cossacks and Russian convicts.

YENISEISK, capital of the above government, on the left bank of the Yenisei, 290 miles N.E. of Tomsk. There is an annual fair, and a large trade in furs is carried on. Pop. 7,000.

YESSO, or YEZO, a Japanese island.

YEZD, yezd, a town of Persia, province of Khorassan, 245 miles E. of Ispahan. There are a palace, citadel, and several mosques. Manf. Silk stuffs, velvets, cotton, and coarse woollen goods, sugar, and sweetmeats. It is an important caravan station. Pop. 40,000.

YOKOHAMA, yo-ko-ha'-ma, a seaport of Japan, on the western side of the Bay of Yedo, 15 miles W. of Yedo. It is the chief port of foreign commerce in Japan, and occupies a slip of level land backed by hills, on which are many good residences. Both the foreign and native quarters are well paved, drained, and lighted with gas, and the shops and warehouses are large and well stocked. There are three foreign and four native Christian churches, banks, hotels, and public gardens. A railway connects the town with Yedo, and there is telegraph communication with Europe and America. Silk, tea, grain, and native produce and manufactures are exported. Pop. 60,000, including 1,500 Europeans and Americans, and 1,200 Chinese. Lat. 35° 26′ N. Lon. 139° 39′ E.

YOLO, yo'-lo, a county of California, United States. Area, 1,150 square miles. Pop. 10,000. The capital is Woodland.

YONKERS, yon'-kers, a city of New York, United States, on the east bank of the Hudson, 16 miles N. of New York. The city-hall is an old and historically interesting building. There are 16 churches, and many handsome residences. Manf. Felt articles, sewing-silk, ribbons, sugar, leather, iron, brass, and agricultural implements. Pop. 18,892.

YONNE, yon, a north-eastern department of France, bordering on departments Aube, Côte d'Or, Loiret, Nièvre, and Seine-et-Marne. The surface is undulating, and the soil very fertile. Many horses, cattle, and sheep are reared.

Rivers.—The Yonne, with its affluents the Armançon, Cure, and Vannes.

Minerals.—Iron, coal, lithographic stones, and ochre.

Area.—2,868 square miles.

Pop.—257,029.

Administrative Divisions and Chief Towns.—There are 5 arrondissements and 485 communes. The chief towns are AUXERRE (the capital), AVALLON, JOIGNY, SENS, and TONNERE.

YORK, the capital of Yorkshire, on the rivers Foss and Ouse, 22 miles from Leeds. The walls are nearly entire, and the city is entered by five principal gateways and five smaller ones. Of the five bridges of York, one alone crosses the river Ouse; the other four cross the Foss, and both rivers traverse the interior of the city. At the head of the public buildings is the cathedral, generally considered the finest Gothic church in England. It occupies the site of a cathedral built in the 7th century, and the present building was begun in the latter part of the 12th century, and completed in 1472. It is cruciform, 524 feet long, 249 broad, with a central tower 213 feet high. It has a magnificent west front, flanked by two towers 196 feet high, and richly adorned within. Over the incomparable east window is seen the statue of the venerable founder of the choir, Archbishop Thoresby, who laid its first stone July 19, 1361. This window, unrivalled in magnitude and beauty, has upwards of 200 compartments. The chapter-house is a magnificent octagonal structure, 60 feet in diameter, and nearly 63 in height. The cathedral was, in 1829, set on fire by a lunatic named Martin, and suffered again from fire in 1840. The north transept has been recently restored, at a cost of £23,000. York contains a large number of parish churches, the most remarkable being All Saints, St. Mary's, St. Dennis, and St. Margaret's. Of the old castle, only the keep, or Clifford's Tower (terribly memorable as the place where a large number of Jews killed themselves to avoid outrage and torture), remains. The guildhall is a fine Gothic building, erected in 1446. There are 22 old churches, several new churches, numerous chapels, and a very fine Roman Catholic church, St. Wilfrid's, in the Italian-Gothic style, with a lofty spire. The Corporation board-room, the Festival concert-room, and a Freemasons' hall, are other prominent edifices. The museum and gardens of the Yorkshire Philosophical Society occupy the site of St. Mary's Abbey. Skeldergate Bridge, 308 feet long, and 40 feet wide, with five arches, was opened in 1881. Lendal bridge, completed in 1863, crosses the Ouse from the railway station, with a single arch of 175 feet span, and an esplanade on the river side, a mile long, has been formed. Manf. Gloves, combs, and glass. Pop. 54,198.—A station on the Great Northern and North-Eastern railways. This city is the Eboracum of the Romans, and was the residence of Hadrian, Severus, Constantius Chlorus, Constantine, and some other Roman emperors. Severus died here in 212, and is supposed to have been buried on Severs Hill, west of the city. Under the Saxons it was successively the capitals of Northumberland and Deira, and suffered greatly by its opposition to William the Conqueror.

YORK, a city and capital of York county, Pennsylvania, United States, 58 miles N. of Baltimore. There are 21 churches, and a handsome court-house. Manf. Agricultural implements, boots and shoes, paper, and matches. Pop. 14,000.

YORKSHIRE, the largest county of England, bounded E. by the German Ocean; S. by the river Humber, which separates it from Lincolnshire, and by the counties of Nottingham and Derby; W. by a small part of Cheshire, Lancashire, and Westmoreland, and N. by the county of Durham. Except between Bridlington Bay and Spurn Head, the coast is high and bold, rising from 70 to 300 feet, and at Strow Brow, 14 miles N. of Scarborough, to 890 feet. Besides the harbours afforded by the estuaries of the Tees and Humber, the most important are those of SCARBOROUGH and WHITBY. Inland, in the northern part, successive hills rear themselves one above another, into the elevated and dreary tract of the Eastern Moorlands, occupying a space of about 30 miles from east to west, by 15 from north to south, and penetrated occasionally by romantic and fertile dales. The Vale of York, with some irregularities of surface, slopes southward from the Tees, as far as York, where it sinks into a nearly perfect flat. Of this tract, the nothern part is bounded on each side by the Moorlands, except where it opens into Cleveland, or is divided from Ryedale by the Howardian Hills. Within 10 miles of York, however, it expands into a wider breadth, extending eastward as far as the Wolds in the East Riding, and to the Humber on the south. The Eastern Moorlands, from 20 to 30 miles broad, are from 1,200 to 1,400 feet in elevation, and the Western Moorlands attain a maximum height of 2,911 feet in Bow Fell, in the Pennine chain. Various rich and romantic valleys are found among the mountains. Among these is Wensleydale, a tract of fine pasturage, through which the Ure winds its way, forming, in some places, beautiful cascades. Next to Wensleydale in extent, and not much inferior to it in fertility, must be placed Swaledale; though, from the circumstances of its being much narrower, and bounded by hills of a much steeper ascent, it is by many deemed more romantic. The smaller dales, which are numerous, exhibit the same general appearances. The eastern part of the county, though far less conspicuously marked by the bolder features of nature than the other parts of the county, contains scenes of great extent and magnificence, especially where the sea or the Humber enters into the view. It may be considered as consisting of three different districts: the Wolds, a range of chalky hills, extending from north to south, through nearly the whole of the riding; and the two level tracts which lie to the east and west of them respectively. In few parts of England has agriculture been conducted on a larger scale, or brought to a higher degree of perfection. The western part of the county varies from a level and marshy to a rough and mountainous region. The level part, of unequal breadth, extends westward from its eastern side, along the banks of the Ouse, to within three or four miles of an imaginary line drawn from Doncaster to Sherburn. Its middle district rises gradually into hills, and is beautifully variegated; after which, proceeding still farther westward, the surface becomes extremely rugged and barren. Beyond Sheffield, black moors, running to the north-west, unite with the lofty hills of Blackstone Edge, on the borders of Lancashire; while the western part of Craven presents a confused heap of rocks and mountains; among which, Pennigant, Ingleborough, and Wharnside stand eminently conspicuous. Amidst these dreary regions, however, occur many romantic valleys, presenting the most picturesque and beautiful scenery. The soil in this extensive district includes almost every variety, from the deep strong clay and rich loam to the most barren species of peat earth. Yorkshire abounds in ruined abbeys and old castles, and there are Druidical, Roman, Saxon, and Danish antiquities.

Rivers.—The Humber receives the Ouse, with its tributaries, the Aire, Derwent, Don, Swale, Wharfe, and Yare; the Ribble on the west, and the Tees on the north. There are beautiful rapids and waterfalls on the Tees, Aire, and Wharfe.

Minerals.—Iron, coal (in large quantities, the Yorkshire coalfields underlying a large portion of the centre of the county), copper, lead, freestone, and limestone.

Divisions.—The county is divided into the North, East, and West Ridings (from the Anglo-Saxon thrithing, or thriding, a third). The North Riding has the most picturesque scenery; the East is the most agricultural, and the West is one of the greatest manufacturing districts in the world. The city of York is not included in the Ridings.

Area.—North Riding, 2,109 square miles; East Riding, 1,200; West Riding, 2,621. Total, including city of York, 5,895 square miles.

Pop.—North Riding, 346,200; East Riding, 310,900; West Riding, 2,175,200; city of York, 54,200; total (census of 1881), 2,886,500.

Chief Towns.—YORK, the capital; North Riding—MALTON, MIDDLESBOROUGH, NOTHALLERTON, RICHMOND, SCARBOROUGH, THIRSK, and WHITBY; East Riding—Beverley and Hull; West Riding—BARNSLEY, BATLEY, BRADFORD, DEWSBURY, HALIFAX, HUDDERSFIELD, KNARESBOROUGH, LEEDS, PONTEFRACT, RIPON, SHEFFIELD, and WAKEFIELD.

YORUBA, or YARRIBA, yor'-u-ba, a kingdom of West Africa, to the north of the Bight of Benin, and east of the Niger. The surface is undulating, with dense forests. There are many large towns, the capital being Pyo. Area, 20,000 square miles. Pop. 2,000,000. The people have a clear brown complexion, with slight resemblance to the ordinary negroes, and are industrious and intelligent.

YOUNG, BRIGHAM, yung, president and "prophet" of the Mormon community in Utah. He was the son of a farmer of Vermont, and learned the trade of a painter and glazier. Early in life he was a Baptist, and, it is said, preached occasionally. In 1832 he joined the Mormons and was chosen one of the twelve "apostles." After the death of Joseph Smith, he was elected president. In 1847 he founded Salt Lake City; in 1852 established, as the result of a "revelation," the practice of polygamy, and maintained supreme authority in the sect until his death.

Born at Whittingham, Vermont, 1801; died at Salt Lake City, 1877.

YOUNGSTOWN, a city of Ohio, United States, capital of Mahoning county, on the Mahoning river, 135 miles N.E. of Columbia. It is a handsome town, in a rich agricultural and mining district, and is an important railroad centre. Manf. Iron. Pop. 15,000.

YPRES, eepr (Flem. YPERN, i'-pern), a city of Belgium, province of West Flanders, on the Yperte, 30 miles S.W. of Bruges. The chief structures are the town-hall (with a stately belfry tower, and 44 modern statues of counts of Flanders), in the Gothic style, an elegant Gothic cathedral, and many churches, several colleges, and the national school of cavalry. Manf. Linen (diapers, "d'Ypres"), woollen, lace, cotton, thread. Pop. 15,500.

YRIARTE, TOMAS DE, e-re-ar'-tai, a Spanish author, who at the age of 18 produced translations of French plays which were performed. He occupied an official position in the office of the secretary of state, but in 1786 narrowly escaped the Inquisition on a charge of being tainted by the new French philosophy. He wrote works of fiction, poems, and dramas, his fame resting chiefly on the "Fábulas Literarias," intended to correct the faults and follies of men of learning.

Born at Orotava, 1750; died at Madrid, 1791.

YUBA, yoo'-ba, a county of California, United States. Area, 600 square miles. Pop. 11,000, about 2,000 being Chinese. The capital is Marysville.

YUCATAN, yuk-a-tan', the most easterly state of Mexico, Central America. It is in the form of a peninsula, jutting out into the Gulf of Mexico from the mainland of the isthmus, and has N.W. the waters of the Mexican gulf, S.E. the gulf of Honduras, S.W. the province of Vera Cruz, and S. Guatemala. It is connected with the continent by an isthmus of about 120 miles in breadth, and the coast is indented with numerous bays, forming excellent harbours. The surface is fertile and level, but deficient in regular supplies of water. Corn, maize, indigo, cotton, pepper, and sugar-cane are among the products, the soil in the south and east being very fertile. There are dense forests, with mahogany, rosewood, and other valuable timber.

Area.—32,658 square miles.
Pop.—302,319, mostly Maya Indians.
Divisions and Chief Towns.—The state is divided into 15 districts. The capital is MÉRIDA, the port of which is Progreso.

YUMA, yoo'-ma, a county of Arizona territory, United States. Area, 10,000 square miles. Pop. 2,000. The capital is Yuma.

YUNNAN, a city of China of the first rank, and capital of the province of the same name, on the northern shore of lake Tchin. Manf. Carpets and silk goods. There is an extensive trade with the interior of China and Burmah. Pop. Large, but unascertained. Lat. 26° N. Lon. 102° 40' E.

Z.

ZAANDAM. (See SAARDAM.)

ZACATECAS, za-ka-tai'-kas, an inland state of Mexico, bounded N. by Coahuila, E. by San Luis Potosi and Aguas Calientes, and S.S.E. and S.W. by Jalisco. It is mountainous, being traversed by a branch of the Sierra Madre, but there are spacious and fertile valleys, where the climate is warm. There are no streams of importance.

Minerals.—Silver is extensively mined.
Area.—26,585 square miles.
Pop.—422,506.
Divisions and Chief Towns.—There are 12 districts. The capital is ZACATECAS.

ZACATECAS, capital of the above state, in a deep mountain gorge, 300 miles N.W. of Mexico. Mining is the chief occupation. Pop. 35,000.

ZAGAZIG, zag'-a-zig, a town of Lower Egypt, 75 miles N.W. of Suez. The cotton from the eastern part of the Delta is mostly cleaned and sorted here. It is connected by railway and canal with Suez and Ismaila. Pop. 19,045, including many English and other foreign merchants.

ZAIRE, or CONGO, zair, one of the great rivers of central Africa, discharging on the west coast, but the upper waters and course of which presented one of the great problems of African geography, solved only in 1877 by the expedition undertaken by Stanley. (See STANLEY.) The chief headwater, as far as at present known, appears to issue from the north-western angle of Lake Bangweolo, about lat. 11° S., lon. 27° E., 3,680 feet above the sea level, and flowing, with many rapids and cataracts, in a northern direction to its junction on the left bank with the Kamoranda (formed by the union of several streams, rising in the south-west), beyond which it is known as the Lualaba, its course being nearly parallel with the western shore of Lake Tanganyika, from which it is divided by an elevated tract. At Nyangwe (where Stanley commenced his exploration) it is 1,400 feet above the sea level, and under the equator it dashes over five cataracts. In lat. 2° N., the river turns to the north-west, receiving on its right bank, about lat. 4° N., the Welle, discovered by Schweinfurth in 1870, and then turning west and south-west, again crosses the equator about lon. 17° E., and after forming several cataracts, Massassa Falls, is known as the Zaire or Kwanga, and proceeds with a vast volume of water, and with many rapids and cataracts, in a south-western direction to lat. 4° S., lon. 15° E., where it receives on the left bank the waters of the Lubelah, and other considerable rivers, flowing from the south-east and draining an immense extent of territory. Finally the great river discharges into the Atlantic, in lat. 6° S., lon. 12° 20' E. It is estimated that the extent of country drained by the Zaire, or Congo, and its many great affluents, is not less than 1,400,000 square miles. The basin, or area of drainage, lying between that of the Nile on the north-west, of the great lakes on the east, of the Gaboon on the north-west, and of the Zambesi on the east. Stanley describes the river as varying from 2 to 10 miles in width, with a great number of islands. The entire length from the headwaters is about 2,000 miles.

ZAMBESI, zam'-be-ze, a river of southern Africa, known in its upper portions as the Leambye, or Leeba. It rises about lat. 11° S., lon. 23° E., and flows in a southern direction for nearly 700 miles, through a level country, and about a mile in width, to the great cataract of Mosioatunya, or Victoria Falls, lat. 17° 55' S., lon. 26° 32' E., where it is precipitated into a chasm 400 feet deep, bounded by perpendicular walls. The outlet to the chasm is by a series of zigzags, through a gorge about 270 feet deep. The great fall, the most stupendous in the world, is divided into three by islands, the western being about 100 feet wide, and the other two about half a mile each. Below the falls, the river dashes for 100 miles through ravines, and then through a flat country to its mouths in the Indian Ocean, about lat. 18° 45' S., lon. 36° 40' E., which are obstructed by shelving sandbars. Its principal affluent is the Shiré. The entire length is about 1,800 miles. The course was traced by Livingstone, and the great falls discovered in 1855.

ZAMORA (Sp. tha-mo'-ra), a north-western province of Spain, bordering on Portugal. The surface is generally level, and the climate temperate. Grain, wine, and fruits are abundantly raised.

Rivers.—The Douro and its tributary, the Esla.
Area.—4,135 square miles.
Pop.—255,636.

ZAMORA, a city of Spain, capital of the above province, on the right bank of the Douro, 133 miles N.W. of Madrid. There are a Gothic cathedral, 22 churches, and 16 convents. Manf. Serges, hats.

leather, and distilled liquors. There is a considerable trade in wine and grain. Pop. 13,632.

ZANESVILLE, zainz'-vil, United States, capital of Muskingum county, Ohio, on the Muskingum, which is crossed by a railway and three other bridges, 59 miles E. of Columbus. Manf. Steam-engines, machinery, glass, agricultural implements, paper, pottery, soap, leather, woollens, cotton, and joinery. Pop. 18,113.

ZANTE, zant, or zan'-te, the capital of a nomarchy of Greece, on the south-eastern coast of the island of Zante, pleasantly situated on the coast of a small bay. There are 5 churches, an arsenal and a citadel. The chief exports are currants and olive oil. Pop. of the island, 44,522; of the town, 16,280.

ZANZIBAR, or ZANGUEBAR, zan-zi-bar', a country on the east coast of Africa, comprising the islands of ZANZIBAR, PEMBA, Mafia, and some smaller islands, subject to the seyid, or sultan of Zanzibar. The mainland has been but little explored, but is known to be very fertile, supplying sugar, cotton, coffee, cocoa, spices, indigo, maize, millet, and rice. There are large forests of valuable timber, and caoutchouc is obtained. The export trade is considerable, and an interior trade is carried on by Arabs, who make long journeys into the interior. Hides, goatskins, ebony, cocoa-nut oil and gums, are among the chief articles of export. The most important towns are ZANZIBAR, and QUILOA. The county formerly belonged to OMAN, but became independent in 1862.

Rivers.—The Juba, Lufiji, Rovuma, Dana, Sahoki, Rufu, Wami, and Kingani.
Area and Pop. Unascertained.
Lat. of coast, 20° 30′ N. to 10° 45′ S.

ZANZIBAR, an island of East Africa, 48 miles long and from 15 to 30 broad, separated from the mainland by a strait 25 miles wide, with coral reefs and islets. On the western side the shore is low, with many small inlets, and on the eastern side are cliffs of coral formation. The surface of the island is undulating, and the soil is very fertile, producing luxuriant vegetation, and groves of cotton trees, palms, and mangoes. The climate is hot and unhealthy. Area, 630 square miles. Pop. Probably 200,000.

ZANZIBAR, BELED-ZANZIBAR, or UNGUJA, capital of the kingdom, on the western side of the island, on a sandy peninsula, formerly insulated, but now connected with the mainland by a stone bridge. The best part of the town is near the harbour, and contains the palaces of the sultan, and the houses of the foreign merchants. The harbour is good, and generally safe. The bazaars are numerous and well stocked, and a large trade is carried on. Pop. 90,000, chiefly Arabs, but there are also Negroes, Madagascans, and East Indians.

ZAPATA, za-pa'-ta, a county of Texas, United States. Area, 1,425 square miles. Pop. 3,636. The capital is Carrizo.

ZARA, za'-ra, a city of the Austrian empire, and capital of Dalmatia, on the shore of the Adriatic, 74 miles N.W. of Spoleto. It stands on a point of land which runs out into the sea, and forms an excellent harbour, capable of containing a whole fleet. It is strongly fortified, and has several good edifices, in particular the cathedral and five churches. There are an arsenal, museum, and various schools. Manf. Leather and silk and linen fabrics and liqueurs, especially maraschine and rosoglio. There are remains of an aqueduct built by Trojan. Pop. 60,230.

ZARAGOZA, or SARAGOSSA, sa-ra-gos'-sa, a province in the north-east of Spain, bounded N. by Navarre, S. by Teruel, E. by Huesca, and W. by Soria and Logrodo. The greater part is moderately level and very fertile, and flax, hemp, silk and oil are produced.

Rivers.—The Ebro, Gallego, Jalon, Jiloca, Huesca Aragon, and Arba.
Area.—7,810 square miles.
Pop.—403,654.

ZARAGOZA, or SARAGOSSA, capital of the above province, on the Ebro, which is crossed by a stone bridge, built in 1437. There are two cathedrals, the modern one, dedicated to Nuestra Senora del Palar (from a tradition that the Virgin descended on a pillar still preserved in the church), being a very ornate structure. There are many fine houses, but the city generally has a decayed appearance. Manf. Silks, woollens, and leather. There is a considerable trade in agricultural produce. Pop. 84,575.—This is a very ancient town, and famous in modern history for the siege by the French in 1809.

ZEALAND, NEW. (See NEW ZEALAND.)

ZEITZ, zites, a town of Prussia, province of Saxony, on the White Elster, 23 miles S.W. of Leipsic. There are coal mines in the vicinity. Manf. Cotton and woollen goods, pianofortes, and leather. Pop. 18,265.

ZENJAN, zen-jan', a town of Persia, province of Irak, Ajemo, 170 miles N.W. of Teheran. There is a trade in carpets, woollens, arms, and gunpowder. Pop. 15,000

ZENOBIA, SEPTIMIA, ze-no'-bi-a, queen of Palmyra, was the wife of Odenatus, a Syrian prince, who, having gained several victories over the Persians, was, by Gallienus, associated in the government of the Roman empire. After his death by assassination, Zenobia conquered Egypt, and maintained herself as a potentate, independent of Rome, till the Emperor Aurelian marched against her, and laid siege to Palmyra. Being taken, as she attempted to make her escape, she was conducted to Rome in triumph, but acknowledged Aurelian as emperor, and sacrificed her minister to his resentment; in return for which he presented her with an elegant villa, where she passed the rest of her life, and her daughters married into noble Roman families. She was an admirable linguist, ardently addicted to hunting and active exercises, and remarkably beautiful.
Lived in the 3rd century.

ZENTA, or SZENTA, zen'-ta, a market-town of Hungary, on the Theiss, 24 miles from Szegedin. Pop. 15,000.

ZERBST, zairbst, a town of Germany, duchy of Anhalt, on an affluent of the Elbe, 22 miles S.E. of Magdeburg. The fine Gothic Nikolai kirche was restored in 1827, and there are four other churches and a large town-hall. Four horse-fairs are held annually. Pop. 14,201.

ZISCA, or ZIZKA, JOHN, tsis'-ka, a Bohemian nobleman, who became the leader of the Hussites. In early life he acted as one of the pages of Wenceslaus, king of Bohemia and emperor of Germany. He afterwards served with the English in their wars with France; commanded a Bohemian and Moravian corps at the battle of Tannenburg, in 1410, where 40,000 Teutonic knights and soldiers were slain. In 1415 he distinguished himself at the battle of Agincourt, where he fought under the English colours. Embracing soon afterwards the doctrines of John Huss, he, upon the death of that reformer, resolved to take up arms in defence of the religious liberties of the Bohemians. In 1419 a quarrel burst forth at Prague between the Roman Catholics and Hussites, the result of which was the proclamation of the Hussite war. This awful conflict raged during sixteen years, in five of which Zisca held the command. He won thirteen pitched battles, and was victorious in upwards of one hundred sieges and engagements. But his great military attainments were allied to the most awful cruelty.

Born in Bohemia, about 1360; according to some, 1380.

ZITTAU, tsit'-tou, a town of Saxony, on the left bank of the Mandau, 26 miles S.E. of Bautzen. It has the most beautiful town-hall in the kingdom. Manf. Cotton and woollen cloths, pianofortes, iron and potteries. There are large coal mines in the vicinity. Pop. 22,301.

ZOMBOR, zom-bor', a city of Hungary, capital of the county of Bacs, 120 miles S. of Pesth. It stands near the Francis canal, by which it communicates with the Danube. There is a trade in cattle and grain. Pop. 25,000.

ZOROASTER, or ZARATHUSTRA, zor'-o-as'-ter, a Persian, and the founder of the religion of the Parsees, or "fire-worshippers." Nothing is known certainly of his personal history, and he is one of the legendary heroes of the Zendavesta.

Lived probably about 1200 B.C.

ZUG, tsoog, the smallest of the Swiss cantons, in the centre of the country, surrounded by the cantons of Zurich, Schwyz, Lucerne, and Aargau. It is mountainous and fertile. The highest summit is the Kaiserstock, 8,258 feet above the level of the sea. The lake of Zug is partly in this canton, and on the south-eastern part is the small lake of Egeri, 2,400 feet above the sea level, and famous for the beauty of its scenery. The capital is Zug, at the north-eastern end of Lake Zug. Grapes, butter, and cheese are important products. Cattle-rearing and fishing are also eagerly pursued.

Area.—92 square miles.

Pop.—22,994, nearly all Roman Catholics, and speaking German.

ZURICH, zoo'-rik, a canton in the north of Switzerland, having Thurgau to the E., Aargau to the W., Schwyz and Zug on the S., and Schaffhausen on the N. It is fertile and well-cultivated. The general aspect of its territory is pleasant, though without that bold and magnificent scenery which marks the interior and south of Switzerland. The hills, which do not rise above 3,300 feet, are separated by beautiful valleys and lakes. Rich pastures and extensive orchards meet the eye in every direction.

Rivers and Lakes.—The Rhine, Thur, Toss, Glatt, Limmat, Sihl, and Reuss. A large portion of the Lake of Zurich is within the canton, and there are several smaller lakes.

Area.—665 square miles.

Pop.—317,576, chiefly of German origin, and the great majority Protestants.

ZURICH, capital of the above canton, on both sides of the river Limmat, at the northern extremity of the Lake of Zurich, in a narrow valley, 58 miles N.E. of Bern. The cathedral, built in the 11th century, and other churches, are more interesting from historical associations than from architecture. On the other hand, the beauty of the scenery is striking, and there are a number of charming promenades around the town. Its university was established in 1832; and there are a new polytechnic school, a public library, botanic garden, and many learned societies. The city has recently been much improved. Manf. Important; consisting of silks, cotton fabrics, ribbons, machinery, and paper. Pop. 75,956.—This is one of the oldest towns in Europe, and was declared a free imperial city in 1219.

ZUTPHEN, zoot'-fen, a city of the Netherlands, in the province of Gelderland, on the Yssel, where it is joined by the Berckel, 7 miles N.E. of Arnheim. It is fortified, and the ancient ramparts form a fine promenade. The principal edifices are the Gothic church of St. Walburga, founded in 1105; the city hall, the state hall, and the weighing-house, the tower of which has 36 bells. There is a trade in timber and colonial products. Pop. 15,000.—The town formerly belonged to the Hanseatic League, and was taken by Don Frederick of Toledo in 1572, by Prince Maurice in 1591, and by the French in 1672.

ZVORNIK, zvor'-nik, a town of European Turkey, in Bosnia, standing on a steep rock, on the Drin, 78 miles from Belgrade. It has Greek and Roman Catholic churches, besides some mosques. Pop. 10,000.

ZWELLENDAM, zwel'-len-dam, a district in the settlement of the Cape of Good Hope, extending eastward from Cape Town, and bounded N. by the Zwarte Berg, or Black Mountains. Area, about 7,620 square miles. Desc. Mountainous, and watered by the river Breede. Pro. Corn, butter, and wine of inferior quality. Manf. Soap and brandy. Pop. 13,000.

ZWICKAU, tswik'-kou, a city of Saxony, on the left bank of the Zwickauer Mulde, 60 miles S.W. of Dresden. It has two fine churches, a gymnasium, and a library. Manf. Woollen cloths, cotton goods, paper, glass, chemicals and iron. Pop. of the district, 1,105,141; of the city, 38,080.

ZWINGLI, or ZUINGLI, ULRIC, zwin'-gle, "the reformer of Switzerland." He was the son of a shepherd, but studied at Bern, Vienna, and Basel, and at first officiated as a priest at Zurich; but seeing the corruptions of the church of Rome, he commenced declaiming against them, and continued his exhortations until he effected an ecclesiastical reformation throughout the republic. He published a book on the Eucharist, in which he denied the Lutheran doctrine. This occasioned a great controversy, and his followers were called Zuinglians. He afterwards took up arms against the Catholics, and was killed in the field of battle near Lucerne. His body was afterwards burned, and his ashes mixed with those of a pig, and scattered to the winds. His works consist of controversial treatises and commentaries.

Born at Wildhaus, St. Gall, 1484; died 1531.

ZWOLLE, zvol, a city of the Netherlands, capital of the province of Overyssel, on the Zwarte-Water, 50 miles N.E. of Amsterdam. It is intersected by two canals, and was formerly a fine imperial city, belonging to the Hanseatic League. The interior is well built, and contains several churches and a workhouse; but the only remarkable structure is the church of St. Michael. Manf. Woollen and linen cloths, salt, and sugar. Shipbuilding is carried on, and there are large cattle, corn, and fish markets. Pop. 22,000.

A NEW AND GREATLY IMPROVED EDITION OF THE COMPLETE WORKS OF THOMAS HOOD.

Containing all the Writings of the Author of the "Song of the Shirt," also the "Memorials of Tom Hood," by his Son and Daughter. With all the Original Illustrations by HOOD, CRUIKSHANK, LEECH, &c.

Readers ought to know Hood in his entirety. His genius had so many phases, that we do him an injustice if we make only a partial acquaintance with his works. The present Edition includes all the Published Works of the Author. All his own Sketches, and others by LEECH, CRUIKSHANK, and HARVEY, are also included.

"We gladly welcome this re-issue of the entire works of Hood. . . . . It is to be hoped it will reach the hands of most readers."—THE TIMES.

"It is with peculiar pleasure that we notice the issue of a new edition of the complete works of Hood by Messrs. Ward and Lock. . . . . They are certainly to be thanked for this re-issue, in a more satisfactory shape than any former one, of this wonderful collection of good fun and true literature."—THE SATURDAY REVIEW.
